THE DESIGN
AUTHOR.

Where he gives a brief Relation of his first Travels through the best parts of Europe as far as Constantinople.

If the effect of Education may be liken'd to a second Birth, I may truly say, that I came into the World with a desire to travel. The daily discourses which several Learned men had with my Father upon Geographical subjects, which my Father had the reputation of understanding very well, and to which, though very young, I was with much delight attentive, inspir'd me betimes with a design to see some part of those Countries, which were represented to me in the Maps, from which I never could keep off my Eyes. By two and twenty years of Age, therefore I had seen the fairest Regions of Europe, France, England, the Low Countries, Germany, Switzerland, Poland, Hungary and Italy; and I speak indifferently well the Languages most necessary and most generally spoken.

My first sally was into England, where at that time Reigned King James; from thence I pass'd into Flanders to see Antwerp, my Father's Native Country, and so into the Low Countries, where my inclination to travel became the stronger, by reason of the great Concourse of Strangers which I met at Amsterdam, that crouded thither from all parts of the World.

Having seen what was most considerable in the united Provinces, I pass'd into Germany, and when I came to Norimbergh, by the way of Frankfort and Auspurgh, the noise of the Armies that were marching into Bohemia to retake Prague, instill'd into me a desire to go to the Wars, where I might learn something that might be useful to me in the series of my travels. I was not above a days journey from Norimbergh, when I met a Colonel of Horse, whose name was Hans Brener, the Son of Philip Brener, Governour of Vienna, who engag'd me to follow him into Bohemia. Sometime after I bore the same Colonel company to Vienna, who presented me to the Governour of Raab, his Uncle, then Viceroy of Hungary also; who receiv'd me into his Family as one of his Pages. For it is a usual thing in Germany for Gentlemen's Sons to serve in that quality 'till five and twenty years of age, and seldom to quit that service, till they have a Commission for a Cornet, or Ensign's place. Four years and a half I serv'd the Viceroy, when the Prince of Mantua came to Vienna, to engage the Emperour in certain designs of his own without success. At that time the Count of Arc, whose Sister the Viceroy had Marry'd, was chief Minister to the Prince of Mantua; and coming to visit the Viceroy at Javarin, I was appointed to attend him during his stay there. Upon his departure, he told the Viceroy, that the Prince of Mantua had no person about him that understood the Language, and that therefore he might be sure that the Prince would take it for a great kindness, to permit me to attend his person during his stay at the Emperours Court. This was a thing easily granted to the Count of Arc; who thereupon carri'd one along with him to Vienna, where having had the good fortune not to displease the Prince, he testify'd to me at his departure, that he should be glad to see me at Mantua, where he would not forget the services I had done him. This presently infus'd into me a desire of seeing Italy, especially upon the opportunity that offer'd it self not long after.

For Monsieur de Sabran, the King of France's Envoy to his Imperial Majesty, being to go for Venice, and desirous of one that understood the German Language to bear him company, I laid hold of the occasion; so that in eight days we got to Venice. While we stay'd at Venice, I took a view to my great satisfaction, of that most Celebrated City, and in regard it is in many things like to Amsterdam, as in Situation, Greatness, Magnificence, Commerce, and Concourse of Strangers, my being there did but still reinforce my inclination to Travel.

From Venice I went to Mantua with Monsieur de Sabran, where the Prince being glad to see me again, gave me my choice of an Ensign, or of a place in the Company of the Ordonnance of the Duke his Father. I accepted the latter as being glad to be under the Command of the Conde de Guiche, who was then Captain. At the Siege of Mantua I had like to have been slain, but for the goodness of a Cuirass which I had chosen out of the Princes Magazin, being hit with two Bullets above and upon the left pap, which had enter'd, had not my Arms been excellent proof: So that after I was recover'd of my Bruises, a longer stay at Mantua did not agree with my desire to travel.

Therefore some time after the Siege was rais'd, I took leave of the Prince, who gave me an honourable Pass, by vertue whereof five or six Horse-men bore me company back to Venice. From Venice I went to Lauretta, from Lauretta to Rome, from Rome to Naples, from whence returning to Rome again, I staid there ten or twelve dayes. After that I went to see Florence, Pisa, Ligorn, and Genoa, from whence I Embark'd for Marseilles.

From Marseilles I hastid to Paris, where I could not stay long; for being desirous to see Poland, I pass'd once more into Germany through Switzerland, after I had tak'n a survey of the principal Towns of the Cantons. I went by the Rhine by Water, to visit Strasburgh and Brisack; thence by Land crossing Suabia, I pass'd through Ulme and Auspurgh to go to Munich. There I saw the Magnificent Palace of the Dukes of Bavaria, which William the fifth began, and which Maximilian his Son finish'd, in the heat of the Wars that troubl'd the Empire. From thence I went the second time to Norimbergh, and Prague, and leaving Bohemia I enter'd into Silesia, and pass'd the Oder at Breslaw. From Breslaw I went to Cracovia, one of the greatest Cities of Europe, or rather a Town compos'd of three Cities, the ancient Seat of the King of

of Poland. From thence, keeping the Vistula upon the left hand, I went to Warsaw and saw there the Court of King Sigismund, which is a noble and splendid Habitation.

From Warsaw I return'd to Breslaw, taking the Road toward the Lower Silesia, designing to visit one of the principal Officers of the Emperours Household, who was my particular acquaintance. But about two Leagues from Glogaw, meeting with Colonel Butler, a Scotch Gentleman, Colonel of one of the Emperours Regiment of Horse, who afterwards kill'd Walesteyne in pursuance of the Orders he receiv'd, I gave over my first intended journey. His Wife was a great lover of the French, so that being earnestly oblig'd by both together, I could not withstand the testimonies of their kindness. There I understood that the Emperour was going to Ratisbone with his Son Ferdinand the Third, to Crown him King of the Romans; so that I, who had seen the Coronations of the Kings of Hungary and Bohemia, being so desirous to see the third Solemnity also, took leave of my Colonel, and hastened to Ratisbone.

At that time arriv'd to Ratisbone several Jewellers, one of which came to his end by an accident so tragical, that all the whole Court pity'd his untimely fate. He was the only Son of one of the richest Merchants of Europe, that liv'd in Frankfort, whose Father had sent him with Jewels to sell at the Coronation. For fear of being Robb'd he had convey'd them before into the hands of a Jew, in Ratisbone, his Correspondent, to be deliver'd to his Son at his coming. This young man arriving at Ratisbone, went to the Jew, who told him that he had receiv'd a small Casket of Jewels from his Father, which he might take away, when he pleas'd. At the same time the Jew invited the young man to drink, and carry'd him to a publick House upon the Key of the City, where they continu'd till about an hour after day was shut in. At this time, both going out together, the Jew led the young man through a private Street where poor people pass'd by, and there having stab'd him five or six times in the Belly with a Dagger, left him wallowing in his Blood. A while after, one of the Emperours Trumpets going that way in the dark, stumbl'd at the Legs of the unfortunate youth, who still breath'd, and fell upon his Body. At first feeling his hands wet: he thought it had been some drunken fellow that had eas'd his stomach; but upon second thoughts imagining it might be some wounded person, he ran and call'd the Officers, who coming with Lanthorns, beheld the tragick spectacle of a young man weltring in his own gore. Thereupon the Officers carrying the Body to the same publick-house, as being next at hand, his face was no sooner wash'd, but the Woman and Maid of the House knew him to be the same young man that had been there drinking with the Jew not long before. But as for the young man he presently expir'd, without being able to make the least discovery. However the Jew was seized that evening, and being seiz'd, confess'd the Crime. The Imperial Laws ordain, that a Jew for killing a Christian should be hung upon a Gibbet by the Heels, and that two fierce Dogs should be hung by him in the same manner to the end, that the Dogs in their madness should tear out his Bowels. But the Jew made such presents to the Empress that the Sentence was chang'd, though the punishment was not much less rigorous. For his flesh was torn with red hot Pincers from several parts of his body, in several Streets of the City, and boyling Lead pour'd into the raw wounds; after which he was broken alive upon the wheel, at the publick place of Execution.

Being upon my departure from Ratisbone, I met with Father Joseph, Resident there for the King of France, who knowing me in Paris, propos'd to me to go along with the Monsieur, the Abbot of Chapes, Brother of the Marſhal de Aumont, and Monsieur St. Liebau, who were then intending for Constantinople, and so for Palestine. I lik'd the proposition well, and immediately put my self into the Society of those two Gentlemen, from whom I never separated till they departed for Syria from Constantinople.

But before we left Germany, we resolv'd to see the Court of Savony, whither we got in a few days. By the way we pass'd through Freybergh, a small City, but well worth seeing, for the beauty of the Electors Tombs, and most splendid and magnificent both for Materials and Workmanship in all Europe. From thence we went and view'd the stately Castle of Augustburgh, seated upon a high Mountain, wherein among other things there is a great Hall, adorn'd from top to bottom with nothing but Horns fasten'd to the Wall; among the rest is the Head of a Hare with two Horns, sent the Elector by the King of Denmark for a great Rarity. In one of the Courts of the Palace stands a Tree so large in Body, and spreading out the Branches at so wide a distance, that they will cover three hundred sixty five Tables with their shade. And that which makes this Tree more wonderfull is, that it is only Birch, that rarely grows to that Immenſity.

Dresde is the Residence of the Elector, a little City, but a very neat one, and well fortify'd; with a Stone a Bridge over the Elbe, that parts the Old and New Town. The Palace is one of the largest and fairest in Germany. But it wants a Piazza before it, the Principal Gate standing just at the bottom of a narrow Lane.

From Dresde we went to Prague, which was a third time that I saw that great and fair City, or rather three Cities together, only separated by the Molda, that throws it self into the Elbe, some five or six Leagues below.

Having travers'd Bohemia, and touch'd upon the corner of Moravia, we enter'd Austria, and came to Vienna, resolving there to Embark with all speed, because the Winter came on.

We stay'd one day at Presburgh to see the great Church, and some Relicks which they shew'd us, and from thence fell down to Altenburgh.

Altenburgh is a City and Province belonging to the Count of Arach. It was the Childs part of one of the Queens of Hungary, who upon her death-bed bequeathed it to one of the Lords of her Court, upon condition that he and his Successors should always keep such a number of Peacocks; for defect whereof, the Territory should revert to the Crown.

Thence we came to Signet, from whence I took a little Boat and hasted to Raab, where I did my Devoirs to the Viceroy, who was glad to see me, and gave noble entertainment to the Messieurs de Chapes, and de St. Liebau. Here we staid eight or ten days for the Basha of Buda's Answer, whether he would give liberty to two French Gentlemen, to pass with their Train through his Garrison or no; which being return'd such as we could desire, we Embark'd at Comorra in a sort of Bigrantes well fitted for defence and convenience.

From Vienna to Javarin we lay three dayes upon the water, by reason of the great turnings and winding of the Danaw. Leaving Javarin we lay at Comorra; and from Comorra we row'd to Buda in two days. For the Road by Land is seldom travell'd in regard that the Frontiers of both Empires are full of Thieves and Boothaylers. In fair weather you may go from Buda to Belgrade in less than eight dayes, but we were forc'd to stay longer upon the Water, in regard of the Cold weather.

It is the custom in Hungary, that in all Roads little frequented by Strangers, not to take any Money of the Travellers; For the Burghers lodge and entertain them civilly, for which the Burgo Master at the years end repays them out of the publick stock. But besides, that they are not troubl'd with many Passengers; Hungary, which is one of the best Countries in Europe, affords provision at so cheap a rate, that to Belgrade it costs us not above two Crowns a day for fourteen people.

Buda stands upon the right hand of the Danaw, about half an hours travelling from the River. The Basha being advis'd of our arrival, sent his Squire with led Horses, and several slaves in very good Liveries to conduct us to the Town. And though we stay'd twelve days before we could speak with him, by reason of his being sick at that time, yet he allow'd us a fair provision of Mutton, Pullets, Rice, Butter, and Bread, and two Sequins a day for small expences. He was a comly person, and of a handsom carriage and at our departure, he sent six Caleshes with two Spahis to conduct us to Balgrade, with order to defray our expences, which would by no means be accepted.

Coming to Belgrade we found the Sangiai as rude, as we had found the Basha civil before. For he made a ridiculous demand of two hundred Ducats a Head, and for fifteen days prolong'd the contest. But at length I so terrify'd him, by threatening to send our Complaints to the Ottaman Port, of his ill usage of two Gentlemen, Kinsmen to the Ambassador of France, that he was contented with fifty Ducats for all. Belgrade is situated upon a point of Land, where two great Rivers, the Danaw and the Sava meet; and is furnished with Wine, Bread, and all sorts of Provisions at a cheap rate.

From Belgrade we took some saddle Horses, some Coaches for Adrianople, as every one lik'd best. We pass'd through Sophia, a large and well peopl'd City, the Metropolis of the Ancient Bulgarians, and the residence of the Basha of Romeli. In it stands a fair Mosquee, which hath been a Christian Church, built with so much Art, that three men may go up to the top of the Steeple, and not see one another.

From Sophia we came to Philippoli, between which Town and Adrianople we met with two Troops of Tartars well mounted. When they saw us, they made a Lane for us to pass through them, with a design most certainly to have fall'n upon us; since they could not hope to do any good upon us, but by surprize and number; for they were ill provided of Weapons, and we rarely well well Arm'd. Thereupon we alighted and Barricado'd up our selves with our Chariots.

In the mean time we sent our Saphi's to the Commander of those Tartars, to tell them, we would not stir 'till they were gone, and that being Souldiers as they were, they could not hope for any booty from us. The Commander answer'd, that he had divided his men in that manner only to do us Honour; but since we desir'd they should be gone, they requested us but to send them a little Tobacco. A boon which we readily granted them, and so we pass'd on.

We came to Adrianople the three and twentieth day after we parted from Belgrade. Adrianople takes its name from the Emperour Adrian, being formerly call'd Orestes. It is pleasantly situated at the mouth of three Rivers that throw themselves into the Archipelago. The old Town is not very big, but the Turks dayly enlarge the Suburbs, being a place which the Grand Signors very much delight in for the pleasures of Hunting and Hawking, especially, at the wild Duck and Heron.

The fifth day after we departed from Adrianople, and the forty second after we departed from Vienna, we happily arriv'd at Constantinople, and crossing through the City over to Galata, went to the Ambassador's House. While we stay'd there to winter, he made a small Voyage to the Dardanells, to the Ruins of Troy, where we beheld nothing but Stones, not worth the while of going so far to see. Another day we took three Barks and Sail'd to Calcedon, that lies upon the Sea. There is in it a very ancient Church; and they shew'd us the Room where the Council was held, with the same Chairs which were then made use of. Now it is only a Monestary, where two Bishops after they had shew'd us what they could, handsomly entertain'd us.

Then we went to view Pompey's Pillar at the mouth of the Black Sea. Concerning the Channel of which Sea, I must make one Observation; that though there be no part of the Sea but has one Current, yet this has two quite contrary one to another. That part next to Europe carries the Vessel to the Black Sea; and that next Asia brings it back again to the Mediterranean. So that you have no more to do but to cross over from one Shore to the other.

The Winter being over, the two French Gentlemen pursu'd their Voyage for Alexandretta. But for my part, I having another design in my head, stay'd at Constantinople, in expectation of of a Caravan, which the people told me from Month to Month was coming. I was then ignorant, and did not understand that every year there were five or six Caravans that went from Bursa. Besides, that sometime eight or ten Merchants travelling together, might go safe to Ispahan. Which ignorance of mine made me stay longer than I intended. At length, after I had continu'd eleven Months in Constantinople, I departed with a fair and numerous Caravan for Ispahan, which was the first time I travell'd into Asia. After that I made five others, wherein, I had time better to understand the Qualities of the Countries, and the Genius of the People. The three last times I went beyond Ganges, to the Island of Java; so that for the space of forty years, I have travell'd above sixty thousand Leagues by Land; never returning but once into Europe by Sea. And thus in my six Voyages, and by travelling different Roads, I had the leisure and opportunity to see all Turky, all Persia, and all India, particularly the famous Diamond Mines, where no European had been before me. Of these three great Empires therefore have I resolv'd to make an ample and exact Description: and I will begin with the several Roads which may be taken from Paris into Persia.

Of the Roads from France to the hither parts of Asia, and the Places from whence they usually set out for Ispahan.

Man cannot travel in Asia, as they do in Europe; nor at the same Hours, nor with the same ease. There are no weekly Coaches or Wagons from Town to Town; besides, that the Soil of the Countries is of several natures. In Asia you shall meet with several Regions untill'd and unpeopl'd, either through the badness of the Climate and Soil, or the sloth of the Inhabitants, who rather choose to live miserably, than to work. There are vast Deserts to cross, and very dangerous, both for want of Water, and the Robberies that the Arabs daily commit therein. There are no certain Stages, or Inns to entertain Travellers. The best Inns, especially in Turkie, are the Tents which you carry along with you, and your Hosts are your Servants, that get ready those Victuals which you have bought in good Towns. You set up your Tent in the open Field, or in any Town where there is no Inn: and a good shift too in temperate weather, when the Sun is not too hot, or that it does not rain. In the Caravansera's or Inns which are more frequent in Persia than in Turkie, there are persons that furnish you with Provisions, and the first come are best served. As for Turkie it is full of Thieves, that keep in Troops together, and way-lay the Merchants upon the Roads, and if they be not very well guarded will certainly rob them: nay many times murder them. A mischief prevented in Persia by the well order'd convenience which is provided for Travellers. To avoid these dangers and inconveniences, you are oblig'd to stay for the Caravans, that go for Persia or the Indies, which never set out but at certain times, and from certain places.

These Caravans set out from Constantinople, Smyrna, and Aleppo. And it is from one of these Cities that a Traveller must set out, that intends for Persia, whether he keeps company with the Caravan, or will hazard himself alone with a Guide, as once I did.

I will begin with Constantinople, from whence you may go either by Land or Sea: and either by Land or Sea there are two ways to go. The first of these by Land is that which I took with Monsieur Chapes and Monsieur St. Liebau. By the way take notice, that Vienna is the half-way near-upon between Paris and Constantinople. The second Road is less frequented, but is less inconvenient and less dangerous: for there are need of the Emperour's Passports, which he does not grant very freely: besides that here is no fear of the Pirates of Tunis or Argier, as when you embark from Marseilles or Ligorn. If you intend this way, you must go to Venice; from Venice to Ancona, from whence several Barques are bound every Week for Ragusa. From Ragusa you sail along by the Shore to Durazzo a Sea-Port of Albania; from whence you travel the rest of the way by Land. From Durazzo to Albanopolis, distant three days journey, from thence to Monestier, just as far; from Monestier you may either take the left hand through Sophia, and Philippopolis, or the right through Inguischer, three days journey from Monestier, and ten from Adrianople, from whence in five days you reach Constantinople through Seliurea.

This last way is part by Sea and part by Land: but there are two other ways altogether by Land, above and below Italy, according to the distinction which Antiquity made of the two Seas that almost encompass it. You may embark at Venice, and sayling along the Gulf which is free from Pirates, you must double the Cape of Matapan, the most Southern Point of all Europe, to enter into the Archipelago. The other way is from Marseilles or Ligorn, from whence several Vessels are bound for the East. The safest way is to go along with the English or Holland Fleets, that usually arrive at Ligorn either in the Spring or in Autumn, and part just against the Morea, to the several parts whither they are bound. As the Wind serves, those Fleets sometimes make Sail between the Island of Elba and Italy, and by the Tower of Messina; sometimes below Sicily and Sardigna, within sight of Malta. Thus you must come within sight of Candy, whether you are bound for Constantinople, Smyrna, or Alexandretta, from whence it is but three days journey to Aleppo: from one of which three Cities, you must necessarily begin your journey, if you intend for Persia.

Some take Egypt in their way, using through Alexandria, Cairo, and Damiata, whence several Vessels are bound for Joppa; or St. John's of Aera, which is not far off: from thence to Jerusalem or Damascus, and from thence to Bagdat or Babylon.

If you will venture in a single Vessel not staying for the Fleets, you may hire a Vessel from Ligorn to Naples, from Naples to Messina, keeping along by the Shore, and lying a-shore every night. I took this way, and went from Messina to Syracuse, where are to be seen the most remarkable footsteps of Antiquity. 'Tis like a City under ground, and near to it is a great Rock which has been made hollow, at the bottom whereof if a man whisper, they that are at the top may hear him. They call this Rock Dionysius the Tyrant's Ear: for being at the top, he easily understood what the People said of him below; and discovered the Counsels of the chief Men of Syracuse, whom he kept prisoners there. Syracuse has nothing of that splendour which renown'd it when it was the Mistress of all Sicily, and when Greece, jealous of her power, made War upon her. But the Soil is very plentiful, and the Gallies of Malta very often take in their Provisions there. Near the City is a fair Convent of Capuchin Friars, going out of which, you may walk for half an hour between two very high Rocks, where there are several little Cells with every one a Garden, where the Friars sometimes retire, and it is certainly one of the most pleasing Solitudes in the World.

From Syracuse I went to Malta, where you must wait for some Ship that is bound for the East.

C H A P. II.

Of the Road from Constantinople to Ispahan, which the Author kept in his first Travels into Persia.

IT is seldom that any Caravans go from Constantinople into Persia; but from Bursa they go every two Months: Bursa is the Capital City of Bithynia, not above three days journey from Constantinople, or a little more. These two Roads meet at Chabangi, where you may be from Bursa in two Days: and so I will only speak of the Road from Constantinople to Ispahan. This Journey is to be undertaken either with the Caravan of Camels, or else ten or twelve Men in a Company, well mounted and well arm'd.

From Constantinople you cross over to Scutari, upon the Coast of Asia.

Setting out from Scutari, the first days journey is very pleasant, over Fields gayly painted with Flowers in their season. At first for some time together, on both sides the way, you see nothing but fair Sepulchers with their Pyramids, and you may easily discern the Womens Monuments from the Mens. For there is a Turbant upon the Pyramid of the Mens Sepulcher, but the Pyramids of the Womens Monuments are trimm'd with the Head Attire which is worn by the Women of the Country. That Evening you must lye at Cartali, a Village of Bithynia, the next Day at Gebisa, antiently Lybissa, famous for the Tomb of Hannibal. In that place there are two good Inns, and two fair Fountains.

The third day you come to Isnich, which is thought to be the ancient Nicea; one part of the City is built upon the descent of a Hill, the other part upon a Plain that reaches to the Sea, and makes the Gulf of Isnich. The Haven consists of two Moles made of Free-stone, and three great Enclosures encompass'd with Walls, which serve instead of so many Arsenals, wherein there are Store-houses full of large Timber, for building Houses and Gallies. The Country round about being an excellent place for Hunting, and the Soil bearing rare Fruits, and rich in Wine, caus'd Sultan Amurat to build a Seraglio in the highest part of the Town, from whence there is a prospect at the same time both over the Sea and the Country. The Jews inhabit the greatest part of the Town, dealing chiefly in Timber and Corn. When the Wine serves, you may go from Constantinople to Isnich in seven or eight Hours, there being no danger in the passage.

The fourth Day you stay at Chabangi, a small Town built upon the side of a Lake call'd Chaban-Gigal, where there are two Inns. From the beginning of the Lake for two Leagues together you travel partly over Mountains, partly by the Lakeside, where in some places the Horse will be up to the Belly. This Lake is not above ten Leagues in compass; but it yields great store of large Fish, insomuch that I have bought a Pike two Foot and a half long for three Sous. Many Emperours have had a design to make a Cutt out of this Lake into the Sea, for the more easie transporting to Constantinople the Timber which grows upon the Mountains near the Lake. And if the Grand Visier, who by a Miracle dy'd in his Bed, and left his Son successor to his Employment, had liv'd some Years longer, he had no question added this to the rest of those famous Works that eterniz'd his Memory.

Departing from Chabangi, you come to lye at Night upon the Bank of a River call'd Zaccarat, which runs Northward and falls into the Black Sea. It is a River plentiful in Fish, and you cross over it with a wooden Bridge. There is neither Town, nor Inn in that place; but a League from the River is a great Town call'd Ada, the chiefest part of the Inhabitants whereof are Armenians. Thither we sent for excellent good Wine, and other necessary refreshments.

From that River to Cancoli, where you lye the next Night, and have your choice of four Inns; you travel all the day in the Marshes, over wooden Bridges and Causeys.

Tuskebasar is the next place, a small Village with two Inns. From thence to Cargueslar, a great Town, with one Inn, built upon a River, where there is great store of Fish taken, which the Inhabitants call Bourma-balonky, that is to say, the Fish with the long Nose: It is speckl'd like a Trout; but of a better tast, and more esteem'd. Polia or Polis, is a City seated at the foot of several Mountains, the Inhabitants whereof are for the most part Greeks. These Mountains are very high, and extend themselves along the Road for Two days journey. They are full of several sorts of Trees, which are streight and tall like Firr-Trees: and divided by so many Torrents, which it would be hard to pass over, where it not for the Bridges that the Grand Visier Kuprigli caus'd to be built. In regard the soil of these Mountains is very fat, there would be no drawing for the Horses after great Rains or the melting of the Snow, had not the same Visier caus'd all the Ways to be Pav'd and Pitch'd, even as far as Constantinople. A Work of great charge, in regard there is not a Flint in any part of the Mountain, and for that the Stone is to fetch'd a great way off. There are abundance of Pigeons as big as Hens, and of an excellent tast, which not only pleas'd our Appetites, but afforded us very good Pastime to shoot them. Between the City and the Mountain, there is a Plain about two Leagues in length; near to which, there glides a River that waters it, and very much contributes to its fertility. It is an excellent Soil, and produces all things necessary for humane Life. Upon each side of the way I counted above Twenty Churchyards. For it is the custom of the Turks to bury near the Highway, believing that the Travellers pray for the Souls of the deceas'd. Upon every Tomb, there is to be seen a Marble Pillar, half fix'd in the Earth: of which Pillars there are so great a number, of various Colours, that it is from thence conjectur'd, that there were a very great number of Christian Churches in Polia, and the parts thereabouts. They assur'd me likewise, that there was a vast quantity of these Pillars in the Villages up and down in the Mountains which the Turks every day pull down and set up their Tombs.

Bendourlour is a Village in the Mountains where there is one Inn.

Gerradar is beyond the Mountains, where there are two Inns.

Cargesar has two Inns, and lyes in a good Country.

Caragaler is a Town where there are two Inns.

Cosizar is a Village with one Inn.

Tocia is a great City situated upon rising Hills, that joyn to very high Mountains. Upon the Winter West, there appears a fair Champain Country, water'd by a Stream that falls into a River of a greater bigness, call'd Guselarmac. Upon the highest of the smaller Hills toward the East, there is a Fortess, where a Basha resides; and in the Town is one of the fairest Inns upon the Road. The greatest part of the Inhabitants are Christian Greeks, who have the advantage to drink excellent Wine, with which the Country furnishes them in abundance.

Agisensalon stands upon a River, and there is an Inn and a fair Mosque in it.

Ozeman is a little City seated at the foot of a Hill, upon which there stands a strong Castle, and below two very commodious Inns. The River Guselarmac, broad and deep, washes the South-side of the City, which you cross over one of the fairest Bridges that ever was seen. It consists of Fifteen Arches, all of Freestone, and is a work that shews the Grandeur of the Undertaker. Somewhat at a distance from the Bridge stands Six Corn-Mills all together, with little wooden Bridges to go from one to another. This River falls into the Euxin Sea, about eight days journey from Ozeman.

Azilar is a great Town, where there are two Inns.

Delekiras is a great Village, with one Inn.

These Four days Journeys are very dangerous, by reason that the Ways are narrow, and commodious for Robbers. They are very numerous in this Country; and therefore understanding that we were way-laid, we sent and desir'd a Convoy of the Basha, who lent us fifty Horsemen.

Amasia is a great City, built upon an ascent in the hollow of a Mountain. It has no prospect, but only from the South over a fair Plain. The River that runs by it comes from Tocat, and throws it self into the Black Sea, four days journey from Amasia. You cross it over a wooden Bridge, so narrow that not above three persons can go a-breast. To bring fresh Water to the City, they have cut a League into Rocks as hard as Marble, which was a prodigious Labour. On the West-side, upon a high Mountain, stands a Fortress, where they can come by no other Water than what what they preserve in Cisterns when it rains. In the middle of the Mountain is a fair Spring, and round about it are several Chambers cut out of the Rock, where the Dervichs made their abode. There are but two Inns, and those very bad ones, in Amasia. But the soil is good, and bears the best Wine and Fruits in all Natolia.

Ainabachar, is the name of an Inn, distant a quarter of a League from a great Town where they fetch their Provisions.

Turcall is a great Town near to a Mountain, upon which there stands a Castle. The River that comes from Tocat washes the Houses, and we caught excellent Fish in it. In that place is another of the fairest Inns upon the Road.

From Turcall you may travel in one day to Tocat, where the Road from Smyrna to Ispahan meets.

Tocat is a good fair City built at the foot of a very high Mountain, spreading it self round about a great Rock that stands almost in the midst of the Town, upon the top whereof a high Castle commands the neighbouring parts, with a good Garrison in it. It is very ancient, and the remainder of three others that stood there in former times. The City is very well inhabited with Turks, who are the Lord Controllers, Armenians, Greeks, and Jews. The Streets are very narrow, but the Houses are indifferent well built; and among several Mosques, there is one very magnificent, which seems to be newly rear'd. There was also a very fair Inn going up, which when I last travell'd that way, was not quite finish'd. There is one thing more particular and more commodious at Tocat, which is not to be found in any Inns upon the Road, That round about all the Caravansera's in the Town, there are Lodgings which they let out to Merchants, that desire to be by themselves out of the noise and hurry of the Caravans, whiles they stay at Tocat. Besides that, in those private Lodgings you have your liberty to drink Wine, and provide for the rest of your Journey; which is not so easily done in the publick Inns, where the Turks will have an eye upon the Merchants, to draw Money out of their pockets. The Christians have twelve Churches at Tocat, and there resides an Archbishop, that has under him seven Suffragans. There are also two Monasteries for Men, and two for Women; and for fourteen or fifteen Leagues round Tocat, the Country is all inhabited by Armenian Christians, but very few Greeks being intermix'd among them. The greatest part of these Christians are Tradesmen, and for the most part Smiths. A fair River runs about half a quarter of a League from the City, which rises near to Erzerom, and is cross'd at Tocat over a very beautiful stone Bridge. Upon the North side of the City, it waters a Plain three or four days Journey in extent, and two or three Leagues broad. It is very fertil, and replenish'd with fair Villages very well peopl'd. A man may live very cheap at Tocat: the Wine is most excellent, and all sort of rare Fruit very plentiful. It is the only place in all Asia where plenty of Saffron grows, which is the best Commodity you can carry to the Indies, where a Pound, as the Years fall out, is worth thirteen or fourteen * Franks, * Every Frank though the Wax that preserves it, be as much in weight as the Saffron. This City, being 2s. with the Lands belonging to it, usually is the Dowager Sultanesse's Joynture. There is only an Aga and a Cady, that command there in the behalf of the Grand Signor: for the Basha, from whom they receive their Orders, lives at Sivas, which is the ancient Sebastia, and a very great City, some three days journey from Tocat. In short, Tocat is one of the most remarkable Thoroughfares in the East, where are continually lodg'd the Caravans from Persia, Diarbequer, Bagdat, Constantinople, Smyrna, Synopus, and other places; and here the Caravans turn off, as they are variously bound. They that are for Constantinople, take to the Winter West upon the right hand; they that are for Smyrna, incline to the Summer West, upon the left hand. When you set out either way out of Tocat, there is a Toll-gatherer that counts all the Camels and Horses that pass by, and exacts for every Camel a quarter of a Rixdollar, and for every Horse half as much. As for the Horses or Camels that carry the Passengers or their Provisions, they pay nothing. This continual concourse of the Caravans trols the Money about at Tocat, and makes it one of the most considerable Cities of Turkie.

Setting out of Tocat to go to Erzerom, you discover a little Village so situated under a Hill, as if the Mountain lay atop of it; and between that Mountain and the River, the Road is very narrow where the Caravan is to pass. In this Road it was, that we met the Grand Vizier returning from Hunting, with a Train of four hundred hundred men: so soon as he perceiv'd us, he fil'd off all his men to give us liberty to pass by. But among all the Company, there was not above four Franks upon which he particularly cast his Eye; which made him send for the Caravan Bacchi to know who we were. The Caravan Bacchi, to avoid the ill Consequences of jealousy which the Visier might have of the Franks, at a time when the Grand Visier made War in Persia, told him we were Jews; at which the Visier, shaking his Head, reply'd only that we did not look like such, and happy it was for us that he took no farther notice. For it was twenty to one, but that upon better consideration he might have sent after us to have stopt us. But when he came home to his Lodging he found a Capigi staying for him, with Orders from the Grand Signor to take off his Head, which were presently executed. For Amurath being troubl'd for the loss of his Army, had no way but to revenge himself upon the person that had the command of it.

Notwithstanding that the Caravans rest at Tocat, yet they stay likewise two or three days at Charkliquen, which is not above two Leagues distant from it; for Charkliquen is a great Town in a lovely Country, between two fertile Hills, where there grows excellent Wine. It is for the most part inhabited by Christians, who are generally Tanners. The fine blew Goat leather Skins being dress'd in Tocat, and the Parts thereabout. It is thought the Water contributes very much to their Art. For Tocat is as famous for the blew Goats-leather Skins, as Diarbequir and Bagdat are for the red, Monssul or the ancient Niniveh for the yellow, and Ourfa for the black. About two thousand Paces from this Town, in the midst of a Plain rises a vast Rock, upon the North-side whereof you ascend about nine or ten steps into a Chamber with a Bed, a Table, and a Cupboard in it, all hewn out of the Rock. Upon the West side you ascend other five or six steps that lead to a little Gallery, about five or six Foot long, and three broad, all hewn out of the Rock, though it be of an extraordinary hardness. The Christians affirm that St. Chrysostom made this Rock his retiring-place during his Exilement, and that he had no other Bed or Bolster than the Rock it self, in a place where they shew you the print of a Man's Body. Hence it is, that the Caravans, consisting for the most part of Christian Merchants, stay at Charkliquen, to pay their Devotions to this Rock, where the Bishop of the place, attended by some Priests, with every one a Taper in their Hands, goes and says Mass. But the main Reason is, because there grows excellent Wine in this place, which being cheaper by half here, than it is at Tocat, obliges the Armenians to stop here, to provide themselves for the rest of their Journey.

Two Leagues from Charliquen, you cross over very high Mountains, with Precipices on both sides. It is the custom of the Armenians, when they hear of the approach of a Caravan, to ride out two or three days journey to meet their Country-men and carry them fresh Provisions. These of Charliquen coming to meet our Caravan, three of the Armenians took a large Morning-draughts, which made them so Pot-valiant, that they would needs ride before to the Town alone by themselves; but by the way they were set upon by six Horse men that came from the North, where there are higher Mountains than those which we were to cross. Immediately the Thieves darted their Half-Pikes at the Armenians, in so much that two of them fell down mortally wounded; and the other sav'd himself among the Rocks, but the Thieves got their Horses and Goods, which were valu'd at ten thousand Crowns. The Caravan at the top of the Hill beheld the misfortune of those poor men which their own folly had brought upon them, but could not help them, by reason of the narrowness of the ways; besides, that the Thieves knowing all the by-turnings, were presently out of sight. And therefore it is a dangerous thing to leave the Body of the Caravans, either by staying too far behind, or running too fast before: and some have suffer'd for distancing themselves not above five hundred Paces from it.

The Caravans do not make their Journeys all alike; but come to their Stages sometimes sooner, sometimes later, according as they meet with Waters and Inns, or places fit to pitch their Tents in, to which places the Natives bring Provision and Provender from the Mountains. There are some places where there is a necessity to provide Straw and Barley for two or three days. If you travel in May, when the Grass is high, it costs nothing to feed the Horses and Camels. For as soon as the Caravan is lodg'd, the Servants go and cut the Grass from off the Hills, where it is much better then upon the Plains. But while the Beasts feed only upon Grass they are much weaker, and cannot travel so far as at other times.

From the Mountain where the Armenians were set upon, you come to Almous, a little Village upon a River, which you cross, over a Bridge of Wood.

Going out of Almous, you cross a large Plain, at the end whereof you lodge upon the Bank of a fair River, call'd Toufanlou-sou, which falls into the River of Tocat.

Having pass'd this River, you ascend a high Mountain, which the People of the Country call Kara behir beguendren, or, the Mountain that stops the Grand Signors; for it is very rugged, and you must of necessity alight to ascend it. In that bad Way two Horses that carry'd each of them two Bales of English Cloth burst under their Burthen, which prov'd excellent Food for several Tartars that were before us, and were pitch'd in the place where we intended to have lodg'd our selves; so that we were forc'd to go a quarter of a League farther. These Tartars when they heard of our two dead Horses, made immediately to the Mountain fifteen or sixteen of them with all joy imaginable to devour it. They flea'd the Horses, and when they came back (for I stay'd to see them) they brought every one a great piece of Flesh between the Saddle and their Horses backs. For by that means the Flesh mortifies, and bakes as it were, through the motion and heat of the Horse, and so they eat it without any more a-do. I saw one of them that took a piece of those Horses Flesh, and after he had beaten it soundly between two nasty Linnen Clothes, with a piece of Stick, set his Teeth in it, and devour'd it with a very greedy appetite.

Upon the top of the Mountain which I have mention'd, there is a Plain, and in the midst of the Plain a Fountain call'd Chefme-beler, or, A Fountain of Christal; near to which, on the South-side, there stands a Village.

From the place where we lodg'd, we came to a little Town called Adras, the Inhabitants whereof are all Armenians.

Aspidar is but two Leagues from Adras, and is but a Village.

Isbeder is another Village in the Mountains, where the Caravan generally stays one or two days; as well to pay the Custom, which is the fourth part of a Rixdollar upon every Camel, and half as much for every Horse; as for the excellency and cheapness of the Wine, where every Man provides for himself.

Twice we pass'd by and paid nothing, in regard that the Caravan was too strong for the Toll-gatherers; and were it not that they stay for the Wine, they might go directly forward without paying any thing.

Leaving Isbeder, we came to another great Town in the Mountains; all the Houses are hewn out of the Rock upon which it is seated, as are also all the Stair-Cases. From this Village, having pass'd a River, over a wooden Bridge, at the end whereof there stands an Inn, you come to Zacapa, another Village, from whence through very narrow passages, where you are forc'd to unload the Camels, and carry your Goods upon Mens shoulders for thirty Paces together, you come to encamp in a little Plain. It lyes at the foot of a high Mountain, which they call Dikmebell, beyond which lies the Town Kourda Aga, after which you cross three Rivers; one fordable, the other over two Bridges, and then you come to a Village call'd Garmernu.

From Garmernu you go to Senkmen, another Village; from Senkmen to Louri; from Louri to Chaouquen, which are two very handsom Towns.

I saw an Old man at Chaouquen who was above a Hundred and Thirty Years old, who when Sultan Amurath besieged Bagdat, gave his whole Army as much Oats as serv'd them one whole day. In recompence whereof, the Sultan exempted him and his Children from all Taxes and Tolls for their Lives.

Leaving Chaouquen, you come to a high craggy Mountain which is call'd Aaggi-dogii, or, The Bitter Mountain. The Ways being narrow, the Caravan is forc'd to travel single; and then it is that they count all the Horses, and all the Camels; every Horse and every Camel paying to the Caravan Master a certain Duty, which amounts to a good Sum if the Caravan be numerous. One part of that Money is to pay seven or eight Armenians, that guard the Caravan all the way; another part defrays defrays the Expences upon the Road; and the remainder is the Captain of the Caravan's Profit.

Having pass'd this Mountain, you come to lodge in a Plain which they call Gio-ganderefi, and from thence to Erzerom you meet only with three Villages by the way, Achikala, Ginnis, and Higia, which are the Caravan's Stages. During these three last days journeys, you keep all along the Banks of Euphrates for the most part, which is yet but narrow, taking its source Northward of Erzerom. 'Tis a wonderful thing to see the vast quantities of large Asparagus that grow all along the River, with which you may load several Camels.

A League on this side Erzerom the Caravan is constrain'd to stop; for the Officer of the Custom-House accompani'd with the Basha's Lieutenant, comes here and ties all the Bales and Chests with a cross Cord, upon which he puts a Seal, to the end that when the Merchants come to the Town, they may not be able to take out any Bags of Money, or any pieces of Stuff on purpose to hide them till they go away. The particular Business of the Basha's Lieutenant in meeting the Caravan, is to see whether the Merchants be well provided with Wines. And if he desire any Bottles, whether it be then, or in the City, where they are not asham'd to visit every Merchant, there is no refusing them. For there grows no Wine at Erzerom, all that is drank there being a small Wine of Mingrelia, which is always green: which forces the Merchants to furnish themselves with Wine at Tocat, which they may do sufficiently to last them into Persia. The Officer of the Custom-House generally allows the Caravan three days to rest; during which time, he sends to the principal Merchants some Fruit and other small Refreshments, by which he is no loser. After the three days are over, he comes and opens all the Bales and Chests, and takes a particular account of all the Merchandizes. This Search and the changing of Beasts, causes the Caravan to stay generally twenty or five and twenty days at Erzerom.

Erzerom is a frontier Town of Turkie toward Persia. It is situated at the end of a large Plain environ'd with Mountains, the Plain being beautified with many air Villages. If you take in the Castle and the Suburbs, it may pass for a City, but the Houses are ill built of Wood, without any neatness or proportion. There are some Remains of Churches and of the ancient Buildings of the Armenians, by which you may conjecture that it never was very beautiful. The Fortrefs stands upon a high ground, with a double Wall, square Towers close one to another, and a pitiful Moat. The Basha resides there but in a very ill House, all the Buildings about the Fortrefs being in a bad condition. In the same Enclosure there is a little rising Ground upon which they have rais'd a small Fort, wherein the Janisary-Aga lives, and where the Basha has no Power. When the Grand Signor has a mind to the Head of this Basha, or any other considerable Person in the Province, he sends a Capigi, with order to the Janisary to send for the Person to the little Fort, where the Execution is presently done. One Example hereof I saw in my last Travels into Persia: For the Basha of Erzerom not having sent Twelve thousand men so soon as the Grand Signor requir'd them for his Wars in Candy, the same Capigi that brought the Sentence of his Death, had the same Order for the Execution of the Basha of Kars; and meeting this Capigi upon the Road in a Village, upon his return for Constantinople, he would needs shew me whether I would or no, the Heads of the two Basha's, which he was carrying to the Grand Signor in a Bag.

Between the first and second Gate of the Fortrefs are to be seen four and twenty Pieces of Cannon, most excellent Guns, but lying one upon another without Carriages. They lye at Erzerom to be ready upon all occasions when the Grand Signor makes war against the Persians.

There are in Erzerom several great Inns; this City, like Tocat, being one of the greatest Thoroughfares in Turkie. The Country about it bears Wine, but not very good, and in regard the People are strictly forbid to drink Wine, the Merchants are forc'd to buy it very privately, for fear it should come to the knowledge of the Cadi. Though it be very cold at Erzerom, Barly grows there in forty days, and Wheat in sixty, which is very remarkable. The Customs paid there for the carrying out of the Gold and Silver, and upon all other Commodities, is very severe. Silk, that comes out of Persia, pays four and twenty Crowns for a Camel's Camel's Load, which is eight hundred Pounds. For in the mountainous Countries a Camel's Load is no more; but in the plain and even Countries they make 'em carry above ten hundred weight. A Load of Indian Calicuts pays a hundred Crowns; but the Loads of Linnen are much heavier than those of Silk. As for other Commodities, they pay Six per cent according to their value.

From this Stage the Caravan sets forward to a Fortrefs call'd Hassan Kala, where you must pay half a Piafter for every Camel's or Horses Load going from Erzerom to Erivan, but returning you, pay but half as much.

Leaving this Fortrefs, you must go and lodge at a Bridge near to a Village which is call'd Coban Cupri. Over this Bridge, which is the fairest in the whole Journey, you cross two Rivers which there meet, one is the Kars, and the other is a Stream that falls from a Mountain call'd Binguel, both which disburthen themselves into the Aras. The Caravan usually stays a day or two at this Bridge; because the Caravan divides it self at this place, some continuing on the High-road, others taking the Road of Kars, as well to avoid fording the Aras several times, as the paying a great Duty upon the great Road, where they exact four Piasters upon every Camel's Load, and two upon every Horse-Load, whereas at Kars you are dismiss'd for half so much.

I went Kars Road twice; but it is longer, and more troublesome than the other. As soon as you leave the Bridge, for the first four days you travel over woody Mountains, and very desert Countries, where you meet but with one Village; but coming near Kars the Country is more pleasant, and well manur'd; bearing all sorts of Grain.

Kars is in 78 Deg. 40 Min. of Longitude, and 42 Deg. 40 Min. of Latitude; in a very good Soil. The City is very large, but thinly peopl'd, though Provision be very plentiful and very cheap. But the Grand Signor always choosing that place to rendezvous his Army, whenever he intended to recruit it, and to lodge his People there which he sent to build Villages; the King of Persia has ruin'd all the Country, as he did at Sulfa, and in many other Frontier places; for nine or ten days journey together.

From Kars to Erivan the Caravan makes it nine days journey, and lyes where it can find most convenience, there being no certain Stages. The first days journey ends at a Monastery and a Village, the one no less deserted than the other. The next day you come to the Ruines of a great City, call'd Anikagae, in the Armenian Language the City of Ani, which was the name of an Armenian King that was the Founder of it. By the Wall, on the East-side, runs a rapid stream that falls from the Mountains of Mingrelia, and empties it self into the River of Kars. This City was very strongly situated; being placed in a Marsh, where are to be seen the Remains of two Causeys that only lead to the Town. There are the Ruines of several Monasteries; among the rest two that are entire, suppos'd to be Royal Foundations. From thence to Erivan for two days journey, you meet with only two Villages; near the last of which you ride by the side of a Hill, whether when the Caravan passes by, the people bring Horses from several parts to be sold. The Great Road from the Bridge, where the Caravan parts, lyes thus:

Two Leagues from the Bridge, on the right hand toward the South, lyes a great Mountain which the People of the Country call Mingol. In this Mountain there are abundance of Springs, and from one side of it falls Euphrates, from the other side the River of Kars, which empties it self into the Aras fourteen or fifteen Leagues on this side Erivan. The Aras, which the Ancients call'd Araxes, falls from other Mountains Eastward of Mingol, which after many windings through the Upper Armenia, where it receives many other Rivers that swell its Streams, it discharges it self into the Caspian Sea, two days journey from *Shamak*i, upon the Frontiers of the ancient Medes.

The whole Country is inter-cut by the Rivers Aras and Kars, and several other Streams that fall into them, inhabited by very few, but what are Christians; those few Mahumetans that live among them being so superstitious, that they will not drink the Water of any of those Rivers, nor wash in them; believing them impure and defil'd by the use which the Christians make of them. They have their particular Wells and Cisterns by themselves, which they will not suffer a Christian to come near.

Comasour is the first Village where you lodge after you leave the Bridge of Choban-Kupri, going to Erivan.

Halicarcara is the next Stage to Comasour: this is a great Town also inhabited by Christians, but the Houses are built all under-ground like Caves. Coming thither the 7th of March 1655, the Snow was so deep that there was no travelling, so that we were forc'd to stay there eight days. But the Customer of Erzerom understanding in what a bad condition we were, came in person with five hundred Horse to make way for us, and sent for the Country people round about to clear away the Snow. But it was not so much out of kindness to us, as for his own Interest. For a new Officer being to succeed him upon the 22^d of March, and our Caravan being very numerous, he would have lost above an Hundred Thousand Crowns, had we not come to Erzerom before that day. Many of the Passengers were almost blinded by continually looking upon the Snow, the colour whereof very much dims the Sight: for preservation whereof the Travellers are wont to wear black Cypress Hoods, made on purpose, over their faces. Others wear furr'd Bonnets fring'd about with Goats hair, which being long, falls over their Eyes, and does altogether as well as the Hood.

The Caravan is usually twelve days upon the Road, from Erzerom to Erivan. Leaving Halicarcara, you ford the Aras three times, and cross it the next day again: for it winds exceedingly. A League and a-half from the place where you ford it the fourth time, upon the top of a high Mountain stands a Fortrefs call'd Kaguisgan, which is the last place which the Turks possess on that side. The Customers that live there come to the Caravan to take their Toll, which is four Piasters for every Camel loaden, and two for every Horse loaden. In the year 1655 the Caravan lodging about a League from the Fortrefs of Kaguisgan, the Mountains adjoyning being inhabited by Christian Armenians, there came to us a poor Bishop attended by fifteen or sixteen persons, among which there were certain Priests who brought us Bread, Fowl, and Fruit, desiring the Charity of the Merchants, who recompenc'd them to their satisfaction. About four or five Months after, this Bishop had one of his Eyes struck out by a Fanisary. That wicked Fellow came to the Town where the Bishop liv'd, and lighting upon the Bishop, ask'd him for Money, which because the Bishop had none to give him, in a rage he stabb'd him in the Eye with his Dagger. Complaint was made to the Aga, who 'tis thought would have punish'd the Offender, but he fled, and left the Bishop without remedy of satisfaction.

From the last place where we encamp'd near the Aras, we went and lodg'd the next day upon the same River, in the sight of a Village not above a quarter of a League. The Next day we cross'd the River that runs from Kars, and parts Turkie from Persia. The next day we stop'd upon the Banks of Aras, half a League from a little Town; and this is the last time you see this River which you are constrain'd to pass so often.

Leaving Aras, we came to lodge in a plain, in sight of a Town which is not far distant. The next day the Caravan lies in the Field, and the next day it comes to a place where there are three Churches, whence it is but half a days journey from Erivan.

CHAP. III.

A Continuation of the Road from Constantinople to Ispahan, from the Borders of Persia to Erivan.

THE first Place worthy observation, entring into Persia through Armenia, is that which they call the Three Churches, three Leagues from Erivan; which Three Churches, are three Monasteries distant one from the other. The biggest and the fairest is the Residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians. There is another to the South of that, about a Musket-shot distant, and another a quarter of a League from it toward the East, which is a Nunnery Nunnery for Virgins. The Armenians call this place Egmiasin, or the Only Dangers, which is the Name of the chief Church. You may find in their Chronicles, That it began to be Built about three hundred Years after Christ, and that the Walls being rais'd to a good height, the Devil came in the Night and pull'd down what they built up in the Day; which he did for several Years: but that one Night Christ himself appear'd, and that from that time the Devil surceas'd to molest them any more; so that they finish'd the Church. It is dedicated to St. Gregory, whom the Armenians have in very great veneration. And there is a Table of Stone, whereupon, according to their Chronicles, Christ rested when he appear'd to St. Gregory. They that go into the Church, kiss this Stone with a very solemn Devotion.

The second is built in honour of a Princess that came with forty Virgins of Quality to visit St. Gregory. This Lady an Armenian King caus'd to be thrown into a Well full of Serpents; but she receiv'd no harm. For she liv'd therein 14 Years by a great Miracle, and from that time to this, the Serpents that breed thereabouts never did any harm. That Idolatrous King had a design to have enjoy'd that Princess, who was very handsome, and all her Companions; but they overcame him by their Virtue: who thereupon, seeing he could not have his Will, put them all to Death.

The Custom of all the Armenians, as well those that come out of Persia, as those that travel into Persia; is to perform their Devotions at these Three Churches; and the Caravan stops usually five or six days, during which time they Confess, and receive Absolution from the Patriarch.

The Patriarch has under him forty seven Archbishops, and every Archbishop has under him four or five Suffragans, with whom he lives in a Convent, where there are several Monks under their Jurisdiction. So soon as they have said their Mass, which is generally done an Hour after Day, they all go to work, and to dig and delve for their living. The Revenue of the Patriarch is 600000 Crowns or thereabouts: for all the Armenian Christians that are above fifteen Years of age, ought to pay him yearly five Sous. However there are many that do not pay him, by reason of their poverty. Yet their defect is suppli'd by the rich, who sometimes pay him two or three Crowns a Head. But this Money does not stay in the Patriarch's Pocket: nay he is sometimes behind-hand; for he is engag'd to relieve the poor Armenians, who have not wherewithal to pay the Carage, which is an Annual Tribute that they owe to the Mahometan Princes, to whom they are subject: Otherwise necessity would force them to become Mahometans; and they, their Wives and Children would be liable to be sold, which the Grand Patriarch labours all he can to prevent. Every Archbishop sends him out of his Diocese what is necessary to be rais'd for that intent. So that the Patriarch does but only receive it with one Hand, and pay it with the other; making no profit to himself of a Revenue which he has out of 400000 Villages, which the Archbishop of St. Stephen's affirm'd to me to be under his Jurisdiction.

As I return'd from Persia in the Year 1655, I came to the Three Churches about the end of February; the Caravan stay'd there eleven Days, as well by reason of the great Snows that stop'd up the Ways, as for that the Armenians resolv'd to keep their Carnival there, and after that to perform their Devotions. The next day I went to visit the Patriarch, who was sitting cross-leg'd upon a Mat. There were four Archbishops, and nine Bishops sitting about him in the same posture, among whom there was one that spake very good Italian. I stayed with him three Hours; and while we were discoursing together, in came one of the Monks of the Convent, who had not spoken to any person whatsoever in Two and twenty Years, by reason of a Penance that was impos'd upon him. Never did Man appear so meager and deformed; but the Patriarch sent for him, and by his Authority commanded him to break silence, which he did, by speaking at the same Instant.

The Saturday before Shrove-Sunday the Patriarch invited all the Caravan, as well Masters as Servants, to hear Mass the next day, and then to dine at the Convent. Mass being concluded, the People were brought into a long Gallery, about 15 or 20 Foot broad, there being a Table on both sides, made of several Stones, and Benches next the Walls. At the upper end of the Gallery stands a Table four Foot square, over which is a vaulted Roof sustain'd with four Pillars, which serves for a Canopy: in the midst whereof is a Chair set for the Patriarch; who from thence has a full view of both sides the Gallery; with two other Chairs of each hand, for two Archbishops: the other Archbishops, Monks, and Guests sat at the long Tables. The Meat which they brought us was several sorts of Pilaw, and several Dishes of Fish, among the rest excellent Trouts. The Pilaw was brought in forty wide Plates, so well fill'd and so large, that they were every one as much as a Man could carry. They were all set down upon the Ground before the Patriarch; who then Pray'd and gave Thanks. Then six Bishops with Ladles took out the Meat out of the great Platters, and putting it into lesser, serv'd both the Tables. Every one had also his earthen Pot of Wine, which was very good, and was fill'd again when it was empty. The Patriarch and the two Archbishops eat nothing but two Eggs, and a few raw Herbs; no more did the other Archbishops that sat at the Table.

At the end of the Feast, a Bishop comes with a Paper and Pen and Ink in his Hand, and asks of every one what he pleases to Subscribe for the Benefit of the Church; then every one proposing, according to his Devotion, the Bishop writes down the Names of the Persons, and the Sum which they mention; which he comes and gathers the next day. There are some rich Merchants that will give two Tomans, but the meanest Servant will give an Or. The Bishop having done writing, the Table was clear'd, and then they brought us Melons and other Fruits. In a short while after the Bells rung to Evening Service, and the People went to Church.

After Evening Service the Patriarch sent for me to behold a Combat of Busalo's, of which there are great store in that Country, some serving to Till their Ground, while the Female ones yield store of Milk, of which they make Butter and Cheese, and which they mingle with all sorts of other Milk: There are some of these female Beasts that will give two and twenty Pints of Milk a day.

They brought us into a wide Enclosure, to behold the Sport, wherein there were eight Busalo's. To provoke them one against another, they shew them a Red Cloth, which puts them into such a Rage, that there were two that dy'd with the stroke of their Horns upon the place, and there were none of the rest which were not very much lam'd. The Sport being at an end, they bring a great quantity of Wood, which they pile together on purpose to set it on Fire. When the Wood was heap'd in as big a Pile as they intended, one of the Archbishops presented a Taper of white Wax to all the Company, both Masters and Servants, who every one agreed with him what they should give the next day for their Tapers. The Tapers being lighted, the Patriarch with a Stick like a Bishop's Crozier, march'd before, singing an Hymn, attended by all the Persons both Ecclesiastical and Secular, till they had in that manner walk'd three times about the Pile. When the Pile came to be lighted, there was great striving who should have the Honour. One of the Merchants offer'd a quantity of Oyl, for Lamps for the Church; another out-did him, and a third proffer'd more than he; and the Honour of Lighting the Pile was given to him that offer'd most. Immediately upon that every one put out his Taper: For they esteem it a most precious business; believing that the lighting of one of those Tapers in a Storm, and throwing it into the Sea, is a present Charm against Shipwrack. For say they, The Virgin Mary, forty days after she was brought to Bed, went to Jerusalem with Joseph and her Son; and going into the Temple met old Simeon, who taking the Child in his Arms, began to sing the Song, Lord now let thy Servant, &c. the Song being ended, all the People began to cry that Christ was born; and to publish it about the City. Now in regard it was Night, every one ran out with Torches in their Hands, and some made Fires before their Doors, where Christ was to pass along. This Festival among the Armenians is like that of Candlemas day; and they call it in their Language, Ter en Areche? Where is the Lord? The Armenians, Masters and Servants, drank all Night to make an end of their Carnival; while the Patriarch was busie in dressing up the Church with its gayest Ornaments.

I could not believe there had been so much Riches in the Christian Churches under the Power of the Mahumetans. It is not a hundred Years since this Patriarchal Church was in a much meaner Condition: But since the great Sha-Abas put the Armenians upon Traffick, they have very much enrich'd themselves: For as they got great Gains; so they made great Vows, and gave largely to the Church: wherein wherein there are now as rich Ornaments as in any Church of Christendom. The Choir of the Church was hung round with a Venetian Tissue of Gold. The Pavement also of the Choir and the Body of the Church, together with the Steps to the Altar, were spread with rich Tapestry. For they all put off their Shoes before they go into the Church; nor do the Armenians kneel as in Europe, but stand all the while upright. When they hear Mass, they sit after the Mode of the Country, but when the Lessons are reading they stand up. All the Service-time their Heads are cover'd, unless at the Elevation of the Host, for then they take off their Bonnets, and kiss the Earth three times. There was upon the Altar a Cross, with six Candlesticks of Gold; and upon the Steps to the Altar four Candlesticks of Silver five foot high. After they had sung several Hymns, the Patriarch seated himself in a Chair cover'd with Silk Tapestry, four Archbishops sitting with their Backs to a Pillar at his right hand. The Service was solemnly perform'd by an Archbishop, with two Bishops on each side of him. After the Archbishop had made certain Prayers, he took the Book wherein he had read the Gospel and gave it the Patriarch, the Archbishops, Bishops, and all the People to Kiss. On the one side of the Cover of that Book there are two Relicks enchas'd, which are cover'd with Crystal, which was the side of the Book that was given to be Kiss'd. The Ceremony being ended, many went to Kiss the Patriarch's Hand, and so retir'd.

Ten Leagues from Erivan, toward the North, appears a great Lake, wherein there is an Island, upon which is built a very fair Covent. The Monks that live there, live so austere a Life, that they never eat Fish or Flesh above four times a Year: neither do they speak one to another, but upon those four Days. The rest of the Year they feed only upon Herbs, which they gather out of the Garden: for say they, it is not Fasting, to eat either Butter or Oyl. The Bread which they eat is brought from the neighbouring Villages: and the Island is replenish'd with all sorts of excellent Fruits.

On the one side of the Lake nearer to Erivan is a large Plain, wherein there are six Monasteries. One of which is entirely hewn out of the Rock, with the Pillars that sustain it, being seated in a very hard Rock. The Armenians call that Church Kickart in their Language, and the Turks in theirs Guicunghieche, that is, See and away. In this Church, according to the Traditions of the Armenians, is kept the Lance wherewith the Side of Christ was pierc'd; the Figure whereof I caus'd to be drawn upon the Place. The Armenians have this Lance in great Veneration, saying, that it was brought thither by St. Matthew.

Five Leagues from Erivan, towards the South-East, begins the Mountain Ararat; which will be always famous for being the resting-place of Noah's Ark. Half a League from that Mountain, where the Plain begins to grow level, stands a Church upon a little Hillock, close by which are several Pits like Wells. They report that it was into one of these Wells, that Cerda, an Armenian King, caus'd St. Gregory to be thrown, because he would not Worship his false Gods. Between this Church and Erivan are to be seen the Ruines of the Ancient Artaxate, the Seat of the Kings of Armenia, which demonstrate that it has been a great City: besides, there appear the Ruines of a fair Palace.

Erivan lies in 64 Degrees, 20 Minutes of Longitude; 41 Degrees, 15 Minutes of Latitude; in a most plentiful Country of all things necessary for Humane Life, but especially abounding in good Wine. It is one of the best Provinces of all Persia, and yields the King a very large Revenue, as well by reason of the goodness of the Soil, as for being the great Thoroughfare of the Caravans. The yearly Revenue of the Governour only, otherwise call'd the Kan of Erivan, amounts to above 20000 Tomans, which make 840000 Livres. This City lying upon the Frontiers of both Empires, has been taken and retaken by the Turks and Persians, several times. By which means the old City being ruin'd, they have built a new one, 800 Paces on this side, upon a Rock, at the foot whereof, upon the West side runs a rapid Stream; it is call'd by the Name of Sangué-Cija, and in many places it is deep and full of Rocks. You cross it, over a fair Bridge of three Arches, in which are built little Chambers, where the Kan retires in the heat of the day. It is full of Fish, especially Trouts, which nevertheless are dear enough. This River comes from a Lake call'd Gigaguni; about 25 Leagues from Erivan, toward the North,

North, and falls into the Aras, that runs not above three Leagues off to the South. Though this City be fortified to the West by the River, yet it is never the stronger, by reason of the Hills on the other side which command it: and in regard it is built upon a rock, the Moats of the Fort are not above three or four Foot deep. In some places the City is secur'd with a double Wall with several Towers; but the Walls being only of Earth, as are most of the Houses, the Rain does more mischief, than the Cannon would do. That part of Erivan to the North-West, is a kind of Suburb, but far better inhabited then the City: for there live all the Merchants and Artificers, together with the Christian Armenians, who have four Churches there, with a Monastery. And of late years they have built also a very fair Inn in the same Quarter. In the City there only lives the Kan, with the Military Officers and Souldiers; the Kan's Lodgings lying upon the River. The Governour is a Person of great Power, and has always sufficient Forces about him to guard the Frontiers. The Summer being very hot at Erivan, he lyes in Tents upon the Mountains during the Heat. When a Caravan arrives, he is forc'd to give the King advice thereof: and if any Ambassador come thither, he is bound to maintain him at his own expence, and to cause him to be conducted to the Territories of the next Governour, who is oblig'd to do the same. So that Ambassadors are not bound to be at any Expences in the Territories of the King of Persia. Four Leagues from the City are high Mountains, where the Natives that inhabit the hot and Sun burnt Countries toward Chaldea, come Twenty Thousand together, to seek out good Pasturage for their Cattel, and about the end of Autumn return again into their own Country. I cannot compare this Mountainous Tract, whether for its Valleys and Rivers, or for the nature of the Soil, to any Part that I have seen, better than to that proportion of Switzerland, which is call'd the Country of Vann: and there is a Tradition among the Natives, That certain people that inhabited between the Alpes and Mount Jura, and which compos'd a Squadron of Alexander's Army, having serv'd him in his Conquests, seated themselves in this part of Armenia, which they found so like their own Country. From Tocat to Tawris the Inhabitants are for the most part Christians. Which large Tract of Ground being that which the Ancients call'd the Province of Armenia, 'tis no wonder to meet with fifty Armenians for one Mahometan. There are many ancient Armenian Families in Erivan, which is their native Country; but they are well us'd by the Governours, who being far distant from the Court, do what they please. This City not being far remote from the Province from whence the Silks come, is the place where all the Buyers and Sellers resort. But neither in Erivan, nor in any other part of Persia are the Merchants put to open their Bales at the Custom-Houses, as in Turkie. They only pay certain Duties toward securing the Highways; which Duties they call Raderies, and those that gather them Raders.

The Kans or Governours of Provinces in Persia are civil to Strangers, especially to those that they like, or that shew them any thing of Curiosity. The first time that I went into Persia I took a young Watchmaker with me, and coming to Erivan, I carried him to the Kan who was then Governour. It was at a time when Watches were very rare in Persia; and the Kan, understanding what Trade the Young Man was of, told us he was the first Watch-maker that ever had been in Persia: Thereupon he brought the young man a Watch to mend, and that he might have the pleasure of seeing him work, he lodg'd us in a Chamber next his own, and made us drink with him every day; for he was a true Toper, and compell'd us to drink with him from four in the Afternoon 'till near Midnight, in a place which he had made on purpose, in his Garden, to take off his Glasses.

This was he, that having deliver'd Erivan to Sultan Amurat, went along with him to Constantinople, and became his Favourite for teaching him to Drink. Amurat left a Garrison of 22000 Men in the City; but Sha-Shefi the Persian King begirt it presently with a strong Army; and planting him securely under one of the Hills that command the City, he batter'd it incessantly with eight Pieces of Cannon: the fourth day he made a Breach, and though he had the repute of a Coward, he was the first at the Assault, and took the City: and because they would not yield at his Summons, he put all the Garrison to the Sword. For which Amurat, was quit with Sha-Shefi afterwards, though not in so noble a way; for entering a Victor into Bagdar, he put all the Persians to the Sword, after he had given them his word to the contrary, and promis'd to spare their lives. CHAP. IV.

IT usually takes up ten days journey for the Caravan to go between Erivan and Tauris; and Naksivan is almost in the mid-way between both. The first days journey you travel through large Plains sow'd with Rice, and water'd with several Rivulets. The next day you continue to Travel through Plains of the same nature, in sight of the Mountain Ararat, which is full of Monasteries, leaving it upon the South. The Armenians call this Mountain Mesefoufar, The Mountain of the Ark; because the Ark of Noah rested upon it. It is as it were unfasten'd from the other Mountains of Armenia, and from the half-way to the top, it is continually cover'd with Snow. It is higher than any of the neighbouring Mountains; and in my first Travells I saw it for five days Journey together. So soon as the Armenians discover it, they kiss the Earth, and lifting up their eyes to Heaven, say their Prayers. Yet you are to take notice, that the Mountain is hid in Clouds for two or three Months together. In the plains that you cross in this second days journey, to the Southward a League and a half from the Highway, is to be seen a work of great Art; being the Ruines of a Magnificent Castle, where the Kings of Armenia were wont to reside in the time of their Hunting Divertisements; more especially when they continu'd their sports at the Mallard and Heron. The next day we lodg'd near to a Village where there was good Water, which constrain'd the Caravan to stay there; there being none to be met with for ten Leagues farther. The next day you must Travel one by one through the Pass of a Mountain, and cross a large River nam'd Arpason, which falls into Aras. It is fordable when it is low, but when the Snow melts and swells the stream, you must go a League out of your way to the Southward to cross it, over a Bridge of Stone. From thence you go to lodge near a Village call'd Kalifakiend, where you are forc'd to fetch your Water a good way off. The first days journey is through a Plain, at the end whereof you meet with an Inn, call'd Kara-bagler, standing upon a Rivulet; which was finish'd in 1664. The Head of this Rivulet springs three or four Leagues higher toward the North; and half a League below Kara-Bagler, the Water congeals and petrifies; and of those Stones is the Inn built. The Stone is very slight; and when they have need of it, they make Trenches all along the Stream, and fill them with the same Water, which in eight or ten Months turns into Stone. The Water is very sweet, and has no bad tast; yet the Country-men thereabouts will neither drink it, nor water their Grounds with it. The Armenians say, that Sem the Son of Noah caus'd the Rock to be hollow'd, out of which this River issues; which four or five Leagues from its Head, and two from the Inn, falls into Aras. From this Inn to Naksivan is but a small Journey. Naksivan, according according to the Opinion of the Armenians, is the most ancient City of the World; built about three Leagues from the Mountain upon which the Ark of Noah rested: from whence it also takes its Name; for Nak in the Armenian Tongue signifies a Ship, and Sivan, resting or reposing. 'Twas a great City, now wholly ruin'd by the Army of Sultan Amurath. There are the Remains of several rare Mosques, which the Turks have destroy'd; for the Turks and Persians destroy one anothers Mosques as fast as they fall into one anothers possession. This City is very ancient, and the Armenians report, that it was in this place where Noah went to live, when he went out of the Ark. They say further, that he was Buried here; and that his Wife has a Tomb at Marante upon the Road to Tauris. There runs a little River by Naksivan, the Water whereof is very good; the Spring whereof is not far distant from the Head of the River of Karabagler. The Armenians drove a great Trade in Silk formerly in this Town, which is now very much abated: however, there is a Kan which has the Command there. All the Country between Erivan and Tauris was wholly destroy'd by Shah-Abas King of Persia, and the first of that Name; to the end that the Armies of the Turks, not meeting with any subsistence, might perish of themselves. To this purpose, he sent all the Inhabitants of Zulfa and the Parts adjoining into Persia, Old and Young, Fathers, Mothers, and Children, with which he planted new Colonies in several parts of his Kingdome. He sent above 27000 Families of Armenians into Onilan, whence the Silks come; and where the harshness of the Climate kill'd abundance of those poor people, that were accusom'd to a milder Air. The most considerable were sent to Ispahan, where the King put them upon the Trade of Silk, and sent them Commodities, for which they paid upon the return of their Markets, which suddenly set the Armenians upon their Feet again. These are they that Built the City of Zulfa, which is only separated from Ispahan by the River of Senderau, calling it New Zulfa, to distinguish it from the old City, which was the Habitation of their Ancestors. A third part of the people were dispers'd into other Villages between Ispahan and Sciras. But the old People dying, the young ones generally turn Mahometans: so that, now you can hardly meet with two Christian Armenians in all those fair Plains, which their Fathers were sent to manure.

Among the Ruines of Naksivan appear the Ruines of a great Mosque, which was one of the most stately Buildings in the World: which some say was built in memory of Noah's Burying-place. As you depart out of the City, near to the River that runs by it, appears a Tower, which is an excellent piece of Architecture: It is compos'd of four Duomo's joyn'd together, which support a kind of a Pyramid, that seems to be fram'd of twelve little Towers; but toward the middle it changes its figure, and lessening like a Spire, ends in a Point. The Building is all of Brick, but as well the out-side as the in-side is over-spread with a kind of Varnish of Parget, wrought into Flowers, like Emboss'd work. 'Tis thought to have been an Edifice, set up by Temur-leng when he had Conquer'd Persia.

Between Naksivan and Zulfa, on each side, as well to the North as to the South, there are ten Covents of Christian Armenians, distant about two or three Leagues one from the other. They acknowledge the Pope, and are govern'd by certain Religious Dominicans of their own Nation. And to keep up their Religion, they send from time to time to Rome certain Children born in the Country, to learn the Latin and Italian Tongues, and other necessary Sciences. It is thought there are in this Quarter above six thousand Souls that absolutely follow the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; only that they sing the Office and the Mass in the Armenian Tongue, that all the People may hear and understand them. The Archbishop, being chosen, is sent to Rome to be confirm'd. He resides at a great Town, which is one of the most lovely places in all Asia; the Wine and Fruits that grow there are very delicate, besides the abundance of all other things necessary for Humane Life. Every Covent stands near a great Village: the chiefest where I have been twice, is Abavener, the second Abraghonnex, the third Kerna, the fourth Soletak, the fifth Kouchkachen, the sixth Giaouk, the seventh Chiabonnex, the eighth Araghouche, the ninth Kauzok, the tenth Kisouk, which lyes upon the Frontiers of Curdistan or Affyria: Here it is, that the Armenians believe St. Bartholomew and St. Matthew to have been Martyr'd, of which they pretend to shew some Relicks at this day, Many Mahometans came thither out of Devotion, especially such as are troubl'd with with Feavers. There are two or three of those Convents, where they civilly entertain such Christians as come out of Europe; though the Monks there are very poor. They also live very austere lives, feeding upon nothing but Herbs. That which makes them so poor, is the often change of Tyrannical Governours, whom they are oblig'd to present with large Gifts. But in regard they cannot give much, those Governours have no kindness for them; for which reason, being instigated by those other Armenians who are able to oblige them, they use them so severely, that they are often forc'd to complain to the King; which I have many times seen done at Isfahan.

A League and a half from the chief of these Convents there is a high Mountain, separated from all the rest, which rises like a Sugar loaf, as doth the Pike of a Tenariff. At the foot of this Mountain are certain Springs, that have the virtue to heal those that are bit by Serpents; in so much that Serpents carry'd to that place will dye immediately.

When the Caravan is ready to set out from Naksivan for Zulpha; which is not above a days journey from thence, the principal Armenians usually go out of the way to the Convent of St. Stephen, which lyes to the South.

Now the Road from Naksivan to St. Stephen's lyes first to a great Village call'd Ecclesia, where live the richest Armenians, that drive a great Trade in Silk, and have built them a very fair Church.

Two Leagues from Ecclesia you must cross the River Aras in a Ferry-Boat, being as it were lyequed between two Mountains in that place: Once I went over upon the Ice. About two Musket shot from thence, you must cross over a Bridge, another River that falls into the Aras. From the foot of the Bridge you begin to ascend a little Hill, at the top whereof you meet with a great Village, call'd Shambel, all the Inhabitants whereof, as well Men as Women, grow Mad at 18 years of age; but it is such a madness that it is not mischievous. Some believe it to be the Punishment of Heaven, for that their Forefathers in these Mountains persecuted St. Bartholomew and St. Matthew.

From hence to Stephen's it is not above a League, but the Way is very troublesome. St. Stephen's is a Convent built not above 30 years ago. It stands upon the Mountains, in a barren place, and of difficult access. But the reason why the Armenians chose that place before any other, is because that St. Bartholomew and St. Matthew retir'd thither in the time of their Persecution. They add, that St. Matthew did a Miracle in that place; for that there being no Water there before, he only struck his stick upon the Ground, and presently there arose a Spring. This Spring is about half a quarter of a League from the Convent, under a Vault with a good Door to it, to keep the Water from being wasted. The Armenians go to visit this Spring in great Devotion, having laid the Water into the Convent with Pipes. They also say, that in this place they found several Relicks which St. Bartholomew and St. Matthew left there, to which they add a great many others; among the rest a Cross, made of the Basin wherein Christ wash'd his Disciples Feet: In the middle of the Cross is a white Stone, which as they report, if you lay upon a Sick person, will turn black if the person be likely to dye; and recover its former whiteness after the death of the party.

A Jaw-Bone of St. Stephen the Martyr.
The Skull of St. Matthew.

A Bone of the Neck, and a Bone of the Finger of St. John Baptist.
A Hand of St. Gregory, who was the Disciple of Dionysius the Areopagite.

A little Box, wherein they keep a great number of pieces of Bones, which they believe to be the Relicks of the Seventy Two Disciples.

The Church is built in the form of a Cross, as are all the Churches of the Armenians; in the middle whereof rises a fair Duomo, round about which stand the twelve Apostles. Both the Church and Convent are of Free-stone, and though the whole Edifice be not very big, there has been abundance of Gold and Silver wasted upon the Walls: Many Armenian Families have been very much endamag'd thereby; for the Women were so devout, that unknown to their Husbands they sold their Jewels, and their very Cloaths to defray the Expences of Building.

The first time that I was at St. Stephen's, in the company of some Armenians, two Bishops, attended by several other Monks, came out to meet us, and led us into into a great Hall, where we were very well treated. For it is the custom of the Armenians; a little before Meals to present their Guests a large Cup of Aqua-Vitæ, with Sweet-meats of all sorts, besides Citron and Orange-peels candy'd, in seven or eight Portelan-dishes, laid in a great China Basin. This is a little Prelude to excite the Appetite; for the Armenians, both men and Women, will empty great Cups of Aqua-Vitæ. After Dinner they go to Church, where they sing certain Hymns: when you return, there are a sufficient number of Mattresses or Quilts to lye upon; for they use no other sort of Beds over all Asia: only at Night you spread a Carpet upon a Quilt, and shut the Door. We saw not the Archbishop all that Evening, only at Church.

About Midnight all the Bells rang, and every body rose to go to Church. I believe it was more than usual; because it was Shrovetide; for both the Office and the Missæ were both concluded by break of day. Between eight and nine in the Morning the Cloth was laid; before which time we saw abundance of the Neighbouring Country people, who brought Wine, Fruits, and other Provisions, and presented all to the Archbishop.

While we were at Breakfast news came that a certain Bishop was dead, in his return to the Three Churches; whither he was sent by the Patriarch to gather certain Duties due from the Villages. Immediately the Archbishop rising from the Table with all his Assistants, and having made a Prayer for the Dead, sent a Bishop and six Monks to fetch the Corps; who returning a little after Midnight, the Body was presently laid in the Church upon a Carpet spread upon the Ground, with the Face turn'd toward the Altar. In the mean time, a great number of Wax-candles were lighted, and all the rest of the Night two monks watch'd by turns to Pray for the Dead. Early in the Morning the Archbishops, the Bishops, and all in Religious Orders, said the Office for the Dead, which lasted half an Hour; and at the end of the Mass they brought the Corps to the Altar, so that they made the Feet of the Corps to touch it. Having so done, they took off the Linnen Cloth that cover'd his Head, at which time the Archbishop anointed him in six places with the Holy Oyl, saying certain Prayers every time. Then they cover'd him again, and said other Prayers which lasted half an Hour. These Ceremonies perform'd, they carry'd the Corps out of the Church with Crosses and Banners, and every one a Taper in his Hand. As the Corps pass'd by, one of the Bishops put a Paper in his right hand, containing these words; I came from the Father, and I return to the Father. Being brought to the Grave upon a little Mountain near the Covent, and set down, they said other Prayers which lasted a quarter of an hour. In the mean time a Bishop going down into the Grave, took away all the Stones and made the place smooth, after which the Corps was set down wrapt in a large Linnen Sheet. Then the Bishop, according to their custom, rais'd his Head a little higher than his Body, turning his face to the East. Which being done, the Archbishop and Assistants took every one a handful of Earth, which the Archbishop blest, and giving it to the Bishop, he strew'd it over the Body. Then the Bishop coming out again, the Grave was fill'd up.

From St. Stephen's there is a descent for a League together to Aras, by the side whereof you are to keep along till you come to Zulpha, where you come into the high Road again. There is another way quite over the Mountain, which is the nearer way by a League, but 'tis very troublesome and toylsome, and therefore the less frequented.

But to return to the High Road from Naksivan; half a League from Naksivan you meet with a River which falls into Aras, which is to be cross'd over a Stone-Bridge of 12 Arches, though there be but little Water, unless it be when the Snow melts, or the Rains fall. In a Meadow, next the Bridge, where we lodg'd one time that I travell'd that way, there is a Spring of lukewarm Water, which will loosen the Bellies of them that drink it. At this Bridge it is that the Toll-gatherer comes and takes his Duties, when the Caravan stays not at Naksivan. You must pay ten Abassi's for every Camel's Loading, or nine Livers, which is for the securing the Highways. These Duties are demanded in many places of Persia without searching the Packs. The Governours also in their Provinces are made to answer for every Robbery committed: which makes it so safe travelling in Persia, that you need not keep with the Caravan, unless you will your self.

From

From this Bridge to Zulfa is but one days journey; which Town being altogether ruin'd, shews the reason wherefore the Caravan lodges upon the Bank of the River five hundred Paces on this side.

Zulfa, the ancient Habitation of the Armenians which Sha-Abas carried into Persia, is a Town squeez'd between two Mountains, through which the Aras runs, leaving but little Land on either side. It carries no Boats till about two Leagues below, (for upward it will hardly bear a piece of Timber) and in regard the Country grows low and extends it self into Plains, there is no fear of Rocks, the course of the Stream being very quiet. There was a fair Stone-Bridge, which Sha-Abas caus'd to be broken down, when he wholly destroy'd the Town, that it might be no harbour for the Turks. Neither by the Ruines, nor by its Situation, doth it appear to have been a City of any ancient Beauty; the Stones were clapt unskillfully together without Morter, so that the Houses were more like Caves than Houses. The North-West side was most inhabited, there being nothing on the other side worth taking notice of. The Lands about Zulfa being very fertil, there are certain Armenian Families return'd, who live very quietly. Cogia Nazar, one of the chief Armenians that went out of Zulfa, growing rich by Trade, and being in great reputation with Sha-Abbas, and Sha-Sefi his Successor, who made him Kelonter, or Chief Judge of the Armenian Nation, built two great Inns, for the Honour of his Country, in Zulfa, upon each side of the River one. He spent above an hundred thousand Crowns, but dying left two remarkable Pieces of Work unfinish'd.

Half a League on this side Zulfa, before you cross a Torrent that falls into Aras, you may take your choice of two ways to go to Tauris. The one upon the right hand, leading to the South-East, which is the ordinary Road; the other upon the left hand, toward the North-East, which we took eight or ten in company together on horseback, the last time I went to Ispahan. We left the Caravan, that takes the great Road, and never goes the other way, because it is full of Rocks and Stones that spoil the hoofs of the Camels. However I was willing to see a new Country, which I shall describe before I come to the great Road.

From the Torrent where we left the Caravan, we went forward, and lay at a Village not above a League and a half off.

The next day, after we had kept along by the Banks of the Aras for five or six Hours, we came to Astabat, which lyes a League from the River, where we staid above two Days to divert our selves. This is but a little City, but a very neat one; where there are four Inns, and every House has its Fountain. The great plenty of Water makes the City very fruitful in all things; more especially in good Wine. This is the only Country in the World that produces the Ronas, for which there is a vast utterance all over Persia and India. The Ronas is a Root that grows in the Earth like Liquorice, and is not much bigger. The use of it is to dye Red, and this is that Red which gives that beautiful tincture to all the Calicuts that come out of the Mogul's Country. Though the Roots which are pull'd out of the Earth are very long, yet they cut them into pieces not above as long as a Man's Hand, for the better accommodation of Carriage. It is a wonderful thing to behold at Ormus whole Caravans laden with this Ronas, which they Ship off from thence to the Indies.

The Root is full of Juyce, and yields a very high Tincture; for I remember that an Indian Vessel that was laden with it, being cast away in the Road of Ormus, where the Bags of Ronas floated, the Sea look'd of a red colour for several days.

Departing from Astabat, it behov'd us to provide our selves with Straw and Barley for our Horses, understanding that we should meet with none all that days journey. From thence we travell'd upon a descent for an hour together to the River Aras, which we cross'd in a Boat; and all the rest of the day we travel'd through Mountains, over Torrents and Stones. That Evening we lay upon the Bank of a small Stream.

The day following, after we had travel'd through a spacious Valley for two or three hours, we ascended a high Mountain, at the top whereof we met with two or three pitiful Houses, where we stopt that day.

The next, which was the fifth after, we left the Caravan, we travel'd upon a descent for two or three hours, till we came to a great Village neatly situated, where there grows excellent Fruit. There we repos'd for an hour or two; and from thence we came to a great Stone-Bridge on a River where there is no Water but when the Rains fall. It falls into the Lake Roumi, but the Water of the River is so fowr and ill-tasted, especially when it is low, that it is not to be drunk. About a quarter of a League from the Bridge are three long Stones set in the Ground like Pillars: the Natives say that they were placed there for a Monument, in the same place where Darius the Son of Hystaspes was elected King by the cunning of the Gentleman of his Horse: from whence to Tauris is but half a League. The Mountains of the Medes which we cross'd in this Road, and those which run along toward the ancient Parthians, are the most fertile in all Persia. They bear Corn and Fruit in abundance; for upon the high Mountains there are fair Plains sow'd with Wheat, which are extraordinary fertile. The Springs which rise there, and Rains which fall give a fresher beauty and a higher taste to what grows there, more than in any other part of Persia that wants Water; and the products of those Fields are of a higher price.

Now for the great Road. The Caravan having cross'd the Stream where we left it, lodges the next Night upon the Banks of Aras, over which it ferries the next Morning. It does not go thorough Zulfa, though it be so near it; because that on the other side of the City, there are three Leagues of Way very bad and unfrequented. For which reason you must leave Zulfa on the right hand, which is not much out of the way. After two hours travel you go by a Bridge which is call'd Sugiac; after which you come upon Heaths encompass'd with high Rocks. All this days journey you meet with no Water, but only one little Fountain, and the Water is so bad that the Beasts will hardly drink it.

The day following you travel through an even Country, but very barren: where you meet with nothing but a forlorn Inn; though it be a place where Cost has been bestow'd, and built all of Free-stone, that was fetch'd a great way off. The next Stage is Marante, famous for the Burying-place of Noah's Wife. The Town is not very big; resembling rather a Thicket than a City: but the situation is very pleasant, in the middle of a fertile Plain adorn'd with several well peopl'd Villages. This Plain does not extend above a League round about Marante, the Country beyond it being all barren. However it is not altogether unprofitable: for being a continual Heath, it affords feeding for the Camels, which are there bred for the Caravans. Which is the reason that there are so many Camel-Masters at Sugiac and Marante, who furnish great part of the Road. At Marante you must pay thirteen Abassi's, or four Crowns for every Camel's Load, for the security of the Road.

Leaving Marante, you lodge the next night a League from Sophiana in a bushy Plain, where the Water is worth nothing; after you have travell'd a mix'd Country, barren enough, where you meet with but one Inn in a Valley: but it is a very fair one. Sophiana is an indifferent large City, which you cannot see till you come within it, by reason of the great number of Trees planted in the Streets and round about it, which makes it look rather like a Forest than a City.

The next day, which is usually the tenth days journey from Eriuan, the Caravan, having cross'd fair, large and fertile Plains, arrives at Tauris. Those Plains are water'd with several Streams that fall from the Median Mountains; but the Water is not all of the same goodness, for there is some which cannot be drunk.

In the mid-way between Sophiana and Tauris, lyes a Hill, from whence you have a prospect over those Plains, upon which the Army of Sultan Amurath Encamp'd, when he besieg'd Tauris. The news coming to Shah-Sefi King of Persia, that he had burnt it, and was marching further into the Country with a hundred thousand Men, Let him come, said he, without any disturbance, I know how to make the Turks pay for their Invasion without any great trouble. They were then not above fifteen days march from Ispahan, when Shah-Sefi, turn'd the course of all the Streams both before and behind, which only run from certain Springs, and are brought in Cutts or Channels into the Inland-parts of Persia, where there are no Rivers: By which means the whole Army of the Turks perish'd for want of Water in those vast unwater'd Countries where they had engag'd themselves too far.

Tauris lyes in 83 Degrees, 30 Minutes of Longitude; and 40 Degrees, 15 Minutes of Latitude, in an open place where there is not a Tree to be seen; and environ'd environ'd with Mountains on every side, but only upon the West. The furthest Mountain is not above a League from the City; but there is one which almost touches it, being only separated from it by the River. 'Tis a good Country, and fruitful in Corn; there is good Pasturage, and great store of Pulse. Some think that Tauris was the ancient Ecbatane, the Metropolis of the Empire of the Medes. It is at this day a great City and well peopl'd, as being the Mart for Turkie, Muscovy, the Indies, and Persia. There are an infinite number of Merchants, and vast quantities of all sorts of Merchandize: particularly of Silk, which is brought out of the Province of Guilan, and other places. There is also a great Trade for Horses, which are handsom and cheap. Wine, Aqua-vitæ, and indeed all sorts of Provisions are cheap enough; and Money trols about in that place more than in any other part of Asia. Many Armenian Families have got great Estates there by Trade, and understand it better than the Persians. A little River, the Water whereof is very good, runs through the middle of Tauris: it's call'd Schein-kaié, over which there are three Bridges to cross from one part of the City to the other.

The most part of the Buildings in Tauris are of Bricks bak'd in the Sun; the Houses not being above one or two Stories high at most. The tops of the Houses are terrass'd; the Roofs within are vaulted, and plaister'd with Earth mix'd with chopt Straw, which they whiten afterwards with Lime. In the year 1638 the City was almost ruin'd by Sultan Amurath; but it is almost all rebuilt again. There are in it Bazars, or Market-houses, which are well built, and many Inns very commodious, two Stories high. The fairest is that of Mirza-Sadé Governour of the Province, who caus'd it to be built with a Market-house adjoyning, to which he has added a Mosquee and a Colledge, with good Revenues.

The great Trade of Tauris renders it renown'd over all Asia: for it has a continual Traffick with Turks, Arabians, Georgians, Mengrelians, Persians, Indians, Muscovites, and Tartars. The Bazars or Market-houses, which are cover'd, are always full of Goods: for there are some which are peculiar to the Handicraft-Trades; the most part whereof are Smiths, such as make Saws, Axes, Files, and Steels to strike Fire, with Tobacco-stoppers belonging to them. Some there are that make Pad-locks: for the Eastern People fasten their Doors only with wooden Bolts. There are also Turners, that furnish the neighbouring Parts with Spinning-Wheels and Cradles: and some Goldsmiths, that make trifles of Silver. But there is abundance of Silk-weavers that are Artists, and work very neatly; and indeed there are more of those than of any other Trade. Here it is that they dress the greatest part of the Shagrin-Skins that are vend'd so plentifully all over Persia; for there are none unless it be the Country-people, but wear Boots or Shooes of Shagrin-Leather. This Leather is made either of the Hides of Horses, Asses, or Mules, and only of the hinder part of the Hide: but the Asses Hide has the best grain.

There are to be seen at Tauris, Ruines of the stately Edifices round about the great Piazza, and the neighbouring parts: they have also let run to ruine four or five Mosquees of a prodigious height and bigness. The most magnificent and the biggest stands as you go out of the Town, in the Road to Ispahan. The Persians will not come near it, but look upon it as desil'd, and a Mosquee of Hereticks, in regard it was built by the Sounnis, or the followers of Omar. 'Tis a vast Structure fairly built, the Front whereof is fifty Paces broad, with an ascent of eight Steps. It is lin'd without with Brick-work varnish'd with different Colours; and adorn'd within with very fair Painting A l'antique, and abundance of Cifers and Arabian Letters in Gold and Azure. Upon two sides of the Fore-front are rear'd two Minarets or Towers very high, but not very wide, yet with Stairs to go up to the top. They are lin'd with varnish'd Brick-work, which is the usual Ornament of the Persian Buildings: and at the top stand two Cupola's, form'd like the Turbants which the Persians wear. The Gate of the Mosquee is not above four Foot wide, cut out of a great transparent white Stone, four and twenty Foot high, and twelve broad. Ent'ring at the Door of the Mosquee, you come into a spacious Duomo, thirty six Paces in Diameter, rais'd upon twelve Pillars within, and supported by sixteen without, which Pillars are very high, and six Foot square. Below there is a Balustrade or Rails that run round about the Building, with Doors to go from from one side to the other: and the Foot of every Pillar, which is of white Marble, is hollow'd into little Niches equal with the Floor, where the People put their Shoes, when they go farther to their Devotions. The inside of the Walls is varnish'd in Squares of several Colours, with Flowers, Cifers, and Arabian Letters intermix'd, and wrought in Emboss'd work, so well painted, so well gilded that it seems to be but one piece of Work, cut out with a pair of Scissars. From this Duomo you pass to another lesser, but more beautiful in its kind. The lower part is of transparent white Stone, of the same nature with that in the Front, cut in great Panes like a Door that never opens. This Duomo has no Pillars, but eight Foot high, it is all of white Marble, where are to be seen Stones of a prodigious length and breadth: The inside of the Vault is a violet Enamel, painted with all sorts of Flowers in Flat-work, but the outside of both the Duomo's is cover'd with varnish'd Brick-work, and Flowers emboss'd A la Moresque. Upon the first the Flowers are black upon green; upon the second, white Stars upon black: which diversity of Colours is very pleasing to the Eye.

Near the Door out of which you enter into the lesser Duomo, on the left hand, stands a Chair of Walnut-tree curiously carv'd, and fasten'd to the Wall; it stands upon a Platform rais'd six steps high, without any Canopy. On the right hand stands another Chair of the same Wood, and an exquisite piece of Workmanship; with a kind of State over it of the same Wood, fasten'd to the Wall. There is a little Rail about it; and the Platform is four steps high. On the South-side of the Mosque there are two white transparent Stones, which when the Sun shines upon them look red: And sometimes after the Sun is set, you may read at those Stones by the reflection of the Sun beams.

Just against the Mosque on the other side is another Front, which is the only Remain of a ruin'd Building. It was the abode of the Sheek-Iman, or the Chief Priest. There had been large Baths which belonged to it; but they are all destroy'd; some others there were of less note, which are not lookt after.

In the great Piazza of Tauris and in the parts adjoining, stands a fair Mosque, a Colledge, and a Castle, which fall to decay; these Buildings being forsaken; by reason they were made use of by the Sounni's, which were followers of Omar. Near the same Church is a ruin'd Church of the Armenians, whither they say St. Helena sent the true Cross. There is another Mosque, which was formerly a Church dedicated to St. John Baptist, where they say one of his Hands was preserv'd a long time.

The Capuchins have a very convenient House at Tauris; for Mirza-Ibrahim Governour of the Province, whose credit is equal to the Kan of Tauris, which is the chiefest Command in Persia, favours him very much with his protection. This Governour has made himself very considerable at Court, and very much respected by the King for his indefatigable pains, and his extraordinary agility in augmenting the King's Revenue: having found out such ways for that purpose, as never entred into the thoughts of any that preceded him in the the same Employment. He is very curious to learn all the Noble Sciences, which is a quality very rare among the Persians: He also takes great delight in the Mathematicks and Philosophy, discoursing often with Gabriel de Chinon, Governour of the Capuchins Covent in Tauris. But the great desire which Mirza-Ibrahim had, to have his two Sons taught by the said Gabriel, was the chief motive that made him so favourable to that Covent. He bought the Friars a place to build their House, and liberally furnish'd them for the Expence of the Work.

When the Sun sets and rises, there are a certain Company of People, who are oblig'd to make a hideous noise with Drums and Trumpets in the Meidan, or great Piazza of the City. They stand upon one side of the Piazza in a Gallery somewhat rais'd, which is a Custom observ'd in all the Cities under the Persian Government.

As you go out of Tauris upon the North-side, there is a Mountain close by, there being only the River between it. The name of it is Einali-Zeinali, and formerly there stood upon the top of it a fair Hermitage of the Armenians, which the Mahometans have converted into a Mosque. At the bottom of the Mountain stands a Fortrefs and a Mosque, which they let go to ruine, because they were built by the Ottomans. A little farther upon the brink of the Precipice stands a Monastery, near to which are two Caves, where are certain Sepulchers and Marble Pillars lying along upon the Ground. There are also in the Mosque certain Tombs of the ancient Kings of the Medes, the Remains whereof shew that the Work was very Excellent.

Upon the Road from Tauris to Ispahan, about half a League from the utmost Gardens, between several knaps of the Mountain which you leave upon the right hand, upon the top of the highest of all, where there never was any Water, and where it is impossible to bring any, appears a Bridge Fifty paces long, the Arches whereof are very fair ones, but it falls to decay. It was a Mollah that built it, out of what design no person knew: nor can you come to Tauris upon that side, but you must see that Bridge, because there is no other way, there being nothing but Water and Precipices on either hand. Afterwards he confess'd that he built it out of meer Vanity, knowing that Shah-Abbas, the first of that name, was to come to Tauris. The King indeed came some time after, and seeing an unprofitable Bridge upon the top of a Mountain, he demanded who built it, and what was his design. To whom the Mollah return'd this answer, Sir, said he, I built that Bridge, that when your Majesty came to Tauris, you might inform your self from the mouth of him that built it. By which it appear'd that the Mollah had no other ambition than to oblige the King to speak to him.

A League from Tauris to the West, in the middle of a field, stands a great Brick Tower, call'd Kanbazun. It is about fifty Paces in Diameter, and though it be half ruin'd, yet it is very high. It seems to have been the Dungeon of some Castle, there being very high Walls round about it; which though they be but of Earth, nevertheless appear to be very ancient. It is not certainly known who built this Tower, but the Arabian Letters upon the Gate afford us some reason to conclude that it was a Mahometan structure. In the year 1651 there happen'd a terrible Earthquake in Tauris and the parts thereabouts, by which many houses were overturn'd, and this Tower then cleaving from the top to the bottom, a good part of it fell down, and fill'd up the hollow within-side.

Besides the little River that runs by Tauris, there is another bigger to be cross'd about half a League from the City, over which there is a very fair Stone-Bridge: Near to it stands a Sepulcher, cover'd with a little Duomo, where the Persians say that the Sister of Iman Riza lyes interr'd; and they have it in great veneration. The River that runs under the Bridge comes from the Mountains of the North, and falls into the Lake Roumi, thirteen or fourteen Leagues from Tauris. They call it Agg-sou, or Bitter-water; for the Water is very bad, and without any Fish. The Lake which is fifteen Leagues in compass, has the same quality, the Water being blackish: the Fish that happen into it out of other Rivers that fall into it, presently become blind, and in a short while are found dead by the Shoar. This Lake takes its name from a Province and a little City, which are both call'd Roumi, being not above Eleven Leagues from Tauris.

In the middle of the Lake, upon the way that leads to a little City call'd Tokorian, there is a little Hill that rises insensibly, the ascent whereof is very smooth, and out of it there rise many little Springs. The farther they run from the Head, the wider grow the Streams. And the Earth which they water is of two distinct qualities; the first Earth that is digg'd serves to make Lime: the next to that is a hollow spongy Stone, that is good for nothing: but under that again is a white transparent stone, which you may see through as through Glass, which being smooth and polish'd serves to acorn the Houses. This stone is only a congelation of the Waters of these Streams; for sometimes you shall meet with creeping Animals congel'd within. The Governour of the Province sent one piece to Shah-Abbas, as a great present, wherein there was a Lizard congel'd of a Foot long. He that presented it to the Governour had Twenty Tomans, or three hundred Crowns; afterwards I offer'd a thousand for the same Piece. In some parts of the Province of Mazandran, where the Euxin Sea stretches farthest into the Persian Territories, these congel'd Stones are to be found, but not so frequently as near the lake Roumi; and you shall many times find pieces of Wood and Worms congel'd in the Stones. I brought away a Camels loading of these Stones, and left them at Marseilles; till I could find what use to put them to.

CHAP. V.

A Continuation of the Constantinopolitan Road from Tauris to Ispahan, through Ardevil and Casbin.

From Tauris to Ispahan the Caravan makes it generally twenty-four days journey.

The first day you cross over dry Mountains, and four Leagues from Tauris you meet with one of the fairest Inns in Persia. This Inn Sha-Sefi caus'd to be built; it is very convenient, and large enough to lodge a hundred persons with their Horses. Over all Persia, especially from Tauris to Ispahan, and from thence to Ormuz, you meet every day with Inns at an equal distance.

The next day you descend a Mountain, in very rugged and narrow way. At the foot of this Mountain there are two ways for the Merchants to choose that will go to Ispahan. They that will go the ordinary road and the direct way through Kom and Rachan, leave a Lake upon the left hand that parts the two Roads; and they that will go through Ardevil and Casbin, two other good Cities, leave the Lake upon the right hand, and coast along by the side of the Mountain. From Tauris to Ardevil it is not above a dozen Leagues; and having pass'd the Lake, the Country is very good: Which is the Road I intend to describe first.

Ardevil being at so small a distance from Tauris, lyes almost in the same Degrees, and Minutes of Longitude and Latitude. This City is famous, as well for being the first Market of Silks that come from Gulistan, from which it is not far off; as also for the Sepulcher of Sha-Sefi, the first of that name, King of Persia. The avenues to it are very pleasant, being as it were Alleys of great Trees, which are call'd Tachinar, planted in a streight line, at a due distance. It is of a moderate bigness, and seated in a lovely opening of the Mountains. The next to the Cities, which is call'd Sevalan, is the highest in all Media. The Houses of Ardevil are built of Earth, as are most of the Houses in the City of Persia: but the Streets are very uneven, dirty, and narrow. There is but one which is handsom, at the end whereof is built the Armenian Church. A little River runs through the middle of the City, which descending from the neighbouring Mountains runs from East to West. It is by Industry brought into many Cuts to water the Gardens, and in many places there are very fair Trees planted, which are very delightful to the Sight. The Meydan or Market-place is a very great one; more long than round; where stands a very fine Inn, upon one side, which the Kan caus'd to be built. There are several others in several parts of the City, which have the Prospect over several lovely Gardens, especially that which belongs to the King; to which you go through a long and stately Walk of four rows of Trees, at the end whereof stands a large Gate that gives you entrance. Though the Country about Ardevil be proper to bear Vines, yet there are none thereabouts; nor is there any Wine made till about four or five Leagues from the City. The Armenians that dwell in the City are very well stor'd with it; though there be no place in all Persia, where there is so much Caution to be us'd, either as to the Importing it, or the Drinking it; both which must be done very privately: Which proceeds from the Mahometan Superstition; the Persians having so peculiar a veneration for that place, that they believe it a sin to suffer Wine to be publickly drank therein.

The people come in Pilgrimage from all parts of Persia to the Sepulcher of Sha-Sefi; which together with the vast Trade of Silk, makes Ardevil one of the most considerable Cities of all Persia. There are several other Buildings added to the Mosquee wherein he lyes interr'd; the Entry whereof faces the Meydan, to which it is joyn'd upon the South-side with a large Portal. The Gate is chain'd with Chains fasten'd a cross with great Rings; which if any Criminal Offender can but touch, and enter into the first Court, he is safe; for no person can apprehend him. This is a large Court, yet more in length than breadth, without the Wall whereof that looks upon the Market-place, several Shops are built for Merchants and Tradesmen,

Out of this Court you pass into another which is less, and pav'd with broad Stones, with a Rivulet running through the middle. The Entry into it is through a Door, fortifi'd with Iron Chains like the former, and is made at a corner of the great Court upon the left hand. It brings you presently under a Portico, where there are fair Balconies rais'd after the fashion of the Country. Those Balconies are full of several People; either Pilgrims, or persons whose Crimes constrain them thither for Sanctuary. In that place you must leave your Stick and your Sword, before you go any farther; and give something besides to a Moulah, who is always attending there with Books.

In that second Court through which the Rivulet glides, on the one side are Baths, on the other Granaries for Rice and Corn; and upon the left hand, at the end of the same Court, there is a little Door which brings you to a place where the Royal Alms are distributed to the Poor, Morning and Evening; being just against the King's Kitchen. This Gate is cover'd with Plates of Silver; and in the Kitchen there are about thirty Ovens contriv'd in the Wall, with as many great Caldrons to dress Pilaw and other Food, as well for the Poor as for the Officers of the Mosquee. While these Alms are distributing, the Master-Cook, who commands all the rest, sets upon a Chair cover'd with Plates of Silver, and sees that every thing be done in order. He sees to the measuring out the Rice every day for the Kettles, and causes the Viſuals to be divided in his own sight: For there is an excellent Oeconomy in the King's House.

At the end of the Portico beyond the first Court there are two Gates, one beyond another, both cover'd with Plates of Silver, between those two Gates on the right hand appears a little Mosquee, where are the Tombs of several Persian Princes of the Blood Royal. You must have a great care not to tread upon the Thresholds of the Gates; for it is a Crime not to be expiated without a severe Punishment. From hence through a little Ile, you come into the Body of the Church, richly hung with Tapeſtry, and set about with high Desks, where lye a great many Books, wherein the Moullahs, or Doctors of the Law read continually, having Stipends to Officiate in the Mosquee. At the end of the Body of the Mosquee, is a little Octagonal Monument, like the Choir of a Church, in the midst whereof stands the Monument of Sha-Sefi. It is only of Wood, but curiously carv'd and inlaid. It exceeds not the height of a Man of an ordinary stature, and seems like a great Chest, having four Apples of Gold set up at each corner. It is cover'd with a Crimson Satin purfl'd with Gold; and all the other Tombs that are by it, are cover'd with Silks as rich. As well in the Choir as in the Body of the Church, there are abundance of Lamps, some of Gold, some of Silver; but the biggest of all is of Silver, gilded and vermilion'd, and neatly engrav'd. There are also six great Branches of a curious sort of Wood, cover'd with Silver, with great Wax Candles in them, which are never lighted but at their great Festivals.

From the Duomo where stands the Tomb of Sha-Sefi, you go under a little Vault, which encloses another Monument of another King of Persia, whose Name I could not learn. It looks like another great Chest, curiously wrought, and cover'd with Satin. The Roof of the Mosquee is adorn'd within with a Painting of Gold and Azure, a la Moresque; on the out-side, with a fair Varnish of several Colours, like the stately Mosquee at Tauris.

In the adjacent Parts round about Ardeuil are several Monuments worth a Man's sight, being very ancient; and some which are ruin'd, shew by what remains the care with they took to enrich them with curious Workmanship. A quarter of a League from the City stands a Mosquee, in which are the Tombs of the Father and Mother of Sha-Sefi. It is a fair Structure, with Gardens and Courts, in one of which there is a very clear Fountain where they keep Fish.

Ardeuil is not only famous, as I have said already, for the Royal Sepulchers which are in it, and for the Pilgrimages which have been made to it from all parts of Persia; but the numerous Caravans of Silk, which sometimes consist of eight or nine hundred Camels, add very much to its Grandeur. For being near to Guilan and Shamagui, from whence those vast quantities of Silk come; and for that the Road from both those places, to Constantinople and Smyrna, lyes through this City, there is a continual confluence of Merchants, and all sorts of Merchandizes are here to be had as well as at Tauris.

From Ardeuil to Casbin you travel through a good Country; for every three or four Leagues you meet with little Rivers that fall from the Northern Mountains, and water the Earth. The Caravan is usually five days between Ardeuil and Arion, between Arion and Taron two, between Taron and Casbin two more. Half a League on this side Taron you must cross a great River over a stone Bridge, and half a League beyond you come to Kalkal.

Arion is a little City, Taron and Kalkal are two great Towns; and there are but these three places in all Persia where there grow any Olives, or that they make any Oyl. Leaving Kalkal, you travel over a Plain for three hours, at the end whereof is a Way which you cannot get over in less than four hours. The way is so bad that the Horses and Mules can hardly get up; but for the Camels, they must take the lower Road, which is also very tedious, and full of Stones, which the Torrents tumble down, and it is three or four Leagues about. When you are up, the Country is level, and you have not above three Leagues to Casbin.

Casbin lyes in 87 Degrees and 30 Minutes of Longitude, and 36 Degrees and 15 Minutes of Latitude. It is a great City, the Houses whereof are low and ill built; except seven or eight, which are next to the King's Gardens. It has no Walls, and indeed the best half of the City is in Gardens. There are three Inns, with Market-places round about; one of the three being large and commodious. It is inhabited altogether by Mahometans; or if there be any Christians, they are very few.

The Soil about Casbin produces Pistaches. The Tree that bears that is never bigger than a Walnut tree of ten or twelve years old. The great quantity of Pistaches that are exported out of Persia come from Malawert, a little City twelve Leagues from Ispahan, toward the East. These are the best Pistaches in the World, and the Country being of a large extent, produces them in such abundance, that it furnishes all Persia and the Indies.

Leaving Casbin, you come to a little Village where there is but one Inn; and you travel that day six Leagues through Countries fertile enough, and well water'd.

The next day you travel through a good Country, and in nine or ten hours you come to Denghé. This is a great Village at the foot of a Hill, through which there runs a fair River. It abounds with excellent both White and Claret Wine, where the Travellers take care to replenish their Bottles. But generally they never lye here; being desirous to go a League farther, for a good Inn's sake, which makes it a handsome Stage.

At this Town of Denghé it is where the two Roads from Tauris to Ispahan meet: the first, through Ardeuil and Casbin, I have already describ'd. Hither also come the Caravans that go for the Indies through Meshebad and Candahar, and where they leave Ispahan Road to take the left-hand Way, which carries them Eastward.

CHAP. VI.

The ordinary Road from Tauris to Ispahan. through Zangan, Sultanie, and other places.

WE must now return again to the Lake six Leagues beyond Tauris, where they that will take the ordinary short way through Zangan and Sultanie, leave the left hand way of Ardeuil and Casbin. This Lake is usually full of large red Ducks, which are very good Meat.

From thence, after twelve or thirteen hours travel, in which time you meet with three Inns, you come to Karashima, a large Town in a deep Valley, that seems to be well manur'd. There is in it only a small Inn built of Earth, the Doors whereof are so low, that the People are forc'd to creep upon their knees to get in.

The next day you come to another large Village call'd Turcoma, where the Soil is fertile, though it be very cold. There are several Caravanseas built like a long Alley Alley cover'd, which are only of Earth, the Men lying at one end, and the Horses at another.

The next day you travel over an uneven and desert Country, and in eight hours time you come to Miana, a little City situated in a Marsh, where you pay a Toll for Guarding the Highways. In this City is one of the fairest Inns in all Persia.

Two hours after you leave Miana, you must cross a River, over a fair Bridge which runs to decay; the Archès whereof are hollow within; it is built of Brick and Free-stone, being near as long as Pont neuf in Paris. This Bridge stands almost at the foot of a Mountain call'd Kaplenton. Sha-Abas caus'd all the way to be Pav'd, because the Land is so fat and sloughy, that when it thaws, or that the least Rain falls, it is impossible for the Caravan to pass. Besides, there are a sort of Camels in Persia, that when it comes to rain in a deep Soil, are not able to keep their Legs: nay through the weight of the Burthens which they carry, their very Quarters will rive from their Shoulders, and their Bellies will burst. So that before the way was pav'd, they were forc'd to spread Carpets in the most slippery ways where those Camels were to pass: which must be still done in some places, where the Pavement is worn away.

At the lower part of the descent toward Ispahan, upon the knap of a Hill which stands by it self, appears an old forsak'n Fortrefs; it is near the Highway, and a River, which falls into the Caspian Sea, after it has cross'd the Province of Guilan, where it is cut into several Channels. But generally the Corn and Fruits which grow in Persia by the help of Water forc'd into Channels, are of little esteem, and much cheaper than those that grow in the Provinces whose Fertility is not Artificial. Moreover, that sort of forc'd Grain will not keep above a Year; and if you keep it longer, it breeds a Vermin that eats it. 'Tis the same thing if the Corn be ground; and more than that, there breeds a Worm in the Flower, that makes it so bitter that 'tis impossible to eat it.

On this side the Mountain Kaplenton appear at a distance two others very high, one toward the North call'd Saveland, another toward the South call'd Sehand: there is a third, which cannot be seen in Ispahan-Road, being too far out of the way, near the City of Hamadan. These three Mountains are full of Springs, from whence most of the Streams do fall that water Persia: And the Persians do say, that formerly there were many more of these Springs, but that about a hundred Years ago several of them have been dry'd up; or otherwise no body can tell what is become of them.

There are several Villages near the Mountain that pay nothing to the King, but are oblig'd to send him a certain quantity of Rice and Butter, for the use of the Mosquee at Ardeuil. They have also one great Priviledge, That if a Man commits a Murther, and flies to any of these Villages, he cannot be apprehended, nor can the King himself punish him.

Leaving the River that runs at the foot of the Mountain Kaplenton, you come to a fair Inn call'd Tshamalava, built some years ago: and for thirteen hours after, travelling over a very barren Country, you meet with another Inn, which is call'd Sartcham, standing in a very desert place: which makes the Raders, that lye there to secure the Highways, very insolent, finding themselves so far from any Towns or Villages.

From Sartcham you come to a River, by the Banks whereof you travel a good while, till you come to an Inn which is call'd Digbé, near a large Village. The Structure is very handsom, the lower part being of Free-stone undulated with red and white, and very hard.

The next day you travel a very uneven Country, till you fall into a deep Valley, at the end whereof you meet with Zangan, a great Town and ill built. However, it has a very fair Inn, which when I went last to Ispahan was so full, that I had like to have lain abroad in the Rain, but for the Courtesie of two Armenians. From Zangan you go to an Inn, where you must pay the Duties due to the Kan of Sultanie.

Sultanie is a very large City, which you leave half a Mile from the Road, near to a Mountain. Formerly it had in it very beautiful Mosquees, as may be easily conjectur'd by the Ruines that remain. Many Christian Churches also were converted into Mosques; and if you will believe the Armenians, they will tell you, that there were in Sultanie near eight hundred Churches and Chapels.

Three Leagues from Sultanie stands an Inn, and a League farther a great Town call'd Ija, where there is another very commodious Inn, and most excellent Wine.

From thence you go to Habar, an ancient City and of a large extent, but very much ruin'd, inhabited by Armenians for the most part: Here, for the good Wines take the Travellers stay to recruit their Bottles.

From Habar, after seven hours travel you come to a Village call'd Partin. From Zangan to Partin you reach in two days. It stands in a fertil Plain, where there are several other Villages. It is not above three Leagues broad, being enclōs'd on each side, to the East and West, with a row of high Mountains.

Having pass'd this Plain, you come to a barren Country and ill inhabited, which lasts all the day, till you come to Sexava. You pass by the Ruines of a Village, where there are but two Houses standing, with the Tower of a Mosquee, which is very high and slender. Then you come to a Mud-wall'd-Inn, built some few years since; and near to that a Castle call'd Khiara, upon the peak of a Hill, but very ill built.

Sexava is a little City in a Soil that bears excellent Nuts. The Inns that are there being built of Earth, and being but little, are very handsom and convenient, their number supplying the defect of their smallness.

From Sexava, after seven hours travel, you come to a great Inn, call'd Idgionp, which was formerly a nobler place than now it is, standing alone in a Field. Three Leagues from thence you meet with another spacious Inn, call'd Cochkeria; and four hours farther you come to the Inn Denghé, where the two Roads meet which I spake of in the foregoing Chapter.

From Denghé to Kom are three days journey, over a barren, dry, and desert Country, where there is no Water but Cistern-water, except in some very few places, where it is very good. Four Leagues from Denghé is a fair Inn; and three Leagues farther stands another, about a Mile from a Village to the South, where there grows excellent good Wine, white and red. From this last Inn to Sava is not above three hours travel with the Caravan.

Sava is a good City in a fertil Plain, where there are several Villages. The greatest Trade of the Town is in little grey Lamb-skins, the curl whereof is very neat, of which they make Furrs. Two or three Leagues beyond Sava the Country is very well manur'd, and after you have forded a River half a League from the City, after two hours travel you come to one of the fairest Inns in all Persia, which was finish'd when I went last to Ispahan. From thence to Kom it is about seven or eight hours journey, through a dry and sandy Road: but half a League on this side Kom the Land is very good and fruitful.

Kom is one of the great Cities of Persia, in a fat Country abounding in Rice. There grow also excellent Fruits, particularly large and excellent Granates. The Walls are only of earth, with little Towers close one to another; and the Houses being only of Earth, are never the handsomer within-side. At the entry into the Town, you must cross a River, over a stone Bridge, and then turning to the right hand over a fair Key, you come to an Inn very well built and very convenient.

That which is most remarkable in Kom is a large Mosquee, no less in veneration among the Persians, than the Mosquee of Ardeuil. There it is that you may see the Sepulchers of Sha-Sefi and Sha-Abas the Second; as also the Tomb of Sidi-Farima, the Daughter of Iman-Hocen, who was the Son of Haly and Fatima. Zubra the Daughter of Mahomet. The great Gate of the Mosquee answers to a Piazza more long than broad, where stands an Inn and certain Shops, which without-side are somewhat beautiful. One of the sides of the Piazza is clos'd up with a low Wall, over which appears the Shore, and a River which you cross at the end of the Piazza. Over the great Portal of the Mosquee stands an Inscription, in Letters of Gold, in the praise of Sha-Abas the Second. The first place that you enter into is a Court of more length than breadth, which may be term'd a Garden, in regard that on each side of the Alley in the middle, which is pav'd, there are several square Beds of Flowers, yellow Jasmīn, and other Plants; which are rail'd in by a Rail that runs all the length of the Alley on each side. It is not an easie thing for the Christians to get in to this Court; especially such whose Habits and Aspect they do not like: But as I cloth'd and carry'd my self, I never was deny'd entrance into any place either in Persia or India.

In this first Court on the left hand as you enter, are little Chambers, where they that receive the Alms, which by the Foundation of the Mosquee are to be distributed every day, come and eat their proportion, and then go their ways. Those Chambers serve as an Asylum to those that cannot pay their Debts, as at the Mosquee of Ardenil. Neither are these Priviledg'd places like ours, where they that retire must live at their own Charge: For in Persia they are fed at the expence of the Mosquee; and being in that manner freed from Care, their Friends more easily bring their Creditors to Composition.

Out of the first Court you pass into a second, which is larger, and all pav'd; and from that into a third, which is square, and rais'd like a Terrass. You enter into it through a large Gate, at the end of an open Passage, where stand the Lodgings of the Moullah's.

Out of that Court by an ascent of Brickwork of ten or twelve Steps, you enter into a fair Court, which is also rais'd like a Terrass; in the midst whereof is a fair Fountain. It is continually fill'd by little Pipes of Water which run into it, and is empty'd by others that carry the Water into several parts of the whole Enclosure. There are some Buildings in this Court, but one of the sides of it is taken up with the Front of the Mosquee, which is no displeasing Structure. There are three large Gates belong to it, very well expanded, according to the mode of the Country; with a Brick-wall before, about the height of a Man, with Holes in it for Light, made like a Lozange. The Threshold of the middle Gate is cover'd with a plate of Silver; and between these three Gates and that of the Duomo, are several Doctors that hold Books in their hands, and read perpetually.

This Mosquee is Octagonal, and at every angle is a small wooden Door of Walnut-tree, varnish'd with grey and yellow. The Tomb of Sidi-Fatima is at the farther part of the Mosquee, there being only room for one Man to pass between the Wall and the Tomb. It is encompass'd with a large Silver Grate, sixteen Foot square; the Bars whereof are round, and knob'd in those places where they cross each other; it is lighted by several Lamps of Gold and Silver: which altogether is very pleasing to the Eye. The inside of the Mosquee, to the elevation of the Angles that support the Duomo, is compos'd of square Tiles varnish'd over with divers Colours; and the Cupola of the Duomo, as also the Vault of the Portico of the Mosquee, is a Moresco piece of Painting in Or and Azure. Upon each side of the Mosquee, and near the side where the Tomb of Sidi-Fatima stands, appears a great Hall, where the Royal Alms are distributed to the Poor, which consist of Pilaw and other diet, very well dress'd. From this Tomb you turn to the left hand toward an Ascent, distant five and twenty or thirty Paces; and at the top of this Ascent is a Door, over which there is an Inscription in Honour of Sha-Abas the Second. The Door being open'd, shews you the place where the Body of that King reposes: and through another Door with a Grate in it, you may discover, under a small Duomo, the Tomb of Sha-Sefi his Father; which is cover'd with a Carpet of Cloth of Gold. They were continually at work upon the Tomb of Sha-Abas, which they said, they would make very famous.

I had not been two hours in Kom, but a multitude of People ran by the Inn Gate, all in extraordinary hast. Asking what the matter was, they answer'd me, that it had been a day long design'd for the two Prophets to fight. Thereupon I went to the Piazza, which was so crowded, that I had much ado to get to see. In the first place a sufficient number of Tumblers and Puppet players, divided into two Bands, kept the middle of the Piazza, and made a sufficient Ring for the Combat. Each Band held a Bull by the Horns, one of which they call'd Mahomet, and the other Haly: and whether it were by accident, or by the cunning of the Bull-Masters, after an obstinate Combat, wherein the Beasts foam'd again with heat and rage; Mahomet at length quit the Field, and yielded Haly the Victory. Then all the People shouted for joy, and all the Piazza was fill'd with the noise of Flutes and Hautboys; and every one coming as if it were to adore Haly, cry'd out, Behold the Works of God, that Haly has made! At length they bring the Bull Haly under a Gate, with his Head turn'd toward the People; where after they have have rub'd him to refresh him, after a Combat so courageously maintain'd, every one sends him Presents, which are all the Tumblers profit. The Kan or Governour of Kom, who was present with a hundred Horses richly trap'd to behold the Sight, sent the Bull a Present of 50 Tomans, or 750 Crowns. They who accompany'd him, and the chief Inhabitants of Kom, gave him some a Garment, others a Girdle. Neither did the meanest of the People spare to send or carry him Fruits, or other things, according to their abilities.

The Kan was a Lord who was very civil, and there was no Stranger that did not commend his behaviour, in regard he was so obliging.

So soon as I came to the place, whether it was that he perceiv'd me with a Dutchman that I had brought along from Constantinople, or whether any one had inform'd him that there were Strangers near him, he sent for us, and after he had ask'd us some Questions concerning the occasion of our Travelling, he sent for a Seat and caus'd us to sit down. Then he ask'd us whence we came, and what we did at Ispahan; to which when we had answer'd him, that we went to wait upon the King, he approved our Intention, complaining that we had not given him advice of our Arrival. In the Evening he sent us several Delicacies, among the rest, six fair Melons, and four Bottles of excellent Wine.

He appear'd to me so brave and generous a Person, that I was very much troubled afterwards for his being in dis-favour with the King, and his death, which ensu'd. For this Kan finding the Walls of the City, which were only of Earth, and the Bridge over the River to be out of repair, without writing to the King, of his own head, laid a slight Imposition upon every Basket of Fruit that was brought into the City. Now there are in all the Cities of Persia, persons who are hir'd to take an account every Week what the Commodities may be worth, and to take care that no more than such a Toll be laid upon any thing; which they tax among themselves, and when they had set the Rate, they cause it to be cry'd at the beginning of every Week. Sha-Sefi then reign'd, it being the year 1632. The King being inform'd by these people of the Impost which the Kan had set upon Fruit without his knowledge, was so enrag'd against him, that he caus'd him to be brought in Chains to Ispahan, where he us'd him with a strange severity. For at that time the Son of the Kan stood at the King's Elbow, it being his Office to give him his Pipe and his Tobacco, which is a very honourable Employment in Persia. When the Kan came, the King caus'd him to be carry'd to the Gate of the Palace, in the presence of all the People, and then commanded his Son to pull the Hair of his Father's Mustaches by the roots from his Skin. After that he commanded him to cut off his Nose and his Ears; after that to put out his Eyes, and lastly to cut off his Head. When he had done the Execution according to the King's pleasure, he commanded him to go and take possession of his Fathers Government, and allowing him an experienc'd Old Man for his Lieutenant, he sent him to Kom with these words; If thou govern'st no better than this dead Dog has done, I will put thee to a more cruel Death than this.

Leaving Kom, for four hours you travel over a fair Champain Country, after which you come to a fair Village with five or six Inns in it. Beyond that is nothing but Sand, till you come to a place call'd Abschirim, or Fresh-water, where there are three Inns at a Distance from any Villages. From Abschirim to Cachan is six hours journey through a Corn Country, and stor'd with great Villages.

Cachan is a large City, well peopl'd, and furnish'd with all things necessary for humane subsistence: There is an old Wall about it which is fall'd down in many places, so that there is no need of seeking for Gates to get into the City. On that side which looks toward Ispahan the Soil is good, and produces great store of Fruit and Wine, which the Jews take care to make. It is reckon'd that there are in Cachan a thousand Families of Jews; in Ispahan about six hundred; but in Kom there are not above nine or ten. Not but that there are many Jews in Persia, but those that live in Ispahan, Cachan and Kom, boast themselves particularly of the Tribe of Judah.

There are an abundance of Silk-Weavers in Chachan that are very good Workmen, which make all the best purpl'd Sattins mix'd with Gold and Silver, that come out of Persia. There they also coyn Money, and make Copper-vessels, which they vend in great quantities at a good distance off. The Market-houses are very fair ones, ones, and well vaulted, the Inns large and convenient: but there was one among the rest which was very magnificent, near the King's Gardens, at the entry of the City. As well the Inn as the Gardens were made by the order of Sha-Abbas, the first of that Name, who was at a vast charge. The Inn is above a hundred Paces square, built of Brick two Stories high, containing twenty-six vaulted Chambers of a reasonable bigness. It was a Structure too fair to be so little regarded, as now it is, being much fallen to decay. In the middle of the Court was a Fountain to receive Water, which is spoil'd. The Persians and Turks are of that bad humor, rather to build new Houses than to repair old Buildings. For which reason they have since built at Cachin four or five Inns, as fair and commodious as that of Sha-Abas. This Custom is grown to that height, that the Children are so far from taking care to repair the old Houses where their Parents liv'd, that they will not so much as live in them after their decease, covetous of the honour of building Houses for themselves.

Before we leave Cachan you must take notice, that as you are to travel from that City to Gnilan, you cannot avoid travelling thorough Plains for twelve hours together, which are all pure Salt; and there is nothing to be met with by the way, but one Cistern; nor can the Water which is in it be otherwise than very bad.

Leaving Cachan, you cross a Plain of three Leagues, after which you enter in among the Mountains, where you come to a very fair Inn of Brick. From thence you descend a pleasant Vale, where you travel a long time by the side of a River, over a very narrow way. At the end of the Valley you meet a great Wall, which crosses it, and joyns the two Mountains together. This Wall is above a hundred Paces long, above thirty Foot thick, and fifty high. It was the Work of the Great Sha-Abas, whose design it was to stop the Waters that fall from the Mountain, and to make a Receptacle for Water in that place, to serve his occasions. At the foot of the Wall there is a Sluce, which being let down keeps in the Water; but is pull'd up to let out the Water over all the neighbouring Lands to the Plain of Cachan. From this Receptacle to Coron is about two hours travel.

Coron is a very large Village, and well peopl'd, in a Soil environ'd with high Mountains, and planted with great store of Walnut-trees. The Houses consist but of one low Story, being built of Flint-stone; but the Inn therein is very fair and commodious. This Village consists but of one Street, but it is almost half a League long, and very troublesome in the Winter, by reason of a great River that runs through it. and the great quantity of Stones that lye in the way. All about this Village, as in several other places of Persia, there are a great number of Shacales; which are a kind of Foxes, that in the night time make an ugly noise; for if but one cry, all the rest will make answer, and set up a howling.

From Coron you must travel three Leagues between Mountains, after which you have but twelve Leagues to Ispahan. It is a continued Plain that extends it self beyond the City, and in many places the Soil is very good. At every three Leagues end you meet with Inns. The first is call'd Achaba-Acacamala; the second, which is the half-way between Coron and Ispahan, is call'd Michiacour. This place consists not only of one Inn, for there are many others, so that it resembles a large Village. From Michiacour you come to Aganura, another Inn, but ill built; and from Aganura, after you have travel'd three Leagues through a fat and fertile Country, you come to Ispahan.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Road from Smyrna to Ispahan, through Natolia.

Smyrna is at this day for Trade, whether it be by Sea or Land, one of the most celebrated Cities of all the Levant, and the greatest Market for all sorts of Commodities which are transported out of Asia into Europe, or out of Europe into Asia. Hither all the Western Fleets are most regularly bound, that came formerly no farther than Ligorn, and from whence, at times most regularly appointed, the fairest Caravans set out.

This City lyes in 50 Degrees of Longitude; and 38 Degrees, 45 Minutes of Latitude; at the bottom of a Gulf in the Archipelago, which is seven Leagues in length, upon the right side of the Isthmus which begins to form the Peninsula of Clazomene, right against the Island of Schio. It lyes in that part of the Lesser Asia, which the Greeks possess'd, under the Name of Iconium; at a distance almost equal, between Ephesus and Sardis; and was one of the seven Churches mention'd in the Revelation of St. John. It is at this day a great City, built like an Amphitheater, upon the descent of a Hill that looks toward the Summer-West. But it is neither so great, nor so beautiful as formerly it was, as may be easily conjectur'd by the Ruines of certain Edifices that remain upon that Hill, which from the middle to the top, where the ancient City stood, are altogether uninhabited. There are also to be seen the Walls of a fair Castle, and above that the Ruines of an Amphitheater; where they say St. Polycarp was expos'd to fight with Lions. This Amphitheater was not in the form of those other, which are usually round; for it contain'd but half a Circle, being left open to the Sea-side. The Turks have almost quite destroy'd it: making use of the Stones to build a Fort two Leagues from the City, upon the Gulf, where the passage is very narrow; which the Ships are forc'd to salute as they inter in, and to speak with when they sail out. Moreover, that they might not be put to send for Stones a-far-off, they consulted whether they might not make use of the Stones of the Christians Monuments, as also of those of the Jews, which are near the Shore. But they took very few, whether out of kindness to the Tombs, or whether they did not think them so proper for use as the Stones of the Amphitheater. This Castle had not been long built, but upon an occasion very remarkable. In the last Wars of the Turks with the Venetians, the Ottoman Fleet having been beaten in the Archipelago, the Grand Signor resolv'd to re-fit another to Sea, and thereupon sent to all the parts of his Empire, where he knew any English or Holland Vessels usually were wont to ride, to solicit them to serve him for his Pay. More particularly he aim'd at those Vessels which were in Smyrna, where there were generally more than in any other Port. But the Captains, who rejected his Proposition of fighting against the Venetians, believing that he would put some force upon them, suddenly hois'd Sail and got away; it being at a time when he could not keep them in, having no Castle then built to command them. The Grand Vizier nettl'd at the refusal of the Captains, as an affront done to his Master, and to see that the Ships could come in and go out, without any let or molestation, bethought himself (to the end he might keep them for the future under subjection) of building a Fort upon the Gulf, in such a part where the Vessels must necessarily touch; where now there lye great Cannons level with the Water, which no Vessel can escape. Ever since the Convoys will not come to Smyrna, as they were wont to do, but lye out at Sea, out of the reach of the Fort.

Near to the Sea are yet to be seen some Remains of a Church, two sides whereof seem to have been distinguish'd into Chappels by little Walls, which are yet standing: But the Natives doubt whether they be the Ruines of a Church dedicated to St. Polycarp, or of an ancient Temple of Janus.

Smyrna has been oftentimes ruin'd either by the Wars, or by the Earthquakes which often happen there. One time that I staid there, there happen'd one, which did not last long, but was very terrible. About sixty Paces from the Sea are to be discern'd the Ruines of great Walls two Foot under Water; and at the end of the City

City that looks toward the Winter-West, near to the Sea, appear the Ruines of a Mole, and certain ancient Magazines.

The English Merchants have dig'd among the Ruines of Smyrna, and have found great store of fair Statues, which they transported into their own Country. There are still found some or other every day; but when the Turks find any, they disfigure them presently. It may be conjectur'd, that there was one of a prodigious bigness, by a great Toe broken off of some one, and for which I paid sufficiently, out of the desire I had to buy it. I sent it to Paris to a Person of Quality, who look'd upon it as a great Curiosity. This Toe was of a hard white Stone, and well shap'd, and by the proportion whereof, the Figure could not be judg'd to be less than the Colossus of Rhodes.

Upon that side of the City where the Mole was, stands an old Castle of no defence, at the foot whereof the Sea makes a small Creek, where sometimes the Gallies of the Grand Signor lye.

The City is well peopl'd containing no less than fourscore and ten thousand Souls. There are reckon'd no less than 60000 Turks, 15000 Greeks, 8000 Armenians, and about six or seven thousand Jews. As for the European Christians that Trade there, their number is very small. Every one of these Nations has the exercise of their Religion free to themselves. The Turks have in Smyrna fifteen Mosques, the Jews seven Synagogues, the Armenians but one Church, the Greeks two, and the Latines three. There are also French Jesuits, and Italian Observantins, or a sort of Grey Franciscans. The Turks, the Greeks, the Armenians, and Jews live upon the Hill; but all the lower part toward the Sea is inhabited only by the European Christians, English, French, Hollanders, and Italians. The Greeks have also in the same Quarter an old Church, and some few small Houses, where Sea-men make merry.

All these different People of Europe are generally known in Smyrna by the Name of Franks. Every Nation has its Consul: and the French Consul has two Vice-Consuls under him; the one at Scalanova, the other at Chio.

Scalanova, or the New Port, is two Leagues beyond Ephesus, and being a good Haven, the Vessels were wont to unlade there; but the Turks would not permit it any longer. For that Place being the Dowry of the Grand Signor's Mother, the Vice-Consul agreed with the Governour of Scalanova, who permitted the Transportation of Goods to Smyrna, which is not above three little days journey with the Caravan: A thing that spoil'd the Trade of the City, and injur'd the Officers of the Custom-House. Whereupon they Petition'd the Grand Signor that no more Goods might be unladed at Scalanova: so that now no more Vessels go thither, unless it be to take in fresh Viuals.

Chio is one of the greatest Islands in the Archipelago, of which in another place: but the Vice-Consul that lives there has no more business there than the other at Scalanova; for the Vessels that touch there, neither unlade nor export any Goods from thence.

The Quarter of the Franks is only a long Street, one side whereof lyes upon the Sea; and as well for the Prospect, as for the convenience of Unlading Goods, the Houses upon the Sea are much dearer than those that lye upon the Hill.

The Soil about Smyrna is fertil, and abounds in all things necessary for humane support; but particularly in good Oyl and good Wine. There are Salt-Pits also half a League from the City, toward the North. The Sea affords great store of good Fish; Fowl is very cheap; and in a word, Smyrna is a place of great plenty. There is a lovely Walk all along the Sea to the Salt-Pits, where generally abundance of People walk in the Summer-time to take the fresh Air: and there being more liberty at Smyrna than in any other part of Turkie, there is no necessity of taking a Janisary along, when a man goes abroad. If a man loves Fowling, it is but taking a Boat, which lands him two or three Leagues from the City, toward the Mountains, where there is so much Game that he can never return empty. For the value of three Sous you may buy a red Partridge at Smyrna, and all other Fowl is proportionably cheap.

But if Smyrna have these great advantages, it has also its inconveniences: the Heats are very excessive in Summer, and indeed they would be insupportable, were it not for the Breezes that come off the Sea: these Breezes rise about ten in the Morning, and continue till the Evening; but if they fail, 'tis very bad for the Inhabitants. Besides, there hardly passes a Year but the City is infested with the Plague, which however is not so violent as in Christendom. The Turks neither fear it nor flee it, believing altogether in Predestination. Yet I believe, if the Inhabitants of Smyrna would take care to drain away the standing Puddles that gather in the Winter about the City, they would not be so frequently molested with the Plague as they are. It is most rife in May, June, and July; but the malignant Fevers that succeed it in September and October are more to be fear'd, more People dying of them than of the Pestilence. In all my Travels I never was in Smyrna at these unfortunate Seasons. There is no Basha in that City; it being govern'd only by a Cady, who is not so severe to the Christians as in other places: For should he abuse his Office, Constantinople is at hand, where you may complain to the Mufti, and have relief; who for some good Present may be easily perswaded to depose the Cady, as being glad of the opportunity to displace him, and to put another in his room.

The Customs of Smyrna yield a great Revenue to the Grand Signor, being paid there very exactly. But were there a certain Rate put upon Commodities, the Merchants, who would otherwise be losers, would not study so many ways as they do to deceive the Customers: For those Customers lay what Price they please upon Commodities, valuing that at a thousand Crowns, which perhaps is not worth three hundred, being absolute Masters of the Rate. In my last Voyage to Smyrna, four Dutch Women that went thither in our Ship from their own Country, carry'd a-shoar under their Coats whatever I had of rich Merchandize: for the Turks have such a respect for that Sex, that they will not so much as offer to search them. If a man be tak'n in stealing Customs, there is no other punishment than to pay double.

The Trade of Smyrna is very great, and the principal Merchandizes which the Franks transport from thence, are raw Silk, which the Armenians bring out of Persia; Chamlet-yarn, and Chamlet or Goats-hair, which come from a little City call'd Angourri, fifteen or sixteen days journey from Smyrna; Cotton twisted; Skins and Cordovans of several colours; Calicuts, white and blew; great quantities of Wool for Mattresses, Tap'stries, quilted Coverlets, Soap, Rhubarb, Galls, Valanede, Scammony, and Opium; which four last Commodities are to be had in the Countries near to Smyrna, but not in great quantities. The Caravans come generally to this Town in the Months of February, June, and October; and depart again to the Countries from whence they came the same Months.

Ephesus not being above a day and a halfs journey from Smyrna, on Horse-back I took an opportunity to go thither. There were twelve of us that joyn'd together, Franks and Hollanders, who took three Janisaries along with us, and three Horses to carry our Provision.

We travel'd this little Journey in the Summer, and setting out of Smyrna about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, we rode through a Country part Plains, and part Hills, till we came to a great Village, where we sup'd.

After we had staid there three hours, we took Horse and travel'd till Midnight, to avoid the Heats: By the way we met with nine or ten Arches, very narrow; which we could not conjecture to be any thing else than the Ruines of some Aqueduct: From thence to Ephesus the way is very pleasant, through little Thickets watred with Rivulets.

A quarter of a League from Ephesus you meet with another Mosquee, which was formerly a Christian Church, built out of the Ruines of the Temple of Ephesus. This Mosquee stands enclos'd with Walls, and you must ascend up to it by two Ascents of twelve Steps a-piece, which bring you to a large Passage. From thence you enter into a large Cloyster; the Arches whereof are sustain'd with Marble Pillars of several colours, delicately wrought; and the lower part of the Gallery, which runs along three of the sides, that consists of great Squares of Stone. The Mosquee takes up the fourth side upon the left hand, the Gate being in the middle. The Mosquee it self is a wide Arch, supported by five Columns, all of most exquisite Work. There are four of Marble, and every one of a different Colour; but the fifth is a most rare piece, being of Porphyry, and the bigness of it makes it so much the more to be admir'd.

Ephesus does not look like a City, being so absolutely ruin'd, that there is not a House standing. It was built upon the descent of a Hill, in a situation not much unlike that of Smyrna, at the foot whereof runs a Rivulet, after it has made a thousand Meanders in the Meadows. The City seems to have been very large, for you may discern upon the top of the Gates the compass of the Walls, with several square Towers, some of which are still standing: and there is one very remarkable, having two Chambers in it, one of which is a very fair one, the Walls and Pavement whereof are Marble.

The famous Temple of Diana stood at the bottom of the Hill, near one of the Gates of the City. There remains nothing of it at present but the great Portal, which is entire. The Vaults of the Arches under ground stand to this day, and are very large, but all full of nastiness. We went in with Lanthorns; and though you must creep to get in, by reason that the Wind has almost stop't up the Hole, by gathering the Dust about it, yet when you are in, you may go upright; for the Arches are high and fair, and little the worse. Near the Gate lye four or five Columns upon the Ground, and near to that a Fountain, ten Foot in Diameter, and two deep. The People of the Country report, that it was the Fountain wherein St. John Baptiz'd the Christians. For my part, as I have seen in the Indies several Pagods and Edifices much more beautiful than ever the Temple of Ephesus could be; I believe it rather to have been a Basin wherein the People put their Offerings, of which there are several such that belong to the Indian Pagods. The Greeks and Armenians, but above all the Franks, when they go to Ephesus always endeavour to break off some piece of that Basin, to carry it away with 'em as a Relick: but the Stone is so hard, that they can break off but very little at a time.

Not far from the Temple appears another Gate of the City, over which there lyes a great Stone seven or eight Foot square, with an emboss'd Figure of Q. Curtius that Famous Roman, who threw himself, Horse and Arms into the gaping Earth, for the good of his Country. Many Merchants have offer'd Money for liberty to carry it away, but cannot obtain leave. About five hundred Paces from Ephesus is the Grotto which they call the Seven Sleepers, at the bottom of the same Hill where the City was built.

From Ephesus we went to Scalanova, which is not above two Leagues off. By that time you come half the way, the little River that runs by Ephesus falls into the Sea, in the mouth whereof there are always a great number of Greek Barks fishing for Sturgeon. Of the Spawn of this Fish they make Caveare, and drive a great Trade in it in those Parts: then they take the most delicate and smallest Entrails of that Fish, which they fill with the same Spawn, of which they make a kind of a flat Pudding, as long as a Bisket, which they call Botargo. This they dry in the Smoak, and cut it afterwards in slices to eat. Upon this and the Cuttle-fish the Greeks generally feed during their Lent, which is very austere.

Scalanova is a Port of which I have already spoken, and thither we came by seven a Clock in the Evening; where the Governour of the Place, more civil than usually the Turks are accusom'd to be, made us very welcom.

In the Evening one of our Fanizaries had quarrel'd with one of our Servants, who thereupon had beaten him; and therefore he complain'd to the Fellow's Master, who not giving him that satisfaction which he desir'd, thereupon the Turk study'd to be reveng'd upon the whole Company. For this reason, upon some pretence or other, he went before, the better to bring about his design. We staid till the Morning, and then departed early from Scalanova, and by Noon we came with good Stomachs to the Mosquee near Ephesus, where we had been the day before: And some of the Company thought it a very convenient place to dine in, iⁿ the shade; thereupon we sent for our Provisions, with a Boracho of Wine, and another of Water, and fell to eating in the Passage into the Mosquee, not dreaming any harm. We had not been long at it, when we perceiv'd two or three Turks about two hundred Paces off, who came from a Village very near to the Mosquee. I knowing the custom of the Country better than they, told them, that they were certainly coming to pick a quarrel with us, and therefore caus'd them to hide the Bottle of Wine immediately; for it was then the Turks Ramezan, or Lent; during which time Wine is strictly forbidden. These two ill-contriv'd and ill-clad Fellows were the Fanizaries of the place, whom the Cadi had sent, upon the information of our Fanizary (who knowing we had eaten in the same place before, as indeed we had done, made no question but we would do so again) thinking to surprize us as we were drinking Wine, in a place which they esteem Sacred, and by consequence was among them accounted an act of Sacrilege. Christian Dogs, cry'd they, when they came near us, to eat and drink in a Mosque, and profane a holy place as you do, at a time that renders the offence more criminal! No, cry'd I, answering for the rest, we drink no Wine, we drink nothing but Water, and you may tast it, said I to him that was the most busie; with that I caus'd a Glas to be pour'd out and giv'n him; and I gave one of the Turks a private wink, who understanding it was a promise of gratuity, turn'd about to his Comrades, and cry'd, 'Tis very true, they drink no Wine. However in regard they had Orders to bring us before the Cady, there was no contending. Thereupon I and three others undertook to answer for all the rest. The Cady revil'd us as bad as the Janizary at first; but he was not only surpriz'd, but very much troubl'd, when they all unanimously affirm'd that we drank no Wine, believing they were confederates with us. But I had cunningly slipt eight Ducats into the Hand of the Turk to whom I had made a sign with my Eye; who over-joy'd at so plentiful a gratuity, had over-perswaded his Comrades not to say any thing against us. The Cady, though he did not like their Testimony, yet call'd for Coffee for us, according to the custom of the Country, and sent us to his Lieutenant; who having been often greas'd in the Fist by the Smyrna-Merchants, receiv'd us very kindly, and told us that the Cady was but newly come to his Place, and was needy; however a small matter would content him. Thereupon we gave the Lieutenant twenty-five Ducats, who most certainly went snips with the Cady, and so return'd us to our Company, who were much afraid we would not have come off so.

We were resolv'd to return to Smyrna not the same way we came, and so we took another Road, which was a very pleasant way, partly over firm Sands, and partly thorough Meadows, where we met with several narrow Dikes very well Pav'd. Then we cross'd a rugged high Mountain; and lay in a Mahumetan Barn.

The next day we return'd to Smyrna, having finish'd our small Journey to Ephesus in five days. When we told the Consuls how the Janizary had betray'd us, they made their Complaint to the Janizary Aga and the Cady, who, for his punishment put him out of the Consul's service, which is an advantageous Employment. For besides that the Consul's Janizaries are exempt from the Duties of War, they are well plac'd; for there is never a Merchant that is not beneficial to them some way or other; especially at good times, as New-years-day and other Festivals. Nor could the Janizary have been more severely punish'd; for the Turks love Money above all things in the World.

But to return to our matter. The Rendezvous of all the Caravans is generally two Leagues from the City, near a Town call'd Pongarbachi. The day of their setting out being fix'd, every one provides himself for his Journey, and meets the Evening before at the place appointed, to be ready at the hour.

From Smyrna to Tocat, is thirty-five days journey with the Caravan, and the last time I went we made it thirty-eight from Pongarbachi.

The first day we travel'd eight hours through a Country whose prospect was not unpleasing, leaving some Villages more than a League from the Road; and we lodg'd in a Park, near the River Pactolus; which is a small River, the Sand wherewith shines, and is of several colours. Which caus'd Antiquity to call Pactolus Golden-Sanded. It falls from the Mountain Tmolus, and after it has water'd the Territory of Sardis, mixes with the River Hermus, that throws it self into the Archipelago through the Gulph of Smyrna. The Mouth of it is not above two or three Leagues from the City, toward the North.

The next day in six hours we came to Durgout, a little City in a Plain. All Christians that live not in the Territories of the Grand Signor, and pass that way, once a Year pay Carrage, or a Tribute of four or five Crowns: but the Franks are exempt, both at Durgout and over all Turkie. There resides a Basha in this City; and we were constrain'd to stop there a whole day, because the Caravan that comes from Persia arriv'd at that time, so that they were forc'd to change their Camels.

The third day, after five hours travel in extremity of Heat, we came to lodge near a paltry Village.

The

The fourth day we travel'd six hours, and stop'd near to a small River. In the Morning we pass'd over the Ruines of the ancient Sardis, the Capital City of Lydia, and Seat of King Croesus. There were still to be seen the Ruines of a large Palace and two fair Churches, with a great number of Pillars and Corniches of Marble. This City having held out six Years against the Army of Temur-leng, who besieg'd it; so soon as he had taken it, in revenge he utterly destroy'd it. There is a Village near Sardis of the same Name, where stood the City, which was one of the Seven Churches mention'd in the Revelation. The fifth day we rode for seven hours through a Country, but ill manur'd, and took up our Stage in a Plain upon the side of a River.

The sixth day we pass'd by the Walls of the ancient Philadelphia, call'd at present Allachars, which was also one of the Seven Churches of Asia. There is something of Beauty still remaining in those Walls, and the City is very large, but ill peopl'd. It is situated upon four little Hills, at the foot of a high Mountain over-looking a fair Plain to the North, that produces excellent Fruit. To witness its Antiquity, there is yet the Ruines of an Amphitheater, with certain Sepulchers, from whence the Inhabitants report that the European Christians took out the Bodies that were buried there, and transported them into Europe, believing them to be the Bodies of Saints. It is now all destroy'd, but re-built of Earth by the Turks after their mode. It was formerly one of the principal Cities of Mysia, and in regard it was alway very subject to Earthquakes, the most part of her Inhabitants liv'd in the Country. The last time I travel'd that way, in the year 1664, the seventeenth of June, the Turks were feasting and rejoycing upon the News, as they said, which they had receiv'd, of the defeat of the Christians in Candy. But the News was false, and only contriv'd to encourage the People; for the Grand Signor was then making Levies in those Parts. We lodg'd that day, after seven hours travel, upon the Bank of a small River, a League and a half from Philadelphia.

The seventh day we travel'd eleven hours over a Mountain, where those Trees plentifully grow that bear Galls, and Valanede, which is the shell or rind of an Acorn, that Curriers make use of to dress their Leather. We lodg'd in a Meadow on the top of a Mountain which is call'd Ijagli-bogase, or, The Mountain of Robbers.

The eighth day we continu'd our Journey over the same Mountain, which is a very barren Country where there is no Provision to be had. We travel'd but six hours, and lodg'd near a River in a Plain call'd Sarroncabaqui.

The ninth day the Caravan travel'd thorough dry Lands, where there is not one Village to be seen, and lodg'd near a Bridge built over a River call'd Copli-sou, in the Plain of Inahi.

The tenth day, after we had travel'd eight hours over an uneven and barren Country, we stopt in a Valley near a River call'd Bana-sou, the Water whereof is not good. In the Night there arose a Tempest that put us all in a disorder, and the Rain that fell was as cold as if it had been in the depth of Winter. We were wet to the Skins, and were forc'd to throw Coverlets over the Bales to keep the Goods from being spoyl'd.

The eleventh day we travel'd through a pleasant Country, between Vales adorn'd with a most delightful Verdure; and we were in view as we pass'd along of certain hot Baths, though very little regarded. We lodg'd upon the Banks of a small River, by the side whereof we had travel'd for some hours.

The twelfth day we continu'd our Road for six hours between the same Vallies, and lodg'd by a River.

The thirteenth day, we travel'd eight hours, and stop'd near to a Village in a Country call'd Dougasse.

The fourteenth, after a Journey of seven hours we pass'd by the Walls of Aphiom-Carassar, that is, The Black City of Aphiom or Opium; because it has a Prospect over a fair and large Country well cultivated, where they sow great store of Poppies, whence they draw their Opium or Aphiom, as the Turks call it.

Aphiom-Carassar, is a great City, dirty and ill built, the ancient Name whereof I could never learn, for the Greeks and Armenians are very ignorant. But according to all probability and the situation of the place, it ought to be the ancient Hierapolis situated upon the Meander, a famous River of the Lesser Asia, that winds winds and turns the most of any River in the World. And indeed we are the more to seek, in regard the Turks change the ancient Names according to their own custom and pleasure, and give no other Names to Rivers than that of the principal City through which they pass; or else deriving their Names from the Colour of their Sands. There is to be seen in that City an ancient Castle of Free-stone upon the Point of a high Rock, separated from the Mountains that are next it toward the South, which make a Semicircle. All the Armenian Christians, Subjects to the King of Persia, passing thorough Aphiom Carassar must there pay Carrage, from which they are not exempted, though they have paid it before at Erzerom or elsewhere. The Caravan does not stop at Aphiom-Carassar, as well for that there are no Inns but what are ruin'd, as for that about a League farther there is a place where you have excellent Fish, and very cheap, and they of the City bring Barley, Straw, and other things which the Caravan wants. The Caravan therefore that day lodges upon the Banks of Maander, which is to be cross'd over a Bridge not far distant from a small Village. In this River are great store of Crawfish and Carps; and the Fishermen will be sure to attend upon the Caravan. I have seen some Carps there above three Foot long.

The fifteenth our Caravan began to part it self, some for Tocat, some for the Road to Aleppo; the one part taking the right-hand Road toward the Winter-East, for Syria; the other the left-hand Road North-East, for Armenia.

After we were parted, we travel'd two or three hours in sight of one another. They that go to Aleppo, fall into Tarsus, where St. Paul was born, and from Tarsus to Alexandretta. But we continu'd our Road to Tocat, and after we had cross'd a great Plain, having travel'd six hours, we lodg'd in a Marshy place near a small Village. There is one thing remarkable in this Road as in many others, which manifests the Charity of the Turks. For in most of the high Roads, that are far from Rivers, they have set up Cisterns, whither when the Rains fail, the neighbouring Villages bring Water for the Travellers, who would else be very much distress'd.

The sixteenth we travel'd eight hours through a very even Country, but ill manur'd; where we saw a little City call'd Boulavandi. There are some Mosques, which the Turks have built out of the Ruines of the ancient Greeks Churches, from which they have taken Pillars of Marble, and other pieces of Architecture, to adorn their Sepulchers without any order at all, which you meet with very often upon the high Roads; the number is the greater, because they never lay two Bodies in one Grave. There is also in this City an Inn, cover'd with Lead, which is all the Beauty of it; nor do Travellers make any use of it but only in foul weather. We lodg'd a League and a half from the City, and staid there all the next day.

The seventeenth we travel'd eleven hours through a mix'd and uneven Country, and came to lodge in a Village where there are not above three or four Houles, though there be excellent Pasturage about it. There is no Water, but what is drawn out of three deep Wells; for which reason the place is call'd Euché derin-giu.

The eighteenth we travel'd not above five hours through desert Countries, and took up our Stage in a kind of a Bog, near a pitiful Village.

The nineteenth, after we had travell'd eight hours through spacious desert Plains, we pass'd through a large Village, the Inhabitants whereof were gone with their Cattel into the Mountains, for the cool Air, during the Summer time, according to custom. There is an indifferent handsom Mosquee of Free-stone, and indeed the Village, the Name whereof the People told me was Tshaciclou, has been much bigger than now it is, as may appear by the Ruines. In two hours after we came to lodge beyond it in a Meadow, near a Rivulet.

The twentieth we cross'd over desert Plains, but which seem'd to have been formerly well manur'd; and after ten hours travel, we stop'd in a Bottom near a bad Water.

The twenty-first, for ten hours the Country was all barren and desert, and we came to lodge at the end of a long Plain, near two Wells, the Water whereof was good for nothing.

The twenty-second we travel'd through the fore-mention'd Plain, and met with little Valleys where there was very good Pasturage. The Caravan stop'd near to a pitiful Village, and a nasty Well.

The

The twenty-third we travel'd not above five hours; because it was the time of the Turks Beiram, or Easter, which our Caravan, consisting of Turks, would needs solemnize. That day we travel'd through an indifferent good Country, and well till'd, where we discover'd several fair Villages; and we lodg'd upon a rising Ground, from whence we had a very fair and far distant Prospect.

The twenty-fourth we travel'd six hours, and came to lodge in a Meadow where the Water was bad. Near to that place, we discover'd a Plain that extends it self eight or ten Leagues in length, though it be not above one or two in breadth: it seem'd like a Lake; and indeed it is only a salt Water congeal'd, and thicken'd into Salt, which you can hardly dissolve but in fair Water. This Lake furnishes almost all Natolia with Salt; where you may buy a Waggon-load drawn by two Bufalo's for 45 Sous. It is call'd Douflag, or The Place for Salt; and the Basha of Conchabar, about two days journey from it, gets by it 24000 Crowns a Year. Sultan Amurath caus'd a Dike to be cut quite thorough it when his Army march'd to the Siege of Bagdat, which he took from the Persian.

The twenty-fifth we travel'd nine or ten hours, and met not with one Village, the Country being all desert. We lodg'd upon a rising Ground, near a good Fountain call'd Caradache-cesmé, or, The Fountain of the Black Stone.

The twenty-sixth we pass'd through a great Village call'd Tshekenagar, in a pleasant situation, but very ill built; and after we had travel'd eight hours, we came to lodge in a delightful Meadow, near another Village call'd Romcouché.

The twenty-seventh we travel'd nine hours through Countries full of Licorice, and having pass'd a great Town call'd Beserguenlou, we lodg'd in a Meadow.

The twenty eighth we cross'd a great River call'd Jechil-irma, over a long well built stone Bridge. At the end of the Bridge call'd Kessré-kupri stands a great Village, wherein the greatest part of the Houses are built under Ground, like Foxes Holes. We put on farther, and after seven hours travel, we lodg'd below another great Village call'd Mouchiour, where there are abundance of Greeks, which they constrain ever and anon to turn Turks. The Country being inhabited by Christians, and fit for the Plantation of Vines, there is Wine good store, and very good, but it has the scent of the Wines of Anjou. The Village is well situated but ill built, most of the Houses being under Ground, in so much that one of the Company riding carelessly, had like to have fall'n into a House.

The twenty-ninth we rode for seven hours through a pleasant Country, where we saw several Villages; near to one of which the Caravan lodg'd in a Meadow, close by a Fountain.

The thirtieth we rode through a flat Country, well manur'd, and stop'd near a River wherein there was but very little Water: it is call'd Carasou, or, The Black River. For two or three days together, at every two Leagues distance we observ'd little Hillocks of Earth artificially rear'd, which they told us were rais'd during the Wars of the Greeks to build Forts upon, for Watch-Towers.

The thirty-first we travel'd a very uneven Country, but abounding in Wheat, and after we had travel'd nine hours, we lodg'd in a Meadow, near a River, which we cross'd next Morning before day, over a stone Bridge.

The thirty-second, after we had travel'd eight hours, we lodg'd by a River, where we saw a great number of Turcomans: They are a People that live in Tents like the Arabians, and they were then leaving that Country to go to another, having their luggage in Waggon's drawn by Bufalo's.

The thirty-third we met again with Mountains and Woods, which we had not seen in 18 days before, which had constrain'd us to carry Wood upon our Camels to dress our Provision: We were very sparing of it, and sometimes made use of dry'd Cows dung or Camels dung, when we came near the Waters where they were wont to drink. We travel'd eight hours that day, and lodg'd in a Meadow where the Grass was very high, yet where there had been Houses formerly standing.

The thirty-fourth we forded a deep and rapid River call'd Jangou, from the Name of the Town next to it. A little above the place where we forded it, we saw a ruin'd Bridge, which had been built over it.

The thirty-fifth we travel'd eight hours through a fair Valley well manur'd, and upon the left hand we left a Castle rais'd upon a Rock. The Caravan lay that night upon a rising Ground near a Village.

The

The thirty-sixth we travel'd through the same Valley for eight or nine hours longer; in this Valley were several pleasant Villages, but we lay by a small River.

The thirty-seventh we travell'd six hours among the Mountains, where there are some very narrow Passages, but store of Water; and we lay in a Vale abounding in Pasturage.

The thirty-eighth we rode for four or five hours over a rugged Mountain in craggy way, at the foot whereof we met with a Village call'd Taquibac; from whence it is but five Leagues to Tocat. And these are all the Roads from Paris to Ispahan, through the Northern Territories of Turkie.

CHAP. VIII.

How the Author was robb'd near Tocat, and of a certain sort of rare and fine Wool which he first brought into France.

T*Aquibac* is the place where the Persian Caravan uses to meet, when it departs from Tocat to Smyrna, and this is the only place in all the Road where a Traveller ought to stand upon his guard; by reason of Thieves who haunt these Quarters, and are great Masters in their Trade. Once as I came out of Persia they would needs give me a taste of their Art, notwithstanding all the care I took. There were three or four of us that would needs ride before with our Servants to Taquibac, in expectation of the Caravan which was to come the next day; where we set up our Tents upon the Bank of a small River. I had then a good many Bales of Wool, with which I made as it were a double Wall about my Tent: so that there was but one passage between the Bales, for one Man. In four of these Bales I had a quantity of Musk in lead'n Boxes, to the value of ten or twelve thousand Crowns: which Bales I put within-side, so that they touch'd the Tent and my Beds-head. Next Night, it being very dark, the Thieves came, and finding the outward Bales smell so strong of Musk, they thought one of those Bales would be a considerable Booty. The Bales were all ty'd together with a Cord that kept them fast; nor was it easie to undo them, without a noise. They wak'd me with their bustle at first, and I sent out my Servants to see if they could catch them; but they will lye so close upon their Bellies, that in such a dark Night as that was 'tis impossible to discover them. Thereupon my Servants went to sleep again, and the Thieves to their Work; and having with a great deal of ingenuity cut the Cord, they carried away the two Bales. In the Morning four or five of us with a Camel-driver for our Guide pursu'd them, and in half an hour we met with the marks of the Robbery; for the Rogues being mad that they found nothing but Wool, which they thought to be of no great value, scatter'd it in the High-way for two or three Leagues together: so that I caus'd it to be pickt up again, and lost not above fifteen or twenty Pound. I speak this to caution the Marchants that carry Bales of Silk or other rich Commodities, to beware of these Thieves; for they will come creeping upon their Bellies, and then cutting the Bales with great Razors, will presently empty a Bale of one half of the Goods.

'Tis true, the Wool was of no great value for their use; but it was a sort of rare and very fine Wool, which I carry'd out of Persia to Paris, where such fine Wool was never seen. As to the place where it is to be had, I met with one of the Gaures, or Persians that adore the Fire, who when I was at Ispahan in the year 1647 shew'd me a Sample of it, and inform'd me that the greatest part of this Wool comes from the Province of Kerman, which is the ancient Caramania; and that the best Wool is to be met with in the Mountains that are next to the City, that bears the name of the Province: That the Sheep in those Parts have this particular property, that when they have fed upon new Grass from January till May, the Fleece falls off of it self, and leaves the Sheep naked, and their Skins smooth, like a Pig's that is scalded off; so that there is no need of shearing them; as with us: after they have gather'd gather'd it, they beat it, and the course Wool breaking, the fine only remains. That if you transport it, before you make it into Bales, you must throw Salt-water upon it, which keeps the Worms out of it, and preserves it from rotting. Now you must take notice that they never dye this Wool, it being naturally of a clear Brown, or a dark Ash-colour; and that there is very little of it White, which is also much dearer than the other, as well for that it is scarce, as because that the Mufi's, the Moullah's and other persons belonging to the Law, never wear any Girdles or Vails (wherewith they cover their Heads when they pray) but White: for at other times they wear them about their Necks, as the Women do their Scarfs.

Into this Province of Kerman almost all the Gaures are retir'd, and they are they that only Trade in this Wool, and have the whole Manufacture of it. They make those Girdles of it which they use in Persia; and some Pieces of Serge, which are almost as fine and transparent, as if they were of Silk. I brought over two Pieces into France, and presented one to the late Queen Mother, the other to the Princes of Orleanse.

I could not drive any Trade in this Wool till the year 1654, returning out of the Indies by Sea from Surat to Ormuz. To which purpose, I departed from Ormuz, and took Guides along with me to shew me the way to Kerman, whither I could not get on Horseback in less than twenty-seven days. I dare say that Alexander the Great did not march this way into the Indies: for in the whole extent of the Country there is no Water to be met with but in some certain places, and in the hollow of some Rocks, where there is not enough neither to water eight or ten Horses. Besides, in some places a man is constrain'd, by reason of the Mountains, to fetch a great compass about; for a Foot-man that makes his way through those Rocks, shall go farther in half an hour than a Horse-man can do in four.

Kerman is a large City, which has been often ruin'd by being several times taken and re-taken; nor is there any thing handsom in it, but only one House and a Garden, upon which the last Kans have bestow'd a vast expence to make the place delightful. They make there a sort of Earthen-ware which comes very near to Porcelan, and looks as neat and as fine. As soon as I arriv'd, I went to visit the Kan, who made me very welcom, and gave order to the Gaures to furnish me with Bread and Wine, Pullets and Pigeons, which in those parts are fat, and as large as little Capons. The Gaures are they that make the Wine; and to make it more sweet and pleasant, they take away the Stalks, and never press any thing but the meer Grape.

The Kan was but newly entred into the possession of his Government, and being desirous, according to the custom of the new Governours, to have a noble Sword and Dagger, with a rich Furniture of his Horse, which requir'd some Jewels, I presented him with a Diamond worth eight hundred Crowns, which he caus'd to be set in the end of the handle of his Dagger. He also desir'd to have of me as many more Jewels as came to seven or eight hundred Livres: and by the Present and the Bargain I facilitated my purchase of the Wool which I intended to buy. Two days after he invited me to his Entry-Feast, which he made for the cheif of the City; and knowing I wanted a Mule, he sent me one well worth a hundred Crowns. This is the Noblest Carriage in all Persia, which the great Personages choose before Horses, especially when they are in years. But it was not the Kan alone who was civil to me. A young Lord, who liv'd in Kerman, and was at the Feast, whose Father had been formerly Kan himself, took great delight to discourse with me concerning my Travels; and offer'd me his service in a very obliging manner. Now the Persians are very curious, and great admirers of the Rarities of Foreign Countries: which inclination led the young Lord to enquire of me whether I had any any Fire-Arms, telling me he would content me for them to my satisfaction. The next Morning I presented him with a Carbine, and a pair of Pistols that pleas'd him exceedingly; and a little Watch, for which I would take no Money, whereat he seem'd to be not a little troubl'd. However he sent me a stately Horse worth about two hundred Crowns, or twelve Tomans. This young Lord was of a clear humour, civil, accomplish'd, generous, and did every thing with a good grace. So that when he sent me the Horse, he sent to entreat me withal, if I did not like that Horse, to come and choose which I lik'd best in his Stable.

By the favour of this Lord and the Kan, I made good the Purchase that I intended. For the People began to murmur (knowing what a Parcel I had got together) and told the Kan that I would carry away all the Cloth out of the Country, so that they should have none to set the Poor on work. Thereupon the Kan sent for me, and for those reasons told me I must buy no more. To fend off the blow, I made answer, That it was the King of Persia's desire to try if we could make as fine Cloth of his Wool in France, as they did in England and Holland; and that if it succeeded, I should bring French Workmen into Persia, and so by settling the Trade in his own Country, free him from the Charge of forein Manufacturers. This silenc'd the Kan, so that I still bargain'd for more. But when I was return'd to Ispahan, the People of the Country would not keep touch with me. However, I wrote so home to the Kan, threatening withal to complain to the King, that he fearing the King's displeasure, forc'd the Natives to send me my Bargain to Ispahan.

C H A P. IX.

Of the Road from Kerman to Ispahan; and the Fortune of Nazar Mahomet-Ali-Beg.

From Kerman to Ispahan is no less than five and twenty days on Horseback. In those places where there is any Water, the Conuntry is very good; but those places are very rare; for the Road is generally Sandy, and offensive to the Eyes. The Chiefest comfort to a Traveller is, that every Evening he meets with an Inn, where there are Cisterns, which is a great refreshment in those desert Countries. The most part of those Inns were built some Years since by the special care of Mahomet-Ali-Beg Nazar, or Grand Master of the King's House and Treasury; a Person the most Virtuous of any that Persia can boast of for many Years. He was Generous, and favour'd the Franks in all things, for he lov'd them exceedingly. He faithfully serv'd his King, and defended the People against the Oppression and Insolencies of the Great ones; which drew upon him the hatred of many: but still he preserv'd himself by his sincerity and prudence; as by the following Story will remarkably appear.

The Great Sha-Abas the First, being one day a Hunting in the Mountains far out of sight from his followers, met a young Lad playing upon a Pipe by an Herd of Goats. The King asking him some Questions, he answer'd him to the purpose to every one, not knowing who he was. The King surpriz'd at his Repartees, made a sign to Iman-couli-Kan Governour of Schiras, who was just come up to him, not to tell the Goat-herd who he was. After that he proceeded to ask him other Questions; to which the young man answer'd so smartly, that the King could not choose but stand in an amaze. Thereupon the King ask'd the Kan what he thought of the Goat-herds Wit? Who answer'd, that he believ'd if the Boy were taught to Write and Read, he might do good service to his Majesty. Upon that the King immediately caus'd him to be sent to School, where the young Lad being naturally of a solid Wit, clear Judgment, and happy Memory, grew to accomplish'd, and so well acquitted himself of several Employments which his Majesty bestow'd upon him, that the King advanc'd him to the Office of Nazar, or Grand Master of the House, and did him the honour to call him Mahomet-Ali-Beg. The King observing his fidelity, and good management of all things, sent him twice Ambassador to the Great Mogul, and both times was extreamly pleas'd with his Negotiation. Mahomet lov'd Justice, and would not stoop to be corrupted by Presents: A thing which is very rare among the Makumetans. This great Integrity of his made all the Lords of the Court his Enemies, especially the Eunuchs and the Women, who have always the King's Ear. But while Sba-Abas liv'd, there was no person that durst open his lips against the Nazar, so much was he in favour, and that justly, with the King. Sba-Sefi succeeding his Grandfather Sba-Abas, and being very young, the Nazar's Adversaries thought they had now a fair Game to play. Thereupon the

Eunuchs,

Eunuchs, who are always at the King's Ear, suggested to him many things to the disadvantage of the Grand Master; but whatever they said, the King gave little heed to their Tales. At length, one day when the King was looking upon certain Skains and Daggers set with precious Stones, one of the Eunuchs told him those were trifles, and then desir'd his Majesty to send for a Scimeter that the Grand Signor had sent Sha-Abas, all over set with Diamonds. True it is, that the Grand Signor had sent a rich Scimeter to Sha-Abas; but Sha-Abas had defac'd it long before Mahomet's time, and had made a noble Jewel of the Stones that adorn'd it. Thereupon this Scimitar was sought for in the Treasury, where Mahomet was chief Officer; but not being to be found, the King was troubl'd, finding it registred in the Book of Presents. Then certain Eunuchs and Grandees of the Court took their opportunity to rip up Mahomet's Life; they represented to the King how many Inns, Bridges, and Dikes Mahomet had built at his own charge; what a House he had rear'd for himself, fitting for his Majesty to live in: and aggravated withal, that he could not do such great things as those, without purloining notably from the Publick Stock; for which he should do well to call him to an account. As they were thus discouraging, Mahomet came into the Presence, to whom the King (not receiving him as he was wont to do) spoke some hard words about the Scimeter that could not be found: telling him withal, that he would see if the all rest of the things in the Treasury were agreeable to the Register, and then gave him fifteen days time to give in his Account. Mahomet not at all mov'd, reply'd to the King, that if his Majesty pleas'd he might come to the Treasury to morrow: and withal befought him so to do, though the King a second time gave him fifteen days. Thereupon the King did go to the Treasury next morning, according to Mahomet's desire, and found all things in good order; having heard before what became of the Scimeter. From thence he went to Mahomet's House, who made the King a mean Present: For it is the custom, that he whom the King honours with a Visit, must make a Present to his Majesty. After the King had receiv'd it, he walk'd up and down, and view'd the Chambers, Halls, Parlours and Rooms of State; and wonder'd to see them so ill set out with plain Felts, and coarse Carpets; whereas in other Lords Houses a man could not set his Foot upon any thing but Cloth of Gold and Silk. For the King, as they had set the Nazar out, expected to have found other things; which made him admire at so great a Moderation in so high a degree of Honour. Now at the end of a Gallery, there was a Door lockt with three great Padlocks. Of this the King took no notice: whereupon the Meter, who is the White Eunuch, and chief of his Chamber, as he came back, shew'd the King the Door that was so strongly Padlock'd; which made the King so curious to have it open'd: withal, asking Mahomet what he had got there lock'd up with so much care? Oh Sir, said he, it behoves me to keep that lockt, for there is all the Estate I have in the World. All that your Majesty has seen in this House is yours, but all that is in that Chamber is mine, and I dare assure my self, your Majesty will be so gracious as never to take it from me. Those words inflam'd the King's curiosity so, that he commanded the Door to be open'd: But he was strangely surpriz'd, when he saw nothing more within than Mahomet's Sheep-hook, that lay upon two Nails, his Scrip wherein he us'd to put his Victuals, his Bottle for his Water, his Pipe, and his Shepherd's Weeds, all hanging against the Wall. The Nazar beholding the King's astonishment at such a Sight, Sir, said he, when the King Sha-Abas found me in the Mountain keeping Goats, then that was all I had, and he took nothing from me: I beseech your Majesty that you would not deprive me of these things neither; but rather, if you please, let me resume them again, and fall to my old calling. The King touch'd at so high a piece of Virtue, caus'd himself to be disapparel'd, and gave his Habit to the Nazar, which is the greatest Honour that the King of Persia can bestow upon a Subject. Thus Mahomet continu'd and dy'd honourably in his Employment. This brave Person was the Protector of all the Franks in Persia: and if any one had done them wrong, upon complaint he did them Justice immediately. One day as I was shooting Ducks, upon the River of Isphahan near the Nazar's Gardens; with two Servants; some of the Nazar's people that did not know me set upon me, and would have taken away my Gun; which I would not let go till I had broke the Stock about the Shoulders of the one, and flung the Barrel at the other's Head. Thereupon I took some of the Franks along with me, and complain'd to the Nazar: He testifi'd his sorrow for what had happen'd; and gave us evident Proofs thereof, by the blows which he caus'd to be laid upon those that had done me the injury.

Another time, Ska-Sefi being upon his return from Guilan, his Tents were set up near Zulfa in Armenia, where the King staid to hunt two or three days. Now among the rest of the Courtizans that follow'd the Court, to divertise the King with Dancing and Mummery, there was one who was perfectly handsom, to whom the King had already sent Presents; which could not be unknown to any Lord i^t the Court. But the Nazar's Son, for all that, being in the heat of Youth, got this Courtizan to his Tent, and there lay with her: which came to his Father's Ears next day. The Nazar, whether out of his zeal to the King, or whether it were an effect of his prudence to prevent the King's anger, which would have certainly been the death of his Son, caus'd him to be drub'd, after the manner of the Country, and bastinado'd all over, till the Nails of his Toes dropt off, and that his Body was almost a perfect Gelly. Which when the King understood, together with the Young Man's Crime, he said no more, but that the Nazar had done wisely by punishing his Son himself, to prevent his Justice.

But to return to the Road from Kerman to Ispahan. The first day that I set out from Kerman, at my Stage in the Evening I met with a rich Moullah, who seeing I had Wine, civilly offer'd me some of his Ice to cool it. In retaliation, I gave him some of my Bottle. He invited me to his House, which was well built, with a handsom Garden with Water in it. He entertain'd me with Spoon-meat, according to the mode of the Country; and when I took my leave, he fill'd my Baracho with very good Wine.

The following days I saw nothing worthy observation; the Country being as I have already describ'd it.

Yezd lies in the Road, almost in the mid-way between Kerman and Ispahan, in 93 Deg. 15 Min. of Longitude, and 13 Deg. 45 Min. of Latitude. It is a great Town in the middle of the Sands, that extend themselves for two Leagues round it: so that when you leave Yezd you must take a Guide, for upon the least Wind the Sand covers the Highway, whereby a man may be apt to fall into Holes, which seem to have been either old Cisterns, or the Ruines of ancient Buildings. Between the Town and the Sands there is a little good Soil, which produces excellent Fruits, but above all, Melons of several sorts: the Pulp of some is green, of others yellow and vermilion; and some there are, the meat whereof is as hard as a Renneting. There are also very good Grapes, and good Wine; but the Governour will not permit the Inhabitants to make Wine. Some therefore they dry, and of the rest they make a kind of Confection to eat with Bread. There are also abundance of Figs, which are large and well tasted. They distil vast quantities of Rose-water, and another sort of Water with which they dye their Hands and Nails red, which they squeeze out of a certain Root call'd Hina. There are three Inns i^th' City, and several Bazars or Market-places cover'd and vaulted, which are full of Merchants and Workmens Ware-houses. They also make at Yezd several Stuffs of Silk intermix'd with Gold and Silver, which they call Zerbaste; and another sort of Stuff of all pure Silk, call'd Darai, like our smooth strip'd Taffata's. Other Stuffs they make, half Silk half Cotton; others all of Cotton, like our Fustians. They make also Serges of a particular Wool, which is so fine and delicate, that it looks handsomer, and is much better than Silk.

Though I had nothing to do, I staid in Yezd three days, because I met with some Armenians of my acquaintance. In which time I found the general Opinion to be true. For certainly the Women of Yezd are the handsomest Women in all Persia. There is no Feast made; but five or six of them come to divertise the Guests with Dancing, who are generally none of the meanest Beauties and Conversations among them. However it comes to pass, the Persian Proverb is, That to live happy, a Man must have a Wife of Yezd, eat the Bread of Yezdecas, and drink the Wine of Schiras.

C H A P. X.

Of the Caravanſera's, and Government of the Caravans.

THE Caravanſera's are the Eastern Inns, far different from ours; for they are neither ſo convenient, nor ſo handſom. They are built ſquare, much like Cloyſters, being uſually but one Story high; for it is rare to ſee one of two Stories. A wide Gate brings you into the Court; and in the miſt of the Building, in the front, and upon the right and left hand, there is a Hall for Perſons of the beſt Quality to keep together. On each ſide of the Hall are Lodgings for every man by himſelf. Theſe Lodgings are rais'd all along the Court two or three Steps high, juſt behind which are the Stables, where many times it is as good lying as in the Chamber. Some will rather lye there in the Winter, becauſe they are warm, and are roof'd as well as the Chambers. Right againſt the Head of every Horſe there is a Nich with a Window into the Lodging-Chamber, out of which every man may ſee how his Horſe is look'd after. Theſe Niches are uſually ſo large, that three men may lye in them; and there it is that the Servants uſually dreſs their Victuals.

There are two ſorts of Inns. For ſome are endow'd; where you may be receiv'd for Charities ſake; others, where you muſt pay for what you call for. There are none of the firſt, but between Buda and Conſtantinople. Nor is it lawful for any others to build ſuch, but only the Mothers and Siſters of the Grand Signor, or ſuch Viziers, and Baſha's as have been three times in Battel againſt the Chriſtians. In theſe Inns, which are built out of Legacies, there is a very good allowance of Diet to Travellers. and at your departure you have nothing to do but to thank the Benefactor. But from Conſtantinople to Persia, there are none of thoſe endow'd Inns; only ſuch where you have nothing but bare Walls. It is for you to provide Utensils for your Kitchin, and a Bed to lye on: as for Proviſion, the people bring Lambs, Pullets, Butter, and Fruits in their ſeaſons: or elſe you may buy it, provided before-hand by the Maſter of the Houſe. There you alſo meet with Barley and Straw for the Horſes, unleſs it be in ſome few places that I have been at upon the Road. In the Country you pay nothing for your Chambers; but in the Cities you pay ſomething, though it be but a ſmall matter. Uſually the Caravans never go into the Towns, which are not able to contain ſo many People and Horſes. When you come to your Quarters every one looks after his own Chamber, for there is no regard to Poor or Rich: ſometimes out of Breeding, or out of Intereſt, an ordinary Tradeſman will give way to a great Merchant; but no man is permitted to leave the Chamber which he has once made choice of. In the night the Inn-keeper ſhuts up his Gates, being anſwerable for all things that ſhall be loſt; for which reaſon he keeps a Guard about the Inn.

As for the Persian Caravanſera's, they are more commodious, and better built than thoſe of Turkie, and at more reaſonable diſtances, throughout almoſt all the Country. By which deſcription of Inns it is eaſie to obſerve, that though theſe Caravanſera's are not ſo commodious for the Rich as our European Inns, yet they are more convenient for the Poor, to whom they never reſuſe to give admittance: no perſon being oblig'd to eat or drink more than he pleaſes; but every one being allow'd to ſpend according to his Stock, without grumbling.

You may travel in Turkie or Persia, either with the Caravan, or elſe in company, ten or twelve together, or elſe alone with a Guide. The ſafeſt way is to go with the Caravan, though you are longer upon the Road, by reaſon of the ſlowneſs of their march, eſpecially when the Caravans conſiſt of Camels.

The Caravans are as it were great Convoys, which conſiſt of a good number of Merchants, that meet at certain times and places, to put themſelves into a condition to defend themſelves from Thieves, that are very riſe in Troops in ſeveral deſert places upon the Road. Theſe Merchants chooſe among themſelves a Caravan-Baſhi, who orders them how they ſhall march, aſſigns the places of lodging at night, and who with the chief of the Caravan, is a kind of Judge of the differences that fall fall out by the way. There is no honest man that covets the employment; for the Caravan-Bashi, being to discharge several small duties upon the Road, however he behave himself, is still suspected for his fidelity. When the Turks are most numerous, they make choice of a Turk; when the Armenian Merchants are most, they choose an Armenian.

There are two sorts of Caravans. There are Caravans which consist of Camels, which are the most usual; in regard that Camels are cheap, and for that some Camels will carry as much as three Horses, others as much as four or five. But among the Caravans of Camels, there are several Horses and Mules, which the Merchants themselves ride upon; it being very tedious to ride upon a Camel when he only goes a foot-pace, but very pleasant when he goes upon his large trot. There are other Caravans that consist only of Horses; and among these, if the Merchant have none of his own, he may hire one. The Servants ride upon those Horses that are least laden; but at Smyrna you may meet with several good Horses very cheap, from thirty to sixty Crowns. As for those persons that are either unwilling or unable to be at any expence, they make use of Asses, of which there are enow to be had. Above all things, you must take care to provide Pack-Horses to carry your Wine; for the Camel-Masters being Mahometans, will not permit you to lade their Camels with any such Liquor; that Beast being particularly consecrated to Mahomet, who so strictly forbid the use of Wine. You put your Wine in Bottles made of wild Goats Skins, with the hairy side turn'd innermost, and well pitch'd within. There are some of these Bottles from which they take off the Hair; but they are not so good, as being seldom without holes.

These Camel-Masters are an insolent sort of people, which you shall never know how to deal with, unless you can bring them to punishment. There was one that play'd me some of his jades tricks in the Road from Smyrna to Tauris; but when I came to Escrivan, I complain'd to the Kan, who presently caus'd a hundred Bastinado's to be giv'n him upon the spot. Nor is there any other way to bring those Scoundrels to reason, especially at Smyrna and such other places, where the Merchants have their Consuls, who upon the least complaint to the Cady have Justice done them immediately. The examples of some of these Camel-drivers that have been paid off, keep the rest in good decorum; and they will be very tractable for a good while after.

The Journeys of the Caravans are not equal; sometimes not above six hours travel, sometimes ten, and sometimes twelve; it being the convenience of Water, which is not every where to be met with, that is the Rule of Lodging the Caravan. At all times the Caravan travels more by night than by day; in Summer to avoid the heat, and at other times, that you may be sure to have day enough to set up your Tents. For if the Caravan should come to pitch in the night, it would be impossible for them to find where to set up their Tents, to dress and look after their Beasts, make ready their Kitchens, and provide things necessary for so large a Company. True it is, that in the depth of Winter and in the great Snows, they seldom set out till two or three hours after midnight; and that sometimes they stay till day-break. But in Summer, according to the Journey which they intend, they set out either at midnight, or an hour after Sun-set. The last time I went from Smyrna the Caravan consisted of six hundred Camels, and almost the same number of Horse. Sometimes their number is greater, so that the Camels going but by one and one after another, a Caravan seems to be an Army; and whether it be in travelling or lodging, they take up a world of Ground. Now by reason they travel all night in Asia, it happens that the Air is indifferent wholsom; and that the Travellers, that lye for the most part upon a Carpet spread upon the Ground, find themselves very little inconvenienc'd by it.

The Camels that go into Persia through the Northern Provinces of Turkie, travel like Horses in a Cart, by seven and seven; they are ty'd together by a Cord about the bigness of a Man's little Finger, and a Fathom long; fasten'd to the Pack-saddle of the Camel that goes before, and to the Head-harness of the Camel that follows. Those little Cords are made no stronger, to the end that if the Camel before should chance to fall into any hole, the Camel behind should either keep him up, or else not be pull'd in after the other. And to the end that the Camel-driver who leads the foremost, may know whether the other six follow him or no, the last Camel has a Bell about his Neck, which if it cease to ring, 'tis a sign that some one of the small Cords is broken, and that a Camel has got a mischance. The seventh Camel generally carries the Provisions. For if a Merchant have six Camels laden, he is generally allow'd one to carry his Provision; if he have but three, he is allow'd but half a Camel's load; but if he have nine or twelve, he pays nothing for the carriage of his Provisions of Food, or any thing else that he pleases. Every Merchant with his Servants rides by the Camels that are laden with his Goods, especially in the dark nights; for there are a subtil sort of Thieves, that have a trick to cut the two Cords behind and before, and without any noise drive the Camel out of the way; for having no Hoofs, his Feet cannot be shod, and consequently he makes no noise. As well Merchants, as others, Camel-drivers and Servants, keep themselves from sleeping sometimes by singing, and sometimes by taking Tobacco, and sometimes by discourse.

The Caravan lyes in such places as they think most convenient, chiefly near to the Water-side. When the Sun is set, the Shaoux, who are a sort of poor people, are diligent to guard the whole Field, and take care of the Goods. They walk up and down, and either in the Arabian or Armenian Dialect they cry one to another, God is one, and he is merciful; adding from time to time, Have a care of your self. When they see that the time grows near to set out, they give notice to the Caravan-Bashi, who gives order to bid them cry, Saddle your Horses; and after that, to cry again, Load. And it is a strange thing to consider, that upon the second Cry of the Shaoux every thing is ready upon an instant; and the Caravan begins to set forward in great order and great silence. Every one takes care to be ready, for it is dangerous to be left behind, especially in those Countries which are haunted with Thieves. The Wages of these Shaoux is the fourth part of a Piafter for a Bale from Smyrna to Eriwan.

When the Stages are long, and that they believe that they shall not get thither by ten or twelve in the morning, every one carries two small Wallets on each side his Horse, and when they come to the place where they intend to Break fast, they spread a Carpet upon the Ground and fall to.

When you go from Constantinople, Smyrna, or Aleppo with the Caravan, it behoves all people to carry themselves according to the mode of the Country; in Turkie like a Turk, in Persia as a Persian; else would they be accounted ridiculous, nay sometimes they would hardly be permitted to pass in some places, where the least miscarriage makes the Governours jealous, who are easily perswaded to take Strangers for Spies. Always, if you have upon the Road but an Arabian Vest, with a mean Girdle, whatever Clothes you wear under, there is no danger of passing any where. If you wear a Turbant, you must of necessity shave off your Hair, else it will never stay upon the Head. As for Beards, they never mind them in Turkie, the greatest being accounted the handsomest; but in Persia they shave their Chins, and wear their Mustaches: and I remember I have seen one of the King of Persia's Porters, whose Mustaches were so long, that he could tie them behind his neck, for which reason he had a double Pension. More than that, you must provide your self of Boots according to the custom of the Country: they are made of red, yellow, or black Cordovan, lin'd with Linen cloth; and in regard they never reach higher than the Knee, they are as convenient to travel in as Shooes. As for Spurs, they never wear any; for the Iron at the upper end of the Stirrop, which is four-square, serves to spur the Horse: so much the better, because it is the custom of all Asia to ride very short.

Before you set out, you must provide your self of several Household-Goods, especially of those Bottles that are call'd Matares, which are made of Bulgary-Leather; every man carries his own at the Pommel of his Saddle, or else fasten'd to the Crupper of the Saddle behind. Besides these you must buy Borrachos; the most serviceable things in the World; for they will never break, and will hold above fifty Pints at a time. The smaller Bottles serve to put Aqua-vitæ in: and the Leather whereof they are made, has that peculiar to it self, that it keeps the Water fresh. Then you must provide Food, and make a provision of Rice and Bisket as far as Tocat: For as for Pullets, Eggs, and such like things, you meet with them almost every where; as also with Provision for your Horses, and new Bread, unless in some few places. You must also carry a Tent with all its appurtenances, with a Mattress; and Clothes to cover the Horses at night, especially in the time of the deep deep Snows, wherein you shall find them almost buried the next morning.

When the Caravan comes near the place where it intends to stop, every Merchant rides before to take up a convenient place for himself and his Goods, for which he covets a rising Ground, that if it should happen to rain, the Water may run from the Bales. They also in that case lay Stones under the Bales, and a Cloth over them; and the Servants make a Ditch about the Tent for the Water to run into. But if it be fair weather, there is no care tak'n to set up the Tent: or if it be, 'tis folded up after Supper; to the end the Owners may have the more liberty to look about them, and may be in a better condition to look after the Thieves. But if there be any likelihood of foul weather, the Tent is let stand till the first Cry of the Shaoux. The Horses are ty'd before the Tent with Cords fasten'd to a Nail, and their hinder Legs are ty'd with other Cords, to the end they may not stir out of their places. If it be not seasonable for them to eat Grass, you must buy Barley, and Straw of the Country-men that come to serve the Caravan, their being no Oats neither in Turkie nor Persia.

In dressing your Victuals, you must follow the custom of the Country; which is, to make a Hole in the Ground, and then kindling a Fire in it, to set the Pot over it.

But the greatest inconvenience which Travellers suffer with the Caravans is this, that when they come Waters, which are only Wells, or Cisterns, or Springs, where only two or three lade up Water at a time. For after the Caravan is lodg'd, the Merchants shall be forc'd to stay for Water two or three hours together; for they that belong to the Beasts of Carriage, will not suffer any person to take any Water, till the Camels, Horses, Asses, and Mules are all serv'd. Nor is there any contending with these Camel-drivers and Muleters; for as they are a rude sort of people, a Man runs the hazard of his Life by contesting alone: of which one Example may suffice for all.

Setting out one day from Bander-Abassi, for Ispahan, with a Merchant of Babylon, as we came to the Inn where we lay the first night, which was call'd Guetchy, the Merchant commanded one of his Slaves who was a Caser of Mozambique, to fetch him some fresh Water at the Cistern, to drink: The Caser went thither, and return'd without any Water, telling his Master, that the Camel-drivers and Muleters threaten'd to beat him, and would not let him come near the Cistern. The Merchant either ill advis'd, or not knowing the custom, bid him go back, and kick those that refus'd him. Whereupon the Caser returning, and finding the same resistance as before, began to give ill language to the Camel-drivers, so that one of them happen'd to strike him. Upon that the Caser drawing his Sword, ran him into the Belly, so that he fell down dead: Thereupon the whole Rabble fell upon him, bound him, and carry'd him back to Bander-Abassi for the Governour to put him to death. The Master of the Caser, accompany'd by several Merchants, went to the Governour and represented to him the insolence of those people, and how the business had happen'd. Upon which the Governour took the poor fellow out of their hands, and caus'd him to be kept safe; after that, he caus'd ten or a dozen of those Muleters to be seiz'd, and order'd them to be soundly bastinado'd, for hindring a Merchant's Servant from fetching Water for his Master. He also put others in Prison; who had not been releas'd so soon, but at the request of those Merchants whose Goods they carry'd, and who stood in need of their service. The Governour spun out the business, on purpose that the rest might be gone: but as soon as they were all departed except the two Brothers of the party slain, he told them, he could not do them Justice, because their Brother belong'd to Schiras; so that all that he could do, was to send the Criminal thither. The Master of the Caser being rich, and loving the Slave, made hast to Schiras, to tell his Story first to the Kan. And I remember, two days jourey yon this side Schiras we met in the High way abundance of poor people, the kindred of the party slain, who were staying for the Caser, to carry him before the Kan, and to demand Justice. Two or three Leagues also from Schiras I met the Father and Mother, together with the Wife and Children of the deceas'd, who seeing me pass along, fell at my Feet and recounted to me their Grievances. I told them by my Kalmachi, that their best and surest way was to take a piece of Money of the Caser's Master, and so to put up the the business. This Proposal, that would have been accepted in Christendom, was rejected by those poor Mahometans; in so much that the Father tore his Beard, and the Women their Hair, crying out, That if it were the custom of the Franks to sell the Blood of their Kindred, it was not their custom so to do. When the rest of the kindred came with the Cafer to Schiras, the Kan did all he could to persuade the Widow to take Money; but not being able to over-rule her, he was forc'd to give the Cafer into their hands: and how they us'd him I cannot tell, being constrain'd at the same time to pass from Schiras for Ispahan.

C H A P. XI.

Of the breeding, nature, and several sorts of Camels.

THE Female Camel bears her Burthen eleven Months; and her Milk is a sovereign Remedy against the Dropsie. You must drink a Pint of it every Day for three Weeks together: and I have seen several Cures wrought thereby at Balsara, Ormuz, and in other places in the Persian Gulf, upon several English and Holland Mariners.

So soon as a Camel comes into the World, they fold his Feet under his Belly, and make him lye upon them; after that they cover his Back with a Carpet that hangs to the Ground, laying Stones upon each side, so that he may not be able to rise; and thus they leave him for fifteen or twenty days. In the mean time they give him Milk to drink, but not very often; to the end he may be accusom'd to drink little. This they do also to use them to lye down, when they go about to Lade them; at which time they will fold their Legs and lye down so obediently, that it is an admirable thing to consider. So soon as the Caravan comes to the place where it is to lye, all the Camels that belong to one Master will range themselves in a Circle, and lye down upon their fore Feet; so that is but untying one Cord that holds the Bales, and they will slide off gently from each side of the Camel. When 'tis time to lade again, the same Camel comes and crouches down between the two Burthens, and when they are fasten'd, gently rises up with the Burthen again; which is done without any trouble or noise. When the Camels are unladen, they let them go a-field to feed upon the Heath and Bushes, and half an hour before Sun-set they return of themselves, unless any one happen to wander, which they will call again with a certain Cry which is natural to them. When they return, they range themselves in a Circle, and the Muleters give to every one little Balls of Barley-meal kneaded, as big as two Fists. The Camel though he be of a large bulk, eats very little, contented with what he meets with upon the Heaths; where he more especially looks for Thistles, of which he is a great lover. But it is more admirable to consider with what patience they endure drowth: For one time that I cross'd over the Deserts, where we were 65 days upon the Road, our Camels were nine days without Drink. But what is more wonderful is this, that when the Camel is in the heat of Generation, he neither eats nor drinks for 40 days together; and he is then so furious, that without great care you cannot avoid being bitten by him: And wherever he bites, he carries away a piece of the Flesh. At that time issues out of their Mouths a white Foam, besides that there appears on each side of their Chops two Bladders large and swell'd, like the Bladder of a Boar.

In the Spring time all the Camel's Hair falls off in three days. The Skin remains bare, and then the Flies are very troublesome. There is no way but to Tar them all over: though it be a ventrous thing to come near them at that time.

A Camel must be dress'd as well as a Horse; but the Camel-keeper never uses any Curry-comb, but only beats him all over with a small Wand, as Carpets are wont to be dusted. If a Camel be hurt or gall'd under the Pack-saddle, they never apply any thing to it; but only wash it well with Urine; without using any other Remedy.

There are two sorts of Camels; the one which is proper for hot Countries, the other for cold Countries.

The Camels in hot Countries, such as go from Ormus to Ispahan, cannot travel if the Ground be dirty and slippery; for their Bellies burst, while their hinder Quarters rive from their Bodies. These are small Camels, that carry not above five or six hundred Pound weight; but they are kept for little, and endure Thirst a long time. They do not tye them Head to Tayl, as they do the great ones, but let them go as they please themselves, like a Herd of Cows. The Camel-driver follows them singing, and sometimes playing upon his Pipe: the louder he sings and pipes, the faster the Camels go; nay they will stand still when he gives over his Musick. When the Camel-drivers come to a Heathy Ground, they will give them leave to feed for half an hour, taking their Tabacco the while; and then singing them together again, they set forward. The Camels bred in the Deserts are handfom, but very tender, so that they must be gently us'd, and never be put upon long Journeys. However, they eat and drink less than others, and endure thirst more patiently.

The Camels of cold Countries, such as those that travel from Tauris to Constantinople, are large Camels, that carry great Burthens, and will pull themselves out of the dirt. But in fat Grounds and slippery Ways the Drivers are fain to spread Carpets, sometimes an hundred one behind another; otherwise their hinder Quarters are also apt to rive from their Buttocks; but if the Road be slippery for too great a distance together, there is no way but to tarry 'till it be dry'd up and fair. These Camels usually carry a thousand Pound weight: but if the Merchant has any hank upon the Camel-driver, he will lay upon every Camel fifteen hundred weight, thereby making two of three Burthens. This the Merchants do, when they come near the Custom-Houses, especially that of Erzerom, which is the most severe. The Merchant does this for his own Profit: So that when the Customer mistrusting, demands how so many Camels come to travel empty, he makes answer, that they were Camels that carry'd Provision: But the Customer most commonly winks at that good Husbandry of the Merchant, for fear of losing his Custom, and obliging the Merchant to take another Road.

There is as much knavery among the Camel-drivers, as among our Horse-Courfers. For I remember, that being once at Casbin, a Persian Merchant, thinking he had bought eight good Camels, was deceiv'd in four which he thought the best. He verily believing they had been fat and in good case, but they were only blown up. For those Cheats have a trick to cut a Hole near the Tail, of which the Purchaser takes no notice, and which they know neatly how to sow up again: In this Hole they will blow till they have puffed up a lean Camel, that he shall appear as fat and plump as the foundest that ever fed: whereby they often deceive the quickest sights, especially when the Hair is all off, and that the bare Skin is all rub'd over with Tar.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Coyns and Money of Persia.

IN the first place, you must take notice that there are no Pieces of Gold coyn'd in Persia, but only some few, to be thrown among the People when a new King ascends the Throne: which Pieces are neither currant among the Merchants, nor of a certain Price. When the Solemnity is over, they who get the Pieces, are not so curious to keep them, but carry them to the Changer, who gives them the value in currant Money. These Pieces of Gold may be worth five

* A Frank is worth 2 s. Sterling. * Franks, about the fineness of Almain-Ducats. Once I receiv'd ten thousand of them of one Merchant, at a prefix'd rate; for their value is uncertain.

In the second place observe, That the Silver in Persia is good; whether it be in Bars, or in Plate, or in Money, and it is taken for its goodness. For when a Merchant Merchant enters into Persia, whether it be at Erivan or Tauris, where the Money is coyn'd, he is oblig'd to tell what Silver he carry's, to the end it may be melted down and stamp'd with the King's Stamp; under a great Penalty, if discover'd to be a concealer. But if a Merchant's affairs will not permit him to stay at Erivan, or at Tauris; and that he think it better to carry his Money to the Mint of Ispahan; 'tis but taking a Note from the Master of the Mint either at Tauris or Erivan, to attest that he has declar'd the truth of what he carries, and it is excuse enough.

But they that can cunningly carry their Silver to Erivan, when the Season is to go to the Indies, make a great profit of the Real; for the Merchants that go to the Indies will give them thirteen and a half, or fourteen Shayer, a piece, for as many as they have. But there are few Merchants that carry their Silver to Ispahan; in regard the Masters of the Mints upon the Frontiers will be sure to present them with a good piece of Silver Plate, rather than let them carry away their Bullion to Ispahan, to have the benefit of Coynage themselves.

They that traffick into Gulian for Silks carry their Silver to Tefis, where the Master of the Mint gives them 2 per Cent. profit for their Silver. The reason is, because that which he gives them for it is a little sophisticated; but it passes currant all over Gulian.

In the third place, you must observe, That upon the pieces of Silver, as well for the King's Duty as the Coynage of the Money, there is requir'd $7\frac{1}{2}$ per Cent. But upon the Copper Money, not above one half, or 1 per Cent. at most. Whence it comes to pass, that when a Workman has need of Copper, rather than lose time in going to buy it, he will melt down his Casbeké's.

There are four several pieces of Silver Coyn, Abassi's, Mamoudi's, Shayer's, and Bisti's: but as for the Bisti's, there are very few at present.

The Copper pieces of Coyn are call'd Casbeké, of which there are single and double.

The single Casbeké is worth five Deniers and a Half-peny of our Money.

The double Casbeké is valu'd at eleven Deniers.

Four single Casbeké's, or two double ones, make a Bisti.

Ten single Casbeké's, or five double ones, make one Shayer in value.

Two Shayer's make a Mamoudi.

Two Mamoudi's make an Abassi.

The Real or Crown of France is worth three Abassi's and one Shayer; and counting a Real at sixty Sous, an Abassi is worth eighteen Sous, six Deniers. Though to say truth, three Abassi's and one Shayer make three Half-pence more than the Crown.

Number 1, and Number 2. Are two pieces, which upon one side bear the Names of the twelve Prophets of the Law of Mahomet, and in the middle this Inscription, La Ilah allah Mahomet resoul Allah, Ali Vali Allah: on the back-side, The Conquerour of the World, Abas II. gives us permission to coyn this Money in the City of Cashan.

Num. 1. Makes five Abassi's; and counting our Crown at thirteen Shayer's, it comes to four Livres, twelve Sous, six Deniers.

Num. 2. Makes two Abassi's and a half of our Money, or forty-six Sous and one Farthing.

Num. 3. Is an Abassi, which comes to eighteen Sous, six Deniers.

Num. 4. Is a Mamoudi, worth nine Sous and a Farthing.

Num. 5. Is a Shayer, worth four Sous, seven Deniers, one Half-peny.

Num. 6. A Bisti, worth one Sous, ten Deniers.

Num. 7. The Copper Coyn, call'd Casbeké, worth five Deniers, one Half-peny.

These Coyns, unless it be the Casbeké, bear no other Inscription, but only the Name of the King reigning when they were coyn'd; the Name of the City where they were coyn'd; with the Year of the Hegyra of Mahomet.

Though all Payments are made in Abassi's, as well at Ormuz and other parts of the Gulf belonging to the King of Persia, as in the Island of Bahren, where is the great Fishery and Market for Pearls; yet there is no mention made but only of Larins.

The Larin is describ'd in the Money of Arabia. Eight Larins make an Or; four and twenty make a Toman.

An Or is not the name of a Coyn, but of a Sum in reck'ning among Merchants. One Or is five Abassi's.

A Toman is another Sum in payment: For in all Persian Payments they make use of only Tomans and Ors; and though they usually say that a Toman makes fifteen Crowns, in truth it comes to forty-six Livres, one Penny and $\frac{1}{2}$.

As for pieces of Gold, the Merchant never carries any into Persia, but Alman-Ducats, Ducats of the Seventeen Provinces, or of Venice; and he is bound to carry them into the Mint so soon as he enters into the Kingdom; but if he can cunningly hide them, and sell them to particular persons, he gets more by it. When a Merchant goes out of the Kingdom, he is oblig'd to tell what pieces of Gold he carries with him; and the King's people take a Shayet at the rate of a Ducat, and sometimes they value the Ducat at more. But if he carries his Gold away privately and be discover'd, all his Gold is confiscated.

The Ducat usually is worth two Crowns, which in Persia justly comes to twenty-six Shayets; but there is no price fixt in that Country for Ducats. For when the season is to go for the Indies, or that the Caravan sets out for Mecca, as well the Merchants as the Pilgrims buy up all the Ducats they can find out, by reason of their lightness; and then they rise to twenty-seven, and twenty-eight Shayets, and sometimes more, a piece.

CHAP. I.

The second Voyage of the Author from Paris to Ispahan: and first, of his Embarking at Marseilles for Alexandretta.

THE Road from Constantinople to Erivan, which with all those other Roads through the Northern Provinces of Turkie, the first time I travel'd into Persia, I have amply describ'd. It behoves me now to treat of the Southern Provinces, and of those through the Deserts, where there are several Emirs, or Arabian Princes, of which several are very potent: For there are some of them that can bring 30000 Horse into the Field, five of which I have had the honour to discourse, and to oblige them with small Presents; in recompence whereof they sent me Rice, Mutton, Dates, and Sherbet, as long as I staid among them.

I embark'd at Marseilles in a Holland Vessel that carry'd five and forty Guns, from thence we set sail for Malta. At Malta we staid twelve days to carine the Vessel, and to take in fresh Victuals. Among the rest we bought two thousand Quails, for there are a prodigious quantity in the Island: but in two or three days we found five or six hundred of them destroy'd by the Vermin that pester'd the ship.

From Malta we set sail for Larneca, a good Road in the Island of Cyprus, to the West of Famagosta, which is not above a days journey from it by Land. As we were making into the Road, about two or three hours after midnight, we perceiv'd a Vessel close upon us, and both the Ships Company began to cry out, for fear of falling foul one upon another; but the Vessel sheer'd clear without any harm on either side.

In the morning we cast Anchor, and went ashore. It is a good half League from the Road where the Consuls and Merchants, both English, Hollanders, and French; live in a very pitiful Village. However there is a little Monastery of Capuchins, who officiate in the Chapel of the French Consul; and another of Religious Italians, that depend upon the Guardian of Jerusalem. We staid but two days at Larneca; the Captain having nothing to do but to inform himself what business they might have for him at his return; it being usual then to take in spun and unspun Cottons, together with course Wool for Mattresses.

From Larneca till we came in view of the Coast of Syria, we had the Wind very favourable; but at length coming to prove a little contrary, instead of carrying us to Alexandretta, it cast us to the Northward, two or three Leagues higher, upon the Coast of Cilicia, toward a Town call'd Païasses. Half a League from that City lies a vast Rock, and between that Rock and the Land runs a very high Sea: And here it was that the people of the Country believe that the Whale cast up Jonas again; though the common Opinion reports it to have been done near Joppa in Palestine. All along that Coast from Alexandretta to Païasses, and farther, the way is so narrow and straiten'd by the Mountain, that in some parts the Camels and Horses must dip their Feet in the Sea: and yet you must pass that way of necessity, travelling from Syria to Constantinople. Between Alexandretta and Païasses it was, that the Chevalier Paul, in a Vessel that carry'd only three hundred Men, miss'd but little of surprising the Caravan that every Year carries the Tribute of Egypt to Constantinople, which since hath never been sent by Sea for fear of the Maltesi. This Knight had landed his Men, and laid them in Ambuscade; but unfortunately his Design was discover'd, so that the Caravan, that might have been easily surpriz'd, stood upon their Guard.

We were near the Coast, when we discover'd a Skiff with fifteen or sixteen Turks, that were sent by him that commanded four Galleys of Rhodes to demand the Customary Present from our Captain. Those Galleys then anchor'd at Païasses, and had there discharg'd themselves of their Provisions of War for Bagdat, which the Grand Signor was going to besiege. And it is the custom, that when the Great Turk's Galleys are out at Sea, that whatever strange Vessel passes by them must send them a Present, either willingly or by force. When the Basha of the Sea, who is the Admiral of the Turks, is in Person at Sea, the Vessel which he meets is not excus'd for 2000 Crowns: so that when he sets out from Constantinople to cruise, the Vessels of the Franks do all they can to avoid him. There are some that will seek to escape in sight of the Galleys, but it has cost them dear. And it happen'd, that one day the Wind slackning, they boarded a Vessel of Marseilles, the Captain and Notary whereof were both seiz'd, and drub'd till their Bodies were almost bruiz'd to a Gelly, and they had like to have dy'd upon it, without being the better in their Purses; for the rudeness of the Chastisement did not excuse them from paying the Money which was demanded. Whether our Captain knew any thing of this Example, or whether it were out of his natural heat of Valour, he laugh'd at the Skiff-men, bidding them be gone, and telling them he had no Presents for them but Cannon-Bullets. Thereupon the Men return'd to their Galleys, who soon deliver'd us from the true fear we were in, that the gallantry of the Captain had drawn us into an inconvenience. For while we kept the Sea close by the Coast, to observe the Countenances of the Turks, they weigh'd Anchor, and turn'd their Prows toward Rhodes. However, before they left us they sent us a Broad-side, and our Captain, whatever we could say, sent them another, which render'd us more guilty. For the Turks pretend that when their Navy is at Sea, or only one Squadron, and that a strange Vessel is in sight, she is bound to come as near as the Wind will permit her without being hal'd, for which they will otherwise make the Commander pay very severely. The Consuls and Merchants of Aleppo understanding what had pass'd very much blam'd the Captain, fearing a worse consequence of the business. But by good fortune the miscarriage was stiff'd and never went farther.

The same day the Wind veering to the West-North-West, we sail'd into the Road of Alexandretta, where we came to an Anchor, about a quarter of a League from the Land. Upon the advice which they have out of Christendom, so soon as they of Alexandretta discover a Vessel, and know what Colours she carries, the Vice-Consul of the Nation to which the Vessel belongs, fails not to advertise the Consul Consul of Aleppo, by a Note which is carry'd in four or five hours, though it be more than two or three days journey on Horse-back. For they tye a Note under the Wing of a Pigeon, who is taught what to do, and she flies directly to the place whence she was brought. For more surety, they usually send two, that if the one should miscarry in the dark, which has many times happen'd, the other may supply the defect.

Alexandretta is nothing else but a confus'd heap of paltry Houses, inhabited by the Greeks, who keep little Fudling-schools, for the Mariners and others, the meaner sort of the people: for the Merchants lye at the Vice-Consuls of the Nation. There were but two then, the English Vice-Consul and the French; who had each of them a very convenient dwelling. However they must be men who love Money at a strange rate, that accept of those Employments. For the Air, like that of Ormus, is generally so bad, especially in the Summer, in so much that they who do not dye, cannot avoid very dangerous Distempers. If there be any so strong that they can hold out for three or four Years, and can accustom themselves to a bad Air, they do well to stay there; for for them to betake themselves to a good Air, is to hazard their Lives. Mr. Philips the English Consul has been the only Person that ever liv'd two and twenty Years at Alexandretta: but you must know he was a brisk merry Man, and of an excellent temper of Body; and yet for all that he had been forc'd to be cauteriz'd. That which renders the Air so bad, is the great quantity of standing Pools and Plashes in the neighbouring Plains, extending to the East and South; but when the great Heats begin to approach, the most part of the Inhabitants retire to a Village call'd Belan, upon the next Mountain to the City, where there are very good Waters and excellent Fruits. They come also thither from Aleppo, when there is an appearance of a Pestilence; and yet there are few people in this Village who are not troubled with a sort of Fever, that makes their Eyes look yellow and hollow; which they never can remedy as long as they live.

About half a League from Alexandretta, on the right hand of the High-way, just against the Marsh on the other side, is a Tower whereon are to be seen the Arms of Godfrey of Bulloign. In all likelihood it was built for the defence of the High-way, which is enclos'd between these two Merches, whose Exhalations are very noxious.

It is but three little days journey from Alexandretta to Aleppo, and some well mounted have rid it in two. The Franks are not permitted to go thither on Foot. For before that Prohibition, in regard the way was short, every Sea-man that had a hundred Crowns, more or less, went on Foot to Aleppo, and got easily thither in three days, with little expence. Now because they had but little Money to spend, and were willing to dispatch their business, they would not stand to give Four or Five in the Hundred extraordinary for what Goods they bought, which was of dangerous consequence to the Merchants. For you must observe, that when the Ships arrive, the first man that either out of rashness or ignorance, gives two Sous more for a Commodity that is not worth a Crown, sets the Price, and causes all the whole Commodity to be sold at that rate. So that the Merchants that lay out ten or twelve thousand Crowns together, are very careful lest those Saylor should get before them, and enhance the Price of the Market.

To remedy which inconvenience, the Merchants obtain'd an Order, That no Strangers should be permitted to go a-foot from Alexandretta to Aleppo, but that they should be bound to hire Horses, and to give for every Horse six Piasters thither, and six back; which expence would soon eat out the Profit of a poor Mariner's small Sum.

Usually you stay at Alexandretta three or four days, as well to rest your self, as to make some little Provisions for your Journey to Aleppo. For though you meet with good Stages at Evening, yet the Janisaries will be very glad to eat by the way.

Setting out from Alexandretta, we travel'd over a Plain to the foot of a Mountain which is call'd Belan. There is a wide Gap in the midst of this Mountain, which giving liberty to the North-East Wind, when it blows hard, doth so enrage the Road of Alexandretta, which is otherwise very calm, that no Ship can ride there at that time. In so much that all Ships that happ'n to be there when the Wind rises, presently weigh, and get out to Sea, for fear of being cast away. Almost at the top of the Mountain you meet with an Inn; but though it be very fair one, with Fountains round about it, yet Merchants never stop there, but go on a little farther to a Grecian that speaks good Italian, and whose entertainment is indifferent good, considering the Country. When you go away, you give him a Crown for your accommodation, which is the manner at other Stages, by a custom, which the Franks themselves having establish'd, will never be left off.

Descending down the Mountain you discover the City of Antioch, built upon a Hill. Formerly the Road lay through that City, but the Fanizaries of the place exacting a Piafter from every person that travel'd that way, that Road is now difus'd. Antioch once made more noise in the World, being sal'n to ruine ever since the Chanel, that ran from the City to the Sea, where Gallies might ride, has been stop'd up by the Sands that have encroach'd upon the Mouth of the Haven.

When you are at the bottom of the Hill toward the North, you discover a Castle built upon a Hill standing by it self, from whence you have a prospect over a good part of the Plain of Antioch. It is about fifteen Leagues long, and three broad, in that part where the Road lyes. Somewhat more than half the way, you meet with a long Causey parted by several Bridges, by reason of certain Rivulets that cross it, without which the Road were hardly passable. The frequent Revolts of Bagdat and Balsara, which the Grand Signor has been forc'd so often to besiege, caus'd the Grand Visier in the Reign of Achmat to undertake this Causey, which together with the Bridge was finish'd in six Months, that was lookt upon as a Miracle. This was done for the more easie passage of the Artillery, and other Provisions of War, that were brought out of Romania and Greece to the Siege of Bagdat, which could never have been done, but for this Causey. At the end of this Causey stands a Bridge, very long and strongly built, under which runs a River, which, with the other Rivulets that wind about the Plain, forms a Lake toward the South, that is call'd the Lake of Antioch. This Lake affords a great Revenue, by reason of the Eels that are caught there, which are taken two Months before Lent, and transported to Malta, Sicily, and other parts of Italy.

This Plain is very full of Olive-Trees; which produces that great Trade of Soap, that is made at Aleppo, and transported into Mesopotamia, Chaldea, Persia, and the Desert; that Commodity being one of the most acceptable Presents that can be made to the Arabians. Sallet Oyl is also in great esteem among them: so that when you make them a Present of it, they will take off their Bonnets, and rub their Heads, their Faces, and their Beards with it, lifting up their Eyes to Heaven, and cry in their Language, God be thank'd. Therein they have lost nothing of the ancient custom of the Eastern People, of which there is often mention made in Holy Scripture.

About a League and a half beyond the Plain, you meet with a Rock, at the foot whereof is a little deep Lake, wherein they catch a world of Fish that are like our Barbels. I have kill'd them with my Pistol; and found them to be of an excellent tast; though they are not regarded at Aleppo.

Two hours after you ford a River which is call'd Afrora; though if it have happen'd to rain, you must stay 'till the Waters are fal'n. Having past the River, upon the Banks whereof you stay to feed your self and your Horses, you come to lye at a poor Village call'd Shaquemin, where there is an Inn. Here the Country-people bring Provisions of Food to the Travellers; and whether you eat or no, you must pay a Piafter, according to the custom which the Franks have establish'd. After you have pass'd the Plain of Antioch as far as Shaquemin, the Horses in Summer are so terribly tormented with a sort of great Flies, that it were impossible to travel three or four hours together, were it not for going out of the Road, either to the right, or to the left, and riding through the Fields, which are full of those Burrs that our Clothworkers make use of: For in regard they grow as high as the Crupper of the Horse, they keep the Flies off from stinging and tying the Horses.

Leaving the Village of Shaquemin, the Road lyes among Stones; and for half this tedious way, for two or three Leagues round about, you see nothing but the Ruines of ancient Monasteries. There are some of them which are built almost all of Free-stone; and about half a days journey toward the North, quite out of the Road, stands the Monastery of St. Simeon the Stylite, with the remainder of his so famous famous Pillar, which is still to be seen. The Franks that travel to Aleppo, usually go out of their way to see that place. That which I find most entire, and worthy observation among the Ruines of those Monasteries, is the number of arch'd Cisterns of Free-stone, which time has not defac'd.

From Shaqnemin you come to dine at a Village call'd Angare, where every Traveler is entertain'd for his Piaster, as at the other Stages. Between the other Villages it is ten hours journey; but between the Angare and Aleppo, but three. We alighted at the French Consul's House, at what time the Customers came presently to search our Cloak-bags; after which we went to the Quaiffery, which is a place where all Strangers are at the expence of half a Crown a day for themselves, and a quarter so much for every Servant, and are well entertain'd.

C H A P. II.

The Description of Aleppo, now the Capital City of Syria.

Aleppo is one of the most famous Cities in all Turkie, as well for the bigness and beauty of it, as for the goodness of the Air, and plenty of all things; together with the great Trade which is driv'n there by all the Nations of the World. It lyes in 71 Deg. 41 Min. of Longitude, and 36 Deg. 15 Min. of Latitude, in an excellent Soil. With all the search that I could make, I could never learn how it was anciently call'd. Some would have it to be Hierapolis, others Berea: And the Christians of the Country agree with the latter. The Arabian Historians that record the taking of it, call it only Aleb; not mentioning any other name. Whence this Observation is to be made, That if the Arabians call it Aleb, others Alep; the reason is; because the Arabians never use the Letter P in their Language. This City was taken by the Arabians in the fifteenth Year of the Hegyra of Mahomet, which was about the Year of CHRIST 637, in the Reign of Heraclius Emperour of Constantinople.

The City is built upon four Hills, and the Castle upon the highest that stands in the middle of Aleppo, being supported by Arches in some places, for fear the Earth should rumble and moulder away from it. The Castle is large, and may be about five or six hundred Paces in compass. The Walls and Towers, though built of Free-stone, are of little defence. There is but one Gate to enter into it from the South, over a Draw-bridge, laid over certain Arches cross a Moat about six or seven Fathom deep. There is but one half of it full of Water, and that a standing Puddle to boot; the rest is a meer dry Ditch; so that it cannot be accounted a wholsom place. However there is Water brought into the Castle through a large Pipe from the Fountains in the City: and there is a strong Garrison kept in it.

The City is above three Miles in circuit, and the best half of it is unmoated; that Moat there is not above three Fathom deep. The Walls are very good, and all of Free-stone; with several square Towers, distant one from the other about four-score Paces; between which there are others also that are less. But these Walls are not all of them of an equal height, for in some places they are not above four Fathoms from the Ground. There are ten Gates to enter into the City, without either Moat or Draw-Bridge; under one of which there is a place that the Turks have in great veneration; where they keep Lamps continually burning, and report that Elisha the Prophet liv'd for some time.

There is no River that runs through Aleppo; and but only a small one without the City, which the Arabians call Coic. However, though indeed it be but properly a Rivulet, yet it is very useful to water the Gardens, where grows an abundance of Fruit, particularly Pistaches, much bigger, and better tasted than those that comes from the parts near Casbin. But though there be no River, yet there are store of Fountains and Recepracles of Water, which they bring from two places distant from the City.

The Edifices, neither publick nor private, are very handſom, but only withinſide; the Walls are of Marble of ſeveral colours; and the Cieling of Foliage Fret-work, with Inſcriptions in Golden Letters. Without and within the City there are ſix and twenty Mosques, ſix or ſeven whereof are very magnificent, with ſtately Duomo's, three being cover'd with Lead. The chiefſt and largeſt of all, was a Chriſtian Church which they call'd Aibba, or Liſten'd unto: which is thought to have been built by St. Helen. In one part of the Suburbs alſo ſtands another Mosquee, which was formerly a Chriſtian Church; in that there is one thing worthy obſervation. In the Wall upon the right ſide of the Gate there is a Stone to be ſeen two or three Foot ſquare, wherein there is the figure of a handſom Chalice, and a Sacrifice over the hollow of it, with a Crescent that covers the Sacrifice, the two Horns whereof deſcend juſt upon the brims of the mouth of the Chalice. One would think at firſt that thoſe Figures were in Mosaic Work: but it is all Natural, as I have found with ſeveral other Franks, having ſcrap'd the Stone with an Iron Inſtrument, when the Turks were out of the way. Several Conſuls would have bought it, and there has been offer'd for it 2000 Crowns; but the Baſha's of Aleppo would never ſuffer it to be ſold. Half a League from the City lyes a pleaſant Hill, where the Franks are wont to take the Air. On the ſide of that Hill is to be ſeen a Cave or Grotto, where the Turks report that Haly liv'd for ſome few days; and for that there is an ill-ſhap'd figure of a Hand imprinted in the Rock, they farther believe it to be the Hand of Haly.

There are three Colledges in Aleppo, but very few Scholars, though there be Men of Learning that belong to them; who have Salaries to teach Grammar, and their odd kind of Philoſophy, with the Grounds of their Religion, which are the Principal Sciences to which the Turks apply themſelves.

The Streets of the City are all pav'd, except the Bazar's, where the Merchants and Handicraft-Tradeſmen keep their Shops. The chiefſt Artiſts, and the moſt numerous are Silk and Camlet-Weavers.

In the City and Suburbs there are about forty Inns; and fifty publick Baths, as well for Women as for Men, keeping their turns. 'Tis the chiefſt Paſtime the Women have to go to the Baths; and they will ſpare all the Week long to carry a Collation, when they go at the Weeks end to make merry among themſelves, in thoſe places of privacy.

The Suburbs of the City are large and well peopl'd, for almoſt all the Chriſtians have their Houſes and Churches there. Of which Chriſtians there are four ſorts in Aleppo, I mean of Eaſtern Chriſtians, that is to ſay, Greeks, Armenians, Jacobites or Syrians, and Maronites. The Greeks have an Archbiſhop there, and are about fifteen or ſixteen thouſand in number; their Church is dedicated to St. George. The Armenians have a Biſhop, whom they call Vertabet; and are about twelve thouſand in number; their Church is dedicated to the Virgin. The Jacobites being about ten thouſand, have a Biſhop alſo; and their Church is likewiſe dedicated to the Virgin, as is that of the Armenians. The Maronites depend upon the Pope, not being above twelve hundred; their Church being conſecrated to St. Elias. The Roman Catholicks have three Churches, ſerv'd by the Capuchins, Carmelites, and Jesuits. They reckon that in the Suburbs and City of Aleppo there are about 250000 Souls.

There is a vaſt Trade at Aleppo for Silks and Camlets, but chiefly for Gall-Nuts, and Valanede, which is a ſort of Acorn-shell without which the Curriers cannot drefs their Leather. They have alſo a great Trade for Soap, and for ſeveral other Commodities; the Merchants repairing thither from all parts of the World. For not to ſpeak of the Turks, Arabians, Persians, Indians, there are ſeveral English, Italians, French, and Hollanders, every Nation having their Conſul to carry on their Interests, and maintain their Priviledges.

Nor does this place happ'n to be ſo great a Mart, through the convenience of the two Rivers of Tigris and Euphrates, as ſome have writt'n; by which they ſay ſuch vaſt quantities of Commodities are transported and imported out and into the City. For had that been, I ſhould never have croſs'd the Deſert, coming from Bagdat to Aleppo; nor at another time, going from Aleppo to Baſſara. And as for Euphrates, certain it is, that the great number of Mills built upon it, to bring the Water to the neighbouring Grounds, have not only render'd it unnavigable, but made it very dangerous.

I must confess, that in the year 1638 I saw a great part of the Grand Signor's Army, and several Boats full of Warlike Provisions fall down the Stream, when he went to besiege it: but when they were forc'd to take away all the Mills that are upon the River; which was not done without a vast trouble and expence. As for Tigris, it is not navigable 'till beyond Babylon down to Balsara, where you may take Water, and be at Balsara in nine days. But the Voyage is very inconvenient, for at every Town which the Arabs have upon the River, you must be hal'd, and be forc'd to leave some Money behind you. Sometimes indeed the Merchants of Moussul and Bagdat; and others that come out of Chaldea to Trade at Balsara, carry their Goods by Water from Bagdat; but in regard the Boats are only to be tow'd by Men, it takes them up a Voyage of seventy days. By this you may judge of the time and expence of carrying Goods by Water up the River Euphrates to Bir, where they are to be unlad'n for Aleppo.

In short, if the convenience of Morat-sou (for so the Turks call Euphrates) were to be had, and that Goods might be transported by that River, the Merchants would never take that way: for the Arabian Princes, with their People and their Cattel lying all the Summer long upon the Banks of the River, for the sake of the Water and the Grass, would make the Merchants pay what Toll they pleas'd themselves.

I saw an Example of this, coming one time from Babylon to Aleppo. In all which Road we met but with one of those Arabian Princes, who lay at Anna: yet he made us pay for every Camel's Load forty Piasters. And which was worse, he detain'd us above five Weeks, to the end his Subjects might get more of our Money by selling us their Provisions. The last time I pass'd the Desert, I met another of these Arabian Princes together with his Brother, both young Men: He would not let us go a step farther, unless we would exchange two hundred Piasters in specie for Larins, the Money of the Country; and he forc'd us to take them, what ever we could urge to make it appear how much we should lose by them. And indeed we said as much as we could, for the dispute lasted two and twenty days to no purpose; might overcoming right. By this you may guess what the other Arabians would do, who are not a jot more civil; and whether the Merchants would get by taking the Road of Euphrates.

The City is govern'd by a Basha, who commands all the Country from Alexandretta to Euphrates. His Guard usually consists of three hundred Men, and some years ago he was made a Vizier. There is also an Aga or Captain of the Cavalry, as well within the City as without, who commands four hundred Men. There is another Aga who has under him seven hundred Janisaries, who has the charge of the Gates of the City; to whom the Keys are carry'd every Evening, neither has he any dependance upon the Basha. The Castle is also under another Commander, sent immediately from Constantinople, who has under him two hundred Musketeers, and likewise the charge of the Cannon; of which there are about thirty Pieces; eight great Guns, the rest of a small size. There is also another Aga or Captain of the City, who commands three hundred Harquebuzes; beside a Son-Bashi, who is a kind of Provost of the Merchants, or Captain of the Watch, going the round every Night with his Officers though the City and Suburbs. He also puts in Execution the Sentences of the Basha, upon Criminal Offenders.

In Civils there is a Cadi, who sits sole Judge, without any Assistants, of all Causes as well Civil as Criminal; and when he has condemn'd any Man to Death, he sends him to the Basha, together with his Accusation, with whom the Basha does as he pleases. This Cady makes and dissolves all Contracts of Marriage; all Acts of Sale and Purchase pass in his presence. He also creates the sworn Masters of every Trade, who make their inspection that there may be no deceit in the Work. The Grand Signor's Duties are receiv'd by a Testerdar, or Treasurer-General, who has under him several Receivers in divers places.

In matters of Religion, the Mufii is the Chief, and the Interpreter of the Law, as well in relation to the Ceremonies, as in all Ecclesiastical differences. Among these Interpreters of the Law there is a Chieke or Doctor, appointed to instruct those that are newly converted to Mahumetanism, and to teach them the Maxims and Customs of their Religion.

Three days after I arriv'd at Aleppo, Sultan Amurat made his Entry, going to his Army, which was upon its march to the Siege of Babylon. Now you must take notice, that not far from Aleppo, toward the East, there stands a House inhabited by the Dervies, which are a Religious Order among the Turks; though it formerly belong'd to the Monks of St. Basil, and was a fair Covent. It is still in good repair, the Walls of the Chambers, Halls, and Galleries being all Marble. All the Dervies of this House went half a League from the City, as far as Mount Ozelet, to meet the Grand Signor; and the Superiour, at the Head of the rest, having made a Speech to his Highness, two Dervies came and made their obeisance in particular. Which being perform'd, from that place to the Castle of Aleppo, for half an hour's march together; they went just before the Grand Signor's Horse, turning round continually with all their might, 'till they foam'd again at the Mouth, and dazzl'd the Eyes of those that beheld them. There are some of these Dervies that will turn in that manner for two hours together, and glory in that which we account folly.

While the Grand Signor staid at Aleppo, the Basha of Cayro came thither with a thousand Janisaries: And indeed, there never was a sight of Men more active, or better order'd. Every one of them had Scarlet Breeches that reach'd down to their Ancles, with a Turkie-Robe of English Cloth, and a Waist-coat of Calicut painted with several Colours. The most part had Buttons of Gold and Silk; and as well their Girdles as their Scimitars were adorn'd with Silver. The Basha march'd at the Head of this Magnificent Regiment in a modest Garb; but the Harness of his Horse was as rich as his Habit seem'd to be careless, having spar'd for no Cost to appear before the Grand Signor in a stately Equipage.

There is a necessity for a Man to stay some time at Aleppo, as well to dispose of his Affairs, and in expectation 'till the Caravan be ready, unless he will venture himself alone without a Guide, which I have done more than once: And thus much for Aleppo, next to Constantinople and Cayro, the most considerable City in all the Turkish Empire.

CHAP. III.

Of several Roads in general from Aleppo to Ispahan, and particularly of the Road through the great Desert.

There are five principal Roads from Aleppo to Ispahan, which being added to those other Roads which I have describ'd through Naiolia, make seven Roads into Persia, parting from Constantinople, Smyrna, or Aleppo.

The first of the five Roads, setting out from Aleppo, is upon the left hand, toward the Summer-East, through Diarbek and Taurus. The second directly East, by Mesopotamia, through Moussul and Amadan. The third upon the right hand, toward the Winter-East, through Bagdat and Kengavar. The fourth somewhat more to the South, crossing a little Desert, through Anna, Bagdat, and Balsara. The fifth through the great Desert, which is an extraordinary Road, never travel'd but once a year, when the Merchants of Turkie and Egypt go to buy Camels. Of these Roads I intend to treat distinctly, and in several Chapters. And first of the Road through the great Desert.

The Caravans that go to Balsara this way never set out 'till the Rains are fall'n, that they may not want Water in the Desert: and the Rain seldom holds up 'till December. This Caravan, with which I travel'd, set out upon Christmas-day, consisting of about six hundred Camels, and four hundred Men, Masters and Servants together: the Caravan-Bashi being only on Horse-back, and riding before, to find Water, and convenient places to lodge in.

I must confess I had the convenience my self to ride my own Horse, which I kept all the while I was at Aleppo. A liberty permitted the Franks only at Constantinople, Smyrna, and Aleppo: for at Damas, Seyde, or Cayro, none but the Consuls are suffer'd to keep Horses: others can only keep or hire Asses, which stand ready in the publick Streets at all times.

The next day we dislodg'd by day-break, and by noon we came to a place where there were five Wells, about five hundred Paces distant one from the other. The Water was excellent, and caus'd us to replenish our Boracho's: and about four a Clock in the Afternoon we lay at a place where there was no Water.

The next day near noon we met with two Wells, but the Water was not good, and only the Camels drank of it, there we also lodg'd that night.

Having now travel'd two days in the Desert, I will describe it in a few words. You begin to enter upon it two or three Leagues from Aleppo, where by degrees you meet with nothing but Tents instead of Houses. It stretches out to the Winter-East, all along the Euphrates to Balsara, and the Shoar of the Gulf of Persia; and upon the South to the Chain of Mountains that divides it from Arabia Petraea and Arabia the Happy. These Deserts are almost quite thorough nothing but Plains of Sand, which in some places lye looser than in others; and are hardly passable till the Rains are but newly tal'n, and have knit the Sands together. 'Tis a rare thing to meet with a Hill or a Valley in these Deserts; if you do, there is as surely Water, and as many Bushes as will serve to boyl a little Rice. For throughout the whole Desert there is no Wood to be found; and all the Bavin's and Charcoal that you can load upon Camels at Aleppo, will not last above eight or ten days. Therefore you must take notice, that of six hundred Camels that pass through the Desert, there are scarce fifty laden with Merchandize, which is generally coarse Cloth, some little Iron Ware, but chiefly black and blew Calicuts, which the Arabians make use of without ever whitening them. All the other Camels are only laden with Provision, and all little enough; so many People being to travel for so many days through so long a Tract of Ground where there is nothing in the World to sustain Life and Soul together.

For the first fifteen days travel we met with Water but once in two days, and sometimes not above once in three days. The twentieth day after we set out from Aleppo, the Caravan lay at a place where there were two Wells, and the Water very good. Every one was glad of the convenience of washing his Linnen, and the Caravan-Bashi made account to have staid there two or three days. But the News that we receiv'd, caus'd us to alter our Resolutions. For we had no sooner giv'n order to dress our Suppers, when we saw a Courier with three Arabs, all mounted upon Dromedaries, who were sent to carry the news of the Taking of Babylon to Aleppo and other Cities of the Empire. They stop'd at the Wells to let their Beasts drink; and immediately the Caravan-Bashi, and the principal persons of the Caravan made them a small Present of dry'd Fruits and Granates. Who thereupon were so kind as to tell us, that the Carriage which carried the Baggage belonging to the Grand Signor and his Train being tyr'd, his Officers would be sure to seize upon ours, if they should chance to meet with us: they advis'd us moreover not to come near Anna, lest the Emir should stop us.

Upon this news, we departed three hours after midnight; and keeping directly to the South, we put our selves into the midst of the Desert.

Eight days after we came to lye at a place where there were three Wells, and three or four Houses. We staid there two days to take fresh Water, and we were just setting forward again, when thirty Horsemen well mounted came from one of the Emirs, to tell the Caravan-Bashi that he must stop his Caravan. We staid impatiently for him three days; and at length he came, and was presented by the Caravan-Bashi with a piece of Satin, half a piece of Scarlet Cloth, and two large Copper Cauldrons. Now although those Cauldrons could not but be very acceptable to an Arabian Prince, who most certainly had none such in his Kitchen, yet he did not seem contented with his Present, and demanded above four hundred Crowns. We contested seven or eight days to have kept our Money in our Pockets, but in vain, so that we were forc'd to rate one another, and to raise him his Sum; which being paid, he treated the chief of the Caravan with Pilaw, Honey, and Dates; and when he went away, give them five or six Sheep ready boyl'd.

Three days after we had left this Arabian Prince, we met with two Wells near certain old decay'd Brick Buildings. The Water of those Wells was so bitter, that the Camels would not drink it: however we fill'd our Boracho's, thinking it would have left its bitterness by being boyl'd: but we found the contrary.

From those two Wells that were good for nothing, we travel'd six days before we met with any Water, which with their three days before, made nine; and all that time the Camels never drank, as I have hinted already. At the end of nine days we cross'd a Hilly Country for three Leagues together, at the feet of three of which Hills there were three standing Pools. The Camels, that smelt the Water half a League off, put themselves upon their great trot, which is their manner of running, and no sooner came to the Pools but they crouded in all together, which caus'd the Water to be thick and muddy. Thereupon the Caravan-Bashi resolv'd to stay there two or three days together, 'till the Water was setl'd. Here we had also the opportunity to boyl us some Rice, there being good store of Bushes that grew about the Lake. But above all, the People were overjoy'd that they had an opportunity to make Bread, which they do after the following manner. First they dig a round Hole in the Ground, half a Foot deep, and two or three in diameter, which they croud full of Bushes, and then set them on fire, covering them with Bricks or Stones 'till they are red hot. In the mean while they prepare their Dough upon a Sofra, or round piece of Copper, which serves at other times for Table and Table-Cloth to eat upon. Then they take away the Ashes and Bricks, and making the Hole very clean, put in their Dough, and covering it again with the hot Bricks or Stones, leave it so 'till the morning. The Bread thus bak'd is very well tasted, not being above two Fingers thick, and as big as an ordinary Cake.

While we stay'd at the three Ponds, I spent my time in killing Hares and Partridge, of which there was very great plenty in those parts. The night before we departed we fill'd our Baracho's again, the Water being very good and clear; though it be nothing but Rain water preserv'd in those Cavi'es, which in the Summer are dry again.

But now the Caravan-Bashi, seeing we had travel'd already nine days without finding any Water, resolv'd to leave the South, and to keep to the West; and if he met not with Water in two or three days, to take to the North-East, or Winter-East, in quest of the River Euphrates.

Two days after we had chang'd our Road, we pass'd between two little Hills, where we met with a Pond, near to which were two Arabians, each with his Wife and Children, tending a Herd of Goats and a Flock of Sheep. They told us they were going toward Moussul, and put us in the best Road to find Water; and indeed, from that place to Balsara, we never travel'd three days together, but we met with enough.

Five days after we had left those two Arabians, we discover'd a large Palace all of Brick; which shew'd some probability, that the Country had been formerly sow'd, and that the Bricks had been burnt with the Straw. To the Palace belong'd three large Courts; in every one of which were fair Buildings, with two Stories of Arches, one upon another. Though this large Pile was standing, yet no body liv'd in it, nor could the Arabians, (very ignorant in Antiquity,) tell us by whom it was built. Before the Gate of the Palace there is a Lake with a Channel, the Bottom whereof is brick'd, as also the Arch, which is even with the Ground. This the Arabians believe to have been a conveyance of Water from Euphrates: which surely could never be, in regard that Euphrates is above twenty Leagues distant.

From that Palace we kept to the North-East, and after we had travel'd five days, we arriv'd at a pitiful Town, formerly call'd Cusa, now Meched-Ali, where Ali, Mahomet's Son-in-law lyes buried in a plain Mosquee. Generally there stand four Tapers lighted about the Tomb, and certain Lamps burning over-head, which are fasten'd to the Roof.

Though the Persians have Ali in so much veneration, yet they rarely go in Pilgrimage to his Tomb. The reason is, because that there being no way to come at it, but through Bagdat, which is under the Dominion of the Great Turk, there is a demand of eight Piasters from every Pilgrim; which is an Imposition that no way pleases the King of Persia. Sha-Abas scorning that his Subjects should be tributary to the Turks, endeavour'd to divert them from this Pilgrimage by another sort of Devotion, which he set up at Meshed, upon the Road from Tauris to Candahar. Nor have the Kings his Successors been less unwilling to give their Subjects leave to visit their Prophet Ali, taking it for an Affront to pay Tribute to the Grand Signor.

Which

Which is the reason that this Mosque is no more enrich'd by the Persians. For besides the Lamps and Tapers that burn continually, there are only two Moullah's that read the Alcoran according to custom. In this Town there are only three or four bad Wells of brackish Water, and a dry Chancel, which they say Sba Abbas made to bring the Water of Euphrates to the Town for the benefit of the Pilgrims. As for Food, we met with nothing but Dates, Grapes, and Almonds, which the People sold at a dear rate. When any Pilgrims come thither, which is very rare, and that they want Victuals, the Sheek causes a distribution to be made among them of Rice boyl'd with Water and Salt, and a little Butter pour'd atop. For there is no Pasturage for Cattel, and by consequence there can be no store of Food.

Two days journey from Ali's Town, by nine of the Clock in the morning we met two young Arabian Lords, that took upon them the name of Sultans. They were two Brothers, one of the age of seventeen years, the other of thirteen: and as we pitch'd our Tents, they pitch'd theirs close by us; which were of a very fine Scarlet Cloth; and among the rest there was one cover'd with Purple Velvet, lac'd with a rich Galoon-lace. So soon as they were settl'd in their Tents, the Caravan-Bashi and I went to wait upon them; who understanding that there were Franks in the Caravan, ask'd me whether I had any Curiosities to sell them; but when I made them answer that I had nothing worthy their Purchase, they would not believe me, and therefore commanded the Caravan Bashi to fetch my Trunks, that they might be open'd in their presence. While the were opening, one of the chief persons about those Princes would not suffer any of the rest of the Arabs to come near, for though most of the Arabs are great Thieves, yet some of them are persons of great integrity. Now I had in my company a young Painter, who had in his Chest several engrav'd Cuts, part Landskips, part Figures, together with the Pictures of certain Courtisans drawn to the Waist. The young Lords made choise only of twenty of those Courtisans, which I would have presented to them, but they gave me to understand, that they knew how to pay for what they had, and especially the youngest, who seem'd to be very generous; him I pleas'd in an extraordinary manner; for his Teeth being very foul, I order'd a Chirurgeon that I carry'd along with me at the same time to clean them, which he did to the great satisfaction of the young Prince. Thereupon they sent me and my Train, of their best Victuals they had. The Caravan Bashi presented them with half a piece of Scarlet, and two pieces of Tissue of Gold and Silver. When we were ready to go, the young Sultan gave me twelve Ducats for my Pictures, and sent the Caravan-Bashi and my self two Frails of the best Dates that we had met with since we left Aleppo.

About midnight the Princes dislodg'd, and took to the North toward Euphrates. We set forward after them, driving Northward toward the same River. After we had travel'd four days we met one of the most potent Emirs of Arabia, who coming from the South, and going Northward, was to cross the Road that we kept. He was about fifty years of age, well made, and of a comely presence. He had not then above two thousand Horse, of thirty thousand which we heard had pass'd by some days before. Behind the two thousand Horse were fifty Camels that carry'd his Women; their Cajavas being cover'd with Scarlet-cloth fring'd with Silk. In the midst of these Camels there were six encompass'd with Eunuchs, the Fringes of the Cajavas being Silk, Silver, and Gold. The Arabians do not seem to be jealous of their Wives, as in Turkie and other places; for they led their Camels by our Caravan, never requiring us to retire, as is the custom in other places. They lodg'd a quarter of a League off, where we thought to have pitch'd, for the conveniency of two or three Ponds, which they depriv'd us of. This Arabian Prince had a great number of lovely Horses richly harness'd: others he had that were neither saddl'd nor bridl'd, yet the Riders would turn them with a Wand which way they pleas'd, and upon a full gallop would stop 'em, by only holding them by the Hair. He had some Horses of an excessive price; and this is to be observ'd, that they are never shod.

The Caravan-Bashi believing he could not escape scot-free from so powerful a Prince, among the Merchants of the Caravans found out a rich Saddle, with Bridle and Stirrups, which were all set out and garnish'd with massy Silver, with an embroider'd Quiver full of Arrows, together with a Buckler, the whole coming to about eleven or twelve hundred Livres; and adding to these of his own a piece of Scarlet, four pieces of Tissue of Gold and Silk, and six pieces of Tissue of Silver and Silk, made a Present of all together to the Emir. But he refus'd all, demanding only two hundred thousand Piasters for Larins: which exchange being no way for the Merchants profit, rais'd a great dispute. But at length, considering that it was in his power to stop and starve us there, we only endeavour'd a Composition; which was obtain'd. Thereupon he took the Present, which perhaps he would not else have done. For two days that we staid to weigh the Money, he sent Provisions to the chief of the Caravan; and at our departure, he sent us twelve Frails of Dates, and four young Camels that might be worth about forty Crowns a-piece.

Two days after we met a Schek, who among the Arabians is one of the chief of the Law. He was going to Mecca, cross some part of Arabia the Happy, with a Train of ten or twelve Camels. He staid all night with us, and one of his Servants having been dangerously wounded about two days before with a Musket-bullet, my Chirurgion dress'd him, and gave him Salve and Tents, for which he was extremely thankful. He sent me to Supper a great Dish of Pilaw, and the next day a whole Sheep. The Caravan-Bashi likewise presented him with two Ells of Scarlet.

The next we met with nothing worth observation, but the day following we met another Emir, of about Five and Twenty years of age, who came from Euphrates, and was travelling into the Happy Arabia. He had with him about five hundred Horse, and three hundred Camels that carry'd his women. He presently sent to know what Caravan it was, and understanding that it consisted of many Franks, among whom their was a Chirurgion: He sent again to desire the Caravan Bashi to follow with the Caravan, to the place where he intended to pitch his Tents, which was not far out of the way. We did not think to have gone so far that day, but he led us to the best water in all the Desert. The Princes Tent being set up, he sent for my Chirurgion, with whom I went along to know what his pleasure was. He had upon his left Arm a Tetter, with a most filthy Scab as broad as a Crown piece; and this went and came at certain times in the year. He presently ask'd the Chirurgion whether he could cure him? to whom the Chirurgion made answer, that the cure was not impossible, provided he knew where to get such remedies as were convenient: For had he said, he could have absolutely cur'd him, the Emir would have carry'd him away with him, without any farther Ceremony. Thereupon he would have giv'n the Chirurgion five hundred Crowns to have bought Medicines. But I made answer, that the cure would not cost so much, and that if the Chirurgion could meet with proper Drugs, I would lay out the Money my self. The Emir content with that answer, sent one of his chief People to Balsara, to come back with the Chirurgion; when he had bought his Medicines. He himself staid there three days in expectation of him; but after we had pretended to seek for what we wanted, up and down the Town (for we enquir'd for such things as we knew were not to be had) we sent him back word that we could not find what we look'd for, and desir'd his excuse, in regard the attendance of the Chirurgion would be of no use, where he had not proper remedies; which was the only way we could think of, to get cleverly rid of him.

The next days Journey after we had left the Arabian Prince, was through a Country altogether uninhabited; but the day following, which was the sixty-fifth and last day of our being in the Desert, we met after some time, with the ruins of some houses on both sides the way; which made us conjecture, that some great City had stood formerly in that place.

At length we came to Balsara, which I shall describe in another place.

While I stay'd at Balsara, which was about three weeks, an Ambassador from the Great Mogul arriv'd there, who from Constantinople went to Bagdat to congratulate the Grand Signor for the Conquest of that City, which he had taken in so short a time. The Emperour presented him with three stately Horses, and a little Watch, the Case whereof was set with Diamonds and Rubies. But the Ambassador not knowing what belong'd to that little Engin, winding it up the wrong way, broke the string. Coming to Balsara he sent to the Carmalites to desire them to mend his Watch; for he fear'd the loss of his head, should he return to his Master Master, and not shew him the Watch entire. It was at their House that I then lay; and therefore not knowing what to do with it, they desir'd me to shew my skill: Thereupon I put on a new string. But the Ambassador, when he understood to whom he was beholding, though it were but a trifle, profer'd me all the service and kindness imaginable. Thereupon the Carmelites and Augustin Fryars desir'd me to request of the Ambassador in their behalf, that he would obtain the Great Turks protection for them, in case he took Balsara, that their Houses and Churches might be preserv'd; which I did, and obtain'd by his means full protection from the Grand Visier. But they had no need of it, for the Turks did not make any attempt upon Balsara, hearing that the Persians were advancing; besides that the rainy season was at hand, which will not permit an Army to keep the Field: So that had Bagdat held out eight days longer, the Grand Signor would have been constrain'd to have rais'd the Siege.

Having spoken of the Arabian Horses, I must needs say, that there are some that are valu'd at a very high rate. The Mogul's Ambassador gave for some three, four, and six thousand Crowns, and for another he offer'd eight thousand Crowns, but the Horse would not be sold under ten, and so he left it. When he was got home into the Indies, and had presented the Mogul those Horses which he had carry'd along with him, being very lovely Creatures; he told his Master how he had offer'd eight thousand Crowns for a Horse more beautiful than any of them; but because the Owner would not let him go under ten, he left him. The King incens'd that his Ambassador has stood for so small a Sum, when it was for one of the greatest Monarchs in the World, upbraided the poorness of his Spirit, and banish'd him for ever from his presence, into a Province far distant from the Court. Thereupon the King wrote to the English to buy him the Horse, who accordingly did so, and brought him to Surat, where the Governour repaid them their Money. But the Horse dy'd at Brampour.

Nor must I forget, that while I was at Balsara, twice there flew by such a prodigious number of Locusts, that a far-off they appear'd like a Cloud, and darken'd the Air. They pass by Balsara four or five times in the year, the Wind carrying them into the Desert, where they alight, and most certainly dye. Should they not be thus wind-driv'n, there could nothing live upon the Earth in some parts of Chaldea. They swarm all along the Persian Gulf, and when the Vessels come to Ormus at the time of the year, there are little Shops where people sell Locusts fry'd in Butter to those that love that sort of Diet. Once I had the curiosity to open the Belly of a Locust six Inches long, and found therein seventeen little ones that stirr'd; whence it is easie to guess how those Insects come to be so numerous, especially in hot Countries.

There are several Barks that go from Ormus to furnish both sides of the Persian Gulf, where the people eat neither Bread nor Rice. I agreed with the Master of one of these Barks, and made my agreement that the Bark should not be above half laden; for generally they lade them too deep, and in foul weather they are forc'd to throw half the Freight over-board, to save the rest.

From Balsara to the mouth of the River Euphrates, it is reck'n'd to be twenty Leagues of Fresh-water. We staid seven whole days for a Wind, which proving favourable; we came to Brander-ric, in forty-eight hours. This is the place where you must land, if you intend for Persia, unless you are bound for Ormus. Brander-ric consists only of five or six little Fishers Hutts; which Hutts are only Hurdles set one against another, and cover'd over, where they and their Families live. To the same place come Asses lad'n with Dates, which I was forc'd to hire for want of Horses.

We were six days upon the Road from thence to Cazerom. This is a Mountainous Country, where there is Wood enough; but you must lodge in the Fields, for there are no Inns upon the Road. The way is pleasant in some places, along the Banks of several Rivulets, and through verdant Groves stor'd with great quantities of Turtles. We kill'd a good many; which we eat, part with Pilaw, instead of Hens; some we roasted, making Sticks to serve for Spits.

Cazerom is a little City ill built, where there is but one Inn, and that none of the most inviting to Strangers neither.

From Cazerom to Schiras it is five days journey. The Road lyes over very craggy
I Mountains,

Mountains, which had been impassable, but for the Liberality of Ali Couli-Kan, Governour of Schiras. He made Ways where there were none before, and joyn'd Mountains together by Bridges, in Countries which otherwise had been inaccessible. In the midst of the Mountains is a wide gap or discontinuance, from whence a Plain extends it self of about twenty Leagues in circuit. It is inhabited by Jews only, who are Silk-Weavers. In these Mountains you met with Tents, where the Chaldeans sojourn, that come for cool Air and Pasturage in the Summer.

Coming to Schiras, I took Horse there for Ispahan, which I arriv'd in nine days. The Country over which you travel, between these two Cities, is part Plains, part Mountains; part wild, and part manur'd. Three days journey from Schiras you pass the Mountain of Mayen, a little City where there is nothing worthy observation. Two days journey from thence you enter upon the Plains of the Province of Cuscazar, where the King of Persia keeps his Race-Horses. The next day I arriv'd at Yesdecas, where the best Bread in Persia is made. This is a little City upon a Rock, wherein there is a very fair Inn: at the foot whereof runs a little River that glides into the Valley, wherein grows that excellent Corn which is utter'd in Bread from that City.

In three days I went from Yesdecas to Ispahan. This was the first Road from Aleppo to Ispahan.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Road from Aleppo to Ispahan, through Mesopotamia and Assyria, which I travell'd in my third Voyage to the Indies.

I Departed from Paris in my third Voyage to the Indies upon the sixth of December 1643, and went to Ligorn, where I found the Dutch Fleet ready to set Sail for the Levant. The Vessel wherein I embark'd seeming rather a Man-of-War than a Merchant-Man. We pass'd through the Chanel of Messina, and lay there at an Anchor four days before the City. From thence passing by the Morea, we enter'd into the Archipelago, where the Fleet parted, according as every Ship was bound. Our Ship sayl'd directly for the Port of Alexandretta, but though the Wind were favourable, we were stop'd for some time by a Pirate that met with us off the Eastern Point of Candy. We endeavour'd to have got clear of him; but the Pirate gaining upon us, we made ready. Thereupon the Pirate gave us three Broad-sides, that went over the Ship without doing us any harm: which we answer'd by as many from our Ship, the first whereof brought his Fore-mast by the Board; and the third Shot went through the Fore-castle and kill'd him some Men, as far as we could discern. At that very instant one of our Mariners cry'd out from the Top-mast-head, A Sail from the South. Thereupon the Pirate left us, and made Sail after her: and we, glad of such an escape, pursu'd our Voyage to Alexandretta, where we happily arriv'd; from whence I took Horse for Aleppo, as I have already describ'd.

The sixth of March I departed from Aleppo in the company of two Capuchin Friars, Father Raphael and Father Yves, and the Venetian whose name was Dominico de Sanctis.

From Aleppo to Bir, where you cross the Euphrates, it is four days journey for the Horse-Caravan. The Country is well wooded, and well manur'd.

The seventh of March the great Rains that fell hinder'd us from getting to the usual Stage, so that we could not gain Telbechar, another Town, where there is no Inn: which constrain'd us to stop a League on this side, and to go to a Cave that was able to contain three hundred Horse. This is a Cave where the Bedonins or Feeders of Gattel thereabouts oft retire, who live after the manner of the Arabs, either in Rocks or in poor Huts. The Cave has been hollow'd from time to time, there being several Niches in it like little Chambers. Our Caravan-Bashi fearing some some Ambuscade, rode thither before to view the place, but finding it empty and free, we rested there that night, and the next night came to lye at Mezara, which is only a small Village without an Inn: Neither was there any thing remarkable upon that Road. Only that near the Cave, in the Mountain, there is very good Water: And formerly upon the Mountain stood a Castle, of which some ruines are still remaining. From the top of the Mountain there is a fair Prospect as far as you can see, over very fair Plains on every side, and in several places very good Land, water'd by divers Channels which are brought from the River Euphrates. All the Rivolets also that you cros from Aleppo to Bir come from the same River.

The fourth day after we parted from Aleppo, being the ninth of March, we came to the banks of Euphrates. Bir is on the other side of the River; and because that sometimes the Goods cannot be unladen all in a day; there is a fair and large Inn, to defend the Merchants from the Bedouins, which would else disturb and rob them, were not they and their Goods in that manner secur'd.

You cros the Euphrates in large Ferry Boats, and as soon as you are got over the other side of the River, the Customer and his Officers comes and tells the Bales, and writes down the names of the Merchants to whom they belong. The Caravan does not lye in the Town, which is built like an Amphitheatre upon the brow of a very craggy Mountain, but passes forward over a scurvy Road to an Inn upon the top of the Mountain. Near the Inn there are several Chambers cut out of the Rock, where they that cannot get room in the Inn are forc'd to lye. That Evening the Custom-Officer comes to receive his duties, being two Piasters upon every load of Goods, whether upon Horse or Mule, though the Mules carry more than the Horses; and half a Piafter for every Beast that carries Provisions. But for Saddle Horses or Mules there is nothing demanded.

The Bir, or Berygeon, as the Natives call it, is a large City for an Eastern City, situated upon the brow of a Hill. Below upon the River stands a Castle that declares its Antiquity; it is half as long as the City, but narrow, and without any other Fortification, saving only a Tower that scours the River, in which there are eight or nine pitiful Culverins. In the highest part of the Town stands another Castle where the Governour resides, who is an Aga, whom some call a Basha, having under him two hundred Janisaries, and four hundred Spahi's. The City is ill built, as are the most part of the Cities of Turkie: But there are an extraordinary plenty of all things, excellent Bread, good Wine, and great store of the best sort of Fish.

The tenth day after we had travel'd elev'n hours in the first Lands of Mesopotamia, that lye between the two Rivers Euphrates and Tigre, which at present they call Diarbek, we came in the evening to Sharmley. This is a very good Town, with a fair Inn, and Baths round about it. About twice Musquet-Shot from thence, stands a Mountain alone by it self, like Montmartre near Paris: Round about it are Plains, and at the top of it stands a Fortress, with a Garrison of two hundred Spahi's, by reason that the Arabs sometimes cros Euphrates, and make incursions upon that side. In the year 1631, the Grand Visier returning from Bagdat, where he had lost the greatest part of the Grand Signor's Army, not being able to take the City; fearing the loss of his head if he return'd to Constantinople, and knowing himself to be in great esteem among the Souldiers, resolv'd to quarter himself upon this Mountain, and to erect a Fortress to secure himself from the tempest that threaten'd him. No doubt but if he could have brought about his design, he might have made himself Master of all Mesopotamia, and would have put the Grand Signor to a great deal of trouble. For if you intend for Aleppo, whether it be from Tauris, Mossul, or Bagdat, unless you travel thorough the Desert, you must pass through Sharmley, under the command of this Fortress, for Provision and Waters sake. The work was gone so far forward, that there was a good defence rais'd, and the Visier had already enclos'd all the Mountain together with the Inn, with a Wall almost twenty foot thick, and three fathom high, when he was strangl'd by those in whom he most confided, the Grand Signor having gain'd them either by threats or by rewards.

The eleventh, after a Journey of ten hours we came to Ourfa, where the Caravan usually stays eight or ten days; for here it is that they live that hire the Horses and the Mules, who have always some business in this place. We lay at an Inn three or four hundred paces distant from the City toward the North. When the Inn is full, the rest retire into the Grotto's which are near at hand, and are very good quarters. Here the Toll-gatherer presently comes and counts the Bales without op'ning them. They that carry any Sacks must pay for half a Load; if not, he op'ns the Sack to see if there be any Merchandise therein, for then the Merchant must pay the whole duty.

Ourfa is the Capital City of Mesopotamia, built as they say, in the same place where Abraham liv'd, and where stood the ancient Edeffa, where the people of the Country report, that King Abagarus generally kept his Court. There are still to be seen the ruins of a Castle; from whence they add, that the same King sent to CHRIST for his Picture, and offer'd him his Kingdom and his people to defend him against the Jews; whom he understood to be his Enemies. The Chronicles of the Armenians report, that Abagarus was their Country-man, and that in his Reign they began to be Christians, and to be Baptiz'd by the hands of an Apostle, whom CHRIST sent to that Prince after his Resurrection. Neither is this Castle yet so far ruin'd, but that there is still to be seen a spacious Hall, and three or four handsome Rooms with some relicks of Mosaick work. I was curious to see what ever was remarkable in this City. And first they led me to a large Fountain which resembles a Fish-pond, the Spring whereof is under the Foundations of the principal Mosquee, which was built in honour of Abraham. The Christians of the Country say, that it was in that place where he pray'd, before he went about to Sacrifice his Son Isaac, and that two Springs of Water arose from the two places where he rested his knees, which now feed the large Fountain I have made mention of. It is pav'd with Freestone, and so full of Fish, that if you throw them in a little Bread, they will follow you from place to place as you walk by the side of the Pond. There is no meddling with them; for the Turks have a great veneration for those Fish, which they call Abraham's Fish. Besides that, the place about the Fountain where the water wid'ns it self to water all the City, is cover'd with very fair Carpets, for about twenty paces in breadth. This Fountain at length falls into a little River that runs by the Walls. As for the Grotto where the two Springs rise, there is no going into it before you have pull'd off your Shooes, and it is a great favour for a Christian to see it; such a favour as cost me six Piasters. I also saw the Church, under the portal whereof, they say, St. Alexis liv'd seventeen years a private life. It stands in the middle of a Church-yard, in the highest part of the Town, in the possession of the Armenians. But their principal Church is about a quarter of an hour's walking from the City, built by St. Ephren, who is there buried. The Monastery stands yet entire, enclos'd with fair Walls. In the Church I saw a large Bible in Armenian Characters. The Sepulchre of St. Ephren is in a Cave at the foot of the Mountain, to which there also belongs a Chappel, where they keep three or four Lamps continually burning. There are other Grotto's up and down the Mountain, where are to be seen very ancient Sepulchers of the Christians. The City of Ourfa is seated in a good soil, very well manur'd, which extends it self out of sight toward the East. There are several pleasant Gardens near the walls, water'd by little Channels brought thither by Art. The soil produces good Wine, so that a man may live as well at Ourfa, as in any part of Turkie. While I stay'd there, I kill'd abundance of Feldsares in those Gardens; and indeed there is great store of wild Fowl all the Country over. The Walls of the City are of Freestone, with Battlements and Towers; but within, the houses are small, ill built, and ruinous: And there are several void spaces in the City, which makes Ourfa to look rather like a Desert than a Metropolis. The City is Govern'd by a Basha, who has under him a hundred and fifty Janisaries, and six hundred Spahis, standing more in need of Cavalry than Infantry, by reason of the Incursions of the Arabians, especially in harvest time. In short, Ourfa is the place where they dress such great quantities of Cordovan Skins, by reason of the waters particular to the Country, which give them that peculiar beauty. The Yellow Skins are dress'd at Ourfa, the Blew at Tocat, and the Red at Diarbequir.

The twentieth of March, we set out of Ourfa, and after a Journey of six hours, we lay at a piteous Village where the Inn was fall'n all to decay. There is a Fountain of excellent water by it, which is all the convenience of the place, for there is no Provision to be had.

The

The twenty-first we travel'd nine hours, and came to lye near several Caverns which are very deep; at the entry whereof there are little Rooms, which are suppos'd to be the places where the People of the Country liv'd that fed their Cattel thereabouts. There is also Rain-Water to be had in some of the Concavities of the Rock. Half this days journey you must pass over Rocks, where it is almost impossible, and very dangerous to keep your Horses back.

The twenty-second, having travel'd elev'n hours, we lodg'd near a Cavern, having forded a River that runs at the foot of it. There are two great Grotto's on each side, where Travellers take up their Quarters, and whither the Natives of the Country bring Provisions both for Horse and Man. The Toll-gatherers, coming from a Fort about three Leagues distant from these Caverns, here exact two Piasters and a half for every Horse and Mules Load; and search your Sacks, to see if there be no Merchantable Goods therein. About half the way of this days journey you meet with a City quite deserted by the Inhabitants; and about an hours march after that, with Tombs of Stone, in the middle whereof stands a Cross, with Armenian Characters.

The twenty-third we travel'd elev'n hours, and lay at Dadacardin. This appears to have been a great Town, but is all ruin'd: nor is there any thing remaining but a long Stone-Bridge very well built, under which runs a River that is very broad when it overflows. The People of the Country have no other Habitations than the Hollows of Rocks; yet they bring to the Travellers Hens, Butter, Cheefe, and other Provisions; which they sell very cheap.

The twenty-fourth we travel'd nine hours, and lay at a place call'd Cara, built upon a Hill. The Caravan lay at the Inn; but the two Capuchins and I lay at a private Christian's House, who carry'd us to the Church, where was then the Ver-rabes or Bishop of Merdin. It was a pitiful poor Church, where they had nothing but two Planks supported with four Sticks instead of an Altar. They dare not leave any Furniture in it, but as soon as the Priest has said Service, he must have a care to take away every thing, as well the Planks as the Covering of the Altar, which was only a Painted Cloth: For the Turks that travel that way, if it be foul weather, will break open the Door, put their Horses there, burn the Altar, and take away whatever they find.

In the Village where we lay, there was a Pond, the sides whereof were surrounded with fair Free-stones, which were fetch'd from the Christian Churches, and the Tombs of the Christians thereabouts. Among the rest, there was one very large Stone, with an Epitaph upon it in large Latin Letters; whereby we knew it to be the Tomb-stone of a Norman Gentleman, who had been a Captain of Foot. The Bishop inform'd us, that it is recorded in the Armenian Stories, that the French were a long time in this Country, at what time the Christians were Masters of Syria. This Country is all a large Plain, about twenty Leagues in length; which might be well manur'd, and make the Inhabitants rich, did not the Tyranny of the Turks, and the Incurfions of the Arabs, reduce them to the utmost degree of Poverty.

The twenty-fifth, after we had travel'd eight hours, we lay at a Village call'd Cousasar, where there was no Inn. There were formerly three great Monasteries, a quarter of a League one from the other. The Turks have ruin'd two, all but the Steeples of the Churches that belong'd to them. The third, which stands all entire, and is the fairest Pile of Building, serves for a Mosquee. They have made Shops round about the Cloysters, in the middle of which is a fair Spring of Water.

The twenty-seventh we lay still at Cousasar, being the place where you must pay the Customs of Diarbequir, which is not above two days journey off, amounting to two Piasters and a fourth part, for every Load of Merchants Goods.

Merdin is not above two Leagues from Cousasar. This is a little City seated upon a Mountain, with good Walls, and a fair Fountain replenish'd from the Castle; which stands upon the North-side, in a place yet higher, that commands the City; where there lives a Basha, who has under him two hundred Spahis, and four hundred Fanizaries. Merdin is the place where was born the Lady Maani Gioerida, the first Wife of Pietro de la Valle, so well known for his famous Travels.

As for Cousasar, which is a large Village, it is inhabited for the most part by Armenian Christians and Nestorians. The Armenians perform Divine Service in their own Language; the Nestorians in the Chaldaic. The latter shew'd me two Bibles in a large Volume, in the same Language, writt'n in Vellum, all the Capital Letters being in Gold and Azure. They seem'd to be very old; and one of their Priests told me, that it is 937 years ago since one of them was writt'n; the other not above 374 since. When Service is done, they put them in a Chest, and hide them under Ground. I would have giv'n 200 Piasters for the oldest, but they durst not sell it, in regard it belong'd to the Church, and was not at their disposal.

The twenty-seventh, after we had travel'd nine hours, we arriv'd at Karasara, which had been formerly a great Town, and no doubt inhabited by Christians; as appears by seven or eight Churches half ruin'd, though the Steeples are little the worse. They stand at a good distance one from the other; and upon the North-side of one of those Churches there is a Gallery, at the end whereof, through a little Door you descend about a hundred Steps, every Step being ten Inches thick. When you come under the Church, you meet with a larger and bigger Vault, supported with Pillars. The Building is so contriv'd, that there is more light below than in that above; but of late years the Earth has stop'd up several Windows. The great Altar is in the Rock; on the right side whereof is a Room, which receives the light from several Windows contriv'd in the Rock. Over the Gate of the Church was a great Free-stone, wherein were certain Letters that I could not read. On the North-side of the same Church under Ground are to be seen two great Cisterns, each four hundred and fifty Paces long; with two great Arches, sustain'd with several Pillars. Every year they fill them with the Water that falls from the next Mountain, and makes a kind of a River. A quarter of a League from the Church, you descend the Mountain for above a hundred Paces together among the Rocks; on each side whereof are Rooms cut out of the Rock. Upon every Door there is a Cross; and in every Room as it were a Bench, and a Table, with a little place about the length of a Man, like a Bedsted, all cut out of the Rock. At the bottom of the Rock is a Hall, round about the Wall whereof is a Bench to sit on. The Roof is all plain, without any Arch; in the middle whereof there is a Hole to the top of the Mountain: but in regard it gives no light, 'tis very probable 'twas only made to let out the Smoak when they dress their Meat; or else to let in the fresh Air, as I have seen in many Villages upon the Persian Gulf. Upon the highest of those Mountains stands a paltry Village, where they buy their Victuals. But before the Caravan arrives, certain Merchants ride before to inform themselves from the Herdsmen, whether they know of any Thieves in the Grotto's, that often hide themselves there in expectation of Prey.

In the year 1638, Sultan Amurat going to besiege Babylon, march'd this very way; as well to see these Ruines, as to give order for the demolishing a Fort that stood not above two Leagues off of Karasara, which the Thieves of the Country made their place of retreat. He also at the same time caus'd the Road to be clear'd for four days journey, by ord'ring the Stones to be pickt up and laid in heaps, all along the Road. He also built a Bridge over the River. And indeed, that March of the Grand Signor was very advantageous to all Travellers that pass this way.

The twenty-eight we travel'd eight hours, and came to Nesbin, anciently Nisibis. Two or three hours travel on this side, near the Road, is a kind of Hermitage; being a small Room enclos'd with Walls, the Door whereof is so low, that a Man must creep upon his Belly to get in. Three or four Jews went and perform'd their Devotions at this Hermitage, believing it to be the place where the Prophet Elisba was buried.

The Country from Consasar to Nesbin is a large Plain, where for the first days journey you shall see no other green Herb upon the Ground but only Pimpernel; the Roots whereof are so large, that there are some a Foot and a half in diameter. The next day, the Fields are cover'd with a large thick Leaf, the Root whereof is bulbous, and as big as an Egg. There are also great store of yellow, red, and violet Flowers, Tulips of several colours, Emonies, and single Daffadillies. But in general Mesopotamia is a very barren Country, and there are very few places that can be better'd by Art or Industry.

Nesbin is only the Shadow of the ancient Nisibis, being now only a large Village; the Inhabitants whereof are Christians, both Armenians and Nestorians. Our Caravan lodg'd a little beyond, in a Church-yard adjoining to one of the Armenian Churches. The next day, hearing people sing, I went to the Church with the two Capuchins, Capuchins, where I saw an Armenian Bishop, with his Miter, and a wooden Crozier, accompany'd with several Priests and a good Congregation. When Service was done, after some few Compliments between us, he led us down under the Church into a Chapel, where he shew'd us the Sepulcher of St. James Bishop of Nisibis. In the Church yard is a Stone about a Foot thick, and six high; upon which were laid several Candles of Wax and Tallow, which the Poor offer in their Necessities, but especially in their Sickneses. They believe that Stone to have been the Pedestal for the Statue of some Saint, which the Turks have defac'd: so that they give the same Honour to the Pedestal, as they would have giv'n to the Statue. There are also some Roman Characters to be seen, but half worn out, and spaces brok'n off in some parts: so that I could not learn, in Honour of whom that Statue was erected. Half a League from Nisibin runs a River, which you cross over a Stone-Bridge. In the way to the River are several pieces of Wall, with an Arch, which made me conjecture, that formerly the City extended as far as the River.

Twice Musket-shot from the River you meet with a Stone half buried, upon which are written certain Latin Words; whereby it appears that it was the Tomb-stone of the General of an Army that was a French-man: but I could not read his Name, which time had defac'd. The same Bishop inform'd us, that formerly the Moors having besieg'd City, there came such a prodigious company of strange Flyes, and did so torment both Men and Horses, that they were forc'd to strange the Siege. You must pay the same Toll at Nisibin as in other places, that is, two Piasters and a half for every Mule or Horses Load. We lay there three days together, to furnish our selves with Provisions 'till we came to Moussul, which is five days journey from Nisibin; the Country between being altogether desert and uninhabited. There is no Water to be found but in two places, and that not very good neither; near to which you shall see some few Herdsmen grazing their Cattel.

The first of April we departed from Nisibin; and after we had travel'd eleven hours, we lay near to a River, whither certain Shepherds brought us Hens to sell.

The second we travel'd ten hours, and lay at a paltry Town, where we met with nothing to eat.

The third we travel'd thirteen hours, and lodg'd by a pitiful Fountain, the Water whereof was hardly good enough for our Horses.

The fourth we travel'd ten hours, and came to lodge by the Bank of a little River, near to which appear'd the Ruines of a Bridge and a Castle.

The fifth we travel'd eleven hours, to reach Moussul, which is not far from the ancient Niniveh.

Moussul is a City that makes a great shew without, the Walls being of Free-stone; but within it is almost all, ruin'd having only two blind Market-places, with a little Castle upon the Tigris, where the Basha lives. In a word, there is nothing worth a Man's sight in Moussul, the place being only considerable for the great concourse of Merchants; especially the Arabians and Curds, which are the Inhabitants of the ancient Affyria, now call'd Curdistán, where there grows great plenty of Galls, and for which there is a great Trade. There are in it four sorts of Christians, Greeks, Armenians, Nestorians, and Maronites. The Capuchins had a pretty Dwelling upon the Tigris; but the Basha laying a Fine upon them, because they went about a little to enlarge it, they were forc'd to quit it. The City is govern'd by a Basha, that has under him, part Janizaries, part Spahis, about three thousand Men.

There are only two scurvy Inns in Moussul, which being full when we came, I caus'd my Tent to be set up at the Meydan, or great Market-place.

Now to say something in general of the difference of the two Rivers, Tigris and Euphrates, in reference to their Course and Waters: I observ'd that the Water of Euphrates appear'd somewhat red; and that the Stream was not so swift as that of Tigris, which seem'd to be whitish, like the Loire. As for its Course, Euphrates runs a far longer way than Tigris. But now let us cross the Tigris, over a Bridge of Boats, to view the sad Ruines of a City that has made such a noise in the World; though there be now scarce any appearance of its ancient splendour.

Niniveh was built upon the left Shoar of the Tigris, upon Affyria-side, being now only a heap of Rubbish extending almost a League along the River. There are abundance abundance of Vaults and Caverns uninhabited; nor could a man well conjecture whether they were the ancient Habitations of the people, or whether any houses had been built upon them in former times; for most of the houses in Turkie are like Cellars, or else but one Story high. Half a League from Tigris stands a little Hill encompass'd with Houses, on the top whereof is built a Mosquée. The people of the Country say 'twas the place where Jonas was bury'd; and for that place they have so great a veneration, that no Christians are suffer'd to enter into it, but privately, and for Money. By that means I got in with two Capuchin Fryars; but we were forc'd to put off our Shooes first. In the middle of the Mosquée stood a Sepulchre, cover'd with a Persian Carpet of Silk and Silver, and at the four corners, great Copper Candlesticks with Wax Tapers, besides several Lamps and Ostridge-Shells that hung down from the Roof. We saw a great number of Moores without, and within sat two Dervi's reading the Alcoran.

About a Musket-Shot from Moussul toward the North-East, stands a great Ruin'd Monastery, enclos'd with high Walls, the greatest part whereof is still to be seen.

We stay'd ten days at Moussul, and having provided all things ready for the rest of our Journey, we set forward for Ispahan.

CHAP. V.

A Continuation of the Road from Nineveh to Ispahan: Together with the Story of an Ambassador, call'd Dominico de Santis.

HAVING pass'd the Tigris, we stay'd three quarters of an hours Journey from Nineveh for some Merchants that were to go along with the Caravan. The way which we took was not the usual Road to Persia; but it was a way wherein there were less Duties to be paid; and besides, it was a short cut, the Caravan making but fifty eight days Journey between Aleppo and Ispahan. From the very banks of the River to the place where we Lodg'd that Evening, we saw nothing but continu'd Ruines, which makes me believe, it was the place where the ancient Nineveh stood.

We staid two days near the Mosquée, where according to the tradition of the Turk, Jonas was bury'd, and made choice of a Curd, or Assyrian, for our Caravan-Bashi, though the people are generally Thieves, and must be carefully look'd after. But it was a piece of Policy, because we were to cross the ancient Assyria, now call'd Curdistan; the Language of which Country is a particular Speech.

In the two first days Journey we cross'd two small Rivers that fall from the Mountains, and empty themselves into Tigris. Our first Journey was through a plain Country all along by the side of a little River; and the second Evening we lodg'd by the side of a great River that falls from the Mountains toward the North, and running to the South, discharges it self into Tigris. It is call'd Bohrus, being a very rapid Stream, full of Fish, but more especially excellent Trouts. The Caravan was two days passing that River, by reason there were no Boats. For the people are forc'd to tie long Perches four five together one upon another, which the Natives call a Kilet. They make it four-square, and put underneath it about a hundred Goat-Skins full of wind, to the end the Kilet may not touch the water. Besides the Merchant must be careful to spread good store of thick Felts over the Kilet, of which he must be provided to keep off the Water, lest the Bales that sink the Kilet should take wet. At the four corners are four Perches that serve for Oars, though they avail but little against the force of the Tide; so that you must be forc'd to hale the Kilet four or five hundred Paces a this side up the River, and then row down the Stream to the place where you intend to Land the Goods. When the Goods are Landed, the men are forc'd again to draw the Kilet by main strength out of the water, to take away the Goat-Skins which are then to be lad'n upon the Mules appointed to carry them. As for the Horses, Mules, and Asses, as well those that carri'd the the Goods, as those upon which the men ride; so soon as the Herd men thereabout see a Caravan coming, they flock to the River-side. Those people that wear nothing but a coarse piece of Linen or a Goat-skin to cover their nakedness, take off their Cloaths and wind them about their Heads, like a Turbant. Then every one tyes a Goat-skin blow'd up under his Stomach; and then two or three of the most expert mounting the same number of the best Horses, which are bridl'd, put themselves first into the Water, while others follow them swimming, and drive the Horses before them; holding the Beast by the Tail with one hand, and switching him with the other. If they find any Horse or Ass that is too weak, they tye a Goat-skin under his Belly to help him. Considering which difficulties, it cannot take up less time than I have mention'd to get over a Caravan of five or six hundred Horses.

The Caravan being thus got over, for two or three days has but a very bad Road. The first days journey the Horses were continually in the Water up to the mid-leg; and the second, and part of the third we travel'd through a very desert Country, where we met with very little food for our Horses, and only a few Brakes to boyl our Rice. Having got over this bad way, we came to a River call'd the great Zarbe, over which we pass'd upon a Stone-Bridge of nine Arches. They report that this Bridge was built by Alexander the Great, in his March against Darius. A quarter of a League to the South-East, two Rivers meet, which empty themselves into Tigris. Leaving the Bridge, we came to a Town call'd Sherazoul, built upon a rising Ground, upon three Redoubts. There resides a Basha, who must be brib'd with a small Present to let the Caravan pass; we lay by the Banks of a River, and staid there two days. From thence we travel'd one days journey over dry Mountains, not finding any Water. But the next day we came into a pleasant Plain, stor'd with Fruit-trees. This was the Plain of Arbele, where Alexander defeated Darius; containing about fifteen Leagues in all. It is water'd with several Rivulets, and in the middle of the Mountain rises a little Hill about half a League in circuit. It is all over cover'd with the fairest Oaks that ever were seen; and on the top are the Ruines of a Castle, that seems to have been a sumptuous Structure. The Country-people say that Darius staid there while his Captains gave Battel to Alexander. Three Leagues from thence, near a great Mountain toward the North, are to be seen the Ruines of another Castle and several Houses, where they add, that Darius secur'd some of his Wives when he lost the Battel. This Castle is seated in a most lovely Prospect. At the foot of the Mountain rises a Spring, which a quarter of a League off swells into a River that bears good big Boats. It runs winding about the Mountains to the Southward; so that two days journey from the Hill, you cross it near a Town call'd Sherazoul, over a fair Stone-Bridge of nine Arches, whereof the Great Shah Ahas caus'd three to be brok'n down after he had tak'n Bagdat.

This City of Sherazoul is built after another manner than any other of the Cities in those parts, being all cut out of a steep Rock for a quarter of a League together; so that you must go up to the Houses by Stairs of fifteen, or twenty steps, sometimes more, sometimes less according to the situation of the place. The people have no other Doors to their Houses than only a thin round Stone, like a Mill stone, which they will roll away when they go in or out, the sides of the Wall being so cut as to receive the Stone like a Case, being level with the Rock.

The tops of their Houses are like Niches in the Mountain, where the Inhabitants have contriv'd Caves to keep their Cattel in: So that we judg'd it to be built for a place of safety to secure the Inhabitants from the Incursions of the Arabians and Bedouins of Mesopotamia.

We came to Sherazoul upon Easter-Eve, and staid there three days to refresh our selves, after a Lent which we had kept very sparingly. Here I found certain Springs that rose up in large Bubbles, which after I had mix'd with two Glasses of Wine and drank up, I found to have a Purgative quality, having a kind of Mineral tast. These Springs boyl up near the side of a River call'd Alun-sou, or, The River of Gold, that falls into the River Tigris, three days journey on this side Bagdat.

The next day we lay at a pitiful Town, upon the Frontiers of Turkie and Persia.

The next day, being the fifth after we set out from Nineveh, we pass'd over several Fens and hot Waters, that part the two Empires. Entering thus into Persia, we met with a high Mountain cover'd with fair Oaks, which bear the Gall-Nuts, so high, that the Caravan was some hours ere it could get to the top. As we ascended, but especially when we were up, we heard several Muskets go off. At first we thought the people had been hunting the wild Boars or Stags, of which the Mountains are full: but the report of the Guns, being too loud and too thick for Hunters, we stood upon our guard; and I believe we should have mended our paces, had we known what was intended us. Besides, I remember'd that the Country people would not sell any thing but for Powder and Bullet, which the Caravan-Bashi advis'd me not to let them have, for fear they should make use of it against our selves. From the Mountain we descended into a fertile Plain, water'd with several Rivers; and night approaching, we set up our Tents, not fearing any thing, because we were in the Dominions of the King of Persia, where there is so much security in travelling. After that we sent our Servants to the Tents of the Country-men, but they brought us nothing but Bread made of Acorns, than which the poor people thereabouts eat no other. This Acorn is about the bigness of our Nuts; and once I met with a Branch that had thirty Acorns, and twenty-three Gall-Nuts, all at one time growing upon it.

The Province which we travel'd through then, compos'd the greatest part of the ancient Assyria. But now to come to the Story of Dominico de Santis the Venetian. He had Letters of Credence from the Pope, the Emperour, the King of Poland, and the Republick of Venice, to the King of Persia; and he went in the Caravan through the Grand Signor's Territories, never discovering himself who he was; but coming into Persia, he took upon him without fear the Title of Ambassador from the Commonwealth of Venice.

From the Plain where we lodg'd, it is two days journey to a good big Town, to which belongs a Fortrefs, where the Governour of the Province has a Lieutenant, with about two thousand Horse under his Command. The Fortrefs is upon the right hand toward the South, after three hours riding upon the High-way. To this Lieutenant, the Caravan-Bashi was according to duty bound to give notice of the Arrival of the Caravan, and an account of the Persons and their Merchandize. This Venetian was a person ill fitted for the quality of an Ambassador, being a person of no Parts; which made me wonder that such great Princes, and so wise a Commonwealth, should send such a person upon a Concern of that importance. For the Grand Signor then assailing Candy, he was sent to excite the King of Persia to engage him in a War against the Turk, thereby to keep off the Storm that threaten'd Christendom. Thereupon I told the Ambassador, that it was necessary for him to give the Commander of the Fort first notice of his coming, to the end he might give advice thereof to Solyman-Kan Governour of the Province, whose duty it was to advertise the King. Thereupon he requested me to send my Interpreter, which I did. Upon whose intelligence the Lieutenant of the Fort came to Compliment the Ambassador on the behalf of the chief Commander, and to conduct him to the Castle.

Thereupon the Ambassador, my self, and my Interpreter, together with some Armenian Merchants went with him, travelling for three hours over the Mountains. By that time we came half the way, as we pass'd through a Wood, we heard as it were some person give a Whistle; at which when the Lieutenant perceiv'd us to be somewhat startl'd, he carry'd us to the place from whence the Whistle came, where we saw a Serpent about as big as a Man's Thigh, and about twelve Foot long, whose head was squeez'd between two Trees, that put him to pain. From that Mountain we descended into a pleasant Plain, where the Commander of the Fortrefs staid for us under his Tent. He had set it up by the side of a River, under the shade of several great Walnut-trees. So soon as he saw us, he rose from his great Silk Tapestry Coverlet, and saluted us in a most civil manner, telling us, that assuredly Sha-Abas, his Master, would be very glad to hear that the Monarchs of Christendom had sent him an Ambassador, and that he would write to Solyman Kan, whose duty it was to advertise the Emperour. Thereupon he wrote and dispatch'd away a Messenger, giving him order to tell the Deroga, or Judge of the Town, through which we were to pass, that he should make Provision for us and our Horses till we came to the Governour. After he had ask'd us several Questions concerning concerning the War between the Grand Signor and the Venetians, how many thousand men he had as well by Sea as Land, and what number of Gallies and Ships? wherein we satisfy'd him according to the best of our knowledge. After he had civilly treated us, he sent his Lieutenant back with us again to the Caravan. About ten a Clock the next night we dislodg'd, and the Lieutenant and six Souldiers attended upon us; who told us he had order not to leave us, 'till he had brought us to Solyman Kan.

The next night we lodg'd between two Hills, among several Tents of Herdsmen. Here it was that the Commander had order'd that we should be treat'd by the Deroga. A Deroga, as I have said, is the Judge of a Village: But this Deroga was chief of many Families, some of which were of Mesopotamia, others of Arabia. These are all Herdsmen that never live in Houses, but retire with their Cattle to the holes in the Rocks, where partly Nature, partly Art, have contributed to make them convenient Habitations.

So soon as we were alighted, four ancient men came and led the Ambassador and my self to the Deroga's Tent. It seem'd to consist of many Rooms, with a Hall in the middle, spread with Persian Carpets. He caus'd us to sit down upon Cushions, and then presented us with a Pipe of Tobacco, and Water to wash our Feet. After he had nobly treated us, and that we were upon taking our leaves, the Deroga was very much troubl'd that we had made a small Present to his Son; telling us, that it was a crime for him to take any thing of the King's Guests, especially from Strangers that had come so long a Journey.

The next day we lodg'd in a place where there was such a prodigious quantity of Lillies that the Ground was almost cover'd with them. There were none that were white, being for the most part of a fair Violet colour, with a streak of Red in the middle of every leaf; they are like our Lillies, but much bigger. And to drink the infusion of the Roots of these Lillies, especially those whose Leaves are blackest, for fifteen days together, is a most Sovereign remedy against the Pox. Not long after came a Person of a goodly Aspect, who seem'd to be an Arabian, but he spoke the Persian Language, whom Solyman Kan had sent to Compliment the Ambassador. He carry'd us to the Tent which the Governour had caus'd to be set up in a Garden near the Town, where he also Lodg'd the Capuchins. The Ambassador also sent to Compliment the Kan by my interpreter; and when the hour was come that we were to set forward, he gave order to six of the Captains of his Cavalry to accompany the Ambassador. The House where the Governour liv'd in, was one of the most beautiful in Persia. And as for the Governour himself, we found him in a Gallery that look'd upon the Garden, the Floor being all spread over with Tapestry of Gold and Silk, with large Cushions of Cloth of Gold all along the Wall. After some Questions and discourse concerning the Affairs of Europe, they serv'd in Supper, which consisted of several Dishes; but no Wine was to be had; our drink being only Sherbet and the juice of Granates, with Sugar for those that desir'd it. We were a long time at Supper, for 'tis the custom of Persia that when one man rises, another takes his place and falls too, in so much that the Master of the Feast must have the Patience to stay 'till several have tak'n their turns; and when every one has done, the Cloth is tak'n away without any more to do. Here the Ambassador committed an absurdity; for there are no Silver or Gold Spoons in Persia, but only long Wooden Ladles that reach a great way. Now the Ambassador reaching his Ladle to a Purslane-Dish full of Pottage that was scalding hot, clap'd it presently into his mouth; but finding it so hot that he could not endure it, after several scurvy faces, he threw it out of his mouth again into his hand, in the presence of all the Company.

After we had stay'd five days at Sneirne, the Caravan-Bashi signifi'd his desire to pursue his Journey. Thereupon the Ambassador took his leave of the Governour, presenting him with a Watch and a pair of Pistols; who in retaliation presented the Ambassador with a stately Horse, and a Colt of two years old. The next day we dislodg'd, and pursu'd our Road to Amadan, which is not above three days Journey from Sneirne.

Amadan is one of the largest and most considerable Cities of Persia, seated at the foot of a Mountain, where do arise an infinite company of Springs that do water all the Country. The Land about it abounds in Corn and Rice, wherewith it furnishes the greatest part of the neighbouring Provinces. Which is the reason that some of the Persian Statesmen hold it very inconvenient for the King of Persia to keep Bagdat, as well by reason of the vastness of the Charge, as also for that it draws from Amadan that which should supply other Provinces. On the other side, it is easie for the Grand Signor to hold it, by reason of the neighbourhood of Mesopotamia, Assyria, and the Arabs, Enemies to the Persians: by which means Provisions are very cheap, which the people would not know where to put off, if the King of Persia were Lord of Bagdat.

We staid at Amadan about ten days, by reason of the Rains; during which time the Caravans cannot travel. While we tarry'd there, we were visited by several Babylonian Christians, who were glad to see that we had escap'd the Clutches of the Basha of Bagdat, who had giv'n order to the Basha of Karkou, and the Bey of Sharaffou that commands the Frontiers of Turkie, to seize us, and carry us back to Bagdat. For which we might have thank'd the Ambassador, and a malicious Rabbi, that came along with us in the Caravan from Aleppo; who finding the Feast of the Tabernacles to be at hand, and that we had a great way to Ispahan, left us at Niniveh, to keep the Festival with the Jews of Babylon. Where that he might insinuate himself into the Basha's favour, he inform'd him that there was a Fringiz in the Caravan, whom he look'd upon as a Spy, and that he was an Envoy into Persia from the Commonwealth of Venice; for he carry'd no Merchandize, but had three Chests full of rich Habits, and several other things, which he took for Presents to the Persian King. For out of vanity or folly, the Venetian had several times open'd his Chest and expos'd his Gallantry to view. And yet he was so clutch-fisted and niggardly in every thing, that when there was any occasion to reward the Kan's Servant, or any of the Country-men that brought us the Dainties of the place, it came all out of my Pocket. So that I left him to my Interpreter and the two Capuchins, and with three Servants and a Guide, after I had staid at Amadan three days, I took Horse for Ispahan.

When I came there, the Nazar or Master of the King's Household hearing I had left an Ambassador behind me with the Caravan, enquir'd of me what manner of Person he was, but I pretended I had but little converse with him, unwilling to discover his mean Spirit. The Evening before his Arrival the Nazar sent to give the Fringiz notice in the King's Name, that they should be ready to go meet the Ambassador the next day; which we did, and brought him into the City and through Ali's Gate, that joyns to the King's Palace. Now 'tis the custom for all Ambassadours to salute that Gate, by reason of a white Marble Stone made like an Asses back, and which serves for a Step: being, as they report, brought anciently out of Arabia, where Ali liv'd. So soon as you have strid over that Stone without touching it, which were a great crime, you enter into a kind of a Gallery, where there are Rooms on each side, which serve for a Sanctuary for Criminals, which the King himself cannot fetch out of that place. That day that the new King receiveth his Ensigns of Royalty, he goes to stride over that Stone; and if by negligence he should chance to touch it, there are four Guards at the Gate, that would make a Jew of thrusting him back again.

But now the Master of the Ceremonies being ready to conduct the Ambassador to the Apartment allotted him, as an Ambassador that came from three great Monarchs, and a potent Commonwealth, he desir'd to lodge at the House of one Pietro Pentalet, descended from Venetian Parents; whereupon the Master of the Ceremonies conducted him thither, and caus'd his Dinner to be brought him. While we were eating, I counted thirteen Languages spoken at the Table; Latin, French, High-Dutch, English, Low-Dutch, Italian, Portuguez, Persian, Turkish, Arabic, Indian, Syriac, and Malaye, which is the Language of the Learned, that is spoken from the River Indus to China and Japan, and in all the Islands of the East, like Latin in Europe; not reck'ning the little Moresco or Gibbrish of the Country. So that it is a difficult thing to observe what is talk'd in one Company, where the Discourse begins in one Language, is pursu'd in another, and finish'd in a third: and for the Turks and Armenians, they never speak above three or four Languages at most.

Now to shew you the Civility of the Persians; the Master of the Ceremonies came to the Ambassador and told him, that if he did not like the Cookery of the Persians, he had Order from the Aremadoulet, who is as the Grand Vizier in Turkie, to offer him Money instead of Diet, to the end he might dress his own Meat as he pleas'd himself. Upon which the covetous Ambassadour accepted his offer, and two hours after there was a Bag brought him of 50 Tomans, which amount to about 800 Crowns. The Franks being offended at his baseness, slighted the Ambassador, and left him to keep House by himself, which was poor enough God knows; an Onion or a Turnep serving his turn for a Meal. Some days after, he had audience of the King, to whom he presented his Letters Credential from the Pope, the Emperour, the King of Poland, and the Commonwealth of Venice. Those from the three last were well receiv'd, because the Seals were of Gold, and for that the Paper was embelish'd with curious Flourishes: but the Pope's Letters were rejected with scorn, because the Seals were only of Lead, as the Bulls are usually seal'd; and for that the Writing was very plain. For the Kings of Persia, who are very nice, love things that are gay to the Eye; otherwise they look upon themselves to be affronted. Dominico de Santis had better have taken upon him the meaner quality of an Envoy, than the title of an Ambassador, unless he had known better how to behave himself; especially being so eclips'd as he was by a real Ambassador that arriv'd at Ispahan some time after. All the Franks went forth to meet him, and the Master of the Ceremonies made him the same proffers as he had done to the Venetian: but he nobly answer'd, That whatever it were that the King of Persia sent him, he should take it for a very great Honour: otherwise, if he would have eaten Gold, the King his Master would have allow'd him 30 Mules Load. Such persons as behave themselves with decency and a good grace, are the persons that the Christian Princes should send into Persia, who are the most refin'd Wits, and the best Politicians of all Asia.

Money

To conclude the Story of the Venetian, I will give you his Character. An Indian naturally of a good Wit having embrac'd Christianity and an Ecclesiastical Life, went to Rome to compleat his Studies which he had begun at Goa; whether, the Pope, taking an affection to him, sent him afterward as his Vicar. Dominico de Santis being then at Rome, put himself into his service, and follow'd him into the Indies, where I saw him the first time I went, in a mean condition. Upon his return to Venice, where he was in no credit before, he made people believe that he understood the Trade of Asia; whereupon some particular Merchants trusted him with some Goods, which were cast away at Scide. Thus poor and bare he return'd to Goa, where he got 800 Crowns by a charitable Contribution. From thence he travel'd to Ispahan, where he fell into the acquaintance of Father Rigordi a Jesuite, with whom he went into Poland: where making his brags of the great knowledge he had of the Affairs of Persia, the King gave him that Commission which I have already mention'd. The Emperour follow'd his Example, and the Commonwealth of Venice did the same: and to give the more lustre and authority to his Embassy, they got the Pope to joyn with them. But alas! both Dominico de Santis, and all such persons as he, that go into Asia without Brains and good Behaviour, do but prostitute the Reputation of the Princes that send them. Such another was Father Rigordi, who after he had been thrust out of Goa by the Portugals, went to Ispahan, where he insinuated himself by a Proposition which he made of Marrying the King of Persia, who was then a very young Prince, to the Dutchess of Orleanse. Under which pretence he was well receiv'd and treated by the King; from whom he also receiv'd some Presents by virtue of that Proposal, which was good sport to the Dutchess when she heard of it.

As for the Venetian, the Atemadoulet, who was very glad to be rid of him, desir'd the Muscovite Ambassador, who was then upon his return home, to take him along with him, which he did as far as the Caspian Sea, where they take Shipping for Astracan; but there the Muscovite told him he could carry him no further: thereupon he was forc'd to come back to Ispahan, and so to travel to Goa, whence the Portugals shipt him home for Charities sake. But when he came to Venice, he was so far from being well receiv'd, that the Senate had like to have punish'd him severely for giving so bad an account of his Negotiation.

C H A P. VI.

Of the Road which the Author kept, when he Travell'd the fourth time into Asia, to go from Paris to Ormus. And first of his Voyage from Marleilles to Alexandretta.

I Set out from Paris in the company of Monsieur d' Ardiliere the eighteenth of June, 1651. and arriv'd at Marseilles the sixteenth of July. On the twenty-sixth of August we set Sail, with a favourable North-West Wind that blew very briskly the two next days; but at length it grew so very slack, that coming about to the North North-East, we made for Sardinia. Upon the second of September by Sun rising, we discover'd the Western Coast of Sardinia, six Leagues from the Land. About Noon the Wind chopping about again to the North-West, we held on our first Course; and upon the third of September, we descry'd the Island Galita upon the Coast of Africa. On the fourth we discover'd the Island of Zambino before Tunis, and about Evening Cape Bon, which is the most Southerly Point of all Africa. The fifth we had a sight of the Island of Pantalavia, and the Coast of Sicily. The sixth we discover'd the Island of Gozza, and the seventh the Castle that bearest the same name.

We landed at Malta upon the day of the Nativity of the Virgin, which is a great day among the Maltesi, upon which they give thanks to God, for that the Turks rais'd their Siege upon that day.

The Grand Master goes to the Church of St. John, accompanied with all the chief Commanders in their Robes of Command, and the greatest part of the Knights. All the Country-men and Citizens are up in Arms upon that day, and march to the Inn call'd the Auvernian-house, with the Knight that goes to fetch the Standard. This Knight is clad in a Cassock of Crimson Velvet, with a Cross of the Order, before and behind. He wears a Helmet upon his head, and carries the Standard upon his shoulders; and by him marches the Grand-Master's Page, who carries a Sword in one hand, and a Dagger in the other, both very richly Embellish'd, and giv'n the the Order by CHARLES the fifth. The Page that carry'd the Sword and Dagger was the youngest Nephew of Pope Innocent the tenth. The Souldiers and Citizens marching before to the Church door make a Lane for the Knight and the Page to pass on to the Altar, where the Knight makes three bows, and having done as much to the Grand-Master, places himself on the right hand of the Grand-Masters Chair, and the Page on the left. Then the Mass and the Musick begins, and while the Gospel is reading, the Grand-Master takes the sword and the Dagger out of the Page's hand, and holds them with the points upward all the remaining part of the Mass. During the Elevation of the Host, the Knights repeats the same Ceremony as at the beginning; and then the Bells ring, the great Guns go off, and the Souldiers give three Vollies. Mass being ended, the Grand-Master retires, accompany'd as before, only that he is then attended by all the Ecclesiastical persons of the City, and coming out of the Church, he proceeds with all the Infantry marching before him toward our Lady's of Victory, where they all go in procession. While they make a stand in that place, the Souldiers give another Volley, which is answer'd by all the Canons in the Town, as also from the Ships and Galleys. After that they return to St. John's; and the Infantry Guard the Standard back to the Inn, while the Grand-Master goes to his Palace.

The ninth we view'd the Fortifications, which are stor'd with very fair pieces of Canon.

The tenth we saw the Pages perform their Exercises before the Grand-Master, which are generally vaulting and handling their Arms, both Musquet and Pike.

The eleventh we view'd the Arsenal, where I was assur'd that there were Arms for twenty thousand men, being in good order, and rarely well look'd after.

The next day we visited the Infirmary, where the sick are serv'd in Plate, as well the poor as rich.

The

The twentieth we set Sail, having the Wind at West-South-West, and a fresh gale; so that upon the twenty-third we discover'd the Coast of the Morea, to which we approach'd so near, as to descry Navarin. In the Evening we saw the City of Coron, where there is a great Trade for Sallet-Oyl. From thence it was that the Great Turk Embark'd for Candy in the year 1645.

The twenty-fourth the Wind was at East-North-East. In the Morning we discover'd the Cape of Matapan, which is the most Southern Point of Land in Europe, lying in the Morea; and at Noon the Island of Chergigo.

The twenty-fifth we drew near Cyprus, and descry'd a Mountain in that Island call'd Cameliere, with some other Promontories toward the South.

From the twenty-seventh day till we came to Alexandretta, we perceiv'd the Sea to be all over cover'd with Pumice-stones, which happen'd from an Earthquake that had for some time before swallow'd up the Island of Saniorini. Some think that it proceeded from the abundance of Sulphur, of which that Country is full, which took Fire, and was the death of above 750 of the Islanders, that were partly buried in the Ruines, and partly dy'd out of fear. They that remain'd alive became black like Charcoal; and the Vapours that ascended out of the Abyss fully'd all the Silver as far as Constantinople; the noise of the Earthquake being heard as far as Smyrna.

The twenty-ninth by break of day we discover'd the Island of Cyprus.

The first of October by eight in the Morning we came to an Anchor before Salines, which is one of the Ports of Cyprus, where our Consuls live. Here I ask'd several of the Christians of the Country, how they did to live and pay their Carage? Who told me that it was with a great deal of difficulty, in regard the Island was very bare of Money; which was the reason that many Christians turn'd Mahometans, to avoid paying their Carage, which is a Tribute that the Grand Signor lays upon all Christians throughout his Dominions. He exacts from the poorest six Pistors a Head; but there are some that pay a hundred, or a hundred and fifty: and this Tribute is due so soon as ever they come to be eighteen years of age.

The Island of Cyprus is one of the most considerable in the Mediterranean Sea, more to the East than any of the rest; bearing the title of a Kingdom, as being 500 Miles in circuit. It is not all of the same breadth, being of a triangular form, the sides whereof are very unequal. To it there belong several Capes or Promontories, the principal whereof are St. Epiphania, toward the West; Cape de Gate, toward the South; Cape Diegrega, toward the North-East; Cape Corniachiti, toward the North; and Cape St. Andrew, upon the most Eastern Point of the Island. The principal Roads are that of Salines or Larneca, that of Paphos, and that of Cerines or Cérigni. The Haven of Famagosta signifies nothing as to great Ships, there being none but small Vessels that can ride there. The Venetians had formerly made a small Mole there to harbour their Gallies; but it is now quite ruin'd. The Road of Cerines is that where the Barks and Gallies lye that come from Caramania, and Payasses; and where the Basha's land that are sent as Governours of the Island from Constantinople, who reside generally at Nicosia. That City is almost in the middle of the Island, and was formerly a very large one, as appears by the compass of the ancient Walls. The new Walls are well terrass'd within-side, and in a good posture of defence. There are three Gates belong to the City; that of Famagosta, that of Paphos, and that of Cerines. The City it self is no uncomely place; the Venetians having adorn'd it with many fair Palaces, which the Turks demolish every day, out of hopes to find hidd'n Treasure therein, and sell the Stones to build new Houses. The Cathedral that goes by the name of Santa Sophia is an ample and fair Structure, of which the Turks have now made a Mosque, together with one more, which was formerly a Monastery belonging to the Austin Fryars. The Greeks have there four Churches, and the Franks two; that is to say, the French Missionary Capuchins, and the Italian Missionary Socolaus. The first have a Church dedicated to St. James, the others another, which is call'd Holy Rood Church. The Armenians also have another belonging to them, which is a very neat Building, which was formerly a Monastery of the Carthusians. There it is that there is a Tomb, adorn'd with several Sculptures of Religious Nuns, especially an Abbess with a Cross in her Hand, the Writing about the Stone being in French Characters. The City is seated in a temperate Air and a fertil Soil, abounding with Water. It extends more in length than breadth, having having been anciently nine Miles in compass; but the Venetians to make it stronger, reduc'd it to the circuit of three. The Work of the Fortification was so neat, and such a proportion observ'd in all things, that the most famous Engineers esteem'd it one of the most stately Fortresses in the World, when Selim the second sent an Army against it, under the Command of Mustapha his Grand Vizier.

Famagosta is a Sea-Town upon the East side of the Island, and the chief Bulwark of it. It is kept in good repair, the Castle within being in form of a Citadel. The Turks have converted into Mosques the Churches of the Christians, who are not suffer'd to dwell in the City. They have only the liberty to come thither in the day, and to open Shops, which they shut up again at night, and then go home to their Houses in the neighbouring Villages. The City is govern'd by a Bey, who has no dependence upon the Governour of the Island, who is oblig'd to maintain a Galley for the guard of the Coast.

Cerines is another little City, but without any defence, the Walls thereof being all tumbl'd to ruine. Only there is a Fortress toward the Sea, well built, with a Garrison in it. There is also a handsome Monastery of Religious Greeks, built somewhat after the French manner; wherein there are some of the Cells which stand so upon the Sea, that they can fish out of the Windows. The Fields about it bear Cotton, which is the chief Revenue of the Monastery. There is only the Fort of Cerines upon the North, where the Island does not lye so open as toward the South and East; which besides by that of Famagosta, are guarded by the Forts of Salines, Limisso, and Paphos. The Inhabitants of the Island are for the most part Greeks, especially in the Villages. They are clad after the Italian manner, both Men and Women; the Men wearing Hats like the Franks, and retaining their ancient Customs as much as is possible for them to do. The Trade of the Island lyes in Cotton wool, which is the best in all the East; and some Silk, which is neither good, nor very plentiful. However the Island is fertile enough, did it not want Inhabitants enough to till it. As for Bread, Wine, Cheese, and Milk, they are all very cheap, and there is Oyl enough to serve the Island. But for the Wine, it is transported out of the Island to all the places of Trade not far distant. The best grows at the foot of Olympus, and is a delicious sort of Drink. The Country between Nicosia and Famagosta produces Cotton, of which there grows also some between Paphos and Limisso. The chief place where the Silk is made is call'd Cytheres, a large Town water'd with a fair River that runs from the Mountain of Venus. The River turns several Mills, which are the chief Revenue of the Island. There is Silk also made between Paphos and Limisso; upon the Road between which two places you meet with a Town call'd Piscopi, where are to be seen several Aqueducts, that carry'd the Water into the Rooms and Magazines were the people formerly made Sugar. But since the Island was tak'n from the Venetians, one of the Bishops that was sent as Governour, burnt up all the Sugar-Canes in the Country. Toward the Sea shoar near Limisso, is to be seen one of the fairest Gardens of Cyprus, which they call Shiti; to which there belongs a magnificent House, and a Grove of Orange-Trees. It was built by a rich Venetian, who had a good Estate in Lands thereabouts.

In Cyprus the people take a vast number of Birds as big as a Lark, especially near the Mountain of the Holy Cross. In the Months of September and October the Country-people of the adjacent Villages make themselves little Huts in the Fields, where usually those Birds are wont to light, and feed upon the Seed of an Herb that grows there; which when it is dry, the people daub over with Lime twigs. But this they never do but when the North-West Wind blows, and that the weather be very cold; for with a Southerly Wind they never take any. These Birds are accounted great Dainties by the Venetians, who make no great Feasts in Carnival-time wherein they do not set these Birds upon the Table, pil'd up in Dishes like a Pyramid. They buy them up every year; being first prepar'd fit for exportation by the people, who having pull'd off their Feathers, parboyl them, and pickle them up in Barrels with Vinegar and Salt. When they are to be eat'n, they are set upon a Chafing dish, between two Dishes. Sometimes there are above a thousand Barrels exported out of the Island; and indeed, were it not for this Trade, the poor people would see but very little Money.

Upon the Mountain of the Holy Cross stands a Church of the same name; upon which which the report of the Country goes, that St. Helena returning from Jerusalem left a piece of our Saviour's Cross with the Christians of Cyprus, who built a Church there, by means of the Liberality of the same Princess. Afterwards those of the Town of Leucata took it from hence, and carry'd it to their Church, where I saw it. The piece is as big as the Palm of a Man's Hand, set in a great Cross of Latten, emboss'd with several Figures.

In the Kingdom of Cyprus that there is an Archbishop, and three Suffragans. The Archbishop takes upon him the Title of Nicosia; to which Famagosta belongs with all the Country between Nicosia and Famagosta, with the Territories of Nicosia and all the Villages round. He has a House about a League from Nicosia, where the chiefest of his Revenue lies. Some years since he caus'd the high Altar of the Church to be painted and gilded, being a neat piece of Workmanship. Thus the Archbishop has under his Jurisdiction all the middle part of the Island, and some part toward the East. The Bishops are the Bishops of Paphos, Larneca, and Cerines.

The Greeks are very much addicted to the observation of their ancient Customs and Ceremonies; and generally their Masses are very long. Upon Sundays and Holy-days they rise between one and two of the Clock in the Morning to sing Matens. To which purpose there is a Clerk that goes from door to door and knocks with a Hammer, to wake the people, and then cries out with a loud voice, Christians go to Church. The men and old women fail not to go as being more zealous; but the maids and young women never go out of doors in the night for fear of the Turks. There are seven or eight Villages, the Inhabitants whereof are Maronites, who came from Mount Libanus, and speak Arabic at home, but Greek among the Islanders. They follow the Romish Religion, and have their Churches peculiar to themselves.

The Island of Cyprus is no wholesom Air, being subject to the spoil of a sort of Locusts, that some Summers destroy all their Fruit and Corn. During the heats they hover in the Air, which they will darken with their number like a thick Cloud; but when the North Wind blows, it carry's them into the Sea, where they perish.

There are in Cyprus three sorts of colour'd Earth, a Grey-black, a Red, and a Yellow; of which the Venetians fetch away great quantities for their courser sort of Painting. There's also a Mine of White Alome, which is the stone call'd Damiantium. 'Tis thought that the Ancients had a way to spin this Alome into a kind of Cotton, and so to make out of it a certain sort of Cloath that would not consume in the Fire, but only be the more perfectly whiten'd thereby. The Indians formerly bury'd the dead bodies of their Kings deceas'd in Shrouds of this kind of Linen, and then putting them into the Fire, found the bodies all reduc'd to ashes, but the Cloth whole; out of which they took the ashes, and carefully put them into an Urne, which was prepared for their preservation.

When the Basha of Cyprus has a mind to view the Fortrefs of Famagosta, he sends to give the Bey, who is Governour thereof, notice of it. For it is at the Governours choice whether he will give him admission or no. The Basha Hali-Georgi, being a comely old man of above a hundred and two years of age, setting out of Nicosia in his Litter with about two hundred Horse, when he was come within half a League of Famagosta, the Governour of the place sent his Lieutenant with a hundred Horse to Compliment him, and to conduct him to the Town. Immediately they took upon them the Guard of the Basha's Litter, who was not permitted to take along with him above eight or ten of his principal Officers. The Canons roar'd at his entry, and he was treated magnificently, but he lay not in the Town, being conducted back by the same party to the place where they met him in the Morning.

Upon the third day of October we set Sail about three a Clock in the Morning with a West-North-West Wind, and about Noon we were within sight of Famagosta, into which place we could by no means be admitted, by reason of the Wars between the Turks and Venetians. But as far as I could discern a far off, there is no easie access to the Port, and for the City I could descry no part of it.

The fourth by break of day we got sight of the Coast of Syria, Cape Canger, and the Golf of Antioch, and about Evening we arriv'd in the Rood of Alexandretta.

From thence we went to Aleppo, and stay'd there from the seventh of October to the thirteenth of December.

On the thirteenth we set forward for Nineveh, and with little variation of the Road which I have already describ'd in my third Voyage from Paris. We arriv'd the second day of February at Moussul or Nineveh, where we stay'd 'till the fifteenth, 'till the Kilets or Boats of the Country could be got ready. Our Kilet carry'd thirty Passengers, and sixty hundred of Aleppo Weight, or thirty three thousand pound of Paris Weight, upon which the Tigris bore us from Moussul to Babylon.

C H A P. VII.

A Continuation of the Road which the Author kept in the fourth Voyage into Asia, and particularly of his passage upon the Tigris from Nineveh to Babylon.

THE fifteenth of February we put off from Moussul, and after we had swam six hours, we came to lye near a hot Bath, about a Musket-shot from the Tigris. It was throng'd with Sick people that came thither for their Recovery. We kept our selves upon the Watch all night; but for all we could do, the Arabs stole two Coverlets from a Merchant, and a Turk's Cloaths that was gone into the Bath.

The sixteenth, after we had row'd about five hours, we came to a huge Dam; it is 200 Foot wide, and makes a fall in the River of about 20 Fathoms steep. The Arabians said that Alexander the Great made it to turn the course of the River; others will have it, that Darius caus'd it to be made to hinder the passage of the Macedonians by Water. However, we were forc'd to land our selves and our Goods, and to lade them upon Horses which the Arabs brought us.

The passing this Dam is worthy observation. For it is a thing of wonder to see the Kilet all of a sudden fall above sixscore Foot, and yet to be kept by the Leather-Bottles still above Water. The Water-men that guide the Boat, tie themselves and their Oars fast to a Peach bent like a Semicircle, to defend themselves from the force of the Water. And indeed this is the Dam that renders Tigris un-navigable.

The Kilet being come to the place where we expected it, we put our Goods aboard, and lay in the same place upon the Bank of the River. For the Arabs, if they perceive the Merchants asleep, cut the Cords of the Kilet, and setting it a-drift, swim after it, and rifle away what they please.

The seventeenth, after three hours rowing we met with the River Zab, that empties into the Tigris, upon Chaldea-side. Half a League above the River stands a fair Castle of Brick upon a little Hill; but no body dwelling in it, it runs to ruine. We were twelve hours that day upon the Water, and came to lye at a place which was full of Wood, where we made great Fires, and shot off our Muskets often in the night to scare the Lions.

The eighteenth we were upon the Water eighteen hours, and lay upon the Bank of the River, upon Affyria-side. That Evening the Arabs brought us Milk Meats, and fresh Butter. They swim from the other side of the River with a Boracho under their Stomachs, and another upon their Heads, wherein they bring their Commodities; for which they will have no Money, but only Tobacco, or Bisket, or Pepper.

The nineteenth, in four hours time we met with a River call'd Altumson, or The River of Gold. It flows from the Mountains of the Medes, and I travel'd by the side of it for three days together, returning from Tauris to Aleppo, and passing the Tigris to Mesia. The Water of the River is of an excellent taste, and it falls into Tigris upon Affyria-side. All along the Tigris, on the same side, are great store of Bituminous Springs, and other Streams of hot Water that smell of Sulphur. All that day day we saw none but Arabs and Curds marching along the Banks of the River, the Curds upon Mesopotamia side, and the Arabs upon Assyria side. They were at War, and both sides march'd in very good order. The Young men went formost with Bows and Arrows, and some Muskets, but several Half-Pikes. Next to them their Wives, Virgins, and Children, with their Cattel, Herds, and Camels; after which march'd the Old men in the rear. As well the Curds as the Arabians sent out Horse-men to scout upon the high Grounds; for as soon as they find any advantage, they presently turn their Horses over the River and fall on. Now because we would not trust those sort of People, we row'd nineteen hours to avoid 'em.

The twentieth we were eleven hours upon the Tigris, and came to lye at a Town call'd Tegrit, upon Mesopotamia side. There belongs to the Town a Castle half ruin'd, and yet there are still some handsom Chambers to be seen. Upon the North and East, the River serves for a Moat; but upon the West and South it has a deep Artificial one pav'd with Free-stone. The Arabians say that formerly it was the strongest place in all Mesopotamia, though it be commanded by two Hills not far from it. The Christians dwelt half a League from the City, where the Ruines of a Church and part of a Steeple are still to be seen, whereby it appears to have been a considerable Pile of Building.

The twenty-first, after we had row'd three hours, we met with a Town upon Assyria side, which was call'd Amet-el-tour, from the name of a person that lyes inter'd in a Monastery, whom the people account to be a Saint. Therefore is it a place of great Devotion among them, so that great numbers of Votaries go thither in private. That day we were twelve hours upon the Water, and lay upon the Banks of the River.

The twenty second, having been upon the Waters two hours, we met with a great Chancel cut out of Tigris to water the Lands, which runs up as far as just over-against Bagdat, and there falls into the Tigris again. Coming thither, we landed upon Chaldea side, by reason that there were certain Turks with us, who would of necessity perform their Devotions at a place call'd Samatra. In the same there is a Mosquee not above half a League from the River; to which many Mahometans pay their Devoirs, especially Indians and Tartars, who believe forty of their Prophets to be buried there. When they knew us to be Christians, they would not permit us, no not for Money, to set our Feet in it. About five hundred Paces from the Mosquee stands a Tower very ingeniously built. There are two Stair-cases without, that belong to it, made twirling like a Periwinkle-shell: one of which Stair-cases was built deeper into the Tower than the other. I would have taken better notice of it, could I have been permitted to have come nearer it. Only I observ'd that it was made of Brick, and that it seems to be very ancient. Half a League from thence appear three great Portals, that look as if they had been the Gates of some great Palace. And indeed it is not improbable but that there was some great City thereabouts; for, three Leagues all along the River there is nothing to be seen but Ruines. We were twelve hours that day upon the Water, and lay upon the Banks of Tigris, according to custom.

The twenty-third, we were twenty hours upon the Water, and all the day long we saw nothing upon either side of the River but pitiful Hutts made of the Branches of Palm-trees, where live certain poor people that turn the Wheels, by means whereof they water the neighbouring Grounds. We also met that day with a River call'd Odoine, that falls into Tigris upon the side of the ancient Chaldea.

The twenty-fourth, we were twenty two hours upon the Water together, never stirring off from the Kilet. The reason is, because the Merchants having tak'n out of the Kilet, all their Money and the best part of their Merchandizes, give them to the Country people, who carry them very faithfully to Bagdat, whither they to sell their own Commodities: which the Merchants do, to avoid the payment of Five in the Hundred, in the City. I trusted them also with several things of which they gave me a very good account, as they did to others, being contended with a small matter for their pains.

The twenty-fifth, about four of the Clock in the Morning we arriv'd at Bagdat, which is as usually call'd Babylon. They open the Gates by six, and then the Customers come to take an account of the Merchandize, and to search the Merchants themselves. If they find nothing about 'em, they let the Merchants go: but if they have any thing about 'em which ought to pay, they carry the persons to the Custom-House, where they write down the quantity of the Goods, and let them go. All the Merchandize upon the Kilet is carry'd thither also, which the Merchant fetches away again in two or three days, paying the Custom: All which is done in very great order, without any noise or disturbance in the least.

Though Bagdat usually bear the name of Babylon, yet it is at a great distance from the ancient Babylon, whereof in due place. But now for Bagdat, as it stands at this day.

Bagdat is a City seated upon the River of Tigris, on the Coast of Persia, and separated from Mesopotamia by the same River. It lyes in 33 Deg. 15 Min. of Elevation. The Chronicles of the Arabians report that it was built by one of their Califfs nam'd Almansour, in the year of the Hegyra of Mahomet 145, and of Christianity 762, or thereabouts. They call it Dar-al-sani, that is, the House of Peace. Some say it deriv'd its name from a Hermitage that stood in a Meadow where the City now stands, whence it was call'd Bagdat, or, a Garden bequeath'd. About forty years ago digging up the Foundations of an Inn, the Work-men found a Body entire, habited like a Bishop, with a Censer and Incense by him. And in the same place several Cells of Religious Houses shew'd themselves: which makes it very probable, that where Bagdat is built there was anciently a great Monastery, with several Houses where the Christians inhabited. The City is about fifteen hundred Paces long, and sev'n or eight hundred broad, and cannot possibly be above three Miles in circuit. The Walls are of Brick, and terrass'd in some places, with large Towers like Bastions. Upon all these Towers there are mounted about sixty pieces of Cannon, the biggest whereof carries not above a five or six Pound Ball. The Moats are wide, and about five or six Fathom deep. There are not above four Gates; three upon the Land-side, and one upon the River, which you must cross, over a Bridge of thirty-three Boats, distant one from the other about the breadth of one Boat. The Castle is in the City, near to one of the Gates call'd El-Maazan, upon the North side. It is partly built upon the River, encompass'd only with a single Wall, terrass'd in some places; and adorn'd with little Towers, upon which are planted about a hundred and fifty Cannon, but without Carriages. The Moat is narrow, and not above two or three Fathom deep, neither is there any Draw-Bridge before the Gate. The Garrison consists of three hundred Janisaries, commanded by an Aga. The City is govern'd by a Basha, who is generally a Vizier. His House is upon the side of the River, making a fair shew; and he has always ready at command six or seven hundred Horse. There is also an Aga that commands three or four hundred Spahis. They have besides another fort of Cavalry which is call'd Ginguliler, that is to say, Men of Courage, commanded by two Aga's; and usually there are about three thousand in the City and the Towns adjoining. The Keys of the Gates of the City and the Bridge-Gate are in the custody of another Aga, who has under him two hundred Janisaries. There are also six hundred Foot-men, who have their particular Aga, and about sixty Cannoneers, who were at that time commanded by an expert Artist that went by the name of Signor Michael, who pass'd for a Turk, though he were born in Candy. He put himself into the Grand Signor's service, when he went to besiege Bagdat, in the year 1638. Though the Turk had the good fortune to carry the City in a small time; not so much by virtue of the Breach which Signor Michael had made in the Wall, as the Sedition and Revolt that happen'd at the same instant, the Story whereof was thus in short.

The Kan that sustain'd the brunt of the Siege at first, was originally an Armenian, and his name was Sefi-couli Kan. He had commanded the City a long time, and had defended it twice from the Army of the Turks, who were not able to take it before. But the King of Persia having sent one of his Favourites to command in his room, who had enter'd upon his Command before the Cannon had made the Breach, the old Kan finding himself displac'd by the Commission of the new Governour, rather chose to dye, than survive the Affront which was put upon him. To which purpose he sent for his Servants, the Officers of the Army, his Wife and Son, and taking three Cups of Poyson in his Hand, he commanded his Wife, if ever she lov'd him, now to shew the marks of her affection by generously dying with him. He gave the same exhortation to his Son; and so all three together drank up the Poyson, which procur'd their speedy death. The Souldiers, who had a great love for their Governour, having having beheld so dismal a Spectacle, and knowing the Grand Signor was preparing for a general Assault, would not obey their new Kan, but began to act like Rebels; and to that purpose they agreed to deliver up the City, upon condition they might march away with their Arms and Baggage: but the Turks did not keep their words. For so soon as the Turks were got into the City, the Basha's told the Grand Signor, that to weak'n the force of the Persian, it was necessary for him to put to the Sword all the Souldiers that were in the City: and thereupon there were above twenty thousand massacr'd in cold Blood. The Turks had seiz'd upon the Capuchins Mansion, but Signor Michael chief of the Canonneers, got it to be restor'd them again.

As to the Civil Government of Bagdat, there is none but a Cady, who does all, acting even the Mufti, with a Skiekelasson or Tefterdar, who receives the Revenues of the Grand Signor. There are in it five Mosquees, of which two are indifferently well built, and adorn'd with Duomo's cover'd with varnish'd Tiles of different colours. There are also ten Inns, all ill built, except two, which are reasonably convenient. In general, the City is ill built; there being nothing of beauty in it but the Bazars, which are all arch'd; else the Merchants would not be able to endure the heats. They must also be water'd three or four times a day; for which office several poor people are hir'd upon the publick charge. The City is full of Trade, but not so full as it was, when in the hands of the King of Persia: for when the Turk took it, he kill'd most of the richest Merchants. However there is a great confluence thither from all Parts; whither for Trade, or for Devotions sake, I cannot tell: because they that follow the Sect of Haly, do believe that Haly liv'd at Bagdat. Besides, all they that are desirous to go to Mecca by Land, must pass through Bagdat, where every Pilgrim is forc'd to pay four Piasters to the Basha. You must take notice that there are in Bagdat two sorts of Mahometans, the first are call'd Rafedi's, or Hereticks; the second, Observers of the Law, in all things like those at Constantinople. The Rafedi's will by no means eat or drink with a Christian, and very hardly with the rest of the Mahometans: or if they do happen to drink out of the same Cup, or to touch them, they presently wash themselves, as believing themselves unclean. The others are not so scrupulous, but eat and drink and converse with all the World. In the year 1639, after the Grand Signor had tak'n Bagdat, a Rafedi who was a Carrier of Water not only refus'd to give a Jew to drink, who desir'd it of him in the Market-place, but abus'd him also in words. Thereupon the Jew complain'd to the Cady, who immediately sent for him, and caus'd his Boracho and his Cup to be brought along with him; when he came before him, he ask'd for his Cup, and gave the Jew to drink, and then made the Porter drink also out of the same Cup: After that, he order'd the Rafedi to be Bastinado'd, and this Lesson to be taught him while he was chastising, That we are God's Creatures, as well Mahometans, as Christians and Jews. This has made them less zealous in their Superstition, though they are the chiefest part of the Inhabitants of the City.

As to their Funerals, I have particularly observ'd, that when the Husband dyes, the Wife pulls off all her Head-gear, and lets her Hair fall about her Ears; then she all besmears her Face with the Soot of a Kettle, and having so done, frisks and leaps about after such a ridiculous manner, as from others would rather produce laughter than tears. All the kindred, friends and neighbours meet at the House of the deceas'd, and stay for the Celebration of the Funeral. At what time the Women strive to out-vie one another in a thousand Apish tricks, clapping their Cheeks, yelling like mad people; and then of a sudden setting themselves to dance to the sound of two Drums, like those which the Tabor-and-Pipe-men carry, upon which the Women beat for a quarter of an hour. Among them there is one more accustomed to this fool'ry than the rest, that fills your Ears with mournful Dinns; to which other Women make answer, by redoubling their Cries, which may be heard at a great distance. It would then be a vain thing to seek to comfort the Children of the deceas'd; for they seem to be so much beside themselves, that they are not in a condition to hear any thing. And they are oblig'd to carry themselves in that manner, unless they intend to run the reproach of not having any kindness for their Parents. When the Corps is carry'd to the Grave, abundance of poor people go before with Banners, and Crescents at the ends of Sticks, singing most dismal Dirges all the way. The Women are not to be at the Interment, who are not to go abroad but only upon Thursdays, when they go to the Sepulchers to Pray for the Dead. And because that by their Law the Husband is oblig'd to lye with his lawful Wife upon Thursday-night or Fryday-night, upon Wednesday-morning the Women go to the Baths, where they perfume their Heads and Bodies with a sweet Water. They may go abroad sometimes at the other seasons, when their Husbands give them leave to visit their Kindred; but then they are to be wrapt up from Head to Foot, that it is impossible for their Husbands themselves to know them if they meet 'em i' the Streets. By the way take notice, that the Persian Women, unless they be such as are very poor, would rather stay within all the days of their Lives, than go abroad without a Horse. And it is a certain sign to know a Curtisan from an honest Woman; for that the Curtisans put their Feet in the Stirup, and the honest Women only in the Stirup-leathers. The Women of Bagdat are very richly habited, after their fashions; but they are not contented to wear their Jewels about their Necks and Wrists, for they hang them like Bracelets about their Faces, and will bore holes in their Ears to put in a Ring. The Arabian Women only bore the separation between the two Nostrils, where they wear hollow Rings, as well to spare cost as for lightness; for some are so big, that you may almost thrust your Fist through them. Beyond all this, the more to beautifie themselves, they make a round Ring about their Eyes with a certain sort of Blacking: And as well Men as Women, in the Desert, put the same near their Eyes, to preserve them, as they say, from the heat of the Sun.

Of Christians there are three sorts: Nestorians, who have a Church; Armenians and Jacobites, who have none, but go the Capuchins, who administer the Sacraments to them. The Christians go in Devotion to a Chappel, about a short quarter of a League from the City, dedicated to a Saint whom they call Keder-Elias, paying a small Fee, for admission, to the Turks, who keep the Keys. Two days journey from the City stands another ruin'd Church in a pitiful Village, where they say, that St. Simon and St. Jude were both Martyr'd and Buried. If a Christian dyes, all the rest come to his Burial, and returning home, find a Supper prepar'd to welcome them; the next day they return to the Grave, and pray for the deceas'd; and the third day there is a Dinner for all comers and goers. Sometimes there will be a hundred and fifty persons at a Burial. They repeat the same Ceremonies for the seventh, fifteenth, thirtieth and fortieth days afterwards; having a great veneration for the Dead, for whom they pray too often. This custom of Feasting is very inconvenient for the Poor; for they being desirous to imitate the Rich, run themselves sometimes so far in Debt, that they are forc'd to sell their Children to the Turks to discharge themselves.

There are several Jews also in Bagdat, but more that come every year in Devotion to visit the Sepulcher of the Prophet Ezekiel, which is a day and a halfs journey from the City. In short, since the taking of Bagdat by Sultan Amurat, the number of Inhabitants cannot be less than fifteen thousand Souls; which shews that the City is not peopl'd according to its bigness.

About a day and a halfs journey from the Point of Mesopotamia, at distance almost equal between Tigris and Euphrates, there appears a vast Heap of Earth; which the people call to this day Nemrod. It stands in the midst of a wide Plain, and may be discover'd a great way off. The vulgar sort believe it to be the Remains of the Tower of Babel; but there is more probability of the Arabians Opinion, who call it Agartouf, and believe it to have been built by an Arabian Prince, who always kept a Beacon at the top to assemble his Subjects together in time of War. This Heap of Earth was about three hundred Paces in circuit; but it is not easie to guess at the ancient height, the rest being fall'n to ruine, but only eighteen or twenty Fathom. It is built of Brick dry'd in the Sun, every Brick being ten Inches square, and three thick. The Building is thus rais'd. Upon every row of Canes or Reeds bruis'd to pieces and mix'd with Wheat-straw, and spread an Inch and a half thick, lye seven orders of these Bricks with a little Straw between each; then another Bed of Reeds, and six rows of Bricks; then a third with five rows, decreasing in that manner 'till you come to the top. The form of it seems to have been rather square than round; and in the highest part of that which remains there appears a Hole like a Window; if it were not rather an Out-let for Water, or a Hole for the Scaffolding. In short, according to the Description of Moses there

C H A P. VIII.

A Continuation of the Road from Bagdat to Balsara; and of the Religion of the Christians of St. John.

THE fifteenth of March we hir'd a Bark from Bagdat to Balsara. And we observ'd, that a little beyond Bagdat the River Tigris divides it self into two Arms; the one which runs through the ancient Chaldea, the other keeps its course toward the Point of Mesopotamia; these two Arms making a large Island, cross'd by several small Channels.

When we came to the place where Tigris divides it self, we beheld as it were the compass of a City that might have formerly been a large League in circuit. There are some of the Walls yet standing, upon which six Coaches may go a-brest. They are made of burnt Brick, every Brick being ten Foot square, and three thick. The Chronicles of the Country say, that these were the Ruines of the ancient Babylon.

We follow'd that Arm of Tigris that runs along the Coast of Chaldea; for fear of falling into the hands of the Arabs, who were then at War with the Basha of Babylon, denying to pay the ordinary Tribute to the Grand Signor. We were ten days upon the Water in our passage from Bagdat to Balsara, and lay every night upon the Water, dressing our Victuals in the Bark. For when we came to any Villages, we sent our Servants a-shoar to buy Provisions, which we had very cheap. Now the Towns we met with upon the Shoar were these; Amurat, where there stood a Fort of Brick bak'd in the Sun; Mansoury, a great Town; Magar, Gazer, and Gorno. At this last place Euphrates and Tigris meet together: where are also three Castles to be seen; one upon the Point where the two Rivers meet, which is the strongest, and where the Son of the Prince of Balsara then commanded; the second upon Chaldea side; and the third upon Arabia side. Though the Customs be there exactly demanded, and paid, yet they never search any person. The Tides come up to that place: so that having but fifteen Leagues to Balsara, we got thither in seven hours, having both Wind and Tide.

All the Country between Bagdat and Balsara is inter-cut and parted by Dikes, like the Low Countries; the two Cities lying a hundred and sixty Leagues one from the

the other. It is one of the best countries in the possession of the Grand Signor, being stor'd with large Meadows and excellent Pasturage, where are bred infinite numbers of Beasts, especially Mares and Bufalo's. The Female Bufalo's go twelve Months, and yield so much milk, that there are some that will give two and twenty Pints. And there is so large a quantity of Butter made, that in some Villages upon the Tigris, we saw sometimes five and twenty, sometimes twenty Barks lad'n with Butter, which the people sell all along the Gulf of Persia, as well upon Arabia, as Persia side.

Half the way betwixt Bagdat and Balsara, we perceiv'd several Pavilions set up in the Meadows along by the side of the River. Upon enquiry we heard that the Tefierdar was come from Constantinople to gather the Grand Signor's duty's. For from Bagdat to Gorno, for all the Bufalo's as well Male as Female, there is to be paid a Piafter and a quarter for every head once a year; which is worth yearly to the Grand Signor a hundred and fourscore thousand Piasters. Every Mare also pays two Piasters, every Sheep ten Sous; which if the Country people were not very cunning would be worth fifty thousand Piasters more than it is.

After this we came to Gorno, a Fortrels upon the point where the two Rivers meet, besides two other small Castles upon each side, so that there is no passing without leave. Upon the Fort of Gorno, which was well furnish'd with Cannon, we saw the Prince of Balsara's Son, who was Governour of the Fort. And here it is that the Account of the Customs is taken. But though they are very exact in searching the Barks, they are very civil, for they search no body. However lest any Goods should be hid between the Planks of the Ships, over which they generally throw Fagots and Canes, the Customers bring a great Piercer, with which they bore the sides of the Bark quite through for the discovery of conceal'd Goods. The Goods are Register'd at Gorno, but the Customs are always paid at Balsara, according to the account giv'n from the Fort.

The same day entring into the Chanel that is cut out of Euphrates to Balsara, we met the chief of the Holland Factory taking his pleasure in a Boat cover'd with Scarlet, who took me with him to Balsara.

Balsara stands upon the side of Arabia deserta, two Leagues from the Ruines of a City, which was formerly call'd Beredon, and anciently stood in the Desert, to which the Water was formerly convey'd out of Euphrates in a Brick Chanel still to be seen.

By the Ruines it appears to have been a great City, from whence the Arabians fetch away the Bricks and sell them at Balsara. The City of Balsara is half a League from Euphrates, which the Arabians in their Language call Shetel-arch, or the River of Arabia. The Inhabitants of the City have made a Chanel to it about half a League long, which bears Vessels of 150 Tuns; at the end whereof stands a Fort, so that no Vessel can get into the Fort without leave. The Sea is above fifteen Leagues off, but the Tide comes up to the Chanel, and fills the River other fifteen Leagues upward beyond Gorno. The Country is so low, that were it not for a Dam that runs along the Sea-shoar, it would often be in danger of being drown'd. The Dam is above a League in length, and built all of Free-stone so strong, that the fury of the waves can do no injury, though it lie open to a Boystrous Sea.

It is not above a hundred years since Balsara belong'd to the Arabians of the Desert, and had no commerce with the Nations of Europe. For those people were contented to eat their own Dates, having so great a quantity, that they only live upon them. 'Tis the same thing all along the Gulf on each side; for from Balsara to the River Indus for above six hundred Leagues together, and all along the Coast of Arabia to Mascaté, the poor sort of people know not what it is to eat Rice, but live upon Dates and Salt-fish dry'd in the wind. The Cows eat no Grass, and though they go abroad in the fields, they find little or nothing among the bushes which is proper for them to eat. But every Morning before they drive them to the Field, and when they return home, they give them heads of fish and Date-nuts boil'd together.

The Turks having had War with the Arabians took Balsara; and yet because the Arabians always hover'd about the Town, and made booty of all they could lay their hands on, they were forc'd to come to an agreement with them, that the Arabs should quietly enjoy all the Desert, till within a League of the City; and that the Turks should remain peaceable Masters of the City, where they have a Basha for Governour. But this Treaty endur'd not long; for in the middle of the City there is a Cittadel, call'd Aushel Basha, or the Basha's Court, which the Turks built; so that the Garrison being Turks and the Inhabitants Arabians who could not endure to be curb'd, they oft-times quarrell'd with the Turks and came to blows. Thereupon the Arabians of the Desert came to the relief of the Citizens and besieg'd the Basha in the Fortrefs. At length because there could be no such agreement made, but that one party or other took an occasion presently to break it, there was one Basha whose Name was Aind, who after many contests and revolts which had almost tyr'd him, resolv'd to rid himself of the trouble, and sold his Government for forty thousand Pistols to a rich Lord in the Country, who presently rais'd a sufficient number of Souldiers to keep the people in awe. This great man took upon him the name of Efrasis Basha, being the Grandfather of Hussen Basha, who was Governour at the time when I pass'd through before. This Efrasis threw off the Turkish yolk, and took upon him the title of Prince of Balsara. As for the Basha that sold his Government, he no sooner arriv'd at Constantinople, but he was strangl'd. But after Amirath had taken Bagdat, the Prince of Balsara was glad to feed him continually with Presents that chiefly consisted in Horses, which are very beautiful in that Country. The Great Sha-Abas having taken Omus, sent a powerful Army under the Command of Iman-Kouli-Kan Governour of Shiras, to take in Balsara. Whereupon the Prince finding himself too weak to resist so great a Pow'r, made an agreement with the Desert Arabians to break down the Dam that stops the Sea, Which being perform'd, in came the Sea tumbling fifteen Leagues to Balsara, and four Leagues yond it, which constrain'd the Persians, surrounded with water, and hea the same time of the death of Sha-Abas, to raise their Siege. Since that inundation several Lands and Gardens have been utterly barren, or have born very reason of the Salt which the Sea has left behind.

Turks

The Prince of Balsara has enter'd into Leagues with several Strangers that whencesoever you come, you may be welcome. There is some good order in the City, that you may walk all night long in the Street without Interruption. The Hollanders bring Spices thither every year. The Engli and some few Gloves; but the Portugals have no Trade at all thither but bring Calicuts, Indigo, and all sorts of Merchandizes. In the Ships of all Countries, from Constantinople, Smyrna, Ale and other parts of Turkie, to buy such Merchandizes as come from the Arabians bring them to put them to sale. They that come from Babel, Bagdat, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, send their Merchandise by Water, but with great trouble and expence. In regard to the Wind they cannot stir, which makes them oft-times between to be above sixty days, nay there have been some that have lost the Water.

The Customs of Balsara amount to five in the hundred, but some favour shew'd you, either by the Customor or the Prince. Merchant does not really pay above four in the hundred. The Prince is so good a Husband, that he lays up three millions of Livers in a year. Revenue is in four things, Money, Horses, Camels, and Dates. The last consists his chiefest wealth. For all the Country from the Rivers to the Sea, for the space of thirty Leagues together, is all cover'd with Dates, nor does any one dare to touch a Date, till he has paid for every one of a Larin, or nine Sous French. The profit which the Prince proceeds from this, that the Marchants that come from abroad bring their Reals to his Mint, where they are Coyn'd and converted into Reals is worth to him eight in the hundred. As for his Horses, there is no world, where there are more fit for travel, or handsomer than in Balsara, some that will travel thirty hours together and never draw bit, but Mares. But to return to the Palm-Trees it is worth observation, that the Art to bring up those Trees than any other. The Natives dig a hole wherein they heap a great quantity of Date-nuts in a Pyramidic whereof ends in one single Nut, which being cover'd with Earth produces the Palm-tree. Most of the people of the Country do say, that in regard there is among the Palm-trees the distinction of Male and Female, that therefore they must be planted one by another, for that otherwise the Female Tree will bear no Fruit. But others affirm that nicety to be unnecessary; and that it suffices, when the Male is in Blossom to take a Flower from the Male, and put it into the Heart of the Female a little above the Stem; for unless they should do so, all the Fruit would fall off before it came to maturity.

There is at Balsara a Cady that administers Justice, and who is establish'd by the authority of the Prince that commands there. In the City are also three sorts of Christians, Jacobites, Nestorians, and Christians of St. John. There is also a House of Italian Carmelites; and there was a House of Portugal Austin-Friars, but they have forsak'n the Town ever since their Country-men quitted the Trade.

The Christians of St. John are very numerous at Balsara, and the Villages thereabouts; who anciently liv'd by the River of Jordan, where St. John Baptiz'd; and from whom they took their Name. But since the time that Mahomet conquer'd Palestine, though Mahomet formerly gave them his Hand and his Letters of Privilege that they should not be molested, nevertheless they that succeeded the false Prophet resolv'd to extirpate them all; to which purpose they ruin'd their Churches, burnt their Books, and exercis'd all manner of cruelties upon their persons: which oblig'd them to retire into Mesopotamia and Chaldea, and for some time they were under the Patriarch of Babylon, from whom they separated about a hundred and sixty years ago. Then they remov'd into Persia and Arabia, and the round about Balsara; as Souter, Despoul, Rumez, Bitoum, Mono, Endecan, bat, Aveza, Dega, Dorech, Masquel, Gumar, Carianous, Balsara, Onezer, Zech.

Nor do they inhabit City or Village by which there does not run a River.

Some of their Bishops have assur'd me, that the Christians in all the foregoing above five and twenty thousand Families. There are some among them ants; but the most part of them are Trades-men, especially Goldsmiths, and Lock-smiths.

This is full of fables and foulderrours. The Persians and Arabians call them that have forsak'n their own Religion, to take up a new one. In they call themselves Mendai, Jabia, or Disciples of St. John.

Certain us, they have receiv'd their Faith, their Books, and every year they celebrate a Feast for about five days, during Troops to their Bishops, who Baptize them according to the but in Rivers, and only upon Sundays. But before they carry the Infant to Church, where there is a Bishop who er the Head of the Child; from thence they carry the Child

Train of Men and Women, who together with the Bishop ater. Then the Bishop reads again certain Prayers out of a Book land, which done he sprinkles the Infant three times, saying,

Kaddemin, Akyeri, Menbal el-gennet Alli Koulli Kralek; or, In the st and last of the World and of Paradise, the high Creator of all the Bishop reads something again in his Book, while the God-

Child all over in the Water; after which they go all to the Parents any tax their Baptism for insufficient, in regard the Three Persons not nam'd therein, they can make no rational defence for them-ave they any knowledge of the Mystery of the Holy Trinity, only Christ is the Spirit and Word of the Eternal Father. They are so the Angel Gabriel to be the Son of God, begotten upon Light, the Eternal Generation of Christ, as God. Yet they confess free us from the Punishment of Sin: and that he was conceiv'd irgin without the knowledge of Man, by means of the Water tain which she drank of. They believe he was crucifi'd by the he rose the third day; and that his Soul ascending up to Heaven, his id on Earth. But like the Mahometans they corrupt their Faith, by Christ vanish'd when the Jews came to take him; and that he deluded with his Shadow.

In the Eucharist they make use of Meal or Flow'r, kneaded up with Wine and Oyl: For, say they, the Body of Christ being compos'd of the two principal parts, Flesh and Blood, the Flow'r and the Wine do most perfectly represent them; besides, that Christ at his Supper made use of Wine only; and not of Water. They add Oyl, to signify the benefit we receive by his favour of the Sacrament, and to put us in mind of our Love and Charity towards God and our Neighbour. To make this Wine, they take Grapes dry'd in the Sun, which they call in their Language Zebibes, and casting Water upon them, let them steep for so long a time. The same Wine they use for the Consecration of the Cup. They make use of Raisins, in regard they are more easie to be had than Wine; the Persians, especially the Arabians, under whose Government they live, not permitting, nor indeed allowing them the use of it. Of all people that follow the Law of Mahomet, there are none so opposite to other Religions, as these Persians and Arabians about Balsara. The words of their Consecration, are no other than certain long Prayers, which they make to praise and thank God, at the same time blessing the Bread and Wine, never making mention of his Body and Blood; which they say is not at all necessary, because God knows their intentions. After all the Ceremonies are ended, the Priest takes the Bread, and having eaten some of it, distributes the rest to the People.

As to their Bishops and Priests, when any one dyes, who has a Son, they choose him in his place; and if he have no Son, they take the next a-kin that is most capable and best instructed in their Religion. They that make the Election, say several Prayers over him that is elected. If he be a Bishop, after he is receiv'd, and that he go about to Ordain others, he ought to fast six days, during which time he continually repeats certain Prayers over him that is to be ordain'd Priest, who also for his part fasts and prays all the said time. And whereas I say the Father succedes the Son, it is to be observ'd, that among the Christians in those Parts, both Bishops and Priests marry, as do the rest of the people; only if their first Wife dye, they cannot marry another unless she be a Virgin. Moreover, they that are admitted to Ecclesiastical Function, must be of the race of Bishops or Priests; and their Mothers must have been always Virgins when they were marry'd. All their Bishops and Priests wear their Hair long, and a little Cross wrought with a Needle.

When there is any Wedding to be, the kindred and persons invited go together with the Bridegroom, to the House where the Bride lives. Thither comes the Bishop also, and approaching the Bride, who is sitting under a Canopy, he asks her if she be a Virgin. If she answer that she is so, he makes her confirm it by an Oath. After which he returns to the Guests, and sends his Wife with some other skilful Women to make an inspection. If they find her to be a Virgin, the Bishop's Wife returns and makes Oath of it; and then they all go to the River, where the Bishop re-baptizes the Couple to be marry'd. Then they return toward the House, and making a stop before they come quite near it, the Bridgroom takes the Bride by the Hand, and leads her seven times from the Company to the House, the Bishop following them every time, and reading certain Prayers. After they go into the House, and the Bride and Bridegroom place themselves under a Canopy, where they set their Shoulders one against another; and the Bishop again, causing them to lay their Heads together three times. Then opening a Book of Divination, and looking for the most fortunate day to consummate the Marriage, he tells them of it. But if the Bishop's Wife do not find the Bride to be a Virgin, the Bishop can proceed no farther, so that if the young Man have still a mind to marry, he must go to some meaner Priest to perform the Ceremony. Which is the reason that the people take it for a great dishonour to be marry'd by any other than a Bishop; for when a Priest marries, 'tis an infallible sign that the Bride was not a Virgin. The Priests also, in regard they take it to be a great Sin for a Woman not being a Virgin, they never marry any such but by constraint, and ensuing inconveniencies; for sometimes in despite they will turn Mahometans. The reason of the Inspection is, that the Husbands may not be deceiv'd, and to keep young Girls in awe.

As to what they believe touching the Creation of the World, they say, that Angel Gabriel undertaking to create the World according to the command w^t

God gave him, took along with him three hundred thirty-six thousand Demons, and made the earth so fertile, that it was but to Sow in the Morning and Reap at Night. That the same Angel taught Adam to Plant and Sow, and all other necessary Sciences. Moreover that the same Angel made the seven lower Spheres, the least whereof reaches to the Center of the World, in the same manner as the Heavens do, all contriv'd one within another. That all these Spheres are of different Metals, the first next the Center is of Iron, the second of Lead, the third of Brass, the fourth of Laten, the fifth of Silver, the sixth of Gold, and the seventh of Earth. The seventh is that which contains all the rest, and is the chiefeft of all, as being the most fruitful and profitable to Man, and the most proper to preserve Mankind, whereas the rest seem rather to be fram'd for its destruction. They believe that over every Heaven there is Water, whence they conclude that the Sun swims in a Ship upon that Water, and that the Mast of his Ship is a Cross, and that there are a great number of Boys and Servants to guide the Ships of the Sun and Moon. Besides, they have the Picture of a Barque, which they say belong'd to the Angel Bacan, whom God sends to visit the Sun and Moon, to see whether they move right or no, and keep close to their duty.

In reference to the other World and Life to come, they believe there is no other World, but where Angels and Devils, the Souls of good and bad reside. That in that World there are Cities, Houses, and Churches, and that the Evil Spirits have also Churches, where they pray, singing and rejoicing upon Instruments, and Feasting as in this World. That when any one lies at the point of death, three hundred and sixty Demons come and carry his Soul to a place full of Serpents, Dogs, Lyons, Tygres, and Devils; who, if it be the Soul of a wicked man, tear it in pieces; but being the Soul of a Just man, it creeps under the bellies of those Creatures into the presence of God, who sits in his seat of Majesty to judge the World. That there are Angels also that weigh the Souls of Men in a Ballance, who being thought worthy, are admitted immediately into Glory. That the Angels and Devils are Male and Female, and beget Children. That the Angel Gabriel is the Son of God engender'd upon Light, and that he has a Daughter call'd Souret who has two Sons. That the Angel Gabriel has several Legions of Demons under him, who are instead of Souldiers, and others that are his Officers of Justice, whom he sends from Town to Town, and from City to City, to punish the wicked.

In reference to Saints, they hold that Christ left twelve Apostles to Preach to the Nations. That the Virgin Mary is not dead, but that she lives somewhere in the World, though there be no person that can tell where she is. That next to her St. John is the chiefeft Saint in Heaven, and next to them Zacharias and Elizabeth, of whom they recompt several Miracles and Apocryphal Tales. For they believe that they two begat St. John only by embracing; that when he came to be of age they Marry'd him, and that he had four Sons which he begat upon the waters of Jordan. That when St. John desir'd a Son, he pray'd to God, who drew him one out of the water; so that St. John had no more to do with his Wife but only to give her a Child to bring up. That he dy'd a natural death, but that he commanded his Disciples to Crucifie him after his death, that he might be like Christ. Lastly, that he was bury'd in the City of Fuster, and that he was bury'd in a Chrystal Tomb, brought thence to the City, and that this Sepulchre was in a certain House near the River

They highly honour the Cross, and sign themselves with it; but they are very careful of letting the Turks observe them; and during their Ceremonies, they set a guard at their Church doors for fear the Turks should enter, and lay some unjust upon them. When they have ador'd the Cross, they take it in two pieces, they never put together again, 'till their Service re-begins. The reason why they adore the Cross is drawn out of a Book which they have, Entitul'd The Divine, where it is written that every day early in the Morning, the Angels take the Cross and put it in the middle of the Sun, which receives his light from it, as the Moon doth hers. They add, that in the same Book are Pictur'd two Ships, one of which is nam'd the Sun, the other the Moon; and that in every one of these there is a Cross full of Bells: And moreover, that if there were not a Cross in the Sun and Moon, they would be depriv'd of Light, and the Ships would be Shipwrack.

Their

Their chief Festivals are three. The one in Winter, that lasts three days, in memory of our first Parent and the Creation of the World. The other in the Month of August, that also lasts three days, which is call'd the Feast of St. John. The third which lasts five days, in June, during which time they are all re-baptiz'd. They observe Sunday, doing no work upon that day. They neither Fast nor do any penance. They have no Canonical Books, but a great number of others that treat of nothing but Witchcraft, in which they believe their Priests to be very crafty, and that the Devils are at their beck. They hold all Women to be unclean, and that it is not at all available for them to come to the Church.

They have one Ceremony, which they call the Ceremony of the Hen, of which they make great Account, which is not lawful for any to perform but a Priest Born of a Virgin at the time of her Marriage. When a hen is to be kill'd the Priest puts off his ordinary habit, and puts on a Linnen Cloth, girding his waste with a second, and throwing a third about his shoulders like a Stole. Then he takes the Fowl, and plunges it in the water to make it clean; after which he turns toward the East and cuts off the head, holding the Body in his hand 'till it has bled out all the blood. While the Hen bleeds, with his Eyes lifted up to Heaven, as if he were in an extasie, he repeats in his own Language these words following: In the name of God, may this flesh be profitable to all that eat of it? They observe the same ceremony when they kill Sheep. For first, they cleanse the place very carefully where the Sheep is to be kill'd, washing it with water, and strewing it with boughs, nor is the number of people small that assist at this Ceremony, as if it were at some solemn Sacrifice. If you ask them why it is not lawful for the Laity to kill Fowls? They answer that it is no more lawful for them to kill than to consecrate them; and that is all the reason which they bring. They eat of nothing dress'd by the Turks; and if a Turk ask them for drink, so soon as he has drank, they break the Cup. And to make the Turks more hateful, they Picture Mahomet like a great Gyant, shut up in Prison in Hell with four more of his Parents; and they say, that all the Turks are carry'd into the same place full of wild Beasts to be there devour'd.

They pretend all to Salvation. For, say they, after the Angel Gabriel had fram'd the World by the command of God, he thus discours'd him. Lord God, said he, *behold I have built the World as thou didst command me. It has put me to a great deal of trouble, and my Brethren also, to raise such high Mountains that seem to sustain Heaven. And who indeed was able to make way for Rivers through Mountains without vast labour, and to give every thing its proper place? Moreover, great God, by the aid of thy powerful Arm, we have brought the World to so much perfection, that men cannot think upon any thing needful for them, which is not to be found therein. But instead of that satisfaction which I ought to have for having accomplish'd so great a work, I find no reason but to be altogether griev'd. When God demanding the cause, the Angel Gabriel answer'd: My God and Father, I will tell you what afflicts me; because that after the making of the World as I have done, I foresee that there will come into it a prodigious number of Jews, Turks, Idolaters, and other Infidels, Enemies of your Name, who will be unworthy to eat and enjoy the Fruits of our Labours. To whom God thus reply'd: Never grieve, my Son, there shall live in this World which thou hast built, certain Christians of St. John who shall be my friends, and shall be all sav'd. Upon which the Angel admiring how that should be! What, said he, will there not be several Sinners among those Christians, and by consequence will not they be your Enemies? To whom God thus concluded: *That at the day of Judgment the Good should Pray for the Wicked, and by that means they should be all forgiv'n, and obtain Salvation.

These Christians have a strange Antipathy against the Blew Colour call'd Indigo, which they will not so much as touch. For certain Jews dreaming that their Law should be abolish'd by St. John, told it their Country-men. Which they understanding, and seeing that St. John prepar'd to Baptize Christ, in a great rage, fetch'd a vast quantity of Indigo, which they call Nill in their Language, and flung it into Jordan. They add also that those Waters continu'd unclean for some time, and had hinder'd the Baptism of Christ, had not God sent his Angels with a large Vessel of water, which he caus'd them to fill out of Jordan before the Jews had defil'd it with Indigo; for which reason God particularly Curs'd that Colour.

C H A P. IX.

A Continuation of the Road from Balsara to Ormus.

THe tenth of April we set out from Balsara for Bandar-Congo, for which passage we hir'd a Terrade or a Barque for the purpose; for they which are laden with Dates are generally so overcharg'd, that if a Storm rises, they are in danger of being overset. The River of Balsara is very dangerous, by reason of the Sands which also lie up and down the Persian Gulf, and are very prejudicial to Navigation in that place. On both sides the Gulf that separates Persia from Arabia the Happy, live a sort of poor people that follow no other Trade than fishing; so poor, that when they bring fish to your Vessel, they require nothing for it but Rice; and not the best neither, but such coarse stuff as we feed our Hens and Pigs withal. I gave them a Sack of thirty or forty pounds, and bid them make merry with it, but they told me, they must be careful how they spent such Rice as that, unless it were for their Sick, or at their Weddings; so that if the rest of Arabia the Happy be like that, assuredly 'tis rather a most unfortunate Country.

There are several Isles in the Persian Gulf, but the chiefest of all is the Isle of Baharen, where they fish for Pearls, of which I have spoken in its proper place.

Near to the place where Euphrates falls from Balsara into the Sea, there is a little Island, where the Barques generally come to an Anchor, in expectation of the wind. There we stay'd four days, whence to Bandar-Congo, it is fourteen days Sail, and we got thither the twenty-third of April. This place would be a far better habitation for the Merchants than Ormus, where it is very unwholesom and dangerous to live. But that which hinders the Trade from Bandar-Congo is, because the Road to Lar is so bad, by reason of the want of Water, and craggy narrow ways, which only Camels can endure; but from Ormus to Lar the way is tolerable. We stay'd at Bandar-Congo two days, where there is a Portugais Factor, who receives one half of the Customs by agreement with the King of Persia. By the way take notice, that they who will go by Water from Ormus to Balsara, must take the Natives for their Pilots, and be continually sounding besides.

The thirtieth, we hir'd a Vessel for Bander-Abassi, and after three or four hours Sailing, we put into a Village upon the Sea-side, in the Island of Keckmishe.

Keckmishe is an Island three Leagues about, and about five or six from Ormus. It exceeds in Fertility all the Islands of the East, that produce neither Wheat nor Barley; but at Keckmishe is a Magazine of both, without which Ormus would hardly subsist, in regard it furnishes that City with most of their Provision for their Horses. There is in the Island a Spring of good Water, for the preservation of which, the Persians have built a Fort, lest the Portugals when they held Ormus, should get it into their Possession.

In 1641. and 1642. the Hollanders falling out with the King of Persia about their Silk Trade, besieg'd this Island. For the Ambassadors of the Duke of Hollstein coming into Persia, the Dutch were jealous that they came to fetch away all the Silk; and thereupon enhanc'd the Market from forty-two to fifty Tomans. When the Ambassadors were gone, the Dutch would pay no more than forty-four, which was two Tomans more than they were us'd to do. The King net'd that they would not stand to their words, forbid that they should make sale of their Goods 'till they had paid their Customs, from which 'till that time they were exempted. Thereupon the Hollanders besieg'd the Fortrefs of Keckmishe, but the Heats were so intolerable, that they were forc'd to quit their design with great loss of their Men; and at length by great Presents to the chief Courtiers, they obtain'd to pay no more than forty-six Tomans.

Laree is an Island nearer to Ormus than Keckmishe, well inhabited, and so stor'd with Stags and Hinds, that in one day we kill'd five and forty.

From Keckmishe we Sail'd for Ormus, where we arriv'd the first of May. I had put put my choicest Goods in a Chett directed for the Holland Commander at Ormus, by which means I got the Custom free.

The Persian Gulf is the most dangerous Gulf I know, by reason of the shallowness and sharp Promontories that point out into the Sea; and therefore the best way is to take a Pilot at Ormus or Bander-Congo, and the most proper Pilots are the Fishermen, who are only skill'd in that Sea and no farther. The Soyl about the Persian Gulf is dry Sand and without Water, so that it is impossible to Travel by Land from Ormus to Balsara. The Merchants would be glad to find a way through the Coast of Arabia to get to Mascaté, whence there might a cut be made to Sindi, Diu, or Surat, which are the three chief Ports of India. During the difference between the King of Persia and the Hollanders, the Emir of Vodana an Arabian Prince, offer'd to shew them an easie Road from Mascaté to Balsara. But the Hollanders fearing to break with the King of Persia, where they vended above fifteen or sixteen hundred thousand pounds of their Pepper, and paid therewith for all their Silk, did not think it worth their while to quit Ormus to settle themselves at Mascaté.

Had it been yielded to, the way had been from Balsara to Elcatif a Sea-Town in Arabia the Happy, where there is a Fishery for Pearls that belongs to the Emir of Elcatif. From Elcatif to Mascalat, another City of Arabia, and the residence of another Emir. From Mascalat to Vodana, a good handfom City seated upon the meeting of two little Rivers that carry Barques to the Sea, and run together by the single name of Moyesur. The Soyl about Vodana produces no Corn, and very little Rice; but it abounds in Fruits, especially Prunes and Quinces, which are not so four as ours, and are eaten by the Natives as Pears. There are extraordinary good Melons and great Store of Grapes, of which the Jews, who inhabit the best part of the City, are permitted to make Wine. From Vodana to the Gulf, the Country of each side is full of Palm-Trees, the Dates being the Food of the common people, who have not Money to buy either Corn or Rice. From Vodana to Mascaté it is but fifteen Leagues, though by the Maps, which are Erroneous, the way is describ'd to be much longer.

Being at Ormus, the Emir of Vodana shew'd me a Pearl transparent and perfectly round, that weigh'd seventeen Abas, or fourteen Carats and seven Eights; for in all the Pearl Fisheries of the East they use no other weights but Abas, which make seven Eights of a Carat. I offer'd him 300000 Piasters, or 60000 Roupies for the same Pearl, but the Emir refus'd to take it, telling me that he had been offer'd more Money for it by several Princes of Asia, who had sent to him to buy it, but that he was resolv'd never to part with it.

CHAP. X.

Of the Authors first Voyage, and the adventure of four Frenchmen.

I Departed out of Paris in the year 1657, and Embark'd at Marsailles for Ligorn.

We set Sail from Ligorn seven Vessels together, two bound for Venice, one for Constantinople, one for Aleppo, and three for Smyrna, in one of which being a Dutch Vessel I Embark'd. But before I leave Smyrna, to begin my Journey from Tauris, give me leave to relate the story of four Frenchmen, the various accidents whereof will much enlight'n the Reader into the Customs and Manners, as well of the Turks as Persians.

While I stay'd the departure of the Caravan, which could not be ready in five or six Weeks, as also upon the advice of a rich Jew and a Merchant of Jewels at Constantinople, who had several Pearls to sell, as well for their beauty as their bigness, the best Commodity a man can carry to the Indies, I sent to Constantinople a person that I carry'd carry'd along with me, one that was well vers'd in that sort of Commodity. There was a Norman Gentleman nam'd de Reville then at Smyrna, who would needs accompany my Factor, so that they went both together in a Vessel that carry'd the French Ambassador and his Lady to Constantinople. This Gentleman had two or three thousand Ducats in his Purse, wanting neither wit nor courage, besides a good presence; but perhaps he was more hasty in his proceedings than the reserv'dness of that Country requir'd. He had left the Service of the Muscovites, thinking to find an employment in the Service of the Venetians at Candy; but failing in his expectations, he resolv'd to travel into Persia. While he was at Constantinople, the Jews, who lay hold upon all opportunities of gain, soon found out my Factor; and besides the Pearls which he desired to see, they shew'd him several other rich Stones to try whether they could draw him in; for he had refus'd the Pearls because they held them at too high a Rate. The Norman Gentleman fell into their acquaintance; and picking out the richest, told him, that being resolv'd for the Indies, he had a mind to lay out four thousand Ducats in Pearls. He added also, that he would pay him half in Money, half in Goods, and at the same time shew'd the Jew two thousand Ducats, which the Jew had already devour'd with his eyes. Some four days after, the Jew brought the Gentleman four fair Pearles with some Emraulds; and you may be sure they easily agreed upon the price, in regard the Gentleman had a design to put a trick upon the Jew. Thereupon he shews his Ducats a second time, which the Jew, who thought he had a Cully, presently told out as his own. After that the Jew desiring to see the Goods, which made up the other part of the payment, the Gentleman without any more ado told him, that all the Merchandize which he had to pay him, was a good strong Quartan Ague which had held him a long time, and indeed such a one, that he could not possibly meet with a better, but that he would not over-rate it, in regard he ask'd but two thousand Ducats for it. The Jew who was rich and in great credit at Court, was so incens'd at his raillery, that he had like to have made a wicked stir about it. For as he had heard him say, that the Gentleman was going into the Indies and Persia, he might have easily caus'd him to have been apprehended for a Spy. But in regard the Jews can do nothing in point of Trade without the assistance of the French Merchants, he adviz'd with some of them, who perswaded him that it was an Act of folly, which it better became him to excuse, and desir'd him to take his Goods again, and put up the business; which with much ado they perswaded him to condescend to. The Gentleman fearing lest the Jews underhand should do him a private mischief, stole away with what speed he could, and return'd to Smyrna.

De Reville being thus return'd to Smyrna, put himself into an Almadier, which is a small Vessel of War, that generally touches at Chio and Rhodes, being bound for Cyprus, from whence there is always some convenience or other to get to Alexandretta. From thence he went to Aleppo, and while he stay'd there he met with two French-men, the one whose name was Neret, the other Hautin, who was an Accomptant. They had four Wooden Chests full of false Stones ready set, by which they flatter'd themselves to be great gainers in Persia. They went from Marseilles to Seyde, from Seyde to Damas, hearing that there was an opportunity to Travel to Bagdat with the Topigi-Bashi. This Topigi-Bashi or chief of the Engineers, was he that assisted Amurath in the taking of Bagdat; in recompence whereof the Grand Signor gave him a Timar, or Lordship in Damas worth four thousand Crowns a year. Now it was his custom every year to visit Bagdat, and to stay there during the Season, that there was any probability of the King of Persia's besieging it; which Season not lasting above three or four Months, when that was over, he return'd to Damas. He usually had about thirty Horse with him, with which he never made it above eighteen or twenty days, taking the shortest cut directly through the Desert, where the Arabs are commanded to bring him Victuals upon the Road. And he is willing at any time when he has this opportunity, to conduct the Franks that desire it that way, in regard they are never ungrateful to him for it. These two Franks therefore having desir'd that they might be taken into his Company, the Topigi-Bashi readily consented; provided they could stay 'till he went, which would not be 'till two or three Months; with which answer they were well satisfi'd. But the two Franks had not stay'd at Damas above seven or eight days but they fell acquainted with a Spahi, a Renegado of Marseilles, who proffer'd to carry them through through the Road of Mesopotamia, so that they should be at Ispahan before the Topigi-Bashi, set out from Damas. Thereupon they privately departed out of Damas without acquainting the Topigi-Bashi, who understanding they were gone after the courtesie he had offer'd them, was so enrag'd at their uncivility, that he sent two of his Arabian Servants directly through the Wilderness to the Basha of Bagdat, to give him advice of two Franks that were to pass that way, who were most certainly Spies, describing them withal from head to foot.

In the mean while the two Franks being arriv'd at Ourfa, the Spahi, as he had contriv'd his own design at Damas, goes to the Basha of Ourfa, and informs him that he had conducted thither two Franks, who could be no other than Spies. Thereupon the Basha seiz'd upon them and all their Goods, among the rest he laid his paws upon seven hundred Piasters, of which the Spahi no doubt had his share. And this may serve for instruction to Travellers to have a care how and with whom they Travel in Turkie.

While the two French-men were in hold at Ourfa by one sort of Treachery, the Norman Gentleman and his Companion arriv'd at Bagdat. But they had no sooner set their feet upon the shore, when the Basha verily believing them, to be the persons, of whom the Topigi-Bashi had giv'n him notice, caus'd them to be brought before him, and seiz'd upon their Goods and Letters, of which they had several for the Consul of Aleppo, and other rich Merchants for Persia. The Basha sent for the Capuchins to read those Letters, but not believing them, he sent for a Sicilian Phylician which he had in his Service, and his Treasurer who had been a Slave tak'n in Candy. But neither Phylician, Treasurer, nor Capuchins would interpret any thing in prejudice of the French-men; yet all that could not preserve them from being shut up in a Stable full of dung, and from being threaten'd to be Shot out of a Cannon's mouth if they would not confesse the truth. Thereupon the Capuchins and the Cadi beg'd him to suspend his Sentence till the Arrival of the chief of the Cannoniers, to which he readily consented.

When the Topigi-Bashi came, the Basha commanded the Prisoners to be brought before him. But when the Topigi-Bashi deny'd them to be the persons, the Basha grew into such a rage, that he no less reproach'd the Topigi-Bashi for Treachery, than he had accus'd the others. Which so incens'd the Topigi-Bashi on the other side, that he never left till he had obtain'd the release of the two French-men; yet not so, but that the Basha would have his due; so that Reville was forc'd to leave some of his Ducats behind which the Jew should have had.

But now to return to Smyrna where I expected the Caravan for some time in order to my Journey into Persia. Every thing being provided, we set forward in the Road for Tauris, which I have at large describ'd, nor was there any thing worthy observation all the way. I Will only take notice, that when we departed from Tocat, in regard the heat was so extream, we left the common Road toward the North, and took the way through the Mountains, where there is always a fresh Breeze and store of shady Lanes. In many of which high Mountains we met with Snow, and abundance of excellent Sorrel; and upon the tops of some of those Mountains, we met with several sorts of shells, as it had been upon the Sea shore, which is very extraordinary. From Erzerom we went to Cars; from Cars we came to Erivan. The Kan was not there then, being retir'd during the heat into the Mountains, a days Journey from the City. His Lieutenant telling me that I could not well pass farther without paying my duty to the Kan; I follow'd his advice, and found him in his Tent in a fair Dale, where there was a great quantity of Snow: and where when it began to melt, appear'd several beautiful Flowers, so that Summer and Winter seem'd to lodge both in the same place. The Kan entertain'd both me and all my Company most nobly for ten days. I drove also a small Trade with him. For I durst not shew him the rarities I had, being design'd for the King. For as in India, so in Persia, neither will the King look upon any thing which his Subjects have seen before, nor will the Subjects buy any thing which the King has seen, it being an affront to present any thing to the King which he had formerly view'd, and the Subject buys nothing rare but what he intends to present.

Being past Erivan you may leave your Caravan when you please, by reason of the security of the Roads in Persia. And indeed I intended to have visited the Kan of Gengée, but finding the Road so full of Rocks and Precipices, where a man was continually in danger of breaking his Neck, I turn'd my Horses head and met the Caravan at Nackivan in the Road to Tauris.

From Tauris to Ispahan I met with nothing worthy observation. When I came to the Court I was well receiv'd by the King, and I sold him as many Jewels and other Goods of great value, as came to sixty-two thousand Crowns. But of this more in another place.

CHAP. I.

Of the Authors sixth and last Voyage from his setting out of Paris, to his Landing at Smyrna.

I Set out of Paris in the year 1663. for Lyons, with six several Servants of several professions, which I thought most proper for my business. I carry'd with me the value of about four hundred thousand Livers, part in Jewels, part in Goldsmiths work and other curiosities, which I design'd for the King of Persia and the Great Mogul. Being at Lyons I bought a Steel Mirrour round and hollow, about two foot and a half in Diameter, would immediately melt a Half-Crown by the heat of the Sun-beams: and if you set a Candle by it in the night, you might read two hundred Pages off in your Bed by the reflection.

From Lyons I rode to Marseilles, and set Sail for Ligorn the tenth of January, 1664. in a small Bark, but being scar'd by a great Vessel that we saw off at Sea, we came to an Anchor in the Port of Agde, two Leagues from Frejus, where there stood a pittiful Fort with two or three Houses. There we also went ashore and saw a Garden, the Alleys of which were distinguish'd with rows of Citron and Orange Trees, which look'd as Green in the depth of Winter as in the midst of Summer, with several other curiosities after the mode of Italy. We were no sooner got aboard again, but we perceiv'd another Vessel making into the same Port with full Sail. It was a Vessel which the Masters of the Foreign Office at Toulon, had set out to force all Ships that were bound into Italy to pay certain Customs, which those of Marseilles would not pay when they came into the Port of Toulon. Thereupon foreseeing that there would be mischief done, I called for my little Chests that contain'd my Goods of greatest value, carrying some part my self, and giving the rest to one of my most trusty Servants, thinking to have skipt into a Genoa Bark that lay hard by us; but instead of leaping a-board, I fell into the Sea: where by reason of the Tumult I had perish'd without relief, had I not by good fortune laid hold of a Cable and redeem'd my self. At what time one of my Servants, luckily coming to my aid, with much ado drew me up safe again.

Having escap'd this danger, I got a-shoar with such of my Servants as I had about me, and meeting with a Bark of Frontignan that carry'd Languedock Wine to the Coast of Italy, I hir'd him for Ligorn; and setting Sail, we first touch'd Villafanca, and afterwards at Monaco.

At Monaco I went a-shoar, and went to wait upon Madam the Princess, who shew'd me the Rarities in the Castle; among the rest, several pieces of extraordinary Painting, several pieces of Clock-work and Goldsmiths-work. But among all her Curiosities she shew'd me two pieces of Crystal, about the bigness of two Fists each, in one of which there was above a Glass full of Water, in the other a good quantity of Moss; which were clos'd in by Nature when the Crystal first congeal'd.

Monaco is a Castle situated upon a steep Rock, advancing out into the Sea; which advantage, together with others which it receives from Art and Nature, renders it one of the most considerable Forts in Italy.

The next day finding the Frontignan-Vessel to be deep-laden, and that it made little way, I took a Faluke, and kept along by the Shoar, which was most pleasantly adorn'd with beautiful Villages and Houses, as far as Savona; where I chang'd my Faluke, to compleat the rest of the way which I had to Genoa. Half the way we did very well, but the Wind rising, we were forc'd to put into a great Town, where we landed; and from thence, having but nine Miles, I got in good time by Horse to Genoa. There can be no Prospect certainly more pleasing than that nine Miles riding. For on the one side you see nothing but a continu'd Row of magnificent Buildings and lovely Gardens; on the other a calm Shoar, upon which the Waves seem not to beat, but lovingly to kiss.

Arriving at Genoa, I met with the rest of my Servants; and at the end of two days I embark'd for Ligorn, where we arriv'd in four and twenty hours.

From Ligorn I went to the Court of Florence, to wait upon the Grand Duke. By whom I had the honour to be admitted into his Chamber, where I found no body attending but one Mute, who had a long time serv'd his Highness: and I observ'd that they understood one another by Signs, as perfectly as if the Mute had had his Speech and Hearing. So that when-ever the Duke sent him into his Closet for any Papers or other thing whatsoever, he never fail'd to bring the right.

After I had tak'n my leave of the Duke, he sent me a noble Present of Wine and Fruits; but that which I valu'd more than all the rest, was a Case of Medicaments and Counter-poysons, in the composition whereof the Italians are very exquisite. And yet they did me no service; for when I came into the hot Countries their fermentation was so strong, that all the Oyls and Treacles broke their several Boxes, that I could save nothing of that precious Present.

The next day, being the twenty-sixth of March 1664, I embark'd with all my Servants in a Dutch Vessel call'd The Justice.

The twenty-seventh we staid in the Road, expecting the rest of the Fleet, consisting of eleven Ships, two Men of War, and nine Merchant-men; four of which were bound for Smyrna, there for Ancona, and two for Venice. About seven that evening we set Sail, and all that night the Wind was favourable, but blew hard and veer'd often; which was the reason that two of our Fleet separated from us, steering between the Isle of Elbe and Corsica, while we kept on between the Isle of Elba and Italy.

The twenty-eighth by eight in the Morning we found our selves between Porto Ferraro and Piombino, and it being fair Weather, we had a pleasant prospect of those two places. From thence we steer'd between two Ilands, the one call'd Palmajola, the other being nameless. About six hours after we saw Portolongone, afterwards at a distance we descri'd Monte-Cristo. An hour after Noon we discover'd cover'd Castiglione, all the rest of the day we coasted by the Islands of Giglio and Sanuti.

The twenty-ninth, with the same Wind at North-West, by Morning we discover'd the Islands of Pontia and Parmerola, and about Evening those of Ventione and Ischia. Night approaching, and there being no news of the Ships we had lost, instead of making the Pharo of Messina, it was resolv'd that we should steer a Course round about Messina, where we expected to overtake them. At eleven a Clock in the Evening we had but little Wind at North-North-West, so that we made not above fourteen Leagues of way.

The thirty-first the same Wind continu'd, with a high Sea; but about nine at Night the Wind chopping about to the West, we kept our former Course.

The first of April, by eight of the Clock in the Morning we discover'd the three Islands that lye before Trepano, Levanzo, Marettima, and Favagna.

The second and third the Weather was ill, and the Wind unconstant, so that we made but little way.

The fourth, by break of day we discover'd the Island of Pantalarea.

The fifth by Morning we found our selves within a League and a half of the Coast of Sicily, just against Cape Passaro, at what time, the Weather being fair, we had a view of Mount Gibello, all cover'd with Snow. Doubling the Cape in the Afternoon, we discover'd the Coast of Saragossa. The sixth we had little or no Wind. But the seventh in the Morning, the Weather being fair, we discover'd Cape Spartivento; and the same Wind continuing all that day, toward Evening we sail'd in view of other Islands of Calabria.

The eighth we found our selves near to Cape Borsano, and all the rest of the day we sail'd in view of Cape Scillo and Cape delle Colonne.

The ninth we made little way. But on the Tenth in the Morning the Wind coming about to the South, we found our selves at the entry of the Gulf of Venice, between Cape St. Mary and the Coast of Greece, where the Mountains were cover'd with Snow. About ten of the Clock we tack'd to our own Course, while the Ships that were bound for Venice and Ancona entered the Gulf.

The tenth by Morning we saw two little Islands, the one call'd Fauno, the other Merlera, and were in sight of Corfu. About Noon, the Wind being at East, we kept out at Sea: and about Evening abundance of little Birds lighted upon our Cordage, of which we caught enow to make a lusty Fricasie. We also caught four Falcons, Owls, and good store of Turtles.

The eleventh and twelfth the Wind being at East, we lay hovering about the Shoar, without making any way.

The fourteenth and fifteenth having the Wind at North-West, we were two days without seeing Land, yet we caught good store of Birds.

The sixteenth the same Wind continuing, we found our selves near the Island of Zant. From eight in the Morning till three in the Afternoon we were becalm'd; but then a good brisk West Wind carry'd away all our little Birds.

The seventeenth and eighteenth we were becalm'd.

The nineteenth in the Morning, the Wind being at North-West, we discover'd Cape Gallo, between Modon and Coron, in the Morea.

The twentieth, with the same Wind that blew fresh, we found our selves by Morning within two Cannon-shot of Cape Matapan, which is the most Southern Cape of all Europe. About Noon the Wind coming full West, in three hours we pass'd by the Point of the Island Cerigo.

The twenty-first in the Morning, we discover'd the Islands of Caravi and Falconera on the one side, and Cape Schilli on the other hand. Two hours after, having a fresh Gale at South-West, about Evening we were in view of the Island of St. George.

The twenty-second though the Wind slackn'd, yet we made some way; for in the Morning we found our selves between the Island of Zea and the Morea, near to another Cape delle Colonne: afterwards we discover'd the Island of Negropont, and doubl'd the Cape three hours after Noon, having left sight of the Island of Andros by ten in the Forenoon.

The twenty-third the Wind blowing fresh all the night, by morning we found our selves near the Island of Ipsera. At noon we made the Point of the Island of Chio, Chio, near to the Land; and that night we came to an Anchor near the Castle, being becalm'd.

The twenty-fourth the Wind rose at North-West, which blew us into the Port of Smyrna.

The twenty-fifth we went a-shoar, having had a quiet as passage as ever I had in my Life for twenty days together.

CHAP. II.

A Continuation of the Author's sixth Voyage, as he travel'd from Smyrna to Ispahan.

WE staid at Smyrna from the twenty-fifth of April to the ninth of June; during which time there happ'nd so terrible an Earthquake; that I had like to have tumbld out of my Bed.

The Caravan being ready to set out for Tauris, I took with me three Armenian Servants, besides those that I carry'd out of France to serve me upon the Road.

We set out of Smyrna upon Monday the ninth of June at three a Clock in the afternoon. The Caravan rendezvuz'd at Pont-garbasli, three Leagues from the City, consisting of six hundred Camels, and almost the same number of Horse. We set out the next night, two hours after midnight. As for the Road I shall say nothing, only relate some Passages that fell out by the way.

Being come to Erivan, the fourteenth of September we encamp'd in a pleasant green place between the Castle and the old Town; for we would not lye in the Inn, because we heard that several sick people lodg'd there. We staid there two days; during which time I resolv'd to wait upon the Kan, I found him in a Room made in one of the Arches of the Bridge which is built over the River, which I have describ'd already, with several Captains and Officers about him: when he had ask'd me whence I came, and whither I was travelling, he caus'd a Glas of Liquor to be fill'd me. After that I presented him with a Prospective-Glas, six pair of ordinary Spectacles, twelve other pair of Spectacles that cast several Reflexions, two little Pistols, and a Steel to strike Fire, made like a Pistol. All which pleas'd him extremely well, especially the Spectacles, for he was sixty years of age. Thereupon he commanded a Lamb, Wine, Fruit, and Melons to be carry'd to my Tent, and that I should want nothing. After that we sate down to Dinner, but I observ'd the Kan himself drank no Wine, though he press'd me to it. The reason was, because he was an Agi, that is, one that had made his Pilgrimage to Mecca; for then it is not lawful to drink Wine, or any other inebriating Drink. After Dinner, finding him in a pleasant humour, I resolv'd to complain to him of one of the Custom-Officers about an injury he had done me. For it is usual with the Customer in this place to op'n the Chests of all the Merchants, both Turks and Armenians, to the end that if they have any thing of Rarity the Kan of Erivan may see it: for many times, he buyes what pleases him best to send to the King. This Officer would not excuse me for his Custom, and therefore at my very first arrival he would have me to op'n my Chests; and because I did not do it according to his Orders, he ask'd me very rudely why I had not obey'd his Commands: I answer'd him as surlily, that I would op'n my Chest no where unless it were in the presence of the King, and that as for him, I knew him not: Upon that he threaten'd me, that if he did not find my Chests op'n the next day, he would op'n them by force; thereupon I said no more, but bid him have a care I did not make him repent of what he had done already. This was the ground of the Quarrel, and I was about to have complain'd to the Kan; but his Nephew intreated me for the love I bare him, not to say any thing of it, and promis'd to send the Customer to me to beg my Pardon, which he did, and the Customer was forc'd to crave it heartily. To avoid the same inconvenience for the future, I desir'd the Kan to give me his Passport, to the end I might pass Custom-free free through the Territories of his Government, which he freely and courteously granted me: Come, said he, and dine with me to morrow, and you shall have it.

The twenty-sixth of September we departed from Erivan, and the ninth of November we came to Tauris; taking the ordinary Road.

At Erivan two of my Servants, the one a Watch-maker, the other a Gold-smith, dy'd; I left them sick there, but caus'd them to be buried in the Church-yard belonging to the Armenians. One of them dy'd in fifteen days, of a Gangrene, which eat out his Mouth and Throat; being the Disease of the Country. Though had the Armenians known that one of them had been a Protestant, they would never have allow'd him to have been bury'd in their Church-yard.

Here observe the exact Justice, wherewith the Persians preserve the Goods of Strangers. For the Civil Judge hearing of the death of the Watch-maker, caus'd his Chamber to be seal'd up, to the end the Goods might be preserv'd for the kindred of the deceas'd, if they came to demand them. I return'd to Tauris a twelve-month after, and found the Chamber close seal'd up.

We staid twelve days at Tauris; during which time I resolv'd to attend the Kan of Shamaqui, a frontier Town of Persia toward the Caspian Sea; but I found him not there, in regard it was Harvest season, at what time he goes to gather the King's and his own Duties.

Two days journey on this side Shamaqui you pass the Aras, and for two days journey you travel through a Country all planted with white Mulberry-Trees; the Inhabitants being all Silk-Weavers. Before you come to the City, you must cross over several Hills: But I think I should rather have call'd it a great Town, where there was nothing remarkable but a fair Castle which the Kan built himself, I speak of the time past: For as I return'd from this present Voyage of which I now write, when I came to Tauris I understood, that there had happen'd such a terrible Earthquake in the Town as had laid all the Houses in a heap; none escaping that dismal subversion, but only one Watch-maker of Geneva, and one more who was a Camel-driver. I had several times design'd to return into France through Muscovy, but I durst never adventure, being certainly inform'd that the Muscovite never permitted any person to go out of Muscovy into Persia, nor to come out of Persia into Muscovy. So that it was by particular connivence that that favour was granted to the Duke of Holstein's Ambassadors. This last time I was resolv'd to have try'd whether I could have open'd a Passage from Persia through Muscovy into France, but the Ruine of Shamaqui deterr'd me.

We departed from Tauris the twenty-second of November, from whence to Casban we met with nothing considerable; but only one of the Muscovite Ambassadors upon his return into his own Country, with a small Retinue of sixty, his Companion dying at Ispahan.

Upon Sunday the fourteenth of December taking Horse by three of the Clock in the morning, the Ice bearing very well, we came to Ispahan about noon: but in regard it was slippery before day, and very plathy after the Sun was up, the Journey was both tedious and troublesome.

CHAP. III.

The Road from Aleppo to Tauris through Diarbequir and Van.

Here are two Roads more remaining to be describ'd; one through the North part of Turkie, the other through the South. The first through Diarbequir and Van, and so to Tauris; the second through Anna, and the small Desert leading to Bagdat.

I will describe the first of these Roads, and make a skip at the first leap to Bit, whither I have already led you in the Road from Aleppo.

From Bir or Beri, you travel all along the River Euphrates to Cachemé.

From Cachemé you come to Milesara, where you pay the Customs of Ourfa, when when you do not pass through the City, which amounts to four Piasters for every Horse-load.

From Milesara you come to the River Arzlan-chaye, or, the Lion River, by reason of the rapidity of the Stream which falls into Euphrates.

From Arzlan-chaye you go to Senerak. This is a City, water'd by a River, that also falls into Euphrates. It is environ'd with a great Plain to the North, the West, and South. The way which the Horses, Mules, and Camels keep is cut through the Rock like a Channel, two Foot deep, where you must also pay half a Piafter for every Horse-load.

From Senerak you come to Bogazi, where there are two Wells, but not a House near; and where the Caravan usually lodges.

From Bogazi you come to Deguirman-Bogazi, and from Deguirman-Bogazi to Mirzatapa, where there is only an Inn.

From Mirzatapa you come to Diarbequir, which the Turks call Car-emu.

Diarbequir is a City situated upon a rising ground, on the right side of Tigris; which in that place forms a Half-moon; the descent from the Walls to the River being very steep. It is encompass'd with a double Wall; the outward Wall being strengthened with sixty-two Towers, which they report were built in Honour of the sixty two Disciples of JESUS CHRIST. The City has but three Gates, over one of which there is an Inscription in Greek and Latin, that makes mention of one Constantine. There are in it two or three fair Piazza's, and a magnificent Mosquee, which was formerly a Christian Church. It is surrounded with very decent Charnel-houses, near to which the Moullah's, Derv's, Book-sellers and Stationers do live, together with all those other people that concern the Law. About a League from the City there is a Channel cut out of Tigris, that brings the Water to the City: And in this Water are all the red Marroquins wash'd that are made at Diarbequir, surpassing in colour all others in the East: which Manufacture employs a fourth part of the Inhabitants of the City. The Soil is very good, and yields according to expectation; there is excellent Bread and very good Wine, nor is there any better Provision to be had in any part of Persia: more especially, there is a sort of Pigeons which in goodness excel all the several kinds that we have in Europe. The City is very well peopl'd, and it is thought there are in it above twenty thousand Christians. The two thirds are Armenians, the rest Nestorians, with some few Jacobites. There are also some few Capuchins, that have no House of their own, but are forc'd to lodge in an Inn.

The Basha of Diarbequir is one of the Viziers of the Empire. He has but an inconsiderable Infantry, which is not much requisite in that Country; the Curds and Arabs which infest that Country being all Horse-men. But he is strong in Cavalry, being able to bring above twenty thousand Horse into the Field. A quarter of an hours riding on this side Diarbequir there is a great Town with a large Inn, where the Caravans that go and come from Persia rather choose to lye than at Diarbequir; in regard that in the City-Inns, they pay three or four Piasters for every Chamber, but in the Country-Inns there is nothing demanded.

At Diarbequir, you cross the Tigris, which is always fordable unless when the Snow and Rains have swell'd it; for then you must go a quarter of a League higher, and cross it over a great Stone-Bridge. Half a League on the other side of Tigris stands a Village, with an Inn, which is the Rendezvous of the whole Caravan, and where they that first come have time enough to provide themselves for a Journey of nine or ten days, as far as Betlis. For though you may find Towns and Inns thick enough upon the Road, yet there is no good Bread to be met with.

When the Caravan proceeds, the first days journey is fourteen hours on Horse-back, and you come to lye at Shaye-batman, where you must pay a Piafter for every Horse-load.

From Chaye-batman you come to Chikaran.

From Chikaran to Azon, which you leave half a League from the great Road, where the Toll-gatherers take their Toll, which is four Piasters upon every Horse-load.

From Azon you come to Ziarat; from Ziarat to Zerque, where you pay a Duty of two Piasters for every Horse-load.

From Zerque to Cochakan.

From

From Cochakan, to Carakan, a bad Inn; where you enter among the Mountains, that being full of Torrents reach as far as Betlis.

From Carakan to Betlis, a City belonging to a Bey or Prince of the Country, the most potent and most considerable of all the rest for he neither acknowledges the Grand Signor nor the Persian: whereas all the other Beys are Tributary either to the one or the other. And it is the Interest of those two Potentates to correspond with him; for it's an easie thing for him to stop up the passage from Aleppo to Tauris, or from Tauris to Aleppo; the Streights of the Mountains being so narrow, that ten Men may defend them against a thousand. Coming near Betlis you must travel a whole day among high steep Mountains, that reach two miles beyond, with Torrents on each side; the way being cut out of the Rock on each side, where there is but just room for a Camel to pass. The City stands between two high Mountains, equally distant one from the other, and about the height of Montmartre. It is built like a Sugar-loaf, the ascent being so steep on every side, that there is no getting to the top, but by wheeling and winding about the Mountain. The top of all is a Platform, where stands a Castle well built, at the Gate whereof is a Draw-Bridge. Then you pass through two great Courts, and then into a third, opposite to the Bey's Apartment. It is very troublesome to get up to the top of the Castle, and a Man must be very well Hors'd that does it. There is no other person but the Bey and his Esquire, who is permitted to ride up on Horse back. There is one Inn within the City, and another as it were without, in which the Merchants rather choose to lye than in the other, by reason that it is ready to be overflown when the Torrents swell, that run through every Street. The Bey, beside the strength of his Passes, is able to bring above five and twenty thousand Horse into the Field; and a very considerable Body of Foot, compos'd of the Shepherds of the Country, who are to be ready at a Call. I went to wait upon the Bey himself, and made him a Present of two pieces of Satin, the one streakt with Silver, and the other with Gold: two white Bonnets, such as the Turks wear, very fine, and adorn'd with Silver at the top; together with a sute of Handkerchiffs, streak'd with Red and Silver. While I staid with the Bey, who sent for Coffee for me according to the custom, a Courier came to him from the Basha of Aleppo, to desire him that he would deliver up into his hands a French Chirurgion that was his Slave, having been tak'n in Candia; complaining withall, that he had run away from him with the value of three thousand Crowns. The Bey, who understood what belong'd to a Sanctuary, and was resolv'd to protect the French-man, school'd the Messenger so severely, that he threaten'd to put him to death if he did not get him gone presently; charging him to tell his Master withal, that he would complain to the Grand Signor of his insolence; and that if he were strangl'd, he might thank himself. And indeed it behov'd the Great Turk to keep fair correspondence with him; in regard that if the Persians should at any time besiege Van, the Grand Signor must march through the Bey's Country to relieve it; who has Forces enow to oppose him if he should be his Enemy.

But to travel through the Country of the Curds is very pleasant: for if on the one side the ways are bad, and difficult to be travell'd, in other places you have a prospect of several sorts of Trees, as Oaks and Walnuts, and not a Tree which is not embrac'd with a wild Vine. Below the Mountains, in the Level, grows the best Wheat and Barley in all the Country.

From Betlis, where you pay five Piasters for every Horse-load, to Taduan, where you pay two.

Taduan is a great Town within a Cannon-shot of the Lake of Van, in such a port, where Nature has made a Hav'n, shelter'd from all the Winds; being clos'd on all sides with high Mountains, the entry into which though it seem narrow, is very free. It is able to contain twenty or thirty great Barks; and when it is fair Weather, and that the Wind serves, the Merchants generally Ship off their Goods from thence to Van: from whence it is but four and twenty hours sail, and a very good passage; whereas by Land from Taduan to Van it is eight days journey on Horse-back. Returning back, you may also take Water at Van for Taduan.

From Taduan to Karmoushé.

From Karmoushé to Kellat.

From Kellat to Algiaoux, a small City, where you pay one Piafter for every Load.

From Agiaoux to Spanktiere.

From Spanktiere to Souier.

From Souier to Argiche.

From Argiche to Quiarakierpon.

From Quiarakierpon to Perkeri.

From Perkeri to Zuarzazin.

From Zuarzazin to Souferat.

From Souferat to Devan, where two Piafers are gather'd for every Horse-load, or else you must pay at Van.

From Devan to Van, where there is a Duty of two Tomans and four Abassiss to be paid for every Horse-load. For though Van be in the Territories of the Grand Signor, yet the Persian Money is better lik'd than his own Coyn.

Van is a great City upon the side of a wide Lake of the same name. There is a good Fortrefs belongs to it, that is seated upon the top of a high Mountain which stands by it self. There is but one sort of Fish in the Lake, a little bigger than a Pilchard, of which they take great store in the Month of April. For about a League from the Lake there is a great River that is call'd Bendmahi, which descending from the Mountains of Armenia, empties it self into the Lake. Now in March when the Snow melts and swells the River, vast numbers of these Fish come down the River into the Lake; which the Fisher-men observing, so stop up the Mouth of the River that the Fish cannot go back; for else they would not stay above forty days; at which time they catch 'em up in wide-mouth'd Baskets at the Mouth of the River, thinking to return; it being lawful for any man to fish. The people drive a great Trade in these Fish, transporting them into Persia and Armenia; for, the Persians and Armenians both, drinking Wine at the end of their Feasts, they then bring this Dish to the Table for a Relishing-bit. The people of Van tell a Story, how that there was a certain rich Merchant who farm'd the whole Fishery, paying a good sum of Money for it to the Basha; who thereupon strictly forbad any to fish but the Merchant; whereas before it was free for any man. But when the Fishing-season came, and that the Merchant thought to have caught his Fish, he met with nothing but Serpents. So that after that time the Fishery was never more farm'd. And there seems to be something in it; for the Basha's, who are a sort of people that will lose nothing they can get, would be certain to farm the Fish again and again, were there not some strange reason to hinder it. There are two principal Islands in the Lake of Van; the one call'd Adaketons, where there stand two Covents of the Armenians, Sourphague and Sourp-kara: the other Island is call'd Limadasi, and the name of the Covent is Limquiliasi, all which Armenian Monks live very austere.

From Van to Darcheck.

From Darcheck to Nuchar; it stands in the Territories of a Bey of Curdistan, being a paltry Village consisting of two or three little Houses. These Bey's are a kind of particular Lords, upon the Frontiers of both the Empires of Turkie and Persia, who care for neither: for they lye so secure among the Mountains, that there is no assaulting them by force. The Curds in general are a brutish sort of people; who though they stile themselves Mahometans, have very few Moullah's to instruct or teach them. They have a particular veneration for black Grey-hounds: so that if any person should be seen to kill one of them, he would be knock'd o'the Head immediately. Neither does any one dare to cut an Onion with a Knife in their presence; but it must be squeez'd between two Stones by him that intends to make use of it; so ridiculously superstitious they are.

The Bey to whom Nuchar belongs has his Toll-gatherers in that place, who exact sixteen Abassiss for every Horse-load, besides a Present which the Caravan-Bashi is oblig'd to present him, which comes sometimes to seven or eight Tomans: sometimes more: for otherwise the Bey would be sure to watch the Caravan at some scurvy place, and plunder it to some purpose. As once it happen'd to a Caravan, with which my Nephew went along in the year 1672; though he had the good luck to lose nothing more than one Camel laden with English Cloth, and another with his Provision. The Basha of Van and the Kan of Tauris took the Field with an intention to remedy these disorders: especially the Basha of Van, who perceiving that the Merchants would forsake that Road by reason of the Injuries they daily receiv'd receiv'd, was resolv'd to make the Basha restore some part of his Goods which he had taken from the Merchants; and for the future to leave two of his Subjects in Tauris, and two in Van, that should be responsible for what mischief should be done to the Caravan. For otherwise the Merchants like this way best, as being the nearest from Aleppo to Tauris, and where they pay less Duties.

From Nuchar to Kuticlar, is a long Journey through the Mountains, by the side of several Torrents, which are to be cross'd in several places. This bad way brings Fifty i'the Hundred profit to the Bey of Nuchar; for were the Caravan to travel through Plains, or a level Country, one Horse or Camel would carry as much as two or three, and the Merchant would pay Custom for no more. Here therefore the Caravan-Bashi and the Merchants must understand one another, and agree as cunningly as they can together.

From Kuticlar to Kalvat.

From Kalvat to Kogia.

From Kogia to Darkavin.

From Darkavin to Soliman-Sera: all which four places are very convenient Inns.

From Soliman-Sera to Kours: in that City resides a Bey, who is tributary to the King of Persia. He lives in an ancient Castle about half a League off, where the Caravan pays nine Abassi's for every Horse-load, besides a Present. But that Present consists only in Sugar-loaves, Boxes of Treacle, or Marmale; for he stands so much upon his Honour, that he scorns to take Money. The Wine of Kours is sweet and tart.

From Kours to Devogli.

From Devogli to Checheme. About half way between these two places you cross a Plain, which upon the South extends it self a League to the Mountains, but upon the North-side enlarges it self out of sight. Upon the High-way, on the left hand stands a Rock three hundred Paces in compass, and about fourscore Foot high; round about it were to be seen several Dens, which most certainly had been the Habitations of those that fed their Cattel thereabouts. Under the Rock, which is hollow, appears a Fountain of clear cold Water, wherein there was great store of Fish; thousands of which would come up to the top of the Water, when a man threw any Bread into it. The Fish had a great Head, and a large Mustache. I shot a Carbine into the River charg'd with Hail-shot, upon which they all disappear'd, but presently five or six return'd wounded to the top of the Water, which we easily took. The Armenians laugh'd at me for shooting, believing it had been impossible to catch them in that manner; but they admir'd when they beheld them again turning up their bellies at the top of the Water. The Turks and some of the Armenians would not eat of them, believing them to be desil'd: but the Armenians that had been in Europe laugh'd at their Superstition, and fell to, when they were dress'd.

From Checheme to Davashiler.

From Davashiler to Marand; a City where you must pay sixteen Abassi's for a Camel's-load, and eight for a Horses.

From Merand to Sefian.

From Sefian to Tauris. These are the two biggest days journies throughout the Road.

Returning out of Persia this way, we could not get Bread for Money; so that we were forc'd to give the Women some Trifles which they lov'd better. Through the People are Mahometans, yet they will not spare to drink lustily.

Another Road from Aleppo to Tauris, through Gezîré and other places.

F rom Aleppo to Bir or Beri , where you must cross Euphrates , days	4
From Bir to Ourfa , days	2
From Ourfa to Diarbequir , days	6
From Diarbequir to Gezîré , days	4

Gezîré is a little City of Mesopotamia, built upon an Island in the River Tigris; which is there to be cross'd over a fair Bridge of Boats. Here the Merchants meet to buy Gall-nuts and Tobacco. The City is under the Jurisdiction of a Bey.

Having past the Tigris, all the Country between that and Tauris is almost equally divided between Hills and Plains; the Hills are cover'd with Oaks that bear Galls, and some Acorns withal. The Plains are planted with Tobacco, which is transported into Turkie, for which they have a very great Trade. One would think the Country were poor, seeing nothing but Galls and Tobacco; but there is no Country in the World where there is more Gold or Silver laid out, and where they are more nice in taking Money that is in the least defective either in weight or goodness of Metal. For Galls being a general Commodity for Dying, and no where to be found so good as there, bring a vast Trade to the Country; wherein there are no Villages, yet it is over-spread with Houses a Musquet-shot one from another; and every Inhabitant has his quarter of his Vineyard by himself, where they dry their Grapes: for they make no Wine.

Amadié is a good City, to which the Natives of a great part of Affyria bring their Tobacco, and Gall-nuts. It is seated upon a high Mountain, to the top whereof you cannot get in less than an hour. Towards the middle of the Rock three or four large Springs fall down from the Cliffs, where the Inhabitants are forc'd to water their Cattel and fill their Borachio's every morning, there being no Water in the City. It is of an indifferent bigness, and in the middle is a large Piazza, where all sorts of Merchants keep their Shops. It is under the Command of a Bey that is able to raise eight or ten thousand Horse, and more Foot than any other of the Beys, by reason his Country is so populous.

From Amadié to Giousmark, days

From Giousmark to Alback, days

From Alback to Salmaestre, days

Salmaestre is a pleasant City upon the Frontiers of the Affyrians and Medes, and the first on that side in the Territories of the Persian King. The Caravan never lyes there, because it would be above a League out of the way: but when the Caravan is lodg'd, two or three of the principal Merchants with the Caravan-Bashi according to custom go to wait upon the Kan. The Kan is so glad that the Caravan takes that Road, that he presents the Caravan-Bashi and those that go with him, with the Garment of Honour, or the Calaat, the Bonnet, and Girdle; which is the greatest Honour that the King or his Governour can do to Strangers.

From Salmaestre to Tauris, days.

In all thirty-two days journey this way from Aleppo to Tauris. But though this be the shortest cut, and where they pay least Customs, yet the Merchants dare hardly venture for fear of being ill us'd by the Beys.

Teren, whose Capital City the Persians call Cherijar, is a Province between Mazandran and the ancient Region of the Persians known at this day by the name of Kierac, to the South-East of Ispahan. 'Tis one of the most temperate Countries, that has nothing in it of the contagious Air of Guilan, where the King goes for the purity of the Air, and for his sport of Hunting; besides, that it produceth excellent Fruits in many places. The Capital City whereof, which some call by the name of the Province, is of a moderate compass, but there is nothing worthy observation in it: only a League from it are to be seen the Ruines of a great City, which had been two Leagues in Circuit. There were abundance of Towers all of burnt Brick, and Pieces of the Wall standing. There were also several Letters in the Stones which were cemented into the Walls; but neither Turks, Persians, nor Arabians could understand them. The City is round seated upon a high Hill, at the top whereof stood the Ruines of a Castle, which the Natives say was the Residence of the Kings of Persia.

had

CHAP. V.

The Road from Aleppo to Ispahan through the small Desert, and through Kengavar.

I Will describe this Road as if I were to return from Ispahan to Aleppo. This Road lies through Kengavar, Bagdat, and Anna, where you enter into the Desert, which I call The little Desert, because you get over it in far less time than the great Desert that extends Southwards to Arabia the Happy, and where you may often find Water, all the whole Journey being not far distant from the River Euphrates. A man that is well mounted may ride this way from Ispahan to Aleppo in three and thirty day, as I have done, and perhaps in less, if the Arabian, whom you take for your guide at Bagdat, knows the shortest cut through the Wilderness.

The Horse Caravans travelling from Ispahan to Kengavar are fourteen or fifteen days upon the Road; but being well mounted ten or twelve in a Company, you may Ride it in five or six days. The Country through which you travel, is very fertile in Corn and Rice, it produces also excellent Fruits and good Wine, especially about Kengavar, which is a large Town well peopl'd.

From Kengavar to Bagdat I was ten days upon the Road. The Country is not so fertile but very stony in some parts. And it consists in Plains and small Hills, there being not a Mountain in all the Road.

Now for a man that travels quick, the Road lies thus:

From Ispahan to Consar.

From Consar to Comba.

From Comba to Oranguie.

From Oranguie to Nabouand.

From Nabouand to Kengavar.

From Kengavar to Sabana.

From Sabana to Polisha, or the Bridge-Royal, being a great Stone Bridge.

From Polisha to Maidacht.

From Maidacht to Erounabad.

From Erounabad to Conaguy.

From Conaguy to Castisciren.

From Castisciren to Iengui-Conaguy.

From Iengui-Conaguy to Casfered.

From Casfered to Charaban.

From Charaban to Bourous.

From Bourous to Bagdat.

There are some, who instead of passing through Kengavar, take Amadan, one of the most considerable Cities of Persia in their way, and so from thence to Toucheré; but the way is longer; and according to the Road which I have set down you are to leave Amadan to the North upon the right hand.

Between Sabana and Polisha you leave the only high Mountain in all the Road to the North. It is as steep and as straight as a Wall, and as high as you can see; you may observe the Figures of men clad like Priests, with Surplices and Censurs in their hands, and yet neither can the Natives tell you, nor any person imagin the meaning of those Sculptures. At the foot of the Rock runs a River, over which there is a Bridge of Stone.

About

About a days journey beyond the Mountain you meet with a little City, whose situation, the Streams that water it, the good Fruits that grow there, and particularly the excellent Wine which it affords, render a most pleasant Mansion. The Persians believe that Alexander when he return'd from Babylon dy'd in this place, what-ever others have writt'n that he dy'd at Babylon. All the rest of the Country from this City to Bagdat is a Country of Dates, where the people live in little Huts, made of the Branches of Palm-trees.

From Bagdat to Anna you ride in four days, through a desert Country, though it lye between two Rivers.

Anna is a City of an indifferent bigness, that belongs to an Arabian Emir. For about half a League round about the Town, the Lands are very well manur'd, being full of Gardens and Country-houses. The City for its situation resembles Paris; for it is built upon both sides of the River Euphrates; and in the midst of the River is an Island, where stands a fair Mosque.

From Anna to Mached-raba is five days riding, and from Mached-raba to Taiba, five days more.

Mached-raba is a kind of a Fortrefs upon the point of a Hill, at the Foot whereof springs a Fountain like a large Vase, which is very rare in the Deserts. The place is encompass'd with high Walls, defended by certain Towers, and in which are little Huts where the Inhabitants keep their Cattel, of which there is great store, but more Mares and Horses than Cows.

Taiba is also a fortifi'd place in a level Country, or a high Bank of Earth and Brick bak'd in the Sun. Near to the Gate a Fountain springs out of the Earth, and makes a kind of a Pond. This Road is most frequented by those that travel through the Desert from Aleppo or Damas to Babylon, or from Damas to Diarbequir, by reason of this Fountain.

From Taiba to Aleppo is but three days journey; but these three days are the most dangerous of all the Road for Robbers, in regard that all the Country is inhabited only by the Bedouins, or Arabian Shepherds, who make it their business only to plunder and steal.

Now to take the same Road from Aleppo to Ispahan, it lyes thus:

From Aleppo to Taiba, days	3
From Taiba to Mached-raba, days	5
From Mached-raba to Anna, days	5
From Anna to Bagdat, days	4
From Bagdat to Bourous, days	1
From Bourous to Charaban, days	1
From Charaban to Casered, days	1
From Casered to Conaguy, days	1
From Conaguy to Cassiscerin, days	1
From Cassiscerin to another Conaguy, days	1
From Conaguy to Erounabad, days	1
From Erounabad to Maidacht, days	1
From Maidacht to Sabana, days	1

From Kengavar to Naboiand, days	1
From Naboiand to Oranguie, days	1
From Oranguie to Comba, days	1
From Comba to Consar, days	1
From Consar to Ispahan, days	1

So that whether you travel from Aleppo to Ispahan, or from Ispahan to Aleppo you may easily ride it in thirty days.

From whence I make this Observation, That a man making it but two days more from Alexandretta, and finding a Ship ready there to set sail for Marseilles, with a fair Wind he may travel from Ispahan to Paris in two months.

Another time, having an occasion to go from Aleppo to Kengavar, and so to Bagdat; and from thence, so through the Desert; at Bagdat I met with a Spaniard that was travelling the same way, with whom I luckily met to bear half the Charges of the Guide; which as soon as we had hir'd for sixty Crowns, we set forward from

Bagdat; the Spaniard, and I, and our Arabian, who was afoot, walk'd about a Pistol Shot before our Horses. From thence to Anna we met with nothing remarkable, but only that we saw a Lyon and a Lyonesse in the Act of Generation. Whereupon our Guide believing we had been afraid, told us, that he had met them oft'n, but that he never found them do any harm.

The Spaniard according to the humour of his Nation, was very reserv'd, and contenting himself with an Onion, or some such small matter at meals, never made much of his guide; whereas I was mightily in his favour, in regard there was never a day pass'd wherein he did not receive of me some good business or other. We were not above a Musquet Shot from Anna when we met with a comely old man, who came up to me, and taking my Horse by the Bridle, Friend, said he, come and wash thy feet and eat Bread at my House. Thou art a Stranger, and since I have met thee upon the Road, never refuse me the favour which I desire of thee. The Invitation of the old man was so like the custom of the people in ancient times, of which we read so many Examples in Scripture, that we could not choose but go along with him to his House, where he Feasted us in the best manner he could, giving us over and above Barly for our Horses; and for us he kill'd a Lamb and some Hens. He was an Inhabitant of Anna, and liv'd by the River, which we were oblig'd to cross to wait upon the Governour for our Passports, for which we paid two Piasters apiece. We staid at a House near the Gate of the City to buy Provisions for our selves and our Horses; where the woman of the House having a lovely sprightly Child of nine years of age, I was so taken with her humour, that I gave her two Handkerchiefs of Painted Calicut, which the Child shewing her Mother, all we could do could not make her take any Money for the Provisions we had agreed for.

Five hundred paces from the Gate of the City, we met a young man of a good Family, for he was attended by two Servants, and rode upon an Ass, the hinder part of which was Painted red. He accosted me in particular, and after some Compliments that pass'd, Is it possible, said he, that I should meet a Stranger; and have nothing to present him withal. He would fain have carry'd us to a House in the Country whither he was going; but seeing we were resolv'd to keep our way, he would needs give me his Pipe, notwithstanding all the excuses I could make, and though I told him that I never took any Tobacco; so that I was constrain'd to accept of it.

About three Leagues from Anna, we were going to eat among the Ruines of certain Houses, and had thought to have lain there 'till midnight, when we perceiv'd two Arabians sent by the Emir, to tell us that he had some Letters which he would put into our own hands to the Basha of Aleppo, to which purpose he had order to bring us back. There was no refusing, so that at our coming into the City the next day we saw the Emir going to the Mosquée, mounted upon a stately Horse, and attended by a great number of people afoot, with every one a great Poniard stuck in their Girdles. As soon as we saw him we alighted, and standing up by the Houses, we saluted him as he pass'd by. Seeing our Guide, and threatening to rip up his Belly; Ye Dog, said he; I will give ye your reward, and teach ye to carry Strangers away before I see them. Carry them, said he, to the Governours House, 'till I return from the Mosquée. Returning from the Mosquée, and being seated in a spacious Hall, he sent for us and our Guide, whom he threatned again for carrying us out of the Town without giving him notice. But the Governour pleaded his excuse, and appeas'd the Emir. After that he sent for Coffee for us, and then caus'd us to open the Budget that we carry'd behind our Horses, to see whether there were any thing that pleas'd him or no. In my Budget were two pieces of Calicut exquisitely painted, for two Coverlets of a Bed; two pieces of Handkerchief of Calicut; two Persian Standishes beautify'd with Japon Varnish; two Damascene Blades, one inlaid with Gold, the other with Silver. All which he lik'd, and made me give him. In the Spaniards Budget he found nothing but a few old Clothes. But afterwards being known to have had some Diamonds about him, the French Consul at Aleppo sentenc'd him to pay me half the charges of what I gave the Emir.

The Prince satisfi'd with what he had tak'n, gave order that we should be furnish'd with all necessary Provisions for our selves and our Horses: but being provided before, before, we only took three or four handfuls of excellent Dates, to shew that we did not slight his kindness.

Between Anna and Mached-raba is the Guide to take special care so to order his Stages, as to come every morning to the Wells by break of day, for fear of meeting the Arabs, that come to fetch Water there by that time the Sun is up, who are apt enough to be injurious to Travellers.

At Mached-raba I saw one of the most beautiful Virgins that ever I beheld in my life. For I had given a Piafter to an Arab to get me some Bread, and going to see whether it were bak'd, I found the Virgin putting it into the Oven, who being alone, made me a sign to retire. There I also saw a Colt of that wonderful shape, that the Basha of Damas had offer'd three thousand Crowns for it.

Coming to Taiba, we did not go into the Town, but lay without under the Walls. Only our Arab went in and brought us chopt Straw for our Camels. The Governour of the Town came along with him, and demanded twenty Piasters of every one, for certain Duties which he pretended payable to him. We knew there were but four due, and refus'd to pay any more; but the Arab having a mind to put a trick upon the Spaniard, gave me a wink, intimating to me that I should not trouble my self: Thereupon the Governour incens'd goes back to the Town, and by and by returns with an Iron Chain; and had certainly carry'd the Spaniard fetter'd to the Fort, had he not laid down the twenty Piasters. For my part, I was discharg'd for my four Piasters, according to custom.

Drawing near to Aleppo, the first Houses that we came at bordering upon the Desert were the Houses of the Arabs and Bedouins; the second of which being the Habitation of a Friend of our Guide's, I deliver'd my Horse to the Guide, to whom I had sold it before at his own earnest request; for I was resolv'd to go a-foot to Aleppo: and therefore that I might save the Custom of a parcel of Turquoises that I had about me, I put them in the Pouches which I carry'd behind my Horse, and threw the Pouches into a little Chest, as if they had been things of no consequence; and desir'd the Man of the House to keep them a day or two. The Arab told me, that were it all Gold it should be safe; and indeed when I sent for them within a day or two after, I found nothing missing.

When I came to Aleppo, the English Consul ask'd me what news from Isfahan: I made answer, that he must of necessity know better than I, in regard the English President there had sent away an Express to him while I was there; and that he went away with two Capuchins and an Arabian Guide. There upon the Consul mistrusting some mischief was befall'n them, requested the Basha to lend him some of his Soldiers; who readily granted him eight Men, part Arabians, part Bedouins. These the Consul order'd to disperse themselves upon several Roads in the Wilderness, to see if they could meet with any tidings upon the Way. In a short time two of them return'd with two little Pouches, in one of which was the Packet of Letters. They reported also, that in a by-place between Taiba and Mached-raba they saw the Bodies of four dead Men lying upon the Sand. One of them which was in black Clothes, being hack'd and mangled in a most miserable manner; but the Bodies of the other three were entire, though run through in several places. Some time after the persons themselves that did the fact told both at Diarbequir and Damas, how it came to pass. For certain Merchants of Damas going to Diarbequir, perceiv'd four Men early in the morning at certain Wells where they were to stop; whereupon they sent two of their Company before to know who they were. But the Austin-Frier having a little parcel of Diamonds about him, and believing them to be Thieves, inconsiderately let fly his Gun and kill'd one of them immediately upon the place: the Merchants seeing one of their companions dead, fell all at once upon the other three, cut the Austin-Frier to pieces, and slew the rest; and so without rifling them pursu'd their Journey.

From Aleppo I went to Alexandretta, and there embark'd in a Vessel of Mar-seilles, with a favourable Wind, 'till we came to make the Coast of Candy, where we were becalm'd for two days. One morning by break of day we discover'd a Pickaroon, whereupon seeing we could not avoid being fetch'd up by him, we made ready. He made two or three shot at us, which did us no other harm but only touch'd the Beak-head of the Ship. Our Gunner made a shot at him, which brought down his Top-gallant; a second went through and through the great Carbin, and and caus'd a great disorder in his Ship, as far as we could discern with our Prospective-Glasses. But when the Wind began to blow fresh, the Pirate, who had enough of us, and had discover'd another Vessel which perhaps he thought better prize, made all the Sail he could from us toward the other Vessel. Thereupon we pursu'd our Voyage with a fair Gale, and came to Malta.

From Malta we departed seven or eight in company, in two of the Pope's Gallies, staying three days at Syracuse, and one at Messina; where our Company increasing, we hir'd a Feluck for Naples. But as we were coasting by the Shoar to the Port of Naples, so terrible a Tempest surpriz'd us near to Paolo, that we were forc'd to put in there upon Palm-Sunday. The next day we went to see the Covent of St. Francis of Paolo; the way to it lying between a high Mountain on the right, and a Precipice on the left hand. This Mountain leans so, that it seems to be tumbling down; and there is a good height upon the Rock the seeming print of a Hand, which as the report goes, was the print of St. Francis's Hand, who sustain'd it a whole day, and kept it from falling. From Paolo we went to Naples, where we arriv'd upon Easter-eve; and as we enter'd into the City, the great Guns went off round the City, in honour of the Resurrection. At Rome we all separated, according as our Business led us.

CHAP. VI.

Another Road from Constantinople to Ispahan, by the Euxin or Black Sea; with some Remarks upon the principal Cities thereabouts.

There are three Roads yet remaining, leading out of Europe into Persia or the Indies. That of Constantinople, all along the Coasts of the Black Sea; that of Warsovia, crossing the same Sea at Trebisond; and that of Mosco, down the Volga, which has been amply describ'd by Olearius, Secretary to the Embassy of the Duke of Holstein. In this and the next Chapter I shall describe the Way from Constantinople, all along the Black Sea, and that from Warsovia, not knowing any person that has hitherto mention'd any thing upon this subject. And first of all I will give a short Description of the principal Places that lye upon that Sea, as well upon the side of Europe as of Asia, with the just distances of one Place from another.

The principal Cities upon the Black Sea, on the Coast of Europe.

From Constantinople to Varna they count it two hundred Miles, four of which make an Alman League; miles

From Varna to Balshiké, miles 200

From Balshiké to Bengali, miles 36

From Bengali to Constance, miles 70

From Constance to Queli, miles 60

Near to this City of Queli the great Arm of Danow throws it self into the Black Sea. Here is the grand Fishery for Sturgeon.

From Queli to Aquerman, miles 25

The City of Aquerman belongs to a Kan of the lesser Tartary; but it is not the place of his residence, for he keeps his Court at Basha-Serrail, twenty-five miles up in the Land.

From Aquerman to Keset or Kassa, miles 50

This is a great City, and a place of great Trade, wherein there are above a thousand Families of the Armenians, and about five hundred Greeks. They have every one their Bishop, and several Churches. St. Peter's is the biggest, very large and very beautiful; but it falls to decay, because the Christians have not Wealth enough enough to repair it. Every Christian above fifteen years of age, pays a Piafter and a half tribute to the Grand Signor, who is Lord of the City; and he sends a Basha that lives in the ancient City call'd Frink-Hesser. However the Kan of the Lesser Tartary extends his Jurisdiction as far as the Gates of Kaffa.

From Kaffa to Assaque, miles 70

Assaque is the last City in Europe, belonging also to the Grand Signor. By it runs a great River of the same name, the other side being in the Territories of the Duke of Moscovy. Down this River come the Cossacks that do so much mischief to the Turks. For sometimes they come with threescore or fourscore Gelias which are a kind of Brigantines, the bigger sort of which carry a hundred and fifty men, the less a hundred. Sometimes they divide themselves into two parts, one of which makes Havock toward Constantinople, the other Ravages the Coast of Asia, as far as Trebizond.

The Coast of Europe bord'ring upon the Black Sea is 861 miles in length.

The chief Citys upon the Black Sea on the Coast of Asia, which is 1170 miles in length.

From Constantinople to Neapoli, miles 250

In this City are made the greatest part of the Gallies and Vessels that belong to the Grand Signor.

From Neapoli to Sinabe, miles 250

From Sinabe to Ouma, miles 240

From Ouma to Kerason, miles 150

From Kerason to Trebizond, miles 80

From Rise to Guni, miles 100

The City of Guni belongs half to the Grand Signor, and half to the King of Mengrelia, with whom he keeps a good Correspondence, because the greatest part of the Steel and Iron that is spent in Turky comes out of Mengrelia through the Black Sea.

The only good Ports upon the Black Sea from Constantinople to Mengrelia, are, Quitros, Sinabe, or Sinope, Onnye, Samsom, Trebizond, Gommé.

The Haven of Quitros is very deep, and the Vessels lie shelter'd from the winds, but the entrance into it is very bad, which only the Pilots of the place, or they who have often accustom'd themselves to that Trade can only find out. It seems that anciently there had been most stately Buildings round about the Port; and several noble Pillars are to be seen all along the shore, not to speak of those which have been Transported to Constantinople. Near the City towards the South stands a high Mountain, whence there flows good store of excellent Water, which at the bottom gathers into one Fountain.

To go from Constantinople for Persia by Sea, you must embark at Constantinople for Trebizond, and many times for Rise or Guni, which are more to the North. They that Land at Trebizond go directly to Erzerom, which is not above five days Journey off, and from Erzerom to Erivan or Tunis. But there are few that will venture upon this Sea where there is no good Anchorage; besides that it is subject to prodigious Tempests, from which there are very few good Ports to defend them; which is the reason it is call'd Cara-denguis, or the Black Sea: The Eastern people giving to all things, mischievous and dangerous, the Epithet of Black.

They that are Bound for Rise or Guni, go to Teflis the Capital City of Giorgia, and thence to Erivan, for though the way be bad yet it is far better and smoother than the Road to Tauris.

The principal places from Teflis to Erivan are these, together with their respective distances.

From Teflis to Soganlouk, leagues 3

From Soganlouk to Senouk-kupri, leagues 7

From Senouk-kupri to Guilkac, leagues 7

From Guilkac to Dakson, leagues 6

From Dakson to Achikent, leagues	6
From Achikent to Dillon, leagues	6
From Dillon to Yazegi, leagues	6
From Yazegi to Bicheni, leagues	4
From Bicheni to Erivan, leagues	2
From Erivan you keep the ordinary Road to Tauris.

CHAP. VII.

The Road from Warsaw to Ispahan, over the Black Sea, and from Ispahan to Mosco; with the Names of the principal Cities and Islands of Turkey according to the vulgar pronunciation and as they are call'd in the Language of the Turks.

From Warsaw upon the left hand of the Vistula, the ordinary residence of the Kings of Poland, to Lublin, days 6

From Lublin to Ilwowe, days 5

There all the Bales are open'd, and the Customers take Five in the Hundred for their Merchandize.

From Ilwowe to Jaslovieer, days 12

This is the last City of Poland toward Moldavia, where if you sell any quantity of Goods you must pay Five per Cent.

From Jaslovieer to Tashé, days 8

This is the Capital City of Moldavia, and is the Residence of the Vaywood which the Grand Signor sends to govern in the Country. There they open all the Bales, and there is a Roll of what every Merchant ought to pay, which may amount to Five per Cent.

From Tashé to Oursaye, days 3

This is the last City of Moldavia, where there is no Custom to be paid.

From Oursaye to Akerman, days 4

Here they never open the Bales, but they take Four in the Hundred.

From Akerman to Ozon, days 3

Here they never open the Bales, but the Custom amounts to two per Cent.

From Ozon to Precop, days 5

Neither do they here open the Bales, but trust to the Merchant's word, and the Customs amount to Two and a half per Cent.

From Precop to Kassa, days 5

Nor are the Bales open'd here, but the Custom comes to Three per Cent.

Thus from Warsow to Kassa the Journey takes up one and fifty days, in the Wagon, which is the manner of Carriage in those Countries. All the Customs amount to Eighteen and a half per Cent. to which you must add the Carriage, and Passage by Sea to Trebizond: where you pay three Piasters for every Mules-load, and four for every Camels-load.

Observe by the way, that the Armenians do not usually take shipping at Trebizond but go to another Port more to the West, upon the same Coast, where they never pay above a Piafter and a half for a Camels load. This Port, call'd Onnie, is a very good Haven; and there is another a little farther off, call'd Samson, which is no bad one, but the Air is unwholsom and dang'rous.

There is also another Road from Warsow to Trebizond, shorter by three days journey.

From Warsow to Tashé, according to the Road already set down, days 31

From Tashé to Galas, days 8

All Merchandize is Tax'd at this place, and the Duties are tak'n at Galas, according to the Note which the Merchant brings from Galas. Galas is a City of Moldavia.

From Galas to Megin, days

The Bales are not open'd here, but the Merchant pays three and a half, or four per Cent.

From Megin to Mangalia, days

This is one of the four Ports to the West upon the Black Sea, and the best of all.

The three others toward the South upon the Coast are Kavarna, Balgik, and Varna. At Mangalia they demand but half a Piafter for every Bale. Crossing from thence to Trebisond you have five days Journey to Erzerom.

Now to the Road of Muscovy, which having been exactly describ'd by Olearius, going into Persia, I will describe it returning out of Persia.

Having led the Reader to Shamaqui, I will return home from thence.

From Shamaqui to Derbent, days

Derbent, which the Turks call Demir-Capi, is the last City within the Jurisdiction of the Persians; by which there runs a River which is call'd Shamourkea.

From Derbent to Tetarek, days

By this Town runs a River which is call'd Bocan.

From Tetarek to Astracan they hire small Barks with a dozen Oars. All along the shoar the Osiers grow so very thick, that they afford shelter for the Barks in fowl weather. If the Wind serve they will put up a little Sail and be at Astracan in four or five hours; but if they only Row, they cannot be there in nine.

When you Embark upon the Caspian Sea, where you only creep along by the shore, you must provide your self with Water for the three first days, in regard the Water is bitter and ill tasted all along the Coast all that while; but for the rest of the Voyage it is very good. If you carry heavy Goods, you may hire large Boats to save Charges.

When you come to Astracan you unlade your Goods; at what time the Officer comes, and sealing up every Bale, causes them to be sent to the Merchants Lodging. Three days after the Customer comes to open the Bales, and takes five per Cent. If the Merchant happen to want money, and takes it up at Astracan, to pay again at Moscow, he pays sometimes thirty per Cent. according to the Rate of Gold Ducats.

If a Merchant have any Diamonds, or any other Jewels, and let it be known, he pays five per Cent. But if a Merchant have any Jewels, or any other Rarities, and tells the Governour that he intends to carry them to the Grand Duke; the Governour sends a Convoy with him either by Land or Water, that costs him nothing: and moreover sends a Courier before to the Court, to give Notice of his coming. There is very good Wine at Astracan; but better at Shamaqui, where I advise the Traveller to provide himself.

From Astracan to Moscow, you take Shipping in great Barques, that make use both of Oars and Sails, rowing against the Tide, and weigh whatever you put Aboard, to a very Coverlet. Generally you pay for every pound fourteen Caya, and three Abassi's and a half, and an Abassi makes eighteen Sous and three Deniers.

In Muscovy, they reckon the way neither by Leagues nor Miles, but by Shagerons, five of which make an Italian Mile.

At Sarataf you may go ashore, and so by Land to Moscov. When the Snow is gone you travel in Wagons, but when the Snow lies, in Sledges. If a man be alone, and that his Goods weigh not above two hundred pounds Paris weight, they put them into two Bales; and laying them upon the Horses back set the man in the middle, paying for Carriage as much as from Astracan to Moscov.

Observe by the way that they never go ashore at Serataf but in case of necessity, when the River begins to be Frozen. For from Serataf to Inzerat is a Journey of ten days, in all which time there is nothing to be had, either for Horse or Man. The Custom is the same at Moscov as at Astracan, that is Five per Cent. All the Asiaticks, Turks, Persians, Armenians, and others, lodge in a sort of Inns: but the Europeans lie in a place by themselves altogether.

Constantinople after it was taken by Mahomet the second, the twenty seventh of May, 1453, was call'd by the Turks Istam-Bol; Istam signifying Security, and Bol, Spacious, large, or great, as much as to say, Great Security.

CHAP. VIII.

Remarks upon the Trade of the Island of Candy, and the principal Isles of the Archipelago, as also upon some of the Cities of Greece adjoyning; with a particular Relation of the present Condition of the Grand Signor's Gallies, belonging as well to the Isles as to the Continent.

Of the ISLAND of CANDY.

OUT of the Island of Candy Strangers export great store of Wheat and Sallet-Oyl, all sorts of Pulse, Cheefe, yellow Wax, Cottons, Silks, but more especially Malmsey, wherein consists its chieft Trade. When Vintage draws near, the Country-people that are to gather the Grapes wrap their Feet in a piece of a Boar's Skin, which they tye together upon the upper part of the Foot with a piece of Pack-thred, to preserve their Feet from the violent heat of the Rocks upon which they are to tread. Those Skins are brought out of Russia by the Russes, that bring Botargo and Caviare to Constantinople, where they have a vast vent for it all over Turky, Persia, and Ethiopia; where they that follow the Greek and Armenian Church, eat little or nothing else all the Lent. By the way take notice, that the Turks make a certain Glew out of Sturgeon, which is the best in the World, so that whatever is fasten'd with it, will rather break in another place than where it is glew'd. They make it thus: When they have caught a Sturgeon, they pull out his Guts, and then there remains a Skin that covers the Flesh; this Skin they take off from the head to the belly. It is very clammy, and about the thickness of two Sheets of Paper, which they roll as thick as a Man's Arm, and let it dry in the Sun. When they use it, they beat it with a Mallet, and when it is well beat'n they break it into pieces, and steep it in Water for half an hour in a little Pot.

When the Venetians were Masters of Candy, they that had committed any Crime which deserv'd Death, if they could get out of the Island before they were apprehended hended, went directly to Constantinople, to beg their pardon. For you must know, that no person but the Ambassador of the Commonwealth of Venice had the Privilege to pardon Crimes committed in Candy. For example, when Signor Der-visano was Ambassador for the Commonwealth of Venice at Constantinople, a Candiot having a desire to lye with a Woman by force, he told him he would sooner eat her Child's Liver than yield to his Lust. Whereupon, the Villain enrag'd he could not compass his design, took his opportunity, kill'd the Child, cut out the Liver, and made the Mother eat it, and then slew the Mother also. Upon this he fled to Constantinople, to beg pardon of the Ambassador, and obtain'd it there. But the Ambassador at the same time wrote word to the Governour of Candy to put him to death at his return; having only granted him his Pardon, to preserve his Privilege. And indeed, to speak truth, the *Candiot*s are the most wretched people under Heaven.

Of the ISLAND of CHIO.

THE City of Chio, which gives the Island its Name, contains about thirty thousand Inhabitants; where there are little less than fifteen thousand Greeks, eight thousand Latins, and six thousand Turks.

Among the several Greek and Latin Churches, the last of which hath continu'd ever since the time that the *Genoese*s possess'd the Island, there are some indifferent handsom Structures. The five principal Latin Churches are the Cathedral, and the Churches belonging to the Escolantines, the Dominicans, the Jesuites, and the Capuchins. The Turks have also their Mosquees, and the Jews their Synagogues.

Four Miles from the City, near to the Sea-side is to be seen a vast Stone, which was cut out of some Rock; it is almost all round, only the upper part, which is flat, and somewhat hollow; round about the upper part, and in the middle, are places like Seats, cut into the same Stone; of which there is one higher than the rest, like a School-master's Chair; and Tradition reports that this was Homer's School, where he taught his Scholars.

In this Island there is such an infinite number of Partridges, that the like is not to be found in any part of the World. But that which is a greater Rarity is this, that the Natives breed them up, as we do our Poultry, but after a more pleasant manner; for they let them go in the fields all the day long, and at night every Country-man calls his own severally home to Roost by a particular Note; whither they return like a Flock of so many Geese.

There are great quantities of Damasks and Fustians wrought in the Island of Chio, which are transported to Grand Cairo, and to all the Cities upon the Coast of Barbary, Natolia, and particularly to Constantinople.

Three Leagues from the Island of Chio, upon a Mountain to the South there grows a peculiar sort of Trees; the Leaves are somewhat like a Myrtle, their Branches so long that they creep upon the ground; but which is more wonderful, that when they are down, they rise again of themselves. From the beginning of May to the end of June, the Inhabitants take great care to keep the Earth under the Tree very clean; for during those two Months there issues out a certain Gum from the joynts of the Branches, which drops upon the ground; this is that which we call Mastick; and the Turks, Sakes, according to the Name which they give the Island. The Island produces great store of this Mastick, which is spent in the Seraglio of Constantinople, where the Women continually chew it, to cleanse and keep their Teeth white. When the Mastick Season draws near, the Grand Signor every year sends a certain number of Bestangi's to take care that it be not exported, but be preserv'd for the use of the Seraglio. If it be a plentiful year for Mastick, the Bestangi's that cull out the lesser sort to sell, put it into little Bags and seal it up; which Bags being so seal'd, are never question'd by the Custom-house Officers. The Island also yields very good Turpentine.

Of the ISLAND of NAXIS.

There is not one Port belongs to this Island; the Vessels that are Bound thither for Trade, being forc'd to stay in the Haven of the Isle of Paros, call'd Derion six miles from Naxis, which is one of the best Havens in the Archipelago, able to contain a thousand Ships. There are the ruines of a Wall still to be seen that made a Mole, where four or five Galleys might ride. There are also the ruines of several Houses of the ancient Dukes, the Stables standing almost whole, all Arch'd, and built of Marble. These Dukes were also Lords of twelve other Islands. As for the Island it self, it is well stor'd with Villages, and has three good Cities, Barequa, Quisa, and Falet.

Near this Island within a stones throw, there is a curious piece of Antiquity still to be seen. It is a flat Rock, as big about in compass as the ancient Court of the Louvre. In the middle of this Rock it was that the Temple of Bacchus was built all of Marble, of which there is nothing but the Foundations that remain. The Gate is still standing made of three Stones, whereof two make the sides, and the third lies across. From the Isle to this Rock there is a fair Stone Bridge of Free-stone, upon each side whereof are to be seen the Pipes that convey'd the Wine into the Temple, that was drank at the Feast of Bacchus. Naxis also is the Island that produces the best Emeril.

As to the Inhabitants themselves, if the Husband or Wife happens to dye, the Survivor never stirs out of the House in six Months after, upon any business how urgent soever, no, not to hear Mass. There are both Latins and Greeks in the Island, but the latter are the most numerous. There is a Latin Arch-bishop, and Canons belonging to the Metropolitan Church, with two Religious Houses, one of Capuchins, and the other of Jesuites: The Greeks also have their Arch-bishop.

The Island of Naxis is sixscore miles in compass, being one of the fairest and pleasantest Islands in the Archipelago. The ancient Dukes made it their residence, whence they command the greatest part of the Cyclades. There is great plenty of White Salt made in Naxis, and it produces excellent Wine both White and Claret, which caus'd the Inhabitants to build a Temple to Bacchus, who according to their ancient Tradition chose that Island for his Habitation. The Island produces excellent Fruits, feeds great store of Cattle, and abounds in several other things necessary for human support. There are also in it large Woods full of small Deer, and frequented by a great number of Eagles and Vultures.

Here follow the names of the Cyclades, as the people of the Country Pronounce them.

Of the Islands of Zea, of Milo, of Paros, and other Islands of the Archipelago.

ZEA is an Island wherein there is nothing remarkable, and from whence there is nothing to be Exported but Valanede, to dye Leather withal. Neither are there any Goods Imported into it but what the Pirates bring in, which are very few, in regard the Islanders are careful to provide themselves otherwise.

Milo

Milo affords nothing but Millstones to grind Wheat, which are carry'd to Constantinople.

Paros where there is no Trade neither, has nothing remarkable in it but one Greek Church, very well built all of Marble, call'd Our Lady's Church.

As for the Islands of Sifante and Miconoa, in regard there is nothing of Trade in either but only with the Pirates, who sometimes touch there; if there be any Consuls that live there, it is only to buy their stol'n Goods.

Of the City of Athens, Corinth, Patras, Coron, and Modon.

THE City of Athens is about four miles distant from the Sea, and contains two and twenty thousand Inhabitants, twenty five thousand Greeks; five or six thousand Latins, and a thousand Turks. Among all the Antiquities that yet remain, those in the Castle are the best preserv'd. The Castle stands upon a Hill, upon the North descent whereof some part of the City stands. It encloses a very fair and spacious Temple, built all of white Marble from the top to the bottom, supported by stately Pillars of black Marble and Porphyry. In the front are great Figures of Armed Knights ready to encounter one another. Round about the Temple, except upon the Roof, which is all of flat Marble Stones well order'd, are to be seen all the famous Acts of the Greeks in small carving every Figure being about two foot and a half high. Round about the Temple runs a fair Gallery, where four persons may walk a-brest. It is supported by sixteen Pillars of white Marble upon each of the sides, and by six at each end, being also pav'd and cover'd with the same Stone. Close to the Temple stands a fair Palace of white Marble, which now falls to decay. Below the Castle, and at the point of the City toward the East, stand seventeen Pillars, the remainder of three hundred, where anciently, they say, stood the Palace of Theseus first King of the Athenians. These Pillars are of a prodigious bigness, every one eighteen foot about. They are proportionable in height, but not all of a piece, being thwarted most of them by Stones of white Marble, one end whereof rests upon one Pillar, and the other upon that which follows it; which was the support of the whole building. Upon the Gate, which is yet entire, are to be seen these words upon the front without.

Αἶδε Ἀθῆναι Θεσέως ἢ πόλει πόλις.

The City of Athens was assuredly the City of Theseus.

Within-side of the same City these other words are Engrav'd.

Αἶδε Ἀθῆναι Ἀδριανῆς καὶ ἐκ Θεσέως πόλις.

The City of Athens is the City of Adrian, and not of Theseus.

There are in Athens several other pieces of Antiquity which are well worthy to be seen.

Corinth, which formerly made such a noise in the world, is now a Village of some five or six and twenty houses, but all of them the Habitations of rich Greeks. The Town lies at the foot of the Castle, which is seated upon an inaccessible Rock guarded by the Greeks, commanded by an Aga. Corinth Exports great quantities of Currants.

Patras does the same, which is all the Trade of those two places.

Coron and Modon drive a Trade in Sallet-Oyl, which is so good and so plentiful, that several English, Dutch, and other Ships are load'n away with it from thence every year.

There are Consuls in Athens, Patras, Coron, Modon, and Napoli of Romania.

The Asbenian Merchants buy up Tissues, Velvets, Satins, and Cloth, with which they serve other Countries adjoining. The Commodities which Foreigners export from thence, are Silks, Wool, Sponges, Wax, Cordivan-Leather, and Cheefe. Which is all that can be said in few Words, of the Trade of all these places.

A Particular Relation of the Gallies belonging to the Grand Signor, as well at Constantinople, as in the Isles and other Parts of the Empire.

Formerly there lay in the Road of Constantinople above a hundred and fifty Gallies: But the Grand Vizier perceiving that so great a number did but cause confusion, and that the Captain-Basha could not conveniently take so great a burden as to look after such a number, he gave order that no more than twenty-four should lie in the Port of Constantinople; sending the rest to other Ports, as well of the Continent, as the Islands.

At present the Number of the Grand Signor's Gallies is fourscore, thus distributed under the Command of their several Beys or Captains.

At Constantinople, twenty-four under the Command of the Captain-Basha, or Admiral of the Sea; who when he goes out upon any Expedition, sends to the rest to meet him according to Orders. When he goes in person to Sea, he gives to every one of his Slaves besides their ordinary Habit a kind of Cassock of Red Cloth, and a Bonnet of the same colour. But this is only in the Admiral's Gally, and at his own Cost. His Gally carries usually 366 Slaves, and to every Seat of the Rowers, a Bonne Vole. These Bonne Voles are certain Volunteers that freely offer themselves to the Service of the Admiral, and there is great care taken for their being well paid. Their Pay is 3500 Aspers for their Voyage, which generally continues seven or eight Months. They feed as the other Slaves; but if they Row negligently or lazily, they are beaten worse than the Slaves; for the Volunteers have nothing to do except it be to Row: But the Slaves are put to several other Duties. Take notice also that the Volunteers that serve in the General's Gally, have 500 Aspers more than those in the other Gallies; that is to say, 4000 Aspers for their Voyage, which comes to 40 Crowns.

The Reer-Admiral carries Two hundred and fifty men, as well Slaves as Volunteers. That Galley and the great Tefterdar's or Treasurers, are the best provided of any in the whole Fleet: For the Reer-Admiral Basha has his choice to take four of the best men out of every Galley for his own, or else to receive 3500 Aspers for every man, which is paid by the Captain of the Galley; which makes him the richest of all the Beys.

The great Tefterdar's Galley is one of the Twenty four Gallies of Constantinople, and he sends a particular Treasurer, in the quality of a Lieutenant, to command her. That Command is very much contested for, in regard that Galley is very well provided with all things; and for that all the Captains Court the Tefterdar, who, when the Gallies return to Port, rewards them according to their Merit.

The Janizary-Aga's Galley is of the same number; but he never goes to Sea, always sending one in his room.

The Bey of Rhodes, that takes upon him the Title of Basha, has eight Gallies.

The Bey of Stancha, an Island about an hundred Miles from Rhodes, Lieutenant to the Bey of Rhodes, has one Galley.

The Bey of Suffam, a small Island near Scio, has one Galley, and his Lieutenant another. These Gallies are generally appointed to watch the Maltesi, and Ligorn.

The Bey of Scio formerly had but three; but since the War with Candy, he has had six.

The Lieutenant of the Bey of Scio has two Gallies. There be also three other Beys in the Island of Scio, who have no dependance upon the Basha of Scio, but buy their Provisions where they can find it best cheap.

The Bey of Smyrna and his Lieutenant have two Gallies; but they can do nothing without the Orders of the Bey of Scio.

The

The Bey of Metelin has two Gallies.

The Bey Cavale, a small Bay, twelve Miles on this side the Dardanells, upon the Coast of Europe, has one.

The Bey of Nestrepont, seven.

The Bey of Napoli in Romania, five.

The Bey of Coron, one.

The Bey of Modon, one.

The Bey of Famagosta, six.

The Bey of Alexandria in Egypt, five.

The Bey of Canée, two Gallies.

The Bey of Candia, one.

The Bey of Castel-Tourneze or Navarin, two Gallies.

All these Gallies make up the number of Four-score.

The light Gallies carry not above 196 men; the four men that are wanting of two hundred, being the Bey's profit.

Every Captain is allow'd thirteen thousand Piasters for his Provision; and every Christmas he gives to every Slave a pair of Breeches, and a Cassock of course Cloth, with a scantie kind of a Cloak.

Every Slave has every day a pound and a half of good Bread, and nothing else. But upon Friday which is the Mahometans Sunday, they have hot Pease, or Beans, or Lentils boyl'd in Butter. They receive also sometimes the Alms of the Greeks, when they lie in any Port. But at Constantinople they fare somewhat better; for twice a week, as well the Turks, as the Greeks and others, come to the Bains, and bestow their Charity of Rice and other good Victuals. The Bains is the name of the place where the Sea-men are kept when they are not at Sea.

Sometimes when they are to go Sea, they will counterfeite themselves sick or lame; but they are so narrowly observ'd, that it serves them to no other purpose than to procure to themselves the more Blows.

C H A P. IX.

A Relation of the present State of Georgia.

GEORGIA, which others call Gurgie, or Gurgistan, extends Eastward to the Caspian Sea; and upon the West is bounded by Mountains that part it from Mengrelia. Formerly it was a Kingdom, all the Inhabitants whereof were Christians, of the Armenian, and of the Greek Church; but of late the Mahometans have got footing among them. And the King of Persia having fill'd them full of Divisions, has made two Kingdoms of it, which he calls Provinces; over which he has plac'd two Governors. They are generally Princes of the Country, who must turn Mahometans before they can be admitted to that Dignity. When they are advanc'd, they take upon them the title of Kings; and while they have any Issue, the King of Persia cannot dispossess their Children.

The most Potent of these two Kings, is he that resides at Teflis, who in the Language of the Country is call'd the King of Cartelé. The present King is the last that has continu'd a Christian, with his four Sons; the Eldest of which, the King of Persia having entic'd to Court, partly by Promises, and partly by Presents, has won to Mahometism. Immediately thereupon, he caus'd him to be declar'd King of the other Province.

These two Kings have each of them a Guard of Mahometan Horse-men under their own pay; and at present I believe there are in both Kingdoms near upon 12000 Mahometan Families.

The King of Teflis coyns Money in the King of Persia's Name; and the Silver which he coyns, is in Spanish Reals, French Crowns, and such other Money, which the Armenians bring out of Europe for their Goods. As to the Justice of the Country, neither the King himself, nor the Mahometans have any thing to do with it. A thief is acquitted, paying seven-fold what he has stole; two parts whereof go to the Party robb'd, one part to the Judges, and four parts to the King. If the Thief has not wherewithal to make restitution, he is sold: If the Product do not yet equal the Sum, if he have a Wife and Children, they first sell the Wife, and if that will not do, then they sell the Children: But if the Party robb'd be so merciful, as to forgive the Thief his share, then neither the King nor the Judges can demand any thing for their share. If any man commit a Murder, they condemn him to die, and deliver him up into the hands of the Kindred of the Party slain, to do Execution as they please themselves. However, it is in their power to pardon him, if he be able to give sixty Cows or more to the next a-kin to the Party kill'd. In matter of Debt, a Creditor has Power to seize upon all the Estate of the Debtor; and if that will not satisfy, he may sell his Wife and Children.

The Christians of Georgia are very ignorant, especially in Matters of Religion. They learn that little they know, in the Monasteries, as also to write and read; and generally the Women and Maids are more knowing than the Men; not only because there are more Religious Houses for Women than for Men, but also because the Boys are bred up to labour, or sent to the Wars. For if a Virgin grows up, and happens to be handsome, some one or other presently endeavors to steal her, on purpose to sell her into Turky, Persia, or the Territories of the great Mogul. So that to prevent their being stoln, their Fathers and Mothers put them very young into Nunneries, where they apply themselves to study; wherein, if they attain to any proficiency, they usually stay as long as they live: After that, they profess, and when they come to a certain Age, they are permitted to Baptize, and to apply the holy Oyls, as well as any Bishop or Arch-Bishop can do.

The Georgians are very great Drinkers; and Nature has fitted them a Countrey that produces good store of Wine. They love the strongest Drinks best; for which reason, at their Feasts both men and Women drink more Aqua vite than Wine. The women never eat in publick with their Husbands; but when the man has invited his Friends, the next day the Woman invites her She-companions. And it is observable that at the Womens Festivals there is more Wine and Aquavite drank than at the mens. The Guest is no sooner enter'd into the Dining-room, but he is presented with 2 or 3 Dishes of Sweet-meats, and a Glas of half a pint of Aquavite to excite his Appetite. They are great Feeders upon Onions and Herbs, which they eat raw out of the Garden. The Georgians are also great Travellers, and very much addicted to Trade; they are very dext'rous in shooting with Bow and Arrows, and are accounted the best Souldiers in all Asia. They compose a great part of the King of Persia's Cavalry, who keeps them in his Court at peculiar pay, and relies very much upon their fidelity and courage. There are several also in the Service of the Great Mogul. The Men are very well complexion'd and very well shap'd; and for the Women, they are accounted the fairest and most beautiful of all Asia; and therefore out of this Country it is that the King of Persia chooses all his Wives, being not permitted to marry a Stranger. Teflis, where the Women have more liberty than in any part of Asia, is the Capital City of Georgia, well situated, large and well built, where there likewise is a great Trade in Silk.

CHAP. X.

A RELATION of the present State of Mengrelia.

Mengrelia extends from a Chain of Mountains, that separates it from Georgia to the Black-Sea, and is now divided into three Provinces (every one of which has their King.) The first is call'd the Province of Imareté, or Bassa-Shionk, the king whereof pretends to a superiority over both the other, which is the reason they are often at War, and that with so much cruelty, that when they have tak'n any Prisoners of either side, they sell them into Turkey. They are so accusom'd to sell one another in this Country, that if a man or his wife have any occasion for money, they will go and sell one of their Children, and many times they will exchange a Child for Ribands or other Toyes at the Merchers Shops.

The second Province is that of Mengrelia, and the King of this Province is call'd the King of Dadian.

The third is the Province of Guriel, the King of which Province is call'd the King of Guriel.

The Province of Mengrelia was formerly subject to the King of Bassa-Shionk, who sent thither a Governor, which is call'd in their language Dadian.

One of those Governours being a person of wit and courage, gain'd so far upon the affection of the People, that they chose him for their King.

The chief of the Province of Guriel, seeing how the Dadian had obtain'd the Kingdom, following the Example of Mengrelia, shook off the Yoke of the King of Bassa-Shionk, and chose another King among themselves, who keeps his Sovereignty to this day, by the support of the Grand-Signor. For when the Dadian rebell'd he entr'd into an Alliance with the Grand-Signor, and oblig'd himself to furnish him every year with such a certain quantity of Iron, upon condition that if the King of Bassa-Shionk should war upon him, he should furnish him with twenty thousand Horse. Of which the Turk was very glad, finding thereby the Country of Mengrelia divided, which being united, was able at any time to have disturb'd him with an Army of fifty thousand Men.

The King of Bassa-Shionk coyns money of the same bigness and weight with that of the King of Persia. But in regard it is not so fine metal as that of the King of Persia, he would have much ado to make it pass in the trade between his Subjects and the Persians, which is very great, had he not found an expedient by putting the King of Persia's name upon the Coyn as well as his own, which makes it pass without any difficulty. He would also put the Grand-Signor's Name upon his Coyn, but that the Turk coyns none but small money, or Aspers, excepting only some Ducats which he coyns at Cairo. The King of Bassa-Shionk, as well as the King of Teflis coyns all sorts of foreigne money.

These three Kings of Bassa-Shionk, Mengrelia and Guriel, are Christians also. And when they go to war, all the Ecclesiastical Persons attend them; Arch-bishops and Bishops, Priests and Monks: not so much as to fight as to encourage the Souldiers.

Being at Constantinople the first time I travell'd into Persia I saw there an Embassador from the King of Mengrelia, whose behaviour gave all the Franks occasion of laughter. The present which he made the Grand-Signor was in Iron and Steel, and a great number of Slaves. The first time of his Audience, he had a train of above 200 Persons. But every day he sold two or three to defray his expences; So that at his departure, he had none but his Secretary and two Vassals more left. He was a man of presence but no wit: and every time he went to visit the Grand-Visier, he presum'd to wear the white Bonnet which all the Franks wonder'd at; when they saw that the Grand-Visier wink'd at it. For should any other Christian have done so, he had been most certainly put to death, or constrain'd to turn Mahumetan. By which it was apparent how much the Grand-Signor valu'd the Friendship of the King of Mengrelia, and how careful he is of offending those that are sent from his Court. He knew those People suffer no affronts, but upon the least word presently draw; besides that there is nothing to be got by provoking them.

This Embassador going once upon a visit into the Country, returning home was surpriz'd surpriz'd with a Storm, whereupon he pull'd off his Boots and carri'd them under his Coat, choosing rather to go bare-foot to his lodging, then to spoil his Boots.

Another time, it being the custom of all Catholick Ambassadors to go to Mass to the Convent of Grey Friars in Pera, upon St. Francis's day, the Mengrelian Ambassador after Mass was done, coming out of the Church, and seeing several baubles which the Pedlers expose in the Cloyster upon that day, bought a Tin Ring, two or three small Looking-Glasses, and a Pipe, which he put in his mouth and went piping all the way i'th Street, as Children do coming from Fairs.

But to return to the matter, you must take notice that there are not only Iron Mines, but also Mines of Gold and Silver in two places five or six days Journey from Teflis, the one call'd Souanet, the other Oberet. But the mischief is, the people can hardly be got to work there, for fear the Earth should tumble down, and bury them in the Mine, as it has many times happen'd.

There is also a Mine of Gold near to a place which is call'd Hardanoushé, and a Mine of Silver at Gunishé-Koné, five days Journey from Erzerom, and as many from Trebisond.

As for the people themselves both Georgians and Mengrelians, they never trouble themselves about the ignorance and viciousness of their Priests, or whether they be able to instruct them or no. The richest among them are they which are in most credit, and absolutely give Laws to the poor. There are also some heads of the Church, that assume such a jurisdiction over the people, as to sell them both to the Turks and Persians, and they choose out the handsom'st Children, both Boys and Girls, to get the more money, by which authority also the great men of the Country enjoy Marry'd Women and Maids at their pleasure. They will choose out their Children for the Bishops while they are yet in their Cradles, and if the Prince be dissatisfi'd at it, all the Clergy joyns with him that makes the choice, and then together by the Ears they go. In which Skirmishes they will carry away whole Villages, and sell all the poor people to the Turks and Persians. And indeed the custom of selling men and women is so common in that Country, that a man may almost affirm it to be one of their chiefest Trades.

The Bishops dissolve Marriages when they please, and then Many again after they have sold the first. If any of the Natives be not Marri'd to his fancy, he takes another for such a time as he thinks fit, for which he pays her all the while as the Turks do. Very few of these people know what Baptism means. Only two or three days after the woman is brought to Bed, the Priest comes and brings a little Oyl, mumbles over a few Prayers, and then anoints the Mother and the Infant, which they believe to be the best Baptism in the World. In short, they are a people of no Devotion at all, neither in their Ceremonies nor in their Prayers. But there are great store of Nunneries, where the young Maids apply themselves to their Studies, and after such an age, whether they stay in the Nunneries or betake themselves to the Service of any of the great Lords, they Confess, Baptize, Marry, and perform all other Ecclesiastical Functions, which I never knew practis'd in any other part of the World beside.

CH A P. XI.

Of Comania, Circassia, and of certain people which they call Kalmouchs.

Comania is bounded toward the East by the Caspian Sea; Westward by the Mountains that divide it from Circassia; Northward it lies upon Muscovia; and Southward it is bounded by Georgia. From the Mountains that bound upon the North-East to Tercki, which is the River that parts Muscovia from Comania, it is all a level Country excellent for Tillage, and abounding in fair Meadows and Pasturage. However it is not over-peopl'd, which is the reason they never Sow twice together in one place. The Climate is much the same as between Paris and Lion, where it Rains very much; and yet the Country people have cut several Channels from the Rivers to water the Grounds after they have Sow'd them, which they learnt from the Persians. Those Rivers fall from the Southern Mountains, being not at all tak'n notice of in the Map. There is one among the rest a very large River, which can be ford'd at no time. They call it Coyasou, or The thick water, in regard it is continually muddy, the stream being so slow, that they can hardly discern which way it runs. It falls gently into the Caspian Sea to the South of the mouth of Volga. Not far from this River, in the months of October and November, all along the Shore of the same Sea, you may see vast shoals of fish about two foot long. Before, they have two legs, like a Dog's legs, behind instead of legs they have only claws. Flesh they have none, but only fat with a bone in the middle. Now in regard they are but slow pac'd, when they come upon Land the Country people easily knock them on the head, and make Oyl of them; which is the greatest Trade they have.

The people of Comania, commonly call'd Comonchs, dwell for the most part at the foot of the Mountains, because of the Springs so plentiful in those places, that in some Villages you shall have above twenty or thirty. Three of these Springs meeting together, make a stream strong enough to drive a Mill. But this is not the sole reason, for there is Water enough in the plain. But in regard they are a people that only live upon the spoil and plunder of their Enemies, and of one another, as they are in continual fear of being set upon, they love to dwell near the refuge of the Mountains, whither they fly with their Cattle upon any occasion of danger. For all the people round about, as Georgians, Mengrelians, Cirkassians, Tartars, and Muscovites, live altogether by rapine, and continual In-roads into one anothers Countries.

There are another sort of people which are call'd Kalmouchs, that inhabit upon the Coast of the Caspian Sea between the Muscovites and the Tartars. The men are strong, but the most deformed under Heaven. Their faces are so flat and broad, that there is the breadth of five fingers between each Eye. Their Eyes are very small, and that little Nose they have is so flat, that there is nothing to be seen but two little holes instead of Nostrils. Their Knees also and their Feet turn inward. When they go to the Wars, they carry their Wives and their Daughters, if they be twelve years of age, along with them, who fight as courageously as the men themselves. Their Arms are Bows, Arrows, and Skains, with a great wooden Mace at the Pommel of their Saddles; their Horses being the best in all Asia. Their Captain is of some ancient Family, but they more particularly choose him for his valour. The Duke of Muscovia sends them presents every year, to preserve their friendship, which presents consist in Cloth. And he grants them free passage through his Territories, when ever they have a mind to invade the Mengrelians, Georgians, or Cirkassians, at which sport they are much more dextrous than the lesser Tartars. Sometimes they advance into Persia, as far as the Province of the Usbeques, which is a part of Great Tartary, ranging up as far as Caboul and Candahar. Their Religion is particular to themselves, but they are great Enemies to the Mahumetans.

As for the Comonchs or people of Comania, they are Mahumetans, and very precise ones too. They are under the protection of the King of Persia, who makes great account of them, in regard they defend the Passes into his Country on that side against the Kalmouchs. They are habited both men and women like the Lesser Tartars, fetching all the Silk and Calicut which they use out of Persia; for as for Cloth, they are contented with what they make in their own Country, which is very coarse.

Circassia is a pleasant good Country, and full of variety. There are Plains, Forests, Hills, and Mountains abounding in Springs, some of which are so large, that some of them will serve seven or eight of the neighbouring Villages. But on the other side, in all the Rivers that proceed from these Springs, there is not a fish to be seen. Flowers they have in abundance, especially fair Tulips. There is a sort of Strawberry also with a short stalk, of which five or six grow in a bunch; the least are as big as a small Nut, of a pale yellow Colour. The Soil is so fertile, that it brings forth without any great trouble a vast plenty of all sorts of Fruits. Nor do the people need any other Gardens than their Fields which are cover'd with Cherry Cherry-trees, Apple-trees, Pear-trees, Walnut-trees, and all other useful Trees of the same nature : but their chiefest Wealth consists in Cattel, but especially in well-shap'd Horses, not much unlike the Spanish Gennets. They have also an abundance of Goats and Sheep, whose Wool is as good as that of Spain ; which the Muscovites fetch away to make Felts. They neither sow Wheat nor Oats, but only Barley for their Horses, and Millet to make Bread ; nor do they ever sow twice in the same place : not but that the Land is good enough to bear Wheat, but because they love Bread made of Millet better. They have very good Fowl, and Venison, and Wild-Fowl more than they know what to do withal ; which they never hunt with Dogs, nor fly their Hawks at ; for their Horses are so swift and so good, that they will tire the Beast, and force him to lye down and yield. Ev'ry Horse-man has a Rope with a sliding-knot ready at the Pommel of his Saddle, which they are so dextrous to throw about the neck of the Beast that begins to be weary, that 'tis twenty to one if they miss him. When they have kill'd a Deer, they cut off the legs, and breaking the Bones, eat the Marrow, which they say is the best thing in the World to strengthen the Body. When they go to steal Cattel, they carry along with them great Cows-horns stuf with boyl'd Tripes cut in small pieces ; then watching their times when the Herdsmen are asleep, when the Dogs begin to bark, they throw to ev'ry one a Horn, with which the Dog presently runs away : and so while the Shepherds are asleep, and the Dog is busie to get the Meat out of the Horn, which is there ramm'd in on purpose, the Thieves drive away what they please.

The Drink of the Sherkes is Water and Bofa. Bofa is a Drink made of Millet as intoxicating as Wine, which they want in the Country.

The Men and the Women, Boys and Girls gohabited all alike, and their Habit is a colour'd Robe of Fustian, with a kind of large Petticoat underneath ; with this they wear a little pink'd Waistcoat that reaches down to their Thighs ; and over that a Cassock of course Cloth that reaches down to their Knees, girt about their Waists with a Cord. The Sleeves of the Cassock are op'n below and above, and sometimes they pin them behind their Backs. They wear no Beards 'till they are sixty years of age. And as for their Hair, neither Men nor Women, Boys nor Girls, ever wear it longer than the tips of their Ears. The Men, both young and old, shave the middle of their Heads about the bredth of two Fingers from the Forehead down to the Nape of the Neck : and then in stead of Hats or Head-clothes, both Men and Women wear only a little Bonnet of the same Cloth as the Cassock, made like a Night-cap. 'Tis true, when the Maids come to be marry'd there is some distinction upon their Heads ; for then they fast'n to the hinder part of their Heads a round piece of Felt, which they cover with a white Veil very artificially pleated. Their Breeches are ty'd below their Knees, and reach to their Ancles ; their Shooes, which are of Cordovan, both upper and under Leather, have but one seam upon the upper part of the Foot, being light, and cut like a pair of Pumps.

As for their Beds, they take several Sheep-skins, and sow them together, and then stuffing them full of Millet-leaves, make a kind of Quilt. Now when they beat the Millet, the Leaf comes to be as small as the Chaff of Oats ; so that when the person rises off from the Quilt, the Quilt rises and swells again of it self. Their Cushions are of the same Make, only sometimes they are stuf with Wool.

The People are neither Christians nor Mahometans, all their Religion consisting in some Ceremonies which they perform with the greatest Solemnities which they can imagin : for at that time old and young of all Ages and Sexes, and all the whole Town must be there at the place appointed, unless impotency or sickness excuses them. I call them Villages, for in all these Countries there is neither Fortrefs nor City, and as for their Villages, they are all built after the same Model, round, with a Piazza in the middle, according to the Figure,

THE PLATFORME OF ONE OF THE VILLAGES OF THE COMOUKS

CHAP. XII.

Of the Ceremonies and Customs of the People of Comania and Circassia.

THe Principal of all the Feasts which the Comouchs and Sherkes or Cirkassians make, is that which they make at the end of Autumn, after this manner. Three of the ancientest of the Village are appointed to manage it, and to discharge themselves of a Duty impos'd upon them in the company of all the people. These three old men take a Sheep or a Goat, and having mutter'd certain Prayers over the Beast, they cut the throat of it: after they have dress'd it very clean, they boil it whole, all but the Gathers, and then they roast. The Sheep being boil'd, they set it upon a Table, and carry it into a large Barn, where the People are appointed to meet: There the three old men stand upright before a Table, and all the People, Men, Women and Children behind them. When the Table upon which the Meat stands, is brought in, two of the three old men cut off the Legs and the roasted Gathers, and hold them up above their heads, and the third holds up a great Cup of Bosa in the same manner, to the end the people behind may see them. When the people see the Meat and Bosa so lifted up, they prostrate themselves upon the ground, and so continue till all the rest of the Meat be set upon the lesser Table, and that the old men have said some few words. Then the two old men that held up the Meat, cut off two little pieces, and give each of them a piece to him that holds the Cup, which being done, they take each of them a piece for themselves. When they have all three eaten of the meat, the old man that holds the Cup, drinks first, then gives the two old men to drink, first to him upon the right hand, next to him upon the left, never letting go the Cup all the while. This first Ceremony being thus accomplish'd, the two old men turn toward the Assembly, and go and present both of the Meat and the Drink, first to their Chief or Lord, then to all the people, who equally eat their share, both men and women. That which remains of the four feet, is carry'd back to the Table, and the three old men eat it. This done, they go and place themselves at the Table, where the Mutton is set, where the oldest of the three taking the Head, eats a little Morsel; after him, the second, and next to him, the third does the same. Then the first old man commands the rest to be carry'd to the Lord, who receives it with a great deal of respect, and after he has giv'n it to his next a-kin, or the Friend whom he loves best, the Head is giv'n from one to another, till it be eat'n up. This being done, the three old men begin to eat of the Mutton a bit or two, and the Lord of the Village is call'd, who comes with his Bonnet in his hand, in a trembling posture; to whom, one of the old men presenting a Knife, he cuts off a piece of Mutton, and eats; and having drank a Cup of Bosa, he returns to his Seat. After him, all the people, according to their turns in quality, do as much; and then, for the Bones the Children go together by the ears among themselves.

They have another Feast before they begin to Mow their Meadows; at which time all the people of the Village, that have wherewithal, take every one a Goat, (for in their Ceremonies they esteem Goats better than Sheep) and for the poor, they join eight or ten together for a Goat. Let them be Goats, Sheep or Lambs, when they are all brought together, they cut their Throats, and then flea off the skin, leaving the four feet and the Head in it. Then they stretch the Skin with sticks that cross from one foot to the other, and set it upon a Pole fix'd in the Earth, the top whereof enters into the head of the Beast, as is to be seen in the Figure of the Village; and as many Beasts as there are kill'd, so many Poles are planted in the midst of the Village, with every one a particular Skin upon it; to which, every one that passes by, makes a profound obeysance.

Ev'ry one having boil'd his Goat, brings it into the void place in the middle of the Village, and sets it upon a great Table with the rest. There is the Lord of the Village with his Servants, and sometimes the Lord of some other Village is invited. Now all this Victuals being upon the Table, three of the oldest men of the Village fit down and eat a Bit or two; Then they call the Lord of the Town, and if there be any other Lord, they come both together, with some other of the Seniors of the Parish; who being set down, eat up one of the Beasts, which the old men had set apart for them; the rest is divided among the people, sitting upon the ground.

There are some Villages where you shall have fifty Goats and Sheep, or Lambs and Kids, kill'd together at one time. As for their Bofa, there are some that bring above 200 Pints; others more or less, according to their quality. All the day long they eat and drink, and sing and dance to their Flutes a dozen together, which are in some measure harmonious, as consisting of several parts, and decreasing proportionably from the Treble to the Base. When the old men have solac'd themselves with eating and drinking, they go home, and leave the young people, Men and Women, Boys and Girls to be merry by themselves: They stay as long as there is any Drink; and the next day they go early to Mowing.

They have other Ceremonies particular only to their Families. Once a year in every House they make a Cross after the Form of a Mallet, about five Foot high, the two Sticks that compose the Cross, being as big as a man's Arm. This the Master of the House sets in the Evening near the Door in his Chamber, and calling all his Family together, gives them every one a lighted Wax-Candle. Then first he fixes his own to the Cross, next his Wife sticks hers, and so all the Children and Servants: If the Children be so young, that they cannot do it themselves, the Father and Mother do it for them. If one of the Candles burn out before it be put out, 'tis a Prognostick that he or she that fix'd it there, shall not live out their year. If the Candle falls, then he whose Candle it was, shall be robb'd, or be forc't to fly for his Life.

If it thunders, all the people run out of the Village, and the young people of both Sexes set themselves to singing and dancing in the presence of their Elders: And if any one be Thunder-struck, they bury that person honourably, believing him to be a Saint. Besides that, they send over all the Country for a white Goat, which they breed up and keep in the Village where it happen'd to thunder, having it in great veneration, till thundring in another place, the people send for it thither also. If the Thunder fall upon any of their Houses, though it kill neither Man, Woman, Child, nor Beast, all that Family shall be kept upon the publick stock all that year, without being ty'd to any Labour but of Singing and Dancing. These people, during that time, go from Village to Village Dancing and Singing at peoples Doors, but never going into their Houses; for which the Inhabitants are bound to bring them out something to eat.

There is a day in the Spring, when all that have been struck'n with Thunder, meet together in the Village where the white Goat is kept; who has always a Cheese hanging about his Neck as big as a Parma-Cheese. This Goat they take and carry to the Village of the chief Lord of the Countrey. They never go in, but the Lord with all the rest of the Village coming out, they all together prostrate themselves before the Goat. Having said some Prayers, they take away his Cheese, and immediately put another in its place. The Cheese which was taken away, is at the same time cut into little pieces, and distributed among the people. After that, they give the Strangers to eat, and bestow their Alms upon them; so that by this wandring from Village to Village, they get good store of Money.

They have among them but only one Book; and it is as big as one of our largest Folio's, and it lies in the hands of an old man, who has only the priviledge to touch it. When that old man is dead, they choose another old man to keep the Book; whose Duty it is to go from Village to Village, where he hears of any sick people. He carries the Book with him, and after he has lighted up a Wax-Candle, and put the people out of the Room, he lays the Book upon the Stomach of the sick person, opens it, and reads in it, then blows over it several times, so that the Breath passes toward the mouth of the Party: Then he causes the party diseas'd to kiss the Book several times, and as often lays it upon his head, which is a Ceremony of half an hour. When the old man goes away, one gives him a Beef or a Heifer; another gives him a Goat; every one according to their Quality and Estate.

They have also Old Women that take upon them to cure the Sick. These women feel the body of the sick party, all over, but more particularly they handle and grope that part where the distemper lies: during which time they let go several belches out of their mouths, and the more sick the party is, the louder and thicker, they fetch their belches. The standers by hearing them belch in that manner and fetch such vilanous sighs from their stomachs, believe their friend to be dangerously ill, and that the louder the Women belch, the more ease and comfort they receive; but whether they do or no, the women are well pay'd for their pains. VVhen any one feels a pain in the Head, they send for the Barber, who gives two cutts upon the Head across with the rasor, and then pours Oyl into the wound. For they believe the Head-ach proceeds only from a wind between the flesh and the bone, for which the Incision opens a passage to let it out.

At their Funerals they that are the near Relations or Friends of the dead, some cut their faces, and other parts of their Bodies with sharp flints, others prostrate themselves upon the ground, and tear their hair; so that when they return from the Burial, they are all of a gore blood: However, notwithstanding all this affliction, they never pray for the Dead.

As to their Marriages: VVhen a young man has seen a Virgin which he has a liking to, he sends one of his friends to agree with her Parents or her Tutor, what he will give for her. Commonly the gift consists in Horses, Cows or some other sort of Cattel. VVhen the agreement is made, the Parents and Kindred of the party thereby contracted, together with the Lord of the place, go to the House where the Virgin lives and bring her to the Bridegrooms House, where there is a Feast ready prepar'd; and after they have made merry, and sung, and danc'd for a while, the Bridegroom and Bride go and lye together, without any other Ceremony. If the man and Maid are of two Parishes, the Lord of the Village where the Man lives accompany him and his Kindred to the next Village all together, to fetch the Bride from thence.

If a Man and the wife have no Children, he is permitted to take several wives one after another till he have Issue. If a marri'd woman have a Gallant, and that the Husband should come and find his wife abed with him, he goes away again without saying a word, and never takes any further notice of it. The woman also in the same case, does the like by the man. Nay, the more Gallants a woman has, the more she is respected: And it is a common custom when they fall out, to taunt one another, that if they were not ugly, or ill natur'd, or diseas'd, they would have more Admirers than they have. The People are of an excellent Complexion, especially the women, who are extreamly fair, and finely shap'd, and keep their beauty till five and forty or fifty years. They are very laborious, and work themselves in the Iron Mines, which they melt afterwards and forge into several Tools and Implements. They make abundance of Embroidery of Gold and Silver for their Saddles, their Quivers, and their Pumps, as also upon the Calicut of which they make their Handkerchiefs.

If the man and the woman happen to quarrel often together, so that they cannot be reconcil'd: the Husband complaining first to the Lord of the Place, He sends for the Woman, and having giv'n order to sell her, gives the Man another. But if the Woman complain first, the Man is serv'd the same sawcc. If a man or Woman be a disturber of their Neighbours, if the Neighbours complain to the Lord, he presently causes the party to be apprehended and sold to the merchants that buy Slaves, for they are resolv'd they will live in quiet.

They that take upon them the quality of Gentlemen, sit still, do nothing, and speak very little. In an evening they ride out, and meet some twenty or thirty together to go a stealing. Nor do they rob only their Enemies, but their Neighbours, from whom the chief prey which they take are Cattle and Slaves. All the Country-people are Slaves to the Lord of the Village where they live, whom he employs to till his Land, and cut wood for him upon occasion, of which they spend vast quantities. For not being very warm clad, they keep fire all night in the places where they sleep.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the lesser Tartars, call'd Nogaies, bordering upon Comania.

THE lesser Tartars have a very ancient race of Horses, which they breed up even to Superstition; so that it would be among them an act of Sacrilege to sell them to strangers, as being not a little curious how they sell them to one another. These are the Horses which they ride, fifty or sixty in a Troop together when they go a thieving; and sometimes a hunder'd together, when they design any Incurſion upon their Enemies. When the old Men come to be infirm and impotent, if they know any stout young Man that is a Souldier, they will lend him one of their Horses. (if he have none of his own) to make an Incurſion, upon condition to have half of the Booty. Many times they run up as far as Hungary, near to Comora and Javarin. These Horses, partly by nature, partly by early custom, will travel four or five days together with a handful of Grass giv'n them once in eight or ten hours, and a little Water every four and twenty hours. But they never go a robbing with them 'till they come to be seven or eight years old; besides that, they must undergo a very severe education ere they make use of them in those hardships. Their Bit is only a piece of Iron with a Buckle on each side, to which they fast'n the Bridle and Head-stall. For eight days together they put under the Saddle a bag of Gravel or Earth. The first day the Sack is a Horse-man's weight; and so they add to it every day, 'till it come to be double the weight at the end of the eight days. As they increase every day the weight upon the Horses back, they abate every day the Horse's Provender and Drink. During these eight days, they get up and walk the Horse two or three Leagues. The next eight days, they abate every day of the weight, 'till the Sack be quite empty. Proportionably also they abate him of his Meat and Drink as in the first eight days, and every day take up the Girt a hole shorter. The three or four last days they afford the Horse neither Provender nor Drink, according as they find him able to endure hunger and thirst, and the labour which he is to undergo. The last day, they work him 'till he be all over of a Sweat; then they unbridle and unsaddle him, and pour upon him the coldest Water they can meet with. That done, they lead him into a field, and tie him by the leg with a Cord, at such a length as they intend he shall feed; yet still from day to day allowing him more Rope, 'till at last they let him loose, and feed with the rest of the Horses. This terrible fasting and labour, during which time, that little which they do eat and drink, they eat and drink with the Bit in their mouth, brings them to be so lean and out of flesh, that their very bones are ready to start out of their skins: So that if any one should see them in that miserable condition, that does not know the nature of the Horses, would think they would never be fit for good service. The hoofs of these Horses are so hard that they never shoe them, and yet they will leave the prints of their feet in the Earth, or upon the Ice, as if they had been shod. These Tartars are so curious in having Horses that will endure labour, that so soon as they see any handſom Colt in their Breed, they presently take him up, to school him as I have related: but hardly ten in fifty endure the tutoring.

As for their Diet, 'tis a great advantage for these Tartars to ride a Mare, in regard they Drink the Milk. They that ride Horses, carry along with them a little Bag full of pieces of Cheese dry'd in the Sun; they have also a small Boracho of Goat-skin, which they fill with Water where they meet with it, into which they put two or three bits of their hard Cheese, which softens with the motion of the Horse, the Boracho being ty'd under his Belly: and thus the Water becomes a kind of ſowr Milk, which is their ordinary Drink.

As for their Instruments of Cookery, every Horse-man has a large wooden Ladle hanging at the Pummel of his Saddle, out of which the rider drinks himself, and gives his Horse likewise to drink. They that encounter them, can hope for no better Booty than than their Horses; but they are very hard to be tak'n; for when one of these Horses perceives that his Rider is slain, he follows those that fly with all the swiftness imaginable. Beside that, those Horses being carri'd into other Countries, are presently spoil'd, and come to nothing.

Their Cloathing is only a Sheep-skin, which in Winter they wear with the wool next their Bodies; in the Summer turning the other side. They that are the Nobility of the Countrey, wear Wolves-skins, with a kind of Shirt, and Breeches of coarse Fustian of divers Colours, which the Taylor gets little credit by shap-ping.

Their Women are very white and well proportion'd, but their Faces are broad, and their Eyes little, so that by thirty years of Age they become very deformed. There is not a man but has two or three Wives, which they never choose but out of their own Tribe. Every Tribe has a Chief; who is one of the Nobility of the Countrey, and carries for his Banner a Horse-tail fasten'd to a half-Pike, and dy'd into the Colour belonging to the Tribe. When they march, every one knows where to place himself, and how much ground they ought to take up for their Tribe and their Cattel; one Tribe never encroaching upon another.

The Women and Maids are generally clad in a large Shirt that reaches down to their feet. Upon their Heads they wear a large white Vail, their Foreheads being bound about with a large black Handkerchief ty'd in five or six Rolls. The Noble sort of Women and Maids wear over this Vail a Bonnet open behind, which comes down upon their Foreheads like a three-corner'd Cap. One of these Points stands up in the midst of the Forehead, lin'd with Velvet, Satin, or Cloth of Gold, and set with small pieces of Gold and Silver, and false Pearls, of which they also make themselves Bracelets. Their Breeches are of single-colour'd Cloth, and for Shoes and Stockings, they only wear a Cordovan Boot of what Colour they please, neatly sew'd.

When a young man intends to marry, it behoves him to give the Father and the Mother of the Maid a certain quantity of Horses, Bullocks or Cows, or other Cattel, which is done in the presence of the greatest part of the ancientest of the Tribe, and a Moullah beside. When the Agreement is made, the young man has the liberty to see his Mistress, but not till then. For before, he has only the Information of her Mother, his Sisters, or such Women as were his own Friends. Besides the three Wives which the man is allow'd to take, he may keep several female Slaves; but the Children are still slaves, and can never inherit. These Tartars are of a very hot constitution, though not so hot as the women. Both the one and the other are very fair-hair'd; but the men have little or no Beards. So that if there be any one that has more Beard than ordinary, and can but write and read, they make him a Moullah.

These people have no Houses; but live in Tents, or in Waggons which are drawn after them where-ever they go. The Tents are for the old people and little Children, with their Slaves that attend them. The young women ride in Waggons clos'd up with Boards, and to let in the Air, upon one side they open a Window that is made like a Lattice. In the Evening they are permitted to spend a little time in the Tents. When the Girls have attain'd to the age of ten or twelve Years, they never stir any more out of their Waggons till they are married, not so much as for the necessities of Nature; but in the middle of the Waggon there is a Plank to be taken up; and if it be in a place where they stay, a Slave presently comes and cleanses all underneath. The Maidens Waggon is easie to be known, as being painted with Flowers; and generally there is a Camel ty'd to the Tail of it besmear'd with several colours, and several Nosegays or Posies of Flowers stuck about the Head of the Beast.

The young men have also every one their Chariot, wherein they only carry a Boracho of Horse-skin, containing about 38 Quarts, which they usually fill with Mares-milk, which is very sour. They have also every one another Waggon next to that wherein they ride themselves; wherein they carry several Boracho's full of Cows-milk, which is very sour. At Meals they drink this Milk. But before they pour it out, they stir it in the Boracho with a great Stick, that the Curd may mix with the thin Milk. But the Mares-Milk is only for the Master and Mistress, though before they drink of either, they mix it with water. When a Friend comes to see them them, they fetch out their dri'd Cheese, which they call Kourout, and breaking it into little Bits, eat it with fresh Butter. At their Feasts they sometimes kill old Sheep, sometimes old Goats. But for their Horses they never kill them but at the Funerals of their Kindred, at the Birth of a Child, or at their Marriage-Feasts, or lastly, when their Friends return laden with Spoil from any incursion, and are stor'd with Slaves. They never drink any thing but Mares-Milk or Cows-Milk, and when they can get neither, they will endure thirst for three or four days together before they will drink water, being always grip'd with a terrible Colick when they drink it. They never eat any Salt, being of an opinion that it is naught for the Eyes. They live long, and are very strong, and seldom sick; nor do they refuse any Diet but Swines-flesh.

Their Countrey is very level; only for some few Hills in some places. They have great store of Pasture-grounds, and every Tribe has their peculiar Wells to water their Cattle. In the Winter they lodge upon the banks of great Rivers, near to Woods and Marishes, suffering their Herds to feed at liberty. When the Snow is very deep, the Cattel scrape it away with their feet to come at the Grass, though they meet with very little else but Reeds and Bulhes. In the mean while the men cut down the Woods, make great Fires, and employ themselves in Fishing. There are some parts of these Rivers where the least Fish they take is about four or five foot long; and some there are above ten or twelve foot in length. Some they dry in the wind, and preserve against Summer; some they smoke in holes which they make in the Earth: As for the smaller sort, they boil them, and eat them without Salt or any other seasoning. When they have eat'n their Fish, they scoop up a large wooden Ladel full of the Fish-water and gulp it down. As for Bread, there is no talk of it in their Countrey.

When they are not at Wars, or are but newly return'd from any Incursion, they spend their time in Hunting, but cannot endure any other Hounds except Greyhounds: So that he must be a very poor Tartar indeed that do's not keep a Greyhound. Take notice however by the by, that these petty Tartars, concerning whom I have last discours'd, are certain people adjoining to Comania, which the Turks, Persians and Mengrelians call Nogaiers; who may be well reckon'd among the number of the petty Tartars, in regard they are all under one Prince, whom the Grand Signor appoints King over all Petty Tartary, and who receives his investiture at Constantinople.

These Tartars are all Mahumetans. Nor have they any Physician among them; making use only of certain Simples of which they have a traditional knowledge. When the sick person lies in any extremity, they send for a Moullab, who comes with the Alcoran, which he opens and shuts three times, saying certain Prayers, and laying it upon the sick person's face. If by chance the sick person recover, they attribute his recovery to the Sanctity of the Alcoran, and present the Moullab with a Sheep or a Goat: If he die, all his Kindred meet and carry him to the Grave with great Testimonies of Sadness, crying continually Alla, Alla. When he is interr'd, the Moullab mutters certain Prayers ov'r the Grave, and is paid for his pains according to the wealth of the Heirs. For the poor he generally spends three days and three nights in that exercise; for the rich he as usually spends a Month, never stirring all the while from the Grave; and sometimes sev'n or eight.

When any one of them is wounded, they use no other Salve but only boil'd Flesh, which they apply hot to the wound. If the wound be deep, they thrust in a piece of Fat as hot as the wound can endure it; and if the person be able to kill a Horse, the wound is cur'd so much the sooner; for the Flesh and Fat of a Horse are much more medicinable than the Flesh of any other Creature.

Were it not the Custom of the Tartars to buy their Wives when they marry, there would be fewer Whores. But in regard there are an abundance of poor young men that have not wherewithal to buy Wives, they never marry at all. This is that which makes so many Souldiers among them, and emboldens 'em to invade their Neighbors, and to get something whereby they may be enabl'd to buy them a Wife. For the Virgins they are nev'r to be defil'd, being always shut up in their waggons: But for the women they are oft'n debauch'd, appointing their private Meetings, when they go to fetch water for their Cattel, when their Husbands are a-hunting, or looking after their Herds. Nor is it a hard thing to conceal it from their Husbands, in regard the Tartars are not in the least prone to Jealousie. By

By the way take notice, that the Nogaiers, though they live almost after the same manner as the Tartars, and are under the same Prince, yet they perfectly hate them; reproaching them for effeminate, because they live in Houses and Villages, whereas the true Souldier should live in Tents as they do, to be ready upon all occasions.

They that run a-foot, as well in these Countries, as in Persia, when they are weary, take Walnuts and bruise them, and then rub the Soles of their feet with them before the fire as hot as they can endure it, which presently makes them fresh again.

TRAVELS
MONSIEUR TAVERNIER: BEING, A DESCRIPTION

CHAP. I.

Of the Extent of PERSIA, and its division into Provinces.

PERSIA, according to the present State of the Empire, to the North is bounded by the Caspian Sea; Southward, by the Ocean; Eastward it joyns to the Territories of the Great Mogul; Westward, to the Dominions of the Grand Signor; the two Empires being parted by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates.

But that you may the better understand the full extent of the Dominions of the Persian King, you are to know, That this great Monarch, besides that Tract of Ground which is properly call'd Persia, possesses a vast part of the ancient Assyria and the great Armenia, the ancient Kingdoms of the Parthians and Medes, the Kingdom of Lar, the Kingdom of Ormus, and all Eastward of Persia beyond Candahar, almost as far as the Kingdom of Scindi.

But because those Europeans that have Travel'd before me, either were not curious, or had not perhaps the opportunity to learn the true number of the Provinces that compose the whole Continent of Persia, I have undertak'n, though the Persians themselves are ignorant enough, to give the best account I can, finding it necessary for the better satisfaction of the Reader, to take some notice of the Names of Places according to the ancient Geography.

The first is the Great Armenia, which our Maps without any ground or reason at all call Turcomannia; in regard they might have more properly call'd it Ermenick in general, since the Inhabitants are the greatest part Armenians. That part whereof which is situated between the two Rivers of Araxes and Cyrus, at this day call'd Aras and Kur, by the Natives is call'd Iran, or Cara-bag, being one of the most beautiful, and richest pieces of Land in all Persia; the principal Cities of which are Erivan, Nackivan, Zulpha, and Van.

The

The second is Diarbeck, formerly Mesopotamia, between Euphrates and Tigris; the chief Cities whereof are Bir, Car-Emir or Diarbequir, Ourfa, Moussul, Geziré, Merdin, &c.

The third is Curdistan, formerly Affyria, extending all along the East-side of the River Tigris, from the Lake Van to the Frontiers of Bagdat; the principal Cities are Niniveh, Sherisoul, Amadié, Sneirne, Betlis, and Salmastre.

The fourth is Hierak-Arabi, otherwise the Country of Babylon or Chaldea; the principal Cities whereof are Felougia upon Euphrates, Bagdat upon Tigris, Mershed-Ali, Gourno, and Balsara; and in the Country of Bourous, Sbarahan, Eronnabat, &c.

The fifth is Hierak-Agemi, or the ancient Parthia; the principal Cities whereof are Hispahan, Toushercan, Hamadan, Cashan, Kan, and Casbin; and perhaps Yezd, if it be not rather in Kerman or Sigistan.

The sixth contains Shirvan, all along the Caspian Sea, where stand the Cities of Derbent* or Demir-Capt, Baku, and Shamaki; and the Province of Edzerbajan; wherein stand the Cities of Tauris, Ardevil, and Sultany. Which two Provinces comprehend the ancient Media within a very little, extending to the very Shoar of the Caspian Sea.

The seventh contains Kylan and Mazandran, lying likewise upon the Caspian Sea, formerly Hyrkania; wherein are the Cities and Towns of Firuzoub, Sukarabad, and Monikiellé at the entry of the Mountains; Girn, Talara-pesti, and Saru, in the Plain; Ferbabad, Ciarman, and Gscres, toward the Sea.

The eighth is Estarabad, formerly Margiana, which extends to the River Ruth-khané-kurkan, which the Ancients call'd Oxus; the principal Cities whereof are Estarabad, Amul, Damkam.

The ninth contains the Province of the Usbeck-Tartars, comprehending all the ancient Sogdiana and Bactriana; the chief Cities whereof are Balk, Samarcand, and Boecara, &c.

The tenth is Corassan, formerly Aria, with some part of Bactriana; the chief Cities whereof are Eri, Mesbed, Nisabur, Thun, &c.

The eleventh Sablestand, formerly Peloponnesus; the principal Cities whereof are Beksabat, Asbé, Bust, Sarents; the Territory and City of Candabar being also comprehended within the extent of this Province, together with Duki and Alunkan, upon the Frontiers of the Great Mogul's Dominions.

The twelfth is Sigistan, formerly Drangiana; the principal Cities whereof are Sistan, Shalack, and Kets.

The thirteenth comprehends all the Territories of the ancient Arachosia, bordering upon the Kingdom of Scindi, not having any Cities that we know of.

The fourteenth is the Province of Makran, lying all along upon the Sea of Mogostan, formerly Gedrosia; the chief Cities whereof are Makran, Firbk, Chalak, and the Port of Guadel toward Guzerat.

The fifteenth Kerman, formerly Caramania, extending as far as the Gulf of Ormus; the chief Cities whereof are Kerman, Bermazir, the Port of Kubestek, and the Cape of Jasques.

The sixteenth is Farsistan, or that part of Persia so properly call'd; the chief Cities whereof are Schiras, Caseron, Benarou, Firusabat, Darab-guier, &c. To which you may add the little Province of Laraston, with the City of Lar, just against Ormus. But this Province formerly extended no farther than Benarou, two days journey from Lar, before Sha-Abus conquer'd the Kingdom of Lar, and then the Kingdom of Ormus. Now they are both united; though they have both several Governours, as they had distinct Princes before. The Ports in this Province upon the Persian Gulf are Bander-Abassi and Bander-Congo.

There are two other little Ports in the Persian Gulf, about thirty hours sail from the Mouth of Euphrates, but not capable of receiving any other than small Barks, which are very much to be admir'd; for in regard the Inhabitants are ignorant of the use of Iron, it is strange to see their Boats made so handfom and strong withal; the Planks being only ty'd together with a Cord, which is made of a kind of Hemp tak'n from the out-side of the Coco-nut.

The last is the Province of Cusistan, formerly Susiana, which Euphrates and Tigris joyning together separate from Chaldea; the principal Cities whereof are Suster, anciently Susa, the Capital City of the Empire of King Abasuerus, Abawus, Scabar, Ranbormus, &c.

* Derbent in the Persian Tongue signifies a Strait Gate, and Demir-Capt in the Turkish, a Gate of Iron; near to which place were the ancient Caspian Gates, or Caspiz Pylæ of the Ancients.

The temper of the Air in Persia varies according to the variety of situation. The Country of Edzerbaijan is very cold, but very healthy. The Air of Mazandran is very unwholsom; for being a low fenny Country, and full of Insects, when the Waters dry up in the Summer, the Insects also dye and infect the Air. Sometimes those bad Waters over-flow the Country; in so much that the Inhabitants receive a tincture in their Complexions from the colour of the Earth. The Province of Guilan is included in the Province of Mazandran; and the Air is so unwholsom, that the People cry of him that is sent to command there; Has he robb'd, stol'n, or murder'd, that the King sends him to Guilan?

At Isfahan, which is almost in the middle of Persia, there are six months of hot, and six months of cold weather. The Snow falls three or four times in a season, and sometimes so very thick, that there is hardly any travelling upon the Road. About a League from the City, toward the Mountain, there stands a Stone about two or three Foot high, which when the Snow hap'ns to cover, prognosticates a plentiful Year; and the first Country-man that carries the news thereof to the King, receives a hundred Tomans. As for Rain, there is very little falls there, unless it be in April, and then it sometimes rains very hard.

In the Southern Provinces, the heats are very excessive, and kill abundance of our Europeans, especially those that are giv'n to drink.

All Persia is water'd with little Rivers; but there is not one navigable River through the whole extent of it, unless it be Aras, or the Araxes of the Indians, which carries some few flat-bottom Boats. The other Rivers, instead of growing bigger, the farther they keep their course from the Springs, grow shallower for want of Water, by reason of the infinite number of Kreises or Channels, which they cut out of the Rivers to water the Lands, which would not bring forth so much as only Grass without the help of those Cuts; unless it be in the Province of Mazandran, which from September to March seems a kind of Terrestrial Paradise, through the pleasing variety of Herbs and Fruits. However, Persia in general being thus water'd is a most fruitful Country: though it be true, that many of their Springs and Channels are lost and brok'n. And Mirza-Ibrahim Governour of the Province of Edzerbaijan told me one day, that in the very Territory of Tauris, there were above two hundred Springs utterly lost, either by accident or negligence.

As for their Gardens, they water them with Well-water, by the help of a Wheel and an Ox; but the running Water is much better, as not being so cold, and more fatning to the Earth. And therefore the Fruits that grow in the Mountains which are only water'd by the Rain or by the Dews, are much better tasted, and keep longer.

Persia is a mountainous Country, but for the most part the Mountains are very dry and barren. As for Woods, there are none in all the Country. Travellers are also forc'd to go a great way out of their Road to find a Spring; and sometimes they shall ride ten or twelve Leagues, before they meet with any Water but what they carry in their Bottles. There are some Mountains out of which they dig Salt, as Stones out of a Quarrey. There are also Plains where the Sand is nothing but Salt, though it be not so savoury as our Northern Salt.

Of late several Copper-Mines have been found out, of which the Natives make all sorts of Kitchin-Houholdstuff. Their Lead comes from Kerman; their Iron and Steel from Corasan and Kasbin, though not so good as that of Spain. Their Steel is very fine, with a smooth grain, and grows very hard in the Water, but it is as brittle as Glass. Neither will this sort of Steel agree with the Fire: so that if the Fire have not more than a double heat when the Steel is forg'd, it will look just like a piece of burnt Charcoal. The Steel which we call Damas-Steel comes from the Indies, and the Persians call it Gauberder.

There are also some Mines of Gold and Silver in Persia, wherein it appears that they have anciently wrought. Sha-Abas also try'd again, but found his expence to be more than his profit: whence it is become a Proverb in Persia, Nokre Kerven debkragé nobhassfel; The Silver-Mine of Kerven, where they spend ten to get nine, which is the reason that all the Gold and Silver of Persia comes out of Foreign Countries.

C H A P. II.

Of the Flowers and Fruits of Persia, of Turquoises and Pearls.

THE Flowers of Persia are nothing comparable to our European Flowers, neither for variety nor beauty. For having pass'd the Tigris in the Road to Persia, you meet with nothing but Roses and Lillies, and some other Fruits peculiar to the Country.

As for Roses, they have great store, which they distil, as they do Orange-flowers, and transport the Waters into all the Eastern parts of Asia.

I never left the Court of Persia, but some of the Lords, especially four of the white Eunuchs, beg'd of me to bring them some Flowers out of France; for they have every one a Garden before their Chamber-door: and happy is he that can present the King with a Posie of Flowers in a Crystal Flower-Pot.

There are in Persia Apples, Pears, Oranges, Granates, Prunes, Cherries, Apricots, Quinces, Chestnuts, Medlers, and other sorts of Fruit, which is not generally so well-tasted as ours.

Their Apricots indeed, especially the lesser sort, are better than ours. When you open this Apricot, the Stone cleaves in two, and then the Kernel, which is only a small Skin, as white as Snow, is more pleasing to the tast than if it had been preserv'd.

As for their Melons, they are most excellent, and very plentiful, neither is it so dangerous to eat them to excess, as ours. There have been some that have eat'n six and thirty pound in a day, and have never been the worse. There is a prodigious quantity of them sold in Ispahan, where they are brought to Market, from midnight 'till four a Clock in the afternoon. Those Melons which are first in season, and are call'd Guermez, are insipid, and tast of nothing but Water. However the Physicians advise you to eat them, saying that they plump up the Flesh, and renew the habit of the Body. The next to the Guermez, are better than they, and they increase in goodness 'till they come to be quite out of season; the last of which they keep all the Winter long.

Though they have such vast plenty, yet they never leave but one Melon upon a stalk, and when it is as big as a Nut, the Gard'ner, or his Wife, or his Children, lye down upon the ground and lick off the Down, which they say keeps the Melon from being sweet; and rip'ning kindly.

The Persians have also a particular sort of Quince-Pipin, but not so good as ours, which they fry unpar'd, casting great store of Salt in the Pan to excite thirst, and then present them to their Friends at their Collations. They have also Almonds and Figs, but few Small-nuts or Wall-nuts.

Oyl they have none, but in the Provinces of Mazandran and Guilan, which furnish all the rest of Persia; but the Olives are rotten, black, gravelly, and not worth any thing, compar'd with Province-Olives.

Armenia, Mengrelia, Georgia, and Media abound in Vineyards. They bury their Vines all the Winter, and take them up again in the Spring by reason of the cold. In the hotter Countries they dress their Vines as we do, without any under-propping them. There are three sorts of Wines in Persia. That of Tesl is very delicate; that of Ispahan but ordinary: that of Tesl is transported to Lar where there lives a great number of Jews, who care not to live but where they may have good Wine, and that at a cheap rate. It is also carry'd to Ormus, where it is sold half in half cheaper than the Wine of Schiras. As for the Wine of Schiras, it is made of one only Grape, sweet in tast, but which heats the Mouth extremely. This sort of Grape is call'd Kichmishé; it is a white Grape, without any stone, as vulgarly believ'd, but however it has a stone, though it be hardly to be perceiv'd, which nevertheless will appear in new Wine, when it frets like a little Ligament. They say that the Wine of Ispahan is cold upon the Stomach, but that it fumes into the Head. For its coldness upon the Stomach I can say little, but I know it will warm the Head, if a man takes too much of it. In Persia they never keep their Wine in Tuns, but in great great earthen Vessels bak'd in an Oven, either glazed, or else smear'd over with the fat of a Sheeps rump, stopp'd up with wood'n Covers, cover'd over again with a great piece of red Calicut, that lyes over all the lids of the Pots.

The King and his Lords have other sorts of Cellars for magnificence, where they treat such as they invite. These are four square Rooms not above three or four steps deep, with a Well in the middle, the floor being spread with Turky Carpets. Now at the four corners of the Well stand four great Bottles containing twenty Pints apiece, the one of White, the other of Claret. Between the great Bottles stands a row of lesser Bottles filled, a Bottle of White, and a Bottle of Red. In the Cellar-wall are several niches one above another, and in every nich a Bottle, still vary'd Gules and Argent; a very-pleasant sight to good Companions in a Room, which is as light as day.

As for Herbs and Roots they have very good in Persia, but above all, most excellent Roman Lettuce. But there is no sort of Pulse, nor can they find a way to make Pease grow among them. The Carmelites carry'd Asparagus, Artichoaks, and Succory, which were never seen there before, but now begin to thrive very well.

As for Turquoises and Pearls I shall speak thereof in my discourse of Jewels, toward the end of my Indian Travels.

C H A P. III.

Of the Beasts of Service ; of the Fish and Fowl of Persia.

THe Beasts for service in Persia, are Horses, Mules, Asses, and Camels. The Horses of Persia are but of an ordinary stature, less than ours, very narrow before, but very swift and light. They carry their heads very ill in running, by reason of the Custom to which the Persians use them. For they have got a trick of managing their Horses, yet never getting upon their backs; they teach them to Amble by tying their feet with two Cords of an equal length, to the middle whereof are fasten'd two other Cords that are fasten'd to the Saddle, which two Cords keep their feet so, that they cannot stir but at such a distance; and so they deal with their Mules upon which the old men generally covet to ride. The Horses of Persia are very docible, and easily brought up. They give them nothing else from one Evening to another but a Sack full of chopt Straw, with a measure of Barley which they mingle together with the Straw, to the end they may eat both together. When the Barley is newly ear'd, they give it them for fourteen or twenty days together to purge their Bodies, as we for the same end put our Horses to Grass in the Spring. The Persian Horses hold out very well till eighteen or twenty years of age; but they never cut their Stone-Horses in that Country. In the Winter, they never take off their Shooes, but only Frost-nail them. Their Furniture is very light and handsomly made. And this is further observ'd, that whereas we keep Goats in our Stables and Inns, the Persians keep Hogs.

There are two sorts of Asses in Persia. Those that are bred in the Country only serve to carry burthens; but there are a sort of Arabian Asses that are swift and very handsom, excelling in price the common sort of Horses. The Merchants of Ispahan keep these Asses in their Country Houses, taking it for a great piece of Grandeur to Ride every Morning to their Shops.

Some parts of Persia are perplex'd also with wild-Beasts, as Lyons, Bears, and Leopards, but there are but very few; nor have we heard that ever they did any great mischief. Porcupines they have also; and I my self saw brought before the King two men, the one of which was Shot through the Thigh, and through the Leg with a Porcupine's Quill. The second was kill'd, the Porcupine having darted his Quill a little above his right Pap through his Brest. As for their Fish, there are an abundance of Carps, Trouts, and Pikes in the River Aras: but in all the other Rivers of Persia there is but one sort of Fish, which is a kind of Barbel. In the subterranean Channel which they bring to water their fields there is another sort of Fish very plentiful of bones, and as little as can be eaten.

T Barbill,

Where the white Mulberries grow by the River side, so soon as they begin to bear fruit, 'tis very good pastime to see the Crabs, as big as the Palm of a man's hand, come out of the River after Sun-set, and climb the trees to eat the fruit, and then by break of day return into the River again. They are delicate food, far beyond Grey-fish, but a hot provocative Diet, as the Physicians well observe.

During the Frost they bring from the Caspian Sea great store of Salmon or Salmon-Trouts, four or five Foot long. The Province of Media is well stor'd with Sturgeon from the mouth of the River Araxes. In the same Sea there is a certain Fish like a Carp, which they salt and dry like our Herrings. From the Persian Gulf comes nothing but Salt-fish, which is transported over all the Kingdom.

Their Fowls are much the same that we have in Europe, only I do not remember that I ever saw any Quails in the Country. As for their Pigeons, they fly wild about the Country; but only some which they keep tame in the City, wherewithal to decoy the rest: which is a sport the Persians use in hot weather as well as in cold. Now in regard the Christians are not permitted to keep these Pigeons, some of the vulgar sort will turn Mahometans to have that liberty. There are above three thousand Pigeon-houses in Ispahan. For every man may build a Pigeon-house upon his own Farm, which yet is very rarely done; all the other Pigeon-houses belong to the King, who draws a greater Revenue from the Dung than from the Pigeons: which Dung, as they prepare it, serves to smok their Melons.

Poultry is very plentiful in Persia; and the Armenians brought out of Europe the way how to Fat Capons; the first so fattened they presented to the King, who lik'd them so well, that he order'd that the richest of the Armenians should be commanded to provide him such a number every year. There are no Turkeys in all Asia; but the Armenians trafficking to Venice carry'd some from thence, which when the King had tasted, he lik'd so well, that he order'd the Armenians to breed him up such a number, and to stock the Kingdom with them. But the Armenians, seeing the King would impose a new Tribute of Turkeys as well as Capons, grew negligent, and suffer'd the Chickens to dye as soon as they were hatch'd. Thereupon the Persians suspecting the fraud, commanded the Armenians to keep the dead Turkeys, that they might be Judges how they came by their deaths: And it was my wonder to see so many young Turkeys hanging against the Walls of some Houses in Zulpha, that occasion'd this Story to be told me.

All sorts of Water-fowl are as plentiful in Persia, as with us.

Upon the Frontiers of Media and Armenia, at a certain season of the year are to be seen a great number of Birds, much like to our Owzils. Much about the same time the Corn begins to appear, but then is the ground cover'd with such infinite swarms of Locusts, that the Armenians are forc'd to betake themselves to their Processions, and to water the ground with a Water which they fetch a great way off, whereinto the Bodies of several martyr'd Christians were thrown. Three days these Processions and waterings of the ground continue, and after that, whether it be that the fore-mention'd Birds do eat the Locusts, or only drive them away, in two or three days the Country is clear of them.

As for Birds of prey, the Country wants none, Falcons, Sparrow-Hawks, Lancereets, &c. of which the King of Persia is very well provided, having above eight hundred belonging to his Game. Some of these Birds are taught to fly at the wild Boar, or wild As, or wild Goat; others at Cranes, Herons, wild Geese, and Partridge. The chiefest of which Birds are brought from the Southern Mountains extending from Schiras to the Persian Gulf.

The King takes great delight to hunt the Boar and Hart; and if it come to pass that the Game out-run the Dogs, then they let fly one of their Hawks, who presently seizes the head, and while she is continually pecking and disturbing the Beast, the Dogs are presently at his heels. The Hawks are taught to stop like a Horse at full speed: else they would never quit their prey, which they presently do, as soon as ever the Falconer shews them their reward. Now their way of ord'ring or making the Hawk is this. They take the skin of a Hart, head, body, and legs, and stuff it with Straw, to the end it may be like the Beast which they intend to represent in the nature of a Quarry. When they have set it in the place where where they usually train up the Hawk, they lay meat upon the head, or in the holes of the eyes, to the end the Bird may be sure to seize those parts at his down-come. Being accusom'd to feed in this manner for some days together, they fix the Beast upon a Plank with four Wheels, and cause it to be drawn with long Cords by certain men, that mend their pace ev'ry day, 'till at length it is drawn by a Horse at full speed, whereby the Bird is accusom'd by degrees not to forsake her prey. After the same manner they counterfeit all other sorts of Quarrys to enter their Hawks, as well wild Boars, wild Asses, as Hares and Foxes. Some there are that will order a Crow with the same industry as you would make a Hawk. They have also a certain Beast which they call Once, which has a spotted skin like a Tiger, but which is nevertheless very gentle and tame; this a Horse-man will carry behind him, and when he sees a wild Goat, he sets down the Once, which is so nimble, that in three leaps he will be upon the back of the wild Goat; though the wild Goat be a very swift Creature. The Once immediately strangles him with his sharp teeth. But if by accident the wild Goat get from him, the Once will stand still in the same place abash'd and troubl'd, so that an Infant may take him and kill him, without the least resistance made in his own defence.

The Kings of Persia take great delight in Hunting, and in that sport it is that they love to shew themselves magnificent: Insomuch that Sba-Sefi desirous to treat all the Ambassadors then at his Court, which at that time were the Tartarian, Muscovite, and Indian, carry'd them along with him into the field, and having tak'n a great number of Harts, Fallow deer, Hinds, and wild Boars, he caus'd them all to be made ready to be eat'n the same day; And while he was feasting, an Architect had order to raise a Pyramid of the heads of those Beasts in the middle of Ispahan, of which there are some remains to this day. When the Architect had rais'd it to a considerable height, he came very pleasantly to the King, and told him he wanted nothing but one head of some great Beast to finish the Work. The King, whether in his Wine, or to shew the Ambassadors how absolute he was over his Subjects, turning briskly toward the Architect; Thou say'st well, said he, nor do I know where to meet with a Head more proper than thy own. Thereupon the miserable Architect was forc'd to submit his own Head, the King's Command being presently put in execution.

CHAP. IV.

Of the manner of Building in Persia.

IN regard there is little Wood or Stone in Persia, all the Cities, except some Houses, are generally built of Earth; but of an earthen, or rather a kind of Potter's Clay, so well wrought, that you may cut it like Turf, being wrought to a just consistency. The Walls are made with lays of Earth, according to the proportion intended, and between every lay of Earth, three Foot high, two or three rows of Bricks bak'd in the Sun. These Bricks are made in a square Mold three fingers thick, and seven or eight inches broad: and for fear they should cleave with drying in the Sun, they lay over them pounded Straw to keep them from chopping in the heat. They never lay the second lay 'till the first be dry, nor is the second lay to be so broad as the lowermost. Those Buildings which are made of Brick bak'd in the Sun are very handsom; and after the Wall is rais'd, the Mason plaisters it over with a Morter made of Potter's Clay mingled with Straw; so that the defects of the Building being cover'd, the Wall appears very firm and close. Then the Work-man plaisters the Morter over again with a Lime mixt with Muscovy-Green, which he pounds with a certain Gum, to render the Lime more glutinous: and then rubbing the Wall over with a course Brush, it becomes as it were damask'd and silver'd, and looks like Marble. The poor are contented with only bare Walls, or some course daubing that costs little. The middle of the House consists of a large Portico, twenty or thirty Foot square; and in the middle of the Portico a Fountain full of Water. It is all open upon one side; and from the Portico to the Pond or Fountain all cover'd with Carpets. At every corner of the Portico is a Room to sit and take the fresh Air; and behind another large Room, the floor whereof is spread with Carpets, Mattresses, and Cushions, according to the quality of the Master of the House. Upon the two sides of the Portico are two other Chambers, and doors to go from one Chamber to another: and thus are the Houses of the great Lords built, but only they are more spacious. For their Houses consist of four great Parlours, that look toward the four corners of the World, and every Parlour has two Chambers upon each side, which make eight Chambers, that surround a great Hall in the middle. The King's Palace is also built after the same fashion: and generally the Persians Houses are very low, it being a rare thing to see one three Stories high. Yet all their Chambers and Rooms are arch'd, wherein the Persian exceeds us. For without all that trouble and time that we spend, they will presently raise an Arch so broad and high as easily demonstrates the skill of the Work-man. The tops of their Houses are flat and terrass'd; being plaster'd with Earth mixt with Straw chopt very small, and well temper'd; which they bind together with a layer of Lime beat'n for seven days together, which makes it as hard as Marble, and if they want Lime, they pave the Terrass with square Tiles bak'd in an Oven, so that the Rain can do no harm. But they are very careful to shovel off the Snow, for fear it crack the Terrass with lying. Without the Houses show nothing, but within they are curiously painted with Birds and Flowers, wherein the Persians are no bad Artists. They take great delight to have several little Chambers, with several Doors, and Lattice-windows, the quarrels whereof are of Glass of various colours. This sort of glazing serves generally, and indeed more properly, for the Apartment where the Women may come. For they might have Crystal-windows if they pleas'd, but they glaze the void spaces in this matter, that their Women may not be seen; after they have fram'd the op'n place that gives light, like a Flower-Pot with several Flowers in it, which the Glass of several colours imitates to the life; whereby it is impossible that the Windows should be peer'd through; besides, that it is pleasant to the Eye. The Doors of their Houses are of Tebinar-Wood, which is very noble, and their Wainscoting is as neat. The Persians that love ostentation, always display their rich Carpets, Mattresses, Cushions, Coverlets, and all the most costly Furniture they have, in the fore part of their dwellings: For the Haram, or the Women's Quarter is but meanly adorn'd, in regard they are never visited by any men but their Husbands. In some of their Rooms they have very narrow Chimnies; for the Persians set all their Wood upright which they burn, because of the Smoak; besides, they make but small Fires, in regard they have so great a scarcity of Wood. When they would go to sleep, they lye down upon a Plank cover'd with a Carpet, and wrap themselves in a quilted Blanket. In the Summer they sleep in the open Air, upon their Terrasses; and in regard the Women lye there too, there is an order obtain'd, that the Moullahs that sing upon the Mosquees shall not presume to go up in the morning, because it might be their hap to see the Women as they lay; it being one of the highest pieces of infamy imaginable for a Woman to be discover'd with her Face op'n.

There are some Houses that belong to great Lords, that have a square place before their Doors, where they that come to visit them may put their Horses, to the end the Street should not be peffer'd. If you look upon the Front of their Houses, there is little ornament to be seen, unless it be upon some which have been lately built.

CHAP. V.

A Description of Ispahan, the chief City of the Kingdom and Dominions of the King of Persia.

Ispahan, Sphaban, or Sphaon, as the Persians pronounce it, which some Travellers have too unwarily affirm'd to be a fine City, lyes in the Province of Hierac, which composes some part of the ancient Kingdom of the Parthians. It is the Capital City of all Persia, and a very large place, where the King usually keeps his Court. The Records of the Persians declare that formerly it was two contiguous Towns, one part part whereof belong'd to Haider, and the other to Neamed-Olabi, two parts of Ispahan still retaining those two names, which has occasion'd great quarrels and debates among the people, while they have both been eager to prefer their own quarter. Nor indeed could Ispahan be accounted other than a Village, before Sba-Abas had conquer'd the Kingdoms of Lar and Ormuz. But then observing so fair a Situation, where he might as well be near the Provinces which he had newly conquer'd, as for the design which he had to extend his Dominions to the East and West, as he had enlarg'd them to the South, he quitted Casbin and Sultany to reside at Ispahan, as in the center of his Empire.

This City is seated in a vast plain, which extends it self three ways fifteen or twenty Leagues. Upon the South about two Leagues from Ispahan rises a very high Mountain, on the top whereof toward the West are to be seen the remains of a very strong Fortrefs, where Darius kept himself, when Alexander gave Battle to him in that Plain. In the side of the Rock is a Grotto, either natural or artificial, or both, out of which issues a natural Spring of excellent Water, where a Dervis usually inhabits.

The Circuit of Ispahan, taking the Suburbs all in, is not much less than that of Paris; but the number of Inhabitants is ten times greater at Peris than at Ispahan. Nor is it a wonder that a City should be so large and yet so ill peopl'd, where every Family has its particular House, and every House its particular Garden. What ever way you come to it you may discover first the Towers of the Mosquées, and then the Trees that environ the Houses, so that Ispahan seems rather a Forrest than a City. The Plain being fertile is well inhabited, but there are no Villages in it, only three or four Houses in a place together.

The Walls of Ispahan are of Earth, to which do belong some pittiful Towers without Battlements or Platforms, Bastions or Redoubts, or any other Fortification. The Moats also are as bad, neither broad nor deep, but always dry. In some places also the people have beaten down great gaps in the Wall, to get the nearest way into the City; yet they reckon ten Gates, which are but of Earth however, and of no defence; the chief of which are Der-Vasafseháb, not far from the King's Palace, Der-Tokshi, Der-Mark, Der-Vasaf-Lemban, Der-Nasan-Abad, Der-Sba, and Der-Dekt. The Gates are made of Planks rudely joyn'd together, and cover'd with plates of Iron four fingers broad, and as thick as a Crown, fasten'd with flat-headed Nails. The Keys are never carry'd to the Governour, but left with a lilly Porter that op'ns and shuts the Gates as he pleases himself; for indeed there is no necessity of shutting the Gates when there are so many other ways into the City.

The City of Ispahan is ill laid out; for the Streets are narrow and unequal, and for the most part dark, because of the Arches that go from one House to another, so that a man is forc'd sometimes to feel his way for two hundred paces. Moreover the Streets are many times annoy'd with Loads of Ordure and the Carcasses of dead Beasts, which cause a most filthy stench, and would be very infectious certainly, but for the wholesomeness of the Air. In the most part of the Streets are Wells, which are stop'd up in Summer, and open'd in the Winter to carry away the Raint and the Snow into the Arch'd Channels which run under Ground through the middle of the Street. There are also before every Door certain Troughs to receive the filth and ordure of every Family, which the Country-men come and carry away to Dung their Grounds. Every morning the Country-man comes with his Ass to lade Dung; and it is observable that he is more diligent to carry away the Dung of the Armenians, Franks, and Jews that drink Wine, than of the Persians that drink none. And this is the profit of the Servants of the House that sell an Asses Load of Dung for five, and sometimes for ten or twelve Kasbeshe.

The Streets of Ispahan, as of all the rest of the Cities of Persia are not pav'd, which makes them very incommodious both Summer and Winter. For in Summer the dust puts out your Eyes, unless it be in the Streets where the great Merchants live, and about the Meydan, where there are people hir'd to water the Streets Morning, Noon, and Night. Those people go about the Streets also with a Boracho full of Water, and a Glass, with Ice in a Bag, to give them drink that desire it: Nor do they take any money, being paid out of the Legacies left by persons deceased for that purpose. In the Winter this dust turns to mire half the the leg deep; though it be very true that there are very few people to be seen then in the Street; for in regard of the vaulted Channels that run through every Street, should the Soak'd Earth chance to fall under the Horse, it might endanger a Limb. Besides, the Persians are so superstitious, that they will hardly receive a man within their doors with a spot of Dirt upon his Cloaths, for fear of being defil'd by him.

You shall also meet with little Holes against the Walls of the Houses in the op'n Street, where the Persians are not asham'd to squat and Piss in the face of all the World. If there be any running Water in the Street, they take a little in their Hands and wash their Member with it; or if there be no Water, they rub it against a Stone or the Wall, which they take for a great piece of gentility and modesty.

That which farther contributes to the nastiness of the Streets of Ispahan, is, that the Butchers throw the Blood and Excrements of the Beasts which they kill into the Streets. If a Horse or a Mule, a Camel or an As dye, they presently throw him into the Street. True it is, that there are people who come presently to buy it of the Owner; who make Harisse, which they sell to the poor Work-men. This Harisse is thus prepar'd; they boyl the flesh of the dead Beast with Corn, and after it is well boyl'd they mash it together, 'till it becomes like a Pottage. They also make Harisse of good Mutton; both which sorts they sell in the Market-place, or great Meydan of the City.

Though the City of Ispahan be dirty, yet there is a way for persons of Ability to avoid it; for they never stir but on Horse-back, with two or three Lackeys, call'd Chatter, that run before to make room. For the Men are all upon the false Gallop in the Streets, without any fear of hurting the Children: by reason that the Children are not suffered to play in the Streets like ours, but as soon as ever they come from School, they sit down by their Parents, to be instructed by them in their Profession.

These Valets or Foot-men make a Trade of Running; of which the King and the Lords have several in their service; it being a piece of grandeur to keep a great many. They serve from Father to Son, undergoing an Apprentiship in Running. From six to seven years of age, they only set themselves to walk slowly. The next year they run a League at a time upon a handfom trot, the next year after they run two or three Leagues, and so proportionably for the rest. At eighteen years of age they are allow'd a Scrip of Flowr, with a flat piece of Copper to bake their Bread upon, and a Bottle of Water; all which they carry about them when they run. For these people when they are sent Post never take the Caravan-Road but the shortest cuts through the Deserts, and must therefore accustom themselves to carry their Provision. The King and the Lords have no Chatter, but what are Masters; which degree they are not to arrive at without some Ceremony and performing a Race, like our Jemmy and the Butcher of Croyden.

If he be a Lord that owns the Chater who desires to be a Master, he sends for all his Friends, sets up a Scaffold in the Meydan, provides a Collation, and sends for the Curtisans to divert the Company. Now there is not one of these Guests that does not bring something to give this Chater after the Race is run, either a Bonnet or a Girdle, or some other thing, part of which the Chater gives to his fellows. Then the Chater appears with his Legs greas'd, his Thighs bare, only a slight short pair of loose Breeches, and a Girdle with three little bells hanging upon his Belly. Thus accouter'd he starts from Ali-Capi, and between Sun-rising and Sun-setting he runs backward and forward to a Stone a League and a half from the City toward the Mountains; running in that time six and thirty of our common Leagues, or a hundred and eight Miles. While he runs, there is Kourouk in the Meydan, and upon all the Road where he runs, and three or four Horse-men that continually ride to and fro, to see that there be no deceit in the Chater's Races; who when he approaches near the City, ride before to give notice of his coming. Every time he starts and returns, the Drums and Trumpets sound; at the end of the Race there stand several persons with Arrows in their Hands, and ev'ry time he comes to the Stone they give him an Arrow, which he carries back every course to Ali-Capi. Every time he returns, the Curtisans rub him and make much of him. All the time he runs, he eats nothing, but drinks Sherbet now and then. If he acquit himself well well, which appears by the number of Arrows brought back, he is admitted a Master by the approbation of the King's Foot-men, who are superior to all the rest. The Kans or Governours of Provinces run their own Chaters with the same Ceremonies, and in the same manner.

The Fortrefs of Ispahan is nothing at all considerable. It joyns to the Wall upon the South side of the City, and is twice as long as broad, but without any defence in the World, unless it be of some pitiful Towers made of Earth. Here it is that the King keeps all the Rarities which he has purchas'd, or that has been presented to him. For as to his main Treasure, I believe it consists chiefly in Gold-Plate. Within the Fortrefs there is a large Field, sow'd every year with Rice and Corn; hard by which stands the House of the Capuchin-Friars.

Ispahan in general, unless it be the Meydan and some few arch'd Streets where the Merchants live, is more like a great Village than a City; the Houses standing at a distance one from the other, with every one a Garden, but ill look'd after, not having any thing in it perchance but only one pitiful Tree: true it is that they begin to build better of late days, but it is without the City. As for the Women, 'tis not a pin matter whether they live out of the City or within, in regard they never stir out of doors, and as seldom go a-froo.

The Meydan or great Piazza of Ispahan was the contrivance of the great Sha-Abas, who had never done it, if a great Prince of the ancient Race of the Kings of Persia had not refus'd him the old Meydan, with several Priviledges, and the House that stood by it. Thereupon he design'd this new Piazza, to draw off the Merchants, and to spoil the old Market-Place, by their departure from that quarter of the City which is less inhabited at this day. It is not far from this old Meydan, that the Austin-Friars on the one side, and the Carmelites on the other have their Habitations. There are also two sides of that Meydan entire, under the Portico's, where sit only such People as sell Herbs, Fruit, and Victuals; the other two sides are almost falln to decay; but when it was all standing, it was as handsom as the new one: and it is to be wonder'd, that the Prince, who built it, did not choose the place where Sha-Abas has built his, as being near the Water, and consequently far more convenient.

The great Meydan then is a place about seven hundred Paces long, and between two and three hundred broad. It has Buildings upon all the four sides; it lyes in length directly North and South; the Fronts are every one Portico'd, and Terras'd at the top; and on the City-side are little Chambers nine, or ten Foot high, which fall very much to decay, being only built of Brick bak'd in the Sun. They are inhabited, the greatest part of them, by the most infamous Curtifans of the City. At some Paces distance from the Portico's, is a Channel which is pav'd with stone, and runs round about the Piazza; Sha-Abas caus'd several Trees to be planted by the side of it, but both the Channel and the Trees being altogether neglected, are falln to decay; besides, that the smell of the Water in the Summer time is very noysom.

In the midst of the Piazza stands a kind of a May-Pole, or Mast of a Ship, where the People exercise shooting at Birds. When the King comes to shoot, they set a Cup of Gold upon the top of the Mast, which he is to strike down with an Arrow. To which purpose he must ride full speed, nor is he permitted to shoot 'till after he has pass'd the May-Pole, turning himself upon the crupper of his Horse: a remain of the ancient custom of the Parthians, that kill'd their Enemies flying.

The Cup belongs to him that strikes it down; and I have seen Sha-Sefi, Grandfather of the present King, in five Courses strike down three Cups.

From this Mast or May-Pole down to the great Mosquee, they sell nothing but Wood and Charcoal: from the same Pole to the Sun-Dial upon the North-side, are none but such as sell old Iron-Tools, old Harnes for Horses, old Coverlets, and other Brokery-ware, as in our Long-Lane.

From the Pole to another Mosquee, to the South, just again the Sun-Dial, is the place for all the Poulterers. The rest of the Piazza toward the Palace, is always kept clean, without any Shops, because the King comes often abroad in the Evening to see Lions, Bears, Bulls, Rams, Cocks, and all other sort of Creatures fight which are brought thither.

The people of Ispahan, as in many other Cities, are divided into two parts, the one one call'd Hedari, the other Namettai; and upon all the Combats of Beasts before-mention'd, there are always very considerable Wagers laid between these two Tribes. The King, who is a neuter, gives to the Master of the Beast that gets the upper hand sometimes five, sometimes ten, sometimes twenty Tomans, according to the value of the Wager laid; and he that wins the Wager, presents the Master of the Beast likewise. They have also a Sport at breaking of Egg, by knocking the ends one against another, some of which Eggs come to three or four Crowns. The Hens that lay them are bred in a Country which they call Sausevare, about a hundred leagues from Ispahan, toward the Province of Karasan; the Cocks of which Country are bigger and stronger than other Cocks, and cost some of them a hundred Crowns. There are a sort of Tumblers also, that after Dinner set up their Stages in the Meydan, and toward the Evening, they that play the Maid-Marians come and encompass a square place with a course piece of Calicut; and then through another very fine Cloth, the Wenches shew a thousand tumbling Tricks and antick Postures. When they have done, they come and ask the Spectators for Money, who give them every one what they think fit. Every Friday, which is as it were Market-day, the Country-folks bring to Town what they have made in the Villages, as Doors and Windows fitted to be hung up, Window-frames, Locks, and other things of that nature. Upon that day also they sell Mules, Horses, Camels, and Asses, which brings a great confluence of people from all parts.

Upon the West-side, where stands the Gate of the Palace, and Ali's Gate, between the Canal and the Portico's are rang'd some seventy Pieces of Cannon upon their Carriages. These Guns, together with the Sun-Dial, were brought from Ormus by the Great Shah-Abas, of which the English ought to have had their share; for without their assistance he never could have tak'n the Town.

From the corner of that Front, which touches upon the Eastern Front of the Mosquee, in the middle, are all Sadlers Shops; and from that Mosquee to another corner that touches upon the Western Front, live the Book-Sellers, Book-binders, and Trunk-makers. In the middle of the Southern Front stands a Portal, with a Tower upon each side, which leads to a Mosquee, the Gate whereof is cover'd all over with Plates of Silver, and is certainly the neatest Portal and fairest Entrance into any Mosquee of Persia.

At the other end of the same Front, where it joyns to that upon the West, there is a great Portal that leads to a false Gate of the King's Palace; near to which, as soon as you are enter'd, you meet with the Apartment of the Great Treasurer, who is a white Eunuch, and having the Keys of the Chamber where the Money lyes, takes care to pay what-ever the King orders him. Through that false Gate all the King's Provisions are carry'd into the Palace. This way also enter they that are entertained for the Manufactory of the King's Tissues, Silks, Sattins, Coverlets, and the like. In the same Enclosure also the Franks, who are under the King's Wages, and live at Zulpha, come every day to work; as also all the most particular and eminent Artists that the King hires.

The Western Front, which makes one of the two lengths of the Meydan, is thus appointed; from the Southern angle that touches the Trunk-maker's quarter, live all your Pedlers that sell all the small Commodities of Norimberg and Venice.

As for the King's Palace, I cannot make any handsom description of it, in regard there is nothing of Beauty either in the Building or in the Gardens. I think I have been as far in the House as a man could go, every time I was sent for by His Majesty; but excepting only four Rooms which they call Divans, I saw nothing but pitiful low Galleries, and so narrow that hardly two men could pass a-breast in 'em. In one of those Galleries I had audience of the King, in the Garment of Honour which he had bestow'd upon me. But In regard I have spok'n of two of them in another place, and that the other two are much alike both Building and Furniture, I shall say no more of them here.

From the King's Palace Gate to Haly's Gate live the Goldsmiths, Lapidaries, and Gravers of Stones for Seals: Haly's Gate is a plain Gate, naked of Work: of which I have already spok'n.

Between Haly's Gate, and the other angle of the same Western Front, stands a great Gate which leads into a Bazar, where all the Armenians that live at Zulfa keep their Shops, and sell all sorts of Cloth that comes out of Europe, and other the choicest choicest Wares of Perfia. At the end of that Bazar stands a fair Inn two Stories high, which the Mother of Sba-Abas the second caus'd to be built. In the middle stands a great Fountain with four great Gates, which lead into four other Inns. Here by the way let me give a Traveller and a Trader in Perfia this advice; that if his Goods be not very heavy, he never hire a low Chamber, as being three times dearer than those above: For the Chambers which the Sun lies upon most in the Summer, are the Chambers which cost least. Not but all the Chambers in the Inn are Tax'd at the same rate by the King; but the Host for his profit will find some pretence or other to raise his price, pretending those Chambers be hir'd already which you desire, especially if they be corner Chambers, which are the largest and most commodious. And indeed without this collusion Chambers would be very cheap. The best convenience of those Inns is, that a man is more secure in one of them than in a private House: For there if it happ'n that a piece of Goods be stol'n; or that your Chapman prove insolvent for Goods bought, the Inn-keeper is to make all good; being by the Law to receive so many blows aday 'till he pays the sum demanded. The Merchant also gives two in the hundred for every thing that he sells, and when the Market is done they presently go to the Host, who sets down in his Book the quality of his Goods, and the names both of buyer and seller. If he knows not the buyer, he is bound to go and enquire after him, and if he be not solvent, the Merchant takes his Goods again. Sometimes the Merchant to save the two in the hundred, combines with the Purchaser to carry away some of his Goods without the knowledge of the Host, which is done by greasing his Deputies fist, who will presently shut his Eyes. But then if the Purchaser proves insolvent, the Merchant dares not complain, because his Goods are not Register'd in the King's Book, whom he has defrauded of his Custom.

No less secure are the Bazars or Market-places, where the Merchants shut up their Shops very slightly, the Bazars being strongly guarded both within and without all night long. As for the petty Stalls in the Meydan, every one puts up his Ware in a Box Padlock'd up, and then lay them down at one end of the place one by another. As for the coarse sort of Ware, as Tents, Cords, Ropes, and such other things they only heap them under a large Coverlet fasten'd at the four corners by four sticks, for the Meydan also is as strongly guarded as the Bazar.

Between Haly's Gate and that which leads to the Bazar where the Armenians keep their Shops, live all those that deal in Russia Leather, making Borachio's to tie under the Horses Bellies, little Buckets, and Furniture for Horse-men, as also Bowyers, Fletchers, and Forbishers. From the last Gate to the end of the Gallery, live all the Druggists and Apothecaries.

At the Angle upon the two fronts upon the East and North, there is a Gate that leads to the Great Bazar; next to that live only your Sails-men that sell whole Habits for men, as Shirts, Sheets, Hose, and the like. There be also those that sell Leather Shoes for men and women; which Shoes are always worn by persons of quality.

Out of this Bazar you go into another full of men that work in Copper, such as make Pots, Plates, and other Utensils for the Kitchen. Here also live those that make Files, and the blades of Sythes. The rest of the Bazar is possess'd by Dyers of Calicut; and at the end of the Bazar is a fair Inn, where all the Merchants live that sell Musk, Russia Leather, and Furrs.

I have in another place observ'd that the King has a great Revenue out of the Bazars and Inns which he has caus'd to be built, which is particularly laid out in provision for his Table. For the Law of Mahomet forbidding Princes to impose Taxes or Customs upon the People, they do not believe that the money which arises from thence is fit to be employ'd or laid out for the necessities of life, believing that their food so purchas'd would do them no good. By virtue of this prohibition of Mahomet it is, that the Merchants take all the liberty they can to deceive the King of his Customs, believing that they cannot offend the Prince, while they transgress not the Law. Besides, that if they should pay all the King's Duties, the price of Goods would rise so high, so as to spoil the whole Course of Trade and Commerce. Neither would the Revenue of the Caravanferas, Bazars, and Gardens suffice for the Kings Kitchen, were not the several Kans or Governours of Provinces oblig'd to supply that expence every Week in their turns, whereby those expences cost the King little or nothing.

Upon the North-Front of the Meydan, are made under the Portico's separations for Chambers, that look upon the Piazza, where people go to smook Tobacco and drink Coffee. The Seats of those Rooms are plac'd as in so many Amphitheaters, and in the midst of every one stands a large Vessel full of running Water, wherewith their Pipes be cleans'd when they are over-foul. All the Persians that have any spare time, fail not every day to resort to those places between seven and eight in the Morning, where the Owner of the Room presently brings them every one their Pipe and their Dish of Coffee. But the Great Sha-Abas, who was a man of a great understanding, finding those places were only so many Meeting-houses, where men assembl'd to talk and prattle of State-affairs, a thing which no way pleas'd him; to break the neck of those petty Cabals, he order'd that a Moullab should be sure to be betimes at every place before the rest of the People came thither, and that he should entertain those Tobacco-whiffers, and Coffee-quaffers, sometimes with a point of the Law, sometimes with History, sometimes with Poetry. This custom is still observ'd, so that after this entertainment has lasted two or three hours, the Moullab rising up, cries to every one in the Coffee-Room, Come my Masters, in good time, let's all now retire every man to his business. Straight every one retires upon the Moullab's words, who is liberally entertain'd all the while by the Society.

In the midst of the North-Front stands a great Portal, with a large Dial over it, which Sha-Abas brought from Ormus when he took it from the Portugals. But the Dial is of no use, nor is ever like to be. Round the Tower of that Portal runs an open Gallery, with a kind of a Cieling over head supported with Pillars; from whence every Evening about Sun-set, and at Midnight, a noise of Drums and Trumpets is to be heard through the whole City. Though the truth is, the Musick would never charm a curious Ear. Out of some parts of the Gallery are contriv'd little Dormitories, where the chiefest of the Court lye. In all the Cities where the Kans reside is the Custom of making this rattling noise of Drums and Trumpets observ'd, and not elsewhere.

On each side of the Portal, under the Horologe, are five or six Banks of Jewellers, who there put to sale certain parcels of Pearls, Emeralds, Granats, and Turquoises, which are not of any great value: every parcel being set by it self in a Dish, and the whole Stall cover'd with a silk Net, to preserve the Stones from being stoln.

Just against the same Portal, going toward the South-Front, you meet with two little Goals five or six Foot high, and sev'n or eight distant one from the other. Here the men play at Pall-mall on horse-back, the Horse-man being to strike the Ball running at full speed, between the two Goals.

Through that Portal you enter into an Enclosure much like the place where the Fair of St. Germans is kept, and there it is that the Merchants of Gold and Silver-Tissues and other rich Stuffs, with all your finest sorts of Calicuts and Linnens, keep their Shops.

The Court side of the Meydan, which is upon the East, and which answers to the grand Front where the King's House stands, is thus appointed. In the middle stands a Duomo cover'd with a kind of bak'd Earth, and as well the Duomo as the Portal, which is very high, are all varnish'd over. You ascend nine or ten steps, the Port of Haly facing it on the other side of the Piazza. From the end of the Portico's that touch the North-side of the Mosquee, live the Shop-keepers that sell sowing-Silk, and small Manufactures of Silk, as Ribands, Laces, Garters, and other things of the same nature. From the Mosquee to the other end, are all Turners, that make Cradles for Children, and Spinning-Wheels. There are also some Cotton-beaters, that make quilted Coverlets. Without the Portico's are none but Smiths, that make Scyths, Hammers, Pincers, Nails, and such like things; with some few Cutlers.

This is all that can be said of Ispahan, and that great Piazza, which some perhaps have set out in better colours. But I have represented all things as they are, as being one that have seen them oftner, and beheld them a longer time than ever any Frank that Travell'd into Asia.

C H A P. VI.

Of Zulpha, a little City, separated from Ispahan by the River Senderou.

Zulpha, which others call Julpha and Giolpha, is distant from Ispahan toward the South half an hours walk, the River Senderou running almost at an equal distance between the two Cities. The way that leads from one City to another is a Walk some fifteen hundred Paces long, and seventeen broad, almost equally divided by the River. It begins from a Pavilion or Tabernacle forty Foot square, which joyns to the hinder part of the King's House, with a double Story, to which several Windows give light, clos'd with wooden Lattices very artificially wrought. None but the King and his Household pass that way into the Walk. For they that go from Ispahan to Zulpha, find the way into the Walk through a Gate which is close adjoining to the Tabernacle. This Walk is call'd the Street of Tcharbag, or the Street of Four Gardens.

A Channel runs all along the Walk from the Tabernacle, where a little Rivulet falls into it, and fills it as far as the great Bridge. The two sides of the Channel which are pav'd with Stone, and are two or three Foot broad, makes one way which Passengers may and many times do take; for the usual way both for Horse and Foot, lyes upon each side of the Walk, behind the Trees, which are planted in a straight line to the very Walls of the King's Gardens, which close the Alley on each side. It is a kind of a Causey of Free-stone, somewhat rais'd, and four or five Foot broad. There is but one row of Trees on each side, straight and high, call'd Tchinards, with one tuft at the top. The space between the Channel and the Trees is not pav'd, but lyes common, and is sometimes sow'd. About two hundred Paces from the Tabernacle or Banqueting-house, the River falls into a great Pool, about thirty or thirty-five Foot in diameter; and in that place, as also in others somewhat beyond it, where there are also other Pools, the Walk is cross'd by a Causey pav'd and rais'd, ten or twelve Foot broad, as the rest are. Upon the left hand of the first Pool stands another Tabernacle or Banqueting-house, much alike in structure and bigness to the former; in which place, in a low arch'd Room with a Fountain of Water in the middle, you may go and drink Coffee. From that house to the Bridge the Walk descends, and the Water makes some falls.

All the Gardens on each side of the Walk, both on this side and beyond the Bridge belong to the King. But you must not imagin that these Gardens, or that of Hezardgerib, which is the fairest of all Persia, are so curiously set out, nor so well kept as ours in Europe. For they have no such lovely Borders, nor such close Walks of Honeyuckles and Jasmin as are to be seen in the Gardens of Europe. They suffer the Grass to grow in many places; contented only with a good many great Fruit-trees, tufted a-top, and planted in a line, which is all the grace of the Gardens of Persia.

In each side of the Walls between which the Walk runs, at a true distance of space, are gates neatly contriv'd, and over each a little Room. Almost in the middle of the Walk between the great Banqueting-house and the Bridge, upon the left hand, stands a House of the Dervi's, to whom the King has given one of his Gardens to build upon. There they keep the Relicks of Haly, or some other Prophet; for you shall see them standing under a certain Arch, before which the Persians make a most profound Reverence. These Dervi's come every Afternoon about three or four a Clock into the Bazars of Ispahan, every two, an old one and a young one, choosing his quarter. They go from Shop to Shop, instructing the People upon some Point or other of the Law: the young Dervi's answering the old ones at certain times. Their Habit is only two Sheep skins or Goat-skins, the one hanging before, the other behind, with a great leathern Girdle, four or five fingers broad, garnish'd with several great Plates of Latten. They throw another Sheep-skin cross their Shoulders, which they tie before, under their Chins. Upon their Heads they only wear a little Lamb-skin in form of a Bonnet, letting the feet hang down to their Necks, over their Cheeks. They carry a great Club in their hands, as the Painters represent John the Baptist in the Wilderness. Between their Girdles and their waists they stuff a company of pitiful Flowers, or else a sort of Herbs, which after Exhortation, both the young, and the old Dervi's bestow upon the Merchants and Tradesmen, from whom at the same time they receive Alms. Toward the evening they go home again; and I forgot to tell you, that before the door of the house, stands always a large Vessel of water, with several little Cups, and Ice in the Summer, where all passengers may drink upon free-cost.

The River of Senderou, which, as well as the rest of the Rivers of Persia, except the Aras, is not able to carry a Boat, is a very great relief to Ispahan. Behind the Mountains of the South beyond Zulpha is another River, call'd Abkuren, which about five or six Leagues above Ispahan, runs within a League and a half of Senderou. Sba-Abas, the first attempted to have joyn'd the two Rivers together, to which purpose he went about to have remov'd certain Rocks that stood in his way; but not being able to compass his design, his Successors laid aside all the thoughts of attempting any more. Could it have been done, the Campaign of Ispahan would have been one of the most fertile and delicious places in the world; whereas now the River is of no use, running through desert Coutreys and Plains of Salt. As for the River of Senderou, in Winter it over-flows, but in Summer it has very little water, being oftner foarded than cross'd over upon Bridges. About four Leagues above Ispahan they are constrain'd to force it into their Lands, to water their Fields and Grounds, which else would produce nothing at all. Wells they have a great many in several places; but besides that, they are not able to furnish that great quantity of water which is necessary; the River Water is much better to fatten the Land. Now you must observe, that their Channels never return to the River, being wasted upon the Ground; so that the River of Ispahan being very much wasted before it comes to the City, by reason that it is still lessen'd by so many Channels, about ten or twelve Leagues from thence, it ends as it were quite spent in a few Marshes. This scarcity of water which is so general over all Persia, is the reason that they are extraordinary Husdands of it, and buy it very dear. Therefore is the Superintendent of the water, which brings the King in a very considerable Revenue, one of the most contended-for employments in the whole Court. For every Garden is tax'd more or less according to its bigness, for the water it requires once a week; which water is let go into the quarters which have need of it; every Garden having a particular Channel, whence they have their water by turns. But you must have a care of attempting to bring this water in before your turn; for should it come to be known, an easie Fine would not excuse the matter. I knew two Franks, who, because they presum'd to take in water in the night time before it was their turn, had like to have lost all their Land by Confiscation, had it not been for the particular Favour of the King to the Franks; and yet all that favour did not excuse them from being soundly amerced.

There are four Bridges a quarter of a Leagues distance one from another, that cross the River of Senderou to Ispahan. That which crosses the walk, bears the name of Alymerdi-Kan, who caus'd it to be built, being also call'd the Bridge of Zulfa. It is built of good Brick, joyn'd together with Free-stone, and very level, not being higher in the middle than at either end. It is not above three hundred and fifty paces long, and twenty broad, being supported by several small Arches of Stone, which are very low. Of each side there is a Gallery eight or nine foot broad, which runs from one end to the other, several Arches twenty five or thirty foot high supporting the Platform, where, when the heat is not extream, they that please may walk for the sake of the fresh Air. But the most usual passage is under the Galleries, where there are several out-lets upon the River, to let in the fresh Air. For the Galleries are very high, from the level of the Bridge, to which you ascend by easie steps, the middle of the Bridge not being above twenty five foot broad, serving for Wagons and Pack-horses. There is also another way all along by the water side, where there are several Stones laid to step upon, to keep you from being wet-shod. It crosses through all the Arches of the Bridge, through little doors made in every Arch from one end to the other, descending from the Bridge by a little pair of Stairs, tak'n out of the thickness of the Arches supporters. There is another Stair-case to ascend up to the Galleries of about two fathoms broad, with Stays or Rails on both sides. This Bridge is truly a very neat piece of Architecture, if I may not say, the neatest in all Persia. There

There are also three other Bridges upon the River, one above the Bridge of Zulfa, and two below. The first but meanly built, but very commodious for the Armenians, when they travel Westward, who would else be forc'd to go a great way about, through the whole City of Ispahan.

The first of the other two Bridges below the Bridge of Zulfa, was built by Sha-Abas the second, Father of the present King. It is almost equal to it in Structure; but it has one particular beauty, which is a hexagonal place in the middle of the Bridge, which causes the Water to fall in that part with a pleasing noise. For that being the deepest part of the River, Sha-Abas resolv'd to build a Bridge there; partly for the Gaurs sake, to the end, they might not come through the walk of Tcharbag, and that going from Ispahan they might have a shorter cut home. The Habitation of the Gaurs is only a large Village, the first Houses whereof are but a little way from the River; though the walk that goes from Ispahan to the King's Bridge is both longer and broader than that of Tcharbag, planted on both sides with a row of Trees, but no Channel in the middle.

Before each of the Avenues to the Bridge, stands a House that belongs to the King for his divertisement. That upon the left side of the River toward Ispahan was by the great Sha-Abas giv'n to the Capuchins. For as soon as they came to Ispahan, upon their Examination, the King was extremely tak'n with their behaviour. He ask'd them how they liv'd, and whether they took any money? To which the Capuchins making answer, that they never handled any money, but contented themselves with Alms; the King believing his Subjects, would give them very little, bestow'd that House and Garden upon them. But they stay'd not long there, because it was too big for them to repair, and too far from the City, so that the Roman-Catholicks in the Winter could not get to their Chappel. Now they have built themselves a very handfom House not far from the King's Palace, at the Cost of Father Joseph, one of their own order.

There is another old Bridge a quarter of a League below the Gaurs Bridge, which is upon the Road from Ispahan to Schiras.

But to return to the long-walk of Tcharbag, which continues above eight hundred paces beyond the Bridge of Zulfa to the Garden of Hezardgerib. The Rivulet that passes that other part of the walk, comes from the same River which they have cut three or four Leagues above Ispahan. When you have walk'd about four hundred paces, you met with a fall of Waters that tumbles into a Pool, from whence there are twelve steps to ascend to the end of the Alley. The walk is fronted by the great House which stands before the Garden of Hezardgerib, or the thousand Acres. The House consists but only of one great Hall over the Gate, and four small Chambers at the four corners of it.

Hezardgerib is the fairest Garden in Asia, though it would be accounted nothing in Europe. However as it lies upon the descent of a Hill, it consists of sixteen Terrasses, sustain'd by a Wall sixteen or seventeen foot high. There is but little Water in any of the Wells; but that which has most is in the fourth Terrass. That is a great Octagonal Pool about a hundred and twenty foot in Diameter, round about which are several Pipes that throw up the Water about three foot high, and there are three steps down to the Water. A Channel pav'd with Stone runs through the principal Alley, which goes no farther than the building. This Channel is as wide as that of the Channel of Tcharbag, whence it is supply'd as being right opposite to it. In the tenth Terrass you meet with another Fountain of the same bigness and form with that in the fourth; and in the last which terminates the Grand Alley and the length of the Garden, there is another Channel which crosses all the Alleys which, like the great one compose the length of the Alley. Besides this, there are op'n Rooms to take the fresh Air, some falls and murmurs of Water, but for borders and close Alleys, and Arbours, you must expect no such thing, either in Hezardgerib, nor in any other part of Persia.

Having walk'd in the great walk of Tcharbag, you meet upon the right hand with a Street between two Walls of the Gardens that belong to the King, which Street leads you to Zulfa; not above two or three Musquet Shots distance off.

Zulfa a Colony of Armenians which Sha-Abas brought from Zulfa, a City of Armenia, is so much encreas'd for some years since, that it may now pass for a large large City, being almost a League and a half long, and near upon half as much broad. There are two principal Streets which contain near upon the whole length, one whereof has on each side a row of Tchinars, the roots whereof are refresh'd by a small Channel of Water, which by a particular order the Armenians bring to the City, to water their Gardens. The most part of the other Streets have also a row of Trees, and a Channel. And so their Houses, they are generally better built, and more chearful than those of Ispahan.

See the Description of Zulpha.

How they came to be settled here, I have already describ'd: And now the number of Inhabitants is strangely increas'd by the accession of several other Christians of divers Sects, as Jacobites, Coptes, and Nestorians, who formerly liv'd in the Suburbs of Ispahan. Neither was Sha-Abas so cruel in transplanting the Armenians away out of their own Countrey, for they were all at that season poor labouring men, who knew not at all what belong'd to Trade. Since that time they are grown very rich: so that the Armenians have no cause to be covetous of the Habitations of their Ancestors. And now I will tell you how they came to be such great Proficients in Trade.

Sha-Abas, who was a man of a great Genius, and a person of great undertaking, considering that Persia was a barren Countrey, where there was little Trade, and by consequence little Money, resolv'd to send his Subjects into Europe with raw Silks, so to understand whence the best profit would arise, to bring Money into his Country. To which purpose, he resolv'd to make himself Master of all the Silk in his own Country, by purchasing it himself at a reasonable rate, tax'd by himself, and to reap the gains by his Factors: and withal, thought it necessary to seek an Alliance with the great Kings of Europe, to engage them on his side against the Turk. He first sent to the King of France, Henry the Fourth. But he dying before the Ambassador arriv'd, answer was made the Ambassador, That if the King of Persia had any thing to say to the King of France Lewis the Thirteenth, he must send a new Ambassador, which was never done.

Three or four years after he sent an Ambassador to the King of Spain, accompany'd with a Persian Merchant of Ispahan, putting into their hands a considerable quantity of Bales of Silk. He also sent along with them a Portuguez Austin-Friar, to be their Guide and Interpreter. The Persian Merchant would have sold the Silks, as was the King's order, and have bought a Present more becoming. But the Ambassador over-rul'd by the Friar, resolv'd to present the King of Spain with the Bales of Silk. The Merchant not able to oppose the Ambassador, returns home forthwith to give an account to the King, who approv'd his management. The Ambassador proceeds, and coming to the Spanish Court, presents his Bales of Silk to the King, who ask'd the Ambassador, whether his Master took him for a Woman, that he had sent him so many Bales of Silk to spin; and immediately sent away the Present to his Queen, presenting the Ambassador but very meanly: who thereupon seeing the Errour he had committed, made hast home; but upon his return, the Persian King having notice of the ill success of his Negotiation, caus'd his Belly to be ript op'n in the publick Market-place.

About fifteen years after, he trusted a considerable quantity of Silk with a Merchant's Son of Ispahan, and sent him to Venice: who when he came there, took a stately Lodging, and spent his Money at a strange rate, especially among the Courtisans; to maintain which expence, he continually sold great quantities of Silk. The Venetians seeing a private man live so splendidly among them, and not believing so great a quantity of Goods could belong to one single Merchant, but rather imagining him to be a Factor for some Company who suffer'd for his folly, wrote to all the Ports of the Levant, and having intelligence who he was, the Senate thought fit to seize his Person and his Goods, before he had consum'd all; at the same time giving a civil account to the King of Persia, what they had done. To which the Persian King return'd a most obliging Answer of Thanks, sending withal an intelligent Persian Merchant to take an account of what was left, to whom the Venetians were very punctual. As for the Prodigal Persian, who thought it not his wisest way to return into Persia, what became of him is not material to this Story.

Sha-Abas by these Experiments observing the little inclination of his Subjects to Trade, who were naturally addicted to Pride and Expence, which is no part of a Merchant's business, cast his Eyes upon the Armenians, men able to endure the labour labour of long Journeys, sober persons, and great Husbands, and such who being Christians, might more freely Trade among the Christians; and made choice of them, as being most proper and fit for Trade. Whereupon, picking out the most Judicious among them, he deliver'd to every one so many Bales of Silk, according to their Capacity; for which they were to pay at their return, a reasonable Rate tax'd by the King, who allow'd them what more they got for their Expences and Gains. Those people in a short time became so expert, that there is not any sort of Trade which they will not now undertake; for now they run as far as Tunquin, Java, and the Philippines, and indeed over all the East, except China and Japan. But if they do not thrive, they never return; as being a place where they must either give an exact Account, or else suffer the quick and severe Justice of Drubbing, which never fails those Factors that are ill Husbands for their Masters.

And indeed the Armenians are so much the more fit for Trading, because they are a people very sparing, and very sober; though whether it be their virtue or their avarice, I know not. For when they are going a long Journey, they only make provision of Bisket, smoak'd Bufalo's flesh, Onions, bak'd Butter, Flowr, Wine, and dry'd Fruits. They never buy fresh Victuals, but when they meet with Lambs or Kids very cheap in the Mountainous Countries; nor is there one of them that does not carry his Angle to fish withal, when they come to any Ponds or Rivers. All these provisions cost them little the Carriage. And when they come to any Town where they are to stay, they club five or six together, and lye in an empty Chamber which they furnish themselves; every one carrying his Mattress, his Coverlet, and his Kitchen-Instruments, which is a great piece of Thrift. When they travel into Christendom, they carry along with them Saffron, Pepper, Nutmegs, and other Spices; which they exchange in the Country-Towns for Bread, Wine, Butter, Cheese, Milk-Meats, and other Provisions which they buy of the poor Women. When they return out of Christendom, they bring along with them all sorts of Mercery-ware, and Pedlery-ware of Noremberg and Venice; as little Looking-glasses, trifles of Tin enamel'd, false Pearls, and other things of that nature; which pays for the Victuals they call for among the Country-people.

In the beginning of their Trade, there return'd very few Caravans into Persia without two hundred thousand Crowns in Silver, beside English and Dutch Clothes, fine Tissues, Looking-glasses, Venice Pearls, Cocheneil, and Watches; which they thought most proper for the Sale of Persia and India.

At length those Armenians became so exquisite in Trade, that several of them have left Estates of two, some twenty thousand Tomans. But the richest among them was Corgia, or Monsieur Petrus, who left forty thousand Tomans in coyn'd Money, besides his Horses, Furniture, and Lands in the Country, his Jewels and Plate; all which are never reckon'd a Merchant's Estate, but only the ready Cash with which he trades. Corgia Petrus was very much esteem'd for his Charity, and the great Church which he built, which is a kind of Covent, with a Bishop and Monks. Nor is the fair Market-place, all environ'd with Shops, a little beholding to his Generosity.

The Armenians of Zulpha have this advantage over all the Christians of the East, that they enjoy Lands and Privileges; the King not permitting the least injustice to be done them, nor that any Mahometan should live at Zulpha. They have also the privilege to be as well clad as the Persians, and to make use as they do of Bridles of Gold and Silver. Their Wives also are very richly habited, in strip'd Sattins purf'd with Gold, and other rich European Silks.

The King names whom he pleases among the Armenians to be their Chief; whom they call Kelonter, who judges all their differences, and taxes them to make up the Sum which they are to pay to the King every year.

The Language of the Armenians is either vulgar or learned: the learned is only us'd by the Ecclesiasticks, in reference to their Religion. They write like us, from the left to the right, having found out peculiar Characters about four years since. They have three Languages very natural to them, which however are very different: the Armenian, which is their ancient Country-speech, which they have preserv'd from Father to Son; the Persian, which is the Language of the Country where they live; and the Turkish, of which they make very much use in course of Trade. As for their Women, they speak nothing but the Armenian, as having no converse with strangers, strangers, and never stirring out of their houses. There are some Armenians speak Italian and French, as having learnt it in Europe.

There are in Zulpha fifteen or sixteen Churches and Chappels of the Armenians, among which you are to count two Nunneries for Women. There are in Ispahan Austin-Friars, Carmelites, and Capuchins, and in Zulpha Jesuits. The Jesuits that came last have but a little House, but to make them amends they have a large Garden. Though the number of the Religious Teachers is far greater then the number of Hearers: for in all Ispahan and Zulpha, take the Franks that come out of Europe, or born in Persia, as well Men as Women, there are not six hundred persons that profess the Catholick Religion. As for the Armenians, they are so obstinately fix'd to their own Religion, that they will hear of no other; and nothing but Money has sometimes caus'd them to feign the embracing of another. Friar Ambrose a Capuchin staid a while at Zulpha, to whom several of the principal Armenians came to School to learn French, in hopes of establishing a Trade with France. But the Armenian Archbishop and Bishops fearing lest the Children should be infected with some other Religion, excommunicated all Fathers that sent their Children to School. And finding that they little regarded the Excommunication, they shut up the Church doors, and stir'd up the People against the Religious Franks; so that Father Ambrose was forc'd to leave Persia, and retire to Surat.

Moreover there are in Ispahan both Jews and Indian Idolaters. Nor are the Jews so miserable and beggarly, as they seem to be: they intrude, according to custom, into all Business; so that if any has a mind to buy or sell any rich Jewel, he need do no more but speak to them. In the Reign of Shah-Abas, the Athemadoulet persecuted them so grievously, that either by force or by cunning he caus'd them to turn Mahometans; but the King understanding that only power and fear had constrain'd them to turn, suffer'd them to resume their own Religion, and to live in quiet.

There are about ten or twelve thousand Banians in Ispahan, who are known by their yellow Complexions, or rather by a yellow Mark made with Saffron upon the top of their Foreheads. Their Turbants are less than usual, and their Shoes are almost like ours, embroider'd with Flowers a-top. They are all Bankers, and very knowing in Money. The greatest part of the Money of the principal Money'd men of Ispahan is in their hands for improvement sake. So that if you want a considerable Sum, you may have it the next day upon good Security, and paying a severe Interest, which those Banians will squeeze up sometimes to 18 per Cent. But if it be not very privately exacted and paid, the Law of Mahomet, which forbids the taking of Interest, lays hold upon the whole Sum, and confiscates it every Penny.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Religion of the Persians; of the great Feast of Hocen and Husein, and the Camel-Feast.

THE difference among the Mahometans, doth not consist in the different Explanations which they put upon the Alcoran; but in the several Opinions, which they hold concerning the first Successors of Mahomet, from which have arisen two particular Sects entirely opposite; the Sect of the Sunnis, and the Sect of the Schiais.

The first, who are of the Turkish belief, maintain that Abou-baker succeeded immediately to Mahomet, as his Vicar or Vicegerent; to him Omar; to Omar Osman; to Osman Mortuz-Ali, Nephew and Son-in-law to Mahomet by Marriage of his Daughter. That Osman was Secretary to Mahomet, a person of Courage, as well as the other three: and that they were all valiant Souldiers, and great Captains, who extended their Conquests more by force of Arms than by Reason. And thence it comes that the Sunnis will not allow of Disputes, but propagate and maintain their Religion altogether by force.

The Schiais, who are of the Persian belief, detest Abou-baker, Omar, and Osman, as Usurpers to the Succession of Mahomet, which only belong'd to Haly, his Nephew and and Son-in-law. They hold that this succession consists in eleven High Priests descendants from Haly, who makes the twelfth in this order. 1. Haly, Son of Aboutaleb. 2. Hocen, eldest Son of Hali. 3. Hussein, his second Son, who suffer'd death in defence of his Father's Succession. The place where the Sunnis gave him battel and slew him, is call'd Kerbela near to Babylon, and is a holy place in high veneration among the Persians. 4. Iman-zin-el-Abedin. 5. Mahomet-el Baker. 6. Iaser-el-Scadek, who introduc'd the Law into Persia, that if any Christian, Jew, or Idolater turn'd Mahometan, he should be declar'd general Heir to his Family to the exclusion of Brothers and Sisters, and that he might allow what he pleas'd to his Father and Mother. Whence arose two mischiefs, that some Armenians, Christians, and Jews turn'd Mahometans, to get the Estate of the Family, and others turn'd Mahometans, to keep their possessions. 7. Moussa-Katzem. 8. Hali-el-Rezza, whose Tomb at Meshed is so highly venerated among the Persians, as Mahomet's among the Turks. 9. Mahammet-el-Isnad. 10. Hali-el-Hadi. 11. Hocen-el-Askeri. 12. Moubemmet el-Moubadi Shabeb-zaman. The Persians hold the same belief as to the last Iman, as we do of Enoch and Elias; which is the reason that several people leave them in their Wills Houses ready furnish'd, Stables full of stately Horses, and other necessaries for them to make use of when they return to Earth again. They attribute to this Iman the Sirname of Zabeb-zaman, or Lord of Time.

These two Sects of Sunnis and Schias over-run the three principal Kingdoms of India, viz. the Great Mogul's, the King of Golconda's, and the King of Visapour's. The first and last being Sunnis, that is to say, both the Kings and Lords of the Court; for their Subjects are most of them Idolaters. Some Schias there are in the Courts of both Kings, in regard the Officers of the Army are for the most part Persians, though in outward shew they may follow the Religion of the Prince. But the King of Golconda Koutoub-Sha is a zealous Schias.

I come now to the Grand Festival of the Persians, which is the famous Feast of Hocen and Hussein.

Eight days before the Festival begins, some of the more zealous sort black all their Bodies and their Faces, and go naked in the Streets with only a covering about their secret parts. They carry two Flints, one in each hand, which they knock one against another, wrything their Bodies, and making a thousand antick Faces; and all the while crying out, Hussein, Hocen; Hocen, Hussein; which they act and speak with so much Labour, 'till they foam again at the mouth. In the Evening, the devout people admit them into their Houses, and feed them very well. During those days, as soon as the Sun is set, you shall see at the corners where several Streets meet, Pulpits set up for certain Preachers, who prepare the people that flock to hear them to the devotion of the Feast. Now in regard all Ages, and Sexes go, there is no time in all the year so favourable for the Women to meet their Gallants.

In the year 1667. the third of July, I saw the Festival by the favour of the Nagar, who appointed me a place just against the Dela where the King sate. This Dela is a Room built with a jetting upon that side of the Meidan next the Palace Gate, one story high. Several Pillars sustain the flat bottom or floor of the Dela, enrich'd with a Grotesco work of Gold and Azure, in the mid't whereof there was a Fountain that was fill'd with Water by the contrivance of a Pipe. The Stage or Dela was op'n upon three sides, the longest side jetting out upon the Piazza. Upon the Wall of the opposite side, which was close, were to be seen several English and Hollanders, both men and women pictur'd with Bottles and Glasses in their hands, as if they were drinking to one another. Sha-ah the second caus'd this Painting to be drawn by a Hollander.

About seven a Clock in the Morning Sha-Sepbi the second, who since has chang'd his name to Sha-Soliman the second, came and seated himself upon his Throne set up in the mid't of the Dela, all his Nobility standing about him. So soon as he was sate down, the Great Provost appear'd at the end of the Piazza mounted upon a fair Horse, attended by certain young Lords, who caus'd the People, consisting of the Companies of the two quarters of the City, which are twelve in all, to advance to the places which were design'd them. For formerly the Companies would strive for the way; and therefore the King to prevent disorder, order'd there should be a Provost, or Master of the Ceremonies to place them without disturbance.

As

As he was about his duty, a Horse-man entred the Piazza, arm'd with a Bow, a Quiver, and a Scimitar, follow'd by seven Men that carry'd every one a Pike upright in their hands, with every one a Man's Head at the top. Those were the Heads of certain Usbeck-Tartars, the neighbouring and mortal Enemies of the Persians, which those men had cut off from the shoulders of their conquer'd Foes. The King caus'd five Tomans a piece to be giv'n to them that carry'd the Heads, and ten Tomans to their Leader. After them enter'd three hundred Turks, which were fled from the Borders of Turky, from whence the Country-people were tak'n by force, and sent to the Warrs of Candy. They complain'd, that whereas they were wont to be sent to their Winter-Quarters about the middle of October, the Turk kept them to the same hard service in Winter as in Summer. All these were order'd to advance into the middle of the Piazza, where they made their obeysance to him three times, and then humbly besought him that they might dwell in his Kingdom, with their Wives, their Children, and their Cattel. The King order'd Money to be distributed among them, and that they should have Lands assign'd them to manure. Then the Provost caus'd the Companies to advance, every Company having the Thill of a Wagon carry'd before him; upon every of which Thills was a Bier three or four Foot high, the Wood of the Thill being painted with a Grotesco of Gold and Silver, and the Bier cover'd with Sattin. When the first Company had order to march, three Horses were led before, richly harness'd; when they were come about a hundred Paces forward into the Piazza, in view of the King, they that led the Horses caus'd them to gallop, and then all the Company fell a running and dancing about with the Bier. Besides that, every one flung up his short Cassock, his Girdle, and Bonnet, put their fingers in their mouths, to whistle as loud as they could. While the naked people, with their Flint-stones in their hands, ran knocking their Stones together, crying out, Hussien Hocen, Hocen Hussien, 'till they foam at the mouth again; not omitting to writh their Bodies, and to make all the scurvy Faces as before describ'd. The three Companies succeeding one another in the same Formalities, by and by came two Companies more with a little Bier upon their Thills, and in each Bier a little Child that lay as if dead. They that accompany'd these two Biers wept and sigh'd most sadly. These two Infants represented the Children of Hussien, who when the Prophet was slain, were tak'n by Yerid, Caliph of Bagdat, and put to death.

Upon this occasion you shall see a great number of Curtisans that come to the Ceremony fall a weeping, who thereby believe their Sins are forgiv'n.

When all the people were come into the Piazza, notwithstanding all the care and good order that was tak'n, there were several that went to Sharps, accounting it a great honour to fight smartly in the Kings presence; and farther believing, that if any one be kill'd upon that occasion, he shall be Sainted; as indeed every one gives something toward his Interrment. The Grand Provost seeing the Quarrel grow hot, and fearing more mischief, sent for five Elephants, which ceas'd the Combat, by drawing the Eyes of the Spectators upon them. The Elephants march'd one before another, according to their Pay that was allow'd them, and their skill in War. Not that the King of Persia makes any use of them in the Field, but only for State, keeps such as the Indian Princes present him withal. Those five Elephants were cover'd with Houses of Cloth of Gold, with a Fringe of the same round about. And upon the first, which was the highest and the biggest, sate two Men, the one upon the neck, who guides the Elephant; the other upon the crupper, carrying the King's Arm's in a Standard fix'd to a half-Pike. Upon the other four sate only one Man a-piece, who were the Governours. When they came before the place where the King sate, they were all rank'd five a-breast, at what time the biggest, which was in the middle, stretch'd out his two fore-legs forward, and his two hinder-legs backward, 'till his belly almost touch'd the ground; after which manner the Elephant makes his obeysance. The other four did the same. Then laying their Trunks upon the ground, and raising them again over their heads three times more, they were made to stand with their heads where their tayls stood; and their Houses were turn'd up, to the end the King might see in what condition they were, and whether well look'd after or no: which being done, they were led away again.

Upon one side of the Room where the King stood, a little Scaffold was set up, cover'd with Tap'stry, some five Foot lower than the Kings. In the middle of the Scaffold stood a great Elbow-Chair cover'd with black Velvet, where sate a Moullah with with six other Moullah's round about him. The Moullah made a Discourse upon the Death of Hussein and Hocen of about half an hour long, which being ended, the King caus'd a Calaat or Habit of Honour to be giv'n him, as also to the others, though not so rich. When they had all put on the Habit, the same Moullah return'd to his Chair, and made a Prayer for the health of the King, and the prosperity of his Kingdom.

All these Ceremonies lasted from seven in the Morning 'till Noon, at what time the King retir'd into his Haram. As for the People, they carry their Biers up and down the City, and where-ever two Companies meet, whether it be for the upper hand, or to get formost, they presently fall together by the Ears, and knock one another down: For they are not permitted to carry any other Arms than good big Clubs, almost as big as Levers.

Some time after the Feast of Hussein and Hocen, the Persians celebrate another Festival, which they call the Feast of the Camel, in remembrance of Abraham's Sacrifice: They have a great reverence for this Festival, saying that it was a Camel and not a Ram which God sent to relieve Ishmael (affirming that Ishmael was to have been sacrific'd, and not Isaac.) They choose out for this Ceremony one of the fairest Camels they can meet withal, and adorn and drefs him up with several Plates of counterfeit Gold and Silver, and then lead him without the City to a place which is before a Mosquee on the other side of the River of Ispahan, upon Zulpha side, the Deroga or Provost accompanying the people. The King was formerly wont to be at this Feast, accompany'd with his Nobility, and I have seen him there; but of late years he never goes, the Deroga supplying his place.

When the King went thither, several Moullahs pray'd for half an hour, after which the King took a kind of a Jav'lin and darted it against the Camel: but now in the absence of the King, the Deroga gives the first stroak. At the same time they sling the Camel to the ground, with Ropes ty'd to his legs, and cutting off his head and neck together, they divide the rest of the Body into eleven parts more, to the end all the twelve Companies may have every one their share. Every Company carry their share to the Master of the Companies House, who is generally the ancientest among them. Which part is kept and salted up 'till the next Feast, and the piece the year before, so 'till then preserv'd, is then boyl'd with Rice, and is the foundation of the Feast for the chief of the Company, who take it for an honour to eat of it: For the rest, they boyl Rice with Mutton and Hens, and besides that, distribute large Alms to the Poor.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Religion of the Gaur's, the Relicks of the ancient Persians, adorers of Fire.

There are no men in the world so scrupulous of discovering the Mysteries of their Religion, as the Gaur's; so that I was forc'd to frequent their company very much in most of my Travels, to pick out what I have here to deliver.

Of the present Condition of the Gaur's.

After the Persians began to persecute the Gaur's, great numbers of them retir'd to Surat, and others into the Province of Guzerat. Now the King of Persia lets them live in quiet; and there are now above 10000 in Kerman, where I staid three Months in the year 1654. All that live in India are Tradesmen, and for the most part Turners in Ivory; those in Kerman deal in Wool. Four days journey from whence stands their principal Temple, where their Chief Priest resides; whither they are once in their lives oblig'd to go in Pilgrimage. There are some of these Gaur's live near Ispahan.

Of their Original, and their Prophets.

They say that the Father of their Prophet was a Frank by Nation, whose Name was Azer, and a Carver by Trade. That he left his own Country to live in theirs, which at that time was the City of Babylon; where he took a Wife who call'd her self Doghdon. That one night his Wife dreamt that God had sent an Angel from Paradise to visit her, who brought her very rich Cloaths, which she put on. That a Celestial Light presently over-spread her Face, and render'd her as beautiful as the Sun; and that when she wak'd she found her self with Child, which Child prov'd to be the Prophet Ebrahim-zer-Atoucht. That the Astrologers of that time, by their skill in the Stars knew of the Birth of that Infant sent by God, who was to govern Men; and reign in their Hearts. That those Astrologers went and declar'd the same thing to the King, telling him that there was a Child suddenly to be born, that would one day reprove him of his Crown. Whereupon the said King, call'd Nebrous, and a great Tyrant, caus'd all the Women with Child to be put to death, through the whole extent of his Dominions.

But by a Miracle the big Belly of the Mother of their Prophet not appearing, she remain'd undiscover'd, and brought forth a Son. Her Husband, who knew nothing of this Mystery, fearing he should lose his head if he did not discover the business to the King, before he found it out another way, went and confess'd that he had a Child born, but that he knew nothing of her being with Child.

Now you must know, that contrary to the custom of other Children, that cry so soon as they come out of the Mothers womb, this Child laugh'd so soon as he was born. For being to triumph over the Hearts of the people, he was to shew signs of joy; so that the people began already to rejoyce in their future felicities. This being signifi'd to the King, he call'd his Astrologers together, to tell him the meaning of so extraordinary a thing, and what would become of the Infant. But the Astrologers not being able to satisfie him, he sent for the Infant, and would have slain him with a Sword with his own hand, but God dry'd up his Arm immediately, so that he could not. However, not terrifi'd with so great a punishment, transported with Choler, he caus'd a great Fire to be kindled; and commanded the Infant to be thrown into it. But by the power of God, the Fire which he had prepar'd to consume the Infant turn'd into a Bed of Roses, where the Child most sweetly repos'd.

They who from that hour began to honour the little Prophet, took away some of that Fire, which has been preserv'd to this time. They keep it, say they, in honour of so great a Miracle; and they have it in great veneration, because it discover'd the merit of their Prophet.

Nevertheless the King stop'd not there, but still obstinate in his impiety, notwithstanding all these Miracles, he prepar'd new torments for the little Infant; but God chastis'd his incredulity and that of his people very severely, by sending such an infinite number of Flies, and that of such a pestiferous nature, that who-ever were stung with them dy'd without remedy, unless they immediately came and worship'd the Prophet, and kiss'd his Feet, in testimony of their repentance. As for the King, who still continu'd in his impenitency, an exemplary fate befel him. For one of those Flies stinging him in one of his Ears, he dy'd a most tormenting death.

His Successor was Sha-Glochter. He also at the beginning of his Reign began to persecute the little Infant, who now began to increase in years and virtue. The King imprison'd him: but he was astonish'd when he heard that one of his Horses, which he always confided in when he went to Battel, as being assur'd of Victory when he rode him, had lost his four legs. Thereupon, wiser than his Predecessor, and acknowledging from whence so dire a Correction proceeded, he sent for the Prophet out of Prison, ask'd pardon for his incredulity, and pray'd him by his intercession to restore his Horse his legs again. The Prophet willing to do him that favour, pray'd to God four times, and every time he pray'd one leg return'd to the Horse again. The King beholding such a Miracle, was half converted; but being desirous to be farther convinc'd, he desir'd the Prophet to throw himself into a Bath of melted Silver, which he would provide for him, promising, if he came out safe, that he and all his People would receive him as one sent from God, and be obedient to his Precepts in all things. The Prophet resolutely undertook his offer, and the Bath being ready, cast himself fearlessly fearlessly into it; and as he went in, so he came out without the least harm. Then the King and all the people that were present ador'd him for a real Prophet, and gave him the name of Zer-Atencht, or Wash'd in Silver.

The Prophet perceiving that all the people had him in so much veneration, withdrew himself, and would not be seen any more. Nor do they justly know what became of him; which makes the greatest part of the Gaurs believe, that he was tak'n up into Paradise both Soul and Body together. Others say, that having found an Iron Coffin upon the Road near Bagdat, he put himself into it, and was carry'd into Heav'n by the Angels. They allow their Prophet three Children, who are not yet come into the world, though their names be already giv'n them. They say that this Prophet Ebrahim walking one time upon the River without a Boat, three drops of his nature fell from him upon the water, which are still preserv'd there. That their God will send a Virgin, very much belov'd by him, upon the same River, who by the reception of the first drop shall become big of the first Child, whom they call beforehand Ouchider. He shall come into the world with authority, and shall cause his Fathers Law to be receiv'd, and confirm it, not only by his eloquent Preaching, but by many miracles. The second, whose name is Ouchiderma, shall be conceiv'd after the same fashion; he shall assist his Brother, and by causing the Sun to stand still ten years, shall convince all the world of the Truth of his Doctrine. The third shall be conceiv'd by the same Mother, and shall be call'd Senoier-hotins. He shall come with more authority than his two Brothers, and shall perfectly reduce all people to the Religion of their Prophet. After which shall be the universal Resurrection, at what time all the Souls, either in Paradise or Hell, shall return to take possession of their Bodies. Then say they, shall all the Mountains, and all the Minerals in the world be melted, and shall fill up the great Chaos of Hell, whereby the Mansion of the Devils shall be utterly destroy'd? After this the world shall be levell'd, and be made fit to inhabit, and men shall have every one their apartment answerable to the degree and quantity of the good which they did in their life time: but that their chief delight shall be to behold and praise God and Ebrahim their Prophet. They add that before the Resurrection, those that are in Paradise do not behold the face of God, no not the Angels themselves, except only one, who is always attendant on him to receive and execute his commands. They also say that God will have pity upon the Damn'd, and that they shall go into Paradise, as having suffer'd enough already for their sins. By which it appears, that the Paradise of the Gaurs is less remote from sense than that of Mahomet's invention; and that they have a confus'd knowledge of the mysteries of Christian Religion.

Of the Books of the Gaurs.

E*brahim-zer-Atencht* being taken up into Paradise, they receiv'd by his means seven Books of Laws, which God of his goodness sent them to instruct them in the way of their Salvation. They also receiv'd seven others, containing an Interpretation of all the Dreams that could be Dream'd. Lastly, seven others, wherein were written all the secrets of Physick, and all the possible means for the long preservation of health. They say that fourteen of these Books, which contain'd the explication of Dreams and secrets of Physick are lost; for that Alexander the Great carry'd them away, as esteeming them a vast treasure; and for the Books of their Religion, because they were written in a language that none but the Angels understood, Alexander for madness caus'd them to be burnt: for which rashness of his, God punish'd him, and afflicted him with that terrible sickness whereof he Dy'd. Some Doctors and Priests that had hid themselves in the Mountains to save their lives from his Butchery, after Alexander was Dead, met again together, and compos'd one Book by the strength of their memories. I saw that Book which is a good large one, and written in a different Character, either from the Arabian, Persian, or Indian. Their Priests themselves that read in that Book hardly understand what they read, but they have other Books that explain what is contain'd therein. When they read in that Book, as also when they pray, they tie a Handkerchief about their mouths, as if they were afraid their words should mix with the Air and receive any impurity.

Of the manner of their Baptism.

THe *Gaur*s never use Circumcision, but at the Birth of their Children practise something like our Baptism. For some days after the Child is born, they wash it with Water wherein certain Flowers are first boyl'd; and during that dipping, the Priest, who is present, makes certain Prayers. If the Child dye without that Washing, they do not believe but that it goes to Paradise; but they hold that the Parents shall give an account for their neglect of the Infant, because that Washing increases his favour and his merit in the sight of God.

Of their Marriages.

THe Religion of the *Gaur*s permits them to have five Wives, if they can maintain them; nor is it laudable to repudiate any one but in case of an evident Adultery, or that she turn Mahometan; besides, it behoves her Husband to stay a whole year, to see whether she will repent or no. If she come and acknowledge her fault to the Priest, he enjoyns her Penance for three years; after which he remarries them, and they become man and wife again.

As to the Ceremony of Marriage, the Priest, when the Couple come to him, asks the Man and the Woman in the presence of Witnesses, whether they both consent; then taking a little Water he says a few Prayers over it, and then washing both their Foreheads he pronounces certain words, and there's all. But they are not to marry within the third degree; nor do they know what it means to desire a Dispensation.

But you must observe by the way, that though they are allow'd five Wives, there is but one which can be truly said to be marry'd, with whom they are oblig'd to lye at least two nights in a week, Fryday and Saturday, and she always goes before the rest. But if she have no Children in seven years, the man is allow'd to marry another, but not to repudiate the other, whom he is bound still to maintain according to his quality.

So soon as Women or Maids perceive the custom of Nature upon them, they presently leave their Houses, and stay alone in the Fields in little Huts made of Hurdles or Watlings, with a Cloth at the entring in, which serves for a Door. While they are in that condition, they have Meat and Drink brought them every day; and when they are free, they send according to their quality, a Kid, or a Hen, or a Pigeon for an Offering; after which they go to the Bath, and then invite some few of their Kindred to some small Collation.

Of their Fasts, Feasts, and principal Ceremonies.

THe *Gaur*s drink Wine both men and women, and eat Swines flesh, provided it be of their own breeding and feeding. They are very careful lest their Hogs eat any ordure; for should they perceive that they had devour'd any thing of nastiness, they are strictly forbid'n to eat them. They never pare their Nails; so that if by way of disgrace, or by any misfortune they are constrain'd to cut their Nails or their Hair, they carry that which they cut off to some place appointed without the City for that purpose. Five days in a year they abstain from Meat, Fish, Butter, and Eggs; and three other days they fast altogether 'till Evening. They have also thirty Holydays in honour of thirty of their Saints, which they keep very strictly, no man daring to work. But the day of the Birth of their Prophet is celebrated with an extraordinary Pomp; besides, that then they bestow large Alms.

There is one day in the year when all the Women of every City and Village meet together to kill all the Frogs they can find in the fields; and this is done by the Command of their Prophet, who was one day very much annoy'd by them.

Their Priests have several Books full of small Pictures in Water-Colours, ill done, representing how the several Sins of Men shall be punish'd in Hell, especially Sodomy, which they abominate.

Of their Funerals.

When the *Gaur*s are sick they send for their Priests, to whom they make a kind of Confession; whereupon the Priests enjoyn them to give Alms, and other good Works, to gain pardon of their Sins. They

They neither burn nor bury their dead, but carry the Corps without the City, into a wall'd place, where are abundance of Stakes seven or eight Foot high, fix'd in the ground, and tye the dead Corps to one of the Stakes, with his Face toward the East. They that accompany the Corps fall to their Prayers at a distance, 'till the Crows come; for those Cemitaries draw the Crows to them. If the Crow chances to fasten upon the right Eye of the deceas'd, then they believe the person to be happy, and for joy they give large Alms, and make a Feast in the field. But if the Crow fixes upon the left Eye, then they take it for an ill Omen, return home sad, without speaking to one another; give no Alms, nor eat nor drink.

Of their Adoration of Fire.

THE Gaurs would not be thought to give Honour to Fire under the title of Adoration. For they do not account themselves Idolaters, saying that they acknowledge but only one God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, whom they only adore. As for the Fire, they preserve it and reverence it, in remembrance of the great Miracle, by which their Prophet was deliver'd from the Flames. One day being at Kerman, I desir'd to see that Fire, but they answer'd me, they could not permit me. For say they, one day the Kan of Kerman being desirous to see the Fire, not daring to do otherwise, they shew'd it him. He it seems expected to see some extraordinary Brightness; but when he saw no more then what he might have seen in a Kitchen or a Chamber-fire, fell a swearing and spitting upon't as if he had been mad. Whereupon the Sacred Fire being thus profan'd, flew away in the form of a white Pigeon. The Priests considering then their misfortune, which had happen'd through their own indiscretion, fell to their Prayers with the People, and gave Alms; upon which, at the same time, and in the same form the Sacred Fire return'd to its place: which makes them so shy to shew it again. When they put any persons to their Oaths, they Swear them before this Fire; for they think no person so impious, as to swear false before that Sacred Fire, which they take for the Witness of their Oath. Their Priests put them in dread of very great punishments, and threat'n them that the heavenly Fire will forsake them, if they prove so wicked as to swear falsely before it.

Of their Manners and Customs.

THE Language of the Gaurs is different from the Persians, as is their Character and manner of Writing. They love to feast, and to eat and drink well, being very profuse of their Wine and Strong-water. They never eat Hares, because they have their monthly Purgations, like Women: for the same reason they never eat Mulberries, believing that they partake of the nature of Women and Hares.

If, when they comb their Hair or their Beards, any one hair happ'ns to fall upon their cloaths, those cloaths must be wash'd in the stale of a Cow or an Ox to purifie them again. If by chance they happ'n to touch any ordure or nastiness, when they come home they must wash themselves in the same Urin. If one of their Priests meet a dead Corps in the High-way, and chances to see it, he is oblig'd to wash himself in Cows-Piss, which they hold to be a good Purification: an Opinion held in some parts of India also. I ask'd one of their Priests how they came to understand the virtue of this Urin; who answer'd me, that a certain person who was contemporary with the first Man, having his Arm bruise'd and very black, by reason of some accident that befel him through the malice of the Devil, fell asleep in the fields, and as he lay, an Ox staling, a drop of the Urin flew upon his Arm, and presently heal'd that part which it wet, and restor'd it to its former whiteness: which the man perceiving when he wak'd, presently follow'd the Ox, and staid by him 'till he stal'd again, and then receiving the Piss upon the whole wound, was perfectly cur'd. They also preserve it, and compound it with a Water, which they cause them to drink who have committed any Sin, after they have been at Confession for it. They call that Water the Cazi's Water; which Urin ought to be preserv'd forty days, with an infusion of Willow-Bark, and certain Herbs. When any person is confess'd of his Sin, if it be a crying Sin, the party is bound to stay ten days in the Cazi's House, and not to eat or drink but what the Priest gives them. And in order to Absolution, the Priest strips him naked, and tyes a little Dog to his right great Toe, which he leads with him about the Cazi's House House wherever he goes, sometimes a whole day, sometimes longer, according to the hainousness of the crime. In that posture he desires the Cazi to purifie him, telling him that for his part he believes himself to be purifi'd. The Priest makes answer that it is the Dog that must purifie him, and not he. After that he powrs the compounded water seven times upon his head, then gives him a draught to drink, and so he is absolv'd. This Penitence costs the criminal Sawce, who is afterwards bound to feast all his friends at the Cazi's House. Being surpriz'd at this superstition, I ask'd whether the women were shrifted thus by the Cazi; but I found that the Cazi's Wives confes and absolve the women and maids.

One more strange custom they have, that when a man is upon the point of death, they take a little Dog and set it upon the expiring parties brest. When he is just breathing his last, they put the mouth of the Dog to the mouth of the person dying, and cause him to bark twice in that posture, that the Soul of the deceas'd may enter into the Dog, who they say will deliver it into the hands of the Angel appointed to receive it. Moreover when any Dog happ'ns to dye, they carry him out of the City, and pray to God for the Carrion, as if the Beast receiv'd any kindness after death by their Prayers.

Of the Beasts, which they love or hate.

There are some Beasts which the Gaurs do mightily respect, and to which they give a great deal of Honour. There are others which they as much abhor, and which they endeavour'd to destroy as much as in them lies, believing that they were not created by God, but that they came out of the body of the Devil, whose ill nature they retain.

The Beasts which they principally admire are the Cow, the Oxe, and the Dog. They are expressly forbid to eat of the flesh of a Cow or an Oxe, or to kill them. The reason why they so esteem these Creatures is, because the Oxe labours for man, and Ploughs the Ground that produces his food. As for the Cow they more dearly affect her for the Milk she gives, but especially for the purifying quality of her Urine.

The Creatures which they abhor are Adders, Serpents, Lizards, Toads, Frogs, Creyfish, Rats, Mice, but above all the rest Cats; which they say are the resemblance of the Devil, who gave them so much strength that a man can hardly kill them; so that they rather suffer the inconveniency of Rats and Mice, than ever to keep a Cat in their Houses.

As for the other Animals before-mention'd, if any of the Gaurs fall sick, they hire poor people to go and find those Creatures out and kill them; which they reck'n in the number of those good works that comfort the Souls of the deceas'd. The reason why they hate them so, is, because they believe the Devils make use of them to torment the Damn'd; and therefore they do a work of charity that destroy them, whereby they mitigate the pains and torments of Souls in Hell.

The last King of these Gaurs was Sha-Iesherd, who was driv'n out of his Country by Omar the second, successor to Mahomet.

Of the RELIGION of the ARMENIANS, and of their Principal CEREMONIES.

CHAP. IX.

How the Armenians Consecrate and Administer the Sacrament.

Since the Armenians Traded into Europe and began to be Travellers, their Churches are better set out then they were heretofore. They spare no cost to adorn the Choir and the Altar; you tread upon rich Carpets, and for the structure and embellishments of it, they employ the best Workmen and the choicest Materials they can meet with. From the body of the Church to the Choir there is usually an ascent of five or six Steps. Nor is there above one Altar in any Church, upon which they set the Consecrated Bread, before they set the Chalice where the Wine is. When the Mass for the Ceremony is said by an Arch-bishop, at the reading of the Gospel they light an abundance of Wax Tapers, which Tapers are like Torches. After the Gospel is read, several of the Noviciates take sticks in their Hands about five foot long, at the end whereof are Latten Plates with little Bells hanging about them, which when they are shak'd, imitate the sound of Cymbals. Other Noviciates there are which hold a Copper Plate in their Hands hung about with Bells, which they strike one against another: and at the same time the Ecclesiasticks and Laity sing together indifferent Harmoniously. All this while the Arch-bishop has two Bishops of each side of him, who are in the room of a Dean and a Sub-dean; and when it is time, he goes and unlocks a Window in the Wall on the Gospel side, and takes out the Chalice where the Wine is. Then with all his Musick he takes a turn about the Altar, upon which he at length sets down the Chalice, saying certain Prayers. After that, with the Chalice in his hand, and the Bread upon the Chalice, he turns toward the People, who presently prostrate themselves upon the Ground, beat their Breasts, and kiss the Earth, while the Arch-bishop pronounces these words; This is the Lord who gave his Body and Blood for you. Then he turns toward the Altar, and eats the Bread dip'd in the Wine; for they never drink the Wine, but only dip the Bread in it. That done, the Arch-bishop turns once more toward the people with the Bread and Chalice in his hand, and they that will receive, come one after another to the bottom of the Choir, whither it is not lawful for any Lay person whatsoever to ascend; to whom the Arch-bishop gives the Bread dip'd in Wine that is in the Chalice, which Bread is without leaven, flat, and round, about as thick as a Crown, and as big as the Host of the Mass, being Consecrated the day before by the Priest, whose Office it is. They never put Water in their Communion-Wine; affirming that Water is for Baptism, and that Christ when he instituted the Holy Supper, drank it pure, without any mixture of Water.

When the Armenians come to the Communion, the Arch-bishop or the Priest says these words; I confess and believe that this is the Body and Blood of the Son of God, who takes away the sins of the World, who is not only ours, but the Salvation of all Mankind. The Priest repeats these words three times to the people, to instruct them and to teach them to what end they receive the Sacrament. Every time the Priest says the words, the people say after him word for word; and when the Priest serves the people, he breaks the Host into little bits which he dips in the Wine, and gives to every one of the Communicants. That which I most wonder at is, that they give the Communion to Children of two or three months old, which their Mothers bring in their Arms; though many times, the Children put it out of their mouths again. They never administer the Sacrament all the time of their Lent, for then they never say Mass but upon Sunday noon, which they call Low-Mass, at which time they never see the Priest, who has a Curtain drawn before the Altar, and only reads the Gospel and Creed aloud. Sometimes upon Thursday in the Passion week they say Low-Mass about noon, and then they Confess and administer the Sacrament: But generally they stay 'till Saturday, and then the Communicants, after they have receiv'd, are permitted to eat Fish, Eggs, Butter, Oyl, or any thing else except Flesh. Upon Easter day, by break of day, the Priest says Low-Mass, Confesses, and Administers, after which it is lawful to eat Flesh. But the Beasts must be kill'd upon Easter-day, and not so much as upon Easter-eve. They have four other Feasts in the year, wherein they observe the same Ceremony, eating neither Flesh, Fish, Eggs, Butter nor Oyl for eight days: which four Feasts are Christmas, the Ascension, the Annunciation, and St. George's. Before this last Feast they stretch their devotion to the utmost, for some will fast three days, some five, one after another.

CHAP. X.

Of the ordination of their Priesthood; and their Austerities.

WHen a Father designs his Son to the Priesthood, he carries him to the Priest, who puts the Cope, op'n on both sides about his Shoulders; after which the Father and Mother take him home again. This Ceremony is repeated seven times in several years, according to the years of the young Child, 'till he come to be of age to say Mass. If he be not design'd for a Monk, but for the Priesthood, after the fourth time of putting on the Chasuble or op'n Cope, they marry him; for their Priests marry once, but if that Wife dy'e, if they intend to marry again, they must give over saying Mass. The six first Ceremonies being over, when the Youth comes to the age of 18 years, at what time they are capable of saying Mass, as well those who are design'd for Monks, as those who are marry'd Priests, they proceed to the seventh and last Ceremony, which must be perform'd by an Archbishop or a Bishop; who invests the young Priest with all the Habits which the Priests wear that say Mass. That being done, he goes into the Church, out of which he is not to depart for a whole year; during all which time he is altogether employ'd in the service of the Church. The Priest who is marry'd, must be five days after he has said Mass before he returns home to eat or drink, or lye with his Wife. And as well the Monks as Priests, when they intend to say Mass again, must remain five days in the Church, without either going to bed or touching any thing with their hands, unless it be the Spoon where-with they eat their meat: not daring all the while to spit or blow their noses. The next five days after they have said Mass, though such days upon which they might otherwise eat Flesh and Fish, they are oblig'd to feed upon nothing else but Eggs without Butter, and Rice boyl'd with Water and Salt. The morning before they celebrate Mass, if the Priest have by chance swallow'd a drop of Water, he must not say Mass.

Their Austerities are such, that many of their Bishops never eat Flesh or Fish above four times a year; but more than that, when they come to be Archbishops, they only live upon Pulse. They have six months and three days in a year wherein they keep Lent, or particular Fasts, which you please to call them; and during all that time, as well the Ecclesiastical persons as the Laity, feed only upon Bread, and some few Herbs which grow in their Gardens. There was an Armenian of Zulpha whose superstition was so great, that he made his Horse to fast with him, allowing him but very little either to eat or drink for a whole week together. As for the poor labouring people, they only feed upon Pulse, boyl'd in Water and Salt: for during their chief Lent, they are permitted no more than others, to eat either Butter or Oyl; nay though they lay a dying, it is not lawful for them to eat Flesh upon those days wherein that diet is forbid'n. They may only eat Wall-nuts or Small-nuts, Almonds or Pistaches, or some such other Fruit that affords no Oyl; and they have this farther liberty, to pound them, and put them among their Pulse or their Herbs, and boyl them with Rice.

CHAP. XI.

Of their Baptism.

TIS the custom of the Armenians to Baptize their Infants upon Sunday; or if they Baptize any upon the week days, it is only in case of necessity when they think they will not live. The Midwife carries the Infant to Church, and holds it in her arms, 'till either the Archbishop, the Bishop, or the Priest has said some part of the Form of Baptism. Then he that baptizes takes the Infant which is naked, and plunges it in the Water, and then taking it out again, puts it into the hands of the God-father, and goes on with the Prayers. While he reads them, with the Cotton which he has in his hand he twists a string about half an Ell long. He makes another also of red Silk, which is flat; then twisting those two strings together, he puts them about the Child's neck. They say, that these two strings, one of white Cotton, and the other of red Silk, signifies the Blood and Water which flow'd from the Body of CHRIST, when he was wounded with the Lance upon the Cross. Having ty'd the cord about the neck of the Child, he takes the holy Oyl and anoints the Child in several parts of the body, making the sign of the Cross in every place where he drops the Oyl; every time pronouncing these words, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. He first anoints the Forehead, then the Chin, then the Stomach, the Arm-holes, the Hands and Feet.

As to the making this Oyl, you must know, that every seven years, upon the Eve of our Lady in September, against which day they observ'd a small Lent of eight days, the Patriarch makes this holy Oyl; there being no person but he who has power to make it. He uses all sorts of fragrant Flowers, and Aromatical Drugs; but the principal Flower is that which the Armenians call in their Language Balassan-Jagué, we in ours, the Flower of Paradise. When the Oyl is made, the Patriarch sends two Bottles to all the Covents of Asia, Europe, and Africa, without which they cannot baptize.

The Ceremony of Baptism being over, the God-father goes out of the Church with the Infant in his arms, and a Taper of white Wax in each hand. According to the quality of the person, when the Child is carry'd out of the Church, the Trumpets, Drums, Hautboys, and other Instruments of the Country make a hideous noise and go before the Infant to the Parents House, where being arriv'd, the God-father delivers the Child to the Mother. She prostrates her self at the same time before the God-father, kissing his feet; and while she continues in that posture, the God-father kisses her head. Neither the Father nor the God-father names the Child, but he that baptizes gives him the Name of the Saint whose Festival falls upon the Sunday on which the Child is baptiz'd. If there be no Saint's day that Sunday in the Almanack, they take the next Name whose Festival succeeds the Sunday of Baptism; so that they have no affected Names among them. Upon the return of the God-father with the Child home, there is a Feast prepar'd for all the Kindred and Friends, and him that baptiz'd the Infant, with whom all the Priests and Monks of the Covent, at least of the Parish, go along. The poor people were wont to be so prodigal at these Feasts, as also upon their Marriages and Burials, that the next day they had not wherewithal to buy Victuals, much less to pay what they have borrow'd for so needless an expence. But now the poor Armenians are grown so cunning to avoid the Bastinado's which are gi'vn to Debtors upon the soles of the Feet, when they cannot pay, according to the custom of Persia; that they carry the Child to Church upon the week-days: without any Ceremony, with tears in their eyes, pretending it to be sickly and like to dye, and so make no Feasts at all.

If the Women lye in fifteen or twenty days, or two months before Christmas, they defer the baptizing the Infant 'till the Festival, provided the Infant be healthy. Then in all the Cities and Villages where the Armenians live, if there be any River or Pond, they make ready two or three flat-bottom'd Boats, spread with Carpets to walk upon, in one of which upon Christmas-day they set up a kind of an Altar. In the morning by Sun-rising all the Armenian Clergy, as well of that place as of the parts adjoining, get into the Boats in their Habits, with the Cross and Banner. Then they dip the Cross in the Water three times, and every time they drop the Holy Oyl upon it. After that they use the ordinary form of Baptism, which being done, the Arch-bishop or the Minister plunges the Infant in the River or Pond three times, saying the usual words, I Baptise, &c. and the same anointings as before: though it seems a wonder to me that the extremity of the weather does not kill the Child. The King of Persia is many times present at this ceremony when it is perform'd at Ispahan, riding on Horse-back to the side of the River with all his Nobility. The Ceremony being over he goes to Zulpha to the Kelenter's House, where there is an entertainment prepar'd for him. Neither is there any place in the World where a King may be entertain'd with less charge than in Persia. For if any private person invite the King, and that His Majesty pleases to do him that Honour, 'tis but for the inviter to go to the chief of the Officers, and to carry him twenty Tomans, or three hundred Crowns, and to tell him withall, that the King has promis'd to accept of a small Collation with his Slave. For then the Governour is oblig'd to send to the House of him that treats the King all things necessary for the entertainment. Else it were impossible to be done, in regard the King eats in nothing but in Gold Plate. At the end of the Feast the King is always presented with some European Rarity, not less worth than four or five thousand Crowns. Or if the person have no Rarity to present, it suffices to offer in a Balon the value in Venetian Ducats of Gold, with all the submission imaginable. Besides all this, some Presents must be giv'n to some of the Lords and principal Eunuchs of his train; and others sent to the Queen Mother, if living, and to the Sultaneß, his Wives and Sisters. Thus though the entertainment may be made with little trouble, yet otherwise it proves somewhat expensive; though the Armenians of Zulpha are well enough able to bear the charge. I was twice at this Ceremony upon Christmas day in Ispahan. The first time I saw Sha-Sefi, and the second time Sha-Abas the second, who drank both so hard, that in their Drink they committed those crimes that very much stain'd their memories: For Sha-Sefi returning home stab'd his Wife, the Mother of Sha-Abas. Sha-Abas another time returning home, in drink, would needs drink on, and force three women to drink with him; who finding he would not give over, stole out of his Company. The King perceiving them gone without taking leave, in a mad humour sent his Eunuchs for them, and caus'd them to be thrown into the Fire, where the poor women were burnt; for there is no resisting, nor examining the Kings command.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Marriages of the Armenians.

THE Armenians Marry their Children before either party have seen each other, nay before the Fathers or Brothers know any thing of it. And they whom they intend to Marry must agree to what their Fathers or Parents command them. When the Mothers have agreed among themselves, they tell their Husbands, who approve what they have done. Upon this Approbation, the Mother of the Boy, with two old Women and a Priest come to the House where the Mother of the Daughter lives, and present her a Ring from him whom they intend to betroth. The Boy appears afterwards, and the Priest reads something out of the Gospel as a blessing upon both parties; after which they give him a sum of Money according to the quality of the Father of the Girl. That done, they present the company with drink, and this is call'd a betrothing or affiancing. Sometimes they agree a Marriage when the Children are not above two or three years old; sometimes two women that are friends being both with Child at one time together, will make a match between the two Children before they are born, if the one be a Boy and the other a Girl. So soon as they are born the Contract is made; and when once the Boy has giv'n the Ring, though it be twenty years after before they are Marry'd, he is bound every year upon Easter-day to send his Mistress a new Habit with all the trimming belonging to it according to her quality. Three days days before the Celebration of Marriage, the Father and Mother of the Boy prepare a Feast, which is carry'd to the house of the Father and Mother of the Girl, where the kindred of both parties meet. The Men are in one place by themselves, and the Women in another; for they never eat together at publick Feasts. The Evening before the Nuptials the Bridegroom sends a Habit to the Bride; and some time after he comes to receive what the Mother of the Bride has provided for him, on her part. If the Bride has no Mother, some ancient Woman next a-kin dresses the Bride. At length the Bride gets upon one Horse, and the Bridegroom upon another, each Horse being sumptuously harness'd, with Bridles and Saddles of Gold and Silver, if the persons be rich: those that are poor, and have not Horses of their own, repair to the Great men, who willingly lend theirs upon such an occasion. As they set out from the Virgins habitation, the Bridegroom goes before with a Veil of Carnation-Tiffany upon his Head, or else of Gold and Silver Net-work, the Meshes whereof are very close, that reaches below the Stomach. He holds in his Hand one end of a Girdle some three or four Ells long, and the Bride that rides behind holds the other. She is also cover'd with a large white Veil from head to foot, that spreads also a good way over the Horse. Under which Veil, that rather seems a large white Sheet, the Bride is hid in such a manner, that there is nothing to be seen of her but her Eyes. Two Men walk on either side of each Horse, and if they be Children of three or four years old (for so young they marry) there are three or four Men to hold them in the Saddle, according to the quality of their Parents. A great Train of young Men, the kindred and acquaintance of both parties, follow after, some a horse-back, some a-foot, with Tapers in their hands, as if they were going in Procession: and besides all these, the Drums, Trumpets, Hautboys and other Instruments of the Country, all attending to the Church-door. When they are alighted, every one makes way for the Bridegroom and Bride, who advance up to the foot of the Altar, still holding the Girdle in their hands. Then the Bridegroom and the Bride meet, and lean forehead to forehead. Then comes the Priest, and turning his back to the Altar, lays his Bible upon their Heads, instead of a Desk, a weight sufficiently heavy, as being a thick ponderous Folio. There he lets it lye while he reads the form of Matrimony, which Office is most usually perform'd by a Bishop or an Archbishop. The Form is very much like ours. The Bishop demands the Bridegroom, Wilt thou have such a one to thy Wife? then to the Bride he says, Wilt thou have such a one for thy Husband? to which they both answer with a Nod of the Head. The Matrimonial Benediction being giv'n, they hear Mass; which being ended, they return both together to the Daughters habitation, in the same order as they set out. These Nuptials last three days: where the Women drink more than the Men. The Man goes to Bed first, the Woman pulling off the man's Breeches; though she does not lay aside her Veil 'till the Candle be put out. Let it be what time in the year it will, the Woman rises before day. So that there be some Armenians that in ten years after they are marry'd never saw their Wives faces, nor ever heard them speak. For though her Husband may speak to her, and all the rest of her kindred, yet she never answers but with a Nod. The Women never eat with their Husbands; but if the Men feast their Friends to day, the Women feast theirs the next Day.

C H A P. XIII.

How the Armenians Bury their Dead.

SO soon as any person dyes, one appointed for the Services of the Dead runs immediately to the Church to fetch a Pot of Holy-Water, which he presently pours into a great Vessel full of Water, into which they put the dead Corps. This man is call'd Mordichou, or the person that washes the Dead; which Mordichou's are so much detested among the people, that it is an ignominy to eat or drink with those sort of people. Whatever the party deceas'd has about him at the time of his death belongs to them, though it be any excellent Jewel; for it is the custom of the East to lye in their Breeches, Shirt, and Wascor, in regard they never never make use of Bed-cloaths. So soon as the Corps is wash'd, they dress it with a clean white Shirt, a pair of Breeches, a Waistcoat, and a Bonnet, all new, never having been worn before. Then they put the Body in a linnen Sack, and sew up the mouth of it. That being done, the Priests come and take up the Body to carry it to Church, which is attended by all the kindred and friends of the deceased, with every one a Taper in his hand. Being come to Church, they set down the Corps before the Altar where the Priest says certain Prayers; and then setting up lighted Tapers round about the Corps, they leave it so all night. The next day in the morning a Bishop or an ordinary Priest says Mass, at the end whereof they carry the Body before the door of the Bishop's house, attended as before; at what time the Bishop comes forth and says a prayer for the Soul of the deceased. Then eight or ten of the poorer sort that are next at hand, carry the Body to the Church-yard. All the way they sing certain Dirges, which the Priests continue, while the Body is let down into the Grave. Then the Bishop takes three handfuls of Earth, and throws them one after another into the Grave, pronouncing these words; From Earth thou cam'st, to Earth thou shalt return, and stay there 'till our Lord comes. These words being said, they fill up the Grave. Those of the kindred and friends that will go back find a Collation ready; and if any other persons will go along, they are not refus'd. For seven days also they allow Dinners and Suppers to certain Priests and poor people, if they are persons of ability: believing no Soul departed can be sav'd, unless the survivors are at that expence. Whence it comes to pass, that so many of the poor people are so miserable, and Slaves to the Mahometans, by borrowing Money to defray those expences, which they are not able to pay again.

When an Archbishop or a Bishop dyes, they add this farther Ceremony, that an Archbishop or a Bishop writes a little Note, and cutting op'n the Sack puts the Note into the Hand of the deceased, wherein are these words; Remember thy self, that from Earth thou cam'st, and to Earth thou shalt return.

If a Slave dye before enfranchiz'd, when the Body is brought into the Church, the Master writes a Note, wherein are these words; Let him not grieve, I make him free, and give him his liberty. For they believe that he would be reproach'd in the other World for being a Slave, for which his Soul might suffer tribulation. If the Master be dead, the Mistress does the same. If an Armenian makes away himself, they never carry the Body out of the door of the house, but make a hole in the wall, where they can most conveniently, and carry him to his Grave without any Ceremony.

The night preceding the Feast of the Holy Cross, Men, Women, and Children go to the Church-yard, whither they carry good store of Food, not forgetting their Wine. Immediately they fall a weeping over the Graves of the dead, and after they have spent some time in that doleful Exercise, they all fall to eating and drinking; thus passing the whole night by turns, in blub'ring, eating, and bubbling.

As for the poor people, they would think themselves undone, and the most unfortunate in the world, should they want Provision and Wine to go to the Church-yards, the night before the Feast of St. George, where they go to frolick it, rather than to pray for the Dead.

There may be some few Armenians that embrace Mahometanism for worldly Interest, but they are generally the most obstinate persons in the world, and most firm to their superstitious Principles.

CHAP. XIV.

Examples of the Constancy of the Armenians, in maintaining their Religion against the Persecutions of the Mahometans.

IT is the custom of the Armenians, that when any one of them apostatizes, and desires to return again to the Church, he cannot have Absolution but at the same City or Village where he first abjur'd his Religion.

Now it happen'd that a young Armenian being sent to Smirna with a very considerable quantity of Goods, and falling to debauchery, turn'd Mahometan, to the

the end he might defraud his Father and his Brethren of their Estate, according to Haly's Law, already mention'd. But after he had spent good part of the Goods in Debauchery, he return'd to the Three Churches, where the Grand Patriarch liv'd; to be absolv'd from his Fault; but the Patriarch telling him he must go to the Bishop of Smyrna, he went accordingly; and in some few days after he had undergone the Penance enjoin'd him, he went to the Cadi, and with a great Resolution, Sir, said he, you know that some years since I turn'd Mahometan; now I come to declare before ye that I have repented, and do repent of the great Crime I committed, when I deny'd the Saviour of the World, and embrac'd your wicked Law. The Cadi, who thought it had been at first only some evaporation of Extravagance, endeavour'd to reclaim him by fair words and promises; but when he heard him persist in his resolution; when he heard him curse and blaspheme Mahomet; he caus'd him to be carry'd to the Piazza, where he was cut to pieces immediately. For no persons go with more courage and joy to suffer for their Faith, than the Armenians.

In the year 1651 there happen'd to be a Wedding between a young Turk and a Virgin of the same Nation. To this Wedding was invited an Armenian Lady, who was a great friend of the Bridegroom's Mother. The Armenian had an only Son, of about twelve years of age; that earnestly desir'd to go along with her; at first she refus'd him, knowing that after the age of five or six years, no Youth is permitted to be in company with the Turkish Women or Maids. But the Boy still pressing his Mother, and being seconded by an Aunt, who to please her Nephew, told her she might let him go in Girls Apparel; at last the indulgent Mother, overrul'd by the importunity of the Child, took him along with her in a female dress. Three days the solemnity of the Turkish Weddings last; but the very first days, an old Gypsy Turk casting her Eye upon the young Armenian, and finding him too sparkish and too nimble for a Girl, suspected his Sex; and calling his Mother aside, told her, that by all the gestures and actions of the Child, she could be no Girl, but a Boy in disguise. The Mother not only deny'd the matter, but also seem'd highly offended at the old Womans suspicion; who as much incens'd to have her judgment question'd, decoy'd the Child among the Eunuchs of the Family, and caus'd him to be search'd; and finding herself in the right, spread it presently about the house. Immediately the people cry'd that the Chambers were defil'd; that the Armenian Lady had done it in derision of their Law; and seizing Mother, Aunt, and Youth, carry'd them all before the Basha, demanding Justice. The Basha dismiss'd the Mother and the Aunt, but kept the Youth six or seven days, hoping the rage of the people would be over. But in vain he strove to plead for the Child, though the Father offer'd them half the weight of him in Gold, for the Basha was forc'd to deliver him up into the hands of the marry'd Womans kindred; who carry'd the Child to the Market-place of the City, where they stript him stark naked; and first they flea'd him from his Neck behind down to the Waist, and so left him with a Guard upon him all night. The Cadi and Moullah's exhorted the Child to turn Mahometan; and they would preserve him from further mischief. His Mother beg'd him to have pity upon her and himself, and to turn Mahometan to save his life. But neither tears, nor all the tender words that grief and affection could inspire, could shake the constancy of the Infant, who with a resolute utterance answer'd, that he had hitherto suffer'd, and still would suffer patiently; and that nothing griev'd him, but that his Mother should exhort him to deny his Saviour. Next day the pitiless Turks came and flea'd all his Breast and his Stomach, and so left him all night under a Guard, intending to have flea'd him part by part every day. But the Basha, abhorring their Cruelty, came the next day with his Guards, and caus'd his Head to be cut off.

Van is a City peopl'd as well with Armenians as Turks; so that it is a usual thing for the Armenian and Turkish Boys to play together. One day it unfortunately fell out, that the Boys playing one among another, and flinging Stones at each other, an Armenian Boy hit a young Turk full upon the Temple, and strook him dead. Presently the other Turkish Boys and the Rabble seiz'd him, and carry'd him to the Basha; the Father and Mother of the Child slain follow'd with hideous outcries, bawling for justice, or that the Boy should turn Mahometan to expiate his fault. The Armenian Parents offer'd a large sum of Money to redeem their Child; but the adverse party obstinate against all accommodation, the Basha was constrain'd to deliver the Child, giving sentence that the young Armenian should endure the same death the Turk had suffer'd, and no other. Immediately the Turks hurry'd the poor Child to the place where he had unfortunately slain his play-fellow; and after the Parents of the young Turk had had the two first hits, he was presently brain'd by a show'r of Stones from the Rabble. Yet as near death as he knew himself to be, without any disturbance at all, he exhorted his weeping play-fellows to stand firm to the Faith of Jesus Christ, for which he was going to dye.

Another time an Armenian Merchant coming from the Indies to Grand Cairo, went to the Coffee-house according to custom, being a rendezvous of all the Merchants in the Town. There falling into discourse, by reason of the heat of the weather, he took off his Bonnet made after the Armenian fashion of divers Colours, and laid it behind him, keeping his black Cap only upon his head. When the Moullah came about to hasten the people to go away according to the custom, which I have already declar'd, the Armenian hastily rising up, a Turk, concealing the Merchant's Bonnet, clap'd his own Bonnet upon his head. Upon that all the Turkish Merchants that were there came and congratulated the Armenian Merchant, telling him, how glad they were to see that he had embrac'd the good Law. At which words the Armenian surpriz'd, takes off the Turbant, throws it to the Ground before all the Company, and stamp'd it under foot. This action of contempt so enrag'd the Turks, that they carry'd him before the Basha, before whom it was in vain to justify himself, or to affirm that the Turbant was maliciously put upon his head; for the Turks swore the contrary, and that he took it of his own accord, and therefore he must either turn Turk or dye for it. Upon his refusal they put him in Prison, and in a few days the sentence was brought him from the Musli and Cadi, that he must either turn or be burnt alive. The severity of the sentence overpower'd him at first to embrace the Mahumetan Law. But four or five years after returning from the Indies to Cairo, he came where the Basha was sitting in Council with the Grandeers of the Country, and getting as near the Musli as he could, and throwing his Turbant in his face; There Dog, said he, Thou wert the cause that I have worn it so long, of which I have repented, and do repent from the bottom of my heart; for I know that neither thou nor thy Law are worth a Straw. At the same time the croud laid hold of him, and drag'd him to the Piazza, where he dy'd in the midst of the flames with an admirable constancy.

A rich Merchant of Zulpha, call'd Cotgia Soultanon, was so well belov'd by Shasefi, that he often went to Dine at his house. But one day it fell out that the King having eat and drank to excess, upon his return home fell crop-tick, upon which the report ran that the Armenian had poyson'd him. Which report coming to his ears, fearing lest the King should dye, and himself be put to cruel Torments, he took a dose of Poyson and dy'd. Which when the King, who was well again the next day, understood, he was very much troubl'd for his death.

The same Cotgia Soultanon had a Caser sent him from Melinda for a Slave; who being young and very apprehensive, soon learnt the Persian and Turkish Languages, and was instructed in the Christian Religion, and Christen'd by the name of Huzed or Joseph. After his Master's death he turn'd Mahumetan, and so continu'd twenty years. At the end whereof returning to Zulpha, he beg'd pardon of the Church; and all the rest of his days so crucify'd himself with Fasting, that every one pittied him; and when the Armenian Bishops told him he had done well, he made no other answer, but that he was not worthy to live upon the Earth who had deny'd his Saviour, only he hop'd that he would have mercy upon him; and so continu'd his austere penance 'till he dy'd.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Author's reception at the Court of Persia in his sixth and last Voyage, and what he did there during his stay at Ispahan.

I Arriv'd at Ispahan the 20th of December, 1664. So soon as the Nazar was inform'd of my arrival, he sent the Kelonter or chief of the Armenians with seven or eight more to congratulate my arrival, and to assure me of all the kind Offices he could do me. The next day he sent the same Armenians with four Horses; and to tell me that the King had a desire to see what I had brought; for which purpose the Kelonter had order to furnish me with men. Thereupon I took Horse, accompany'd by all the Franks that were at Zulpha. When I came to Court, I was brought into the place where all the great Ambassadors had audience, where I found attending the Nazar, and Father Raphael superior of the order of the Capuchins, ready to deliver me my Box of Jewels which I had left with him in the Covent for more security. After I had expos'd my Goods upon a fair Table cover'd with a Carpet of Gold and Silver, and that the Nazar had dispos'd every thing in order with his own hand, the King enter'd, attended only by three Eunuchs for his Guard, and two old men, whose office it was to pull off his Shoes when he goes into any Room spread with Gold and Silk Carpets, and to put them on again when he goes forth. The King had nothing on but a single pair of Drawers of Tassata, chequer'd red and white, which came half way the Leg, his feet being bare; a short Cassock that came but half way his body, with a large Cloak of Cloth of Gold with hanging-sleeves down to the Ground, furr'd with Sable Martin. The first thing I shew'd was a large Candlestick of Chrystal of the Rock, the richest piece of that nature that ever was seen. The next was a suit of Tapestry hangings held up by several men, as I had appointed. The Nazar then caus'd me to advance and do my obeysance to the King, who presently knowing my Face again, Oh, said he to the Nazar, This is the Fringui Aga who sold me so many Rarities about six years ago, when Mahomet Beg was Athemadoulet. After that the Nazar shew'd him all my Rarities as they lay in order. Among the rest I besought His Majesty by Frier Raphael, to accept of a great Steel Mirror, which when he look'd in, he wonder'd to see his Face so big. But when Frier Raphael had told him the nature of it, he caus'd it to be held to one of his Eunuchs, which had a monstrous Hawk Nose, the sight whereof held him in laughter and divertisement for above a quarter of an hour. After that the King retir'd, leaving me alone with the Nazar and Frier Raphael. As for my Jewels I put them up my self, and had a place assign'd me to Lock them up and keep the Key, but for my large pieces of Goldsmiths work, the Nazar committed them to the trust of one of the principal Officers of the House.

The next day early in the morning the Nazar sent for me and Father Raphael, and made his Secretary write down the price of every thing, according to his demands. He had also his own Artists to prize them; but that I did not value, in regard I knew the price much better then they. After he had shew'd the Jewels, price and all to the King, we were several times before we could agree; but at length he told me, that the King would give me Twenty-five in the Hundred profit for all the Stones; leaving me the Pearls, which he thought I might put off at a better price in the Indies; which was an offer I could not refuse, and therefore I sign'd the Agreement according to the Nazar's desire: Which when his Majesty had seen, he bid the Nazar tell me I should be his Jeweller in Ordinary, and that for my sake all the Franks should be the better us'd within his Territories, and that I should have any favour of him that I desir'd. I besought his Majesty to give me his Patent with his Seal affix'd, whereby I might be priviledg'd to Trade in his Dominions, without paying Custom for such and such Merchandize, and in such manner as I should think fitting. I also besought him graciously to grant his Protection to a Nephew of mine, whom I had left at Tauris to learn the Language, that he might be serviceable to his Majesty when I was dead and gone.

Thereupon he caus'd my Nephew to be enrol'd presently as one of his Domestick Servants, and order'd the Nazar to take particular care of him.

The next day after my agreement with the Nazar, the King gave audience in the great Hall of the Palace to the Ambassador of the Usbeck-Tartars. All the Lords and Officers of the Crown stood in the Court where the Ambassador was to pass: there were also nine stately Horses, whose Furniture was very rich, and all different. Two Harnesses were cover'd with Diamonds, two with Rubies, two with Emeralds, two with Turquoises, and one embroider'd with fair Pearls. Had he been an Ambassador from a Monarch for whom the King of Persia had had a greater esteem than he had for the Cham of Tartary, there had been thirty Horses: for according to the value which the King puts upon the Prince that sends to him, he either augments or abates of the number of his Horses of State. Every Horse is ty'd by the Reins to a Nail of Gold fasten'd in the Ground, with a Hammer of Gold lying by. There was another Nail of Gold behind, with a Cord ty'd to it, that held their hinder legs. They set also before every Horse a Caldron of Gold, out of which they draw up Water into a great Manger; though all this be only for State, for they never water their Horses in that place.

Out of the first Court the Ambassador enter'd into a large Gallery, between a long File of Musqueteers on each side. Thence he enter'd into a Garden through an Alley about eight Fathom broad, all pav'd with great Marble Stones, in the middle of which runs a Channel of Water four Foot wide, with several Water-works that spurted out of the Channel at equal distances. On each side of the Walk to the Hall where the King sat, there is a Pond almost as long as the Walk, and in the middle of the Pond another sort of Water-works. Several Officers of the Army were rang'd all along the Alley; and at the end of one of the Ponds were four Lions ty'd; and at the end of the other, three Tigers couchant upon Carpets of Silk, having Men to guard them with Half-pikes in their hands. The Hall took up more ground in length than in breadth, being op'n every way; the Cieling was sustain'd by sixteen wooden Pillars, of eight pannels every one, and of a prodigious thickness and height. As well the Cieling as the Pillars were all painted with Foliage-work in Gold and Azure, with certain other Colours mix'd therewith. In the middle of the Hall was a Vase of excellent Marble, with a Fountain throwing out Water after several manners. The Floor was spread with Gold and Silk Carpets, made on purpose for the Place: and near to the Vase was a low Scaffold one Foot high, twelve Foot long, and eight wide, cover'd with a magnificent Carpet. Upon this Scaffold sat the King upon a four-square Cushion of Cloth of Gold, with another Cushion behind him cover'd with the same, set up against a great Tap'stry-Hanging, wrought with Persian Characters, containing the Mysteries of the Law. On each side of the King stood several Eunuchs with Muskets in their hands. The King commanded the Athemadoulet and four others to sit down by him, and the Athemadoulet made me a sign to sit down; but the King knowing how little the Franks care for sitting cross-leg'd, order'd me to be told that I might stand upright, if I thought good. The King was clad in a Silk streak'd with Gold: His Cloak was a Gold-ground with Flower of Silk and Silver, Furr'd with a Martin Sable, the blackest and most glistering that ever was seen. His Girdle was very rich, and upon his Bonnet he wore a Plume of Herons Feathers fasten'd with a transparent Jewel; in the middle of the Jewel was a Pear-fashion'd Pearl, set with great Topaze's and Rubies.

About half and hour after the King was sat, the Nazar and the Master of the Ceremonies brought the Ambassador, who neither himself nor any of his Train were very well clad, and caus'd him to stay at the foot of the steps into the Hall from the Garden. When the Ambassador had ascended the steps, he prostrated himself before the King, then advancing nine or ten paces he did the same again; after which the Master of the Ceremonies caus'd him to sit down, leaving between him and the King space enough for eight men. After that I observ'd that the Nazar went often between the King and the Ambassador, and between the Ambassador and the King; but I could not tell what they said. So that I being by that time quite tyr'd, made my obeysance to the King, and went home to my Lodging.

The next day the Nazar signify'd to me that it was the King's pleasure to favour me with a compleat Calaat, or Habit of Honour; and to pay me my money.

The next day in the Morning being sent for to the Court, I found the Nazar, the Grand Treasurer, and several other great Officers expecting me in the Treasury, where the Money lay ready in seal'd Bags. My Sum amounted to three thousand four hundred and sixty Tomans, of which the Treasurer would have abated me a hundred and sixty for Fees. After a long contest, I gave him half, and carry'd away my Money; having first weigh'd two Bags Toman by Toman, and then weigh'd the rest of the Bags, Bag by Bag.

C H A P. XVI.

Of the Honours and Presents which the Author receiv'd from the King of Persia.

THE day following one of the Nazar's principal Officers brought me the compleat Calaat, consisting of Vest, Tunick or Super-Vest, Girdle, and Bonnet. He also deliver'd me three Patents, seal'd by his Majesty and the Athemadoulet, which exempted me from paying any Customs within his Kingdom. Another to the Kan of Schiras, with a little Seal or Signet, commanding him to let me have three Loads of good Wine when I travell'd that way. A third with his Signet, in favour of my Nephew at Tauris; wherein the King declar'd that he own'd him as his Domestick Servant, and that he was under his Protection.

The First PATENT ran thus.

THE Command of him whom all the Universe obeys has been made, That the Beglerbegs of High Nature, the victorious and great Lords, Ornaments of the Kingdom, Possessors of Honour, the Judges in high place, practisers of Justice, the Vissiers who preserve Reason, and have in their thoughts the removal of Vice, and the Commissioners who act in affairs and difficulties of the Palace, the Overseers of the Roads, and the Conservators of the good Customs of the well-order'd Kingdoms of Kragon (which God preserve from all misfortune) MAY KNOW, That whereas the choicest of his Resemblers and Companions, *Aga TAVERNIER, French Merchant has brought so many Rarities of all sorts to the presence and view of the Lieutenant of the Eagles, who has all things according to his wish, has found the degree of favour and good will. And whereas We have commanded him to perfect some Business for Us, which so soon as he has finish'd, he is to bring to the holy and pure view. Therefore through whatsoever Road or Coast of Our Thrice-spacious Kingdom the above-nam'd, shall have a desire or occasion to pass, Let not the Receivers of the Palace, out of any seeming expectancy from the above-nam'd, give him any trouble or molestation. But let them know, that it is necessary for them to give him all honour, and to make much of him, that he may go where he pleases. And whereas the Seal of High Nature, the Light of the Universe of Kragon, of thrice-noble extraction, the Master of the Age, has illuminated and adorn'd this Writing, Let them rest there, and give Credence to it. By the thrice-high Command. &c.

Kragon: A King of China, so renown'd for his Justice, Victory, and Magnanimity that sometimes the Kings of Persia assume that Title in their Patents, and sometimes, in honour of him, stile themselves his Lieutenants.

Receivers of the Palace, are Farmers of the Customs and other Subsidies.

The Second PATENT.

To the Governour of Schiras,

THE Command of Him whom all the World ought to obey, is such, That the Illustrious and High Lord, whose Office ought to be honour'd, the Governour and Prototype of Visiers and Grandees, Mirza-Mahomet-Sadée, the Visier of Fars may be assur'd of Royal Favours when he understands the Contents of this Command. He shall give three Loads of Wine, of that which he has in his custody, to the Cream of his Equals, Aga TAVERNIER, French Merchant, and you shall take an Acquittance. All the Grand Visiers, and Officers of Customs, and Guarders of Passes also let them not molest him at all, let them take nothing from him, let them permit him to go and come as he pleases, and let them obey him. Given the Month of Jamady-Elaker, in the Hegyra of Mahomet 1075.

January,

The Cream, is the Character of an honest man among the Eastern people.

But to return to the Calaat. You must take notice, that the Persians call a Calaat, any Present which one person makes to another inferior to him in dignity; sometimes a Vest alone, sometimes a Tunick with the Girdle only, sometimes a Turbant, or a Horse, with Bridle and Saddle; to those in the Army the King sends a Sword or a Dagger, and all these go by the name of Calaat's. Secondly, you must take notice, that when the King sends a Calaat to a Governour of a Province, he names himself the person, that is to carry it. For both in Turkie and Persia, the Receiver of the King's Present is oblig'd to pay the Messenger, in so much that sometimes they hardly scape for a thousand Tomans. But when the Calaat is sent to any private person, the Nazar chooses out of his Domestick Servants one to carry it. I gave twenty-five Tomans into Father Raphael's hand, who order'd his business with so good a grace, and so advantageously for my Purse, that he complemented away the Messenger very well satisfi'd with half.

The next day the Nazar sent to me to put on my Calaat, and to come and do my obeysance to the King, who was that day to go abroad. Thereupon I summon'd together all the Franks, and order'd the Trumpets and Drums to be made ready as I rode from the Palace home. For then the people come out to see who the King has honour'd that day, who is always known by his Habit, which is still the newest and gayest of all the rest.

It happen'd, that the King being indispos'd did not go away that day; however I apply'd my self to the Nazar, and told him how much I was oblig'd to the King for the honour he had done me, and that I was resolv'd to shew my self before the greatest Monarchs in Europe in the Habit he had bestow'd upon me; that they might behold the beauty and richness of my Calaat. The Nazar fail'd not to repeat my Compliment to his Majesty; who thereupon order'd me the Persian Cloak, with hanging-sleeves, and fac'd with sable Martins.

Two or three days after the Nazar sent for me again to Court, whither I went, accompany'd by the Zulphian Franks, as before. I was no sooner come to the Palace, but the Nazar met me in the great Hall, attended by two Officers, who carry'd the Cloak which the King had appointed for me, and presently taking the Cloak out of their hands, he put it about my shoulders, saying these words, It is the King's pleasure to honour thee entirely. It was a most magnificent piece of Silk, and very richly furr'd, having been valu'd at eight hundred Crowns. In this I was particularly beholding to the Nazar, who might have sent me my Cloak home to my Lodging as well as the Calaat; but he was pleas'd to put it upon my back in the Palace with his own hands, to spare me the charges of a new Present. After this the Nazar took me by the hand, and led me to the Hall, where the King was sitting upon a large large Cushion, having no more than twelve Eunuchs for his Guard; some with Bows and Arrows, and some with Musquets. By that time I had advanc'd two or three paces in the Hall, the Nazar order'd me to fall upon my knees, and touch the Ground with my forehead; then taking me by the hand, he led me within two or three paces of the place where the King was sitting, where I was order'd to make the same obeisance as before; after that he caus'd me to retire seven or eight paces, and there to stand. And then it was that His Majesty was pleas'd to tell me, that he had contriv'd the Models of several pieces, which he would have made in France; and ask'd me whether I would carry them along with me, or whether I would presently send them into France to be made up while I dispatch'd my business in the Indies. I told His Majesty, that so soon as he would be pleas'd to deliver them to me, I would send them for France. After this and some other discourse I made my obeisance, and retir'd toward the door of the Hall. Having thus done my duty to the King, I went and kiss'd the Nazar's hand; and then taking Horse at the Palace-Gate, with the rest of the Franks that accompany'd me, we rode home with the Trumpets and Drums of the Country before us. When we came to Zulpha with our Torches before us, for it was three hours after Sun-set, the Men and old Women came out of their Houses to see us pass along, and several presented us with Fruits, Sweet-meats, and Wine, obliging us to drink almost at every House 'till we got home.

CHAP. XVII.

How the King was pleas'd to divertise himself in the Author's Company.

ABOUT two days after betimes in the Morning I was sent for to the Court in that haste, that I had scarce time to make me ready. When I came to Court, I found the Nazar, Father Raphel, and two Hollanders, upon whom the Nazar had began to cast a particular eye of favour all together. After we had stay'd a while, the Nazar brought us to the Room where the King was, sitting upon a low Pallet, with two Mattresses cover'd with a rich Carpet. He lean'd his back against a large Cushion four foot long, having before him eight or ten Plates of Fruits and Sweet-meats. Before him also stood two Bottles, with long round necks of Venice Crystal stop'd with Pitch, full of Schiras Wine, with a Cup of pure Gold; upon one side a kind of a very small Fat and with a handle, within three or four Fingers full of the same Wine, with a Gold Ladle that held a good Chopine of Paris. The Bottles were for the King's drinking; that in the Fat for those that the King did the Honour to drink with him. After we came in and had made our several obeysances; said the King to Father Raphael, Raphael, bia, bia, that is, come hither, come hither, who thereupon rising, and falling upon his knees when he came near the King; Raphael, continu'd the King, if thou wilt drink Wine, stay here, if not, be gone. The Fryar unaccustom'd to drink Wine, reply'd that since His Majesty did him so great an Honour, he was willing to drink a little. 'Tis very well, answer'd the King smiling, go then and take thy seat. Thereupon the King commanded one of the Dutch men to fill some Wine, which he did, but with a trembling hand Heav'n, knows, as never having been at such a Festival before. And I observ'd that having laid his Hat upon the Carpet, the King commanded him to put it on, it being a very ignominious thing in Persia to be bare-headed. Thus the great Ladle went about very smartly, considering it was but early in the Forenoon: But at length the King bethinking himself that the Franks were not us'd to drink without eating, gave such order, that immediately they spread before us a Sofra of Cloth of Gold instad of a Table-Cloth; and over that a Leather Covering of the same length and breadth, and over that a sort of Bread as long as the Sofra; for had the Sofra been ten Ells long, the Bread must have been as long. This Bread is no thicker then a piece of Paper, and folds like a Napkin. It is made with a Rolling-

Rolling-pin, and bak'd upon Plates of Tinn'd Copper. This Bread is never eat'n, but only serves for a Table-Cloth to preserve what falls from the Dishes, and what every man leaves particularly upon his own Plate, which is all wrap'd up in the Leather and giv'n to the poor. Next to that they set upon one end of the Sofra a sort of most excellent Bread two foot long and one broad, then which never was better eat'n in the World. By and by follow'd Boil'd and Roast flesh and fish, with two Chests of Limons of Mazandran, and Granates from Schirss.

After we had made a large Breakfast, the King was pleas'd to put me upon a discourse of my Travels into the Indies, and ask'd me what Princes I had had access to, and how many I knew by their faces? Then causing a Satchel to be brought him, he open'd it himself, and shew'd me several portraitures in Miniature. Presently I knew Sha-Gehan, Aurence-Zebe, and three of his Sons; the King of Golconda and Visapour; Sha-Est-Kan, and two Raja's. Among the rest he shew'd me a Persian Lady's Picture and gave it me; to the end, said he, that your French Ladies may see how our Persian Ladies are clad. After that he shew'd me the Pictures of two Venetian Curtisans, the one a Widow, and the other a Virgin, with a Parrot upon her hand clad after the French mode. Upon which the King putting the question to me which I lik'd best? I reply'd that she pleas'd me best who had the Parrot upon her fist. And why not the other, said the King? Because, answer'd I, she looks like one that had renounc'd the world. Thereupon the King falling into a laughter, and turning toward Father Raphael; Patri, Patri, said he, is it possible that such a Lady as this should have renounc'd the World? This led us into a discourse of beauty, wherein when the King demanded my opinion, I told him that Womens beauty depended very much upon the Custom of the Country; for that in Japan Women with broad faces were most in request; in China small feet were admir'd; in the Isles of Borneo and Achen, Women the blacker their Teeth were, the more they were belov'd; that in the Island of Macasser, to make their Women lovely, they pull out four of their Teeth when they are young, to put in four of Gold in their room; as I have seen a Captain of Java, who pull'd out four of his fore Teeth, and set four Diamonds in their place. In short, I told his Majesty that in his own Dominions full Eye-brows which meet together were highly esteem'd; whereas the Women of France pull them up by the Roots. But which, said the King, dost thou like best, the black or the fair? Sir, continu'd I, were I to buy Women as I purchase Diamonds, Pearls, and Bread, I would always choose the whitest. With that the King fell a laughing, and order'd me a brimmer in his own Cup, which was a great Honour indeed. From hence we fell into a more serious discourse concerning the present State of Europe, speaking very low, and the rest of the Company retiring all the while out of hearing. Only I observ'd that there was one Lord middle ag'd, and clad after the Georgian mode, who stood within five or six paces behind the King, and that many times as the King drank, he only wet his Lips, and gave the rest to that Lord to drink, which when he had done, he retir'd again to his place. Upon inquiry I found he was the King's Uncle by the Mothers side.

While we were talking of serious things the Curtisans were bid to retire out of the Hall, which they did, into a Gallery that look'd upon a Garden, where they fate, where immediately a Sofra was laid before them cover'd with Fruits and Sweetmeats, and one of their Society continually powr'd out the Wine which they drank round without intermission: One would have thought they should have been fuddl'd; yet when they came in again, no man could perceive they had been drinking. After they had Danc'd a while, they were order'd to retire again, and the King sent for his Musick, which was both Vocal and Instrumental; his Instrumental Musick consisted of a kind of a Lute, a Guittar, a Spinnet, and two or three Base Flutes. He had also in the Gallery where the Curtisans were, a large Ebony Cabinet eight foot high, adorn'd with several Silver figures, which prov'd to be an Organ that went alone. It was part of the present which the Muscovite Ambassadors made the King, which he order'd to be set a going, that we might hear it as we fate. No sooner had the Organ stop'd, but the Curtisans were call'd in again, and the King caus'd the Gold Ladle to go round, commanding that no man should leave a drop. When every man had done, the King was pleas'd to ask me which of the Curtisan's I thought to be handsomest? Thereupon I rose up, and taking a

Wax-

Wax-Candle in my hand, I went and view'd them all. The King laugh'd, and being very glad to see my face among theirs, Bring hither, saith he, her to whom thou hast most a fancy. In obedience to which, I pick'd out the eldest, as I thought, and led her to his Majesty, who caus'd us to sit down by him. Then the King pointing to another, And why, saith he, did you not choose yonder Girl, which is younger and handsomer; commanding them both to kiss me one after another, that I might understand the difference between the Caresses of one and the other. But I reply'd, that were I to choose again, I would make the same choice, believing prudence to accompany age. However I besought his Majesty to consider, that it was not for me to look upon elder or younger, and that though he had giv'n me the liberty to send the elder home to my Lodging, yet it was not in my pow'r to accept of his favour, in regard I had a Wife, to whom I never had been unfaithful.

We had thus droll'd together 'till eleven a Clock at night, when the King started another Question, Whether any one present knew how to Sing? It happen'd that there was one Monsieur Daulier there, that Play'd upon the Virginals, and pretended to Sing, who immediately began a Court-Air. But his Voice being a high-pitch'd Voice, and for that the Persians are altogether for Bases, the King did not like him. When I perceiv'd that, being in a merry vein, though I knew not a Note, yet having a good deep voice, and clear, I sung an old Air that came into my head, which begins,

*Fill all the Bowls then, fill 'em high,
Fill all the Glasses there, for why Should every Creature drink but I?*

The King was so pleas'd, that he cry'd out, Baricala, Baricala, as much as to say, Oh the works of God! an expression of admiration usual among the Persians.

By this time it was very late, and the King growing sleepy, gave us leave to depart; which we did very willingly, having had hard labour for seventeen hours together.

The next night the King fell a drinking again, and there was in his presence an Agi or Pilgrim newly return'd from Mecca, and consequently oblig'd never to drink Wine after that. While the Agi staid, there was one of the Persian Lords got so impertinently fuddl'd, that he twice struck the Agi's Turbant from his head, refus'd to drink when the King commanded him, play'd the fool with the Curtisans when they were dancing, and committed so many other acts of folly, that the King incens'd at such a continuation of Buffonry, in a great fury, This Rascal, said he, has lost all his respect, and thinks he is no more my Slave; drag him out by the feet, and throw him to the Dogs to eat. Immediately four or five of the King's Officers came and drag'd him out of the Hall by the feet, and every body wonder'd he was not thrown to the Dogs, according to the King's Command; but 'tis thought that some of the King's Woman beg'd for him, so that his punishment was chang'd.

There was one of the Curtisans that gave one of her Companions a box on the ear, not in the King's presence, but in the Gallery where they were drinking together. However she did not strike so softly, but that the King heard the noise of the blow. Whereupon he commanded her that had giv'n the blow to be had before the Deroga or Judge of the Town, whom he order'd to expunge her out of the number of Curtisans, and to put another in her place; that she should have a hundred Tomans giv'n her, and that the Deroga should cause her to be marry'd.

The next day I waited on the King, and receiv'd those Models which he had bespoke me to send into France. They were the Patterns of certain Drinking-Cups and Trenchers, with the Model of a Dagger drawn with his own hand: for he had learnt to draw of a couple of Dutch-men that were in his Service. The Dagger was to be Goldsmith work enamel'd. When I had receiv'd his Instructions, I took my leave of his Majesty : and then going to wait upon the Nazar at his Country-house, I took leave of him also, who assur'd me of his affection upon all occasions, and did me several kindnesses at my departure.

CHAP. I.

The Genealogy of the Kings of Persia, of the last Race.

AFTER that Tamerlane had extended his Conquests into Asia, and defeated the Army of Bajazet, whom he took Prisoner, together with his Wife, he return'd into Persia, where at that time liv'd a Cheik, whose name was Aidar, a Person in high reputation for his Holiness. He was a Person of great wit, and the first in the dignities of the Law, which gain'd him great authority and belief among the People. He gave great honour to Tamerlane, and shew'd Eminent kindneses to all the Officers of his Army; in recompense whereof, Tamerlane, who was a generous Prince, and full of gratitude, made a Present to the Cheik of a great number of Captives, which he brought along with him out of Turkey. The Cheik planted one part of these Slaves about Ardevile, and seated the other near his own residence. Now in regard he assum'd to himself to be descended in a direct line from Mahomet, he cover'd his head after another manner then all the rest of the Persians, wearing a kind of flat Bonnet, growing broader and Broader to the top, and so pleighted, as to make twelve pleights of a Ruff, in honour of the twelve Prophets. In the middle, a kind of a Pyramid about a fingers length seem'd to rise out of the Bonnet, but was indeed sow'd to it. Such a Bonnet as this the Cheik appointed all the Slaves to wear that Tamerlane had giv'n him, and this is that which at this day distinguishes their Successors from the other Persians. And it is the custom, where Kans or Governours of Provinces reside, that all the Sophies both in the City and the neighbouring parts, meet in the Piazza every Friday in the afternoon, where they pray to God for the health of the King and the Kan, and for the prosperity of the Kingdom; after which the Kan sends them them Victuals to eat, not without some other effects of his Liberality.

The Cheiks Sons considering of what a number of Slaves they were Masters, and that the greatest part of the people, preposses'd in favour of their Father, out of the opinion they had of his Sanctity, took their part; the more powerfully to engage them, shew'd themselves liberal to all, and when they found themselves strong enough, revolted against Alamout King of Persia, their lawful Sovereign. After many Skirmishes, at length they gave him Battle near to Tauris, wherein Azimout was defeated, and slain by the hand of Ismael Sophi, the Cheiks third Son, who is properly to be accounted the fifth King of that Race: I mean of the Race of them that did not embrace the Alcoran, but according to the Interpretation of Haly, Mahomet's Son-in-Law.

To Ismael Sophi succeeded Sha-Tamma, his Son, and to Sha-Tamma Sha-Ismael the second, who reign'd but a short while; for his cruelties constrain'd the Nobility of the Country to set up in his room Mahomet-Coda bendé his Brother; though little skill'd in the affairs of Government or War, Many thought he was blind, but he was only dim-sighted, through the application of a hot Iron to his eyes, by the Command of his unnatural Brother in the beginning of his reign. He was the Father of Sha-Abbas, that succeeded him, who sett'd the affairs of Persia in a very good condition.

Sha-Abbas the first, by his Valour and good Conduct gain'd the name of Great. When he came to his Throne, upon the North and West side he found nothing in his power but the City of Casbin; but afterwards, as he was a personage of great wit as well as courage, partly by policy, and partly by force, he recover'd several Provinces to the West, and conquer'd the Kingdoms of Lar, Ormus, and Candahar.

Of many Sons that Sha-Abbas had, not one surviv'd but only Sophi-Mirza, a Prince of great wit, and dextrous at his Arms. All the people lov'd him, which made his Father jealous of him, that he waited for his death to ascend the Throne. And that which augmented his jealousy was, for that one day being a hunting, Sophi-Mirza drew the first arrow at a Boar; it being a capital crime in Persia to shoot before the King. However Sha-Abbas for the time conceal'd his displeasure, unwilling to fly out in fury against the Prince, in regard he had no more Sons. But Sophi-Mirza having had a Son by a Slave, which pleas'd him, Sha-Abbas's joy encreasing as the Child grew, his jealousy also daily encreas'd against the Father of the young Prince; so that being no longer able to dissemble his fear, he caus'd his eyes to be put out. Nay his jealousy went a great way farther; for he now fear'd the blind Prince, and having therefore resolv'd his death, he commanded a Lord of the Court to bring him his head. The Lord in an astonishment refus'd to obey the King, and besought him rather to take away his life, than to constrain him to embrace his hands in the blood of his Prince. The King offended at him for his refusal, banish'd him his Court; and the next day gave the same command to another Lord, who without any scruple put it in execution, and brought him the head of his Son in a Basin of Gold. That object of pity brought him to himself; so that not being able to look upon so sad a spectacle without tears in his eyes, upbraiding the villany of the Lord, he expell'd him from his sight, forbad him his presence for ever, and sequester'd all his estate, only allowing him a Mamoudi, or nine French Sous aday. The other Lord, who had so generously refus'd to aid him in so bloody an act, the King recall'd from Exile, and bestow'd upon him one of the best Governments of the Empire.

Ever since that time all the Male Children of the Blood Royal are shut up in the Womens Haram, where they are bred up in ignorance, having only two or three Eunuchs to teach them to write and read, and to keep them company in their recreations, whether it be in shooting with a Bow, or riding about the Gardens upon an Ass; for they never allow 'em a Horse: besides that all that time they are never permitted to see the people. In this manner it was that Sha-Abbas bred up his little Grandson, many days causing him to take Opium to render him more stupid. So that when he came to the Throne, after his Grandfathers death, the Physicians thought it convenient that he should drink Wine, to restore his natural heat, and renew his vigor. Sha-Abbas reign'd forty years, and and dy'd at the end of the year 1628. Before he dy'd, he gave command, that he should be bury'd in some place unknown to all the world, and that they should set his Grand-child upon his Throne, and give him the name of Sha-Sefi.

So soon as Sha-Abbas's eyes were clos'd, the General of the Horse, and the chief Captain of the Harquebusses, with whom the Commands were left, rode in all haste to Ispahan, and coming to the Palace, desir'd to speak with the Mother of the Child. The Mother was in a sad affright, believing that they came to put the young Prince to death. But when they had dissipated her fears, and that she understood that they came to set him upon the Throne by the command of his Grand-father, she embrac'd the young Prince, and return'd him into the hands of the Eunuchs. When he was come out of the Haram, the two Lords, attended by several others, saluted him King, and acknowledg'd him for their Sovereign. At the same time they took off his Cloaths and tore them, which in Persia is a mark of mourning; and according to custom, put him on another plain Garment, which he wore till midnight. Then they disrob'd him again, and put him on his Royal Robes, and set him upon the Throne, where all the Lords came and did him homage, and the next day he was acknowledg'd by all the Acclamations of the People. For when the Royal Habit is put upon the new King, the Drums, Trumpets, Timbals, Hautboys, and other Instruments, make a din in a peculiar place of the Meydan appointed for that purpose. Which is the Signal to give notice to the people to meet the next morning, to acknowledg the new King. Sha-Sefi for many years was a Novice in the art of Government. But time opening his eyes the first remarkable thing which he did, being at Casbin, was to cut off the head of Ali-Kouli-Kan, that great Captain who had conquer'd the Kingdoms of Lar and Ormuz for Sha-Abbas; and the heads of three of his Sons. After that, returning to Ispahan, he cut off the heads of seven of the principal Lords of his Court; and by little and little took the Government into his own hands. Of those Lords whom Jani-Kan was the chief.

For 'tis thought that Sha-Abbas had left a private order with Mirza Také, and the Dowager Sultaneß to rid themselves of those Lords so soon as Sha-Sefi should be set'd in his Throne, and that they had plac'd Governors in all places wherein the King might confide. These Lords having smok'd the private order of Sha-Abbas, and believing that the time of execution drew near, prevented the Athemadoulet Mirza Také; for meeting one morning before the Palace-door, they kill'd the Porter, and entring his Bed-Chamber, stab'd him before he could rise. After this execution, they went to the King, whom Jani-Kan boldly told, that they had slain Mirza Také. The King at that time dissembling his anger at so bold an enterprize, and an attempt upon the Royal Authority, answer'd him, that he had done very well, and that he had prevented those orders which he intended to have giv'n him. The Sultaneß his Mother then govern'd the Kingdom, together with the Athemadoulet, from whom she receiv'd four hundred Ducats in Gold every day for her little pleasures; and held a private Council with him in her Haram, where he had free admission, as being cut close. In this Council it was, that these two persons overthrew in the night whatever the Lords concluded in the day; chang'd the Kings mind, and over-rul'd his thoughts as they pleas'd themselves, by vertue of that power which they had over him. Eight or nine days after, as these Lords were sitting in Council with the King, an Eunuch enter'd, which was the signal for the King to get out of the way; and as soon as the King was gone, the Chamber was fill'd with Eunuchs, that rushing in immediately fell upon Jani-Kan and his Accomplices, and cut off their heads. Their heads and bodies were immediately expos'd to the view of the people in the Meydan; and for that it is not the custom in Persia to take any cognizance of what the King does, the most part of the people spurning the heads with their feet, cry'd one to another, See the heads of those Dogs that have disobey'd the will of the King.

I told ye, that Mirza Také was clean cut; which occasions a particular story: He was Governour of Guilan in the Reign of Sha-Abbas, and having abus'd one of his Pages, the young Lad stole secretly to Ispahan, and made his complaint plaint to the King; who having heard it, immediately sent him to be Governour of Gilan, in the place of Mirza Také, and order'd him to send him his head by one of the Officers, which he dispatch'd along with him. The King also, in regard the Page was very young, appointed him a person able to advise him in his affairs. In the mean while Mirza Také, missing his Page, and making no question but he was gone to make his complaint to the King, which would of necessity prove his ruin, if not prevented; he resolv'd to divert the storm by punishing himself, and caus'd that part to be cut clean off that committed the crime. At the same time, and in that bad condition wherein he then was, he caus'd himself to be put into a Litter, and taking his Chirurgion along with him, he gets to Ispahan by another way which was not usually travell'd, for fear of meeting the Page, and causing himself to be carry'd into the Palace in that pitiful and languishing estate, desir'd to speak with the King, who was surpriz'd at his arrival. But the Kan having presented him in a plate of Gold with the undoubted marks of his repentance, besought his Majesties pardon. Whereupon the King considering the rigor and extraordinary punishment which he had inflicted upon himself, sent him back to his Government, and recall'd the Page, whom he otherways gratifi'd. And this was the man whom Shah Abbas upon his Death-bed order'd that Shah Sefi should make Aghemadoulet, as being the fittest for the employment of any person in his Kingdom.

Shah Sefi not content to have rid himself of the Lords that had presum'd to invade his Authority, was resolv'd to have the head of Ali-merdan-Kan, Governour of Candahar; of whom he was jealous, by reason of his vast riches, his Plate being all Gold, and his House as magnificently furnish'd as the Kings. But the King could not bring about his design; for the Kan being press'd to come to Court, and believing it was only to take away his head, to free himself from the danger, deliver'd Candahar to the Great Mogul, by whom he was kindly entertain'd, and highly caress'd. Neither was Ali-merdan-Kan's wealth of his own getting, but left him by inheritance, as being descended from the ancient Kings of Candahar, who were originally Tartars. Now whatever favours or advancement the Great Mogul bestow'd upon Ali-merdan-Kan, the same did the Persian King bestow upon his two Sons: whereas all the world believ'd, that after such a piece of Treason committed by their Father, the King would have ript up their bellies. This piece of policy of Shah Sefi was very advantageous to Shah Abbas the second, when he besieg'd Candahar with fifty thousand men. For the greatest part of the Mogul's Army being compos'd of Persians, they remembering how kindly Shah Sefi had us'd the two Sons of Ali-merdan-Kan, made little resistance against the King of Persia, who enter'd Candahar in a small time. The Great Mogul troubl'd at the loss, ask'd Ali-merdan-Kan, by what means he might retake Candahar; who presently made answer, that it would be very easie, if he could find such another Traytor as he had been.

But to return to Shah Sefi; his Reign was very violent, of which I will give you this Example:

One day the King returning from the Kelonters House in Zulpha, having drunk to excess, commanded that the Sultaneſs should come to him; who understanding that he was in drink, made no great haste, so that the King in the mean time fell asleep. But waking again soon after, and not seeing the Queen, he call'd for her a second time; of which when she had notice, she came immediately: When she came into the Chamber, she perceiv'd the King asleep, and in expectation of his waking, hid her self in a Nick behind the Hangings; where generally the Mattresses and Coverlets are laid by. The King waking, and not yet perceiving the Sultaneſs, in a great chafe demanded why she was not yet come. The Queen-Mother, who was a Georgian Slave, and mortally hated the young Sultaneſs, who was the Daughter of the King of Georgia, and therefore disdain'd by her, took an occasion to put her out of the Kings favour; and having first spoken ill of her, made a sign to the King to let him understand that the young Queen was hid in such a Nick. Upon that the King rising in a great fury, stab'd the poor Princess with his Dagger four or five times in the belly, and hardly knowing what he had done, went to bed again. The next, next day, forgetful of the Fact, he call'd for the Queens; but when they told him what had happen'd, he began to be deeply sensible of his error, and sorrow'd excessively; and at the same time, sent an express order through his Territories, that no man should drink Wine, and that the Governours should break all the Wine-Vessels wherever they found any; and spill the Wine. But this order did not last above a year.

During the Reign of Sha-Sefi, the Khan of Erivan sent him a Colt, which I saw, which was begot by a Mule. Not long after the King dy'd of a Surfeit, with excess of drinking, after he had reign'd fourteen years.

Sha-Abbas the second was set upon the Throne at Cashan, with the usual Ceremonies, at the end of the year 1642, and made his entry into Ispahan in the beginning of the year following. Upon the day of Solemnity, all the Citizens were order'd to be in Arms, and to march out of the City, where they were fill'd off upon each side of the Road. In the same manner were all the standing Infantry and Cavalry rang'd for five Leagues together. All the Road for two Leagues together without the City was cover'd with Tissues of Gold and Silver, with Carpets of Silk, and other rich Stuffs; all which costs the King nothing. For the Sha-Bander, who is like our Mayor, takes care to tax every one what he is to furnish toward that Solemnity. The English and Hollanders went also forth to meet the King; among whom I was one. When we came near the King, Jani-Kan, General of the Cavalry, gave the King notice who we were. Whereupon we all alighted, and the King, holding his Leg stretch'd out of his Stirrup, we all kiss'd his Boot. When he came where the way began to be spread with rich Carpets, he found the Grand Mufti and the Grand Cadi, attended by a great number of Moullahs, who made a Prayer after their manner. Prayers being ended, the King rode on, the Athemadoulé being on the left hand, which is the most honourable, and the General of the Cavalry on the right, yet not even with him, but so as that their Horses heads reach'd to the Crupper of his. There was no person but the King that rode over the Tissue, that Honour belonging to him alone; nor is the way spread above the breadth of the Stuff; and as soon as the King is pass'd over it, the people fall to scrambling, and carry away every one what they can get for themselves.

About a quarter of a League from Ispahan is a Garden, with a Great Room over the Gate, where the King made a halt, thinking to have made his Entry into the City. But an Astrologer came to him, and told him, that the hour was past, and that he must tarry three days before the hour would prove propitious again. So that he was constrain'd to betake himself to the Garden of Hezardgerih till the time came, whither the Nobility also were all forc'd to come betimes in the morning, and to stay till the evening. The day that the King made his Entry, the way from the Garden to the City was also spread with Carpets. For three days together the Fire-works play'd in the Meydan; and round the Piazza from top to bottom were lights hung out; and in the principal Inns, the richest Merchants had adorn'd the Doors and Windows of their Chambers, according to the Mode of the Country; and I believe it cost the Chief of the Holland Company, above nine hundred Tomans.

In the year 1643, came the Prince of the Usbecks in person to desire aid of Sha Abbas against his Children, who had caus'd his own Subjects to rebel and make war against him. His eldest Son first took Arms, and getting the advantage of a Battel, the other Brother treacherously took part with him; which nothing dismay'd the Father, to whom the chief of the Nobility still adher'd. Toward the end of the year 1642, the Prince lost another Battel and his left eye, which was shot thorough with an Arrow; which constrain'd him, so soon as he was cur'd of his wound, to come and crave succour from the King of Persia; which he easily obtain'd. Sha-Abbas designing to receive him honourably sent above ten thousand Horse as far as Cashan, which is four days journey from Ispahan, and five or six thousand Foot two days journey from thence to meet him. Every day he was attended by different Officers. Every day they set him up a new Tent, and spread new Carpets; and every day chang'd the twelve Horses that were led before him, whose furniture was all over cover'd with Jewels. For a League and a half from the City the way was spread with all sorts of Silk Stuffs to the very Palace; and the King of Persia went himself to meet him, as far as where the Stuffs were begun to be laid. Though Sha-Abbas was very young, yet he was resolv'd to shew, that he look'd upon himself as a potent King in the peaceable possession of his own Dominions, and that he went to meet a dethron'd Prince, that came to desire his Aid. For so soon as he perceiv'd the King of the Tartars, he made a shew of spurring on his Horse; and being come up to his Horses head, he put his foot out of the Stirrup, as if he intended to have alighted, but did not. The Tartarian Prince, as old as he was, presently leap't to the ground from his Saddle to salute the Persian King, who return'd him some slight Compliments about his having alighted; at which time the Athemadoulet and other Lords remounting him, the two Kings rode together upon the Silks, the King of Persia giving the left hand to the Tartar. The King of Persia very generously lent him a considerable assistance of 15000 Horse, and 8000 Foot, and sixty thousand Tomans in Money. The Tartar in Exchange gave him one of his Provinces bordering upon Persia, which yeilded him a very good Revenue, in regard the Inhabitants were all Shepherds, or Turcomans, that breed an infinite number of Cattel, wherein the wealth of that Province consists.

While he reign'd, he had a Present made him from the Governour of Schiras, of a wild Ass, whose Skin was as red as Scarlet, having a Horn growing out of his forehead about a foot long.

Sha-Abbas reign'd about twenty-four years, and dy'd at Tebzon, of an inflammation in his throat, which came by excessive drinking. His body by his own order was bur'd at Kour. So soon as he was dead, the Lords that were about him, sent advice of his death to the Prince that now reigns, by the Topigi-Basha, who is General of the Musqueteers, and Mirza Bayad the Chief of the Astrologers. So soon as they came to the door of the Haram, they desir'd to speak with the Mother and the Son; who believ'd them come upon some dismal design. But they presently confirm'd them to the contrary. For as soon as the Prince came forth of the Haram, they fell at his feet, and saluted him King, declaring the death of his Father. Whereupon the Prince immediately tore his Garment according to the custom. And indeed they have another custom, that as soon as the new Prince comes after much entreaty out of the Haram, he throws himself to the ground, at the door of the Haram, and then rising and sitting upon his heels, one of the Lords that are sent, girds the Scimiter about his waste, saying these words, May it please your Majesty to remember your Slave, that had the Honour to gird you with this Scimiter. Which done, he goes and sets the Trumpets a sounding, and the Drums beating, whereupon all the people in the morning come running to the Gate of the Palace, crying out, Patsha Salamalek, I salute thee Emperour. Which is all the Ceremony us'd when any King of Persia ascends the Throne. For I never saw any Crown set upon the head either of Sha-Abbas or Sha-Sefi. Only in Persia they gird on the Scimiter, as in Turky they put on the Bonnet of the Sophi's, which is very richly set with Jewels, but has not the least resemblance of a Crown. The same Ceremony of girding on the Scimiter, is us'd to the Mogul, the Kings of Visapour and Golconda; and they also put the Bonnet upon their heads, which is set with the richest Jewels in the possession of those great Monarchs.

Sha Sefi the second, some time after his coming to the Throne, fell dangerously sick, not having ever enjoy'd a perfect health before. Now it is the custom in those Countries, that upon such an occasion all the Lords of the Court, and Governors of Provinces, give a sum of money, according to their willingness and liberality. This sum is usually in Gold, which they put into a Bason very richly set with precious Stones, and bear it three times over the King's head, pronouncing these words, Patsha Bashaena Olson, This money is sacrific'd for the health of the Kings head. If the King recover all that money is giv'n to the poor, to which the King and his Haram add very liberally. But if the King dies, the money is put into the Treasury, and the poor have nothing. The twentieth of August 1667, was the critical day of his distemper, and every one thought he would have dy'd. Upon which all the Grandees of the Court seeing him in that condition, went to the Mosquee call'd Babaron, which is without the City, to pray for his health, and altogether gave near a thousand Tomans to the poor. The next day they commanded the Christian Armenians to pray for the recovery of the King. Whereupon as well the Ecclesiastics as the Laity went to their prayers upon the side of the River which is between Ispahan and Zulpha. They also sent their Kelonter, with fifty Tomans in Gold, to bear over the Kings head; though the Armenians pronounce not the same words as the Persians, saying only, Benai te Sadduk, destin'd for Alms.

Thus the danger being over in a few days, they made it their business to recover him to a perfect habit of health; but in regard the King continu'd in a languishing condition, and for that the Physicians could not discover the cause of the distemper, the King began to believe that it proceeded from the ignorance of the Physicians; for which reason some of them had receiv'd none of the best entertainment already. At length it came into the thoughts of some others of the Physicians, who were afraid for themselves, that in regard Persia was thus doubly afflicted, with Famine and Sickness of the King, both at one time, it must of necessity be the Astrologers fault, that mis'd the favourable hour when the King should have ascended the Throne. Thus being troubl'd at their disgrace, pretending to have no less skill in future knowledg than the Astrologers, who had not chos'n a true time for the King to ascend the Throne, they concluded that for the perfect recovery of his health, and the restoring of plenty to the Nation, it was necessary to renew the Ceremony at a lucky hour, and to change his name. This proposition pleas'd the King and his Council. The Physicians and Astrologers joining together, observ'd the first unlucky day, which would certainly be follow'd by another that would prove fortunate. Now there being among the Gaures, some that pretend themselves descended from the Rustans, who were ancient Kings of Persia and Parthia, that very morning one of those Gaures setting himself upon the Throne, with his back against a wooden Figure which represented him to the life, all the Grandees of the Court came and did him homage as their King, as he had order'd them to do. This action lasted till the favourable hour was come, which happen'd a little before Sun-set. Then it was that an Officer of the Court came behind and cut off the head of the wooden Figure, while the Gaure immediately took his heels and fled. Presently upon that the King appear'd in the Hall, upon whose head when they had put the Bonnet of Sophi, and re-girt him with the Scimitar, he ascended the Throne, and took the name of Soliman. He was forc'd to act this Comedy to satisfy the Law, which contriv'd that he should change his Name, and take a new possession of his Throne, by ejecting a Usurper that had wrongfully clam'd it. For which reason the Gaure was set up as Pretender, as laying claim to the ancient Lineage of the Persian Kings, and being of a different Religion. From that time the King recovering, and the Famine decreasing, the Physicians were in great repute, and the Astrologers were cast out of favour, except two or three of the most skillful.

Sba-Soliman before his coming to the Crown, had convers'd with none but Women and black Eunuchs; from whom he could not learn the art of Ruling. At present he only divertizes himself with his Wives in going a hunting, very rarely troubling himself with business but relying wholly upon his Ministers of State. He will not be seen for ten or twelve days together; all which time there are no Petitions to be prefer'd, nor Complaints to be made.

C H A P. II.

Of certain particular Actions which denote the Vertues and Vices of the Kings of Persia, from Sha-Abbas the first to Sha-Soliman the present King. And first of Sha-Abbas the Great.

Sha-Abbas, who was a passionate Lover of Honour, sought all ways imaginable to furnish his Empire with the supports of wealth and good Government. He would not suffer any Indian or Banian to live as a Tradder in his Dominions; they having crept in since under the Reigns of Sha-Seft the first, and Sha-Abbas the second, who came very young to the Throne. Neither had Sha-Abbas any reason to permit them to trade in his Kingdom; for they are worse Usurers than the Jews, and seldom it happens, but that they have all the Money in the Nation, which they take up at nine or ten in the hundred, and let out again upon pawns at two and a half per Cent. a month. From such devouring Pests and Vipers as these, Sha-Abbas thought it but reasonable to preserve his people; so that before these Vermin crept into Persia, the Money was all in the hands of the Armenians of Zulpha. And indeed those Banians have been the ruin of many poor people, of which I will only bring one example among many.

I was at Ispahan in the year 1662, when one of those Banians lent six or seven Tomans per Cent. a month to a poor Persian, who had utter'd several pieces of Linnen upon the place. Those Banians will have their Interest paid every month; but the Persian had slipt three or four, having no Money to pay, in regard his Debtor could not pay him. Thereupon the Banian donn'd him perpetually, and threaten'd to have him drub'd till he pay'd it, according to the Persian custom. The Mother of the Persian troubl'd to see her Son haunted in that manner, one morning as he was going to the Meydan, bid him, if he met the Banian, that he should be sure to bring him home, and she would pay him his Interest, and some of the principal, with some Money that she had sav'd of her one. Toward evening the Banian met his Debtor, whom he readily follow'd home upon promise of payment. The Mother desir'd him to set upon the Cause, which is the place where they make their fires, it being cold snowy weather, and set fruits before him to eat. While he thus eat and warm'd himself, night came on apace, and the woman putting him in hopes of payment, spun out the time so long, that the Banian not being unaccustom'd to cold weather and late hours, was easily perswaded to stay all night at the Persians House. When 'twas time to go to Bed, the Banian threw himself upon one Quilt, and the Persian upon another. About two hours after midnight, the Mother comes softly into the Chamber, with a sharp Razor in her hand, intending to have cut off the Banians head; but unfortunately mistaking, kill'd her own Son instead of the Banian. The Banian having had such an escape, stole cunningly out of the House, and declaring the murther to the Divan-beque, or the Chief Justice, He caus'd the woman to be apprehended, and brought before him; who confessing the fact, he commanded her to be ty'd to the tail of a young Mule, and to be dragg'd about the City till the Mule had kick'd her to death.

In the year 1667, eight or ten days before I departed from Ispahan, there was a Banian found buri'd in a Street near the Capuchins house; they had cut off his arms and legs, and so put him into the hole; but buri'd him so shallow that the Dogs scrap'd away the Earth, and discover'd him; but who committed the fact, was not then known.

Sha-Abbas was not only willing that all the trade should be in the hands of his Subjects, to make profit thereby, and to draw the Money into his Kingdom, but he would not suffer it to be transported when it was brought in. He saw that the Pilgrimages of his Subjects to Mecca, their Expences and Presents carry'd out abundance of his Ducats of Gold; therefore more politick than religious, he strove to hinder those Pilgrimages as much as in him lay; and going going himself in person to Mesjed in Pilgrimage to the Tomb of Iman-rez already spoken of, over which one of the Legs of Mahomets Camel hangs as a great Relict; and upon his return relating and giving out strange Miracles of Iman-rez, on purpose to divert his Subjects from going to Mecca.

Among the rest of the cunning knacks that Sha-Abbas made use of, to know how squares went in his Kingdom, without trusting too much to his Ministers, he oft'n disguis'd himself, and went about the City like an ordinary inhabitant, under pretence of buying and selling, making it his business to discover whether Merchants us'd false weights or measures or no. To this intent one evening going out of his Palace in the habit of a Countryman, he went to a Bakers to buy a Man of Bread, and thence to a Cook to buy a Man of Roast-meat, (a Man is six Pound, sixteen Ounces to the Pound.) The King having bought his Bargains return'd to Court, where he caus'd the Athemadoulet to weigh both the Bread and the Meat exactly. He found the Bread to want fifty-seven Drams, and the Meat forty-three. The King seeing that, fell into a great chafe against three or four of them that were about him, whose business it was to look after those things; but especially against the Governour of the City, whose Belly he had caus'd to have been ript up, but for the intercession of certain Lords. Besides the reproaches that he threw upon them for being so negligent in their Employments; and for their little affection to the publick good, he laid before them the injustice of false weights; and how sadly the cheat fell upon poor men, who having great Families, and thinking to give them eight hundred Drams of Bread, by that fraud depriv'd them of a hundred and forty three. Then turning to the Lords that were present, he demanded of them, what sort of justice ought to be done those people? When none of them daring to open their mouths, while he was in that passion, he commanded a great Oven to be made in the Piazza, together with a Spit long enough to roast a man; and that the Oven should be heated all Night, and that they should make another fire to be kindl'd hard by the Oven. The next morning the King caus'd the Baker and the Cook to be apprehended, and to be led quite through the City, with two men going before them, who cry'd to the people, We are going to put the Baker into a red hot Oven made in the Piazza, where he is to be bak'd alive, for having utter'd Bread by false weights; and the Cook is to be roasted a live, for having sold meat by false weights. Thus those two men serv'd for an example not only to Ispahan, but to all the Kingdom, where every one dreaded the severe justice of Sha-Abbas.

CH A P. III.

Of what fell out most memorable in the Reign of Sha-Sefi the first ; and particularly of the death of Iman-Kouli-Kan, and his three Sons.

IMan-Kouli-Kan was the last Kan of Schiras, whose Government extended over the Province of Lar, to the Gulf of Persia, under the Reign of Sha-Abbas these Kans being the most potent in all Persia, Iman-Kouli-Kan was he who in the Reign of Sha-Abbas conquer'd the greatest part of the Kingdom of Lar, and the Kingdom of Ormus, with all the Coast of the Persian Gulf, from Cape Jasques to Balsara.

This Iman-Kouli-Kan was prodigiously rich, belov'd and respected by all the world; besides he was wonderfully magnificent, his expences almost equalling the Kings; which occasion'd Sha-Abbas, who discours'd with him one day particularly upon that Subject, to tell him, that he desir'd him to spend every day one Mamoudy less than he, that there might be some difference between the expences of a King and a Kan.

The noble qualities of this Iman-Kouli-Kan had gain'd the affections of the people; for he was magnificent and liberal; highly recompenc'd brave Soldiers and Students; he lov'd Strangers, and had a particular care to cherish Arts and Sciences. To which purpose he built a fair Colledg at Schiras, for the instruction of Youth; and several Inns, as well in the City as upon the Roads; for the Travellers. He caus'd Mountains to be cut thorough to shorten the way; and join'd others by Bridges, of such an advanturous Structure, that it is hard to conjecture how such prodigious Arches could be made over such vast Precipices and Torrents.

Now in regard Iman-Kouli-Kan was strick'n in years, he seldom went to Court, chusing rather to continue in his Government, where he was belov'd and respected by all men. But the King being young, and the Government of the Kingdom in the hands of the Queen-Mother and the Athemadoulet, who were extremely jealous of the Kan, those two persons link'd together in Interest for the maintenance of the Kings Authority and their own, fretted to see the Kan's Court almost as splendid as the Kings; and that nothing of the Revenue of Schiras, Lar, Ormus, or any part of the Persian Gulf came to the Kings Coffers, as being solely at the disposal of the Kan; but that on the contrary, the King was oblig'd to send him Money to pay the Army. But that which troubled the Queen-Mother most of all, was the pretention of the Kan's eldest Son to the Crown, who was also a person of a daring and ambitious courage. For the Kings of Persia esteem it a great Honour to bestow upon any Kan or great Lord, one of their Wives out of their Royal Harem; and Sha-Abbas had given to Iman-Kouli-Kan one of his own proper Wives, whom he lov'd extremely. 'Tis thought that when she left the Harem she was three months gone with Child by Sha-Abbas, for somewhat above six months after she was bedded by the Kan, she lay-in of a Son, of which the King was the reputed Father, and who being born before Sha-Sefi, pretended a right before him to the Throne. By vertue of this claim, contrary to the will of Sha-Abbas in favour of Sha-Sefi, this ambitious Lord, who only pass'd for the Kan's eldest Son, vehemently solicited his Father to seize upon Sha-Sefi, and to make himself King, or at least to op'n a way for him to the Throne. Now it happen'd, that one day being a hunting with the young King near Schiras, the impatient young Lord coming to his Father; Sir, said he, see now the opportunity that offers you the Throne; for I will go presently and bring you Sha-Sefi's head. But the Kan holding his Son by the Arm, told him, that he would never consent to the death of his King; protesting to him, rather to dye a thousand deaths; adding withall, that it was the Kings will to appoint Sha-Sefi to succeed him, as being the Son of his Son, and consequently his lawful Heir: that the young Prince was recommended to his care; and in regard he had promis'd and sworn, he was so far from falsifying his trust, that he would maintain his possession to the last gasp.

This generous resolution of the Kan broke the young Lords' design upon the Kings person. However the Sultaneſs being not ignorant of the train that was laid for the young King, and against the repose of the Kingdom, thought it her wisest way to prevent the blow, and to rid her self of such persons as had conspir'd the death of the King. The Kan's two other Sons took part with him they call'd their elder Brother. And as for the Kan himself, though he were upright in his Loyalty, yet his power, his wealth, his reputation among the Souldiery, and the affection that the people bore him, concurr'd together not only to render him suspected, but guilty. The Sultaneſs and the Athemadoulet took counsel together, which way to divert the storm that threaten'd the Kings head, to whom they represented, that he was not safe in his own person so long as Iman-Kouli Kan and his three eldest Sons liv'd. The King easily believ'd them, and resolv'd to be rid both of Father and Sons together; but the difficulty was to get 'em to Court, wherein opportunity it self assisted them. For at that time Amirath the Great Turk, at the head of a vast Army, was already advanc'd within the Confines of Persia, had tak'n Erivan, and had ruin'd Tauris. Upon the first news of this march, the King sends for all the Kans and Governours to attend his person, with all the Forces under their command. Among the rest, the Kan of Schiras receiv'd the same orders; who thereupon assembl'd all his Troops, both Horse and Foot, who were not only the most numerous, but the best disciplin'd and stoutest Souldiers of all Persia. As he was upon his march to Casbin with his three Sons, the eldest having well consider'd of affairs; Sir, said he, We are making haste to the King, to the end our heads may the sooner fall at our feet. Perhaps my Son, reply'd the Kan, thou maist speak the truth; but to this day I never was a Rebel against the King, I have done whatever he commanded, and whatever may happ'n I will obey him till death. The Kan arriving at Casbin, was by the King welcom'd with great demonstration of joy. Some days after, he took a general Muster, and then made a great Feast which lasted three day, to which all the great Lords and Kans that were at Casbin were call'd. The three Sons of Iman-Kouli-Kan were of the number; but the Father excus'd himself, as well by reason of his age, as also representing to his Majesty, that it better befitted him to employ his time in taking care of his affairs, and in praying for his Majesty; however if it were his Majesties express command, he would not fail to obey; to which the King return'd for answer, that the Kan of Schiras was at his liberty to do as he thought fit. The third day of the Feast the King rose from his Seat, and going out of the Hall, without speaking a word to any person, went into a Room hard by. Half an hour after, three sturdy resolute Fellows with some other Ragamuffin attendants, entring the Hall with their Scimeters drawn, seiz'd upon the Kans three Sons, and cut off their heads. They were put into a Gold Bason, and presented to the King; who commanded the Fellows to carry them to their Father, and as soon as he had seen them, to take off his head to make the fourth. The Assassins found him at his prayers; but being interrupted to see the heads of his three Sons, he desir'd leave only to conclude, which having done, with a countenance undisturb'd, and without any other words or expressions in his mouth than what is usually said among the Persians, Let the Kings will be done, he submitted to a death which he might have easily avoided. The four heads were brought back to the King, to be sent into the Haram to his Mother. So soon as he had taken off the heads of the Father and the three Sons, the King dispatch'd away certain Chappars or Courriers, with order to the Lieutenant of the Kan, to put to death all the rest of the Children. The command was obey'd, and they were all put to death, but only two that were at Nurse whom their Nurses so well conceal'd, that never any tidings could be heard either of the Nurses or of the Children.

After the death of Iman-Kouli-Kan, the Province of Schiras, with its dependances, has been govern'd by a Vizir, who agrees with the King what Rent to pay him yearly. In the years 1665 and 1666, the Vizir gave him fifty thousand Tomans a year. But in the year 1667, the King abated him eight thousand Tomans, in regard he had taken from him a small part of his Government to pleasure a Favourite.

Besides what the Government of Schiras pays to the King in ready Money, he is oblig'd every year to send him a present of all the rarities that grow or are bred in the Province. These Presents consist in Horses, of which there is the best breed of any Province of Persia. In Granates, Oranges, and Lemons, sweet Oils and Waters of several sorts, especially Oil of Roses, with which the women rub their bodies and heads; and the water of a certain Flower that grows upon a tree not much unlike our Willows, which water is call'd Arak-Bilmitshe, which is a great refreshment to those that use it; besides other Oils and Essences which the Governour is oblig'd to present. Yet were he only oblig'd to present the King, the expence might be born well enough; but for fear of being displac'd by any other Favourite, he is constrain'd to make Friends of all the other great Lords and Favourites at Court; which there is no way to do, but by continual presents. Whereas the ancient Kans, who were a kind of petty Sovereigns in their Governments, were only wont to send a few Baskets of new Fruits in their season for the service of the Kings Table. To defray this expence, the Governours are forc'd to tyrannize over the people; who when they come, as many times they do, two or three Villages together, to complain to the King, are forc'd after long waiting, to return with empty Purfes home again, by reason that they who should give them admission, are the only persons that debar them from it; and patiently to submit to the Extortions of the Vizar; which is a piece of policy practis'd likewise by all the other Kans and Governours of the Persian Provinces. As for Sha-Sefi himself, he was very severe, and one whose punishments oft'n amounted to acts of cruelty. One day being a hunting, a poor Country man appear'd from behind a Rock, with a Paper in his hand, being deputed by the Village to make some complaint to the King. But while the poor man cry'd for justice, the King without making any answer, shot two arrows into his body and slew him. That which mov'd Sha-Sefi to this act of cruelty, was because he had some of his Wives with him in company. For then there is no mercy to those poor people that happ'n to be in the way where the King chances to pass by: no not for them that are in the Country round about, where the Eunuchs have order to kill all men they meet. When the King gives notice of his intention to carry his Wives into the Country, this is call'd Courouk; and there is nothing more troublesome nor more inconvenient in the world to the poor people that live in the Villages through which these women are to pass; for upon notice giv'n them, they must leave their Houses for a League or two of either side. When there is a Courouk at Ispahan, let the weather be never so bad, the people must leave their Houses, and if they have no Friends in some distant quarter to retire to, they have no way but to repair to the Mountains. Such is the excess of the jealousy of the Kings of Persia; which indeed derives it self to all his Subjects, who will not permit their women to be seen by any but their own Husbands.

The Persians both men and women are so addicted to take Tobacco, that to take Tobacco from them, is to take away their lives. So that if the King should prohibit Tobacco for any time, he would lose a good part of his revenue. However Sha-Sefi in a humor having once forbid'n Tobacco to be taken in any part of his Dominion, his Spies (that are in every City) found in the Indian Inn two rich Merchants of that Nation smoking their noses. Immediately they were seiz'd, bound, and carry'd to the King, who commanded forthwith that Justice should be done upon them in the Meidan, which was, that they should pour melted lead down their throats till they were dead.

The people thought the King had only intended to have scar'd them, and would have repriev'd them upon the place. Infomuch that four Fonians went to the Athemadoulet, and offer'd to pay two thousand Tomans into the Kings Treasury, so that he would be pleas'd to spare the two Merchants lives. The chief Minister made the proposal, but the King, falling into a passion, and asking the Athemadoulet, whether those Indian Dogs thought that a King of Persia would sell Justice, sent a second order for the execution of the Merchants without delay.

The same Sha-Sefi having giv'n command that the Eyes of a young Lord of the Court should be put out, one of the principal Officers of the House being present, and seeing the Executioner prick the eyes of the unfortunate young man with the point of a small knife, shut his own eyes and turn'd away his head, as abhorring such a spectacle. The King perceiving it, and vex'd to see those signs of pity, and a dislike of an act that he approv'd; What, said he in a fury, art thou afraid to punish the wicked? And at the same time commanded his eyes to be pull'd out of his head.

It is a custom, that if any man points at the King as he passes along in the Street, or upon the Road, he must lose his hand. One day Sha-Sefi being in the Country, two Merchants of Constantinople were upon the Road, where the King and his Train were to pass. They stopp'd to see the King, and when he came near, one of the Merchants pray'd his Friend that oft'n had seen him, to shew him which was he. The other knowing that only the King wears the Heron tops in his Bonnet, innocently lifted up his hand to distinguish him, by pointing, from the rest of the Lords that follow'd him. For which act two Horse-men came presently to him, and cut off his hand with a Scimiter.

C H A P. IV.

The tragical and memorable Story of Ralph Sadler, Native of Zurich, in the Reign of Sha-Sefi, who had retain'd him in his Service.

Ralph Sadler, born in Zurich, was a Watch-maker by Profession, who put himself into the service of the Emperors Resident at the Ottoman Court, with whom he went to Constantinople. This man I desir'd to take along with me into Persia; and coming to Ispahan, he set himself to work, and made a small Watch about the bigness of half a Crown; which being a neat piece of work, the English would needs buy, to present it to Iman-Couli-Kan, paying the price demanded, which was two hundred Crowns. Iman-Couli-Kan presented it to the King; who was mightily pleas'd with it, in regard it was the least striking Watch that ever had been seen by the King, who therefore carry'd it hanging about his Neck under his Cloathes, in a Gold Chain. One day the King happening to wind up his Watch, and turning the Key the wrong way, broke the Fusil, for which he was so much troubl'd, that he sent for the Watch-maker from Ispahan to Casbin; whither when Ralph came, he presently made the Watch as good as ever. The King thus satisfy'd in his work and in his person, order'd him a Pension of thirty Tomans, and Diet for him and a man, and provision for two Horses: commanding him withall to make some new pieces of work. Now a skilful workman in the service of the Persian King, has this advantage, that if he pleases the King, besides his Wages that are duly paid, the King out of his liberality bestows on him a present, which usually amounts to a third part or half his Wages; or else his Wages are rais'd, which is more advantageous than a present.

Ralph was oblig'd every morning to wait upon the King at his rising, to wind up his Watch; and was so much in the Kings favour, that every morning when he came out of the Kings Chamber, he had a Glas of Wine presented him, as a mark of esteem. And indeed the King had such an affection for him, that to retain him in his service he often solicited him to turn Mahometan.

The Ambassador of Holstein coming to Ispahan, and seeing Ralph so much in favour with the King, endeavour'd to gain his Friendship.

Thus Ralph oft'n keeping company with the Ambassadors, and having one time tarry'd till late at night upon the debauch with them, returning home to his his Lodging, where he kept a young Nestorian girl, in the Court of the House met a young Persian, Brother to one of the Kings Porters. The Persian knowing himself guilty, and surpriz'd to see Ralph so soon return'd, skip't over the Wall into the Garden and fled. The next day Ralph (who knew who he was) told his Brother of it, and desir'd him to speak to the young Persian not to come any more to his House; for if he did, he must expect what follow'd.

Some days after, the Embassadors treated all the Franks; when Ralph beginning to be warm, call'd the young Persian to mind, and slipping home without taking his leave, open'd the door softly, and found the young Persian again with his Mistress. Thereupon Ralph calling his Slaves to help him, bound his arms, and ty'd him to a Tree in the Court; and so leaving him there, went to bed. By and by one of Ralph's Servants, who knew the Persian, fell a jeering him; which so incens'd the Persian, that he having his feet at liberty, and the fellow within his reach, gave him such a kick upon the bottom of his Belly, that he first swoon'd away, and then dy'd. The other Slaves seeing him fall, waken'd Ralph with cries, who thereupon snatching up a Pistol that was charg'd with a brace of Bullets, shot the Persian into the head. The Persian being thus slain, Ralph went in the morning to wind up the Kings Watch; and being ask'd by the King, as he was wont to do, what news in Ispahan, told him plainly what he had done, and the reason why. The King upon his report told him, he had done well according to the strictness of the Country.

The Athemadoulet at that time was Mirza Také, who hated Ralph. For the Armenian Merchants having presented the Athemadoulet with several Watches at a time, it happen'd that once he sent to Ralph about thirty Watches together to be mended. For which the Athemadoulet, to gratifie him, and knowing that he kept four or five Servants, and seven or eight Horses, sent him fifteen or twenty Camels load of Straw and Barley for his Horses. But Ralph slighting such a present as that, Go (said he to the Athemadoulets Servant) tell thy Master, that I am neither a Horse nor an Ass, and therefore let him eat his Present himself. Which message so provok'd the Athemadoulet, that he study'd nothing but revenge.

Thereupon the Athemadoulet, whose business it is to attend the King when he rises, and to report to him the news of the Town, told him among the rest, what Ralph had done. The King reply'd, that Ralph had confest'd it to him already, and that he had pardon'd him, in regard he had reason to do as he did. But the Athemadoulet made answer, that Ralph had minc'd the matter; and represented the story to the King far otherwise than it was, making the worst of it he could upon Ralph's side; and the more to incite the King, he put him in mind of the fair occasion he had to force him to turn Mussulman, there being no way to expiate his crime, but by turning Mahometan, or suffering the Law. The King thus over-rul'd, sent for Ralph, told him, he was now better inform'd of the crime he had committed, and that he must either turn Mahometan or dye. Thereupon the King sent him to Prison. Eight days after, the King (who had a great love for him, and therefore troubl'd that he must be constrain'd to put him to death, unless he would turn Mahometan,) sent for him again, and offer'd him two thousand Tomans, after a powerful perswasion by words, but all signify'd nothing. Upon that he sent him back again to Prison. But yet remembring that he had once approv'd the fact, he sent for Ralph a second time, and offer'd him ten thousand Tomans, and a Wife out of his Haram, with all her Jewels; which Ralph refus'd, with the same resolution as before. The King incens'd at the fierceness of his resolution, deliver'd him to the Brother of the party slain, to execute the Law upon him. The Holstein Embassadors were resolv'd to have beg'd his life; but the Athemadoulet, smelling their design, would not permit them Audience. However, the King commanded all the Franks, and all the Armenian Clergy to be present at the Execution, to save all his blood, and put him in a Coffin; he commanded also, that he should be buried at Zulpha in the Armenian Church-yard, and have a Tomb made over him.

Thereupon Ralph was led to the Meidan, with that triangular Instrument of Wood which the Persians call a Palenk, about his neck. This Palenk was the cause cause that the Brother of the deceas'd, who was to be the Executioner, not only miss'd his first blow, but wounded himself in the Leg, while his Skain being born off by one of the sides of the triangular Instrument, by the force of the blow lighted upon himself. Whereupon the people making a great shout hinder'd farther execution for that time. The King being advertis'd thereof, remanded him to Prison, and after a few days sent for him a third time into his presence; but though the King offer'd him a thousand Tomans, and that the Lords urg'd him to turn, though it were but for a while, and in outward appearance; yet neither threats nor promises could move the Zurickian, who was thereupon executed at the end of October, 1637.

All the Franks willingly contributed to raise him a Tomb; which was cover'd with a small Duomo, supported with four Pillars, ten or twelve foot high. The Armenians have made him a Saint; so that when they are sick of a Feaver, they come and make their devotions at this Tomb; and every time they come they carry away a piece of a Stone; so that the Tomb wants repairing every year.

The Athemadoulet, to the end the King might be the less sensible of the want of him, had told the King, that his Majesty would find no great miss of him, in regard he had a Servant who was almost as good as himself. But some few days after, the Kings Watch that he always carry'd about him, being out of order, and Ralph Apprentice not being able to remedy the fault; the King for madness that he had been the Watchmakers death, threw the Watch at the Athemadoulets head. There, cry'd he, Dog as thou art, by thy advice I put Ralph to death, the most skilful man of his Profession that ever will come into my Kingdom. Thou deservest for thy counsel, to have thy belly ript up. But I swear by my Throne, that from this time forward I will never put a Christian to death for his Religion. And I question whether any of you would have had the same courage to have dy'd for the Law of Haly. And indeed they have been very cautious ever since; nor has any of the Franks been put to death, though they have shewn out before the King in words and actions rash enough.

CHAP. V.

Of some particulars under the Reign of Sha-Abbas the second.

Sha-Abbas the second, Son of Sha-Sefi, was no less cruel then his Father; and would be no less punctually obey'd.

He had two Sisters, which he marri'd to two of the richest Lords of his Kingdom, though of a very mean extraction. Some time after, the King understanding that they were both with Child, order'd Physick to be given them to destroy the fruit of their Wombs. About three months after, he was told that they were big again; then he suffer'd 'em to be brought to bed; but commanded that they should not give the Children any nourishment, but let 'em starve to death.

The same Sha-Abbas caus'd the tongue of one that fill'd him Tobacco to be cut out for a word spok'n idly. For the King calling for Tobacco, one of the Pages ran hastily for it to him that had it in charge, and bid him dispatch; who answer'd him briskly, Gebennemé sabrejlé, that is, to Hell, have a little patience. The King being inform'd of it, commanded his tongue to be cut out. The poor man desir'd him that was the Executioner, to cut it as deep as he could in his throat, and to leave it very short; by which means he spoke some words muffling.

The people cry'd out against the Nazir, who being a person of low extraction, and advanc'd to that high dignity in a short time, grew so proud that he contemn'd all the Lords of the Court. There was no dealing with him about about any business, unless he were first presented; and he paid no body without making some advantage of it. Every body had reason to complain; yet no person knew how to come at the King to make their complaints. At length they bethought themselves of making their application to two black Eunuchs, who had the Kings ear in the night. One was call'd Aga-Saron, who was the Meter or Master of the Wardrobe; and the other Aga-Kafour, or high Treasurer. These two Eunuchs seeing the King in a good humour one night, let fall certain words concerning the Nazar, and his management of affairs and thence slid into a discourse of his injustice, that caus'd the people to cry out against him, and speak evil of his Government. Now it happen'd one morning that the King intending to go a hunting, the Grand Master, who had always a large train attending him, coming to the Kings Tent, the Meter deny'd him entrance. About the same time the King came forth, and seeing the Nazar, commanded his Officers to take off the Bonnet from the dead of that Dog that took Gifts from his people; and that he should sit three days bareheaded in the heat of the Sun, and as many nights in the Air. Afterwards he caus'd him to be chain'd about the neck and arms, and condemn'd him to perpetual imprisonment, with a Mamoudy a day for his maintenance; but he dy'd for grief within eight days after he was put in prison.

Jafer-Kan, being a generous Lord, and one that kept a magnificent train, was Governour of Alterabat. At first he was very mild, but at last he began to exact such sums from the people, that his oppressions were very heavy; nor were these violences of his conceal'd from the Kings ear, who being one day drinking with some of his Lords, and seeing the Master of his Mulick in the Room, who was a merry droll, and had always some pleasant news or other to tell the King; his Majesty was pleas'd to ask him, what the people said of Jafer-Kan; adding withall, that he had made him Governour of several Provinces, and had never heard any complaint of him before, but that now he was accus'd of strangely tyrannizing over the people. The Mulick Master being a meer flatterer, and knowing that Jafer-Kan was extremely belov'd by the King, confidently averr'd, that the Governour was falsely accus'd, and that he had always known him apter to give then to receive. There was at the same time in the Room, an Agis call'd Manouchar-Kan, lately return'd from a Pilgrimage to Mecca; him the King also ask'd, what was his opinion of Jafer-Kan, and his Government, being a person that had been long acquainted with him; to whom the Agis, thinking to please the King, return'd the same answer, that the Mulick Master had giv'n. Whereupon the King, who had been well inform'd of the Kans behaviour, turning toward the Lords that were present, what think you, said he, of these two Flatterers, that absolutely know the contrary to what they speak? And at the same time commanded two of the Mulick Masters teeth to be pull'd out of his mouth, and to be driv'n into the head of the Agis; which had like to have cost him his life, being a very old man. As for Jafer-Kan, he was disgrac'd for a time, but being a Person endow'd with noble qualities, valiant, generous and pleasing in conversation, he was recall'd to Court, and knew so well how to make his tale good, that his Majesty gave him the Government of Shemeloubostan, of which Semeran is the Capital City. Shemeloubostan signifies a Country manur'd to bear fruit. Nor is there any Province in Persia that so abounds in Pastures and Castles, that daily fall to ruine.

Jafer-Kan being restor'd to favour, the King sent for several Lords of the Court to come and drink with them. He also commanded five French Artificers which he had in his service to wait upon him, a Goldsmith nam'd Sain, two Watchmakers Lagis and Varin, and two Musket-makers Marais and Bernard. After they had heated themselves a little with Wine, the King drew a Ruby out from off his finger, which I sold him for a hundred Tomans, and a Diamond Jewel worth thirteen or fourteen hundred Tomans, which he gave to Jafer-Kan, with whom he was whispering at the same time. Now though the Nazar were at a distance, yet without doubt somewhat of the discourse was heard; inasmuch that the Wine emboldning him, he told the King aloud, that if he would let him have but four thousand Horse, he would cut all that Rabble to pieces. The King bid him hold his tongue and go to sleep; testifying his his displeasure at his discourse. For the Nazar conjectur'd that the King was talking to Jaser-Kan about the incursions which the Usbeck Tartars often made from Mesched side. As for the Franks three of the five were gone home to sleep, Sain, Lagis, and Bernard: Maras and Varin stay'd behind in the Room. But Marais being of a humor that when he was drunk he could not hold his tongue, and having heard what the Nazar said, he likewise took upon him to tell the King, that if the King wanted a General, there was none fitter to make a General than Jaser-Kan, and presently began a long repetition of his praises. The King commanded him to hold his tongue, which he did for a while, but then falling again into his former impertinencies, the King commanded him to be dragg'd out of the Room by the feet, and that they should rip up his belly. Thereupon Marais was seiz'd upon by the Meter, who having a great kindness for the Franks, and knowing that the King had a singular love for Marais, delay'd the execution of the Kings command, pulling his Cloathes off very slowly; and finding that the King did not rise to go into his Haram, which is the sign of no pardon to be given, he caus'd him to be dragg'd as near the person of the King as he could, thereby to try whether the King would have compassion on him or no; while certain Lords took the boldness to implore the Kings mercy in his behalf. At last when the King saw him dragg'd along, he commanded the Officers to let him go, and withall order'd him to put on his Cloaths again, and resume his place.

The King of Persia's eldest Son comes very raw to the Throne; and his first divertisement is to make short journeys into the Provinces, thereby by little and little to gain the knowledg of such things as concern him. Above all things he never fails to visit the principal Church of the Armenians at Zulpha. That which makes him so curious, is his desire to see the Armenian women, who are very handsom; being also further incited thereto by the Sultaneses, who are glad of any recreation. And then he has a Courouk through all Zulpha, at what time all the men must retire to Ispahan, or to their Friends at a distance. Sha-Abbas the second went several times in that manner to Zulpha; and one day among the rest, upon the report of the beauty of the Wife of the Kelonter Gorgia Safras, Son of Kelonter Gorgia Nazar, the King having seen her, lik'd her very well, and desir'd her to go along with the Sultaneses, who carry'd her into the Haram, where she continu'd fifteen days, and then return'd home with a fair Neck-Lace of Pearls, which the King gave her when she went away.

To say the truth of Sha-Abbas the second, he was a man too much given to drink, and too much govern'd by his passion, otherwise he was a lover of justice, and very magnificent and generous to Strangers.

CHAP. VI.

Of the misfortune of Mahomet Beg in the reign of Sha-Abbas the second.

MAhomet Beg was born at Tauris, the Son of a Taylor, who bred him a Scholar. He had a quick apprehension, and was naturally inclin'd to vertue; and being desirous to advance himself in the world, he had the good luck to obtain the employment of Major-Bashi, or chief of the Essayers and Refiners of Money, who has a power to visit all places where money is coyn'd. After that, he became acquainted with the Aila Verdi Beg, or Mr. Godsgift, the Kings chief Huntsman, by the title of Mert-Shekar-Bashi, who gladly presented him to the King, to whom the King was very thankful, so soon as he had found the noble Qualities of the person he had presented. Thereupon so soon as Mahomet Ali-Beg, grand Master of the Kings House dy'd, the King bestow'd that Employment upon Mahomet Beg, who not only gain'd the favour of his Majesty, but the good will of all the Lords of the Court. He had a great respect for them all, without meddling with any of their employments, and suppress'd his revengeful spirit, not finding it seasonable as yet to disclose his passions.

Kalife Sultan at that time Athemadoulet hapning to dye, the King conferr'd that place upon Mahomet Beg, who at first behav'd himself in that employment to the satisfaction of all men. He apply'd himself particularly to the searching out of Mines; for there had a report ran among the people for many years, that if certain mountains nine or ten miles from Ispahan, toward the West were well digg'd into, there might be found store of Gold, Silver and Copper. To which purpose he made use of, a Norman, whose name was La Chapelle de Han, who wanted at that time to have great skill in Chymistry, Mines and Minerals, for which reason he was recommended by the Governor of Ispahan to the Athemadoulet then at Casbin with the King, who presently sent him back again to the Governour to furnish him with all things necessary for his Expences, and for the work which he undertook in the Mountains. Thither went La Chapelle, and after fifteen days toyl return'd to Ispahan with two or three hunder'd weight of earth, and set up furnaces to draw out the metal. The Athemadoulet was so wise as to give order to the Governour of Ispahan, and three or four more persons of Quality to overview the Norman, to see that he play'd no foul play. But though there was not so much as a half penny worth of silver in all the earth from the bottom to the top, though the Persians watch'd him so narrowly as they did, he made a shift to shuffe in an Abassi among the earth, as it was in the furnace without being perceiv'd. Nevertheless the Athemadoulet, to whom it was carry'd, presently found out the cheat, though he took no notice of it, hoping to make better use of the Norman in other things; only he forbid him to dig any more in that place, in regard the expence would exceed the profit.

La Chapelle, who was very skillful at putting off his merchandize, and one who knew to make the best use of the least smacking that he might perhaps have in Mechanicks, and the power of Motion, had the cunning to amuse the Athemadoulet for ten years together, being a passionate Lover of new Inventions; and the better to insinuate himself into the Kings favour assum'd to himself the Invention of several Rarities which he shew'd the King, who thereupon allow'd him a very handsome pension. Thus encourag'd, he undertook to cast Canons, bring the water to the top of the Kings house, and several other things, yet when all his designs fail'd for want of Art, and that he found he could do no more good in Persia, resolving for India, he dy'd at Ormuz.

The Athemadoulet missing of Gold and Silver Mines, applg'd himself to the discovery of Copper Mines, wherein he was more fortunate; for in those Mines he also found veins of Azure, of which there is a great quantity consum'd in painting the Grotesco Flourishes upon the Ceilings and Arches of their Houses. He also found out a Mine of Lead near Yerde: and being still upon new discoveries, he found out a Mine of Talk, Stone, Allum, and Coles, but of neither so good as in other Countries. He was so obstinate in the search of Metals, that if any person had an occasion to speak with him, let him be never so busie upon never so important affairs, it was enough to bring him some stones of a supposed Mine, or something rare either for Colour, Figure or Weight. He also gave full power to them that brought him any tidings of a Mine to go to the place, and to press the Countymen from their labour to dig in the Mountains and break up rocks: and if they found nothing he cast the fault upon the ignorance of the Labourers.

He also apply'd himself to the study of Mechanic Motions. He would have found an Invention, whereby the half Vail that hangs in the Kings Megeler, or Council Chamber, and is drawn to and fro by certain Officers in the Summer, to gather the cool Air, should have bin made by Engine work. Then he took a fancy for water Engines, the most necessary thing in the world for Persia to relieve the drowth of the Country, but wanting necessities, as Beams, Rafter, Wheel-work, Cordage and Iron, he could not begin those Engines, the figures whereof La Chapelle had left him in a Book.

But as Mahomet Beg was studious in these things, so was he Ambitious and Revengeful to that height that he could not observe a moderation in his resentment against those that had given him any distaste. In his height of Passion he caus'd several Kans to be depriv'd of their Provinces, and by confiscating their Estates reduc'd them to utmost necessity.

The Kan of Erivan had a Son who was a lovely and a well proportion'd Gentleman, and always attended at the Kings Elbow. One day that the King was drinking with some Lords, he commanded the Kan of Erivans Son to carry a Gold Cup full of Wine to the Athemadoulet, who perceiving that he had enough already, made a sign with his eye to the young Lord to return it back. The young Lord passing by the King told him ingeniously that the Athemadoulet had no desire to drink, whereupon the King commanded him to go and powre the Wine into his bosome. As the one was oblig'd to obey, the Athemadoulet was forc'd to suffer, and to permit the young man to open his bosome and powre down the Wine; for not daring to shew his anger, he was forc'd to dissemble the best he could for that time. But having resolv'd to revenge the affront upon the Kan of Erivan Father of the young Lord, who had only done what the King commanded him, he resolv'd to lay hold upon the opportunity that presented it self, knowing that there were several complaints come against him from the Armenians of Erivan. Thereupon the Athemadoulet sends for the Kelonter, encourages him in his suit, and gives him instructions how to proceed. To this end Mahomet Beg appoints him to meet him such an hour at the Kings Stables, whither the King presently coming, the Kelonter threw himself at the Kings feet, and besought him for Justice against the Kan of Erivans oppressions: while Mahomet Beg fail'd not to heap up aggravations against the Governour, and the King, though he had heard but one side, as easily condemn'd him upon the Accusation of the Kelonter and his Prime Minister. Thereupon an Officer of the Kings, call'd Negef-Couli-Beg, a man of a quick and active spirit was commanded to go in all haste, and seize upon the Person of the Kan. Who being come to Erivan found him upon his seat of Justice, confiscating and condemning to fine and Corporal punishment a near Kinsman of the Kelonters. The Messenger boldly entered into the Megeler or Council Chamber, goes directly to the Kan, told him he was the Kings prisoner, and gave him a blow with his fist upon the neck, about which he was to wear the Triangle of great thick pieces of wood already describ'd, into which the neck is enclos'd, while the Arms and Hands of the Prisoner are put through another piece of wood that crosses the Triangle, which is a great pain to the Prisoner. Thus was the Kan carry'd night and day to Ispahan, but when he came there the King shew'd him more mercy, and allowed him his house for a prison, yet not suffering him to go to the Bath, nor to shave his hair, nor to stir out of the Apartment where his women were. These are penalties impos'd upon those that fall into disgrace at Court, whom the King shuts up in their houses, intending no severer punishment. For the Kan being belov'd by the King was restor'd to his favour, and to his former charge of superintendant of the Kings Mosques.

Neither did this fright'n others from bearing up against the Power of Mahomet Beg, though every one had not the same success. For ill it far'd with the Governour of Schiras, who was call'd Mirza Haddi. He was a person of great wealth and knowledge, and one day in Council took upon him to tell Mahomet Beg, that he was not of his opinion; and withall to lay before him his defects, and ill conduct. But the Prime Minister so deeply lay'd to heart the boldness of Mirza Haddi, that he resolv'd to revenge himself by all means imaginable. He suborn'd false witnesses, and other persons to make complaints before him of the Governour of Schiras. There was a necessity for the party accus'd to appear before Mahomet Beg as his Judge, but the Governor trusting to his Innocence, nere minded the rage of his adversary, not believing he could receive any injury from him. In the mean time Mahomet Beg inform'd the King what he pleas'd himself, and overpowering him by his authority, confiscated all Mirza Haddi's Estate, and sent him to prison to the House of the Nazar, who was call'd Ismael Beg. When he came there they hung him upon Tenter-hooks by the feet against the wall, and drub'd him so long, that he was forc'd to be carri'd into another Room upon a Slaves back. His Lieutenant and an Eunuch, that had bin his Treasurer, were serv'd in the same sawce, and all three put into a high Chamber that serv'd instead of a prison. His Vizier or Lieutenant was releas'd in a short while, but Mirza Haddi and his Eunuch were still kept close.

Nor is the manner of his revenging himself upon Mir-Kassem-Beg, the Deroga, or Provost of Ispahan less remarkable. While Mahomet Beg was only Majer-Bashi, there was some gold Plate stol'n out of the Kings Kitchen. Thereupon the Deroga sent his Officers to seize upon all the Goldsmiths in Ispahan, that knew nothing of the matter, as being utterly innocent of the Robbery. In the mean time he put them all in prison, and lockt them close up, intimating to them that he was resolv'd not to release them without a good sum of money. The poor Goldsmiths thus ill us'd, apply'd themselves to the Majer-Bashi, who sent his Officers to intreat the Deroga to consider that the Goldsmiths were innocent of the Robbery, and that being in some manner under the Jurisdiction of the Majer-Bashi, as being Artificers in Gold and Silver, he ought not to refuse to discharge them at his request. But the Deroga not seeing the money come, bid the Officers of Mahomet Beg tell their Master that he knew what belong'd to his employment, and further, said he, Let the Taylors Son meddle with his own business; tell him withall, added he, that if he pleases I will shew him his Sister's drawers. For a little before the Deroga had by his Spies surpriz'd her toying in a Garden with two young Lords, from whom he squeez'd a considerable sum of money. Mahomet Beg not powerful enough then to prosecute his revenge, let it sleep, but when he came to the height of preferment, he remember'd the Deroga, and bethought himself which way to ruin him. Nor was it long ere an opportunity offer'd it self. For there being a report that the Enemy appear'd about Candahar, a Frontier Town of Persia upon the Mogulls Territories, the Athemadoulet advis'd the King to raise a good number of Souldiers about Ispahan, as being lusty nimble fellows and us'd to labour, and to send them to Candahar, to be ready against all accidents. The King having an entire confidence in the Athemadoulet, order'd him to lose no time, but to commit the management of the Levies to such persons as had perfect knowledge of the plain Country. Then Mahomet Beg, studying his revenge, told the King that there was no person fitter for the employment than the Deroga, Mir Kassembeg, who according to his cruel and covetous humor, soon abus'd his Commission, the thing which he, who had procur'd it, chiefly desir'd. For whereas the King intended that none should be enroll'd but those that were willing, the Deroga forc'd every body, especially the Sons of the richest Farmers, who rather than part with their Sons gave the Deroga his own demands to spare them. When Mahomet Beg had got matter enough against the Deroga, he underhand stirr'd up the Country people to make their complaint, giving them to understand that it was contrary to the Kings intention to have them tormented in that manner; that his Commission was only to list those that would go of their own accord. The Villages easily encourag'd, sent their Deputies to Ispahan, whom he kindly receiv'd and presented the same hour to the King. His Majesty having heard them, and Mahomet Beg having seconded their complaint, the King order'd that they should should make an exact list of what the Commissioners of the Deroga had robb'd them of. Mahomet Beg lost no time, but by vertue of his Authority and the Kings command, sent his Officers into all the Villages to take the Oath of every Country-man to the end they should declare the truth, under the penalty of a Fine and Corporal punishment, of what had been exacted from them to the utmost Shayet. This Oath was to be put in Paper, sign'd by every one that made it, in these words, Let my head be confiscated to the King, and my goods to his Divan, if I do not punctually the Order of his Majesty. The accompt being made of all the money for which they had compounded with the Deroga, it was presented by Mahomet Beg, who aggravated the Tyranny of the Deroga, and represented to his Majesty that for thirty years he had thus devour'd the Territories of Ispahan. Thereupon by the command of the King, who was then at Ispahan, the Deroga was to be carry'd into the Meydan, and being ty'd up by the heels to receive a certain number of Bastinado's upon the feet for so many Fridays one after another; and moreover the nerves of his heels were to be cut, and his ankles to be boar'd thorough. The Kings command being thus seal'd, Mahomet Beg committed the execution thereof to his trusty Instrument Negef-Couli-Beg, who coming to Ispahan assembl'd the chief of the City, together with the Vizir or Governour, and the Deroga or Provost, who thought of nothing; being met, before they broak open the Kings Seal they made a publick Prayer for the prosperity of the King; which being ended, the Vizir open'd the Letter and read it with a loud voice. When the Vizir came to read the Sentence against the Deroga, he was seiz'd with astonishment, at what time Negef-Couli-Beg coming to the Deroga, and striking him upon the Neck with his fist, threw him down under his Horses feet, and caus'd him to be bound according to custom. Immediately he was hurri'd to the Piazza, where he receiv'd so many Bastinado's upon the soles of his feet that his nayls fell off. The next Friday they brought him to the same place, where they repeated the same Execution, and boar'd his ankles. The Deroga being very ancient, his pains put him into such a condition as mov'd Negef-Couli-Beg himself to compassion, who wrote presently to Court, that the continuance of so much torment, would infallibly be the death of the old man. Upon that the King order'd that there should no more be done to him; only that he should be shut up in the inner part of his House with his Wives, depriving him of his employment, but leaving him his Estate.

But Mahomet Beg, not having yet compleated the revenge he sought, was resolv'd after he had thus tormented him to deprive him, also of his Estate. To which purpose he advanc'd to the Office of Deroga, a Georgian Renegado who was call'd Padada-Beg, whom he taught all the tricks imaginable to pick the peoples-pockets. The design of Mahomet Beg in this, was to let the King understand, that if the new Deroga could heap up such a sum of money in five or six months, what a prodigious sum must Mir-Kassembeg have heap'd up in so many years. In short, the new Deroga instructed and encourag'd by Mahomet Beg, levy'd unjustly such a vast number of fines, committed so many extortions and rapines upon the people, that at the end of six months the people began to tumult at the Palace gate. The Divan-Bequi, who is the first Minister of Justice, took the peoples part; whereupon Mahomet Beg perceiving he had been too hasty in his design to be reveng'd upon the Divan Bequi, who had cross'd his designs, one morning caus'd several files of Musqueteers to be drawn up at the Kings Haram. The King surpriz'd at the sight, Mahomet Beg told him that his Majesty was not safe so long as the Divan Bequi stirr'd up the people to Rebellion: which so incens'd the King, that he caus'd the Groom Porter to go immediately and pull out the Divan Bequi's eyes, which was immediately done; nor did the old man say any more, but with his face all besmear'd with his own goar, desir'd the servant upon whose arms he lean'd, to turn him toward Mecca that he might pray for the prosperity of the King. All his goods were confiscated and brought into the Treasury; but Mer Kassembeg still enjoy'd his, though he was forc'd to spend the remainder of his days in his own house.

Thus Mahomet Beg preserv'd himself still in the Kings favour, and had remov'd all those persons from the Court that had no kindness for him, and was indifferently safe, till Mir-Tchekar-Bashi another favourite, whom the King highly lov'd, began to make head against him. These two haughty spirits would not give an inch one to another: and both equally strove to possess the Kings favour, to have the disposal of Affairs. Mir-Tebeke-Bashi, who had brought Mahomet Beg into Favour, being the elder pretended a respect due to his years, and Mahomet Beg pretended more due from him by reason of his place. During this contest ran a report of a rebellion upon Georgia-side. Whereupon the Athemadoulet perswaded the King to send Mir-Tebeke-Bashi, lately made Koular Agasi or General of the Slaves toward Georgia, that so he might remove his Rival from Court. The Favourite sets forward with a flying Camp, but not finding any Enemy that oppos'd him, wrote back to the King that he saw no appearance of an Enemy, and that therefore it was a needless thing to tire the Souldiers in a Country where there was no face of War, and begg'd his Majesties leave to return. The Athemadoulet on the other side labour'd to hinder his return by preaching to the King the advantages of the stay of those forces in those parts.

In this interim the Usbek Tartars had made inroads upon the Frontiers of Corassan, and had slain several of Manoutcheki people, who was governor of the Province. Mahomet Beg who was his Kinsman, gave the King to understand that the Kan of Corassan had behav'd himself valiantly, but conceal'd the defeat of the Kan. On the other side the Koular Agasi sent Letter upon Letter to the King, but perceiving that none of them came to the Kings hands, he sent to Ispahan one of his discreetest and most trusty servants, who coming to Court intermix'd himself among the rest of the Lackeys. The Athemadoulet spying an unknown face, and being always mistrustful, demanded who he was? To whom the Messenger answer'd that he was a poor Souldier upon the frontiers of the Kingdom, who because he could not get his pay there was come to Court to see if he could there get any recompence for his service: upon which reply the Athemadoulet took no farther notice of him. Presently after, the young man meeting the Meter told him he had Letters of importance to deliver into the Kings own hand, of which the Meter giving notice to the King, the messenger was immediately call'd in. The King having read the Letters which discover'd to him what the Athemadoulet had conceal'd from him touching the no necessity of keeping forces upon the Frontiers of Georgia, and the loss which the Kan of Corassan had receiv'd, transported with choler against his prime Minister, sent for him, and after he had most bloodily revil'd and reproach'd him, he was within a little of killing him with his own hands. But the Nazar and some other Lords there present took the boldness to represent to the King the long services which Mahomet Beg had done the Kingdom, and that since his Majesty had rais'd him from the dust to the highest honours of the Kingdom, it would not be for his honour to destroy at one blow a person that he had lov'd, and might still be useful to him. This discourse somewhat appeas'd the King, so that he only gave him in custody to the Nazar. Three days after the King exil'd him to Kom, with all his Family, not permitting him to shave himself, go to the Bath, or to come abroad. This Exilement lasted for several years. But my Letters from Persia in the year 1674. inform'd me that Sha-Solyman, the present King, has restor'd him to his Premier Dignity, and that he still governs as Athemadoulet, the King finding no man more capable than himself.

C H A P. VII.

Of the Rebellion of the Prince of Jasque, a Vassal to the King of Persia, in the reigns of Sha-Sefi I. and Sha-Abbas II.

Between Cape Jasque, and Cape Guadel which are the two most Southern points of Persia, there lies a mountainous and marshie Country, which extends it self from the Ocean toward the Province of Kerman, and in several places is inaccessible. It is possess'd by three petty Princes, the one a Mahumetan, the other two toward the East both Idolaters. The first is the most potent of the three, and nearest to the Province of Ormuz. He also assumes the title of Prince of Jasque, as his Ancestors did before him. Now after Sha-Abbas the first had conquer'd Ormuz, he went about to have made himself master of all the coast that extends it self beyond Cape Jasque; but meeting with resistance, he only obtain'd that the Prince of the Country should acknowledge the King of Persia for his Lord, and that as his Vassal he should pay him an annual tribute. And indeed during the reign of Sha-Abbas, who knew how to make himself fear'd, the Prince of Jasque pay'd his tribute very orderly. But Sha-Sefi succeeding his Grandfather very young, this tributary Prince shook off his yolk, and refus'd to pay. Which not being regarded in the reign of Sha-Sefi, the Prince of Jasque thought to do the same in the reign of Sha-Abbas the second. But at length after he had refus'd to pay for some years, the Kan of Ormuz pretending the Country to be under his Jurisdiction, and that the Kings honour was concern'd in the Princes refusal, incited Sha-Abbas to send forces against him to reduce him to obedience. The King granted the Commission to him that had undertaken the business: who presently gathering together an Army of 20000 men, the most part Horse, thought to have surpriz'd his Enemy. To which purpose that he might take the nearest way, he march'd directly toward Cape Jasque. But as it was the shortest cut, it was the most dangerous; insomuch that the Kan, who hunted all the way he march'd, according to the custom of Persia, had the misfortune to fall into a bog, where he was stid'd, together with 20 or 30 horsemen more. The death of the Kan being divulg'd, the Army retreated back again: but as soon as the King receiv'd the news, he sent the Brother of the deceas'd Kan to succeed him. In the mean while the Rebel Prince believing within himself, that he was not to be thus at quiet, and expecting to be attack'd by the new Kan, stood upon his guard. And indeed the new Kan march'd with all the speed he could, and enter'd the territories of the rebellious Prince, but being beat'n was forc'd to make more haste back again to Ormuz, with the loss of an abundance of men.

The Prince of Jasque puffed up with this success, did not believe that the Persians would be so hasty to come again: and thereupon he resolv'd upon a Voyage for Mecca to give the Prophet thanks for his Victory. To which end he embarqu'd at the nearest place he could to Cape Jasque, thence to make sail toward Arabia. But the Governor of Kan understanding his design by his spies, way-laid him by Sea, took him and brought him to Ormuz. At that time the heats being excessive, the Governour was retir'd, according to custome, to the Mountains some ten or twelve Leagues from the City, whither the Prince was carry'd and brought to the Kans tent. But while the Kan was expecting the return of the Messenger which he had sent to the King for orders what to do with the Prisoner, the Princes wife hearing of her husbands misfortune, and being a woman of a manlike courage, taking along with her about five or six hundred horse, with little noise and by long marches she at length fell unawares upon the Kan about midnight, kill'd him with her own hand, cut in pieces the greatest part of his men, whom she found asleep, carry'd away ten or twelve of his wives, and set her husband at liberty in spite of the Persians, who had not time to rally themselves.

The news of this defeat coming to Court, the King being highly incens'd, sent away the third Brother to be governour of Ormuz, with special command to the Governours of Schiras, Lar and Kerman forthwith to raise 3000 horse to revenge the affront and reduce the Rebel. The Kan of Orymus march'd at the head of that Army, and gave Battel, but the Prince being succour'd by the other two Idolatrous Princes his neighbours, the Persians were again beaten. Only the Prince of Jasque lost his Lieutenant General, a valiant Captain, and a very good Soldier.

Gover-

The King understanding that the Lieutenant General was the Kan's Prisoner, gave him leave to do with him what he would, in revenge of his Brothers death: who thereupon devis'd the most cruel torments that ever were heard of. For he first caus'd the body of the Lieutenant General to be larded with lighted Candles, and then setting him upon a Camel order'd him to be led softly about the streets every day in the very heat of noon. A torment almost insufferable, which the heroic Indian nevertheless endur'd with an invincible courage. After the Kan had tormented him in this manner three days together, the chief of the Holland Company and other strange Merchants abhorring so much cruelty, begg'd of the Kan to surcease his rigour, who readily granted them their request.

C H A P. VIII.

Observations upon the reign of Sha-Soliman the present King.

A Li-Couli-Kan had bin three or four times exil'd from the Court, for speaking with too much liberty. For he was bold and could not keep his tongue between his teeth. For which reason he was call'd the Kings Lyon, who was wont to chain him up when he had no occasion for him, and to let him loose when he had any business for him to do. The last time he was exil'd, he was kept five or six years in a Fortrefs out of which he had never stirr'd: But one day, having a smooth tongue, he over-perswaded the Commander to give him leave to go a hunting with him. When he return'd, with the help of some of his servants, he fell upon the Commander, and gave him so many Bastinadoes upon the feet, that he had like to have kill'd him: telling him withall, that it was to teach him his duty, not to let a man go that the King had committed to his charge. Sha-Sepbi, though very young, hearing of this, and desirous to see Ali-Couli-Kan, notwithstanding all the endeavours of the Grandees to hinder his return, commanded him to be set at liberty, and that he should have a better allowance to live upon. Two or three days after, the King sitting in Council, the whole Assembly was amaz'd to see Ali-Couli-Kan enter, who approaching his Majesty with a profound reverence, told him, that the Lyon being now let loose was humbly come to kiss his hands. Thereupon the King fell a laughing, and casting a favourable glance upon him told him he had done well. Nor was it long ere the King finding him no less pleasant in conversation, then a valiant and expert Captain, made him Generalissimo of his Armies, as he had bin in the reign of Sha-Abbas.

When the Court saw Ali-Couli-Kan so well receiv'd, every one then labour'd to testify their joy for his return. They sent him Horses, Mules, Camels, rich Carpets, and every thing fit to furnish a Lords house. But all this while he wanted money, which because he could not meet with among the Persians, he was forc'd to have recourse to the Armenians, of whom he desir'd to borrow five or six hundred Tomans. As for the Kalenter he would have had the sum lent, but the rest would not. Thereupon the King taking a walk to Zulpha, Ali-Couli-Kan put it into his head to go and see the great Cathedral belonging to the Armenians, where several Bishops with several Monks reside. The King entring into the Church, where the Bishop stood ready at the head of the Clergy to receive him, and seeing all things new and strange, as coming but lately out of the womens Haram, ask'd his favourite what sort of people those were clad in such an extraordinary manner. Ali-Couli-Kan told him they were Devils, Devils! said the King, What! added he, dost bring me into a house of Devils? The King thus incens'd against the Armenians, resolv'd to force 'em to turn Mahumetans. But Ali-Couli-Kan, being a Georgian, repenting that he had rais'd the Kings indignation to so high a pitch, and not believing it would be any advantage to him for the Armenians to turn Mahumetans, contented himself only with frightening them, which was enough to bring the Armenians upon their knees, and to make them come and beg the Intercession of his authority. Which favour, as he order'd it, cost the Armenians ten thousand Tomans to the King, and four or five thousand Tomans to his Favourite.

The 23. of September 1677: the King made a Cavalcade, then which there could be nothing imagin'd more magnificent. All the richest Furniture was brought out of the Exchequer into the Meydan. The golded buckets to water the Horses. The golden Fat, out of which they take the water, together with buckles, harness and nails of gold, to which the Horses are ty'd. After the King had play'd at Mall, as I have already describ'd, and had also shot at the Goblè upon the top of the Mast in the middle of the Meydan, he went and sate in the Divan, which is over the Gate call'd Ali Capi, where he had the pastime to see Lyons, Bulls, Bears, Tygers and Rams fight. But that which was most admirable, was to see a man stand upright upon the Saddle while the horse ran full speed, which he did three times the whole length of the Meydan. The first time, as true, he fell but the two last times he stood firm.

One day, the same Ali-Couli-Kan presented two handsome Youths to the King, which had both delicate voices. The King hearing them sing, was very much troubl'd that he could not make use of them in his Haram, which Ali-Couli-Kan observing, sent for a French Chirurgéon, and promis'd him a great reward if he could cut the youths and save their lives. The Chirurgéon for lucre of a large recompence, cut them both and cur'd 'em very well. Which done, Ali-Couli-Kan presented the two youths to the King, who was surpris'd to see them, but was well pleas'd that he had got two such new attendants in his Haram. But see the reward of such a wicked action. Ali-Couli-Kan dy'd soon after. The Chirurgéon never was pay'd, and being advis'd to present a Petition to the King by the Meter, the Meter ask'd him whether he would turn Mahometan: which when the Chirurgéon deny'd to do, the Meter bid him be gone like a Rascal, telling him withall that he did not think the Religion of the Christians had permitted such acts of villany. The two youths were born at Cashan, and had both Fathers and Mothers, and were promis'd in Marriage. When their Parents heard of it, they came to Ispahan, to weep over their Children. Which the King observing, to appease their sorrow, gave them a Pension during life.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Government of Persia.

THE Government of Persia is purely Despotick or Tyrannical. For the King has the sole power of life and death over all his Subjects, independent from his Council, and without any Trials or Law-proceedings. He can put to what death he pleases the chief Lords of the Kingdom, no man daring to dispute the reason, nor is there any Sovereign in the world more absolute. then the King of Persia.

The King deceasing and leaving Male Issue behind him, the Eldest ascends the Throne, while his Brothers are kept in the Haram, and their eyes are put out: and if there be the least suspicion of any contrivance against the King, they are forthwith put to death without any farther examination. And not only they, but the Children also of the Kings Brothers and Sisters. I remember when I first travell'd into Persia, they were not so rigorous, but were contented to move a red hot iron to and fro before their eyes. But Sha-Sefi perceiving his command had been negligently executed, and that the poor unhappy Princes had some sight left them he order'd their eyes to be digg'd out of their heads. Sha-Seft's cruelty went yet farther, for he spar'd not his Eldest Son Sha-Abbas, the lawful Heir to his Throne, ordering one of his Eunuchs to move an Iron before his eyes, no man being able to tell the reason. But the Eunuch compassionating the young Prince, did indeed move an Iron, but not a red hot Iron before his Eyes, and teaching him to counterfeit himself blind, preserv'd his sight till his Father lay upon his death-bed : at which time his Father was very penitent for having put out the eyes of his Eldest Son, to whom the Throne of right belong'd. The Eunuch seeing the King so sadly afflicted and ready to give up the ghost, assur'd him that he would restore the Prince to his sight, and to comfort him at his death, brought the Prince with perfect eyes to the bed side. The sight of which prolong'd the Kings life till next day ; and gave him time to command all the Grantees of the Court to obey Sha-Abbas his Eldest Son, as his lawful Successor and their King.

But to return to these blind Princes ; There were several at Ispahan when I was there : and I knew one particularly, who is still alive, and is a person of excellent natural parts. As blind as he is, he is a great lover of Curiosities, and has built him a House in Ispahan, which is worthy a mans sight. He is overjoy'd when any person brings him any rarities out of Europe, feeling them in his hands, and causing his Eunuchs, which are very apprehensive, to tell him the meaning of every thing. He is a great admirer of Clock-work and Watches, and can tell by his finger when a Watch is right in the Case. To know what a Clock it is, he has little points set up in the Dial-plate, and a half hand, to the end he may not be deceiv'd which part of the hand points to the hour. By means of certain figures which he makes of soft wax, and sets in order upon a Table, he will cast up an account very exactly. Several other good qualities I admir'd in him ; and it griev'd me to see a man reduc'd to that miserable Condition, only because he was of the blood Royal of Persia.

Though the Employments of the Kingdom generally fall from Father to Son, yet the King if he pleases may bequeath the Governments of Provinces or any other dignities to any of his Goulams which are his Slaves, if he find them capable, and thinks they may be fit for his service. The Father to leave the Employment to his Family, labours by degrees to introduce his Son, and to obtain the Survivorship for him. But if the Father dye, and leaves the Survivorship to an Infant, there is generally a person of Age and Experience sent along with him. Some there are also that obtain employments by presenting the Favourites at Court.

The State of Persia is distinguish'd like most of the European States, into three Bodies. The first is that of the Sword, which answers to the Nobility, and comprehends the Kings household, the Kans, and all the Souldiery. The second is that of the Quill, comprehending all those that belong to the Law and the Courts of Justices. The third is compos'd of Merchants, Handicrafts-men and Labourers.

C H A P. X.

Of the first of the three Orders or States of Persia, which comprehends the Kings Household, the Kans or Governours of Provinces, and the Souldiery.

THE Premier Minister of the Kingdom is call'd Athemadoulet, or the support of Riches. His office is the same with the Grand Vizir's in Turkie, and may be compar'd to the ancient Mayors of the Palace in France. In regard all the affairs of the Kingdom pass through his hands, he ought to be rather a Gownman than a Souldier: and herein he only differs from the Grand Vizier, who is always to be at the head of the Army, and for every slight fault or distaste is subject to be strangl'd by the Grand Signior. Whereas in Persia where the Government is milder, the Prime Ministers generally dye in their beds, or if they are Depos'd, they are only exil'd to some frontier City, where they live as private men.

When the King is young, the Prime Minister has a hard game to play, for then the Favourite Eunuchs and the Sultaneses disannul and cancel in the night what orders he makes in the day time.

The Nazar or Seer has the charge of all the Kings goods, of his breeds of horses, of his moveables, of his Cloaths and Plate: much like the grand Master of the Kings House in France.

The Mebter, who is always a white Eunuch, is the first Gentleman of the Kings Chamber, and follows the King with a kind of bag hanging by his side full of handkerchiefs. And as he is always at the Kings elbow, if he have the Kings ear, it is easie for him to befriend or do unkindnesses, as his inclination leads him. During the minority of the King, some of these Mebters have been known to govern the Kingdom.

The Mir-Akhor-Bashi, or Grand Esquire, has the Charge of the Kings Stables, which as well as the Gate of Ali-Capri, are a place of Refuge, and whoever saves himself therein, let it be for Murther or Debt is safe. All the Horses in the Kings Stable are mark'd with a hot iron upon the left hip, and those that belong to private persons upon the right. Those that the King gives to them that serve in his Armies, have the Kings mark, and are not to be sold, but they may be chaffer'd away. If any of those Horses happens to dye in a Horse-mans hands, he must flea off the Kings mark, and carry it to the under Officers of the General of the Cavalry, to have a nother, otherwise he would be forc'd to buy another at his own expences. Those people by laying the skin in the water, know, though by what art I cannot tell, whither the Horse dy'd of age or sickness, or whither he were maliciously kill'd. For in times of Peace there are som Horse-men that will kill their Horses, to save the Charges of keeping any more than themselves: then at the next Muster they bring the skin of their Horse, with the mark on, to the Officers, and get another, unless they be found out. Nor are their Horses only mark'd, but their Scimitars, Musquets, Bows and Quivers, all which they must shew to the Commissioners every Muster.

Sba-Abbas, the second being at Casbin in the year 1654, took a general view of his Cavalry, which lasted for ten or twelve days. For the King sitting in the Portal of one of his Gardens, with his Officers standing about him, every day caus'd so many troopers to ride by him: which were all stout active men and well mounted. Every Souldier gallop'd singly by him; and coming just under the King, he shot an Arrow against a Butt of Turf that was thrown up upon his left hand, and when the Muster was over, the King advanc'd the Pay of every Horseman, who according to the sentence of the Judges had shot nearest the mark.

I was then at Casbin, and I remember one Souldier, who quite contrary to what the other Horse-men did, walk'd his Horse along by the King, and never shot, but only lay'd his hand upon his brest, and then upon his forehead, which is the Ceremony of Salutation us'd by the King. He was a very homely fellow, with a flat tawny countenance: so that his behaviour and his presence offending the King, in a chafe he commanded that black rascal to be cashier'd out of his service. Immediately they took away his Horse and his Arms, and were going about to have drubb'd him, but that the General of the Cavalry made them a sign to let him alone. Immediately the General gave the King to understand that he was one of the best Souldiers in the Army: as he had signally made it appear at the Sieges of Erivan and Candahar. Upon that the King caus'd his Horse and Arms to be restor'd him again, and commanded him to ride by him as the rest of the Souldiers had done. When he came against the Butt, instead of obeying the Kings command, he turn'd his Horse to the right and left, without saying a word. The General fearing he would offend the King again, bid him shoot. What shall I shoot at? Sir said he. Against the place where all the rest have shot, answer'd the General. Then the Souldier shaking his head and smiling, 'Tis not my way, said he, to spend my Arrows against a wall; for I know how to make use of 'em better against the body or head of the Enemies of my King. I would then shoot thrice before another could shoot once. At the same time he draws out two Arrows out of his Quiver, one of which he held in his mouth, and put the other to his bow: and then setting spurs to his Horse he out-rid the Butt for the nonce, to shoot backward, which he did, and hit the very middle of the white, then turning his horses head and passing the Butt as before, he shot the second Arrow into the same hole, whence they had pull'd the first Arrow. Then the General approaching near the King, told him that by what he had heard and seen, he might well believe that Horseman to be as brave a Souldier as any in the Army: which his Majesty confess'd, and from three Tomans advanc'd his pay to 15 Tomans.

The Mir-Shikar-Bashi, or the Grand Master of the Hunt, who is also employ'd as Grand Falconer. He has under him a thousand Officers, and a great number of Birds of prey, and manag'd Hawks.

The Seguan-Bashi receives the orders of the Grand Master of the Hunt. He has charge of the Doggs, Lyons, Leopards, and other Beasts for Chace.

The Kindar-Bashi, who has charge of the Kings Saddles.

The Zinkan-Courlshifi is the chief of the Querries, that hold the Kings stirrup, when he gets a Horseback.

The Kelege-Courlshifi carries the Kings sword.

The Oriaje-Courlshifi carries his Bow and Arrows.

The Vakanvizee is as it were the chief Secretary of State: an employment never confer'd but upon a Favourite. He also reads all Petitions and Papers that are represented to the King.

The Kasnadar-Bashi is he that keeps all the Money which is in the Kings Coffers, whom we call the High Treasurer.

The Ishik-Agasi-Bashi is the Grand Master of the Household, who has several Officers under him.

The Mehmender-Bashi is the Master of the Ceremonies.

The Hakim-Bashi is the Kings chief Physitian, by whose allowance all the Physitians of the Kingdom are licens'd.

The Munedgin-Bashi is the chief of the Astrologers.

The Divan-Bequi is the chief Justiciar, as well in Civil as in Criminal causes, and he keeps his Court either in Ali Capi, or in the Kings House, where his Majesty sometimes presides himself when he pleases. Before him as being and Officer of great Authority, all the Criminals in the Kingdom make their appeal, and he makes out process against the Kans and other Grandees of Persia.

The Deroga is much like the Lieutenant Criminal in France, from whom it is lawful to appeal before the Divan-Bequi. He has an eye upon Robberies, Batteries and Murthers, and he has power to suppress Houses of Debauchery. If he catch any debauch'd persons, he has power to give them the Bastinado, or to fine them: and most commonly he spares corporal chastisement to punish their purses.

The Sofragi-Bashi is he that spreads the Soffa before the King.

The Chirakgi-Bashi is he that has charge of the Wine: chiefly the Schiras wine, which is particularly kept for the King, who seldom drinks any other. Nor can any any particular person in Schiras make Wine till the Court be first serv'd, and that with the leave of the Chirategi-Bashi; there being none but the Franks and Jews that make it.

The Mesheal-Bashi is the chief of the Torch-bearers; who furnishes the Court with Candles, which are all of Wax. To this Mesheal-Bashi belong all the fines of those that play at Cards or Dice, the Law of Mahomet forbidding all Games of hazard. This Officer has several inferior Officers under him, who go from place to place to spy where they can find any persons at play: and he has power to break open any house, unless the Master be of great Quality.

The Kabuergi-Bashi is he that has care of the Kabue, the Rose-water, and other distillations which the Persians drink; as Bilmishe, made of the buds of brown Sallows.

The Kara-Setashe is the King's Chirurgion, or Barber, who lets him Blood, and shaves his Head; and cannot part with his place to another.

The Capigi-Bashi is the great Porter, who has under him several other Officers.

The Melkultugagear is he that has charge of the Stuffs for the King's Household, and puts them out to the Taylors. He takes an account of the shreds and old habits, which serve to make Cloathes for the Souldiers, deducting for them out of their pay.

The Gelander-Bashi is the chief of the Foot-men.

The Mir-abe, or the Prince of the Seals, is the Superintendent of the Seals; and for profit, is one of the best employments in the Kingdom. He has the sale of the Canal-water to the Country-men; for which he makes the Farmers pay a severe rate.

The Karkrone is the House for the Royal Manufactures, where the Gold and Silver-Carpets are made, as also those of Silks and Worsted, together with Tissues, Velvet, and Taffeta's. There are other Workmen that make Coats of Mail, Bows, Arrows, Scimitars, and other Arms. In other Apartments are Limners that paint in Water-colours; Lapidaries, and Goldsmiths, that only make Silver-Rings. For in regard the Persians cannot say their Prayers when they have any Gold about 'em, they never wear Jewel or Ring of Gold, because it would be troublesome to pull 'em off, and lay 'em up so many times a-day. And therefore the King of Persia causes all his Jewels to be set in Silver, as we set all our Stones in Gold. As for working Goldsmiths, they have none in Persia; all their Gold and Silver-Plate being wrought by the Copper-smiths in round figure, for they have not the art to frame an Oval.

The Nakkashe-Bashi is the Serjeant-Painter, who only works in miniature; they cover their Pictures with a Varnish made of Mastich steep'd in a certain Oil that distils from a Rock that points upon the Caspian-Sea not far from Shamatri. It distils out of the Rock at first like water; but afterwards it thickens till it become as thick as Sallet-Oil, preserving still its whiteness. There are also three other Rocks not far from the former, from whence this Oyl distils; but it is thicker, and of darker colour.

The Negeach-Bashi is the chief of the Joyners.

The Embardar-Bashi has the charge of the King's Granaries, and other Provisions, having several Officers under him.

The Odonidar-Bashi is the Master of the Wood-yard.

The most part of these Officers have their diet in the King's House, or else an allowance of Diet from thence.

The Tushemal-Bashi is the Clerk of the Kitchen. He orders what shall be serv'd up to the King, and when the Table is clear'd, he sticks his Knife in the best dish, and orders it to be carri'd home to his own House.

Now for the Officers of War, the principal are; First, the Sepeh-Salar, Generalissimo of the King of Persia's Armies, who is never constituted but in time of War; which being ended, his employment ceases. His place in Council is immediately next to the Athemadoulet.

Now in regard the Militia is divided into three sorts, there are also three Generals. The three Bodies of the Militia are the Corschis, the Goulams, and the Tusenlegis.

The

The Corfchis are descended from a foreign race, which have still a great repute for their Valour. These people live in Tents, like the Turcomans; and they send their Youth betimes to the King. They furnish their Youth also with all necessaries, and maintain them till they come to be taken notice of by the King. They are all Horse-men, well paid, and well look'd to, and are many times advanc'd to the Supreme Dignities of the Kingdom. They are generally call'd Kesel-Bashi, or Red-heads, because that formerly they wore red Bonnets. It is said that the King has about 22000 of these Corfchis in pay, all good Souldiers, that do wonders in Battel. Ska-Abbas the first did what he could to abolish this Militia, and to set up the Goulams in their stead. His hatred against them was only because he thought them too powerful; for he was wont to say to his Favourites, that nothing but the Puissance of the Corfchis, could oppose the Royal Power. Thereupon he took away some of their Priviledges, and gave them to the Doulams; but he could not bring about his design any farther.

The General of the Corfchis is call'd Corfchi-Bashi, and ought to be one of their Body; nor can the King impose another upon them. The Mim-Bashi commands a thousand Men, the Tuz-Bashi commands a hundred, and the Om-Bashi commands ten. The Corfchi-Bashi has 150 Tomans a year; the Mim-Bashi sixty-two; the Tuz-Bashi thirty, and the Om-Bashi fifteen. The pay of every Horse-man is from nine to fifteen Tomans a year. Besides, every year the King makes a general Muster, and then he gives to the Corfchis a third part more than their usual pay; however, to some more, to others less, either according to favour or merit. When the King has resolv'd to put a great Man to death, he commits the execution of his command to a Corfchi.

The Gouler-Agasi is General of the Goulams, or Slaves. For indeed they are either Slaves, or the Sons of Slaves of all sorts of Nations, who do the King very good Service. They are for the most part runnegade Georgians; and there are about 18000 of these Goulams, being all Horse-men whose pay is from five to eight Tomans a year. The Corfchis are very good Husbands; but the Goulams, as soon as they have receiv'd their pay, fall a drinking and swaggering; whereas the other, if he has a Piaster to spare, will buy a Sheep with it: For in regard they live in Tents, their Riches consists in Flocks. The greatest part of the Court of Persia is made up of these two Bodies. The Goulams have this peculiar to themselves, that they are very rarely known to revolt. For being all Slaves, and of different Nations, there are no ties of Affection or Kindred between them: And if the King has an occasion to punish any of them, the chief of their Body is to execute his orders. The Goulams carry no other Arms besides a Bow and Arrows, with a Skain. Though some wear Coats of Mail, and Head-pieces: others Vambraces and Battel-Axes. These Horse-men never entrench in the Field like ours in Europe, nor have they any Field-Marshals to assign them quarters. For after the chief have taken up the best places, the rest set up their Tents as near as they can to the Pavillion of the General.

The Tufenkgiler-Agasi is the General of the Tufenkgis, who compose the third Body of the Militia. This part of the Souldiery was but lately instituted, being compos'd of men taken from the Plough, as being most fit for labour. They are Foot-men with only a Scimiter and a Musket. But when they march, they have a Horse or a Mule between three or four, to carry their Baggage and Provisions. Their pay is not above four or five Tomans a year. And for their Officers, their pay is more or less according to their Quality and Command. They are in no great reputation, being laugh'd at by the old Souldiers, as being a company of poor Countrey-men, that dare not look an enemy in the face. Not but that the Infantry of Persia is able to do good service; though, as numerous as they are, the King never makes use of them, but in case of necessity. When he marches in person, he sends for eight or ten thousand, which he sends for out of what Province best pleases him, and they prove very useful to the Army, as Sutlers. This Infantry is compos'd of the Countrey-men that live in Tents, abiding in the Mountains all the hot Summer, and betaking themselves in the Winter to the hot Countreys. Every Tribe or Family knows how many men it ought to set out. And there is not a Foot-man that has not his new-Suit in his Chest, and his Musket and Scimiter in very good order. They are well train'd, and well disciplin'd; for every three months the Governor of the Province takes a view of all the Souldiers in his Province, and causes them to be exercis'd in his own presence. They are order'd to shoot at a mark, and they that hit it, are sure to have some reward from the Governor. When the King sends for any part of his Infantry, they presently know who is to lead 'em; and they are lusty, and well clad, never putting on their best Cloathes but when they muster, or march into the Field. They pay to the King little or nothing: for of all their Cattel great and small, they pay but one in the hundred to him, and one Abassi, or 18 Sans of our Money.

The Eshek-Agasi, or chief of the Keshekshi's, who are the King's Guards, and carry a Musket with a very wide bore. They were but lately instituted by the Athemat-doulet, when he intended to destroy the Divan-begni. This Officer has about 2000 men under him, of which he disposes every night a certain number, round about the Palace. When the King sits in Council, he stands there with a Battoon in his hand, and throws himself to the ground when the King beckons to him to come and receive any command from his mouth. The Topigi-Bashi is the Master of the Ordnance, and chief of the Sea-affairs, but he has little to do in either employment. For, as for the Cannon, there are only some two or three pittiful Guns in some of the Frontier-towns: And for Ships, there are none in Persia but what come from Europe or the Indies to Ormuz or Balsara. The Persians themselves have no other Ships than some few large Barks in the Persian-Gulph, and in some parts of the Caspian-Sea, where they keep a Fleet against the Usbeck Tartars, the Kalmoukes, and other people.

As for the Kans or Governors of Provinces, they are generally chosen out of the body of Corfschi's and Goulams; who are handsome persons, and generally much more Valiant than the natural Persians. For the natural complexion of the Persians is not good, as may be seen by the Gaures, the original Inhabitants of the Countrey, who are for the most part tann'd, and ill-shap'd. So that there is hardly a Persian, from the King to the meanest of his Subjects, who is not a Georgian, or sprung from the loins of Georgians. For they fetch a great number of Slaves out of Georgia; by the frequent Marriages of which women, the Georgian Valour and Beauty are become Natives of Persia.

The Kans or Governors of Provinces are as so many petty Kings, fear'd and respected by all the people. And when they are settl'd, they are never depos'd, but upon repeated complaints of their excessive Tyranny. There are some of these Governments that yield the Kan seven or eight thousand Tomans. But they are bound to present the King every year at Nourans, or New-year-tide.

Under the Kans there are also Governors of lesser quality, who are also immediately prefer'd by the King, and cannot be depos'd by any person but himself. If they abuse their Authority, the complaints brought against him are first carri'd to the Kan, which, if they concern the Government of the Kingdom, the Kan is bound to inform the King thereof. But if the complaints are not considerable, then the Kan may do Justice himself, and make the Sultans know their duty.

There is yet a third sort of Governors, call'd Asephs, who are the King's Lieutenants in places where he had Kans in former times; or where he ought to have them still, but only to save charges. For in the Provinces where Kans Govern, they and their Officers, almost equalling in name and number the Officers of the King's Household, devour all the profits of the Province, but what the Kan is oblig'd annually to pay.

By what I have wrote as well concerning the King's Household, the Governors of his Provinces, and the Officers of his Army, it may be easily concluded that the King of Persia's Court is the most magnificent and glorious of all the Courts of Asia; and besides, that it is the most Polite and Civil of all the Orient.

C. H. A. P. XL.

Of the second Order, containing all those that belong to the Ecclesiastical Law, and their Courts of Justice; and, in general, of all the Gown-men; such as are chiefly the Officers of the Chamber of Accounts.

THE second of the three Estates of Persia comprehends the Gown-men, such as are the Doctors of the Law, the Officers of Justice, and those of the Chamber of Accounts.

As the Athemat-doulet is the Prime Minister in Temporals, the Sedre is the Prime Minister in Spirituals, and the High-Priest of the Law. However, he does not pretend to take place before the Athemat-doulet either in Council, or in the publick Ceremonies. There is this difference between the Sedre and the Mufti in Turkey, that in Persia, Ecclesiastical Dignities are no bar from Civil Employments, so that the Sedre is many times made Athemat-doulet.

The Dignity of Sedre is not limited to one single person, but may be divided between two, in regard there are two sorts of Legacies, the one from the King's of Persia, the other from particular persons. Therefore for the more careful Superintendency over these two sorts of Legacies, there are sometimes two Sedres appointed. The one is call'd Sedre-Kras, particular or peculiar Sedre who manages all the Revenues of the Royal Foundations, and distributes them to the Mullaks and Students according to their merit. The other is call'd Sedre-el-man-Koufat, who has the management of private Foundations. In the year 1667 the King created two Sedres, and marr'd them to two of his Sisters.

The Sedre has two men under him, whose Authority is almost equal to theirs. The one is call'd Sheik-el-selom, and the other Chad, and these are they that decide all controversies in Religion, judge of Divorces, make Contracts and publick Acts. These two Dignities are in the King's nomination: and in all the principal Cities of the Kingdom there are two of these Ecclesiastical Judges for all matters that concern the Law.

To every Mosquee there belongs a Pichnamaz, who is always first there before Prayers begin; and he teaches the people to Pray by learning of him, having their eyes always fix'd upon him to that end. This Pichnamaz is the same with him whom the Turks call Imam. The Moullab's are the Doctors of the Law, as are the Hodgas in Turkey, and they are well paid out of the Legacies giv'n to the Mosquees, for reading every Friday, and interpreting the Alcoran to the people. He that reads, sits in one Chair, and he that interprets, in another, somewhat lower upon the left-hand of the Reader. They are also bound to teach the Sciences to all those that require it: And as a mark of Sanctity, they wear a great white Turbant, with a single Chamlet-habit of the same colour. Their gate is grave, and their discourse very serious; yet all this is but pure hypocrisy. When they light into any considerable company of people, they presently rise, and exhort 'em to go to Prayers. At the same time they wash their heads, their hands, and their feet, and spread a felt upon the ground, or if they are poor, a single mat. Upon this, at one end, the Moulla kneels; at the other lies a flat Stone about the bigness of the palm of a man's hand, which was brought from Mecca. Which Stones the Moullab's always carry about 'em; for being commanded while they are at their devotions often to kiss the ground, they rather choose to kiss a Stone brought from so holy a place, than the prophane Earth. They have a kind of a Mariners compass, which directs them punctually where Mecca stands, to the end they may know which way to turn when they say their Prayers. The Prayer which the Moulla's make, seems to be accompani'd with a great deal of zeal, and they take great notice all the while whether the company be attentive or no. Some Persians are so superstitious, that a Vizir of Schiras suffer'd his leg to rot off, because he would not let a Christian Chirurgeon touch him, for fear of being defil'd.

There

There belongs also to every Mosquee a Monteveli, who looks after the repairs of the Building, and the Provision of what belongs to the Mosquee; together with a Mouazen, who cries morning and evening from the top of a Tower, That there is but one God, and that Mahomet is his Prophet.

Colledges, the Persians call Medrese; where there are a great number of Scholars bred up at little charge, out of the Legacies left to the Foundation. They allow them a Chamber without any Furniture, they being to provide a Coverlet and a Mattress for themselves. They have no certain Masters, but sometimes they go for their instructions to one, sometimes to another, seldom to the Principal of the Colledg, who is call'd Monderer, and is generally the greatest Block-head of them all. But there are several other persons in every good City that are forward to teach the Sciences to purchase honour to themselves. For which reason they are very liberal, to get a great company of Followers together, who are as so many Trumpets to publish the wisdom of their Akroom or Doctor. But when their Liberality ceases, the Trumpets want breath at the same time.

Now as to their manner of studying, the Student first reads two or three lines, and then the Doctor Expounds. Then another reads two or three lines more, and so one after another; every one rising up out of respect after he has done reading, and standing upright till the Doctor bids him sit down again. One of these Doctors shall teach all manner of Sciences in one day; for he is not learned that cannot talk of all. And certainly had the Persians those advantages of Books, and that method of study which we have in Europe, they would prove to be men of great understanding: for with those little helps they have, they will give a good account of their own Theology, of Logick, Physick, and the Mathematicks, wherein they strive to reach the bottom of things as deep as they can. Their Books are for the most part the works of an ancient Persian Author, whose name was Kodgia Nesir in the City of Ibousi, in the Province of Korassan. 'Tis very probable he was well skill'd in the Greek and Arabick, having translated into Persian several Books out of those two Languages. They have some pieces of Aristotle which are accounted the best in the West: The Almagest of Ptolemy, which they call Magesti, some tractates of Euclid, some fragments of Archimedes; the Opticks of Ehne, Heister, and other excellent Books. Some have affirm'd that they have been skill'd in the doctrine of Sines and Tangents for above this 800 years; and indeed they are very curious at this day in Mathematical Instruments. They have also a great inclination to Poetry, the chief grace whereof they believe to consist in design of accidents, and high comparisons observing thime as we do. As for Physick, they have Galen, whom they call Galenus; Averroes, whom they call Abozalt, or great Father; and Hermes Trismegistus, whom they call Ormous. The most considerable of their Historians is Ronze el Sapha, who wrot a Chronology from the Creation of the World to his time; wherein there are abundance of fables, but little truth. He says that the World was inhabited by Devils for an infinite number of years before the Creation of Adam, and that God for their enormities depriv'd them of their power upon earth, and gave it to man to manage. Their Books, though deer, are very common, and every Trades-man buys 'em, being very ambitious to learn the Sciences themselves, and to encourage their children to do so too. They send them betimes to the School; which they call Meklebe, of which there are several in every Quarter. They make a hideous noise in their Schools, repeating their Lessons altogether aloud, while the Master corrects every Boy that does not keep along with the Cry. As for the children of persons of Quality, they have Tutors at home, never stirring out of doors till they are 18 years of age, unless it be to go a hunting or a shooting now and then. Hence it comes to pass, that the Children are discreet, civil and modest; so that you shall never hear an ill word come out of their mouths.

In the Chamber of Accounts are many Officers, whom I look upon as Gownmen. All the Books and Registers pass through their hands, particularly such Papers as concern'd the King's Revenue. All which are register'd in the Chamber of Accounts at Ispahan, which is call'd Defter Krone. As to the Fee-Lands call'd Moulkerbar, which belong to particular persons, they owe to the King a certain annual Rent, which the Governors of Provinces exact with a severe extortion.

The Mestempti and the Memaleck are they that value the Rent of all Lands in Demesh, which is one of the principal charges of the Defter Kroon. They also take cognisance of all the King's Farns, Quit-Rents, Provisions and Expences of Receivers and Collectors. There is also a Mestempti to value Legacies.

The Nazar controuls the Mestempti and the Memalek, and his hand is requir'd to all Papers of dispatch.

The Deroga or Provost of the Defter-Kroon is to prosecute and punish all that are guilty of false Receipts, or of Exaction.

Into this Office are deliver'd all the Grants and Assignations of the wages of the King's Officers. Every man comes and receives his own, or sends for it to those places upon which this Money is assign'd.

In every Village or Borough there is a Reis, or chief of the place, to whom the Officers apply themselves for their Money: For should they terrify the Countrey-man, he would run quite away, and pay nothing. The greatest cheat in this Chamber of Accounts, is, that in regard the Officers keep the Roll of the Officers wages, they will give them divers Bills to receive little parcels at several places distant from one another, till the Sum be made up; to which trouble rather than the Kings servant will be put, he will give a good gratuity to the Officer to pay him all together. But because the Officers are not able to satisfy all that come, there are certain Thabfilders or hoarders up of Rent, who buy for ready Money as cheap as they can, such Bills as private men come to receive at the Chamber; and when they have got a good number together, they go and receive them altogether at the Chamber, and make great advantage. By this misgovernment of the Defter-Kroon, several persons are very much oppress'd. For he that has but 30 Tomans a year, shall be forc'd to give a good share out of it to have the rest in ready Money; which has been often the ruine of the Persian Army, through the abuses and defalcations put upon the poor Souldiers. During the Reign of Sha-Abbas the 1; and toward the beginning of the Reign of Sha-Sefi his Son, the Exchequer was better regulated; but when the Persians come to be at Peace with their Neighbours, the King and his Lords have minded nothing less then the payment of the Souldiery.

The greatest part of the Lands in Persia belong to the King, and are only farm'd by private persons. The rest of the Lands are measur'd, and every Land pays so much a measure. The King also has a vast income by the Merchandizes that pay Custom and Toll. The Port of Bander Abassi alone brings him one year with another, when least, besides accidents, neer upon 20000 Tomans.

C H A P. XII.

Of the third Estate of the Kingdom, comprehending the Tradesmen and Merchants: as also of the Trades, Manufactures, and Commodities of Persia.

THE Commerce of Persia, as in all other Kingdoms, consists in the Trade of the Country and Forraign Traffick. Only with difference, that the Country Trade is in the hands of the Persians and Jews, the forraign Traffic in the hands of the Armenians only, who are as it were the Kings and the Noble mens Factors to sell their silk.

As for the Handicraft trades, there are some Corporations that pay a certain yearly duty to the King, as Shoemakers, Cutlers, Smiths, and others. Some are free, as the Joyners and Masons; though he get by their labour as much as others pay him in money. For when the King requires twenty Masons for a work which is in hast, the Marmar Bashi who is their Chief, summons them together, and they that gave most are excus'd. For when the King requires twenty, he summons forty: and thus every man lives by his calling. The practice is the same with the Chief of the Joyners, and all other Trades, who are Officers pay'd by the King, and never work unless they please themselves, commanding all that are under their Jurisdiction. As for Carpenters and Joyners work, the Persians know little what belongs to it, which proceeds from the scarcity of Wood, that does not allow them materials to work upon. So that for Chains, Tables and Bedsteads, there are no such things to be seen in Persia: the Joyners business being only to make Doors and Frames for Windows, which they make very neatly of several pieces of wood joyn'd together, so that a man can hardly put a Tennis Ball through the holes where they put the glass. Nor can it be expected that the Persians should work like other Europeans, having no other Tools then a Hatchet, a Saw, and a Chizel, and one sort of Plainer, which a French-man brought among them.

Their nobler Arts are Writing, for Printers they know none. All their Books are writt'n, which is the reason they so much esteem that Art. There was an Armenian who had set up a Printing-Press at Ispahan, and had Printed the Epistles of St. Paul, the seven Penitential Psalms, and was going about to Print the whole Bible, but not having the way of making good Ink, and to avoid the ill consequences of the Invention, he was forc'd to break his Press. For on the one side the Children refus'd to learn to write, pretending they wrote the Bible themselves, only to get it the sooner by heart: on the other side many persons were undone by it, that got their living by writing.

The Persians use three sorts of hands, the first is call'd Nestalick, or the Set hand; the second Shakeste or Divanni, which is their Court-hand: the third Neskre, or the Running-hand, very like the Arabic. They write with small Indian Reeds; and say, that to write well, a man ought to lean so slightly upon his Pen, that should a fly stand upon the other end it would fall out of his hand. When they write they hold their Paper in one hand to turn it according to the motion of the Pen, otherwise they could not make their dashes large and free, as the Character requires. They make their Paper of Cotton Fustian, very coarse, brown, and of no strength, for the least folding tears it. They sleek it with a sleek stone, and then rub it over to make it more sleek. Their Ink is made of Galls and Charcoal pounded together with Soot.

The Persians reck'n four Languages among 'em. The Persian call'd Belick, that is, sweet and pleasing. The Turkish, call'd Sciascer, or the Rodomontado Language. The Arabian, to which they give the Epithite of Feschish or Eloquent; and the fourth, call'd Cobaber, or the Speech of the Country people. The Persian in use among the Gentry is compos'd almost of all Arabic words: by reason that the Persian is very barren. But the Gibbrish of the Country people is so corrupt that they in the City can hardly understand 'em. The Arabian is the Language of the Learned, in which tongue their Books are written. The Language of the Court is Turkish, but much more soft and elegant then at Constantinople. As for the Persian Language, it is spoken in the Courts of the Great Mogul, and the Kings of Golconda and Visapour, in all which Courts a Noble man would take it for an affront to be spok'n to in the Indian Language.

As for their Painters they only paint in miniature, and for Birds and Flowers they will draw them indifferently: But for figures and stories they know not what belongs to any such thing.

The Persians are most excellent Artists for manufactures of Gold, Silk and Silver, of which their rich Carpers and Tissues are made: nor do their Gold and Silver Manufactures ever grow black or lose their luster by long wearing or lying by. There are abundance that work in Silk stuffs of all sorts, and others that make Bonnets and Girdles of Gold and Silk. Others there are whose business it is to fast'n flowers of Gold and Silver to their Tassata's, with gum water, of which the women make Shifts and Drawers. And now they begin to make such large quantities of Tassata's, that they care not for the stuffs which are brought out of India, though they be much finer.

They also make great quantities of Linnen Cloth of all sorts of colours, upon which they fast'n several flowers with gum water, and some figures, though the Law forbid it. Which they learnt to do upon the Armenians carrying out of Europe some ill-favour'd cuts and pieces in distemper which they bought here without judgment: these pieces they hang before their doors, and those hollow places in the walls where they put their Quilts and Carpets when they rise.

The Persians are excellent Artists at Damasquing with Vitriol, or engraving Damask-wise upon Swords, Knives, and the like. But the nature of the Steel which they make use of, very much contributes to their Art, in regard they cannot perform the same work neither upon their own nor ours. This steel is brought from Golconda, and is the only sort of steel which can be damasqu'd. For when the workman puts it in the fire, he needs no more then to give it the redness of a Cherry, and instead of quenching it in the water as we do, to wrap it in a moist Linnen cloath: for should he give it the same heat as to ours, it would grow so hard that when it came to be wrought it would break like glass. I speak this to undeceive those people who think our Scimitars and Cut-lasses are made of steel of Damascus, which is a vulgar error; there being no steel but that of Golconda that can be Damask'd.

The Persians are also excellent Artists at making Bows and Arrows, and such other weapons as are us'd in that Country. As for Bridles and Saddles their Artists far exceed ours, especially in their sowing, which they do so neatly and with so much art with a kind of back-stitch, that it looks almost like an embroidery. There are an infinite number that live by dressing Seal-skins and Goat-skins, the first to make boots for the Gentry and better sort of Merchants, the latter for the poor people.

There is also a sort of earthen ware made at Kerman which is very fine, and being brok'n looks as white within as without. It does not endure heat so well as Porcellane, which has this quality, that if you powre never so hot liquor into a Porcellane cup, neither the foot nor the brims a-top will be any thing the warmer.

There are abundance of poor people that get their living by mending glass Tobacco-pipes, for when they are brok'n they join them together again with a certain mastic made of lime, and the white of an egg, then with a Diamond-pointed piercer they make holes in the glass, and bind the pieces together with a thin Latten-wire.

The most considerable commodities of Persia are the Silks which come out of the Province of Gulistan. But there is not so much transported out of Persia as men imagin. For formerly great quantities of Velvets, Tissues and Tassata's were transported out of Persia into these parts, but now we make them better and cheaper in Europe.

There is also a vast quantity of flat silk transported out of Persia into Turkie, Muscovy and Poland, which the women use in embroidery: for the Colours being lively, they embroider their shifts, hankers, vails, and other linnen with it.

The Seal-skins and Goat-skins which are dress't in Persia are transported by the Hollan-

Hollander into India and Japan. Great quantities also of both are transported into Muscovy and Poland.

The Ronas, that famous Root, of which I have already spoken, is transported over all India, where there is also a great vent of Persian fruits pickl'd in Vinegar, as also of their sweet waters.

Their Pistaches grow in great abundance about Casbin; Almonds from the Territories of Yezd and Kerman, Raisins from several parts of the Kingdom, especially from Schirus: And their purgative Prunes, which they call Alonbacara, from the Frontiers that border upon Tartary.

Great store of Quinces candied, and boxes of Marinated made at Balsara, are thence transported into India, where they are bought up by the Mahometans and Portugueses. For the Banians will eat none, for fear they should by accident bury a fly in their stomachs.

Great store of dry'd Fruits are brought out of the Country of the Medes, and transported to Tocat, to Diarbequir, Nineveh and Dagdat. Among the rest a sort of small Apricots, very pleasing to the taste, which being boyld in water make a pleasant syrrop, and are the only diet for the sick in those parts.

There are also great store of painted Calicuts made in Persia, which being coarse, are only worn and made use of by the poor, so that there is very little transported out of the Country, but what is carried into Turkey.

The Persians also make a great deal of money of their Cattel; and to begin with their Camels, they sell vast numbers of them into Armenia and Natolia. But the Governours of the Provinces are very unwilling to part with them; which very much abates the trade. For the Turks very highly esteem the Persian Camels, as being stronger than their own. They also sell great store of Horses and Mules; but that trade is not so considerable, the chiefest part being only sent into India.

As for their Sheep, 'tis a wonderful thing to see what prodigious numbers come out of the Province of the Medes and the Higher Armenia, and the Forraign Merchants come as far as Tauris and Hamadan to fetch thew away. They drive them as far as Constantinople and Adrianople, and the greatest part of the Mutton which is spent in Natolia and Romania comes out of Persia, which very much enriches Persia with ready money. But when Lamb is in season, as we travel with the Caravans, we meet at every turn with flocks after flocks, the least of which consists of a thousand Lambs: and in regard there are some of those Lambs that are weary, and lag behind, we buy them at a cheap rate, the Shepherds that are not able to carry them, being glad to be rid of 'em.

Formerly the Merchant Jewellers brought some Turquoises of the old rock out of Persia; but for these 15 years last past there have bin none found. The last time I was there I could only meet with three, which were but reasonable. As for those of the new rock, they are of no value, because they do not keep their colour, but turn green in a little time.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Justice and Policy of the Persians.

THE Justice of the Persians is very exact and very speedy. Suits are determin'd upon the place without any need of Advocates or Proctors. Not but that the Officers of Justice are easie to be corrupted, but in their unjust exactions, which they carry as secretly as possibly they can, they are sooner satisfi'd then the Turks: and if their injustice be discover'd, upon complaint to the King they are punish'd without mercy.

The Kans do Justice in their Provinces, as representing the Kings person. Besides that, the King has a Divan Begui in every City, and the Kan places under him a Deroga, who is like the Lieutenant Criminal in France. He has under him an Aatar, who is a kind of Captain of the watch; who goes about the streets in the night to hinder disorders, and carries all people to Prison that he finds abroad at unseasonable hours, if they cannot give a good accompt of themselves. There is also a Kelonter, that is, the chiefest or greatest, who seems to resemble the Tribune of the People among the Romans, or the Provost of Merchants in France. The Kelonter is only responsible to the King, who places one in every City, and it is his business to defend the People from the injustice and oppressions of the Governours.

Murder is severely punish'd, nor will money save the Criminal. When the Murtherer is tak'n, they carry him before the Divan Begui, who makes quick work. For he delivers him to the Parents or kindred of the person slain, who carry him to the place of execution, and without any compassion torture him to death.

I remember the Kan of Schiras had a Favourite, who falling in love with a young Persian Gentleman, would needs endeavour to have the use of his body. One day meeting upon the Road together, and lying at night under the same Tent, the Favourite about midnight came to his bed side, and after many solicitations would have forc'd him. But being violently resisted, the Favourite for madness to see him disappointed, and liable to be discover'd, stabb'd the young Gentleman to the heart, and fled to the Mountains. The Murder being divulg'd, the Mother, Widow and Sister of the young man repair'd to the Kan for Justice, who willing to save his Minion, offer'd them money: but they scorning his proffer, threaten'd to complain to the King. The Kan being thereupon constrain'd to pursue his Favourite, at length took him and sent him to Ispahan, telling them that he would not judge of the Affair, but refer it to the King. The Mother, Widow and Sister immediately follow'd the Murtherer to Ispahan; and demanded Justice of the King with that eagerness, that though the King had an inclination to have spar'd the Kan's Favourite for his Masters sake, he was forc'd to abandon him, and to bid them pay themselves with his blood. Immediately he was carri'd to the Meydan, where the Widow first stabb'd him to the heart with a Dagger, then the Mother took her turn, and after the Sister; and then holding a Cup to receive his blood, drank every one a cup full to quench the thirst of their revenge.

Nor are they so exact in the punishment of Murder only; for they punish disorders in houses of Debauchery with a proportionable strictness, of which I will give the Reader two examples. A young Hollander, coming to Ispahan, presently put himself into a Persian habit; and going in the evening to a house of good fellowship, met with certain Persians, with whom he happen'd to quarrel, and being well beaten for his pains, thought it not convenient to stay any longer where he had bin so ill entertain'd. Thereupon the Dutch Interpreter went and complain'd to the Athemadoulet, who inform'd the King. The King immediately sent for the people that had beaten the Hollander, and ask'd them why they abus'd a stranger? To which the others made answer that they saw no stranger, but only a man clad after the Persian garb. Whereupon the King told the Interpreter, that if the Dutchman had worn his own Country habit, his Subjects durst not have abus'd him, but as the case stood, he had no reason to punish 'em. One

One day it happen'd that there was a great hubbub in one of those houses of debauchery, where the woman had prostituted her own Daughter. The King inform'd of it, commanded the Mother to be thrown headlong from a Tower: and that the Daughter should be torn a pieces by his doggs, which he keeps, a purpose for such chastisements.

Above all things there is an extraordinary care taken for the security of the High-ways. For which purpose guards are set at convenient distances, who are ready to pursue upon the least noise of a Robbery, and who examin people whence they come and whither they go. If they answer not as they should, or trip in their Answers, they carry them before the next Governor. Those Radars are so posted over all Persia, that you need no more then send to the places where they keep station, to know what is become of any person that has committed a crime. For it is impossible to scape, all the Passes are so well guarded. If any one endeavours to travel through the Mountains or unfrequented roads, then the Radars who are in all places, seize such persons upon suspicion, for not taking the direct road.

As the Caravan was one day setting out from Tauris for Ispahan, a poor fellow took an occasion to rob a Cloak-bag during the hurly-burly of packing up, and fled cross the fields not knowing his way: the Merchant missing his goods, complain'd to the Governour, who having sought for him in vain, sent order to the Guards of the High-ways, to make a strict examination, and to send the person to him so soon as they had seiz'd him. In a short time the Thief was constrain'd to forsake his Cloak-bag and to come a thwart the fields for water. Who being examin'd by the Radars why he came alone by such a by way, and not knowing what to answer, was carri'd to the Governour. He was soon convicted and condemn'd to death, for Thieves find no mercy in Persia. Only they are variously put to death. For sometimes they are ty'd to a Camels tayl by the feet, and their bellies rip't open. Sometimes they are buried alive all but their heads, and starv'd to death: in which torment they will sometimes desire a Passenger to cut off their heads; though it be a kindness forbidden by the Law. But the most cruel punishment of all, is when they set Thief a Horse-back, with his extended Arms fasten'd to a long stick behind: then larding him with lighted Candles, they suffer the Candles to burn into his very bowels. Another and I met two in this misery, who desir'd us to hasten their deaths, which we durst not do, only we gave them a Pipe of Tobacco according to their desire.

As for those that steal in Cities, they tie them by the heels to the tayl of a Camel, and rip up their bellies: and then as the Camel drags the poor creature along the streets, while one goes before him crying, The King has punish'd him for such a crime. If yet he be not dead, they hang him upon the next tree.

The Radars have little wages, which makes them use their Rhetorick to get what honestly they can out of the Travellers, to whom they tell long stories of their care for the security of the highways.

If it happen that a Merchant be rob'd, the Governour of the Province is to make good to the Merchant whatever he has lost, according as he shall make out by his Oath or his Book. Nor dare the Governors deny satisfaction, fearing a complaint at Ispahan. I my self was rob'd of two Bales of goods, between Lar and Schiras, to the value of 1400 Piasters, but upon complaint to the Governour upon my own oath and shewing him my Book, he pay'd me all my loss in gold, and gave me a present in wine besides.

The Posts or Shappars are those that carry the Kings dispatches to the Governours of Provinces. When they are sent any whither, the Kings Esquire finds them a Horse, and a man that runs to the end of the Stage, to bring him back again. If these Curriers meet a Horseman upon the road, they have power to dismount him, if their own be not so good, or be tyr'd: and the Horseman must either run after his Horse, or send some body to the end of the Stage. Sometimes these Curriers abusing their power, within a quarter of an hour after they have chang'd their Horse, if they meet another better mounted, they will take away his Horse too. Nor dares the Horseman resist, though he be never so much too strong, for there is no pardon for them that lay so much as a finger upon one of these Shappars; at other times they will pretend to take away a mans Horse only only to get money. But they are forbid to deal so by the Franks; and I have pass'd by them, when they have said nothing to me.

Their Government in relation to Belly-timber is the best in the world. For there is a Mohetseeb, who is the chief of the Government, whose business it is to set a rate upon all sorts of Provision, being assisted by three or four more Assessors. Every first day of the week there is a publick Proclamation of tax upon the weight of every thing. Which Assessors in the evening advise together against the next day whether to raise or abate the price before set. This order was establish'd by the great Shah-Abbas, and was in his reign more punctually observ'd then it has been since. By the by observe, that all provisions of belly-timber are sold by weight and not by measure: so that you may send a Child to Market; for if the Commodity be not weight, 'tis well if the buyer be satisfy'd with having his money again. For if the seller be discover'd to sell by false weights, they are led about the streets with a Taktekolus, or a Bonnet like a Bee-hive upon their heads, and a Bell about their necks to expose 'em first to the laughter of the people; after that they are fin'd, and receive so many drubs upon the soles of their feet.

If this good order were not observ'd in Persia, the poor would suffer very much. For the handicraft tradesmen that work all day in shops remote from their houses, where their wives are continually shut up, eat nothing at noon but a little fruit in season: and then in the evening when they leave work, they go to the Market and buy for their Families boyl'd or roast meat, of which there is great plenty. Therefore are they so exact, lest so many poor labouring men should be deceiv'd.

One day a Baker of the City came to the Kan, complaining that the Judge of the Government had set too low a price upon bread, so that he should be a great loser. To whom the Kan made answer, that 'twas not his business to alter the price: bidding him go to the Magistrate that was concern'd. But the Baker believing the Kan could do any thing, sent him a present of fifty Tomans. The Kan seeing the ill design of the Baker to oppress the poor people, and the ill opinion he had of him as a seller of Justice, commanded him to be carri'd to the Piazza, and there to be drub'd upon the soles of his feet till he pay'd the other fifty Tomans, which the Kan forthwith distributed to the poor, and caus'd the price of bread to be abated instead of raising it.

C H A P. XIV.

Of the Manners and Customs of the Persians.

THE Manners and Customs of the people are usually correspondent to their Religion. The Persians never preserve the name of their Predecessors, but like the Jews, for distinction sake, say, such a one, the Son of such a one. When they Circumcise a Child and give him a Name, they write three or four Names like Lots in Paper, which are drawn by a Child, and which the Child draws, that is the Name of the Child. The women that are barren, swallow that which is cut from the Child, believing it will make them conceive.

The Persians are generally very inquisitive after the time to come, consulting their Astrologers like Oracles: The King has always two or three by him, to tell him the good or bad hour. There is an Almanac which is sold every year in Persia, which they call Tacnim; but is indeed an Ephemerides, containing the Longitudes and Latitudes of the Planets, the Conjunctions and Oppositions; and other such things. This Tacnim is full of predictions about War, Sickness and Famine. It sets the proper seasons to put on new cloathes, to let blood, to Purge, or travel, with many other instructions of the same nature. They give great credit to this Tacnim, and they that can get one, govern themselves in all things according to the Rules there set down. Others to know the success of their affairs, go to a Doctor of the Law, and desire him to open the Al-couran, and to tell them the issue of their business. Thereupon the Doctor muttering some strange words, opens the Book, and if he meets with affirmative commands, he declares the undertaking shall prosper. If negatives, he dissuades from the enterprize. I remember a Gardiner belonging to the Capuchin Friars, would needs go to one of those Moullab's, to know whether he should get by an Ox that he was about to buy. Whereupon the Moullab assur'd him he should reap great profit by his bargain: but quite contrary, the Ox dy'd upon his hands within three days, to the great astonishment of the Gardiner. When a Capuchin tax'd the Moullab for the fallacies of his pretended Art, the Moullab reply'd, that God knew that the Gardiner would spend his Money upon lewd Women, and therefore took from him the means and support of his debauchery.

Alcouran is the Book of the Law, so entitled for its excellency, as we say, the Bible.

They also use a sort of divination, which is call'd Rambé, by even or odd, the Masters of which mystery, call'd Rammali, keep Shops on purpose to delude the people. When they see people coming, they have persons suborn'd on purpose; who holding out their hands shut, ask the Rammal what he thinks they have in their hands. The Rammal at first seems to be at a stand; throwing certain Dice, call'd Kiabetain, the specks whereof are some even, some uneven; but when there are people enough gathered together, he tells point by point how many specks his fellow-Cheat has in his hands. Who counterfeiting astonishment, encourages the poor silly creatures that stand gazing, to spend something for a lye which they sell them. They also make use of the Faali, which is to open a Book, and by numbers even or odd, to prognosticate good or bad fortune. In their interpretation of dreams, the Interpreter foretells the future to him that enquires conformable to what he says he saw in his dream. He has a great Book lying before him, full of little Pictures and Grotesco-work, wherein he strives to shew the people some Fantasm or Apparition, which they will tell you they saw in the night. These cheats are usually practis'd about the Palace, where all the idle people flock together; as also upon the Road to Zulpha, where they lye upon the Road to catch the silly Passengers.

The Persians are mightily addicted to ill language, and foul-mouth'd reproaches. So that when two men fall out, instead of fighting with their fists, they fight with their tongues, and curse one another. But they never blaspheme God: for if they should hear one swear, or wish themselves at the Devil, they would cry out in an astonishment, Is not that Fellow a fool to give himself upon trust to the Devil, and renounce Paradise? When they would affirm any thing to be true, all their Oaths are Ser-azire-sha, By the King's beloved head; or, Erva pigumbir, by the Spirit of the Prophet. I remember once at Galata, walking with some of the French Ambassador's Servants, we saw two Turks at Cuffs; after they were parted, one of them gave the other a thousand curses; to which, the other reply'd no more than only this; I wish, said he, thy Soul may have no more repose in Paradise, than the Hat of a French-man has in this World, alluding to our manner of salutation, and putting off our Hats so often as we do.

The Persians are naturally great Dissemblers and Flatterers; and they make it their study to acquire esteem and applause. They love to give and receive Presents: more especially to present the King. Which Presents are valu'd, and according to the estimate, they must send ten per cent. to the Serjeant Porter, and five per cent. to his Deputy: which, if they do not pay willingly, they are forc'd to pay: which I saw the Deputy of the Holland-Company forc'd to do.

The Luxury and the Expenses of the Persians is excessive, as I have in several places observ'd. And though it be against the Law of Mahomet to make use of Gold or Silver-plate, which sets aside that metal only for Commerce and for Money; none but the poor observe that Law, for the rich make no scruple to transgress it.

The Persians are very much accusom'd to make mutual Visits one to another at their solemn Festivals, and to wish one another good cheer, and a merry season. The more noble sort stay at home to expect the Visits of their Inferiors; after that they get a Horseback, and return their Visits. The Curtisans continue their Visits all the year long, and going to the Noble-mens Houses, stay in the great Hall till they come out of their Harams. Whither, when the Noblemen come, they lay their hands upon their stomachs, and bow, which is their manner of saluting the Company that carries for them. After some few Compliments, they get a Horseback, attended by all their Visitants, who accompany them to the King's House, in expectation of some kindness, by virtue of their favour. The favours which the King usually does to such people, is to send them to the Governours of Provinces with a Hawk or a Calaat, with order that the said Governours remember the Serjeant Porter.

The Kan being advertiz'd that the Calaat is coming, he rides forth of the City to meet it, attended by all his principal Officers, the chief of the City, and the greatest part of the Inhabitants. The Juglers also must give their attendance, together with the Drums and Trumpets, and all the Mulick-makers. They rendezvous usually in a Garden one or two leagues from the City, where the King's Messenger stays with the Calaat. So soon as the Governour perceives him, he makes a low obeysance, and a Prayer for the King; giving God thanks for that the King is pleas'd to preserve him in his memory: then he puts on the Calaat, which is according to the quality of the Governour: sometimes the Robe alone; sometimes Robe and Cloak: sometimes Robe, Cloak, Girdle, and Bonnet; to which, if he be a Grandee, are added the Scimitar and Dagger: which method is also observ'd toward Embassadors. When the Kan has put on the Calaat, he returns to the City with all his Retinue, goes to the King's House; for the King has a House in every City, kisses the Columns of the Gate, and makes certain other Prayers for the prosperity of the King: At length he rides home, where he makes a great Feast, shewing the Calaat to all persons that come to him, who by way of complement cry Moubarek-basbet, that is, may it be blest, and prove a good omen.

The Persians are not much addicted to play: for besides, that the Law forbids it; the Meshaldar-Bashi has a power to fine and punish Gamesters, as I have said already. For which reason he has spies, to which the meaner sort of people dare not refuse entrance into their Houses: but the richer sort laugh at 'em; and will give 'em nothing. Among the Persian Games, there is one game at Cards which the Persians call Gengefé. We have but four distinct marks upon ours, but they have eight. They also play at a kind of Chess, and at Tricirac; which two Games are most in use. The Shopkeepers play in the Streets with little Marbel-bowls, not much unlike our Childrens Bowling stones. But as for Bowling-greens, or Tennis-Courts, they know not what they mean.

Neither the Persians nor any of the Eastern People accustom themselves to walk as we do. And therefore when they see us walking to and fro together in a Garden-Ally for two or three hours together, they are amaz'd. They only spread a Carpet in the fairest place of the Garden, and set themselves down to contemplate the verdure of the place: and if they rise, 'tis only to pull the fruit from the trees. For they love to eat what they gather themselves, never caring for what others have handl'd.

The Men never dance, only the Women of Pleasure, which are always sent for to their Feasts; where they dance open-fac'd, and shew a thousand postures to diversify the Company. Their juglers are every jot as good as ours; but whereas ours make use of Balls, they shew their tricks with large Hen-eggs. Their Dancers upon the Ropes far exceed ours. I have seen some of them that have ty'd a Rope to the top of a high Tower, and fasten'd the other to the ground, and then walking up to the top with their counterpoises in their hands, have laid themselves upon the Rope upon their backs, and have slid to the bottom with a swiftness like lightning.

The Persians are altogether as superstitious as the Turks. Before they say their Prayers they are oblig'd to wash: every one having a Reservatory for water in his own House, which is always full of water. They plunge their heads in the water, wash their mouths, rub their foreheads; and if a man shews them any nativeness in the Vessel, there's water enough, they cry, for purification; though, if it be Pond-water, it must be four or five foot deep. But if it be Running-water, the least quantity in the World serves to purify 'em, and render 'em fit to pray: while they ground their belief upon this maxim of the Law of Mahomet, that if it should run through Pishkill, or Camels-dung, it would be sufficient for purification. There is one sort of washing appointed by their Law, which is, to go to their Baths Baths after they have been with their Wives; and there are some so superstitious as to go there every day. These Baths are round Chambers, so close, that there is no light but what comes from little round windows made in the top of the roof. In the first place, there is the Krasin, which is a Chamber seven or eight foot square; where, in the middle of the Room, is a great Copper plate, in the form of a flat Basin, and underneath they make a fire of Brushes or Horse-dung: so that the Plate heats all the water which is in the Chamber: When it is hot enough, a servant belonging to the Bath goes up to the Terras, and winds a horn, to give notice to them that have a mind to come. Should a Persian or a Mahometan miss once in eight days, he would feel an itching all over his body not to be endur'd. For the pores, which the heat of the Bath had open'd, coming to be shut, the vapours of the body not able to get out, prick and tickle the skin. The Men go early in the morning, and stay till two hours after Sun-rising. At the entry of the Bath is the place where they undress; and when they are stript all but the secret parts, which they cover with a napkin, they pour hot water upon their shoulders: and then comes a man and rubs off all the sweat and filth of the Body with a coarse Cloath; after which they plunge themselves into a Reservoir of hot water, which they call Kolletain. But these common Baths are very dangerous, and many people of both Sexes have got the foul Disease, who were never addicted to impurity.

There are also in Persia hir'd people, which they call Saka's, whose business it is to give water to the people as they go along the Streets. Their Barbers are very neat, and surpass ours for lightness of hand; for a man can hardly feel their Razors. They have also a Knife to pare the nails of the hands and feet, which they do very dextrously. As for their Beards, those that belong to the Law cut it with Scissors, but they leave it not so long as the Turks do, by much. But the Courtiers and Souldiers shave all off, except from their upper-lips, where they take it for a mark of great honour to wear long Mustaches, which they say is the ornament of the face.

The habit of the Persians is a Robe which they call Cabaya, that comes down a little below their knees. This is of very fine quilted Cloath, well cotton'd in the Winter, but much thinner in the Summer. These Linnens would be very cheap, but that the Persons of Quality change their Robes every day. Their Sleeves are long, and close to their arms, and reaching as far as the wrist. The Robe is fit to their Bodies as far as the Waist; but then it is made wide and loose. Over this they wear a noble Girdle of Silk, adorn'd at the end with flowers of Gold, over which they wear another Girdle of fine Kerman wool. The richer sort are so vain as to wear three Girdles, two of Silk, and one of Kerman-wool, which is ty'd uppermost. Under the Robe or Vast they wear a short Waistcoat of flower'd Fustion quilted, their Shirts being of Silk of divers colours. They use as little Soap in Persia as they can; for Soap is very rare in Persia. When we come out of the Indies, we are forc'd to bring with us Linnen enough to serve us for six months, and then carry it back again; for they wash much better in India than in Persia. Their breeches being of Silk, come down to their Ankles, without any codpieces. Their Sesse, or Bonnet, which we call a Turban, is made of a piece of fine Silk mingl'd with Gold, being in form much like our large Pompions: the top thereof is a little flat; and here it is that the end of the Silk, being garnish'd with flowers of Gold and Silver, ends in a kind of Posie. These Bonnets are very heavy, especially those that are for the most part nothing but Gold and Silver. The meanest of those is worth 200 Crowns; but there are some which the King and the great Lords wear, that are worth four or five hundred. You shall seldom meet an Officer of any Quality that does not wear a rich Jewel in his Bonnet. The Courtiers and Souldiers wear their Daggers upon their stomachs, stuck in their girdles. The meanest Souldier inlays the handle and sheath of his Dagger; but the Grandees have them all beset with Pearls. There was in the handle of Sha-Abbas the Second's Dagger, a Diamond of above sixty Carats, which, with some other Stones that belong'd to it, was valu'd at 13000 Tomans, or 200000 Crowns. Over their Vest they wear a Justicoar, much like ours. It is fasten'd at the top with a button: and most usually they have nine tufted buttons before set by three and three at an equal distance: but they only serve for ornament. This Justicoar is either of Cloath, or Tissue; which in Winter is lin'd with Martins, or else with a grey Lambskin that comes from Korasan. And indeed the Persians love diversity of colours in their habits; for their Justicoar is of one colour, their Vest of another, their Breeches of another; and their Shooes, especially the Womens are green, red, yellow, or violet. The Girdle and Turban are always of strip'd Stuff, unless it be the Mullah's, which are always plain.

Besides all this, in the Winter they wear a long Cloak down to their heels, with sleeves of the same length, lin'd with rich Furs. The Persons of Quality, and some of the meaner sort of people, make no more of Cloath of Gold and Silver, than we do of Druggets. A man that has but seven or eight Tomans a year, shall spend five in Cloaths; which excess in habit is crept down among the Rabble, so that a man can hardly tell the Servant from the Master. And it is a Proverb among the Persians, Gorbebé Lebas, fine Cloaths make Men esteem'd at Court. Neither Sha-Abbas the Second, nor his Grandfather Sha-Abbas the First, would allow of this disorder, but that Men should go clad according to their conditions. For one day, seeing one of his Servants with a pair of Cloath of Gold-breeches, demanded what wages he had? but when he understood that it was nothing near sufficient to maintain him at that rate; to deter others from the like vanity, he order'd him so many Bastinadoes upon the soles of his feet, that he dy'd in a few days. Others say that the Fellow being surpriz'd at the King's Question, made him answer, that being troubl'd with the Gout, he had been advis'd to wear that sort of Stuff for its warmth. To which the King reply'd, that he had been told a very bad remedy, and that he would shew him a better and a shorter way to cure the Gout, and so commanded him to be drubb'd, as before is related.

In regard it is very cold in Persia, they make use of three sorts of Furs. The Lamb and Fox's skin for the meaner sort, together with the Cat's and Fox's skin. But the third sort, which is the Martin's Fur, is for Grandees of the Court, and other Persons of high Quality. They have also a way to make Cassocks that will keep out the rain, the wind, and the cold, which are made of Kerman-wool, as our Felt-makers make their Hats.

And now I have said 'tis cold, give me leave to tell ye how they warm themselves. In all Houses there are little Chambers, in the middle whereof there is a square hole about a foot deep, and three or four foot long, according to the bigness of the Chamber. Over the hole is a thing like one of our Tabourets, which covers the hole with a large Carpet, to keep in the heat of that which is kindl'd in the hole; so that being plac'd under the Tabouret, as far as the waist, though as cold as ice before, in a minute you shall be almost in a sweat, and be ready to fall a-sleep, if you take not a great care. All the Nobility have Chambers with Chimneys, where they set the Wood upright; the Mantle-tree comes forward, low, and semi-circular. It is two or three foot deep, and as many wide, to avoid smoaking.

They are full of their Compliments, which they call Travezee; and their manner of salutation is quite different from ours. For they never uncover their heads, but bow, and lay their right-hand upon their breasts. When they come into the company of their Betters, they fall upon their knees to set themselves upon their heels, which is a mark of respect.

The Women in Persia are very richly habited, but their habit is all of a piece, though little different in shape from the Mens. It is open before and comes not down below the calf of the leg. Their Girdle is not ty'd fast, but hangs carelessly: their Sleeves are also close to their arms, and reach to their wrists. Upon their heads they wear a little Bonnet rais'd like a little spire, and adorn'd with precious Stones, according to their Quality; from which Bonnet falls a veil behind, which is very graceful. They wear Breeches like the men, and their Shooes are almost like theirs. The Women of Ormus wear only a single pair of Breeches with a shift over them. The Armenian Women wear besides, a little Justicoar without sleeves, and upon their heads, a fine Linnen-Coif ty'd under their chins. Their hair is gather'd into a long tress, to which they sometimes add more, which is false, to make a long lock, that is done up up in a Velvet or Sattin-Case embroider'd, and hangs behind down to the waist.

Handsome Women are very plentiful in Persia, as well the tawny as the white. For the Merchants that bring both from all parts, choose the handsomest they can pick out. The white Women are brought from Muscovia, Poland, Cirassia, Mengrelia, Georgia, and the Frontiers of Tartary. The black from the coast of Melinda, and the Red-Sea.

The Persian Women are seen by none but their own Husbands. They are very idle in their Houses, not so much as looking after any thing of Housewifery. Indeed every thing is at the Husband's disposal, so that the Women are rather Slaves than Wives. They spend their time in taking Tobacco, after several fashions. When they go to the Baths, 'tis the Woman that wears the best Clothes, and brings the best Collation. They that have Slaves, cause 'em to rub their arms, their legs, and their thighs, till they fall asleep; having no other divertisement in their voluptuous Prison. The higher a man is in dignity, the more he glories in having a great number of Wives and Slaves; and his absolute power keeps them in order either willingly, or by constraint.

There are two sorts of Eunuchs for the guard of the Sultaneffes and the Wives of the Nobility. Some are white, but they never come neer the Women, but are order'd to guard the first doors of the Haram. The others are black, frightful to look upon, and flat-nos'd: who attend only upon the Women. If there be a necessity for a Woman of Quality to go abroad, the Eunuchs go before and behind with Battoons in their hands, to make the Corrouk, and drive all the people out of the way. When the King goes into the Countrey, if any one be asleep in the high-way, and be perceiv'd before he wakens, he is immediately cut to pieces as he lies. In the time of Sha-Abbas the Second, one of the Fellows that help'd to set up the Womens Tents, being weary, fell asleep in one of them upon the ground. When the Women came, they, seeing a man asleep, set up a shrieking; upon which, the Eunuchs coming in, wrapt up the Fellow in the Carpet as he lay, and carrying him into the Fields, buried him alive, Carpet and all.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Diseases of Persia, and the manner of curing them.

THE Persian Children are seldom sick of the small-Pox; but in lieu of that, they are very subject to Scald-pates, till ten or twelve years old. Which, it may be, proceeds from their shaving so young, and so often: for they shave at five or six months old, and two or three times a week.

As to the Pox, the Persians would be more troubl'd with it, but that the dry Air of the Countrey is an enemy to it: besides, they never lye twice with the same Woman, without going to the Bath to sweat out the venom of that distemper. As for the Gout, or Gravel, the Persians know not what it means: But the Armenians are troubl'd with the latter, especially those that in their youth accusom'd themselves to drink more Wine than Water.

To those that are troubl'd with the Cholick, they usually prescribe the eating of Horse-flesh: and I have seen many cur'd by that means.

Generally the Persians, especially the rich, or those that have wherewithal to live handsomely, are much less subject to Sicknefs than the people of Europe. Some take the reason to be, because of their China-drink which they drink every Spring, boyling an ounce in three pints of water, and so continuing the Dose for ten or twelve days one after the other: all which time they keep a very moderate diet, and eat no fruit for a month together. This drink causes the Patient to sweat; and the sweat being wip'd off, dyes the Linnen, nay the very walls of the Chamber of a yellow colour. As for any method of Phyllick, they have none in Persia.

For the Dysentery, they take fower Curd'd-milk, with Rice unbruised boyl'd in water, to which they add a little Rhubarb powder'd.

At the beginning of a Disease they forbid Bread, and instead thereof prescribe Rice boyl'd in Hen-broath, or sometimes in fair water. For diet is the chief Remedy which the Physicians prescribe in all Diseases, and account most soveraign. Indeed the remedy is well prescrib'd in many distempers; however it is by them never prescrib'd according to reason or method, but only according to custom; whereby it often comes to pass that they forbid that which is good, and prescribe that which is bad. If the Patient be so poor as not to be able to send for a Physician, two or three men set him upon an Ass, with a Scarf about his neck, which denotes him to be a sick person, and so lead him to the Physician; who presently feels his Pulse, lets him Blood, and by and by taking his Pen in his hand, in a small piece of Paper prescribes more Hog-wash at one stroke, then three mens bellies are able to contain.

When a Physician is call'd to a Consultation, he pretends not to take any Money: But his Atar or Apothecary finds a way to have the Doctor satisfi'd for his pains. They never permit the Sick to change their Linnen, how nasty soever it be. When they come home to the Patient, though they find him ready to expire, they tell the Servants that he will certainly recover; but then, on the other side, they go to the Parents or Kindred of the Patient, and tell them that the Patient is in a desperate condition, and cannot live. By this means they save their credit; for happen what will, they have told truth either of the one side, or the other.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the division of Time among the Persians.

THE Persians divide the natural day into four parts. The first is from Sun-rising to Noon; the Second from Noon to Sun-set: The third from Sun-set till Midnight; and the fourth from Midnight till Sun-rise. At Midnight, Morning, and Sun-set, they make a most horrible din in every great City, of Kettle-Drums, Haut-boys, Latten-Basons, and other Instruments: upon which there are certain men hir'd to play for a quarter of an hour together, in some place where they may be heard all over the City. They have also great Cornets, about seven foot long, with deep mouths, which may be heard above half a league. But these Cornets are never us'd but in Cities where the Kans or Governours reside. These Instruments are also always employ'd at their great Solemnities; as also when the King creates any new Officer or Governour. These Instruments have also a priviledg to play at all Houses where they understand there is a Male-child born. The meaner sort dare not refuse 'em; but the Nobility value not their priviledg of a straw.

The Persians in the computation of time make use of Lunar-months. The first Moubarrem, the second Cepher, the third Rebia-el-Avel, the fourth Akper, the fifth Gemadil-Avel, the sixth Gemadil-Akper, the seventh Regeb, the eighth Shaabon, the ninth Ramezan, the tenth Shaval, the eleventh Zikade, the twelfth Zilbagge. And every Month begins from the first appearance of the Crescent.

In their Astronomical Accounts, and the Calculations of the Longitude and Latitude of the Planets for the composing their Almanacks, they make use of Solar-months, thus call'd: Azar 31 day. Onzon 30 days. Ajar 31. Harizon 30. Temonze 31. Ab 31. Eiloul 30. Tehrion-el-Avel 31. Tehrion-el-ilani 30. Ranon-el-Avel 31. Kanon-Elfani 31. Shaabat 28 or 29, answering to our February. The first month Azar begins upon our eleventh of March: so that it answer'd to our month of March before the Gregorian Reformation. Therefore they call this month Mab-Roami, or the Roman month. They also make use of the Egyptian months, which are thus call'd, Terverdin, Erdi-be-hoet, Kourdad, Tir, Mordad, Sheriver, Mobré Mohré, Abon, Azer, Dei, Bahmen, Eppardarmouzé. The first month, Ferverdin, begins with the Vernal Equinox, every month not containing above 30 days, adding the five which remain to the end of the year, which they call Kramfi Monsterelezé.

The day of the Vernal Equinox is the first day of the year, which they call Neonzone, and is one of their Principal Festivals. For that day all the Grandeess appear at Court, and present the King according to their quality. If they can meet with nothing that is rare, they present him in Ducats of Gold, and there are some that present him to the number of ten Thousand. They also give God thanks for preserving them to see the new year, and for preserving the fruits of the Earth from bad seasons, for the Corn is by that time well come up. Upon this first day of the year, if a Persian has not money to buy him a new habit, he will go and mortgage his own body to have one. So proud and luxurious are the Persians from the highest to the lowest.

C H A P. XVII.

Of the Feasts and ordinary Diet of the Persians.

THE Persians are nothing eager after delicacies or dainties; both the nobler and the meaner sort being very temperate in dyet. In regard that wood is so scarce and dear about Ispahan, they never eat boyl'd meat above once a day: and as for their Dinner which they call Shate, it consists of bread, cheese-curds, milk, burnt wine, melons and other fruits in season, to which the rich add wet and dry sweet-meats: At night their usual food is Pilaw and rost meat. They buy their Provision from hand to mouth, especially the Mahumetans, which is a double charge. But for the Armenians, they live thriftily, and buy at once a good quantity of provisions to last for so long time.

Muttons, Kidds, Pullets and Pidgeons, are the usual dyet of the Persians; for as for Beef they very rarely eat it. The King and the great Lords will eat a piece of a Hare sometimes when they have been a hunting: but when they have kill'd a wild Boar, they send it always to some Christian, in expectation to be presented for the honour done him. They have no diversity of Victuals or made Dishes in Persia, their dyet being more proper to satisfy hunger, then to please a nice palate. Mutton and Lamb would be very good in Persia, if they knew how to roast it our way. But the Persians roast only at an oven, which is a hole made in the ground two foot and a half broad, and five or six foot deep. They burn nothing but bushes, and a kind of Turf mix'd with the dung of Cattel, and dry'd in the Sun. There are several roasting Cooks at Ispahan, that roast a whole Sheep at a time where he that comes to buy may have as much cut out as he pleases. Other Cooks shops are only for boyl'd meat or rice: their fruits which they pickle up in Vinegar being the only sawce which they have.

As for their Bread it is very white, for they have wheat enough to furnish the whole Kingdom. They bake every day, making up their Dow in the form of a thin Cake, throw'd over with Sesamum. They bake these Cakes in their Ovens in the ground, covering the batch over with little round flint stones, that are quickly hot and retain the heat. At Ispahan they make a great fire in an earthen pot, and when it is hot they spread the Dow against the sides of the pot. The Armenians make a sort of bread as thin as Paper, which they bake upon a thin Iron plate which is as thin as Paper. Their Plate and Dishes are of red Copper tinn'd within side. For they are forbid to make use of Silver by the Law of Mahomet. Nor does the King use any other then Gold Plate, of which he has great store. They have also a sort of Porcellane made at Kerman. To eat their broths, they make use of wood'n spoons: for as for their rice, which is thick, they take it up in their fingers, and wipe their hands upon their handkerchiefs.

The first thing set upon the Table is the Pipe, the Tobacco, and the distill of Coffee.

Coffee; and indeed thus it is that they begin all their debauches. They suck and smoak of their Tobacco through water in a long glass bottel, by which means it comes cool into their mouths: else they would never be able to take it all day long as they do. They sing very little in their Cups: but they recite a vast number of wicked Verses, which they rehearse with a great deal of gravity. They are so accustomed to take Tobacco, both men and women, that a poor tradesman that has not above five Sous to spend, will lay out three of them in Tobacco. If they had none, they say that they should not have damague, that is, gladness in their hearts. Many will confess that their excessive taking Tobacco is hurtful; but if you tell 'em of it, they answer in a word, Adedebound, 'Tis the custome.

Besides their Tobacco they have also Opium made of Poppies, cut as they grow, out of which they draw the juice and make it into Pills. They take no more at first than the head of a pin, increasing their dose by degrees, till they come to take the quantity of half a wall-nut. When they are come to that pitch they dare not give over, for fear of endangering their lives, or addicting themselves to drink wine. In their youth you shall see these Tberiakis or takers of Opium, with pale pensive and dejected countenances, and the use of their speech almost lost: If they omit to take for a day together this ill continued drug that heats their brains, and causes them to act ridiculously and to talk idly, when it has done working, they are as cold and stupid as before, which obliges 'em to take it again. For this reason they are short liv'd: or if they do live till forty, they complain heavily of the pains that proceed from the cold venome of the herb. They that have a mind to kill themselves, swallow a large piece, and drink Vinegar after it, to prevent the relief of any other Counterpoyson, and so they dye smiling.

They have another sort of drink to make themselves merry, which they call Kokemaar, compos'd of boyl'd Poppy seed. They take it in broth, and there are particular houses call'd Kokemaar Krone, where people meet to divertise those that see the ridiculous postures which that intoxicating drink causes them to shew. Before it works they quarrel with one another, and call one another all to naught, but never fight. When the drug begins to work, they grow friends; and some are for making complements, others for telling a long tedious story, which renders them very vain. They have also another sort of liquor, which is call'd Bongue, very bitter, being made of the leaves of Hemp and some other drug mix'd with it. It makes those that use it shamefully foolish and ridiculous, which is the reason the Law has forbid that and not the former. The Usbecks have brought into Persia, the Custome of taking in Pipes Tchoutherse, which is the flower or rather the woolly substance which is found in hemp-clothes. This fills the heads with strange conceits, sometimes pleasant and sometimes furious; those that take it being quite besides their senses for two or three hours.

Their Feasts are thus order'd: The guests come in the morning to the house whither they are invited and all the day long they spend their time in taking Tobacco and telling stories. Between whiles they have Sweetmeats, Coffee, and Fruits set before them. In the evening the Sofra is spread, and the table serv'd with boyl'd and roast. If the person that treats be of any quality, he has a kind of a Governour of his house, that sits upon his heels with a Ladle or great wooden spoon in his hand. Then the Inviter makes his complements to the chief of his guests, assuring him that the entertainment is only provided for him, only at his command he is ready to let the rest share with him. The Compliments being thus pass'd, the Governour of the House with his great Spoon puts rice and meat upon the little plates, which the servants present by equal portions to every one of the guests. Then they fall to, taking out the rice by handfuls, and the meat with their fingers. Sometimes they mix curdl'd milk with their rice and meat, and making up a lump of all together as big as a Tennis ball, put it all in their mouths at a time, which is the reason they never sit long at Table; one making room for another till they have all done: for as soon as one has done, another comes into his place without any farther Ceremony. They have several Liquors in the room in Porcelain Vessels, but at meals they only drink to drive down their meat and to prevent thirst. When all is done, they bring a Bason with an Ewre full of hot water to wash their hands and faces. After which the Inviter complements his guests, and every one returns home; at which time time the servants are very diligent to bring every man his shoes, in hopes of some little piece of silver.

The Armenians entertain their friends in the same manner, only that they begin their Feasts with a cup of strong water, and some sweet-meats, after which they give a couple of hard Eggs to every one of the guests. The Persians also have soon done, but the Armenians eat swift, and a long time without drinking, which they never do till the end of the meal. After they have given thanks and taken away the cloth, then they fall to drinking to excess. He that gives the entertainment never thinks he has done well, till his guests are not able to find the way out of the room, and the more they tumble about the room, the less he thinks he has spent his money in vain.

To conclude, the Persians are very Gentile, and afford their victuals with a free-will to all that will come and eat with them at Supper time: admiring at the custome of the Franks, who shut their doors when they sit down to their meals.

C H A P. XVIII.

Of the Marriages of the Persians.

THE Persians betroth their Children very young, that is at nine or ten years; but among the Armenians there are some marry'd and lye together at five or six. The Law of Mahomet allows them but four lawful Wives, whom they call Nekha. But there are others whom they call Amoutha or hir'd women, and of whom they may have as many as they can keep, and for so long time as they please, which is ratifi'd by the allowance of the Judge. They may also enjoy the Slaves whom they purchase. The Children both of the one and the other are accounted lawful, and inherit all alike, without the distinction of Elder or Younger; but two Daughters can have but the share of one boy. When the womans time that was hir'd is out, the man dismisses her, and she is oblig'd to stay forty days before she engage again, that it may appear whether she be with Child or no.

The man gives to the woman that he marries a Dowry assign'd upon his Estate, and sends her money and silks to make her cloaths. The maid also sends something to him, but very little, and all by the interposition and intercourse of the women. For the two parties never see one another. Upon the wedding day, they send to the Bridegrooms house, by the sound of Drums and Trumpets, certain Horses and Men laden with the Brides goods, which is many times done out of vain-glory, and more for shew then substance. The Bridegroom is led a foot, attended by several women with Tapers in their hands, and a noise of Drums and other Instruments marching before them. Being come to the door of the Bridegrooms House, if he have promis'd a larger Dowry to the women then he is able or willing to give, he keeps his door shut. The Parents of the Maid knock, and he declares he will not have her at that price. But at length after some contests on both sides they agree, and the Virgin enters with her Mother and all her Kindred. Then the Moullab reads the conditions of Marriage; which being done, the women retire into the inner part of the House, the men feasting by themselves, and the women by themselves.

This is all that is done upon the Wedding-day; but the following days are not always so pleasing, and it often follows that both parties do not agree; or that the husband misuses his wife. Then the women that requires separation, requires the Dowry promis'd her by her husband: which the man oft-times refuses, and if she persists in her demand, is many times so severely us'd by him, that she is constrain'd to cry, Peu Devils name let me go, I demand nothing of thee. Then they both repair to the Casi, or Cheit-Lesoon, who is a Doctor of the Law, and in his presence they discharge one another. This they may do by their Law three times.

After that, the same woman can never return to her Husband again.

The Children derive their Nobility from the Father, whither he be born of a Slave, or an Amoutha, or a Legitimate wife. The Nobility of the Persians which is call'd Negabet, is founded upon their being descended from Mahomet. They who claim that extraction, have the title of Mir or Prince: and their Daughters carry the appellation of Mirza or Princess. They are very numerous and very poor. But the title of Mir without a good Estate or high Employment signifies little or nothing.

○ H A P. XIX.

Of the Death and Burials of the Persians.

TIs the Custome among the Persians, that when the Patient lyes very dangerously ill, they light several fires upon the Terrass of the House, to give the People notice to pray for him. So soon as the breath is out of his body, the whole house rings with cries and lamentations, especially of the women who tear their hair, and shew such antick postures, that a man would think them possess'd. In the midst of their tears they make long repetitions of the worthy actions of the deceas'd, and every foot they set up a yelling. Then they go and advertize the Casi, that such a one is dead; to whom the Casi answers Soreboama Salamet-Basbet. May your head be in safety. In the mean while he seals a Licence to the Mourderchour, to take the body and wash it in a house which is built on purpose near a running water. After that come a great number of Moullah's, with the Ensigns of the Mosquee, which are long staves like Pikes, at the end whereof are thin plates of Iron and Latten, so weak that they bend downward with the least motion: the bodies of the slaves being wrapt about with certain pieces of Taffata. These Moullahs tear their throats crying out Alla, Alla, Alla, repeating nothing else, and dancing sometimes upon one foot and sometimes upon another; and because they that bawl loudest get the most money, they put their thumbs in their ears with their fingers upon their cheeks, and tear their throats with all the force they have. The body being wash'd, the cloaths of the deceas'd belong to the Mourderchour. When they carry the Beire, it is the custome that every one that meets it, proffers their shouldiers to help carry, while the others ease themselves; for which the Kindred of the deceas'd make some acknowledgment. If he be a person of Quality, all his Horses are bridl'd and saddl'd, and others perhaps borrow'd: One carries his Turban, another his Scimitar, another his Bow, another his Arrows, another his Buckler, and whatever else is of any use to set forth his Quality and his Courage. The biggest Church-yard that belongs to Ispahan, is Calreston; but there is not one handsome Tomb in it. The Armenians lay a great stone over the grave, and the rich set up an Arch with four Pillars, under which they eat and drink in the shade when they visit the Tombs of their Ancestors.

Their graves are six foot long, six foot deep, and two foot wide, wherein they lay the bodies with their faces turn'd toward Mecca; and then they set up two tiles of each side his face to keep the earth from falling upon it. If he be a rich man, or have been a stout Souldier, they bury with him his Turban, Scimitar, Bow and Arrows, and set Victuals by him; which part of the hole being made up with bricks, the rest is fill'd up with earth. The Moullah's alone return to the house of the deceas'd, where they have meat set before 'em, and are also farther pay'd for their singing and bawling. A while after the Kindred coming to visit the Heir, discourse him upon the contempt of the world, tell him that it is but as a Caravan, some of which arrive sooner at their Journeys end than others. Eight days after the Heir returns their visits. As for the Grandees they order in their Wills that their bodies shall be either carry'd to Mecca or Meshed.

As well the Persians as the Turks, believe that as soon as the grave is fill'd, that the two Angels Neguir and Manguer, revive the dead as far as his waist; ask him the reason of Faith, and which way he said his Prayers, and that according to his merits they use him well or ill. As for the torment of Souls before the Resurrection, that only consists in a grief for not having arriv'd to those perfections and Sciences to which they might have attain'd, and consequently for not having attain'd to that perfection which God requir'd of them. Others hold that the Souls of the unfortunate are tormented with Dreams and Visions; but that the Souls of the happy always enjoy the sight of pleasing objects; till the Sahab-el-zaman, or Master of time shall come to confirm the Law of Mahomet, who shall kill Dedgar, who is like our Antiebrist, with his own hand; at which time all then alive shall dye in an instant, and then shall happen the general Resurrection, which they call Moavedet-beebre. That the same Bodies and Souls shall unite to appear at the day of Judgment before the Throne of the great Judge of the world; and that to go thither they must pass over a bridge call'd Polserat, sharper then the edge of a razor, which nevertheless the Mussulmen shall pass over without any danger with the swiftness of a bird. But that misbelievers shall fall as soon as ever they set their feet upon it, and shall fall into a torrent of fire among a thousand Devils arm'd with Cramp Irons, Pincers, and tenter-hooks. So that it is a kind of a Proverb among the Persians, if a man cannot obtain of another the Justice of his bargain, or to yield to right, Well, says he, before thou passest Polserat, thou shalt restore it me double, for I will take hold of thy Coat, and hinder thee from getting over till thou hast given me satisfaction; But the craftier sort laugh at this, and make answer with a smile, Well, well, we will venture stumbling as we pass over Polserat. The Porter of Paradise whom they call Ras-suen shall open them the gate. There they shall sit upon the banks of the great Kausser, which is a fountain where their Prophet shall give them of the water to drink out of a Ladle, and that afterwards they shall have a great number of women created on purpose for them, with all sorts of most delicious food. And for fear of fouling this place of recreation and holiness with the excrements of eating and drinking, they say, that those things shall always evacuate in a perfum'd sweat, and that they themselves shall always remain in that condition. Others more refin'd, and not believing material enjoyments, affirm that Beatitude consists in the perfect knowledge of the Sciences; and for the senses they shall have their satisfaction according to their quality.

C H A P. XX.

I Set forth out of Ispahan the 24. of Feb. 1665. in the afternoon, and staid a League from the City, in a field whither some of my friends would needs accompany me. About ten a clock at night, I set forward again, and travell'd till break of day; and then I came to a place where the Radars kept guard half a league from a great Town call'd Ispshaneck, which you are to cross. About ten a clock in the forenoon I came to Mabiar, where there is a very good Inn. But the Land between this and Ispahan is all very barren and without wood.

The 26th. three hours after midnight, I set forward through a dry Plain, which begins to grow more fruitful, about a Leagues from Comshe a great City, where I arriv'd by eleven a Clock in the morning. In it are several Inns, and indifferent handsome ones, considering that they are built only of Earth. This City is compos'd of a row of Villages that extend about half a League in length. About three quarters of a League on this side the City stands a neat Mosquee with a pond full of fish. But the Moullahs will not permit you to catch any, saying that they belong to the Prophet to whom the Mosquee is dedicated. However because it is a shady place in the Summer, Travellers rather choose to lye by this pond, then to shut themselves up in the City.

The 27th I travell'd from four in the morning till ten in the afternoon, through a plain sow'd with store of grain, and lodg'd in an Inn call'd Maksonbegui.

The 28th I departed two hours after midnight, and after eight hours travel through a barren plain, I arriv'd at Yefdecas, a little City built upon a rock in the midst of a great Valley, and lodg'd in an Inn at the foot of the Rock. The same day in the morning I pass'd on to a neat house with fine Gardens call'd Amnebad; built by Iman-Kouli-Kan, Governor of Schiras.

The first of March, I departed an hour after midnight, and a little after I cross'd a short mountain, but so rugged and so craggie, that they have given it the name of Kotel-Innel-tebekeni, that is the Mountain that breaks the Horses shoes. The next day we pass'd by a scurvy Castle call'd Gombissala; then travelling through a flat Country, I came by ten in the morning to Debigherdou, or the Village of Wall-nuts. I endur'd very sharp weather all the morning, for all that Country, and that which I travell'd the next day, is very cold at some times of the year.

The second day, I travel'd from midnight till ten a clock in the morning, through the Snow over a barren Plain to come to Cuzkuzar, where there is a new Inn well built.

The third, I rode a horseback from five in the morning till noon, first over the same Plain by a Lake side in a very bad way cover'd with snow that hid the holes; then passing a tedious long and rugged mountain. I descended to a Village call'd Asepas, where there is to be seen an old ruin'd Castle upon the point of a Hill. The Inhabitants were all Georgians by descent, but now turn'd all Mahumetans. I met with wine and fish, in regard of the many Rivolets, but the Caravansira is old, and ill provided.

The fourth, setting out by day-break, I rode over a Plain, which Sha-Abbas the first gave the Georgians to till, and in eleven hours I came to Ondgiom, a large Village upon a River, over which there is a fair stone-bridge.

The fifth, I got a horseback by two a clock in the Morning, and had two leagues in the first place of deep miery way; afterwards I pass'd a steep Mountain, craggy and durty. I pass'd through a Village call'd Iman-Shade, from the name of one of their Prophets that lyes buried there, and gave the Mountain its name, being all cover'd with bitter Almond-trees. I travell'd sometime between rude and craggy rocks, after which I met with a small River, which runs to Mayn, a little City where I lodg'd in a fair Inn.

The sixth, I departed three hours after midnight, and travell'd through a large Plain encompass'd with high and rugged Mountains; upon one of which that is divided from the other, stood a Castle which they say was ruin'd by Alexander the Great, of which at present there does not remain the least sign or footstep. I cross'd the river of Mayne over two stone Bridges, and then came to Abgherne; a place that stands in a Plain where there is an Inn half built; so call'd by reason of a Spring of hot waters that rises not far from it. In the morning I pass'd over a fair and long Causey, call'd Pouligor, being above 500 paces long, and 15 broad divided also by certain Bridges, to give the water free passage, by reason the Country is very full of marshes. At the end of this Causey stands an Inn very well built, but the gnats that haunt it will not suffer it to be frequented. I pass'd along by the foot of a Mountain, and after three hours travel, I stopp'd a while at an Inn that stands at the foot of another steep and craggie mountain.

I arriv'd at Schiras about six a clock at night. But here give me leave before I enter the City, to make two observations, the one touching the Road from Ispahan to Schiras, the other concerning the ruins of Tche-elminar.

As to the Road from Ispahan to Schiras, observe that in winter time when the Snow is fallen, when you come to Yefdecas, you must of necessity leave the direct road, because it is impossible to pass the streights of those Mountains, which I have mention'd. Therefore you must keep the left hand road eastward, through the Plains, taking a guide along with you.

This way, which is the longer by two days journey, was formerly unknown, because of a River, that in one place beats upon a steep rock, and closes up the passage, But Iman-Kouli-Kan with a vast expence of time and money, caus'd a way way to be level'd out of the Rock about 15 or 20 foot above the River, which he secur'd to the water-side with a Wall three or four foot high. This way continues for half a league, and then you come to lye at a great Village in a Plain, where you take Guides to shew you the Fords of the River.

Having past the River, you cross over several fertile Plains water'd with great store of Rivers. Then you ascend a Mountain, from whence you have but a league and a half to Tche-elminar.

At the point of the Mountain, upon the right-hand of the great Road, are to be seen twelve Pillars still standing, that form a kind of a square. In the spaces of the Mountain are a great number of Niches, that are opposit to the Pillars, and were certainly the places where the ancient Persians put their Idols. Thence you come to Tche-elminar; where are to be seen a great many old Columns, some standing, and some lying upon the ground, and some ill-shap'd Statues, with little four-square dark rooms. All which together, easily perswades me, who have well consider'd the principal Pagods of India, that Tche-elminar was only a Temple formerly dedicated to Idolatrous worship. And that which confirms my opinion, is, that there is no place more proper for an Idolatrous Temple then this, by reason of the abundance of water. Besides, that the dark Rooms could be no other then the Chambers for the Priests; and where the Rice and Fruits that were the feigned nourishment of the Idols, were the better secur'd from gnats and flies.

Leaving Tche-elminar, you come to lye at a Village half a league farther, where is very good Wine. From thence to Schiras is a hard days journey; especially when the Snow begins to melt: for then the Road looks like a little Sea.

C H A P. XXI.

Of the City of Schiras.

THE City of Schiras lies in 78 degr. 15 min. of Longitude, and 29 deg. 36 min. of Latitude. It is seated in a plain that extends it self about four leagues from the North to the South, and from the West to the East about five leagues. Upon the South-east there is a Lake of salt water four leagues in compass: leaving the Plain as you travel to the South, you pass between two Mountains, which are not so close, but that they leave room for certain pleasant Valleys a league and a half wide.

The Soil about Schiras is good, and fruitful; and it is particularly famous for the most excellent Wines of all Persia. As for the City it self, there is nothing handsome in it: for it looks rather like a Town half ruin'd then a City. Formerly it was begirt with walls of Earth, which are now utterly decay'd. The Houses are of the same Earth dri'd in the Sun, and whiten'd over with lime; so that when it happens to rain, when the Earth comes to be well moisten'd, the Houses fall of themselves. Only the Colledg which Iman-Kouli-Kan built, and some of the Mosques are of Brick: and the best of those Mosques is call'd Sba-Sbiraque, which out of a particular devotion is kept somewhat better in repair. However, there is nothing in it worth taking notice of. Upon the North-east side, the City runs within a quarter of a league of the Mountain: and from a Stone-bridg, as you go out of the City to the foot of the Mountain, is a long Street in a straight line, where there stands a Mosque, built by Iman-Kouli-Kan. Without, it appears fair enough; but within, it falls to ruine. There is an Octagonal Piazza before the Gate, and in the middle of the Piazza an Octagonal Vase, which is fill'd by a little stream that runs through the Street from the Mountain. Both sides of the Street from the Mosque to the Mountain are wall'd in: and at certain spaces are great Gates one against another, with rooms over them; the Windows whereof open into the Gardens behind the walls: all along by which, runs a row of Cypress-trees in a direct line: and in the middle of the Street about about two hundred paces on this side the Mosquee, is another Vase, which receives the same water as it runs from the Mountain. This Street was made by Iman-Kouli-Kan, after he had cut the Mountain at the end of it, to shorten the way from Schiras to Ispahan.

There are in Schiras three or four Glass-houses, where they make great and small Bottles, to transport the Sweet-waters that are made in the City. There are also made the several sorts of Vessels wherein they pickle their fruits of all sorts, which they send in great quantities into India, to Sumatra, Batavia, and other places.

There is no Silk made, nor any other manufacture in Schiras: only there are some few Chites or Painted-cloaths made there, which nevertheless are very coarse, and in use only among the meaner sort.

As you go out of the City upon the North-west side, you meet with a long Alley or Walk, in three parts whereof are plac'd three Stones, which they call Mills. At the end of this walk is a Garden call'd Bay-Sba, or the King's Garden. Over the Gate whereof is a great Room half ruin'd: and at the end of a large Walk planted with Cypress-trees, stands a neat piece of building, but altogether neglected. Upon the left-hand whereof is a great Pond pav'd with Free-stone, being all the beauties of the Garden: which, it is true, was full of Fruit-trees, Roses and Jasmins; yet, for want of order, it look'd like a Wilderness.

From the Garden to the Hill is a Plain of two leagues long, and one broad; which is all but one large Vineyard belonging to several persons. Beyond the Vineyard rise very high Mountains, from whence fall several little Springs that form a River, which is call'd Bend-Emir, from the name of a Town where the biggest Spring rises. This River of Bend-Emir waters the whole Vineyard of Schiras; where it never rains from Spring till Autumn: which is the reason that in the Summer there is no water in the very Channel next the City.

Their Wines are the best in Persia; but there is not so great a quantity made as people imagin. For, of all this great Vineyard, and in all the places round about the City for four or five leagues together, good part of the Grapes are dri'd, and a greater quantity pick'd: and of the Wine, there are many Vessels full, which are burnt for the benefit of the poor Travellers, and Carriers, who find it a great refreshment to drink it with water.

Their Wine, as all other things, is sold by weight and not by measure. In the year 1666, a most plentiful year for Wine, the Provision of the King's House amounted to 50000 Mens of Keukne, or the ancient Men containing nine pound of ours, at sixteen ounces to the pound, (being the only weight for Wine,) and the King allows as much to the Franks, as for his own Household. The Jews of Schiras, who boast themselves of the Tribe of Levi, made above a hundred and ten thousand Mens, it being their chiefest livelihood; but the Governour of Schiras knows how to share with them in their profit. The whole account of Wine made at Schiras amounts to 200025 Mens, or 4125 Tuns, at three hundred pints to the Tun.

In Schiras is an ancient Mosquee, wherein is the Sepulcher of a Sadi, whom the Persians esteem the best of their Poets. It has been a very fair one, accompany'd with a large Building, which was once a Colledg; but it runs to ruine, as do also many other Edifices within the City. Just against this Mosquee you descend by a pair of Stairs into a large Well, at the bottom whereof is a Vase full of Fish, which no body dares to touch, it being Sacrileg to rob the Sadi of what belongs to him. A little beyond this Mosquee, upon a high Rock, stand the ruins of a Castle; and upon the top of all the Rock is a square Well cut out of the Rock. It is very deep, and ten or twelve foot broad: formerly, they told me, their Adulteresses were all thrown into it. There is one wonderful Well in this City; which is 15 years rising, and 15 years falling; that is, the water is one fifteen years rising to the top, and another fifteen years sinking to the bottom.

There are in Schiras two or three Bazars well built, through the midst whereof the water runs in a Channel.

To the South-west, a good league from the City, there is a little Hill divided from the great Mountain, upon which Hill are three Gates to be seen, the remainder of an Idolatrous Tempel. There were four Gates, but the South-Gate is tumbl'd down: the rest are standing, compos'd of three Stones: Upon both the Stones that make the Jaums, there are two figures in half Relief, with their faces one looking upon another, with their arms extended; one holding in his hand a Pan, out of which issues a flame of fire; and the other a Towel folded up. The other Statue holds as it were a Purse in one hand, and a bowl of Fire in the other; the Figures being as big as the Life, only their faces are spoil'd; and as for the other doors, they are both the same.

Two Musquet-shot from thence, in a plain, rises a little Mountain, from the North-side of which fall many Springs that meet in a large Pond full of Fish. Some high Trees grow there, to shade the Habitation of a Dervis that lives there. The place is pleasant, and all the Springs together fill a Channel large enough to water the neighbouring Fields. Here it was that certainly the ancient Idolaters came to wash, and thence went to the Temple to say their Prayers, and make their Offerings.

Half a league beyond, at the foot of a Mountain, is a place about 500 paces in compass, whence there fall a good number of Springs that meet in a Pond, environ'd with high Trees, and full of Fish. In one corner of the Mountain stand Figures, cut out of the Rock much bigger then the Life. The two which are uppermost look one upon another; and that upon the left-hand carries a large Turbant, such as the Grand Vizier of Constantinople wears when he goes to the Divan. From his Turbant to the middle of his Forehead, he was bound with the Tresses of his own hair, the ends whereof were fasten'd together with large Buckles behind in his neck. His habit was a Robe after the ancient fashion, with a kind of a Cutlace by his side. Nor did the opposite Statue much differ from this, only instead of a Turbant, he wore a kind of Miter upon his head. The two other Statues underneath the former, stretch'd forth their arms one to the other: the one representing a Man, the other a Woman. The Man seem'd to present the Woman a Nofegay of Flowers; but in truth it was a difficult thing to discern them, in regard they were both cover'd with a Fig-tree that grew just before them out of the Rock.

About two thousand paces farther, there is a Lake of salt water about ten leagues in compass, which is fill'd by several Springs that fall from the Mountains: and here it is that the people make a great quantity of Salt. There runs into it also a salt River, over which you cross upon a large stone-Bridge about three miles from Schirat, in the way to Bander-Abassi.

Half a league from the City are two remarkable Wells: the one upon the top of the Mountain, the other upon the descent, cut out of the Rock: both of an extraordinary depth. There is no water in either, because they are half full of Stones, which they that come to see the Wells, throw into 'em. There are also to be seen the Ruines of a Castle formerly built there for the Guard of the Highways. But since Iman-Kouli-Kan made the new way, he caus'd all those Fortresses to be defac'd, as being expensive to the King, and burthensome to the Merchant, from whom the Guards exacted Toll in those places. Now all the ways are free, and the Merchants travel securely.

About half a league from the City, toward the North, upon the brow of a high Mountain, stands a little Mosquee, like a Hermitage: and fifteen foot below it gulches out a fair Spring, which is the best in the places neer to Schirat. Neer to it is a little place encompass'd with a Pale, with four Pillars that uphold a Ceiling. Here it is that a Dervis sits, and entertains all them that come to visit him, to whom he presents Tobacco, according to the custom of the Countrey. This place is one of the best Prospects in all Syria, from whence you behold one way all the plain of Schirat, and all the City from one end to the other, with the Gardens. But people go not thither for the fair Prospect, or to visit the Dervis, but to admire a Cypress-tree not above three or four paces from the Prospect, planted among the Rocks; and of that bigness, that four men can hardly fathom it: it is proportionably high, and is look'd upon to be the fairest Cypress-tree in all Persia, where so many grow besides. This Tree is fed by the Spring which I have mention'd, falling some eight or ten foot below into a Cistern, which is always full; whence through a Canal it runs into a Garden in the plain some seven or eight eight hunder'd paces from the Mountain. In this Garden are to be seen the remains of a Palace of one of the ancient Kings of Persia: yet what is still to be seen, does not declare it to have been very magnificent. The King was call'd Padsha quieshel, the Scald-pated King. A thing not to be wonder'd at, in regard there are few Persians but such as either have or have had scald heads.

Two leagues from Schirat, to the South-west, at the foot of the great Mountain, stands a Hermitage, call'd Pir-Bouns, where three or four Dervis live, as being a pleasant place; for the Dervis always choose out the most delightful places to pitch their Tents in: where they sit smoaking their Pipes with that gravity, that if the King himself should come by, they would not stir to give him reverence. That which adds to the pleasure of that Hermitage, is a fair Spring of water, that refreshes the Garden, and the number of fair Trees that are about it.

About a quarter of a league from the City, toward the West, is to be seen a Church-yard encompass'd with Walls; in the middle whereof, looking toward Mecca, stands a Monument very much frequented by the Dervis, and other devout people, who say their Prayers there, it being the Sepulcher of Hougia-Hafiz, for whom they have a very great veneration. The year of his decease is set down upon his Tomb; being in the year 1381: and he purchas'd that great esteem among the Persians, for having compos'd a great Book of Morality, and for that he was also one of the best Poets of his time. He has left one great Poem behind him in the praise of good Wine; which has caus'd many to aver, that Hougia-Hafiz was no good Mussul-man, in regard he has so highly prais'd a thing which is so strictly forbid'n by the Law of Mahomet.

Near to the Church-yard is a fair Garden, which men go to see for the beauty of the Cypress-trees, which are its chief ornament. They are to be admir'd for their height and bigness, among which, there is one that was planted by the hand of Sha-Abbas the Great himself, in the year 1607; and it may well deserve to have been planted by the hand of a Monarch; for it was bigger then the rest that had been planted above a hunder'd years before.

Without the City, upon the North-side, at the foot of the Mountain, is a Garden belonging to the ancient Kings of Persia, call'd Bag-Firdous. It is full of Fruit-trees, and Rose-trees in abundance. At the end of the Garden, upon the descent of a Hill, stands a great piece of Building, and below a large Pond affords it water. The rich Inhabitants of Schiras have been formerly very curious to have fair Gardens, and have been at great expences to that purpose. But neither at Schiras, nor at Ispahan, is there any thing that may compare with those lovely Paradises of France and Italy.

There are many Inns in Schiras, but the Franks generally lodg at the Convent of the Carmelite Friars; and they that would be more private, lodg at another House that belongs also to the same Friars, which they would fain sell, as being a charge to 'em at this time.

C H A P. XXII.

THE sixth of March, by eight of the Clock in the morning, I departed from Schiras; and after six hours travel through the plain that continues fertile for a league together beyond the City, I came to an Inn call'd Badaadgi. The water is bad; being as it were luke-warm. Here cold weather begins to cease. The next day I set out by break of day, and came to a large and well-built Inn, only it stood remote from any Town. It is call'd Mouzafferi, and is the only place in Persia where I met with black Saligots, or Water-nuts, as big and as good as ours in Dauphine. The Countrey breeds nothing but Goats and Sheep: and about two leagues off runs a River along by the Mountain to the West.

The 18th I departed by day-break, and travell'd eleven hours through a stone-Countrey, cover'd with bitter Almond and Turpentine-Trees. I lodg'd in a fair Inn, call'd Paira, near to a River that comes from the West, and makes the Countrey fertile. There is some Wood in the Valleys, and some Villages appear on the other side of the River toward the South.

The 19th I set out by four of the Clock in the morning, and travell'd along a Valley, wherein were many Villages receiving the benefit of the River last mention'd. About eight in the morning I stopt at an Inn built in an Octagonal form, a good league from the River, with several Villages between. The name of the Inn is Kaffer.

The 20th I set out two hours after midnight, and travell'd till ten in the morning through a dry Valley. By the way I met several Shepherds and Herdsmen, who were forsaking the hot Countreys, and driving toward Schiras for coolness.

They that travel upon their own Horses, and would see one of the richest parts of Persia, and some Antiquities, setting out from Kaffer, instead of following the Caravan-road, take the right-hand way by the side of the River, that runs a league and a half from the same Inn. When you have past the River, the way is very straight, and lies for two leagues together through a steep Rock, the Mountain upon the right, and the River upon the left, where there is not room in some places for two Horses to ride a-brest. All along this way, toward the top of the Mountain, are little paths that lead to Caverns, some of which are so large, that they will contain two or three thousand men. Having past this way, you come into a Plain call'd Dadivan, four or five leagues in circuit; the greatest part of which is planted with Orange-trees, Citrons, and Granats. Some of these Orange-trees two men can hardly fathom, being as high as our Walnut-trees; and this is one of the most delicious situations in all Persia. I have travell'd through it several times, and sometimes only to divertise my self. The rest of the Plain is sow'd with Rice and Wheat. You set up your Tents under these Trees, and then the Countrey people bring Provision of several sorts, especially Partridges, Hares, and wild Goats. The River that crosses the Plain is full of Carps, Barbels, Pikes, and Grey-Fish. I remember one time a Countrey-man carri'd me down to the water, and before my face took up a Fish with his hand. He was so nimble at it, that having caught one which he did not think big enough, he threw it back again, and took up another. Now in regard that Travellers generally stay about ten or twelve days in that place, the Tumblers that live thereabouts, fail not to come and give you a Visit, to shew ye some of their tricks, and to tast your Schiras Wine. The English and Hollanders usually spend the end of the Summer in this Plain, for the benefit of the River, and the Trees: which become so large and fair, by means of the River, which the Countrey-men bring in by Canals, and shut it up in Ponds, among the Trees, to water their Grounds; which is all the good this River does in Persia: for all the rest of its course is through cragg'd Rocks, and salt Marshes.

The 20th of March, by ten in the morning, I came to an Inn which was call'd Moushek, which is a lone-House at the foot of a Rock. There is a Spring about five hunder'd paces from it, but the water is hot, and has a sulphury taste; so that the Cattel will hardly drink it. Therefore you must go to a Cistern about two Musquet-shot from the Inn, where there is one newly set up, instead of another that was there before, into which a Jew once chanc'd to fall in, and was therefore broken by the superstitious Mahometans.

Three quarters of a league from Moushetz are two roads that lead to Lar, the one for the Camels, the other for the Horses and Mules. The first is the longest by three days journey, and is call'd the Road of the Desert; for after you have past a great Town inhabited only by Camel-Masters, where you lye the first night, between that and Lar, you shall meet with nothing of Houses but only Herdsmens Tents, that feed sometimes in one place, sometimes in another. Upon the Camels Road there are another sort of Fowl like the great Partridges in their bodies, but their legs and feet resemble those of wild Ducks. The Camels take this Road, because it is impossible for them to pass the Mountain Jarron, over which the Horses and Mules are hardly able to travel.

I set out from Moushek the 21st of March, at two in the morning, and having travell'd till eight through a plain, but stony Countrey, I came to the little City of Jarron, which is rather to be call'd a Forrest of Palm-trees that bear excellent Dates. I lodg'd in an Inn five hunder'd paces from the City, and staid there two days.

The 24th, setting out presently after midnight, I travell'd a good hour, and then I began to mount the steep Mountain of Jarron, which is very high, and very long; but the descent is the most dangerous that ever I saw in all my Travels; and besides that, the Moon did not shine. Being at the top, after you have descended three or four hunder'd paces, you meet with a Bridg of one Arch, that reaches from one Mountain to another; a bold piece of Architecture, not enough to be admir'd, being rais'd at the charges of Iman-Kouli Kan for the benefit of Travellers. Being come to the bottom of this, you must pass two others as steep in their ascent as in the descent; upon the top of one of which stands a Cistern, which, though it be very large, is generally emptied by the end of the Summer. Upon these Mountains there is such an infinite quantity of Partridg that a man cannot miss that will but shoot. By eight in the Morning I came to an Inn which is call'd Shakal, which is a lone House in a Desert Countrey, but stor'd with bitter Almond-trees, and Turpentine-trees. Approaching neer to the Inn, you meet with two or three Cisterns, which are a great comfort to Travellers, water being very scarce upon this Road. There are at Shakal nine or ten Radars for the Guard of the Road, who are also Masters of the Inn: So soon as you are alighted, they ask you if you will eat any Kid, being sure of their blow, and having no more to do but to go to the Mountain and fetch one, where they swarm. There are store of Partridges, which are almost as big as Pullets; of which you may easily kill as many as you please.

The 25th I travell'd five hours, from morning till noon. An hour after I took Horse, I met with a Mountain, the descent whereof was very steep. They call it the Mountain of Hushen, at the foot whereof is a Fountain of excellent water. A good league farther you meet with a fair Inn call'd Mouzeré, in the midst of a pleasant Grove, where there is an excellent Spring of water; but because there is no food to be had, you must go as far as Detadombé, a Village seated in a plain. A quarter of a league on this side, upon the top of a Mountain, appears the ruins of an old Castle; the Village it self being surrounded with Palm-trees. The Inn is a good one, provided with a very good Cistern.

The 25th I travell'd through a plain for three hours, and stopt at Banarow, a little City well built at the foot of a high Mountain; upon which appears the remains of a large Castle. Banarow is the Frontier Town of the Province of Fars, bordering upon the Province of Lar.

The 26th I departed an hour after midnight, and travell'd till nine in the morning, partly through the Plain, and partly through the Mountains, where I saw an old Tower for the guard of the Road. I staid at Bibry, a little City seated upon a plain, that borders upon a high Mountain. The Inn is new, and very magnificently cently built by the Mother of Aimas, Kan of Lar, when the great Shā-Abbas took this Countrey from the Gaires, whom he constrain'd to turn Mahometans.

The 27th I set out at four of the Clock in the morning, and about seven I past through a Village seated in a small plain. A league from thence I lodg'd in an Inn call'd Pai-Cotali; that is to say, the foot of the Mountain, as being built at the foot of the Mountain. From thence to Lar is not above four or five hours travelling; but the way is very bad, and several swift Torrents are to be past over.

You may take another Road from Bibry, upon the right-hand toward the West; it is the shorter way by two or three leagues; but so bad, and so narrow, that in many places two Horsemen cannot ride a-breast, being for the most part all Rocks and Precipices.

Lar is the Capital City of the Province of the same name, which formerly bore the title of a Kingdom. It is but of an ordinary bigness, enclos'd on both sides with high Mountains, being built round about a Rock, upon which there stands a Castle of Free-stone, wherein the King keeps a Garrison. The whole Country is very hot, nor have they any water but Rain water, which they preserve in Cisterns; and which sometimes causes a wide Torrent that runs by one side of the City, and falls from a Cascade two stories high, made of Free-stone. In the City and parts adjacent, grow a great number of trees, especially Date trees and Tamarisk. The Gardens also and Mountains are full of Orange trees.

There are but two Inns in Lar, the one within the City, which is not a very good one; the other at the end of the City towards Ormuz, which would be convenient, but that it is always afloat when the Rains fall; for which reason the Franks generally lye at the Hollanders House at the end of the City. And there is a necessity for staying at Lar, to change the Camels; for the Camels that come from Ispahan can go no further; every City having their particular priviledges. Which sometimes proves prejudicial to the Merchant, in regard the Governour will delay the change of the Camels till he is presented.

The Fortrefs of Lar takes up the whole surface of the top of the Rock; and there is but one way to climb it up, with great difficulty. It is more long than broad; and the four corners are fortifi'd with four Bastions, or Bulwarks, between which are rais'd several Towers, for the Souldiers Lodgings. That Fortrefs is the Royal Prison, whither the King sends such Prisoners as he takes in war, or surprizes by stratagem. I met with two there, one a Prince of Georgia, the other of Mengrelia. The two Princes had each of them a Toman a day allow'd them, and ten or twelve Servants to wait upon them. Upon one of the corners of the Castle, toward the West, was built a Banquetting House with three or four Chambers. In the middle of the Court stands the Magazine, full of Bows and Arrows, Bucklers and Muskets, enough to arm fifteen hundred men. For the Inhabitants of the Province, but more especially of the City of Lar, are accounted the best Musqueteers in Persia, and the best at making the Barrels of Muskets, all but the Breach, which they know not how to order so well as we. The Governours House answers to the great Road; but there is nothing at all of neatness without, only before the door there is a good handsome Court, about sixty paces square, and clos'd in with Walls, which leads you into two large Bazars of good Stone, very well arch'd.

The most part of the Inhabitants of Lar are Jews, who are famous for several Silk Manufactures, especially for making neat Girdles. The Countrymen wear upon their heads a kind of a felt of fine wool, and very well wrought. It resembles a Cap not yet shap'd, with four Corners behind, and cut on the sides; and these sorts of Caps are made at Kerman.

There are an infinite number of Cisterns, as well within the City, as in the parts adjacent; and all but little enough, in regard that sometimes it does not rain for three years together. When the Rains fall they do not fill their Cisterns the first day, but rather cover them quite up, till the earth be well soak'd. Now for the distribution of this water they take an excellent course; for they never keep open above three Cisterns at a time; and when they do op'n them, the Governour or some other person appointed for that purpose, is present; so precious is water.

in that place, though never so bad. The water thus standing in the Cisterns sometimes for many years together, breeds worms, so that whither you strain it, or boil it, there will appear a kind of foulness in it, which is the seed of these worms. And this corruption it is that breeds worms in the legs and feet of men; which puts me in mind, that after my return to Paris, the fifth time of my travelling, I had one come out of my left foot an Ell an a half long, and another from under the ankle of my right foot half an Ell long.

The first of April I set out from Lar by five in the morning, and travell'd till three in the afternoon, through a barren stony Country, except it were only one Village call'd Tcherkah, near to which I met with some Corn-land, and several Palm-trees. I lodg'd at a little Inn call'd Shamzenghi. It is low, built like a Cross, with four doors to receive the cool winds every way. All the Inns are built in this fashion between this and Bander, and near to one another for the ease of Travellers. As for the Beasts, they lye without, for they have no Stables. All the Houses from Lar to Ormus are built after one manner. For there is a kind of a Pipe, like a Chimney, that runs from the bottom to the top to gather wind.

The second I left Shamzenghi about four in the afternoon, because the heat is cool'd by a gentle breeze toward the evening. Three hours I travell'd through a barren Plain, afterwards over most fearful Rocks, and about ten at night I came to Cormout, a great Village well stor'd with Palm-trees.

From Lar to Cormout is the worst way in all Persia. For many times there is no water to be found.

The third, I parted from Cormout a little after midnight; and having travell'd seven hours in very bad way, full of great stones and filthy puddles, I came to a new Inn call'd Tenquidalen. In the middle of it is a little vase of running water, fed by a little stream that falls from the Mountain. But the water being something brackish, they have since that built a very fair Cistern. They also broach'd the Mountain to bring the water into a Plain, which was barren before, but is now fruitful, and beautifi'd with two good Villages. This was done by a rich Merchant, whose Children enjoy the Revenues of both.

The fourth, I set forward an hour after midnight, and travell'd through an uninhabited Countrey, full of wide Torrents when the rain falls. There are but two small Inns upon the Road, and about eight in the morning I arriv'd at that which they call Gourba-Sargbant. It was built with the Money which a Merchant of Ormus left for that purpose; whose strength fail'd him in that very place, for want of a resting place. This Inn is not far from a Village that stands upon the Mountain to the North.

The fifth, setting out a little after midnight, I travell'd till seven in the morning through a dry and desert Countrey, yet stor'd with Lentisk trees, and lay at a good Village call'd Cauvrestan, where the people were mowing large Fields of Barly. Here, if the Inn be full, you may lye at the Countrey-mens Houses, who are accustomed to entertain Travellers, and get well by it. This place is famous for water-Melons, as big as our Pumpkins; and are the best in all Persia. The meat is very red, and as sweet as Sugar, which is a great refreshment to Travellers. The Kelonter of the place gave me two Raddishes, one weighing 30, the other 45 pounds, and were very good meat.

The 6th I set out after midnight, and travell'd till it was day through plains of Sand, over which it is impossible to find the way without a guide. About three a Clock in the morning I cross'd over two Bridges joyn'd together by a long Causey. Before I came to the first, I rode over another for a good quarter of a league, which Causey runs on a great way to the second Bridg, under which flows a salt River; the shoar of which is full of moving sands; so that before those Bridges were made, it was dangerous to foard it without a guide.

This Causey and the two Bridges were made and built by a Persian, whose name was Aly; who wanting employment at home, apply'd himself to the King of Golconda, who lik'd him so well, that he made him General of his Army. Being thus advanc'd, he also turn'd Merchant, and trading first with one Vessel, then with two, got a great Estate. At length, all that he had thus got in forty years, to get himself a name in Persia, he employ'd in making this Causey and the two Bridges.

These

These Bridges are both built over a River that comes from toward Kerman, and is swell'd by other streams that fall from the Mountains with a great noise and discharges it self into the Persian Gulph, neer to Bander Congo; but becomes brackish by passing through Mountains that are nothing but Salt.

From the great Bridge to Guitchi is one of the most pleasant Countries in all Persia, being a continu'd Grove. Guitchi is a place accommodated with two Inns, one a very fair one, and convenient; the other very ill seated, by reason of the dust that continually annoys it standing upon a sandy ground. It stands neer ten or twelve Arabian Tents; so that as soon as you come to the Inn, the Arabian Women presently bring Milk and Butter, and other refreshments.

A league and a half from Guitchi you meet with two Roads, one upon the left-hand that seems more beaten, the other upon the right. There a man may easily be deceiv'd that has no guides. For the left-hand way is a dangerous passage, and a kind of a continu'd Labyrinth among Rocks and Precipices. The right-hand way, which is the best, is all upon the sand to Bander-Abassi, and is usually a days journey. You meet with two Inns by the way, the last of which is call'd Bend-Ali, built by the Sea-side.

From Bend-Ali to Bander-Abassi, is but a little more then two leagues through a Countrey abounding in Palm-trees.

C H A P. XXIII.

Of the Island of Ormus, and of Bander-Abassi.

O Rmus is an Island in 92. d. 42. m. of Longitude, and in 25. d. 30. m. of Latitude. It lies at the mouth of the Persian Gulph, two good Leagues from the firm Land. There is neither tree nor herb that grows in it: for it is all over cover'd with Salt, which is very good and as white as snow. And as for the black shining Sand-dust of Ormus, it is very much us'd for standishes.

Before the Portugueses came to Ormus, there was a City where the Kings of Ormus, who were also Kings of Larr, resided. When the Portugals took it there were in it two young Princes, Sons of the deceased King, whom they carri'd into Spain. Where, in regard they were handsomely proportion'd, though somewhat swarthy, the King entertain'd them very kindly, and gave them an honourable allowance. One day that he had shew'd them the Escorial, and all the chief pieces of Architecture in Madrid, the King ask'd them what they thought of living in Spain. To whom they answer'd, that they had seen nothing but what was worthy admiration, but then fetching a deep sigh, and perceiving the King desirous to know the meaning of it, they gave him to understand that it was for grief that they must never more sit under their own Tree. For near to the City of Ormus was a Bannians tree, being the only tree that grew in the Island.

The Portugals being masters of the Island from an ill-built City, reard it to that hight of Magnificence which that Nation admires; so that the very bars of their doors and windows were all gilt. The Fortrefs was a noble thing, and in good repair: and they had also a stately Church dedicated to the Virgin, where they were also wont to walk. For other place of promenading they had none. Since the Persians took it, the Castle indeed stands in good repair, with a Garrison in it: but the City is gone to ruine; for the Dutch carried most of the stones away to build Battavia.

Between the Island of Ormus, and the Continent the Sea is not very deep; for the great ships that sail in and out of the Gulf, pass by the other side of the Island. As for the Fortrefs which stands upon a poynt of the Island, it is almost encompass'd with the Sea, and lyes right over against Persia.

Bander-Abassi, so call'd because the great Sha-Abbas the first brought it into reputation, is at present a City reasonably well built, and stor'd with large warehouses, over which are the lodgings of the Merchants. While the Portugueses kept Ormus, though they liv'd in the City, all the trade was at Bander-Abassi, as being the most secure Landing-place upon all the Coast. About 15 years ago it was an op'n town, but because it was an easie thing then to get into the Town, and rob the the Custome-house in the night, it has bin since enclos'd with walls. To this place come, all the ships, that bring Commodities from India for Persia, Turkie, or any part of Asia or Europe. And indeed it would be much more frequented by the Merchants from all Regions and Countries.

But the Air of Bandar is so unwholesome and so hot, that no strangers can live there, in probability of health, unless it be in the months of December, January, February and March; though the Natives of the Country may perhaps stay without prejudice to the end of April. After that they retire to the cooler Mountains, two or three days journey off, for five or six months, where they eat what they gain'd before. They that venture to stay at Gomron during the hot weather, get a malignant Fever, which if they scape death, is hardly ever cur'd. However it bequeaths the yellow Jaundies during life to the party. March being pass'd the wind changes, and blowing at west south west, in a short time it grows so hot and so stifling, that it almost takes away a mans breath. This wind is by the Arabians call'd Et-Samiel, or the poysonous wind, by the Persians Bade-Sambour, because it suffocates and kills presently. The flesh of them that are thus stiff'd feels like a glewie fat, and as if they had been dead a month before.

In the year 1632. riding from Ispahan to Bagdat, I and four more Persian Merchants had bin stiff'd but for some Arabians that were in our Company. For when they perceiv'd the wind, they caus'd us to light, lye down upon our bellies and cover our selves with our Cloaks. We lay so for half an hour, and then rising we saw our horses were in such a sweat, that they were hardly able to carry us. This happen'd to us two days journey from Bagdat. But this is observable, that if a man be in a Boat upon the water when the same wind blows, it does no harm though he were naked at the same time. Sometimes the wind is so hot that it burns like Lightning.

And as the Air of Gomron is so bad and dangerous, the soil is worth nothing. For it is nothing but Sand, nor is the water in the Cisterns very good. They that will be at the charge fetch their water from a fountain three leagues from Bander, call'd the water of Iffin. Formerly there was not an herb to be seen: but by often watering the ground, Lettice, Radish and Onions have begun to grow.

The People are swarthy, and wear nothing about them but only a single shirt. Their usual dyet is dates and fish. Which is almost the dyet of their Cattel, for when they come home from browsing the barren bushes, they give them the heads and guts of their fish boyl'd, with the kernels of the Dates which they eat.

The Sea of Bander produces good Soles, good Smelts and Pilchards. They that will have oysters must have 'em caught on purpose, for the people eat none.

Upon Land they want neither for wine of Schiras nor Yesd; nor for Mutton, Pigeons and Partridge, which are their ordinary dyet.

There are two Fortresses, one upon the East, the other toward the West. The Town increases in trade and building, and fills with inhabitants, who build their houses with the remaining ruins of Ormus.

The reason why the Trade is settl'd rather at Bander Abassi, then at Bander Congo, where the Air is good and the Water excellent, is because that between Ormus and Congo lie several Islands, which make the passage for ships dangerous, besides that the often change and veering of the wind is requir'd: neither indeed is there water enough for a Vessel of 20 or 25 guns. Then the way from Congo to Lar is very bad. From Bander Abassi, to Lar it is very good, and provided with good Inns.

From the day that a Merchant takes up money at Gomron, he is bound to return it in three months, and the change goes from six to twelve per Cent. When the Goods come to Ispahan or any other place, the Merchant is not to touch them, till he has pay'd the money which he borrow'd, unless the Creditor will trust him farther. Some Turkish and Armenian Merchants take up money at Gomron to pay it at Suratt; where they take up other money for Ispahan; at Ispahan for Erzerom or Bagdat, paying the old debt with the new, sums which they take up in each place. The money taken up at Erzerom is paid at Bursa, Constantinople or Smyrna. Money taken up at Bagdat is paid at Aleppo.

I always made accompt, that to take up money at Golconda for Ligorn or Venice, at change for change, the money returns at the cheapest rate, to 95 per Cent. but more oftentimes it amounts to a hundred.

C H A P. XXIV.

All this while the Men ride upon Horses, and the goods are carri'd by Camels.

The City of Candahar is the chief of one of the Conquer'd Provinces of Persia; having been often the occasion of war between the Kings of Persia and India. At length Sha Abbas became Master of it, the Prince that then reign'd there, choosing to put himself under the Protection of the King of Persia rather than of great Mogul: but upon this condition, that the Governour should be always one of his race. And therefore Alimerdan-Kan was the Son of the last Prince of Candahar. That Prince left behind him such a vast Treasury, that his Plate was was all of Gold, and he had so much Gold in his Coffers, that when he went to the Great Mogul he would not accept of any thing for his maintenance, but contented himself with one of the highest Dignities in the Empire, which he enjoy'd till his death. At Jehanabad he built a most neat House, with a fair Garden upon the River.

He got his wealth in some measure, for the greatest part came by Inheritance, by the great advantages which he made of the Caravans that then pass'd oft'ner through Candabar then they do now adays. For by delaying the Merchants at the Custom-house, and by treating them himself, and receiving treatments from them again, he caus'd them to spend their Provisions, which they were forc'd to recruit again at Candabar.

The Grand Sha Abbas left the peaceable Possession of Candabar to Sha Sefi his Grand-child. In whose time Alimerdan-Kah deliver'd it up to the Grand Mogul. Sha Abbas the Second retok it in the year 1650. Whereupon Shah-jehan sent his eldest Son to drive him out. But though his Army consisted of three hundred thousand men, yet the place was so well defended that he lost the best part of his Army before it. The next year Shah-jehan sent another Army under the Command of Sultan-Suzah, but he had no better success than his Brother. Thereupon Begum Sahib, Shah-jehan's eldest Daughter, and passionately belov'd by him even to Incest, bearing the greatest sway in the Kingdom, and having a Vast Treasure, rais'd an Army at her own charges, and made Aurengzeb Commander of it. After many assaults, Aurengzeb discoursing with his Generals one day who should have the honour if he took the City, and being told that his Sister would have the honour in regard she had rais'd the Army, the Prince either jealous of his Sister, or else not loath to give occasion of being enviy'd by his Brothers, assaulted it no more, and when the rains came, rais'd his siege.

Thus I have finish'd the most considerable Observations as well in reference to Turkie as to Persia. I have been curious to understand things, and have lookt with a strict eye upon them: and I am oblig'd to inform the Reader, that he must not travel into Asia, in expectation of mending his experience in any of the nobler Arts of Painting, Sculpture, Goldsmiths work, or Turning. As for the Coverlets, Embroideries, Tissues of Gold and Silver, which are made in Persia, and which we admir'd formerly in France, all these give place to our new manufactures. Inasmuch that the Persians themselves admire the rich goods of Europe, and when we carry any thither, they are immediately bought up by the King and the Nobility. They neither understand any thing of Architecture: nor is there any thing in all Asia that equals the Riches and Beauty of the Louvre, or of any other of the Kings houses in France, which infinitely excell in workmanship all the magnificence of the Eastern Monarchs. Which has made me with astonishment admire that so many Travellers have ascrib'd to Persia and other Regions of Asia, those beauties for which they were never beholding either to Art or Nature. For if all they have said had been true, those wonders could never have escaped my sight; and I dare assure the Reader that I have describ'd the naked truth of things as really they are.

Of the PIECES of

Gold, Silver and Copper:

AND OF

The Sorts of Shells and Almonds that pass for MONEY over all ASIA.

Half-Larin, Fig. 2.

HIS Money (Fig. 1.) is call'd Larin; and signifies the same with our Crowns. The Five Pieces are as much in value as one of our Crowns; and the Ten Half-Larins as much. Only the Five Larins want in weight Eight Sous of our Crown. This is that which the Emirs, or Princes of Arabia take for the Coining of their Money; and the profit which they make by the Merchants that travel through the Desert, either into Persia or the Indies.

For then the Emirs come to the Caravans, to take their Tolls, and to change their Crowns, Reals, or Ducats of Gold, for these Larins. For they must of necessity pass that way. And they must use very smooth words to boot; for there is nothing to be got by rough Languages. If they see the Merchants will not change their Money, then will they refuse to take their Toll; but making as if they had not time to cast up the accompt, they go a hunting, and leave the Merchants fifteen or twenty Days without saying any thing more to them; while they in the mean time spend their Provisions, not knowing where to get more. If the Caravan goes on without paying their Tolls, these Arabian Princes will either cut them in Pieces, or take away their Camels, or rob them of all they have, as they have several times done. In one Journey that I made, one of these Princes kept us one and twenty days; after which we thought our selves happy to be quit of him, when we had given him whatever he demanded. If these five Larins did but weigh as much as the Crown, or Real of Spain, the Merchants would never be much troubled. But when they come to Persia, or the Indies, they must carry their Money to the Mint, as I have said in another place, and lose above eight Sous in a Crown, which amounts to 14 per Cent. As for what remains, the Larins are one of the ancient Coins

The Author not having given an account of the weight or fineness of the Coins he treats of, but having only express'd their value in French Livres, it is thought fit for the better reduction thereof into English Coin, to advertise, That Three French Livres make a French Crown, which passes in Exchange from 54 pence to 58 pence half-penny; so that a French Livre may be in value as the Exchange goes, from 18 pence to 19 pence half-penny. And twenty Sous make a Livre.

of Asia; and though at this day they are onely currant in Arabia, and at Balsara, nevertheless, from Bragdar to the Island of Ceylan, they traffick altogether with the Larin, and all along the Persian Golf; where they take 80 Larins for one Toman, which is 50 Abassi's.

ALL the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Territories of the Great Mogul, is refined to the highest perfection before it be coined into Money.

The Roupy of Gold weighs 2 Drams and a half, and 11 Grains, and is valued in the Country at 14 Roupies of Silver. We reckon the Roupy of Silver at 30 Sous. So that a Roupy of Gold comes to 21 Livres of France; and an Ounce of Gold to 58 Livres, and 4 Deneer's. This Gold is like that which we buy at 54 Livres an Ounce. And if you bring this Gold in Ingots, or Ducats of European Gold, you shall have always 7 and a half profit; if you can scape paying any thing to the Custom-houses. The Half-Roupy comes to 10 Livres 10 Sous; and the Quarter-Roupy to 5 Livres 5 Sous. As I have said, you must reckon the Silver Roupy at 30 Sous, though it weigh not above 3 Drams; whereas our pieces of 30 Sous weigh 3 Drams, and half 4 grains; but the Roupy is much the better Silver. In a word, they that understand Traffick well, and carry hence Gold or Silver to the Territories of the Great Mogul, get always 7 or 8 per Cent. profit, provided they take care to shun the Custom-houses. For if you pay them, the 7 or 8 per Cent. which you might make profit, goes to them; and so the Roupy comes to 30 Sous, the Half to 15, and the Quarter to 7 and a half, the eighth Part to 3 Sous and 9 Deneers.

As for their Copper Money, sometimes 'tis worth more, sometimes less, as Copper comes to the Mint. But generally the biggest sort is worth 2 Sous of our Money, the next 1 Sous, the next to that 6 Deneers.

As for their Shell Money, the nearer you go to the Sea, the more you give for a Pecha, for they bring them from Maldives. Fifty or sixty of these make a which is that piece of Coin that is worthbut 6 Deneers.

For their Money of Mamoudi's, half Mamoudi's, and Almonds, all that sort of Money is only currant in the Province of Guzeratt, the principal Cities whereof are Surat, Barocha, Cambaya, Broudra and Amadabat. Five Mamoudi's go for a Crown, or a Real. For small Money they make no use of these Shells, but of little Almonds, which are brought from about Ormus, and grow in the Desarts of the Kingdom of Larr. If you break one of the Shells, it is impossible to eat the Almond, for there is no Coloquintida so bitter; so that there is no fear lest the Children should eat their small Money. They have also those little pieces of Copper which are call'd Pecha, 6 Deneer's in value. They give 20 for a Mamoudi, and 40 Almonds for a Pecha; sometimes you may have 44, according to the quantity which is brought. For some years the Trees do not bear, and then the price of this sort of Money is very much raised in that Country; and the Bankers know how to make their benefit.

I have mark'd two sorts of Roupies, the one square, the other round. The square one is as they coin'd it anciently; the round ones are as they make them at this day.

The Money of a King and two Raja's, all three Tributaries to the Great Mogul.

Maton-cha is a Tributary to the Great Mogul; yet he has power to coin Money. When you are at Agra, the Territories of this King lye to the North; and before you can come at them, you must pass over very high and cragged Mountains. 'Tis a good Country, where are all things necessary for the support of humane life, except Rice, which is a great inconvenience to the Inhabitants, who being all Idolaters, are depriv'd thereby of their chiefest delicacies, in regard they feed upon nothing so heartily as upon Rice. They have excellent Corn and Grapes, but they make no Wine, though they make some Aqua vita. They want neither Oxen nor Cows; but their Horses are little, weak and ill-shap'd. All the Trade which these people have with their Neighbours, is in Copper, whereof they have two extraordinary Mines, from whence they furnish the greatest part of the Mogul's Territories; out of which they have Salt in exchange, not having any of their own. This Salt costs them dear, in regard it is four months travel to the place where they fetch it, that is to say, from the Territories of Maton-cha to the Indian Coast towards Bacaim. They travel upon Oxen, and the same Oxen carry their Copper. There must be also some Mines of Lapis-Lazuli and Garnets in that Country, in regard they bring several from thence.

Fig. 1, and 2. is the Money of Maton-cha.

Fig. 1. is the Silver-Money, which weighs not above one dram and 19 grains, and is of the same goodness as the Roupie. The half-Roupie goes for 15 Sous, and this for 16 Sous, which is six and a half per Cent. more. But certain it is, that the more Northward you travel that way, Gold and Silver is more scarce. Fig. 2. These pieces of Copper go for the value of a Pecha of the Great Mogul; they are heavier by half, but the Copper is not so good as that of Pegu or Japan.

Fig. 3, and 4. is the Money of the Raja of Parta Fajoumola.

The Raja of Parta Fajoumola, is one of the great Raja's on the other side of the Gagens. His Territories are directly North of Patna, nigh to the great Mogul's to whom he is Tributary, and bordering upon the King of Bantam. He is bound every year to send an Ambassador with twenty Elephants to the Governor of Patna, who sends them to the Great Mogul. The greatest part of his revenue consists in Elephants, Musk and Rhubarb. He lays also a great Imposition upon Salt, as well that which is spent by his own Subjects, as upon that which is carried abroad. This is all Sea-Coast Salt, which comes from the Territories of the Great Mogul, and is brought from the Sea-Coast to Ganges, and so over Ganges is carried as far as the fiftieth and five and fiftieth Degree. They lade above 150000 Oxen; and for every burthen they pay a Roupie at the Salt-Pits, and no more afterwards through the whole Kingdom. Had this Raja of Parta Salt of his own, he would never be Tributary to the Great Mogul.

Fig. 5, and 6. is the Money of the Raja of Ogen.

The Raja of Ogen is also a Tributary to the Great Mogul; his Country lies between Brampour, Seronge and Amadabat; and it is one of the best Soils in the Indies. His Silver Money passes no-where but in his own Country, not being suffer'd in the Mogul's. His Silver Money goes for a quarter of a Roupie, at 7 Sous 6 Deneers; but the Silver is base. His Copper Money goes for 6 Deneers, and is currant in the Mogul's Dominions as far as Agra. For his smaller Money he makes use of those Shells whereof we have already spoken.

Pieces of Gold called Pagods, which are currant in the Territories of the King of Golconda, the King of Visapour, the Great Raja of Carnatica, the Raja of Velouche, and at the Diamond Mines.

ALL the Pieces of Gold represented in the Plate of Golconda-Money, pass through all these Countries at the same value, and are about the weight of our half Pistol; but the Gold is of a baser Mettal, so that an Ounce is not worth above 42 or 43 Livres; not going for more than four Roupies.

Fig. 1. Is one of the ancient Pagods, at the time when the Raja's were Masters of the Kingdom of Golconda, and they are only stamp'd upon one side as you see. They are as heavy as the new ones; and though they be no better Gold, yet some years since they went at 20, and 25 per Cent. more than the new ones; the reason is, for that the Bankers being all Idolaters, they are so superstitious as to believe, that if they melt down that Money, some Calamity will befall their Country; and they hold this for such a certain truth, That for fear the King of Golconda should melt it, they paid him for certain Years 20000 Pagods. But you must observe, that these old Pagods are no-where currant but in the Kingdom of Golconda. For my part, I think it is more for their profit than out of any Superstition, that they make use of them in that manner. For in all the Kingdom of Golconda, in matter of trade, they never mention any but the old Pagods, though they make their payments in new Pagods, or Roupies; and in this case they who receive those new Pagods, or those Roupies, play their game so well, that they gain a fourth part, or a half, and sometimes one per Cent. alledging for the reason, that those new Pagods are either the King of Visapour's, or the Raja of Carnatica's, or the Raja of Velouche's, or the English, or the Hollanders. And they make as much of the Roupies; for there is no considerable payment made, which is not received by the Cheraff or Banker, making it good to the Seller, who sometimes has no need of his Money in a Month or two, and so he receives the interest of it, though it be but for two days. If the payment be made in old Pagods, and that the sum amount to two or three hundred, or three or four thousand, the Banker takes them all, and viewing them one after another, he divides them into five or six parts; and then posing them all, he says of some, that they are more us'd than others, and that having passed through many hands, there is a waste of the mettall about one per Cent. Others, says he, want not above half one per Cent. others but a fourth part. These Pagods have been bor'd some half thorough, others a quarter thorough; and it is a wonderful thing what this boring amounts to. For in regard these Pagods are very thick, and cannot be clipt, those that are Masters of the trade, take a Piercer, and pierce the Pagod thorough the side, half way or more, taking out of one piece as much Gold as comes to two or three Sous. And provided they be not taken in the fact, they chuse rather to follow this Trade than any other, there being no handycraft Tradesmen among the Indians, that gain more than three Sous a day. After they have drawn out the piercer, they knock upon the holes with a little Hammer, and are so cunning in closing up the holes again, that he must be very skilful indeed, that can discover the cheat. For this reason, they never receive any payment till they have shew'd the Pieces to the Cheraff or Banker; and though he looks only on two or three Pieces, he takes a Sous. They have also another cunning Trick, and the more the Banker is in credit, the more he gains; for if he makes any payment, according to the quantity of the sum, he puts the Pagods by fifty or a hundred together in little bags, and seals them up with his Seal, and writes upon the bag the number of the Pagods within; and so delivers them to him to whom he makes the payment. When the Party makes use of them, he never opens the bag, but gives them as they are, to him to whom they are due; who goes to the same Banker that seal'd the bags. The Banker seeing his Seal whole, makes answer, That the Pieces are good, and in that manner they shall pass all the Year without opening the bags. But when ever they change the hand, they send for the same Banker, who always will have so much per Cent. for his Visit. But, as I have said, the Merchant leaves them in his hand to get Interest; who then pays Eight per Cent. for a Year, and sometimes Twelve. Thus the Bankers have always the greatest part of the Money in the Kingdom in their hands, of which they make large profit. 'Tis the Custom in that Country, every Month to pay the Soldiery; but for the most part, the Soldiers, Captains, and other Officers will not stay till the Month be up, but come to the Bankers, who discount after the rate of Eighteen or Twenty per Cent. by the Year, besides that they pay them in these Pagods, against which others would often object. If there be any large Diamond to be sold in any Country, these Bankers have intelligence of it presently; or if there be any fair Ruby, 'tis not long before they have it in pawn; for every Year when the Merchants return from Pegu, and have any Rubies, most commonly they are in debt; and in regard it is the Custom to pay within fifteen dayes after the Merchant comes ashore, he pawns his best goods he has for payment, as well of the freight of the Ship, as of what he may have taken up at Pegu. After that he sells the worst of his goods to pay the Banker, who lent him the Money upon his arrival. Those that work in the Diamond Mines, or the Merchants that hire the Mine, when they have any fair Stones, they sell them to these Bankers, because there is ready Money; or else they pawn them to the Bankers, till they can find a Chapman to buy them.

Fig. 7, and 8. The Raja of Melouche's Pagod.

Fig. 9, 10, 11, and 12. are the Half-Pagod's of those Kings and Raja's.

Fig. 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17. are little Pieces of Gold call'd Fanos, which are of different value. There are some whereof six go to a Crown; others from ten to fifteen; and some are very base mettall. This is the Money that passes all along the Coast of Coromandel; from Cape Comorin as far as Bengala. And they have very little other than that, besides the Pecha of Copper, and the Shells, which pass for small Money.

The Money which the English and Hollanders Coin in the Indies.

Figure 1, and 2. is the Money which the English coin in their Fort St. George, or else at Madrespatan, upon the Coast of Coromandel. They call them Pagods, as those of the Kings and Raja's of the Country are call'd. They are of the same weight, the same goodness, and pass for the same Value. Formerly the English never coin'd any Silver or Copper Money; for in some parts that border upon the Indians, where they have Factories, as at Surat, Massipatan, or at Bantam, they find it more profitable to carry Gold from England, than Silver; Gold lying in less room, and not being so troublesome; besides, that by carrying Gold they more easily escape the paying those Customs, which the Kings impose upon Gold and Silver. But since the present King of Eng- land married the Princess of Portugal, who had in part of her Portion the famous Port of Bombeye, where the English are very hard at work to build a strong Fort, they coin both Silver, Copper and Tinn. But that Money will not go at Surat, nor in any part of the Great Mogul's Dominions, or in any of the Territories of the Indian Kings; only it passes among the English in their Fort, and some two or three Leagues up in the Country, and in the Villages along the Coast; the Country people that bring them their Wares, being glad to take that Money; otherwise they would see but very little stirring, in regard the Country is very poor, and the people have nothing to sell but Aqua vita, made of Coco-Wine and Rice.
land

Fig. 3 and 4. is the Gold Money which the Hollanders coin at Pelicate, which is a Fort that they possess upon the Coast of Coromandel. Those pieces are also call'd Pagods, and are of the same weight with the others; but for the goodness, I think they are better by two or three in the hundred, than those of the Kings and Raja's of the Country, or which the English make. I made this observation, being at the Diamond-Mines, and in other parts of the Indies where there is any great Trade. For the first thing they ask you is, Whether you have any Pagods of Pelicate; and if you have, you speed much better in your business.

Fig. 5, and 6. is a Roupie of Silver, which the Hollanders coin at Pelicate, being of the same weight with those which the Great Mogul, or the Kings of Golconda and Visapour make. It has in the middle upon one side the mark of the Holland Company, to distinguish it from others. The Hollanders Roupies of Silver are quite contrary to their Pagods of Gold, which are more esteemed by the Indians than those of the Princes of the Country. For they make far less account of these Roupies of Silver; and if you pay any great sum in these pieces, though the Silver be as good as the others, you must lose one half per Cent.

Fig. 7, and 8. is the Hollanders small Copper-Money, wherewith they ordinarily pay their Soldiers. It has upon one side the mark of the Company. And indeed the Hollanders, who mind nothing but their profit, had great reason to obtain leave to coin Money; for bringing only Gold from Japan, from Macassar only Gold in Powder, and from China Gold in Ingots, and selling all these to the Bankers, they found that they lost five or six per Cent. which proceeded from the mistrust of the Changers, and the chief of the Factories belonging to the Company. Now they shun that loss, and make the same profit which the Bankers did, coining all these Mettals into money. Though in every Voyage which they make to Japan, they generally lose one Vessel by storm; yet some years they make five or six Millions of Livres profit, all freights discharged, and hazards escaped. But that profit is quite lost, since their loss of the Island of Formosa.

The Money of the King of Cheda and Pera.

THIS Money is of Tin, and is coin'd by the King of Cheda and Pera. He coins no other Money than Tin. Some years since he found out several Mines, which was a great prejudice to the English. For the Hollanders and other Merchants buy it, and vend it over all Asia. Formerly the English brought it out of England, and furnished great part of Asia, where they consum'd a vast quantity; they carried it also into all the Territories of the Great Mogul, as also into Persia and Arabio; for all their Dishes are of Copper, which they cause to be Tinned over every month. Among the meaner sort of people, there is little to be seen but this Tin-money, and the Shells call'd Cori; which I have spoken of already.

Fig. 1, and 2. is that great piece of Tin, which weighs an ounce and a half, and in that Country goes for the Value of two of our Sous. But in regard that Tin is there at 14 Sous a pound, it is not worth above one Sous and three three Deneers. This piece of Tin is only thick in the sides, the middle being as thin as Paper.

Fig. 3, and 4. is a piece that goes at the value of four Deneers.

Fig. 5, and 6. are their Shells, whereof they give fifty for the little piece of Tin.

The Money of Gold and Tin of the King of Achen. With the Money in Gold Coin'd by the King of Macassar, and the Celebes. And the Silver and Copper Money of the King of Camboya.

F*ig. 1, and 2.* is the Money in Gold coin'd by the King of Achen, in the Island of Sumatra. In goodness it is better than our Louis; an Ounce being well worth fifty Franks. This piece weighs 10 Grains, and would be worth sixteen Sous and eight Deneers of our Money.

Fig. 3, and 4. is the small Money made by the same King, being of Tin, and weighs eight Grains. The Tin being good, I value it at 16 Sous a pound; and then 75 of these pieces is worth one Sous of ours.

Fig. 5, and 6. is the Money in Gold of the King of Macassar, or the Celebes. This piece weighs twelve Grains, and the Hollanders take it for a Florin of our Money; which comes to 23 Sous and eight Deneers.

Fig. 7, and 8. is the Silver Money of the King of Camboya; being good Silver, and weighs thirty two Grains. The piece comes to 24 Sous of our Money; nor does the King coin it at any higher rate. He has a great quantity of Gold in his Country, but he never coins it into Money; for he trades with it by weight, as he does with his Silver, according to the custom of China.

Fig. 9. and 10. is the Copper Money of the King of Camboya. The King of Java, the King of Bantam, and the Kings of the Molucca Islands coin no other Money, but pieces of Copper after the same form and manner. As for their Silver Money, they let it pass as it comes out of other Countries, without melting it down. In Bantam, in all Java, in Batavia, and the Molucca's, there is little other Money stirring, but Spanish Reals, Rixdollars of Germany, and Crowns of France; the greatest part being Half-Reals, Quarters and eighth Parts. But in Batavia they use besides for small Money, Shillings, double Sous and Sous, as in Holland.

F*ig. 1, and 2.* is the Money in Gold, coin'd by the King of Siam; and weighs 18 Grains more than our Half-Pistol. The Gold is of the same Goodness, and may be worth 7 Livres and one Sous of our Money. When the Merchants, that trade in that Country, bring thence either Gold or Silver, 'tis for want of other Commodities, as Silk, Musk, Sandal, Wood, Gum, Lake, Elephants teeth, and other things. For by carrying out Gold or Silver, they reap but two in the hundred profit.

Fig. 3, 4, 5, and 6. is a piece about the bigness of a large Hazle-Nut, flatted on the four sides, like a femicircle, three sides whereof are open like a Horse-shoe; and upon two sides are certain of their own Letters. There is no Money in the East so strangely coin'd as this. It weighs three Drams and a half, and 25 Grains, and is as good as our Silver at three Livres and 10 Sous the Ounce. It amounts to 32 Sous and 4 Deneers of our Money.

Fig. 6, 7, and 8. is the Copper Money of the King of Siam; and they give two hundred of these pieces for one piece of Silver. For their small Money, they they make use of certain Shells that are gather'd upon the Sea-shore, which they bring from Maldives.

The Gold and Silver Money of the Kings of Asen, Tipoura, Arakan and Pegu.

ALL the Silver Money coin'd by the Kings whom I have nam'd, is in goodness equal to our Crown, rating it at three Livres ten Sous the Ounce, as we rate our Crowns here.

Fig. 1, and 2. is the Silver Money of the King of Asen; it weighs three Drams and four Grains, and comes to 23 Sous of our Money.

Fig. 3, 4. is the Silver Money made by the King of Tipoura Chatermani. In the language of the Country, he is call'd Dien Ara-gari, which is stamp'd upon one side of the Money, and upon the other Chatermani Roy de Tipoura. His Country begins about twelve days journey from Daca toward the North-West. This Money weighs two Drams and a half, and twenty-two Grains; and is in value twenty-two Sous.

Fig. 5, 6. is the King of Arakan's Money. It weighs two Drams and a half, and 15 Grains, which makes 21 Sous of our Money. This King coins no Gold; but he trafficks in Gold uncoin'd. The Mettal is very base, and not worth above 14 Carats, a Carat being the third part of an Ounce. The King however holds it at a high rate, to keep it from being carry'd out of his Country. In all Bengala this King is known by no other Name but the King of Mogue.

Fig. 7, and 8. is the King of Pegu's Silver Money, and weighs two Drams and a half, and twelve Grains, which may come to about 20 Sous, and six Deneers of our Money.

Fig. 9, and 10. are the King of Pegu's Fano's, or little pieces of Gold, and weigh not above 7 Grains to boot. Fifteen of these little pieces pass for the value of a Real, or one of our Crowns, the Gold being coarse.

Fig. 11, 12. are the Kings of Asen's Fano's; they weigh also 7 Grains; but they are a much baser Mettal than those of Pegu, for twenty-two of them amount but to the value of our Crown.

Lumps or Pieces of Gold and Silver which go for Money in the Kingdom of China, and the Kingdom of Tunquin.

YOU are first to take notice, that in all the Kingdom of China, and the Kingdom of Tunquin, there is no Money coin'd, either Gold or Silver; that their small Money is Copper, and that they make use in payments only of Lumps or Pieces of Gold and Silver, which have every one their particular weight, as is here represented.

The Pieces of Gold mark'd Fig. 1, and 2. are by the Hollanders call'd Goltsebut, that is to say, a Boat of Gold, because they are in the form of a Boat. Other Nations call them Loaves of Gold; and there are but two different sizes of them. The Gold is of such a goodness, that an Ounce in France would not be worth less than 42 Franks. The great Pieces come to twelve hundred Gelders of Holland Money, and thirteen hundred and fifty Livres of our Money. The other Piece, which weighs but half as much, is in value according to its proportion.

As for their Pieces of Silver, they are of several sizes, and different weight. Fig. 3. weighs six Drams and a half, and 23 Grains; and the Silver being very very near in goodness to the Parisian, it comes to fifty-nine Sous, and eight Deneers of our Money. The other Pieces as well great as small, are in value according to their weight.

In great payments they make use of Ingors, that come to a hundred Franks in value; and they have little Pieces of Silver that are not worth above a Sous.

When they buy any Commodity, if they have not whole Pieces enough to make up the sum, they have always instruments ready to cut off so much from a great Piece as will perfect the Payment.

When the Chineses transport their Golden Loaves, or their Boats, into other Countries, the Merchants cut them in the middle, not daring to trust the Chineses, who have often deceiv'd, them and none have been more cheated than the Hollanders. For they have a way to stuff their loaves of Gold, insomuch that you shall sometimes find in the middle a third part of Copper or Silver. In all sorts of Bargains the Chineses are so cunning, that there are few strangers whom they do not over-reach; especially, in Batavia, the Hollanders when they come first. They carry their weights always along with them, being like a Roman Beam, or a Stelleer, about eight Inches long, with which they weigh all the Gold and Silver which they receive. As for the small Money both in China and Tunquum, it is of Copper. It is made as in Fig. 4. They also thread these pieces, there being a hole in the middle, 12, 25, 50, and 300 upon a string; because they will not put themselves to the trouble of telling them, when the number exceeds a dozen.

The Gold and Silver Money of Japon.

ALL the Gold that comes from Japon, is of the same goodness; somewhat better than our Louis; and is about that goodness for which we pay about 50 Franks the Ounce.

Fig. 1. This piece of Gold weighs one Ounce and six Drams, at fifty Franks the Ounce, comes to 87 Livres and 16 Sous.

Fig. 2, and 3. Every one of these pieces is of Gold, and every one weighs a third part of the great one; which is half an Ounce, and 48 Grains; and comes to 29 Livres, 3 Sous, and 4 Deneers.

Fig. 4. This, as it is mark'd is the backside of the three pieces of Gold.

Fig. 5, and 6. are pieces of Silver of the same weight; every one weighing 4 Grains less than our pieces of 30 Sous, though it go nevertheless for the same value. As for the Silver, it is the same in goodness with our Money. However, in the Territories of the Great Mogul, whither the Hollanders carry all their Silver, their Bars, and Japon pieces, to coin them into Money, sometimes they sell them to the Bankers, where they have no convenience of coinage, as at Surat and Agra; and these Bankers, give them from two to three in the hundred more than they will give for our Crowns, Rix-dollars, or Spanish Reals.

Fig. 7. is the backside of the two Silver pieces.

The Portraiture of the Silver Ingors of Japon, which go for Money.

I said before, that all the Silver that comes out of Japon, is equal in goodness to our Crowns.

Fig. 1. An Ingot of this form weighs seven ounces, at three Livres ten Sous the ounce: the whole comes to twenty-four Livres, and ten Sous.

Fig. 2.

Fig. 2. Weighs two ounces, three drams and an half: the whole comes to eight Livres, ten Sous, and seven Deneers.

Fig. 3. Weighs one ounce, half a dram, and twelve grains: the whole comes to four Livres, five Sous, and five Deneers.

Fig. 4. Weighs one ounce, eight grains: the whole comes to three Livres, ten Sous, and an eleven Deneers.

Fig. 5. Weighs seven drams, one quarter, and seven grains: the whole comes to three Livres, eight Sous, and eight Deneers.

Fig. 6. Weighs two drams and an half, and twenty four grains: the whole comes to one Livre, five Sous, and one Deneer.

Fig. 7. Weighs two drams, twenty four Deneers: the whole comes to one Livre, nine Deneers.

Fig. 8. Weighs one dram and an half, and twenty four grains: the whole comes to sixteen Sous, and four Deneers.

Fig. 9. Is the Copper-Money which they thread by fifteen, thirty, fifty, to the number of 600, which is the value of a Tell in Silver. Over all Japon they reckon by Tells: and the Hollanders reckon, that a Tell makes three Gelders and an half of their Money, which comes to four Livres, and five Sous of ours.

Money that represents the Figures of the twelve Signs; and which were Coined during the twenty four hours, that Gehan-guir, King of the Indians, permitted Queen Nourmahall, his Wife, to Reign in his stead.

Sultan Selim, otherwise called Gehanguir Patcha, the ninth King of the Indians, Father of Cha-gehan, was a great Lover of Women: but he had a particular affection for one among the rest, which he kept in his Seraglio; and which he had Espous'd, as meriting more than ordinary. She was a Woman of a Sublime Wit, and very liberal; and she knew so well how to please the King's humour, and to divertize him, that he could not live without her. She had two Names; the one was Nour-gehan-begum, which signifies the light of the World; and this was the Name which was engraven upon her Signet: for as I have observ'd in my Relations, they never Sign any thing, but only set their Seals. The other Name, by which she was call'd at Court, was Nour-mahall, which signifies the Light of the Seraglio. She was always a great enemy to the King's two Sons; more especially to the second, who was called Sultan Kourom: and who afterwards coming to the Throne, called himself Cha-gehan. He set himself to oppose all the designs of this Princess: who, for her part, had such an Ascendant over the King, that she perswaded him to spend the greatest part of the year in the Country, under-hand soliciting certain Raja's upon the Frontiers to rise against him, that she might engage him in the Wars, and keep him from the company of his Sons. This Queen, being altogether Ambitious, made it her business to please the King; that she might the more easily accomplish her designs; and having a great desire to eternize her Memory, she could not think of a better way, than to Coin a good quantity of Money in her own Name: and of a different stamp from that which the Indian Kings were wont to Coin. For you must take notice, that all the Coins of those Kings have only the Characters of the Countrey upon each side of the Piece. But this Queen caus'd one of the twelve Signs to be stamp'd upon each side of Hers; which is contrary to the Law of Mahomet, that forbids all manner of representations. However, she had never brought her design about, had Sultan Kourom been at Court. But she took her time, when the King had caus'd the eyes of his eldest Son, Sultan Kosrou to be put out, because he had taken up Arms against him, with an intention to depose him from his Throne. For after he had obtain'd that Victory, he sent his second Son, Sultan Kourom, into Decan, with with a powerful Army against the King of Visapour, who was in Rebellion. Queen Nourmahall seeing her self deliver'd from those that were able to cross her designs, and particularly from Sultan Kourom, the most Potent, and the most inveterate of all her enemies, and believing it seasonable to discover her purpose to the King, set her self to flatter him more than she was wont; inventing new ways to divertize him, sometimes with Hunting, and sometimes in the Haram, with Balls and Comedies: One day that the King was extremely well-pleas'd, and having drank briskly, began to be very merry; after the Queen had Danc'd in his presence, he took her, and set her by him, protesting to her, that he lov'd her above all the Princesses in his Court; and that but for her, he had dy'd for grief, to see that his Son Sultan Kosrou should be so traiterously bold, as to endeavour to deprive him of his Scepter. The Queen seeing the King so highly affected toward her, fail'd not to make use of so favourable an opportunity. To which purpose, Sir, said she, if it be true that your Majesty has that kindness for me, of which you would persuade me to assure my self, I know you will grant me one favour which I have passionately desir'd a long time; that I may only Reign as Sovereign the space of twenty four hours. This request surpriz'd the King, and kept him very sad for some days, being unwilling to deny her any thing, and yet being as loth to grant her a Boon of so high a nature. In the mean time the Queen ply'd the King with pastime and Divertisements, pretending to take no notice of his melancholy. At length the fifth day after she had made her Petition, the King no longer able to resist her Charms, nor the strong Passion he had for her, told her he would retire for twenty four hours, and that she might assume the absolute Command of the Kingdom during that time. At the same time he caus'd all the Grantees that were then at Court, to be sent for into his presence, and then commanded them to obey her, and punctually to execute her Orders, as if it were he himself that spoke to them. It was a long time before that the Queen had made every thing ready, and that she had secretly hoarded up great quantities of Gold and Silver in all the Cities where the Mints were appointed, and had distributed the Stamps as she thought convenient. And indeed it was a wonderful thing, that a Woman should so politickly carry on so great a design, as to have four and twenty Stamps engrav'd, and to keep in a readiness in Gold and Silver above two Millions in all the Cities, without being discovered to the King, or any of the Court. There were none but the Mint-Masters that knew any thing of her design, whom she engag'd by large promises, and larger hopes; as believing that she could certainly obtain her desire one day of the King; and then, if she had her Materials ready, that she could do her business in twenty four hours. The day being appointed, she sent away Messengers to all the Cities, commanding them on that day to Coin Roupies of Gold and Silver, to the value already mention'd. When the King and the Grantees came to understand the business, they were strangely surpriz'd; especially Sultan Kourom, the Queens implacable enemy, who, as some persons of the Countrey assur'd me, fainted away at the news, and did not come to himself in a good while after. The thing was so suddenly done, especially in the Cities neer at hand, that within two hours after she was sat upon the Throne, she caus'd several quantities of that Gold and Silver to be thrown among the people, which during the Reign of Gehan-guir went currantly for Roupies. But when Sultan Kourom, who took upon him the Name of Cha-gehan came to the Crown after the death of his Father, he forbid all persons to use those Roupies upon pain of death, and commanded all that had any of them, either in Gold or Silver, to carry them to the Mint; where they should receive the value of them, to the end they might be melted down. For which reason they are at present very rare, particularly those in Gold; among the rest, two or three of them are so hard to be found, that an hundred Crowns has been given for one of them. The Roupies of Gold are worth one and twenty Livres of our Money: and those of Silver, thirty Sous. The Queen, during her Reign of twenty four hours, had that respect for the King, that on the back-side of the Pieces whereon the twelve Signs were Engraven, she caus'd the Name of Gehan-guir to be stamp'd with her own, and the name of the place where they were Coin'd, all in Arabick Letters.

Perhaps the Reader may be curious to know from whence this Illustrious Queen of the Indians descended: and therefore for his satisfaction, I will tell him in a few words. Her Father, a Persian by Nation, a man naturally Ambitious, and who in his own Country was no more than a bare Captain of Horse; without any hopes of rising to any higher preferment, travell'd into the Indies, to serve the Great Mogul, who was then Gehan-guir, with an intention of raising his Fortune in a strange Country. Gehan-guir had then many Enemies, the Kings of Golconda and Visapour being in Rebellion against him, and several Raja's having taken their part. So soon as he came to kiss the Kings Hands, the King took a liking to him, and gave him immediately the Command of five hundred Horse. And because he was very well skill'd in Astrology, (which is a Science to which the Asiatics are very much addicted) the King esteem'd him the more, and in a short time made him General of his Army. But afterwards, forgetting his duty, and the benefits he had received, he joyn'd with Sultan Kosron, Gehan-guir's eldest Son; and having gain'd a great part of the Army, they conspir'd together to depose the King, and set up his Son in his stead. There was at that time in the Court, an Eunuch of great wit, who did more mischief to the Army in his Closet, than he could have done in the Field. This Eunuch, so soon as intelligence was brought of the Rebellion, told the King, that if his Majesty pleas'd, he would deliver Kosron and the Persian General into his hands in a short time, without so much as striking one stroke, or losing one man. He was as good as his word in part, for he so order'd his business, by his politick contrivances, that the General was brought to the King, who would not presently put him to death. Sultan Kosron escap'd that bout, and continu'd the War many years against his Father, who at length took him in Fight, and caus'd his eyes to be pull'd out. The King detaining the General in custody, his Wife and his Daughter found a way to save his life, as you shall hear. The Daughter of the Persian General, who was his only Child, was about fourteen years of Age, the most accomplish'd Beauty at that time in all the Kingdom; she was most rarely educated, and could both write and read the Arabian, Persian, and Indian Languages. The Mother and the Daughter went every day to Court, to hear what would become of the General; and understanding at length, that the King intended either to put him to death, or to banish him, they came to the Haram, and casting themselves at his Majesties feet, they humbly begg'd pardon, the one for her Husband, the other for her Father; which they easily obtain'd; the King being surpriz'd at the Beauty of the Virgin, to whom he afterwards surrendred his Affections. All the Court was astonish'd afterwards, how the General and his Wife could keep, so private, a Daughter that was so incomparably fair, that it should not come to the Kings knowledge. At length he lov'd her so tenderly, that not being able to deny her the liberty of Reigning one whole day in his place, he gave her leave to share with him afterwards in the Government. And she it was, that gave motion to all the most important Affairs of State; the King excusing himself to the Grandee's of his Court, who wonder'd why he let the Queen bear so great a sway, by telling them that she was fit for the Government; and that it was time for him to take his ease.
* C 2 of

Fig. 1., and 2. is as all the rest are, the backside of the Twelve Signs. Fig. 1. is the backside of the Ram, and Fig. 2. of Cancer. Both of them signifie the same thing; it being the Name of the King, Queen, and City where they were stamp'd. These two were coin'd at Amadabat.

The Gold, Silver, and Copper Money which the Portugals coin in the East Indies.

THe Gold which the Portugals Coin in Goa is better than our Louisse's of Gold, and weighs one grain more than our half Pistol. At the time when I was in Goa, this piece was worth four Roupies, or six Franks. They hold it up at so high high a rate, to the end the Merchants, who come from all the Coasts of India thither with their Wares, may not transport it out of the Countrey. This piece is called St. Thomas. Formerly when the Portuguez had the Trade of Japon, Macassar, Sumatra, China and Mosambique, which they still preserve; and is the place whither the Indians bring the Gold of the Abassins and Saba, it was a wonderful thing to see the quantity of Gold which the Portuguez Coin'd, and the several pieces of workmanship which they fram'd in Gold, and sent into Foreign Countreys, even to the West-Indies, by the way of the Philippine Islands. But now they have no other places but only Mosambique to furnish them with Gold, they keep up those Pieces called St. Thomas's at a very high rate, lest they should be carried out of the Countrey, as I said before. They have also Silver Pieces, which they call Pardos, which go for the value of 27 Sous of our Money: As also a great quantity of small Copper and Tin-Money, not much unlike that of the Kings already mentioned, which they thread upon strings in particular numbers.

The Gold and Silver Money of Muscovy.

I Have observed in my Relations, that in all parts of our Europe, where they Coin Money, there are great Sums transported all over Asia, where they go currantly. But for the Money of Muscovy there is great loss in transporting it any where else; because the Prince enhances it to so high a value. The pieces as well of Gold as Silver are very good Metal; for the Gold in worth is somewhat higher than our Lewis.

Fig. 1 and 2. This piece of Gold weighs 14 Grains; and to take the Gold at 48 Grains the ounce, would amount to 20 Sous, one Deneer, and one half-peny of our Money. But going in Muscovy for 24 Sous, there would be nineteen and an half lost to transport it any where else.

Fig. 3 and 4. Is a piece of Silver that weighs eight Grains; and to take an Ounce of Silver at three Livres ten Sous, it comes to a Sous of our Money. But in the Country you have but fifty of these pieces, or at most sometimes fifty two for one of our Crowns, or a Real of Spain, or an High-German Rixdollar.

Fig. 5 and 6. Is a piece of Silver also which only goes in Muscovy. But I cannot tell in what Province it is Coin'd, in regard there are no Arms upon it, and that the most knowing persons, to whom I shewed them, could not tell me what the Characters meant; which makes me think it is very ancient. The piece weighs 25 Grains, which comes to three of our Sous, one Deneer, and one half-peny.

This is all that I could collect of most certainty, concerning the Money and Coins of the East, during the long course of my Travels. Nor do I believe that any person has undertaken, before me, to write upon the same Subject. If any one of my Readers desires to see the real Pieces themselves, as well in Gold and Silver, as in Tin, Copper, Shells and Almonds, he may, without question, obtain the Favour from Monsieur, the first President, to whose Study I devoted them all, together with certain Medals, of which that Supreme Senator, most skilful in Antiquity, has great store, being still curious in searching after what is rare.

The end of the Coins.

TRAVELS IN INDIA.

The First Book.

What Roads to take, in Travelling from Ispahan to Agra, from Agra to Dehly and Gehanabatt, where the Great Mogul Resides at present: And how to Travel also to the Court of the King of Golconda; to the King of Visapour, and to many other Places in the Indies.

CHAP. I.

The Road from Ispahan to Agra through Gomron: Where is particularly describ'd the manner of Sailing from Ormus to Suratt.

IN this Relation of my Indian, I will observe the same Method as in the Recital of my Persian Travels; and begin with the Description of the Roads, which lead you from Ispahan to Dehly and Gehanadatt, where the Great Mogul Resides at present.

Though the Indies stretch themselves front Persia for the space of above 400 Leagues together, from the Ocean to that long Chain of Mountains that runs through the middle of Asia from the East to the West, and which was known to Antiquity by the Name of Mount Caucasus, or Mount Taurus; yet there are not so many ways to travel out of Persia, into the Indies, as there are to travel out of Turky into Persia; by reason that between Persia and the Indies there are nothing but vast Sands and Deserts, where there is no water to be found. So that you have but two Roads to choose, in going from Ispahan to Agra. The one is partly by Land, and partly by Sea; taking Ship at Ormuz. The other altogether by Land, through Candabar. The first of these two Roads is amply describ'd, as far as Ormuz, at the end of my first Book of my Persian Travels. So that I am now only to speak of the manner of Sailing from Ormuz to Suratt.

There is no Sailing at all times upon the Indian as upon the European Seas: You must observe the proper Seasons, which being elaps'd, there is no more venturing. The Months of November, December, January, February and March, are the only Months in the year to Embark from Ormuz to Suratt; and from Suratt to Ormus: But with this difference, that there is no stirring from Suratt after the end of February; but you may Sail from Ormus till the end of March, or the fifteenth of April: for then the Western-winds, that bring rain along with them into India, begin to blow. During the first four Months there blows a North-east-wind which carries them from Suratt to Ormus in fifteen or twenty days. Then veering a little to the North, it serves as well for those that are bound for Suratt as those that are bound from thence. Then the Merchants generally provide for a Voyage of thirty, or five and thirty days. But if they would Sail from Ormus to Suratt in fourteen or fifteen days, they must take Shipping either in March, or at the beginning of April; for then the Western-wind blows full in their Stern.

The Vessels which Sail from Ormus run within sight of Mascat upon the Coast of Arabia, bearing off to Sea for fear of coming too near the Persian Coast. They that come from Suratt, do the same thing, to make the Entry of the Gulf. But neither the one nor the other touch at Mascat, to avoid paying Customs to an Arabian Prince, who took that place from the Portugals.

Mascat is a City situate just by the Sea-side, over against three Rocks that make the Entry into the Harbour very difficult, and at the foot of a Mountain upon which the Portugals have three or four Forts. It is observed that Mascat, Ormus, and Balsara, are the three places in the East where the heat is most insupportable. Formerly only the Hollanders and English understood this Course of Navigation; but some years after the Armenians, Mahometans, Indians, and Banians, have built them Vessels. But it is not so safe to Embark in them, for they neither understand the Sea so well, nor are they so good Pilots.

The Vessels that Sail to Suratt, which is the only Part in the Empire of the Great Mogul, Sail within sight of Diu, and the Point of St. John, and come to an Anchor afterwards in the Road of Couali, which is not above four Leagues from Suratt, and two from the Mouth of the River toward the North. They transport their Wares from one place to another, either by Waggon, or in Boats. For great Vessels cannot get into the River of Suratt till they have unladen, by reason of the Sands that choak it up. The Hollanders return as soon as they have landed their Wares at Couali, and so do the English, it not being permitted to either to enter into the River. But some years since, the King has given the English a place to Winter in, during the rainy Seasons.

Suratt is a City of an indifferent bigness, defended by a pitiful Fortrefs, by the foot whereof you must pass, whether you go by Land or by Water. It has four Towers at the four Corners, and in regard there are no Platforms upon the Walls, Guns are planted upon wooden Scaffolds. The Governor of the Fort only commands the Soldiers in the Fort, but has no power in the City, which has a particular Governour to receive the King's Customs, and other Revenues through the Extent of his Province.

The Walls of the Town are only of Earth, and the generality of the Houses like Barns, being built of Reeds, plaistered with Cow-dung, to cover the void spaces, and to hinder them without from discerning between the Reeds what is done within. In all Suratt there be but nine or ten Houses which are well built: whereof the Cha-bander, or chief of the Merchants, has two or three. The rest belong to the Mahometan Merchants; nor are those, wherein the English and Hollanders dwell, less beautiful; every President, and every Commander, being careful to repair them; which they put upon the account of their Companies. However, they do but hire those Houses; the King not suffering any Frank to have an House of his own, for fear he should make a Fortrefs of it. The Capuchin Friars have built them a very convenient Convent, according to the Model of our European Houses, and a fair Church; for the building of which, I furnish'd them with good part of the Money. But the Purchase was made in the Name of a Maronite Merchant of Aleppo, whose name was Chelebi, of whom I have spoken in my Persian Relations.

CHAP. II.

Of the Customs, Money, Exchange, Weights and Measures of the INDIANS.

TO avoid Repetitions, which cannot be shunn'd in the Course of long Travels; it behoves me to let the Reader understand what belongs to the Custom-house, Money, Exchange, Weights and Measures of the Indians.

When your Commodities are unladen at Suratt, you must carry them to the Custom-house adjoining to the Port. They are very severe, and very exact in searching the People. Particular Merchants pay from four to five per Cent. at the Custom-house for all sorts of Ware. But for the English and Holland-Company, they pay less: But I believe if they did but cast up what it costs them in Deputations and Presents which they are oblig'd every year to send to the Court, they would not pay much less for their Wares, than particular Merchants.

Gold and Silver pay two in the hundred, and when it is brought into the Custom-house, the Master of the Mint comes and takes it, and Coins it into the Money of the Countrey. They agree with him upon the day wherein he will undertake to return the new Pieces: And for so many days as he makes them stay after that, he pays them Interest, according to the proportion of the Silver which he receives. The Indians are very subtil and crafty in matters of Money and Payments; three or four years after the Silver is coin'd, it loses half per Cent. and goes at the same rate as old Silver; for, say they, it is impossible but that it should lose in passing through so many hands. You may carry all sorts of Silver into the Dominions of the Great Mogul. For in all the Frontier Cities there is a Mint, where it is purified to the highest perfection, as is all the Gold and Silver in India, by the Kings Command, and coin'd into Money. Silver in Bars, or old Plate, which is bought without paying for the fashion, is the Silver by which you shall lose least: For as for coin'd Silver, there is no avoiding the loss of the Coinage. All their bargains are made, with a condition to pay in coin'd Silver within the present year. And if you make payment in old Silver, you must resolve to lose according to the time since it was first Coin'd. In all places far remote from Cities, where the vulgar People have no great knowledg in Silver: and where there are no Changers, they will not receive a piece of Silver, without putting it into the fire, to try whether it be good or no; And this is the common practice at all Ferries and Passages over Rivers. In regard their Boats are only made of Oser, covered over with an Ox-hide, and by consequence are very light; they keep them in the Woods, and will not take them upon their shoulders, till they have received their Money.

As for their Gold, the Merchants have so many cunning tricks to hide it, that it seldom comes to the knowledg of the Customers. They do all they can to shift off paying the Customs; and that, so much the rather, because they do not run so much hazard as at the Custom-house of Europe. For in the Indian Custom-houses, if a man be caught in the fraud, he is quitted by paying double; ten in the hundred, instead of five: the King comparing the venture of the Merchant to a game at Hazard, where he plays quit or double. The King had granted to the English Captains, that they should not be searched when they came a-shore. But one day one of the English Captains going to Tata, one of the greatest Cities in India, a little above the Mouth of the River Indon, as he was going to pass the River, he was stop'd by the Officers of the Custom-house, who search'd and rif'd him, what-ever he could alledge to the contrary. They found Gold about him, of which he had already carried off several quantities, at several times, that he had gone from his Ship to the City; but they quitted him, upon paying the usual Custom. The English-man, vex'd at such an affront, resolv'd to revenge himself; which he did after a very pleasant manner. He caus'd a sucking-pig to be roasted, and putting it together with the dripping, and sawce, in a China-platter, covered with a linnen-cloth, he gave it a Slave to bring along after him to the City;

imagining what would fall out. As it pass'd before the Custom-house, while the Governors or the Cha-bander, and the Mint-Masters were sitting in the Divan, they fail'd not to stop him; and as the Slave went forward with the Plate cover'd, they told his Master that he must come into the Custom-house, and that they must see what he carried. The more the English-man cry'd, that the Slave carried nothing that paid any Duties, the less he was believ'd; so that after a long debate he took the Plate from his Slave, and carried it himself into the Divan; the Governour and the Cha-bander, gravely ask'd him, why he would not be obedient to the Laws? Upon which the English-man, replying in a great heat, that he carried nothing which paid any duty, threw the Pigg among them with such a fury, that the Sawce and Pigg flew all upon their Garments. Now in regard that Swines-flesh is an abomination to the Mahometans, who believe every thing defil'd that touches it, they were forc'd to change their Clothes, take down the Tapestry of the Divan, to pull down the Divan it self, and build another, not daring to say any thing to the English man; for the Cha-bander, and Mint-Master are very observant to the Company, by whom they reap a great deal of profit. As for what concerns the Heads of the Companies, as well English, as Dutch, and their Associates, they have so great a respect for them, that they never search them at all, when they come a-shore; though they will not stick to conceal their Gold, like particular Merchants, and to carry it about them. The Trade of Tata, formerly very great, begins now to decay, because the Mouth of the River grows more dangerous, and full of shallows every day more than other, the Sand-hills having almost choak'd it up.

The English finding they had learn'd the trick of rifling their Cloaths, studi'd out other little ways and contrivances to conceal their Gold: And the fashion of wearing Perriwigs being newly come out of Europe, they hid their Jacobus's, Rose-Nobles, and Ducats in the Net of their Perriwigs, every time they came a-shore.

There was a Merchant that had a mind to convey some Boxes of Coral into Suratt, without the knowledge of the Customers. He Swam then into the Town, some days before the Ship was unladen, when it might be done securely before the Customers had any suspicion of any thing. But the Merchant repented him afterwards, the Commodity being spoyl'd. For the Water of Suratt River being always thick and muddy, there clung to the Coral, which had lain a long time in the Water, a slime like a white crust or skin, which was difficult to be got off; so that after the Coral was polish'd, he lost by it above twelve per Cent.

I come now to the Money which goes for currant through the whole extent of the Great Mogul's Dominions; and to all the sorts of Gold and Silver, which is carri'd thither in Ingots to make profit thereof.

In the first place you must observe that it is very profitable to buy Gold and Silver which has been wrought, to melt it into Ingots, and to refine it to the highest purity: For being refin'd, you pay not for the Portage of the Alloy, which was mix'd with it before: And carrying the Gold and Silver in Wedges, you pay neither to the Prince nor to the Mint what they exact for Coinage. If you carry coin'd Gold, the best Pieces are Jacobus's, Rose-Nobles, Albertus's, and other ancient Pieces, as well of Portugal, as of other Countries, and all sorts of Gold that have been coin'd in former Ages. For by all those old Pieces the Merchant is sure to gain. You may also reckon for good Gold, and which is proper to be carri'd thither, all the Ducats of Germany, as well those coin'd by the several Princes, as by the Imperial Towns, together with the Ducats of Poland, Hungary, Swedeland and Danemark; and indeed all sorts of Ducats are taken to be of the same goodness. The Venerian Ducats of Gold formerly pass'd for the best, and were worth four or five of our Sous, more than any others; but about a dozen years ago they seem to have been alter'd, not going now for any more than the rest. There are also Ducats which the Grand Seigneur Coins at Cairo, and those of Sally, and Morocco: But these three sorts are not so good as the others, and are not worth so much as they by four Sous of our Money.

Over all the Empire of the Great Mogul, all the Gold and Silver is weigh'd with Weights, which they call Tolla; which weigh nine Deneers, and eight grains of our Weights. When they have any quantity of Gold and Silver to sell, the Indians use yellow Copper-Weights, with the King's mark, to avoid coufenage. And with with these Weights they weigh all the Gold and Silver at once, provided it amount not to above a hundred Tolla's. For the Changers have no other weights, but from one Tolla to a hundred; and a hundred Tolla's come to 38 Ounces, 21 Deniers, and 8 Grains. As for the Gold and Silver which is not coin'd, if there be much, they assay it; and having put it to the Touch, they bid to the utmost value to out-vye one another.

In regard there are some Merchants that have above forty or fifty thousand Ducats at a time, the Indians weigh them with a weight which is just the weight of a hundred Ducats, which is also mark'd with the Kings Mark; and if the hundred Ducats weigh less than the weights, they put in so many little stones till the Scales are even; and after all is weigh'd, they make good to the Changer the weight of those little stones. But before they weigh these Gold-Coins, whether they be Ducats or other Pieces, they put the whole quantity into a Charcoal-fire, till they be red-hot; and then quench the Fire with water, and take them out again. This they do to find out them which are false, and to melt off the Wax and Gum, which is cunningly dropt upon them to make them weigh the more. But because there are some Pieces so artfully hollow'd and stop'd up again, that you cannot perceive it, though they have been in the fire, the Changers take the Pieces, and bend them; by which they know whether they be good or no; and those which they suspect they cut in pieces. After they have view'd them all, they refine those which they do not take to be good, and pay for so much as proves to be good, as for good Ducats. All this Gold they Coin into that sort of Money which they call Roupies of Gold; except those Ducats, which are stamp'd only upon one side, which they sell to the Merchants that come from Tartary, and other Northern Parts, as from the Kingdoms of Boutan, Afen, and other remote parts. With these Ducats the Women of those Countries chiefly adorn themselves, hanging them upon their Head-attire, and fixing them upon their foreheads. As for the other Ducats, that have no figures, they are not so much as enquir'd after by the Northern Merchants.

As for all the other Pieces of Gold, there are great quantities of them Sold to the Goldsmiths, to the Gold-wyar-drawers, and in general to all that work in Gold. For if they could put their Metal unmade into Roupies, they would never Coin; which they can only do at the Coronation of their Kings, to throw Silver Roupies among the People; or to sell them to the Governours of the Provinces, and other Grande'es of the Court, who then want great quantities of them to present to the new King at his first coming to his Throne. For they have not always Jewels or other things rich enough to present him, as well at that time, as at another Festival, of which I shall speak in due place, when they weigh the King every year. At such times I say, they are very glad of Gold Roupies; as also to present to such Favourites at the Court, by whose interest they hope to gain higher Commands, and more considerable Governments.

In one of my Travels, I found by experience the vertue of these Roupies of Gold. Cha-jehan, Father of Orang-zeb who now Reigns, had given to one of the Lords of his Court, the Government of the Province of Tata, whereof Symdt is the Metropolis. Now though the very first year of his Government, there were very great complaints made against him, by reason of the Tyranny which he exercised over his People, and his great extortions, the King suffered him to continue four years, and then recalled him. All the People of Tata were overjoy'd, believing the King had called him away, only to put him to death; but it fell out quite otherwise; for the King caress'd him, and gave him the Government of Halabas, more considerable than that which he had quitted. This kind reception, which he had at the Kings hands, proceeded from this, that before he came to Agra, he had sent before him a present of 50000 Roupies of Gold, and about 20000 Roupies of Gold more to Begum-Sahib, who had then the whole Power in her hands; as also to other Ladies and Lords at the Court, to support his Reputation. All the Courtiers are very desirous to have a great quantity of Gold; because it lies in a little room, and then because they covet, as a great Honour, to leave vast Sums behind them, to their Wives and Children, of which the King must not know. For as I shall tell you in another place, when any great Lord dies, the King is Heir to all his Estate; his Wife having no more then his Jewels.

But to return to our Roupies of Gold; you must take notice, that they are not so currant among the Merchants. For in regard one of them is not worth above fourteen Roupies, which make one and twenty Livres of our Money, at thirty Sous the Roupie, and that there are few of these Roupies of Gold to be had, but in the Houses of Great Men; when it falls out that they make any payment, they will put them at a Roupie of Silver, or at least at a fourth part of a Roupie more than it is worth, which will never turn to the Merchants profit. Cha-Est-Kan the King's Uncle, to whom I had sold a parcel of Goods at 96000 Roupies, when he came to pay me, ask'd me what Money I would be content to take, whether Gold or Silver. Before I could return him an answer, he added, that if I would leave it to him, I should take Gold Roupies: Nor did he give me this advice, but because he believ'd it would turn to his advantage: I told him I would be rul'd by him; thereupon he caus'd his Servants to tell me out so many Roupies in Gold, as made up the just Sum which was due: But he would force me to take the Roupie in Gold for fourteen Roupies and an half in Silver, though among the Merchants they went but for fourteen. I was not ignorant of it; but I thought it best to receive my Money according to the Prince's humour, in hopes he might make me amends another time, either for the whole, or part of what I might lose. I let him alone two days, after which I went to him again, and told him I had tried to put off his Roupies at the price I had received them; so that in the payment of 96000 Roupies, I had lost 3428 and one 16th. the Roupie of Gold which he forc'd me to take at fourteen Roupies and an half of Silver, being worth but fourteen. Thereupon he fell into a passion, and told me he would see as many Lashes bestow'd upon the Changer, or Holland-Broker, whose fault soever it were; that he would teach them to understand Money; that they were old Roupies, and were worth more by a sixteenth part of a Silver Roupie, than the Roupies which were coin'd at that time. In regard I knew the humour of the Asiatic Princes, with whom there is no contesting. I let him say what he pleas'd; but when he came to himself, and began to put on a smiling look, I desir'd him that he would be pleas'd to let me return the Sum which I had received, the next day; or else that he would be pleas'd to pay me what was wanting, and that I would take a Roupie at 14 and one 16th. since he assur'd me they were worth so much. The Prince for a while gave me a scurvy look, not so much as speaking one word. At length he ask'd me, whether I had still the Pearl, which he had refus'd to buy. I told him I had, and immediately pull'd it out of my Bosome, and gave it him. The Pearl was large, and of a good Water, but ill-shap'd; which was the reason he refus'd it before. When I had given it to him, well, said he, let us talk no more of what is past; how much will you have, in a word, for this Pearl? I ask'd him seven thousand Roupies, and indeed rather than I would have carri'd it into France, I would have taken three. If I give thee, said he, seven thousand Roupies for this Pearl, I shall make thee amends for the loss thou complain'st of in the first bargain. Come to Morrow, and I will give thee five thousand Roupies, and that's very fair: Thou shalt have also a Calaat and an Horse. I made my obeysance to him, and desir'd him to give me an Horse that should be young, and fit for service, because I had a great journey to take. The next day he sent me a Robe, a Cloak, two Girdles, and a Cap; which is all the Apparel that the Princes are wont to give to those to whom they intend any Honour. The Cloak and Robe was of Satin purpled with Gold; the two Girdles strip'd with Gold and Silver; the Cap was of Calicut, dy'd into a Flame-colour, with stripes of Gold: The Horse had no Saddle, but was covered with a green Velvet foot-cloath, edg'd about with a small Silver-fringe. The Bridle was very strait, with Silver-studs in some places. I believe the Horse had never been Back'd; for so soon as I brought him to the Holland-House, where I then lodg'd, a young man got upon his Back; but he was no sooner on, but the Horse flung and pranc'd at that rate, that having kick'd down an Hutt that stood in the Court, he had like to have kill'd the Hollander. Finding that such a Resty-Horse was not for my turn, I sent him back to Cha-Est-Kan, and relating the Story to him, I told him I did not believe that he desir'd I should return into my Countrey to bring bring him back some rarities which I had promis'd him, as he made me believe he did. All the while I talk'd, he laugh'd, and afterwards sent for the Horse which his Father in his life time us'd to ride upon. It was a tall Persian Horse, that had formerly cost five thousand Crowns, but was then twenty eight years old. They brought him bridl'd and saddl'd, and the Prince would needs have me get up in his presence. He had one of the most stately walks that ever I knew in a Horse: and when I alighted, well, said he, art thou satisfied? I dare say, that Horse will never give thee a fall. I thank'd him, and at the same time took my leave of him; and the next day, before my departure, he sent me a great Basket of Apples. It was one of the six that Chah-jehan had sent him, as they came from the Kingdom of Kaehemir; there was in the Basket also a great Persian Melon: All this might be worth a hundred Roupies, which I presented to the Holland Commanders Wife. As for the Horse I rode him to Golconda, where I sold him for five hundred Roupies, as old as he was, being a good lusty Beast.

To return to our discourse of Money; I will add this to what I have said already, that you must never carry Louis's, of Gold to the Indies, nor Spanish nor Italian Pistols, nor any other sort of Money coin'd within these few years; for there is great loss by it; for the Indians refine all, and count only upon the refinings. Lastly, every one strives to steal the custom of their Gold; and when the Merchant has got the knack of concealing it, he may gain five or six of our Sous in every Ducat.

I come now to the sorts of Silver Money; which you must distinguish into money of the Country, and Forreign Money: And first of the Forreign Coins.

The Forreign Silver Coins which are carried into the Indies, are the Rix-dollars of Germany, and the Reals of Spain. The first are brought by the Merchants that come from Poland, from the Lesser Tartary, and the Borders of Muscovia. The others by those that come from Constantinople, Smyrna, and Aleppo, and the greatest part by the Armenians, who sell their Silk into Europe. All these merchants endeavour to convey their Silver through Persia without being discovered; for if the Customers find it out, they will be forced to carry their Silver to the Mint-Masters to be coin'd into Abassi's, which is the Kings Coin; these Abassi's being carried into India, are again coin'd into Roupies, whereby the Merchant loses ten and a quarter per Cent. as well by reason of the coinage, as by paying the Kings duties in Persia.

To let you understand in a few words, how they came to lose this ten and a quarter per Cent. from Persia to the Indies, and sometimes more, according to the nature of the Reals, which they usually carry into Persia; you must call to mind, what I have already said concerning the Money and Exchanges of Persia, in the first Volume. I observ'd, that a Real in Persia goes for 23 Chaez, which make three Abassi's, and a quarter; and that sometimes, when Silver is scarce, they will give a Chaez and a half for one. That the Abassi is worth four Chaez, and the Toman fifty Abassi's, or two hundred Chaez. If you carry six Tomans and a half to the Indies, you have for every Toman twenty nine Roupies and a half; and consequently for six Tomans and a half, a hundred and ninety-one Roupies and a quarter. If you carry to the Indies Reals of Seville, for a hundred you shall have from 213 to 215 Roupies. If you carry Mexican Reals, for a hundred you shall have no more than 212. So that when for a hundred Reals you have but two hundred and twelve Roupies, you gain ten Roupies and a quarter, in an hundred Reals; but by the Sevillian Reals you profit eleven per Cent.

There are three or four sorts of Spanish Reals, and they give for a hundred according to their goodness, from 218 to 214 and 215 Roupies. The best of all are those of Sevil for when they are full weight, they will give for a hundred, 213 Roupies; and sometimes 215, according as Silver is either scarce or plentiful.

The Real of Spain ought to weigh three Drams, seven Grains and a half more than two Roupies. But the Silver of the Roupies is much better. For the Roupy is in weight eleven Deneers and fourteen Grains; but the Sevil Real,

Real, like our white Crown, is but just eleven Deneers. The Mexican Real goes at ten Deneers and twenty-one Grains. For the Spanish Real, that weighs seventy-three Vals, you have four Mamoudi's and a half, and one Mamoudi is worth twenty Pecha's; but they must be very good, and as I have said already, seventy-three Vals in weight: eighty-one Vals making an Ounce, one Val coming to seven Deneers.

For the Rixdollars of Germany, in regard they are heavier than the Reals, they will give you for an hundred, as high as an hundred and sixteen Roupies. Where you are to take notice, that in giving for an hundred Reals, or an hundred Rixdollars, two hundred and fifteen, or two hundred and sixteen Roupies, it seems that every Roupie ought to be worth less than thirty Sous. But if the Merchant count the Portage of the Silver, and the Customs, he will find that every Roupie will stand him in more. But that the Merchant may make his profit, he must take notice, that all the Reals of Mexico, and those of Sevil, are in weight one and twenty Deneers and eight Grains, that is, five hundred and twelve Grains; and for those that are no better than our white Crown, they are to be in weight one and twenty Deneers and three Grains, which makes five hundred and nine Grains. All Dollars and Reals are weigh'd, a hundred at a time; and when they are wanting in weight, they add little stones, as when they weigh Gold, according to what I shall tell you by and by.

We come now to the Money of the Country. The Indian Money is the Silver Roupie, the Half, Quarter, Eighteenth and Sixteenth part. The weight of the Roupie is nine Deneers and one Grain; the value of the Silver is eleven Deneers and fourteen Grains. They have also another sort of Silver Money, which they call Mamoudi's, but this goes no-where but in Surat, and in the Province of Guzerat.

The Indians have also a sort of small Copper Money, which is call'd Pecha; which is worth about two of our Liards, a Liard being the fourth part of a Sous. There is also the Half Pecha, Two Pecha's, and Four Pecha's. According to the custom of the Province where you Travel, you have for a Roupie of Silver more or less of these Pecha's. In my last Travels, a Roupie went at Surat for nine and forty Pecha's. But the time was, when it was worth fifty, and another time, when it went but for six and forty. At Agra and Gehanabat, the Roupie was valued at fifty-five and fifty-six Pecha's. And the reason is, because the nearer you go to the Copper Mines, the more Pecha's you have for a Roupie. As for the Mamoudi, it is always valued at forty Pecha's.

There are two other sorts of small Money in the Dominions of the Great Mogull, which are little bitter Almonds and Shells. These little bitter Almonds, which are brought out of Persia, are only made use of in the Province of Guzerat; as I have observed in the first part of my Relations. They grow in dry and barren places amongst the Rocks, and the Tree, that bears them, is almost like our Bastard Spanish-Broom. They call these Almonds Baden: Nor is there any Coloquintida so bitter. They give for a Pecha sometimes thirty five, and sometimes forty.

Their other small Money are the little Shells which they call Cori; the sides whereof turn circularly inward: Nor are they to be found in any part of the World, but in the Maldives Islands. They are the greatest part of the Revenue of the King of that Island. For they are transported into all the Territories of the Great Mogull; into the Kingdoms of Visapour and Golconda; and into the Islands of America to serve instead of Money. Near the Sea they give 80 for a Pecha. But the further you go from the Sea, the less you have; so that at Agra, they will not give you above 50 or 55 for a Pecha. As to what remains according to the Account of the Indians,

100000 Kraur's make a Padan.

100000 Padan's make a Ril.

In the Indies, the Village must be very small, where there does not reside a Banker, whom they call Cberaff; whose business it is to remit Money and Bills of Exchange.

Over all the Empire of the Great Mogull and in other parts of India the Idolaters, though they differ in their languages, make use of these sort of Ciphers

Exchange. In regard that these Bankers hold a Correspondence with the Governours of the Province, they raise as they please themselves, the Roupie for the Pecha's, and the Pecha's for the Shells. All the Jews that deal in Money and Exchange in the Empire of the Grand Seigneur, are accounted a most subtil sort of People. But in the Indies they would be scarce thought fit to be Apprentices to these Bankers. They have one very bad custom in making of Payments: And I have already observ'd it, in reference to their Roupies of Gold. When they make any Payment in that sort of Money, they tell ye, 'twas a great while ago that any Silver Roupie was coin'd; that they are worth less than those which are new, or but lately coin'd; for that by passing through many hands they wear away, and become lighter. And therefore when you make any bargain, you must always agree to be paid in Roupies Cha-jenni, that is, in new Silver; otherwise, they will pay pay you in Roupies coin'd some fifteen or twenty years ago, and upward; whereby you will lose four in the hundred. For they will have one fourth, or at least one eighth per Cent. allow'd for those that were coin'd but two years before: So that the poor People that cannot read the year wherein the Roupies were coin'd, are subject to be cheated; for they will always abate a Peecha or a half a Peecha upon a Roupie, or three or four Cori's upon a Peecha.

As for counterfeit Silver, there is very little amongst them. If you receive one false Roupie in a Bag from any particular Person, 'tis better to cut it to pieces, and lose it, than to speak of it; for if it should come to be known, there might be danger in it. For you are commanded by the Kings Law to return the Bag where you received it; and to return it from one to another, till you can find out the Counterfeiter; who if he be apprehended, is only sentenc'd to lose his hand. If the Counterfeiter cannot be found, and that it be thought that he who paid the Money is not guilty, he is acquitted upon some small amercement. This brings great profit to the Changers. For when there is any Sum of Money receiv'd or paid, the Merchants cause him to look it over, and for their pains, they have one sixteenth of a Roupie in the hundred.

As for the Money which is paid out of the Sarquet, or Kings Exchequer, there is never any found that is counterfeit: For all the Money that is carri'd in thither, is exactly view'd by the Kings Bankers: The Great Lords have also their particular Bankers. Before they put up the Money into the Treasury, they throw it into a great Charcoal fire, and when the Roupies are red-hot, they quench the fire, by throwing water upon it; and then take out the Money. If there be any Piece that is white, or that has the least mark of Alloy, it is presently cut in pieces. As often as these Roupies are carried into the Treasury, they mark the Pieces with a Puncheon, which makes an hole, but not quite through; and there are some Pieces that have seven or eight holes made in that manner, to shew that they have been so many times in the Exchequer. They are all put, a thousand Pieces together, in a Bag, seal'd with the Seal of the great Treasurer, and the number of years superscrib'd, since they were coin'd. And here you are to take notice, whence the Treasurers profit arises, as well that of the Kings Treasurer, as that of the particular Treasurers of the Great Lords of the Kingdom. When there is any bargain made, they agree for new Roupies coin'd the same year: but when they come to receive the payment, the Treasurers will make it in old Roupies, wherein there is a loss of six per Cent. So that if they will have new Silver, the Merchants must compound with the Treasurer. In my fifth Voyage, I went to visit Cha-Est-Kan according to my promise, to let him have the first sight of what I brought along with me. So that as soon as I arriv'd at Suratt, I sent him word; and received his Orders to meet him at Chonpart, a City in the Province of Decan, to which he had laid Siege. Coming to him, in a little time, and a few words, I sold him the greatest part of what I had brought along with me out of Europe: And he told me that he expected every day, that Money should be sent him from Suratt to pay the Army, and to pay me also at the same time for what he had bought of me. I could not imagin however, that so great a Prince as he, that commanded so great an Army, had not store of Money by him; but rather conjectur'd, that he had an intention to make me some abatement, upon those Pieces which he would put upon me in payment, as he had serv'd me before. It fell out, as I foresaw. But for Provisions for my self, my men, and my Horses, he took such order, that there was great plenty brought me, night and morning, and for the most part he sent for me my self, to his own Table. Ten or twelve days thus past away, and not a word of the Money that I expected: So that being resolv'd to take my leave of him, I went to his Tent. He appear'd to be somewhat surpriz'd, and looking upon me with a frowning-brow: wherefore will you be gone, said he, before you are paid? or who d'you think, shall pay you afterwards, if you go away before you receive your Money? Upon these words, with a countenance as stern as his, my King, replied I, will see me paid. For his goodness is such, that he causes all his Subjects to be paid; that have not receiv'd satisfaction for such Goods as they sell in Forreign Countries. And what course will he take, answer'd he in a great choler: with two or three stout Men of War, said I, which he will send either to the Port of Suratt, or towards the Coasts to wait for the Ships that come from Mocca. He seemed to be nettled at the reply, but not daring to give any more way to his choler, he ordered his Treasurer immediately to give me a Letter of Exchange to Aurengabad. I was the more glad of that, because it was a place through which I was to pass in my way to Golconda; besides that, it would spare me the carriage and the hazards of my Money. The next day I had my Bill of Exchange, and took leave of the Prince, who was nothing displeased, but told me, that if I return'd to the Indies, I should not fail to come and see him, which I did in my sixth and last Voyage. When I came to Suratt, he was at Bengala, where I sold him all the rest of my Goods that I could not put off either to the King of Persia, or great Mogul.

But to return to the payment of my Money, I was no sooner arrived at Aurengabad, but I went to find the great Treasurer; who no sooner saw me, but he told me, he knew wherefore I came; that he had received Letters of advice three days before, and that he had already taken the Money out of the Treasury to pay me. When he had brought me all the Baggs, I caused my Banker to open them, who saw them to be Roupies, by which I was to lose two in the hundred. Upon that I thank'd the Treasurer very heartily, telling him, I understood no such dealing, and that I would send and complain of him to Cha-Est-Kan; and declare to him that he should either give order that I should be paid in new Silver, or else let me have my Goods again, which I presently did. But not receiving an answer so soon as I knew I might have done, I went to the Treasurer, and told him, I would go my self, and fetch away my Goods. I believe he had received order what to do; for seeing I was resolved to go; he told me he was very unwilling I should put my self to so much trouble, and that it would be better for us to agree among our selves. After many contests about the two in the hundred, which he would have made me lose, I was contented to abate one, and had lost the other, had I not happily met with a Banker who wanted Silver, and had a Bill of Exchange to pay at Golconda; so that he was glad to make use of mine, and gave me a Bill to be paid at Golconda, being my full Summ, at fifteen days sight.

The Changers to try their Silver, make use of thirteen little pieces, one half Copper, and the other Silver, which are their Sayes.

These

These thirteen pieces differing all in goodness, they never make use of them, but when any question arises concerning a small quantity of Silver, or if any wrought Silver. For they refine all their great quantities. All that kind of Silver is brought by the weight which they call Tolla, which weighs nine Deneers, and eight Grains, or 32 Val's; 81 Val's, making an Ounce: So that an hundred Tolla's making 38 Ounces, 21 Deneers, and 8 Grains.

See here the differences of the thirteen Goodnesses of Silver.

THe first, which is the lowest goodness, they take at fifteen Pecha's to the Molla, which makes of our Money nine Sous, two Deneers.

The second, at eighteen Pecha's, which make ten Sous two Deneers.

The third, at ten Pecha's, which make twelve Sous, six Deneers.

The fourth, at thirteen Pecha's, which make fourteen Sous, six Deneers.

The fifth, at sixteen Pecha's, which make fifteen Sous, ten Deneers.

The sixth, at nineteen Pecha's, which make seventeen Sous, six Deneers.

The seventh, at thirty-three Pecha's, which make nineteen Sous, two Deneers.

The eighth, at thirty-five Pecha's, which make twenty Sous, ten Deneers.

The ninth, at thirty-eight Pecha's, which make twenty-two Sous, six Deneers.

The tenth at forty Pecha's, which make twenty-four Sous, ten Deneers.

The eleventh, at forty-three Pecha's, which make twenty-five Sous, ten Deneers.

The twelfth, at forty-six Pecha's, which make twenty-seven Sous, six Deneers.

The thirteenth, at forty-nine Pecha's, which make nineteen Sous, two Deneers.

Here it will not be amiss to give you an hint, how far the cunning extends, not only of the Cheraffs or Changers, but of all the Indians in general; and it shall suffice to give you one example, which is very particular, and of which our Europeans make no account: Which is this; that of all the Gold, which remains upon the stone upon which they make the Essay, and of which we make no reckoning, they are so far from losing the least atome of that small matter, that they fetch it all off, by means of a Ball made half of Black-pitch, and half of Soft-wax, with which they rub the stone that carries the Gold; at the end of some years the Ball will shine, and then they get out all the Gold that sticks to it. This Ball is about the bigness of one of our Tennis-Balls; and the Stone is such a one as our Goldsmiths generally use.

Thus much of the Custom-houses and Money current among the Indians. It remains to speak of their manner of Exchange.

As all the Goods which are made in the Empire of the Great Mogull, and some part of the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour are brought to Suratt to be transported into several parts of Asia and Europe; the Merchants, when they go from Surat to buy Commodities in the several Cities where they are made, as at Labor, Agra, Amadabat, Seronge, Brampour, Daca, Patna, Banarous, Golconda, Decan, Visapour, and Dultabat, take up Money at Surat, and are discharged at the places where they go, by giving kind for kind. But when it happens that the Merchant is short of Money in those places, and that there is a necessity for him to take up Money to compleat his Markets, he must then return it at Suratt within two Months, paying Monthly for the Change.

From Labor to Suratt the Exchange goes at six and a quarter per Cent.

From Amadabat, from one, to one and an half.

From Seronga, at three.

From Brampour, from two and an half, to three.

From Daca, at ten.

From Banarou, at six.

From the three last places they make their Bills of Exchange only to Agra; and and at Agra they make others for Suratt, the whole at the same price as I have set down.

From Golconda, from four to five.

And for Goa the same.

From Decan at three.

From Visapour at three.

From Dultabat, from one to one and an half.

Some years the Exchange rises from one to two per Cent. by reason of certain Raja's or petty Vassal Princes that disturb Trade, every one pretending that the Merchandizes ought to pass through his Countrey, and pay Toll. There are two particularly between Agra and Amadabatt, the one called the Raja of Antivar, and the other the Raja of Bergam, who very much molest the Merchants for this very cause. But you may avoid passing through the Territories of these Princes, taking another road from Agra to Suratt, thorough Seronge and Brampour. But they are fertile Lands, divided with several Rivers, without Bridges or Boats, and it is impossible to go that way, till two Months after the rains are fallen. Which is the reason that those Merchants who must be at Suratt when the season permits them to take the Sea, are forc'd to pass through the Territories of these two Raja's, because they can pass that way at all times, even in the time that the rains fall, which only knit and harden the Sand.

Nor are you to wonder that the Exchange runs so high; for they that trust out their Money, run the hazard, by obligation, of losing their Money, if the Merchants should be robb'd.

When you come to Suratt to Embarque, there is Money enough. For it is the greatest Trade of the Grande'es of the Indies to venture their Money by Sea from thence for Ormuz, Balsara, and Mocca; nay even as far as Bantam, Achen, and the Philippine Islands. For Mocca and Balsara, the change runs from 22 to 24 per Cent. And to Ormuz, from 16 to 20. And to the other places which I have nam'd, the change runs proportionable to the distance.

I have but one word to say of their Weights and Measures; I have given you in the Margin the fifth part of an Ell of Agra, and the fourth part of an Ell of Amadabat and Suratt. As for their Weights, the Men is generally 69 Pound, and the Pound 16 Ounces. But the Men which they weigh their Indigo withal, is but 53 Pound. At Suratt they talk of a Serre, which is one and three fourths of a Pound, and the Pound is 16 Ounces.

CHAP. III.

Of their Carriages, and the manner of Travelling in India.

BEfore you set forward upon the road, it will be convenient to speak of their Carriages and manner of travelling in India, which, in my opinion, is more commodious than any thing that has been invented for ease in France or Italy. Quite otherwise it is in Persia, where they neither make use of Asses, Mules, or Horses, but transport all their Wares to the Indies upon Oxen, or in Wains, their Countries being so near to one another. If any Merchant carries an Horse out of Persia, 'tis only for shew, or to walk in his hand, or to sell to some Indian Prince.

They will lay upon an Oxen back 300, or 350 pound weight, and it is no wonderful thing to see ten or twelve thousand Oxen at a time all laden with Rice, Corn and Salt, in such places where they exchange those Commodities: Carrying Corn where only Rice grows, Rice where only Corn grows, and Salt where there is none at all. They make use of Camels sometimes, but very rarely, they being particularly appointed to carry the luggage of great Personages. When the season requires halt, and that they would speedily convey their Merchandize to Suratt to ship them off, they load them upon Oxen, and not in Wains. And in regard that the Territories of the Great Mogul are very well manur'd. the Fields are fenc'd with very good Ditches; and to every Field there belongs a Pond to preserve the water. This is this great inconvenience for Travellers; that when they meet with these numerous Caravans in streight places, they are forc'd to stay two or three days till they are all past by. They that drive these Oxen, follow no other Calling as long as they live, nor do they dwell in houses; yet they carry their Wives and Children along with them. There are some among them that have an hundred Oxen of their own, others more or less; and they have always one, who is their Chief, that takes as much state as a Prince, and has his Chain of Pearl hanging about his neck. When the Caravan that carries the Corn, and that which carries the Salt happen to meet, rather than yield the road, they frequently enter into very bloody Disputes. The Great Mogull considering one day that these quarrels were very prejudicial to Trade, and the transportation of necessary Provisions from place to place, sent for the two Chiefs of the Caravan, and after he had exhorted them, for the common good and their own interest, to live quietly together, and not to quarrel and fight when they met, gave to each of them a Leck, or an hundred thousand Roupies, and a Chain of Pearl.

That the Reader may the better understand the manner of Travelling in the Indies, he is to take notice, that among the Idolaters of that Country there are four Tribes, which are called Manari's, each of which may consist of an hundred thousand Souls. These people live always in Tents, and live only upon the transporting of Merchandize from Countrey to Countrey. The first of these Tribes carry nothing but Corn, the second Rice, the third Pulse, and the fourth Salt, which they fetch from Suratt, and all along from as far as Cape-Camorin. These Tribes are also distinguished in this manner: Their Priests, of whom I shall speak in another place, mark the foreheads of the first, with a red-Gum, about the breadth of a Crown; and then they draw a streak all the length of his nose, sticking grains of Wheat upon it, sometimes ten, and sometimes twelve. Those of the second Tribe are mark'd with yellow-Gum in the same place, with grains of Rice. Those of the third are mark'd with a grey-Gum, down to the shoulders, and grains of Millet. Those of the fourth Tribe carry tied about their necks a Bag, with a great lump of Salt in it, weighing sometimes eight or ten pounds, (for the heavier it is, the more they glory in carrying it;) and with this Bag they thump their stomachs, as a sign of repentance every morning before they say their Prayers. They have all in general a little line or twist, like a Scarf, about their necks, at the end whereof hangs a little Silver-box, like a Relique-box, wherein they enclose a little superstitious writing which their Priests give them; they tie them also about their Oxen and other Cattel, which are bred in their Herds, for which they have a particular affection, and love them as tenderly as children, especially if they have no children of their own. Their Women wear only a piece of Calicut white or painted, some six or five times doubled from their waists downward. From their waists upward they cut their flesh into several forms of Flowers; as they do that apply Cupping-glasses, which they paint in various colours with the juice of Grapes, that their skin seems to be all made of Flowers.

Every morning, while the men load the Beasts, and that the Women fold up the Tents, the Priests that follow them, set up in the most convenient place of the Plain where they lodg'd a certain Idol in the form of a Serpent in wreaths, upon a Perch six or seven foot high; to which they come all in files to worship, their Women going three times about. After the Ceremony is over, the Priests take care of the Idol, and load it upon an Ox particularly appointed for that purpose.

The Caravan of Waggon's seldom exceeds the number of an hundred or two hundred at most. Every Waggon is drawn by ten or twelve Oxen; and attended by four Souldiers, which the Person that owns the Merchandize is oblig'd to pay. Two of them march upon each side of the Waggon, over which there are two Ropes thrown a-crofs, the ends whereof they hold in their hands, to the end, that if the Waggon come to leane on one side in ill-way, the two Souldiers on the other side may keep it from over-turning by pulling the Ropes with all their strength.

All the Waggon's that come to Suratt, either from Agra, or any other parts of the Empire, and which return through Agra, or Janabatt, are bound to carry back back the Lime that comes from Barocha, which, after it is temper'd, and laid on, becomes as hard as Marble.

I come now to the manner of travelling in India, to which purpose they make use of Oxen instead of Horses, and there are some, whose pace is as easy as the amble of our Hackneys. But you must take a care, when you either buy or hire an Ox to ride upon, that the horns be not above a foot in length. For if they be longer, when the flies begin to sting, he will chafe, and toss back his horns, and strike them into the stomach of the Rider, as oftentimes it has hapned. These Oxen are rid like our Horses, and instead of Snaffles or Bitts, they have only a Rope drawn through the muscly part of the muzzle or nostrils. In firm ground where there are no stones, they never shooe their Oxen; but only in rough places, where not only the stones, but the heat will wast and chop the hoof. Whereas in Europe we tie our Oxen by the horns, the Indians only put a thick truss upon their necks, that keeps fast a Coller of Leather four fingers broad, which they have nothing to do but to put about their necks when they fasten them to the Waggon.

They use also for Travel little Coaches, but very light, that will hold two persons; but generally they ride alone for more ease, carrying only their necessary Cloak-Bags along with them; with a small Vessel of Wine, and a small quantity of Provisions, for which there is a proper place under the Coach, where they tie the two Oxen. These Coaches have their Curtains and Seats like ours, yet are not hung: But in my last Travels I caus'd one to be made after our manner; and the two Oxen that drew it, cost me near upon six-hundred Roupies. Nor is the Reader to wonder at the price; for there are some of these Oxen that are very strong, and that will travel upon the trot twelve or fifteen leagues a-day for sixty days together. When they have gone half the days journey, they give them two or three Balls, as big as one of our two-penny-loaves, of Wheat kneaded up with butter and black-sugar. The hire of a Coach comes to a Roupie a-day more or less. From Suratt to Agra is forty days journey, and you pay for the whole journey from forty to forty-five Roupies. From Suratt to Golconda, being almost the same distance, the same price is observed; and by the same proportion you may travel over all the Indies.

They who have more to spend, for their own ease make use of a Pallanquin, wherein they travel very commodiously. This is a sort of little Couch six or seven foot long, and three broad, with balisters round about it. A sort of Cane, call'd Bambouc, which they bend like an Arch, sustains the covering of the Pallanquin, which is either of Satin or Cloath of Gold; and when the Sun lies upon one side, a Slave that goes by the side, takes care to pull down the covering. Another Slave carries at the end of a long stick a kind of Target of Osier, covered over with some gentile stuff, to preserve the person that is in the Pallanquin from the heat of the Sun, when he turns and lies upon his face. The two ends of the Bambouc are fastned on both sides to the body of the Pallanquin between two sticks join'd together like a Salvir or St. Andrews-cross, every one of those two sticks being five or six foot long. There are some of these Bambouc's that cost two hundred Crowns; I my self have paid an hundred and twenty. Three men for the most part apply themselves to each of these two ends to carry the Pallanquin upon their shoulders; some on the right, and some on the left, and they go swifter than our Sedan-men, and with a much more easy pace, as being that which they practice from their youth. You give to every one for all things not above four Roupies a Month; but it stands you in above five if the journey be long, and exceed sixty days labour.

Whether it be in a Coach, or Pallanquin, he that will travel honourably in the Indies, must take along with him twenty or thirty armed men, with Bows and Arrows some, others with Musquets; and they have the same rate with those that carry the Pallanquin. Sometimes for more magnificence they carry a Banner, as the English and Hollanders do, for the honour of their Companies. These Souldiers are not only for shew, but they watch for your defence, keeping Centinels, and relieving one another, and are very studious to give content. For you must know, that in the Towns where you take them into service, they have a Chieftain, that is responsible for their fidelity, who for his good word has two Roupies a-piece of every one.

In

In the great Villages there is generally a Mahumetan that commands, of whom you may buy Mutton, Pullets, or Pidgeons. But where there live none but Banians, there is nothing but Flower, Rice, Herbs and Milk-meats to be had.

The great heats in India enforcing the Travellers, that are not accustomed to them, to travel by night, and rest in the day-time; when they come into any fortified Towns, they must be gone before Sun-set, if they intend to travel that night. For night coming on, and the Gates being shut, the Commander of the place, who is to answer for all the Robberies that are committed within his Jurisdiction, will let no person stir forth, telling them that it is the King's order, to which he must be obedient. When I came to any of those Towns, I brought my Provisions, and went out again in good time, and staid in the Field under some Tree, in the fresh air, till it was time to set forward.

They measure the distances of places in India by Gos, and Costes. A Gos is about four of our common leagues, and a Coste is one league. It is now time to travel from Surat to Agra, and Janabat, and to observe what is most remarkable upon the Road.

CHAP. IV.

The Road from Surat to Agra, through Brampour and Seronge.

I Am no less well acquainted with all the principal Roads that lead to the chief Cities in India, than those of Turkey and Persia; for in six times that I have travell'd from Paris to Ispahan, I have gone twice for one from Ispahan to Agra, and many other places of the Great Mogul's Empire. But it would be tiresome to the Reader to carry him more than once the same way, on purpose to make a relation of every particular journey, and the accidents that accompany them: And therefore let it suffice to give an exact description of the Roads, without particularizing the distinct times that I went.

There are but two Roads from Surat to Agra, one through Brampour and Seronge, the other through Amadabat. The first shall be the Subject of this Chapter.

From Surat to Barnoly, costes 14

Barnoly is a great Borough-Town, where you are to ford a great River; and this first days journey you cross a mixt Countrey, part Wood, through Fields of Wheat and Rice.

From Barnoly to Bahor, costes 10

Bahor is also a large Village upon a Lake, about a league in compass. Upon the side whereof is to be seen a good substantial Fortrefs; though there be no use made of it. Three quarters of a league on this side the Village you ford a small River, though not without great difficulty, by reason of the Rocks and Stones that hazard the over-turning of the Coach. This second days journey you travel almost altogether through Woods.

From Balor to Kerkoa, or as it is call'd at this day, Carvansera de la Begum, costes 5

This Carvansera or Inn is very large and commodious; being built out of Charity by Begum-sahab the Daughter of Cha-jehan. For formerly the journey from Balor to Navapoura was too great: And this place being upon the Frontiers of those Raja's that sometimes will not acknowledge the Great Mogul, whose Vassals they are, there was no Caravan that pass'd by which was not abused; besides that it is a woody-Country. Between Carvansera and Navapoura you ford a River; as also another very neer to Navapoura.

From Kerkoa to Navapoura, costes 75

Navapoura is a great Town full of Weavers; but Rice is the greatest Commodity of that place. There runs a River through the Country, which makes it very fruitful, and waters the Rice, that requires moisture. All the Rice which grows in this Country has one peculiar quality, that makes it more particularly esteem'd esteem'd. The grain of it is less by one half, than the grain of the common Rice; and when it is boil'd no snow is whiter; but besides all that, it smells of Musk; and all the Grandees of the Indians eat no other. When they would make an acceptable Present to any one in Persia, they send him a sack of this Rice. This River which passes by Kerkga and those other places I have mention'd, empties it self into the River of Surat.

From Nasarbar to Dol-medan, costes.

74

10

At Tallener you are to pass the River, which runs to Baroche; where it is very large, and empties it self into the Gulf of Cambaya.

From Tallener to Choupre, costes.

13

10

9

At Badelpoura it is, where the loaded Waggon's pay the duties of Brampour; but the Waggon's that carry nothing but Passengers pay nothing.

From Badelpoura to Brampour, costes.

Brampour is a great City, very much ruin'd, the Houses being for the most part thatch'd with straw. There is also a great Castle in the midst of the City, where the Governour lies; the Government of this Province is a very considerable command; and is only conferr'd upon the Son or Uncle of the King. And Aureng-zeb, the present King, was a long time Governour of this Province in the Reign of his Father. But since they came to understand the strength of the Province of Bengala, which formerly bore the Title of a Kingdom, that Province is now the most considerable in all the Mogul's Countrey. There is a great Trade in this City, and as well in Brampore, as over all the Province, there is made a prodigious quantity of Calicuts very clear and white, which are transported into Persia, Turkey and Muscovia, Poland, Arabia, to Grand Cairo, and other places. There are some which are painted with several colours, with flowers, of which the Women make Veils and Scarfs; the same Calicuts serve for Coverlets of Beds, and for Handkerchiefs. There is another sort of Linnen which they never dye, with a stripe or two of Gold or Silver quite through the piece, and at each end from the breadth of one inch to twelve or fifteen, in some more, in some less, they fix a tissue of Gold, Silver, and Silk, intermix'd with Flowers, whereof there is no wrong-side, both sides being as fair the one as the other. If these pieces, which they carry into Poland, where they have a vast utterance, want at each end three or four inches at the least of Gold or Silver; or if that Gold or Silver become tarnish'd in being carried by Sea from Surat to Ormus, and from Trebizan to Mangala, or any other parts upon the Black-Sea, the Merchant shall have much ado to put them off without great loss. He must take care that his goods be packt up in good Bales, that no wet may get in; which for so long a Voyage requires great care and trouble. Some of these Linnens are made purposely for Swathbands or Shashes, and those pieces are call'd Ornis. They contain from 15 to 20 Ells; and cost from an hundred to an hundred and fifty Roupies, the least, not being under ten or twelve ell's. Those that are not above two ell's long are worn by the Ladies of Quality for Veils and Scarfs, of which there is a vast quantity vend'd in Persia and Turkey. They make at Brampour also other sorts of Cotten-Linnen; for indeed there is no Province in all the Indies which more abounds in Cotton.

When you leave the City of Brampoure, you must pass another River, besides that which I have mention'd already. There is no Bridge, and therefore when the water is low, you ford it; when the rains fall, there are Boats attending.

From Surat to Brampour it is 132 Costes; and these Costes are very short in the Indies; for you may travel one of them in a Coach in less than an hour.

I remember a strange tumult at Brampoure, in the year 1641, when I returned from Agra to Surat; the cause whereof was thus, in short: The Governour of the Province, who was the King's Nephew by the Mother's-side, had among his Pages a young Boy that was very beautiful, and of a very good Family, who had a Brother in the City that liv'd as a Dervich; and for whom all the Town had a very great veneration. One day the Governour, being alone in his Chamber, did all that lay in his power, by vertue of Gifts and Caresses to have had the use of his Body; but the Boy detesting his abominable purpose, made his escape from him, and came and told his Brother. The Dervich, without deliberating what Counsel he had to give his younger Brother, gave him a Sword, such a one as he might easily hide under his Garment; and told him, that if the Governour urg'd him any more, that he should make a shew of complying with him, but that when he went about to do the fact, he should be sure to run him into the Guts. The Governour, who knew nothing of what the Page had reveal'd to his Brother, ceas'd not every day to court him to consent to his infamous lust; and being one day alone with him in a small Apartment of a Banquetting-House, at the lower end of his Garden, he sent for his Page to fan him, and to keep off the Flies, after the fashion of the Countrey; for it was about noon, when every one goes to sleep. Then did the Governour begin again to press the young Page; and finding that he made no resistance, he thought he should suddenly accomplish his design. But the Page seeing him ready to commit the act, stab'd him three times into the Belly, before he could open his mouth to cry out for help. That done, the Page went out of the Palace, without any disturbance in his countenance; so that the Guards believ'd that the Governour had sent him out upon some errand. The Dervich understanding by his Brother what had pass'd, to save him from the fury of the people, and to discover the Infamy of the Governour, caus'd the rest of the Dervichs his Companions, to take the Banners of Mahomet; that were planted round the Mosquee; and at the same time with loud cries encourag'd all the rest of the Dervichs, Faquirs, and others that were good Mahumetans, to follow him. In less than an hours time he had got together an infinite multitude of the Rabble, and the Dervich marching at the head of them, they made directly to the Palace, crying out with all their might, Let us dye for Mahomet, or let us have that infamous person deliver'd up into our hands, to the end the Dogs may eat him after his death, not being worthy to be enterr'd among the Musselmen. The Guard of the Palace was not in a condition to resist so great a Multitude, so that they must have been forced to have yeild'd to their fury, had not the Deroga of the Town, and some five or six Lords, found a way to make themselves to be heard, and to appease them, by representing to them, that they ought to have some respect to the Nephew of the King; by that means obliging them to retire. That night the Body of the Governour was sent to Agra, with his Haram; and Cha-jehan, who then reign'd, being inform'd of the accident, was not much troubl'd, because he is Heir to all the goods of his Subjects; and at the same time he bestow'd upon the Page a small Government in the Province of Bengala.

Before we go any farther, you must take notice, that where-ever you meet with the word Sera, it signifies a great Enclosure of Walls and Hedges, within which are about fifty or sixty Huts, cover'd over with Straw. There are some men and women that there put to sale Flower, Rice, Butter, and Herbs, and make it their business to bake Bread and boil Rice. If there be any Mahumetan in that place, he will go to the City, and buy a little piece of Mutton, or a Fowl; and those that sell Victuals to the Travellers, always cleanse the Hut which they take up, and put into it a little Bed with girths, to lay a Mattress or Quilt upon, which the Travellers carry along with them.

Seronge is a great City, the most part of the Inhabitants whereof are Banian Merchants, and Handicraft-trades-men from Father to Son, which is the reason that there are in this City several Houses of Stone and Brick. There is also a great Trade for all sorts of painted Calicuts, which are called Chites, which is the cloathing of all the meaner sort of people both in Persia and Turkey: Of which in other Countreys also they make use, for Coverlets for Beds, and Table-napkins. They make the same sort of Calicuts in other Countreys as well as at Seronge, but the colours are not so lively; besides, that they wear out with often washing. Whereas those that are made at Seronge, the more you wash them, the fairer the colours shew. There runs a River by the City, the water whereof has that vertue, that it gives that beauty and liveliness to the colours. And all the while the rains fall, the Workmen will make these prints upon their Cottons, according to the Patterns which the Forreign Merchants give them; for when the waters are ceas'd, the water is the thicker; and the oftener they dip their Calicuts, the better the colours hold.

There is also made at Seronge another sort of Calicut, which is so fine, that when a man puts it on, his skin shall appear through it, as if he were naked. The Merchants are not permitted to transport it. For the Governour sends it all to the Seraglio of the Great Mogul, and to the principal Lords of the Court. Of this, the Sultaneſſes, and great Noblemen's Wives make them Shifts and Garments in hot-weather: And the King and the Lords take great pleasure to behold them in those Shifts, and to see them Dance with nothing else upon their Bodies.

From Brampore to Seronge is an hundred and one costes, which are longer than those from Surat to Brampore; for the Coach is a full hour, and sometimes five quarters, going one of these costes. In these hundred leagues of the Countrey you travel whole days journeys along by most fertil Fields of Corn and Rice, being lovely Champaign, where you meet with very little Wood; and from Seronge to Agra, the Countrey is much of the same nature: And because the Villages lye thick together, your journey is the more pleasant; besides, that you may rest when you please.

Callabas is a great Town, which was formerly the Residence of a Raja, who paid Tribute to the Great Mogul. But when Orang-zeb came to the Crown, he not only cut off his, but a great number of the heads of his Subjects. There are two Towers near the Town, upon the high-way, and round about the Towers are several holes, like windows; and in every hole, two foot distant one from another, there is fix'd a man's head. In my last Travels in the year 1665, it had not been long since that Execution had been done; for then all the Heads were whole, and caus'd a very ill smell:

Collasar is a little Town, all the Inhabitants whereof are Idolaters. As I past through it upon my last Travels, there were brought to it eight Pieces of Artillery, the one carrying 48 pound-Bullet, the rest 36. Every Piece was drawn by 24 Yoke of Oxen. A very strong Elephant follow'd the Artillery, and when they came to any bad-way, where the Oxen were at a stand, they brought up the Elephant, who heav'd the Cannon forward with his Trunk. Without the Town, all along the high-way, there grows a vast number of great Trees, which they call Mangues; and in many places near the Trees are to be seen little Pagods, with every one an Idol at the door. The Elephant passing by one of the Pagods, before which I was lodg'd, at the door whereof there stood three Idols about five foot high; so soon as he came near one, he took it up in his trunk, and broke it in two pieces; the next he took, he threw it up so high, and so far, that he broke it in four pieces; and carried away the head of the third along with him. Some thought that the Governour of the Elephant had taught him what to do, and made signs to him, which however I did not observe; nevertheless the Banians were very much offended, though they durst not say any thing; for there was a Guard of above two thousand men that convoy'd the Artillery, all Souldiers of the King, and Mahometans, besides Franguis, or Franks, English and Hollanders that were Cannoneers. The King sent this Artillery to his Army in Decan, being at Wars with the Raja Seva-gi, who the year before had plunder'd Surat; of whom I shall have occasion to speak in another place.

Gate is a strait passage of the Mountains, a quarter of a League in length, the descent whereof leads from Surat to Agra. At the entery thereof you see the ruins of two or three Castles, and the Road is so narrow, that two Waggons can hardly go a brest. They that come from the South to go to Agra, as from Surat, Goa, Visapore, Golconda, Masipatan, and other places, cannot avoid these streights, there being no other Road but this, especially if you take the Road from Amadabat. Formerly there was a Gate at each end of the streight, and at that end which is next to Agra, there are five or six Shops of Banians, that sell Flower, Butter, Rice, Herbs and Pulse. In my last Travels I staid at one of these Shops, to tarry for the Coaches and Waggons, all the Passengers alighting at the foot of the Streights. Not far off there is a great Magazin full of sacks of Rice and Corn; and behind every sack lay a Serpent thirteen or fourteen foot long, and proportionable in bigness. A Woman that went to fetch Corn out of one of those sacks, was bitten by one of those Serpents, and perceiving her self wounded, ran out of the Magazin, crying out Ram, Ram, that is, O God, O God; whereupon several Banians, men and women came running to her relief, and bound her arm very hard above the wound, thinking to stop the venom from running any higher. But all in vain, for immediately her face swell'd and turn'd black, and she dy'd in less than an hour. The Ragipow's, who are the best Souldiers among the Indians, and are all Idolaters, came in just as the woman was expiring, and about four of them entring with their Skains, and Half-pikes in their hands into the Magazin, kill'd the Serpent. The people of the Village took and threw it without the Town, and immediately there came a great number of Birds of prey, which lighting upon the Carrion, devour'd it in less than an hours time. The Parents of the woman took her body, carri'd it to the River, wash'd it, and then burnt it. I was forc'd to stay two days at that place, because there was a River to pass, which instead of falling, swell'd at that time, by reason of the rains that fell for three or four days together: So that I was constrain'd to go half a league lower before I could cross it. They always endeavour'd to ford this River; for otherwise they must be compell'd to unload the Wagon into the Boats; and also to carry the Goods in their arms for above half a league, which is worse way than can be imagin'd. The people get their livings by the Passengers, from whom they extort as much as they can, there being none but they that know the ways: Otherwise it would be an easy thing to make a Bridge, there being no want either of Wood or Stone near at hand. For the passage is nothing but thorough Rocks, that lie between the Mountain and the River; so that the waters when they swell, overflow all the Road, in-so-much that no-body can pass it, but they who are very well acquainted with it.

Nader is a great City upon the descent of a Mountain, at the top whereof is a kind of Fortrefs; all the Mountain being encompassed with walls. The greatest part of the Houses, as in all other Cities of India, are thatch'd with straw, one Story high; but the Rich-men's Houses, are two Stories, and terrass'd. Round about the City are several great ponds to be seen, which were formerly encompassed with hewn-stone, but now are not at all look'd after: yet there are very fair Monuments about them. The same River which we pass the day before, and which we repass four or five Costes on this side Nader, encompasses three parts of the City and Mountain, like a Peninsula, and after a long winding-course which it takes, falls at length into Ganges. At Nader they make a great quantity of quilted-Coverlets, some white, others embroidered with Flowers of Gold, Silk and Satin.

Goualeor is a great City ill-built, like all the rest, after the manner of the Indians; it is built all along the side of a Mountain that lies upon the West-side of it; and which at the top is encompassed with Walls and Towers. There are in this Enclosure several Ponds made by the rains; and what they sow there is sufficient to keep the Garrison: For which reason it is esteem'd one of the best in the Indies. Upon the descent of the Hill, which looks towards the North-east, Cha-jean built an House of Pleasure; from whence there is a Prospect over all the City, and indeed it may serve for a Garrison. Below the House are to be seen several Idols cut out of the Rock, representing the shapes of their Gods: And among the rest, there is one of an extraordinary height.

Since the Mahometan Kings became Masters of this Countrey, this Fortrefs of Goualeor is the place where they secure Princes and great Noblemen. Cha-jean coming to the Empire by foul-play, caus'd all the Princes and Lords whom he mistrusted, to be seiz'd one after another, and sent them to the Fortrefs of Goualeor; but he suffer'd them all to live, and enjoy their Estates. Aureng-zeb his Son acts quite otherwise; For when he sends any great Lord to this place, at the end of nine or ten days he orders him to be poison'd; and this he does that the people may not exclaim against him for a bloody Prince. So soon as he had in his clutches Prince Morat-Bakche his youngest Brother, whom he engaged to take Arms against his Father Cha-jean; and who being Governor of the Province of Guzerat, took upon him the Title of King, he sent him to this Fortrefs, where he dy'd. They have made him a most magnificent Monument in the City in a Mosque, which they built on Purpose, with a great Piazza before it all surrounded with Vaults and Shops over them. For it is the custom of the Indians, when they rear any publick building, to make a great Piazza before it, where they keep their Markets, with a Foundation for the Poor, to whom they give Alms every day, as being to pray to God for him that rais'd the Fabrick.

CHAP. V.

The Road from Surat to Agra through Amadabat.

FROM Surat to Baroche, costes 22

All the Countrey between these two Cities is full of Corn, Rice, Millet, and Sugar-Canes. Before you enter into Baroche, you must Ferry over the River which runs to Cambaya, and falls into the Golf that carries the same name. Baroche is a great City, to which there belongs a Fortrefs, of which there is no use made at this time. But the City has been always very famous, by reason of the River, which has a particular quality to whiten their Cottons; which are brought thither from all parts of the Great Mogul's Territories, where they have not that convenience. In this place are made a great quantity of Bassa's, or long and large pieces of Cotton. These Cottons are very fair, and close woven; and the price of these pieces is from four to an hundred Roupies. You must pay Custom at Baroche for all Goods that are brought in and carri'd out. The English have a very fair House in the City; and I remember once, that coming thither one day in my return from Surat to Agra with the President of the English, presently the Mountebanks came about him, and ask'd him if he would see any of their tricks. The first thing they did was to light a great fire, and to heat certain Iron-chains red-hot, and wind them about their bodies, making as if they felt a great deal of pain, but in truth receiving no harm at all. Then they thrust a piece of a stick into the ground, and ask'd the Company what Fruit they would have. One told them, he would have Mengues; then one of the Mountebanks hiding himself in the middle of a Sheet, stoop't to the ground five or six times one after another. I was so curious to go up stairs, and look out of a window, to see if I could spy what the Mountebank did; and perceived, that after he had cut himself under the armpits with a Razor, he rubb'd the stick with his Blood. After the two first times that he rais'd himself, the stick seem'd to the very eye to grow. The third time there sprung out branches with young buds. The fourth time the Tree was covered with leaves; and the fifth time it bore flowers. The President of the English had then his Minister with him, having brought him from Amadabat to Christen the Commander of the Hollander's Child, to which he had promised to be Godfather. The English Minister Protested that he could not give his consent that any Christian should be a spectator of such delusions. So that as soon as he saw that those Mountebanks had of a dry-stick, in less then half an hour, made a Tree four or five foot high, that bare leaves and flowers as in the Spring-time; he went about to break it, protesting he would not give the Communion to any person that should stay any longer to see those things. Thereupon the President was forc'd to dismiss the Mountebanks, who wander about the Countrey with their Wives and Children just like Gipsies; and having given them to the value of ten or twelve Crowns, they went away very well contented.

They that are curious to see Cambaya, never go out of their way above five or six Costes, or thereabout. For when you are at Baroche, instead of going to Broudra, you may go directly forward to Cambaya, from thence afterwards to Amadabat. But whether it be for business, or out of curiosity, the latter Road is never to be taken; not only because it is the longest way, but because of the danger in crossing the mouth of the Golf.

Cambaya is a great City at the bottom of the Golf that bears its name. Here it is that they shape those fair Agats, that come from the Indies, into Cups, Hafts of Knives, Beads, and other sorts of Workmanship. In the parts adjacent to the City, they also make Indigo of the same nature of that of Sarques; and it was famous for traffick at the time when the Portugueses flourish'd in India. There are to be seen at this day, in the Quarter next the Sea, very fair Houses, which they had built, with very rich Furnithre, after the Portugal manner; but now they are uninhabited, and fall to decay every day more and more. There were then such good Orders observ'd in Cambaya, that two hours after day was shut in, every Street was lock't up with two Gates, which are still to be seen; and still they continue to lock up the principal Streets, as also the Streets that lead into the Town. One of the chief reasons why the Town has lost the greatest part of its Trade is, because that formerly the Sea run close up to Cambaya, so that little Vessels easily anchor'd by it; but afterwards the Sea daily lost in that part, so that a small Ship could not ride within five or six Leagues of the City.

There are a great number of Peacocks in the Indies, especially in the Territories of Baroche, Cambaya, and Broudra. The flesh of the young ones is white and well-tasted like ours, and you shall see vast numbers of them all day in the Fields, for at night they roost upon the Trees. 'Tis a hard matter to come near them in the day, for as soon as they perceive themselves hunted, they fly away as swift as a Partridge among the Bushes; so that it is impossible for any man to follow them without tearing his Cloaths all to rags; therefore are they only to be taken in the night time, to which purpose they have this invention. They approach the Tree with a kind of a Banner, upon which there is a Peacock painted to the life on both sides. At the top of the stick are fastn'd two lighted Candles, the brightness whereof alluring the Peacock, causes him to stretch out his Neck toward the end of the stick, to which there is a Rope ty'd with a sliding knot, which he that holds the Banner draws, when he finds that the Peacock has put his Neck into it. But you must have a care of killing either Bird or any other Animal in the Territories, of which the idolatrous Rajah's are Masters; which is nothing dangerous to do in those parts of the Indies, where the Governors are Mahometans, and give liberty to Fowl or Hunt. It happen'd one time that a rich Persian Merchant, passing through the Territories of the Raja of Dantivar, shot a Peacock upon the road, and kill'd it, either out of rashness, or ignorance of the Customs of the Country. The Bannians incens'd at the attempt, which is accounted among them a most abominable sacrileg, seiz'd upon the Merchant, and all his Money to the value of 300000 Roupies, and tying him to a Tree, whipt him in so terrible a manner for three days together, that the Man dy'd.

From Cambaya you go to a little Village distant some three Costes, where there is a Pagod, to which all the Indian Curtisans come to make their Offerings. This Pagod is full of a great number of naked Images, among the rest, there is a large Figure of one that seems to resemble Apollo, with his privy parts all uncover'd. When the old Curtisans have got together a good sum of Money in their youth, they buy young Slaves, whom they teach to Daunce, and sing wanton Songs, and instruct in all the mysteries of their infamous Art. And when these young Girls are eleven or twelve years old, their Mistresses send them to this Pagod, believing it will bring them good fortune, to offer and surrender up themselves to this Idol.

From this Pagod to Chidabad you have six Costes. This is one of the fairest Houses of the great Mogul, with a wide Enclosure, wherein he has vast Gardens, and large Ponds, with all the pleasures and curiosity whereof the Genius of the Indians is capable.

From Chidabad to Amadabad you have but five Costes; and so I return to Baroche, and the common Road.

Amadabat is one of the greatest Cities in India; and where there is a mighty Trade for Silk-Stuffs, Hangings of Gold and Silver, and others mix'd with Silk, for Saltpeter, Sugar, Ginger candid and raw; Tamarins, Mirobolans; and flat

Indigo,

Indigo, which is made at a great Town, not far from Amadabat, called Sarquesf. There was in that place a Pagod, which the Mahumetan's have pull'd down, and built a Mosquee in the place. Before you enter into it, you must cross three large Courts pay'd with Marble, and encompass'd with Galleries; nor must you enter into the third Court till you have pull'd off your shooes. The inside of the Mosquee is adorn'd with Mosaick-work, the greatest part whereof is of Agats of divers colours, which they fetch from the Mountains of Cambaya, not above two days journey off. There are several Sepulchres of the ancient Idolatrous Kings, that look like little Chappels, of Mosaick-work, built upon a Vault that is under the Sepulchre. There runs a River from Amadabat toward the North-west, which during the rainy-seasons that continue three or four Months together, is very wide and rapid, and does much mischief every year. It is so with all the other Rivers in India; and after the rains are fallen, you must stay six weeks or two months before you can ford Amadabat-River, where there is no Bridge. There are two or three Boats; but they are of no use, when the stream is so swift; so that you must stay till the waters are fall'n. But the people of the Countrey will not stay so long; for to cross from one River to another, they only make use of Goat-skins, which they blow up and fill with wind, and then tye them between their stomacks and their bellies. Thus the poor men and women swim cross this River, and when they would carry their children along with them, they put them in certain round pots of Earth, the mouth whereof is four fingers wide, and drive the Pots before them. This puts me in mind of a Passage, when I was at Amadabat in the year 1642, which is too remarkable to be omitted.

A Countrey-man and a Countrey-woman one day past the River as I have related, and having a child about two years old, they put it into one of these Pots, so that there was nothing but the head appear'd. Being about the middle of the River, they met with a little bank of Sand, where there lay an huge Tree, which the stream had carry'd thither; whereupon the Father shov'd the Pot toward that part, to rest himself awhile. When he came near the Tree, the trunk whereof lay somewhat above the water, a Serpent leapt out from among the roots, into the Pot where the Infant was. The Father and the Mother frighted at the accident, and having almost lost their senses, let the Pot go a-drift where the stream carri'd it, and lay almost dead themselves at the bottom of the Tree. About two leagues lower, a Banian and his Wife with a little Infant, were washing themselves in the River before they went to eat. They descry'd the Pot a-far-off, with the half of the Infant's-head that appear'd above the hole. The Banian immediately swims to the relief of the child, and having stopp'd the Pot, drives it to the shoar. The Mother follow'd by her own, comes presently to take the other child out of the Pot, at what time the Serpent that had done no harm to the other child, shoots out of the Pot, and winding about hers, stings it, and infuses its venom into the Infant, so that it dy'd immediately. However, the accident being so extraordinary, did not trouble these poor people; who rather believ'd it to have happen'd by the secret disposal of their Deity, who had taken from them one child, to give them another for it, with which opinion they presently comforted themselves. Some time after, the report of this accident coming to the ears of the first Country-man, he comes to the Banian to tell him how the mischance had happen'd, and to demand his child of him; the other Indian affirming that the child was his, and that his God had sent it him, in the place of that which was dead. To be short, the business made so loud a noise, that it was at length brought before the King, who order'd, that the child should be restor'd to the Father.

At the same time there happen'd another very pleasant accident in the same City of Amadabat. The Wife of a rich Merchant Banian, nam'd Sainridas, never having had a child, and manifesting her eager desire to have one, a servant of the House took her a-side one day, and told her, that if she would but eat that which he would give her, she should be with child. The woman desirous to know what she was to eat, the servant told her it was a little fish, and that she should eat but three or four. Now the Religion of the Banians forbidding them to eat any thing that has life, she could not at first resolve to yield to his proposal; but the servant having promised her that he would so order the matter, that she should not know whether it were fish or no that she eat, she resolv'd to try his receipt, and went the next night to lie with her Husband, according to the instruction which she had received from the Servant. Some time after, the woman perceiving that she was big, her Husband happen'd to die, and the kindred of the deceased would have his Estate. The Widow opposed them, and told them that it behov'd them to stay, till they saw whether the Child she went withal, would live or no. Her kindred were surpriz'd to hear such news that they so little expected, and tax'd her for one that either ly'd or jested with them; knowing that the woman had liv'd fifteen or sixteen years with her Husband, yet never had been with Child. Seeing therefore that her kindred still tormented her, she went and threw her self at the Governour's feet, to whom she related all that had past; who thereupon order'd that the kindred should stay till the woman was deliver'd. Some days after she had lain-in, the kindred of the deceased Merchant, who were Persons of Credit, and gap'd after so fair an inheritance, affirm'd that the child was not Legitimate, and that she had it not by her Husband. The Governour, to understand the truth of the matter, calls for the Physicians; who concluded, that the Infant should be carried to the Bath, saying, that if the Receipt which the Mother had made use of, were real, the sweat of the Child would smell of Fish; which was done accordingly, and the Experiment prov'd true. Thereupon the Governour order'd that the Child should have the Estate; the Merchant being so proud to be his Father: But the kindred, troubl'd that such a fat Morfel had escap'd their mouths, appeal'd to the King. Upon their relation of the story, the King wrote to the Governour to send him the Mother and the Infant, to the end the Experiment might be made in his presence: which having the same success as before, the kindred surceas'd their claim, and the Estate remain'd to the Mother and the Infant.

I remember also another pleasant Story which was related to me at Amadabat, where I have been ten or twelve times. A Merchant with whom I often dealt, and who was very well belov'd by Cha-Est-Kan, Governour of the Province, and the King's Uncle, had the reputation never to have told a lye. Cha-Est-Kan, after the three years of his Government were expir'd, according to the custom of the Great Mogul, and that Aureng-zeb, the King's Son was come into his place, retir'd to Agra, where the Court then was. One day, discoursing with the King, he told him, that he had seen many rare things in the Government, with which his Majesty had honour'd him, but that one thing above all the rest had astonish'd him, to have met with a Rich Merchant that had never told a lye, and yet he was above threescore and ten years of age. The King surpriz'd at a thing so extraordinary, signified to Cha-Est-Kan, his desire to see the person, and commanded him to send for him to Agra, which he did. The Old-Man was very much troubl'd, as well in regard of the length of the way, it being a journey of 25 or 30 days, as for that he was to make a Present to the King. In short, he provided one, esteem'd at forty-thousand Roupies, to carry Betle in, enchas'd with Diamonds, Rubies, and Emraulds. When he had made his obeysance to the King, and given him his Present, the King ask'd him only what was his name, to whom he replyed, that he was call'd the man that had never told a lye. Then the King ask'd him who was his Father? Sir, said he, I cannot tell; his Majesty satisfi'd with an answer, stopt there, and unwilling to trouble him any farther, commanded an Elephant to be given him, which is a very great Honour, and ten thousand Roupies to bear his charges home.

The Banians have a great Veneration for Apes, and there are some which they breed up in their Pagods to worship. There are three or four Houses in Amadabat which they make use of for Hospitals for Cowes, Oxen, Apes, and other sick or maim'd Beasts; and they carry all they can find thither to preserve them. This is also very remarkable, that every Tuesday and Friday, all the Apes in the places adjoining to Amadabat, of their own accord come to the City, and get upon the tops of their Houses, where they lye, during the excessive heats. And therefore upon those days the People never fail to set ready in their Terraces, Rice, Millet, Sugar-Canes in their seasons, and other such-like things. For if the Apes did not find their provision when they came, they would break the Tiles where-with the rest of the House is cover'd, and do a great deal of mischief.

chief. And you must here take notice also, that the Ape never eats any thing which he does not very well like the scent of before-hand; and before he swallows any-thing, he lays up his Magazin against future hunger; filling his bags with provision, which he keeps till next day.

I have said, that the Banians have a particular Veneration for the Ape; of which I will give you one Example, among many, that I could bring. Being one day at Amadabat, at the House belonging to the Hollanders, a young man of that Nation newly arriv'd to serve in the Factory, not knowing the custom of the Countrey, and seeing a great Ape upon a Tree in the Court, would needs shew a piece of activity, or rather a trick of youth, to kill the Ape with a small Gun. I was at the Table then with the Dutch-Commander; and we no sooner heard the blow, but we heard as soon a loud noise of Banians, that wait upon the Holland-Company, who came to complain bitterly of him that had kill'd the Ape. They would all have been gone; so that the Commander had much ado, and made many excuses before he could appease them, and oblige them to stay.

In the Neighbourhood about Amadabat, there are a great number of Apes. And this is observable, that where there are a great number of those Animals, there are very few Crows. For as soon as they have built their Nests and laid their Eggs, the Apes get upon the Trees and throw their Eggs to the Ground. One day returning from Agra, and departing out of Amadabat with the English President, who came hither about some business, and was returning to Surat, we pass'd through a little Forrest of Trees, call'd Mangues, some four or five Leagues from Amadabat; there we saw a vast number of great Monkeys, male and female, and many of their females holding their young ones in their Arms. We had each of us our Coach, and the English President causing his to stop, told me he had an excellent and very neat Harquebuss, that was presented him by the Governor of Daman; and knowing I could aim well, he desir'd me to try it, at one of those Apes. One of my Servants, who was born in the Country, making me a sign not to venture, I endeavour'd to dissuade the President from his design; but it was impossible; so that I took the Harquebuss, and kill'd a female Monkey, who lay stretch'd out upon the Boughs, letting her little ones fall to the ground. But it fell out as my Servant had forewarn'd me. For immediately all the Monkeys that were upon the Trees, to the number of sixty, came down in a great fury, to have leap'd into the Presidents Coach, where they would soon have strangled him, had we not prevented them by closing the Shutters, and had we not had a great number of Servants, that with much ado kept them off. And though they came not to my Coach, yet I was very much afraid of my self; for they pursu'd the Presidents Coach above a League, and they were stout lusty Monkeys.

Chitpour is a very good City, so called by reason of the great Trade for painted Calicuts, which are called Chites: Near which, some four or five-hundred paces toward the South, there runs a small River. Arriving at Chitpour in one of my Voyages, I pitch'd my Tent under two or three Trees at the end of a wide-place neer the Town. A little while after I saw four or five Lions appear, which were brought to be tam'd; which they told me took them up five or six months; and their way to do it, is this: They tie the Lions at twelve paces distance one from another by the hinder-legs, with a Rope fasten'd to a great wooden-stake set deep in the ground, with another cord about the neck, which the Master holds in his hand. These stakes are planted in the same Line, and in another Parallel they stretch out another Cord as long as the space, which the bodies of the Lions so dispos'd of, as I have describ'd, take up. The two Cords which hold the Lion ty'd by the two hinder-feet, give him liberty to spring out as far as that long Cord; which is a mark to those that stand to provoke and incense the Lions, by throwing stones and pieces of wood at them, not to venture any farther: The people run to see the fight, and when the Lion, provok'd, gives a spring towards the Cord, the Master holds holds another in his hand, ty'd about his neck, that pulls him back. Thus they accustom the Lion by degrees to be familiar with the people, and at my coming to Chiapour, I saw this Divertissement without stirring out of my Coach.

The next day I had another, meeting with a knot of Faquirs, or Mahometan Dervichs. I counted fifty-seven, among whom, he that was the Chief or Superior, had been Grand Esquire to Cha-jehan-guir, having left the Court; when Sultan Boulaki, his youngest Son, was strangl'd by Order of Cha-jehan; there were four others; who next to the Superior, were chief of the Company, who had been also great Lords in the same Cha-jehan's Court. All the Cloaths those five Dervichs had, were only four ells of Orange-colour-Calicut to hide what modesty will have hid before and behind, and every one of them a Tygers-skin over their shoulders ty'd together under their chins. They had led before them eight fair Horses saddl'd and bridl'd; three whereof had Bridles of Gold, and Saddles cover'd with Plates of Gold, and the other five had Bridles of Silver cover'd with Plates of Silver, and a Leopard's-skin upon every one. The other Dervichs had only a Cord for their Girdle, to which was fasten'd a piece of Calicut only to cover their private parts. Their hair was ty'd in wreaths round about their heads after the manner of a Turbant. They were all well-arm'd, the most part with Bows and Arrows, some with Muskets, and others with Half-pikes, with another sort of weapon which we have not in Europe; that is to say, a sharp piece of Iron like the side of a Platter without a bottom, which they wind eight or ten times about their necks, and carry like a Calves Chaldron. They draw out these Iron-Circles as they intend to make use of them; and they will throw them with such a force against a man, that they shall fly as swift as an Arrow, and go very neer to cut a man in two in the middle. They had every one, besides all this, an Hunting-Horn, which they wind, making a prodigious noise when they come to any place, and when they go away; together with a Grater or Rasp, being an Iron-Instrument, made like a Trowel. This is an Instrument which the Indians carry generally about them when they travel, to scrape and make clean the places where they intend to rest; and some of them, when they have scrap'd all the dust together into an heap, make use of it instead of a Mattress or Pillow to lie easily upon. There were some of them that were arm'd with long Tucks; which they had bought either of the English or Portugals. Their Luggage consisted of four great Chests full of Persian and Arabian Books, and some Kitchen-household stuff. They had also ten or twelve Oxen to carry their sick. When the Dervichs came to the place where I lay with my Coach, having about fifty persons with me, as well of the people of the Countrey, as of my own servants; the Chief or Superior of the Troop seeing me so well-attended, enquir'd what Aga that was; and desir'd me to let him have that place which I had taken up, as being the most convenient in all that place, for him and his Dervichs to lodg. When they told me the quality of the Chief, and the four Dervichs that attended him, I was willing to be civil, and to yield to their request; and thereupon I left them the place free. After they had well-water'd the place, and laid the dust, they lighted two fires, as if it had been in the frost and snow for the five principal Dervichs, who sat and chaf'd themselves before and behind. That very evening, after they had supp'd the Governour of the Town came to complement the principal Dervichs, and during their stay, sent them Rice and other things, which they are accustomed to eat. When they come to any place, the Superior sends some of his Crew a begging into the Towns and Villages, and what Alms they get, is presently distributed equally among them; every one of them taking care to boil his own Rice. What is over and above they give to the Poor in the evening; for they reserve nothing till next day.

To make him amends, I gave him three Shashes of Gold and Silk, four Handkerchiefs of painted Linnen, and two Bottles, the one full of Aquavite, and the other full of Spanish-Wine. At my departure he sent a Convoy of twenty Horse four or five leagues along with me.

One evening being about to lodg upon the Frontiers of the Territories of the Raja of Bargant, my people came to me and told me, that if we took the Road through Bargant, we should go neer to have all our throats cut, for that the Raja of that place liv'd altogether upon Robbery. So that unless I hir'd an hundred more of the Country-people, there was no likelihood of escaping those Freebooters. At first I argu'd with them, and tax'd their Cowardice, but fearing to pay for my rashness afterwards, I sent them to hire fifty more, for three days only, that we cross'd the Raja's Country: for which they ask'd me every one four Roupies, which is as much as you give them for a whole Month. The next day as I was about to set forward, my Guard came and told me they would leave me, and that they would not venture their lives, desiring me not to write to Agra to their Captain, who was responsible for them, that they had left me against my will. Three of my servants also did as they did, so that I had no body left with me, but a man that lead an Horse in his hand, my Coachman, and three other servants, and so I set forward under the protection of God. About a league from the place which I had left, I perceived some part of my Convoy following me. Thereupon I stopt my Coach to stay for them, and when they came neer, I bid them advance if they intended to go along with me. But seeing them fearful, and unresolv'd, I bid them go about their business, telling them I had no need of such Cowards as they were. About a league from thence I discover'd upon the brow of an Hill about fifty Horse, four of which came riding up to me; when I perceived them, I alighted out of my Coach, and having with me some thirteen Spit-fires, I gave to every one of my men an Harquebus. The Horse-men approaching, I kept my Coach between them and me, and had my Gun ready cockt, in case they should assail me. But they made me a sign, that I should fear nothing; only that the Prince was a-Hunting, and had sent to know what Strangers past through his Territories: I made answer, that I was the same Franguy that had past by five or six weeks before. By good luck, the very same Lieutenant to whom I had made the Present of Aquavite and Spanish-Wine, follow'd those four Horsemen. And after he had testify'd how glad he was to see me, he ask'd me if I had any Wine; I told him I never travell'd without that: For indeed the English and Hollanders had presented me with several Bottles at Agra. So soon as the Lieutenant was return'd to the Raja, the Raja himself came to me, and told me I was welcome; and bid me rest my self in a shady-place which he pointed to, about a league and an half from the place where we were. In the evening he came, and we staid together two days to make merry; the Raja bringing along with him certain Morrice-dancers, without which the Persians and Indians can never think themselves heartily merry. At my departure the Raja lent me 200 Horse, to convoy me to the Frontiers of his Territories, for three days together; for which I only gave them three or four pound of Tobacco. When I came to Amadabat, the people would hardly believe that I had had so kind a reception from a Prince, that was noted for abusing strangers that past through his Countrey.

This spoil was done by the order of the Begum, in revenge of the Affront which the Inhabitants of Mirda had put upon her, who had not waited on her, and made her a Present as they ought to have done.

CHAP. VI.

The Road from Ispahan to Agra, through Candahar.

I Have made an exact description of some part of the Road, and brought the Reader as far as Candahar; it remains, that I carry him from Candahar to Agra; to which there are but two ways to go, either through Caboul, or through Multan. The latter way is the shorter by ten days journey. But the Caravan never goes that way. For from Candahar to Multan you travel almost all the way through Desarts; and sometimes you travel three or four days without meeting any water. So that the most ordinary and beaten Road, is through Caboul. Now from Candahar to Caboul, is twenty-four days journey; from Caboul to Lahor, twenty-two; from Lahor to Dehly, or Gehanabat, eighteen; from Dehly to Agra, six; which with the sixty days journey from Ispahan to Farat, and the twenty from Farat to Candahar, makes in all from Ispahan to Agra, an hundred and fifty days journey. But the Merchants that are in haste, take Horses, three or four together in a company, and ride the whole journey in sixty, or sixty-five days at most.

Multan is a City where there is made a vast quantity of Linnen Calicuts, which was all transported to Tuta, before the Sands had stop'd up the mouth of the River; but since that, it is carry'd all to Agra, and from Agra to Surat, as is the greatest part of the Merchandize which is made at Lahor. But in regard carriage is so dear, very few Merchants traffick either to Multan or at Lahor; and many of the Workmen have also deserted those places, so that the Kings Revenues are very much diminished in those Provinces. Multan is the place whither all the Banians come, that trade into Persia, where they follow the same Trade as the Jews, and out-do them in Usury. They have a particular Law among them, which permits them to eat Fowl upon certain days in the year; and not to have more than one Wife among two or three Brothers, the eldest whereof is accounted the Father of the Children. This City also breeds abundance of Dancers, of both Sexes, that spread themselves all over Persia.

Will come now to the Road from Candahar to Agra, through Caboul and Lahor.

In all these forty Costes of way, there are but three pitiful Villages; where sometimes, though very rarely, you have Bread and Barley for your Horses; but the surest way is to carry provision along with you. In the Months of July and August, there blows a hot Wind in those parts, that takes away a mans breath, and kills him upon the place; being of the same nature with those Winds, of which I have spoken in my Persian Relations, that blow at certain seasons near Babylon and Moussul.

Caboul is a large City, very well fortified; and is the place where those of Osbeck come every year to sell their Horses. They reckon, that there are bought and sold, every year, above sixty thousand. They bring also out of Persia, great numbers of Sheep, and other Cattel; it being the general Concourse of Persians, Tartarians, and Indians. There is also Wine to be had; but Provisions go off at a very good rate.

Before I go any farther, I must take notice of one thing in particular, concerning the people call'd Angans, who inhabit from Candahar to Caboul, toward the Mountains of Balch, a sturdy sort of people, and great Robbers in the night-time. It is the custom of the Indians to cleanse and scrape their tongues every morning with a crooked piece of a root, which causes them to void a great quantity of Flegm and Rhume, and provokes vomiting. Now though those people that inhabit the Frontiers of Persia and India practise the same thing; nevertheless they vomit very little in the morning, but when they come to eat, as soon as they have swallowed two or three bits, their lungs begin to swell, and they are constrain'd to go forth and vomit; after which, they return again to their Victuals with a very good appetite. Should they not do so, they would not live above thirty years; and besides, they would be troubl'd with the Dropsie.

Labor is the Metropolis of a Kingdom, built upon one of the five Rivers that descend from the Mountains of the North to swell the River Indus; and give the name of Peniab to all the Region which they water. This River at this time flows not within a league of the Town, being subject to change its Channel, and many times does very great mischief to the adjoining Fields, through the rapid deluges which it makes. The City is large, and extends itself above a league in length. But the greatest part of the Houses, which are higher than those of Agra and Deli, fall to ruine, by reason of the excessive rains that have overflowed a great number of them. The King's Palace is an indifferent fair one, and is not, as formerly it was, upon the River, which is fall'n off above a quarter of a league from it. There is Wine to be had at Labor.

I must observe by the by, that after you have past Labor, and the Kingdom of Kakemir, that lies upon it toward the North, none of their Women have any hair upon any part of their bodies, and the Men but very little upon their chins.

Before you go any farther, you are to take notice that all the way from Labor to Dehly, and from Dehly to Agra, is a continual walk set on both sides with fair Trees; an object most pleasing to the sight: But in some places the Trees are decay'd, and there is no care taken to Plant others in their stead.

Dehly is a great City near the River Gemma, which runs from the North to the South, afterwards from the West to the East; and after it has past by Agra and Kadione, empties it self into the Ganges. After Cha-jehan had built the new City of Gehanabad, which is call'd by his own Name; and where he chose rather to keep his Court, than at Agra, because the Climate is more temperate. Dehly is almost come to ruine, and indeed is nothing but an heap of Rubbish; there being no other Houses remaining but only for poor people. The Streets are narrow, and the Houses of Bambouc, as over all the rest of the Indies. Neither are there above three or four Lords of the Court that reside at Dehly, where they set up their Tents in great Enclosures, and in the same manner lodg'd the Reverend Jesuit that was at Court.

Gehanabad, as well as Dehly, is a great City; and there is nothing but a single Wall that make the separation. All the Houses of particular men consist of great Enclosures, in the midst whereof is the place for Lodgings. The greatest part of the Lords do not live in the City, but have their Houses without, for the conveniency of the water. As you enter into Gehanabad from Dehly, you meet with a long and broad Street, on each side whereof are Vaults, where the Merchants keep shops, being only plat-form'd at the top. This street ends in the great Piazza before the King's House; and there is another very fair and large Street, that runs toward another Gate of the same Palace, in which live the great Merchants that keep no Shops.

The King's Palace takes up above half a league circuit: The Walls are of fair cut-Stone with Battlements. The Moats are full of water, pav'd with Freestone. The great Gate of the Palace has nothing in it of magnificence; no more than the first Court, into which the great Lords may enter upon their Elephants.

Having

Having past that Court, you enter into another long and large passage, with fair Portico's on both sides. Under which are several little Chambers, where part of the Horse-Guard lies. These Portico's are rais'd some two foot above the ground, and the Horses which are ti'd without, feed upon the steps. In some places there are great Gates that lead to several Apartments; as to the Womens Lodgings, and to the Seat of Justice. In the midst of the passage runs a Cut full of water, leaving a fair Walk on each side, where, at equal distances, are little Basins or Fountains.

This long Passage carries you into a great Court, where the Omra's, that is to say, the great Lords of the Kingdom, such as the Basha's in Turkey, and the Kan's in Persia, keep Guard in Person. They have low Lodgings round about the Court, and their Horses are ti'd to their doors.

From this second Court you pass into a third, through a great Portal; on one side whereof there is a little Hall, rais'd some two or three steps high from the ground. This is the Wardrobe where the Royal Garments are kept; and from whence the King sends for the Calaat, or a whole Habit for a man, when he would honour any Stranger or any one of his own Subjects. A little farther, under the same Portal, is the place where the Drums, Trumpets, and Hautboys are laid up; which they sound and beat a little before the King enters into his Judgment-Seat, to give notice to the Omrah's; and they make the same noise when the King is ready to rise. Entering into the third Court, you see the Divan before you, where the King gives Audience. This is a great Hall rais'd some four-foot-high above the superficies of the Court, with three sides open. Thirty-two Pillars sustain as many Arches; and these Columns are about four-foot-square, with Pedestals and Mouldings. When Cha-jehan first began to build this Hall, he intended to have enrich'd it, and inlaid it all over with those Stones that seem to be naturally painted, like those in the Great Duke of Tuscany's Chappel. But having made a trial upon two or three Pillars, about two or three-foot-high, he found that there would not be Stones enough, of that sort, in the World to finish the work; besides the vastness of the Sum it would come to. So that he left off his design, contenting himself with a Painting of several flowers.

In the middle of this Hall, next to the side which looks toward the Court, there is a Throne erected upon a kind of Theater, where the King gives Audience, and pronounces Judgment. The Throne is a little Bed with four Columns, about the bigness of one of our Field-beds, with a Canopy, Backpiece, Boulster and Counterpoint, all embroider'd with Diamonds. Besides all this, when the King comes to sit upon the Throne, they throw over the Bed a Coverlet of Cloath of Gold, or some other richly-embroider'd Silk; and he ascends by three little steps, two-foot-broad. On one side of the Bed is erected an Umbrello upon a Staff, as long as an Half-Pike. Upon one of the Pillars of the Throne hangs one of the King's Weapons; upon another his Buckler; upon another his Scimitar; and then his Bow and Quiver of Arrows, and other things of the same nature.

Below the Throne there is a place some twenty-foot-square, encompass'd with Balusters which at some times are cover'd with Plates of Silver, at other times with Plates of Gold. At the four Corners of this small enclosure sit the four Secretaries of State, who as well in Civil as Criminal Causes, do the duty of advocates. Many Lords stand about this Balustrade; and there is also the Musick plac'd, that plays all the while the King is in the Divan. This Musick is so sweet and soft, that it never takes off the mind from the seriousness of business at that time manag'd. The King being sat upon his Throne, some great Lords stand by him; generally it is some one of his own Children. Between eleven a Clock and Noon, the Nahab, who is the chief Minister of State, like the Grand Vizier in Turkey, makes a report to the King of what has past in the Chamber where he Presides, which is at the Entry of the first Court; and when he has done speaking, the King rises. For you must take notice, that from the time that the King is fate upon his Throne, till he rises, no person whatsoever is permitted to stir out of the Palace; and yet I can say that the King dispens'd with my performance of this Law so generally observ'd by all the Court: The occasion whereof was thus

Being

Being one day going out of the Palace, while the King was sitting in the Divan, upon some urgent business that would admit of no delay, the Captain of the Guards held me by the arm, and told me I should go no farther; I contested and argued the Case with him for some time, but finding his usage to be very boisterous, I lifted up my Cane, and had certainly strook him in my passion, had not two or three of the Guards that saw all the passages, held my hand. Happily for me at that time, the Nahab, who was then the King's Uncle, came by, and being informed of the ground of our quarrel; order'd the Captain of the Guards to let me go. After that he made a report to the King how the matter stood; and toward evening the Nahab sent me one of his Servants to tell me, it was his Majesty's pleasure, that I might come in or go out of the Palace, though he were sitting in the Divan, as I pleas'd my self; for which I went the next day, and return'd thanks to the Nahab.

Toward the middle of the same Court there is a small Channel some five or six inches broad, where while the King is sitting upon the Seat of Justice, they that have business are to stand. Further it is not lawful for them to go, till they are call'd; and Embassadors themselves are not exempted from this custom. When an Embassador comes as far as this Channel, the Master of the Ceremonies calls out toward the Divan where the King is sitting, that such an Embassador craves Audience of his Majesty. Then one of the Secretaries of State declares it to the King; who oftentimes makes as if he did not hear. But some time after lifting up his eyes, he casts them upon the Embassador, making him a sign by the same Secretary, that he may approach.

From the Hall of the Divan, turning to the left, you walk upon a Terrace, where you discover the River. Over this Terrace the King passes into a little Chamber, from whence he goes into his Haram. In this little Chamber it was that I had my first Audience of his Majesty; as I shall relate in another place.

Upon the left-hand of the Court where the Divan is built, stands a little Mosquee neatly built; the Cupola whereof is cover'd with Lead perfectly gilded. Here the King goes to hear Prayers every day, except it be Fridays, when he is to go to the great Mosquee, which is a very fair one, and plac'd upon an high Platform, rais'd higher than the Houses of the City, and there is a noble ascent to it. That day that the King goes to the Mosquee, they place huge rails of wood round about the steps, as well to keep off the Elephants, as out of respect to the Mosquee.

The right side of the Court is taken up with Portico's, that make a long Gallery, rais'd from the ground about half a foot; and these are the King's Stables into which you have many doors to enter. They are also full of stately Horses, the worst whereof stands the King in three-thousand Crowns; and there are some that cost him ten-thousand. At the door of every one of these Stables hangs a kind of Mat made of Bambouc, that cleaves like our Osiers. But whereas we bind our Osier twigs with the same Osier, they bind their Bambouc's with wreath'd-Silk, which is delicate work, but very tedious. These Mats are to hinder the Flies from tormenting the Horses; there being two Grooms to an Horse, one of which is still employ'd in fanning the Beast. There are also Mats spread before the Portico's, and before the Stable-door; which they spread or take away as occasion requires. And the Floor of the Gallery is cover'd with fair Carpets, which is taken away in the evening, and the Horses Litter strow'd in the same place. Which litter is nothing but the Horse-dung dri'd in the Sun, and then squeez'd a little flat. The Horses that are brought into India either out of Persia, Arabia, or the Country of Usbeck, change their food: For in India they never give them Hay nor Oats. Every Horse in the morning having for his proportion three loaves made of Meal, Wheat, and Butter, as big as one of our six-penny-loaves. 'Tis an hard matter to bring them to this diet at first; it being sometimes three or four Months before they can do it. The Groom is forc'd to hold their tongue in one hand, and to thrust down the bread with the other. When Sugar-Canes or Millet are in season, they give them that diet about noon; and in the evening, two hours before Sun-set they give them a measure of Garden-Chiches which the Groom squeezes between two stones, and mixes with water. This is instead of Barley and Oats. As for the King's other Stables, where he has also very fine Horses, they are scurvy places, ill-built, which deserve not to be mention'd.

The Gemene is a fair River that bears good big Boats, which running to Agra loses its name, falling into Ganges at Hallabas. The King has several small Briuan-tines at Gehanabad upon the River, to take his pleasure in; and they are very curiously trimm'd after the manner of the Countrey.

At Cheki-sera is one of the greatest Pagods of the Indians, together with an Hospital for Apes; as well for those that breed thereabouts, as for those that come from the neighbouring-parts, which the Banians are very careful to feed. This Pagod is call'd Matura, and it was formerly in far greater veneration than it is at this day. The reason is, because the Gemene ran then just at the very foot of the Pagod; wherein the Banians, as well those of the Countrey, as those that came from remote parts in Pilgrimage, had the convenience to wash themselves before they went to their Devotions; and when they had perform'd them, to wash again before they eat; which they are not to do ere they have wash'd; believing also that if they wash in running-water, their sins will be the more easily defac'd. But some years since the River, changing its course more to the Northward, comes not within a good league of the Pagod, which is the reason that the Pilgrims have deserted it.

Agra lies in 27 deg. 31 min. of Lat. and in a Sandy-soil, which causes extremity of heat. It is the biggest City in India, and formerly the Residence of their Kings. The Houses of great Persons are fair, and well built; but the Houses of the meaner-sort are as plain, as in all the other Cities of India. They are built a good distance one from another, and hid by the height of their Walls, to keep their Women from being seen: So that it may be easily conjectur'd that their Cities are nothing so pleasant as ours in Europe. Add to this, that Agra being encompass'd round with the Sands, the heats are there very excessive, which constrain'd Cha-jehan to remove from thence, and to keep his Court at Gehanabad.

All that is remarkable in Agra is the King's Palace; and some Monuments as well near the City, as in the parts about it. The Palace of the King is a vast piece of ground encompass'd with a double-wall, which is terrass'd in some parts, and in those parts are built certain Lodgings for some of the Officers of the Court: The Gemene runs before the Palace; but between the Wall and the River there is a large space of ground, where the King causes his Elephants to fight. This Field is on purpose near the water, because that the Elephant which gets the victory, being in a fury, they could not bring him to himself, did they not drive him into the River: to which end they are forc'd to have recourse to Policy, by tying Squibs and Crackers to the end of an Half-Pike, and then giving fire to them to fright him into the water: for when he is in but two or three foot-deep, he is presently appeas'd.

There is a wide Piazza upon one side of the City before the Palace, and the first Gate, wherein there is nothing of magnificence, is guarded by a few Soldiers. Before the King removed his Court from Agra to Gehanabad, when he went into the Countrey for some time, he gave to some one of his greatest Omrah's, who was his Confident, the Guard of his Palace, where his Treasure lay; and and till the return of the King he never stirr'd out of the Gate, where he lodg'd, neither by night nor day. At such a time that it was, that I was permitted to see the Palace of Agra. The King being departed for Gehanabad, whither all the Court followed him, together with the Women, the Government of the Palace was given to one that was a great Friend of the Hollanders, and indeed to all the Franguis. Menheir Velant, chief of the Holland-Factory at Agra, so soon as the King was departed, went to visit the Lord, and to present him according to custom. The Present was worth about 6000 Crowns, and consisted in Spices, Cabinets of Japan, and fine Holland-Cloath. He desir'd me to go along with him when he went to Compliment the Governour. But the Lord being offended that he had put himself to so much charge, forc'd him to carry the Present back again, taking only one Japan-Cane, of six that were in the Present, telling him he would have no more, out of the kindness which he had for the Franguis. Nay, he would not so much as take the Gold-head and Ferula, but caus'd them to be taken off. The Complements being over, the Governour ask'd Menheir Velant, wherein he might serve him: whereupon he desiring the favour, than since the Court was gone, he might see the inside of the Palace, the Governour granted his request, and order'd six men to attend him.

The first Gate where the Governor of the Palace lies, is a long blind Arch, which leads you into a large Court all environ'd with Portico's; like our Piazza in Covent-Garden. The Gallery in front is larger and higher than any of the rest, sustain'd by three ranks of Pillars, and under those Galleries on the other side of the Court which are narrower and lower, are little Chambers for the Souldiers of the Guard. In the midst of the large Gallery, is a Nich in the Wall, into which the King descends out of his Haram by a private pair of Stairs, and when he is in, he seems to be in a kind of a Tomb. He has no Guards with him then, for he has no reason to be afraid of any thing; there being no way to come at him. In the heat of the day he keeps himself there only with one Eunuch, but more often with one of his Children, to fan him. The Great Lords of the Court stay below in the Gallery under the Nich all the while.

At the farther end of this Court is another Gate that leads into a second Court encompass'd with Galleries, underneath which, are little Chambers for some Officers of the Palace. The second Court carries you into a third, which is the King's Quarter. Cha-jehan had resolv'd to cover with Silver all the Arch of a Gallery upon the right-hand. And a french-man, Austin de Bordeaux by name, was to have done the work: but the King not finding any one in his whole Kingdom so capable as the French-man was to treat with the Portugals at Goa about some important affair he had at this time; the design was laid aside: For they being afraid of Austin's Parts, poison'd him upon his return to Cochin. This Gallery is painted with branch'd-work of Gold and Azure, and the lower-part is hung with Tapestry. There are several doors under the Gallery that lead into little square-Chambers; of which we saw two or three open'd, and they told us all the rest were such. The other three sides of the Court lie all open, there being nothing but a single Wall, no higher than for a man to lean over. On the side that looks toward the River there is a Divan, or a kind of out-jutting Balcony, where the King sits to see his Brigantines, or to behold his Elephants fight. Before the Divan is a Gallery, that serves for a Portico; which Cha-jehan had a design to have adorn'd all over with a kind of Lattice-work of Emraulds and Rubies that should have represented to the life Grapes when they are green, and when they begin to grow red. But this design which made such a noise in the World, and requir'd more Riches, than all the World could afford to perfect, remains unfinish'd; there being only three Stocks of a Vine in Gold, with their leaves, as the rest ought to have been; and enamel'd in their natural colours, with Emraulds, Rubies and Granates wrought into the fashion of Grapes. In the middle of the Court stands a great Fat to bath in, 40 foot in Diameter, cut out of one entire grey-stone, with steps wrought out of the same stone within and without.

As for the Monuments which are in and about Agra, they are very fair ones, for there is scarce an Eunuch belonging to the King's Haram, that is not very ambitious of leaving a fair Monument behind him. Indeed, when they have heap'd together great Sums, they would fain be going to Mecca, and making rich Presents to Mahomet. But the Great Mogul, unwilling to let his Money go out of his Country, will seldom permit them leave to undertake that Pilgrimage: and therefore not knowing what to do with their Money, they employ a great part thereof in Monuments to perpetuate their Memories.

Of all the Monuments that are to be seen at Agra, that of the Wife of Cha-jehan is the most magnificent; she caus'd it to be set up on purpose near the Tasimacan, to which all Strangers must come, that they should admire it. The Tasimacan is a great Bazar, or Market-place, compos'd of six great Courts, all encompass'd with Portico's; under which there are Warehouses for Merchants; and where there is a prodigious quantity of Calicuts vended. The Monument of this Degum, or Sultanes, stands on the East-side of the City, upon the River side, in a great place enclosed with Walls, upon which there runs a little Gallery, as upon the Walls of many Cities in Europe. This place is a kind of Garden with Compartiments, like our Garden-plots; but whereas our Walks are made with Gravel, here the Walks are black and white Marble. You enter into this place through a large Portal; and presently upon the left hand you espy a fair Gallery, that looks towards Mecca; wherein there are three or four Niches, wherein the Mufri comes at certain hours to pray. A little beyond the middle of the place, toward the Water, are three great Platforms, one rais'd above another, with four Towers at the four Corners of each, and Stairs within, upon the top whereof they call the people before the time of their prayer. On the top there is a Cupola, little less magnificent than that of Val de Grace in Paris; it is cover'd within and without with black marble, the middle being of Brick. Under this Cupola is an empty Tomb; for the Begum is interr'd under the Arch of the lowest Platform. The same change of Ceremonies which is observ'd under ground, is observ'd above. For they change the Tapestries, Candles, and other Ornaments at several times, and there are always Mollah's attending to pray. I saw the beginning and compleating of this great work, that cost two and twenty years labour, and twenty thousand men always at work; so that you cannot conceive but that the Expence must be excessive. Cha-jehan had begun to raise his own Monument on the other side of the River; but the Wars with his Son, broke off that design, nor did Aurengzeb, now reigning, ever take any care to finish it. There is an Eunuch who commands two thousand men, that is entrusted to guard not only the Sepulcher of the Begum, but also the Tasimacan.

On another side of the City, appears the Sepulcher of King Akabar. And as for the Sepulchers of the Eunuchs, they have only one Platform, with four little Chambers at the four Corners. When you come to Agra from Dehly, you meet a great Bezar; near to which there is a Garden, where King Jehangire, Father of Cha-jehan, lies interr'd. Over the Garden Gate you see the Tomb it self, beset with Portraitures, cover'd with a black Hearse-Cloath, or Pall, with Torches of white Wax, and two Jesuits attending at each end. There are some who wonder, that Cha-jehan against the practice of the Mahumetans, who abhor Images, did permit of carving; but the reason conjectur'd at is, that it is done upon the consideration that his Father and himself learnt from the Jesuits certain principles of Mathematicks and Astrology. Though he had not the same kindness for them at another time; for going one day to visit an Armenian, that lay sick, whose name was Corgia, whom he lov'd very well and had honor'd with several Employments, at what time the Jesuits, who liv'd next to the Armenians house, rang their Bell, the sound thereof so displeas'd the King, as being a disturbance to the sick person, that in a great fury he commanded the Bell to be taken away, and hung about his Elephants neck. Some few days after, the King, seeing his Elephant with that great Bell about his neck, fearing so great a weight might injure his Elephant, caus'd the Bell to be carried to the Courevall, which is a kind of a rail'd place, where a Provost sits as a Judge, and decides differences among the people of that Quarter, where it has hung ever since. This Armenian had been brought up with Cha-jehan; and in regard he was an excellent Wit, and an excellent Poet, he he was very much in the Kings favour, who had confer'd upon him many fair Commands, though he could never either by threats or promises win him to turn Mahometan.

CHAP. VIII.

The Road from Agra to Patna, and Dacca, Cities in the Province of Bengala, and of the Quarrel which the Author had with Cha-Est-Kan, the King's Uncle.

I Departed from Agra toward Bengala the 25th of November 1665, and that day I reach'd no farther than a very bad Inn, distant from Agra, costes 3
The 26th I came to Beruzabad, costes 9
This is a little City where, at my return, I received eight thousand Roupies, being the remainder of the Money which Giafer-Kan ow'd me for Wares that he had bought at Janabat.

The 1st of December to Sanqual, costes 14

I met that day 110 Waggon, every Waggon drawn by six Oxen, & in every Waggon 50000 Roupies. This is the Revenue of the Province of Bengala, with all charges defraid, and the Governor's Purse well-fill'd, comes to 5500000 Roupies. A league beyond Sanqual, you must pass a River call'd Saingour, which runs into Gemine, not above half a league distant from it. You pass over this River of Saingour upon a Stone-bridg, and when you come from toward Bengala to go to Seronge or Surat, if you have a mind to shorten your journey ten days, you must leave Agra-Road, and come to this Bridg, and so Ferry over Gemine in a Boat. But generally Agra-Road is taken, because the other way you must travel five or six days together upon the stones; and also for that you are to pass through the Territories of certain Raja's, where you are in danger of being robb'd.

The second day I came to an Inn call'd Cheroorabad, costes 12

When you are got about half the way, you pass through Gianabad, a little City, near to which, about a quarter of a League on this side, crossing a Field of Millet, I saw a Rhinoceros feeding upon Millet-Canes, which a little Boy of nine or ten years old gave him to eat. When I came near the Boy, he gave me some Millet to give the Rhinoceros; who immediately came to me, opening his chops three or four times; I put the Millet into his mouth, and when he had swallow'd it, he still open'd his mouth for more.

The 3d I came to Serrail Chajeada, costes 10

The 4th to Serrail Atakan, costes 13

The 5th to Aureng-Abad, costes 9

Formerly this Village had another name; but being the place where Aureng-zeb gave Battel to his Brother Sultan Sujah, who was Governor of all the Province of Bengala; Aureng-zeb, in Memory of the Victory he had won, gave it his own name, and built there a very fair House, with a Garden, and a little Mosque.

The 6th to Alinchan, costes 9

Two leagues on this side Alinchan, you meet the River Ganges. Monsieur Bernier the King's Physitian, and another person whose name was Rachepot, with whom I travell'd, were amaz'd to see, that a River had made such a noise in the World, was no broader than the River Seine before the Lovre; believing before, that it had been as wide as the Danaw above Belgrade. There is also so little water in it from March to June or July, when the rains fall, that it will not bear a small Boat. When we came to Ganges, we drank every one of us a Glass of Wine, mixing some of the River-water with it; which caus'd a griping in our bellies: But our Servants that drank it alone, were worse tormented than we. The Hollanders, who have an House upon the Bank of Ganges, never drink the water of this River, until they have boil'd it. But for the natural Inhabitants of the Countrey, they are so accusom'd to it from their youth, that the King and the Court drink no other. You shall see a vast number of Camels every day, whose business only it is to fetch water from the Ganges.

The 7th, I came to Halabas, costes 8

Halabas is a great City, built upon a point of Land where Ganges and Gemine meet. There is a fair Castle of hew'n Stone, with a double Moat; where the Governour resides. He is one of the greatest Lords in India; and being very sickly, he has always about him ten Persian Physicians. He had also in his service, Claudius Maille of Bourges, who practises Chyrurgery and Physick both together. This was he that advis'd us not to drink of Ganges Water, which would put us into a looseness; but rather to drink Well-water. The chief of these Persian Physicians, whom this Governour hires with his Money, one day threw his Wife from the top of a Battlement to the ground; prompted to that act of cruelty, by some jealousies he had entertain'd. He thought the fall had kill'd her, but she had only a Rib or two bruise'd; whereupon the Kindred of the Woman came and demanded justice, at the feet of the Governour. The Governour sending for the Physician, commanded him to be gone, resolving to retain him no longer in his service. The Physician obey'd, and putting his maim'd Wife in a Pallanquin, he set forward upon the Road with all his Family. But he was not gone above three or four days journey from the City, when the Governour finding himself worse than he was wont to be, sent to recall him; which the Physician perceiving, stab'd his Wife, his four Children, and thirteen female Slaves, and return'd again to the Governour, who said not a word to him, but entertain'd him again into his service.

The eighth, day I cross'd the River in a large Boat, having stay'd from morning till noon upon the bank-side, expecting Monsieur Maille, to bring me a Passport from the Governour. For there stands a Derega, upon each side of the River, who will not suffer any person to pass without leave; and he takes notice what sort of Goods are transported; there being due from every Waggon four Roupies, and from every Coach one; not accounting the charge of the Boat, which you must pay beside. The same day I went to Sadoul-ferail, costes 16

The ninth, to Takedel-fera, costes 10

The tenth, to Bouraki-fera, costes 10

The eleventh, to Banaron, costes 16

Banaron is a large City, and handsomly built; the most part of the Houses being either of Brick or Stone and higher than in any other Cities of India; but the inconveniency is, that the Streets are very narrow. There are many Inns in the Town; among the rest, one very large, and very handsomely built. In the middle of the Court are two Galleries, where are to be sold Calicuts, Silks, and other sorts of Merchandise. The greatest part of the Sellers, are the Workmen themselves; so that the Merchants buy at the first hand. These Workmen, before they expose any thing to sale, must go to him that has the stamp, to have the King's Seal set upon their Linnen and Silks; otherwise they would be fin'd, and lambasted with a good Cudgel. This City is situated upon the North side of Ganges, that runs by the Walls, and into which there falls also another River, some two leagues upward toward the West. In Banaron stands one of the Idolaters principal Pagods, whereof I shall speak in my second Book, when I come to treat of the Religion of the Banians.

About five hundred paces from the City Northward, there is a Mosquee, where are to be seen many Mahometan Sepulchers; whereof some are very curious pieces of Architecture. The fairest are every one in the middle of a Garden enclosed with Walls, wherein there are Holes some half a foot square, through which Passengers may have a sight of the Tomb within. The most considerable of all is as it were four square Pedestal, every square whereof is forty paces wide. In the midst of this Platform rises a Column thirty-two or thirty-five foot high, all of a piece, which three men can hardly embrace. The

The Stone is of a grey colour, and so hard that I could not scrape it with my Knife. As it is Pyramidical, there is a great Bowl at the top, which is encompass'd at the upper end with huge Grains of Wheat. All the fronts of the Tomb are full of figures of Animals cut in the Stone; and it has been higher above ground than now it seems to be, for several old men, that look'd to some of the Sepulchers, assur'd me, that within these fifty years it had sunk above thirty foot into the Earth. They tell you moreover, that it is the Sepulcher of one of the Kings of Boutan who was interr'd here after he had left his own Countrey to conquer this Kingdom, out of which he was driven by the Successors of Tamerlane. The Kingdom of Boutan is the place from whence they fetch Musk, and I will give you a description of it in my third Book.

I stay'd at Banarou the 12th and 13th; and during those two days it rain'd continually, but not so as to stop my journey; so that the evening of the thirteenth day I cross'd the Ganges, with the Governours Pass-port. Before you go into the Boat, they search the Travellers baggage; wearing Apparel however pays nothing of Custome, but only Merchandise.

The 13th, I went to Baterpour, costes 2

The 14th, to Satraguy-sera, costes 8

The 15th, to Moniarky-sera, costes 9

The same day in the morning, after I had travel'd two Leagues, I cross'd a River call'd Carnasarson; and three Leagues from thence I cross'd another, which they call Saade-son; both which I foarded.

The 16th, to Gourmahad, costes 8

This is a Town upon a River call'd Goudera-son, which is cross'd over a Stone-Bridg.

The 17th, to Saferon, costes 4

Saferon is a City at the foot of certain Mountains, near to which there is a great Lake. In the middle whereof there is a small Island, with a fair Mosquee built upon it; wherein is to be seen, the Sepulcher of a Nahab or Favourite, call'd Selim-Kan; who built it when he was Governour of the Province. There is a fair Bridg to cross over into the Island, pav'd and lin'd with large free-Stone. Upon one side of the Lake is a great Garden, in the middle whereof is another fair Sepulcher of the Sun of the same Nahab, Selim-Kan, who succeeded his Father in the Government of the Province. If you would go to the Mine of Soulmelpour, whereof I shall speak in the last Book of these Relations you must leave the great Road to Patna, and bend to the South through Exberbourgh, and the famous Fortrefs of Rhodes, of which I shall treat in the same place.

The 18th, I ferry'd in a Boat over the River, Sonson, which descends from the Southern Mountains; after you have cross'd it, the Merchandise pays, a certain Toll.

The same day I travel'd on to Daoud-Nagarsera, where there is a fair Tomb, costes 9

The 19th, to Halva-sera, costes 10

The 20th, to Aga-sera, costes 9

In the morning I met a hundred and thirty Elephants, great and small, which they were leading to Dehli to the great Mogul.

The one and twentieth, to Patna, costes 10

Patna is one of the greatest Cities of India, upon the Bank of Ganges, toward the West; not being less than two Leagues in length. But the Houses are no fairer than in the greatest part of the other Cities of India; being cover'd with Bambouc, or Straw. The Holland Company have a House there, by reason of their Trade in Saltpeter, which they refine at a great Town call'd Chonpar, which is also situated upon Ganges, ten Leagues above Patna.

Coming to Patna, we met the Hollanders, in the Street returning from Chonpar, who stop'd our Coaches to salute us. We did not part, till we had emptied two Bottles of Schiras Wine in the open Street; which is not taken notice of in that Country, where people meet with an entire freedom without any Ceremony.

I stay'd eight days at Patna, during which time there fell out an accident, which which will let the Reader understand, that Sodomy does not go altogether unpunish'd among the Mahumetans. A Mimbachi, who commanded a thousand Foot, went about to abuse a young Boy in his service; and who had several times resisted his attempts; complaining also to the Governour, and telling him withall, that if his Master persisted to urge him any more, he would certainly kill him. At length the Captain took his opportunity, at a House which he had in the Country, and forc'd the Boy. The Boy o'rewhelm'd with grief and rage, took his opportunity also to revenge himself; and being one day hunting with his Master, about a quarter of a League from any of his other Servants, he got behind him, and cleft his head with his Hanger. After he had done, he rode full speed to the City, crying out all the way, that he had kill'd his Master for such a reason; and went immediately to the Governours Lodging; who sent him to prison; but he let him out at the end of six months; and notwithstanding all the endeavours which the Captains Kindred us'd to have had him put to death, the Governour durst not condemn him, for fear of the people, who affirm'd that the Boy had done well.

I parted from Patna in a Boat for Daca, the nine and twentieth of January, between eleven and twelve at noon; and had the River been deep, as it uses to be after the Rains, I had taken Boat at Hallabas, or at least at Banaroh.

The same day I came to lye at Sera-Beconcour, costes 15
Five Leagues on this side Beconcour, you meet with a River call'd Pomponson, which comes from the South, and falls into Ganges.

The thirtieth to Sera-d' Erija, costes 17

The one and thirtieth, after we had travel'd four Leagues, or thereabout, we met with the River Kaoa, which comes from the South. Three Leagues lower, you meet with another River call'd Chanon, which comes from the North. Four Leagues farther, you discover the River Erguga, which runs from the South; and at length, six Leagues beyond, the River Aquera, falling from the same part of the World; all which four Rivers lose their Names in the Ganges. All that day I saw great Mountains toward the South, distant from Ganges sometimes ten, and sometimes fifteen Leagues, till at length I came to lodg in Monger-City, costes 18

The first day of January, 1666, after I had gone by Water two hours, I saw the Gander fall into the Ganges, flowing from the North. This is a great River, that carries Boats.

That evening I lay at Zangira, costes 8

But in regard of the winding of Ganges all that days journey, I might well reckon them by Water two and twenty Leagues.

The second day, from between six in the morning till eleven, I saw three Rivers that threw themselves into Ganges; all three descending from the North.

The first is call'd Ronova, the second Tae, the third Chanon.

I came to lye at Baquelpour, costes 18

The third, after four hours upon the Ganges, I met the River Katare, which comes from the North; and lay at a Village call'd Pongangel, at the foot of certain Mountains that descend to Ganges it self, costes 13

The fourth, an hours rowing beyond Pongangel, I met a great River, call'd Mart-Nadi, coming from the South; and I lay at Rage-Mehale, costes 6

Rage-Mehale, is a City upon the right hand of Ganges; and if you go by Land, you shall find the high-way, for a League or two, pav'd with Brick to the Town. Formerly the Governours of Bengala resided here; it being an excellent Country for hunting, besides that it was a place of great Trade. But now the River having taken another course, above a good half League from the City, as well for that reason, as to keep in awe the King of Aracan, and several Portuguese Banditi, who are retir'd to the mouths of Ganges, and made excursions even as far as Daca it self; both the Governour and the Merchants have remov'd themselves to Daca, which is at present a large City, and a Town of great Trade.

The sixth, being arriv'd at a considerable Town, call'd Donapour, six Leagues from Rage-Mehale I parted with Monsieur Bernier, who was going to Casenbasar, and and thence to Ogonli by land; for when the River is low, there is no going by Water, by reason of a great Bank of Sand that lies before a City call'd Santiqui.

I lay that night at Touripour, distant from Rage-mehale, costes 12

I saw there at Sun-rising a great number of Crocodiles lying upon the Sand.

The seventh, I came to Acerat, costes 25

From Acerat to Daca, it is counted by Land forty-five Leagues. All that day I saw such a vast number of Crocodiles, that I had a great desire to shoot at one, to try whether the vulgar report were true, that a Musket-shot would not pierce their skin. The bullet hit him in the jaw, and made the blood gush out; however it would not stay in the place, but plung'd into the River.

The eight, I saw again a great number lying upon the bank of the River, and made two shot at two with three bullets at a time. As soon as they were wounded, they turn'd themselves upon their backs, opening their throats, and di'd upon the spot.

That day I came to lie at Doulondia, costes 17

The Crows were here the cause that we found a very fair Fish, which the Fishermen had hid among the Osiers by the side of the River; for when our Water-men saw the Crows in great numbers hovering, and making an hideous noise about the Osiers, they presently conjectur'd that there was something more than ordinary: and they made so diligent a search, that at length they found an excellent dish of meat.

The ninth two hours after noon, we met with a River call'd Chativor, that runs from the North, and we lay at Dampour, costes 16

The tenth, we lay by the River-side in a place remote from Houses, and we travell'd that day, costes 15

The eleventh, toward evening, being come to that part where Ganges divides it self into three Arms, whereof one runs to Daca; we lay at a large Town, upon the entry of the great Channel, which Town is call'd Jarrapour, costes 20

They that have no luggage, may make a short-cut from Jarrapour to Daca, and save much ground, by reason of the many windings of the River.

The twelfth, about noon, we pass'd by a large Village call'd Bagamara, and came to lie at Kasiata, another great Town, costes 11

The thirteenth, about noon we met with a River, two leagues from Daca, call'd Laquia, which runs from the North-East. Just against the Point where the two Rivers join, there stands a Fortrefs of each side, with several pieces of Cannon. Half a league lower, appears another River call'd Pagalu, upon which there is a fair Bridg of Brick, which Mirza-Mola caus'd to be built. This River comes from the North-East; and half a league upward appears another River call'd Cadamtali, that runs from the North, over which there is a nother Bridg of Brick. On both sides of the River are several Towers, as it were inchas'd with several heads of men, executed for robbing upon the high way.

About evening we came to Daca, having travell'd by water that day, costes 9

Daca is a great Town, that extends it self only in length; every one coveting to have an House by the Ganges-side. The length of this Town is above two leagues. And indeed from the last Brick-Bridge which I mention'd to Daca, there is but one continued row of Houses separated one from the other; inhabited for the most part by Carpenters, that build Gallies and other small Vessels. These Houses are properly no more than paltry Huts built up with Bambouc's, and daub'd over with fat Earth. Those of Daca are not much better built: The Governours Palace is a place enclos'd with high Walls, in the midst whereof is a pitiful House, built only of Wood. He generally lodges in Tents, which he causes to be set up in a great Court of that Enclosure. The Hollanders finding that their Goods were not safe in the ordinary Houses of Daca, have built them a very fair House; and the English have another, which is reasonably handsom. The Church of the Austin-Friers is all of Brick, and is a very comely Pile.

When I travell'd last to Daca, the Nahab Cha-Est-Kan, who was then the Governor of Bengala, was at War with the King of Arakan, whose Naval-Force consists generally of 200 Galeasses, attended by several other smaller Vessels. These Galeasses run through the Gulf of Bengala, and enter into the mouth of Ganges, the the Sea flowing up higher then Daca. Cha-Est-Kan, Uncle to King Aureng-zeb, the present Mogul, and the best Head-piece that ever was in all his Territories, found out a way to corrupt several of the King of Aracan's Captains, so that of a sudden forty Galeasses, commanded by Portugals, came and join'd themselves with him. To engage more firmly all this new multitude to his service, he gave a larger pay to all the Portugal-Officers, and to the Souldiers proportionably: But those of the Country had no more than their ordinary pay doubl'd. 'Tis an incredible thing to see how swiftly these Galeasses cut their way in the water. Some are so long that they carry fifty Oars of a side; but they have but two men to an Oare. There are some very curiously painted, and upon which there is no cost of Gold and Azure spar'd. The Hollanders have some of their own to transport their Goods; and sometimes they are forc'd to hire others, whereby many people get a good livelihood.

The next day after my arrival at Daca, which was the 14th of January, I went to wait upon the Nahab; and presented him with a Garment of Cloath of Gold, lac'd with a Gold-needle-work Lace of Point of Spain; with a Scarf of Gold and Silver, of the same Point; and a very fair Emerald-Jewel. Toward evening, being return'd to the Hollander's House, where I lodg'd, the Nahab sent me Granares, China-Oranges, two Persian-Melons, and three sorts of Pears.

The fifteenth, I shewed him my Goods, and presented the Prince with a Watch, in a Gold-Enamell'd-Case; with a pair of little Pistols inlaid with Silver, and a very fair Prospective-Glass. What I gave to the Father and the Son, a young Lord, about ten years old, stood me in above five thousand Livres.

The sixteenth, I treated with him about the Prizes of my Goods: and at length I went to his Steward to take my Letter of Exchange to be paid at Casen-Bazar. Not but that he would have paid me my Mony at Daca; but the Hollanders, who understood things better than I did, told me it was very dangerous to carry Mony to Casen-Bazar, whither there was no going, but over the Ganges by water, the way by land being full of Bogs and Fens. And to go by water is no less dangerous, by reason that the Boats which they use, are very apt to tip over upon the least storm: And when the Mariners perceive that you carry Money along with you, 'tis an easy thing for them to overset the Boat, and afterwards to come and take up the Money that lies but at the bottom of the River.

The twentieth, I took leave of the Nahab, who desir'd me to come and see him again, and caus'd a Pass to be deliver'd me, wherein he gave me the title of one of the Gentlemen of his house, which he had done before, when he was Governor of Amadabat, when I went to him, to the Army, in the Province of Decan, into which the Raja-seva-gi was enter'd, as I shall relate in another place. By virtue of these Passes I could travel over all the Countries of the great Mogul, as being one of his Houshold.

The one and twentieth, the Hollanders made a great Feast for my sake; to which they invited the English, and some Portuguese's, together with the Austrian-Friers of the same Nation.

The two and twentieth, I made a Visit to the English, whose President then was Mr. Prat.

From the twenty-third to the twenty-ninth, I brought up Goods, to the value of 11000 Roupies; and after I had embark'd them, I took my leave.

The twenty-ninth, in the evening, I departed from Daca, the Hollanders bearing me company for two leagues, with their little Barques Arm'd: Nor did we spare the Spanish-Wine all that time. Having been upon the River from the twenty-ninth of January to the eleventh of February, I left my Goods and Servants at the Barque at Acerat; where I took a Boat that carri'd me to a great Village call'd Mirdapour.

The next day I hir'd an Horse for my self, but not finding another for my Luggage, I was forc'd to hire two Women, who carri'd it for me. That evening I arriv'd at Casen-Bazar, where I was welcom'd by Menheir Arnold Van Wachttendonk, Director of all the Holland-Factories in Bengala, who invited me to lie at his House.

The fourteenth, Menheir Wachttendonk return'd to Onguely, where is the General Factory. The same day one of my Servants brought me word that my People and Goods, which I had left behinde in the Barque, had been in very great danger, by reason of the high Winds that had blown for two days together.

The fifteenth, the Hollanders lent me a Pallekis, to go to Madesou-basarki. This was a great Town three Leagues from Casen-basar, where lay Cha-Est-Kan's Receiver General, to whom I presented my Bill of Exchange. He told me it was very good, and that he would willingly have paid me, had he not receiv'd order the night before, not to pay me, in case he had not paid me already. He did not tell me the reason that mov'd Cha-Est-Kan to act in that manner; so that I went home to my Lodging infinitely surpriz'd at his proceeding.

The sixteenth, I wrote to the Nahab, to know the reason why he had forbid his Receiver General to pay me.

The seventeenth in the evening, I took water for Ongueli, in a Bark of fourteen Oars, which the Hollanders lent me; and that night and the next I lay upon the River.

The nineteenth toward evening, I pass'd by a large Town call'd Nandi, farther than which the Sea does not flow. Here the Wind blew so fiercely, and the water grew so rough, that we were forc'd to stay three or four hours, and ly by the shore.

The twentieth, I arriv'd at Ongueli, where I stay'd till the second of March. During which time the Hollanders bid me very welcome, and made it their business to shew me all the divertisements which the Country was capable to afford. We went several times in Pleasure-Boats upon the River, and we had a Banquet of all the Delicacies that the Gardens of Europe could have afforded us. Salads of all sorts, Colewarts, Asparagus, Pease, but our chiefest Dish was Japon Beans; the Hollanders being very curious to have all sorts of Pulse and Herbs in their Gardens, though they could never get Artichokes to grow in that Country.

The next day I went to Madesou-Barsaki, to know whether the Nahab had sent any other orders to his Receiver. For I told you a little before, that I wrote upon the place to Cha-Est-Kan, to complain of his proceedings, and to know the reason why my Bill of Exchange was not paid. The Director of the Holland Factories writ a Letter also in my behalf, which I enclosed, wherein he represented to the Nahab, that I was too well known to him, as having been formerly with him at Amadabat, in the Army in Decan, and other places, do deserve such hard usage. That he ought to consider, that I being the only person that brought the chiefest rarities of Europe to the Indies, it was not the way to make me eager of returning any more, as he himself had invited me to do, to send me away in a discontent. Besides, that the credit of my report would discourage others from coming to the Indies, fearing the same usage as I had receiv'd. Neither mine nor the Directors Letter produc'd that effect which we expected. Nor was I much better satisfi'd with the new order which the Nahab sent to his Receiver; which was to pay me, abating twenty thousand Roupies of the sum which we had agreed upon; and if I would not take the remainder, that I might come and fetch my goods again.

This ill dealing of the Nahab, proceeded from a scurvy trick that was play'd me by three Canary-birds at the Great Mogul's Court. The story whereof was thus in short.

Aurengzeb, that now reigns, at the instigation of two Persians and a Banian, has brought up a custom very much to the disadvantage of Merchants, that come out of Europe, and other parts, to sell Jewels at Court. For whether they come into India either by Land or Sea, the Governour of the place where they first arrive, has order to send them to the King, together with their goods, whether they will or no. As the Governour of Surat dealt by me, in the year 1665, sending me to Dehli, or Jehanabad, where the King was. There were then attending upon his Majesty, two Persians and a Banian, who are entrusted to view and examine all the Jewels which are to be sold to the King. One of those Persians is call'd Nahab-Akel-Kan, that is, the Prince of the Spirit; who keeps all the Kings Jewels. The name of the other is Mirza-Moufon, whose business is to rate every stone. The Banian, whose name is Nalikan, is to see whether the Stones be false or not, or whether they have any defect. These three men have obtain'd a Licence from the King, to view, before ever he does, whatever foreign Merchants shall bring to Court, and to present their goods to him themselves. And though they are under an Oath not to take any thing from the Merchants, yet they extort whatever they can get from them, though it be their ruine. When they see any thing that is lovely, and likely to bring great profit, they would persuade you to sell it to them for less by half than the King is worth; and if you refuse to let them have it, when they are in the Kings presence, they will set a price upon it at half the value; knowing that Aurengzeb is not very covetous of Jewels, loving his Money far better. Upon the Kings Festival-day, of which I shall speak in another place, all the Princes and Nobility of the Court present him with most magnificent gifts. And when they cannot meet with Jewels, they send him Roupies of Gold, which the King likes far better than Stones; though Jewels are the more honourable present. Therefore when this Festival draws nigh, he issues out of his Treasury, a great quantity of Diamonds, Rubies, Emraulds, and Pearls, which he who is entrusted to prize the Stones, delivers to several Merchants to sell to the Nobility, who are bound to present the King; by which means the King gets the Money and his Jewels again.

There is also another thing very disadvantageous to a Merchant Jeweller, which is, that when the King has seen the Stones, no Prince nor Nobleman that knows of it, will ever buy them. Besides, while these three persons, who are entrusted to view the Jewels, are considering and examining them at their Lodgings, several Banians resort thither, who are expert, some in Diamonds, some in Rubies, some in Emraulds, and others in Pearls, who write down the weight, goodness, cleanness, and colour of every piece. So that when a Merchant goes afterwards to any Prince or Governour of any Province, these people send them a note of what he has, and the price, which they set down at half the value. For in-trade these Banians are a thousand times worse than the Jews; more expert in all sorts of cunning tricks, and more maliciously mischievous in their revenge. Now you shall hear what a trick these unworthy people serv'd me.

When I arriv'd at Gehanabad, one of them came to my Lodging, and told me, he had order from the King to see what I had brought, before I expos'd my goods in the Kings presence. They would have rather that the King had not been at Gehanabad, for they would have then endeavour'd to have bought them themselves, to gain thereby, by selling them again to the King, or the Nobility upon occasion; which they could never persuade me to. The next day they came to see me all three, one after another; and they would needs have of me, amongst other things, a Jewel of nine great Pearls, in the fashion of a Pear, the biggest whereof weigh'd thirty Carats, and the least sixteen; together with another single Pearl like a Pear, of fifty-five Carats. As for the Jewel, the King took it; but for the single Pearl, they finding that whatever they could say, I would not be wrought upon to sell them any bargains, so order'd it, that before I had shew'd my Jewels to the King, Giafer-Kan the Kings Uncle saw, and kept it, telling me he would give me as good a price as the King; and desir'd me not to speak of it, for indeed he had a design to make a present to the King.

When the King had made choice of such of my Jewels as he pleas'd, Giafer-Kan bought of me several pieces, and at the same time agreed with me for the great Pearl. Some days after he paid me, according as we had agreed, except for the Pearl, upon which he would have abated me ten thousand Roupies. For the two Persians and the Banian had maliciously inform'd him, that at my first arrival, they could have bought the Pearl for eight or ten thousand Roupies less than I had valu'd it to him; which was absolutely false. Thereupon Giafer-Kan telling me, that if I would not take his Money, I might have my Jewel again; I took him at his word, assuring him, he should never see it again as long as he liv'd. And I was as good as my word. And indeed that which made me the more resolute was, that I was resolv'd to carry something something which was considerable to Cha-Est-Kan; for could I have had my liberty upon my arrival at Surat to have gone to him, I would never have seen the King at Gehanabad; about which I had a very great quarrel with the Governour of Surat. For when I came to visit him, he told me presently, that the case was alter'd from what it had been since my last being there, for that the King was resolv'd to have the first view of all Curiosities imported into his Kingdom. I was above four Months contending in vain with the Governour; but nothing would serve; I must go to the King, and for fear I should take another Road, he sent fifteen Horsemen along with me as far as Shahpou.

When I went for Bengala, these Overseers of the Jewels, out of meer spite, and, it may be, set on by Giafar-Kan, to be reveng'd of me for denying to let him have my Jewel, writ to Cha-Est-Kan, that I intended to shew him certain Jewels, among the rest a very fair Pearl, which I had sold to Giafer-Kan; but that he had given it me again, because he understood that I would have made him pay for it, ten thousand Roupies more than it was worth. They wrote also the particular proportion of all the other Stones which I carry'd. And upon this false and malicious advice it was, that Cha-Est-Kan, who receiv'd not this information till he had deliver'd me my Bill of Exchange, would abate me for my whole parcel, twenty thousand Roupies, which he reduc'd at length to ten thousand; and well I had it too.

Since I told you before, what a Present I gave to Cha-Est-Kan; I think it not amiss to tell you, what I gave the King, to Nahab Giafer-Kan, to the Eunuch of the Grand Begum, Aurengzeb's Sister, the Great Treasurer, and the Porters of the Treasury. For you must take notice, that whoever he be, that craves Audience of the King, they ask him in the first place, where the Present is which he intends for the King; and examine whether it be fitting to present to his Majesty. For no man must come into his presence empty handed, though it be an honour dearly purchas'd. Coming then to Gehanabad, I went to make my obeisance to the King; and this is the Present which I made him.

In the first place, a Buckler of Brass highly emboss'd, and very richly gilt, the cost of the Gilding alone amounting to two hundred Ducats of Gold, or eighteen hundred Livres; the value of the whole piece coming to four thousand three hundred seventy eight Livres. In the middle thereof was the story of Curtius, who threw himself and his Horse into the Barathrum, when the Earth gap'd, near Rome. Round the outermost Circle of the Buckler, was represented the siege of Rochel. It was wrought by one of the best Workmen in France, by the order of the Cardinal Richieu. All the great Lords that were about Aurengzeb at that time, were charm'd at the beauty of the Workmanship, and told him, he could not do better, than to put it upon the great Elephant, which carry'd the Standard before his Majesty when he march'd into the Field.

I presented him also with a Battle-Axe of Chrystal of the Rock, the sides whereof were set with Rubies and Emraulds, encas'd in Gold in the body of the Chrystal, which cost three thousand one hundred and nineteen Livres.

Moreover, I presented him with a Saddle after the Turky fashion, embroider'd with little Rubies, Pearls, and Diamonds, which cost two thousand eight hundred and ninety-two Livres.

I presented him also with another Saddle and Foot-cloath, embroider'd with Gold and Silver, to the value of one thousand seven hundred and thirty Livres. The whole Present amounting to twelve thousand one hundred and nineteen Livres.

The Present which I made to Giafar-Kan, the Great Mogul's Uncle, was a Table, with other nineteen pieces to make a Cabinet, all natural Stones, of divers colours, representing the shapes of several Birds and Flowers. The work was made at Florence, and cost two thousand one hundred and fifty Livres.

A perfect Ruby Ring, which cost one thousand and three hundred Livres.

To the great Treasurer, I presented a Watch in a Gold Case, set with small Emraulds, and seven hundred and twenty Livres.

To the Porters of the Kings Treasury, and those that deliver out the Money out of the Treasury, two hundred Roupies, at three hundred Livres.

To the Eunuch of the Great Begum, Sister to Aurengzeb, a Watch in a painted Case, which cost two hundred and sixty Livres.

All these Presents which I made, as well to the Great Mogul, as to Cha-Est-Kan, Giafer-Kan, his Majesties Uncles; as also the Great Treasurer, to the Stewards of the Houses of the Kan's, and those that brought me twice the Calaat, or Habit of Honour from the King, and as many times from the Begum his Sister, and once from Giafer Kan; all these Presents, I say, came to twenty-three thousand one hundred fourscore and seven Livres. So true it is, that they who have any business to do at the Court of the great Princes, as well in Turky as in Persia and in the Indies, must not pretend to do any thing in reference to their affairs, till they have their Presents, and those very considerable, ready. Besides, that his Purse must be continually open to divers Officers of meaner reputation, who may be able to serve him. I did not mention in my first Volume the Present which I made to him that brought me the Calaat from the King of Persia, to whom I gave two hundred Crowns.

CHAP. IX.

The Road from Surat to Golconda.

I Have made several journeys to Golconda, and have taken several Roads; sometimes by Sea embarking from Ormuz for Malispata; sometimes setting out from Agra, but most often from Surat, which is the chiefest landing-place of Indolstan. But in this Chapter I will only speak of the common Road from Surat to Golconda; wherein I comprehend that of Agra; which Road comes in at Dultabat, as I shall afterwards relate, making mention only of two journeys which I made in 1645, and 1652, for fear of tiring the Reader.

I departed from Surat in the year 1645, upon the nineteenth of January, and came to lye at Cambari, costes

Dultabat is one of the best Fortresses in the Kingdoms of the Great Mogul, upon a Mountain every way steep; the only way to it being so narrow, that but one Horse, or one Camel can go at a time. This City is at the foot of the Mountain, very well wall'd. And this place of such importance, which the Mogul's lost, when the Kings of Golconda and Visapour revolted from them, was retaken in the Reign of Jehan-guire, by a subtle stratagem. Sultan Courom, who was afterwards call'd Cha-jehan, commanded in Decan the Army of the King his Father; and Ast-Kan, Father in Law to Cha-Est-Kan, who was one of the Generals, gave the Prince some sort of language which so highly offended him, that immediately sending for one of his Papouche's, or Shoo's, he caus'd him to have six blows given him upon the Bonnet; which among the Indians is the highest highest indignity can be put upon a man, after which he is no more to appear in the Prince's presence. This was done by consent between the Prince and the General, to deceive the World, more especially any Spies which the King of Visapour might have in the Prince's Army. The report of Ast-Kan's disgrace was immediately spread abroad: and he himself flying for Sanctuary to the King of Visapour, who had not cunning enough to discern the imposture, was welcom'd by the same King, and assur'd of his protection. Ast-Kan seeing himself so well receiv'd, begg'd leave of the King, that he might retire with ten or twelve of his Women, and as many of his Servants, into the Fortrefs of Dultabat, which was granted. He enter'd the Town with eight or ten Camels, the two Cajava's or Litters on each side of the Camel being close shut, to keep the Women from being seen. But instead of Women, he had put into every Cajava two Souldiers, all bold and resolv'd men, as were also every one of the suppos'd Eunuchs that led the Camels: so that he had no great difficulty to cut the Garrison in pieces, not being upon their guard; and to make himself Master of the place, which has been ever since under the Power of the Great Mogul. There are in the place a great number of excellent Pieces of Cannon, and the Cannoniers are generally English or Hollanders. True it is, that there is one little Mountain higher than the Fortrefs; but there is hardly any way to it, but through the same Fortrefs. There was a Dutch Engineer, who after he had serv'd the King fifteen or sixteen years, desir'd leave to be gone, and the Holland-Company it self, that had recommended him to the Service, did all they could to obtain it; but they could never procure it; because he was an excellent Cannonier, and very skilful in making Fire-works. The Raja Jesseing, who is the most Potent of all the Idolatrous Princes of India, and who was most powerfully Instrumental to put the Crown upon Aureng-zeb's Head, was sent as Generalissimo of the Army of this King, against the Raja Seva-gi; and passing by the Fortrefs of Dultabat, this Dutch-Cannonier went to wait upon him, all the Cannoniers of the Army being Fran-guis, as well as he. The Hollander laying hold of this opportunity, told the Raja, that if he would procure him a Licence to depart, he would shew him a way to get up Cannon, and to mount them upon that Mountain which commanded the Fortrefs: for they had already wall'd it about, and put Souldiers upon it to keep it secure. The Raja pleas'd with his proposal, assur'd him that he would procure him the King's Licence, if he perform'd what he had propos'd. Thereupon the Hollander undertaking and accomplishing his design, the Raja was as good as his word, and obtain'd of the King to dismiss the Dutch-Cannonier: who came to Surat when I was there, about the beginning of the year 1667; whence he embark'd for Holland.

From Dultabat to Aureng-abat, costes

Aureng-abat was formerly but a Village, till Aureng-zeb made it a City, though it be not wall'd. It grew to be thus enlarg'd, as well by reason of a Lake two leagues about, upon which the Village is built, as for the Memorys-sake of his first Wife, who is dead, by whom he had his Children. She is Interr'd toward the end of the Lake, upon the West-side, where the King has built a Mosquee, with a stately Monument, and a fair Inn. The Mosquee and the Monument were rear'd at a great expence, being cover'd with white-Marble, which is brought from Labor by Waggon; being a journey of four Months. Going one time from Surat to Golconda, I met five days journey from Aureng-abat, more than three hundred Waggon laden with this Marble, the least wherof was drawn by twelve Oxen.

All this I travell'd in twenty-seven days. I made five journeys more in my Travels in the year 1653. And I also took another Road from Piplemar, where I arriv'd the eleventh of March, setting out from Surat, the sixth.

The twelfth, to Birgam.
 The thirteenth, to Orberat.

The fourteenth, to Enneque-Tenque, a strong Fortrefs, that bears the name of two Indian Princesses. It stands upon a Mountain steep every way; there being but one ascent to it upon the East-side. Within the enclosed compass of the Walls there is a large Pond, and Ground enough to sow for the maintenance of five or six-hundred men. But the King keeps no Garrison therein, so that it falls to ruine.

The fifteenth, to Gerout.
 The sixteenth, to Lazour, where you are to cross a River; upon which, about a Cannons-shot from the fording-place, are to be seen several large Pagods of the Countrey, whither great numbers of Pilgrims repair every day.

The seventeenth, to Aureng-abad.
 The eighteenth, to Pipelgan, or Piply.
 The nineteenth, to Ember.

The Twentieth, to Deogan.
 The one and twentieth, to Patris.
 The two and twentieth, to Bargan.

The three and twentieth, to Palam.
 The four and twentieth, to Candear, a large Fortrefs, but upon one side commanded by an high Mountain.

The five and twentieth, to Gargan.
 The six and twentieth, to Nagooni.
 The seven and twentieth, to Indove.

The eight and twentieth, to Indelvai.
 The nine and twentieth, to Regivali. Between these two last places there is a little River which separates the Territories of the Great Mogul, from the Dominions of the King of Golconda.

The thirtieth, to Masapkipet.
 The one and thirtieth, to Mirel-mola-kipet.

To go from Agra to Golconda, you must go to Brampour, according to the Road already describ'd from Brampour to Dultabat, which is five or six days journeys off; and from Dultabat to those other places before set down.

You may also take another Road to go from Surat to Golconda; that is to say, through Goa and Visapour; as I shall inform you in the particular relation of my journey to Goa. I come now to what is most worthy of observation in the Kingdom of Golconda: And to relate what happen'd in the last Wars the King maintain'd against his Neighbours, during the time that I have known the Indies.

CHAP. X.

Of the Kingdom of Golconda, and the Wars which it has maintain'd for some few years last past.

THE whole Kingdom of Golconda, take it in general, is a good Country, abounding in Corn, Rice, Cattel, Sheep, Poultry, and other necessities for human life. In regard there are great store of Lakes in it, there is also great store of Fish. Above all the rest, there is a sort of Smelt, that has but one bone in the middle, which is most delicious food. Nature has contributed more than Art, toward the making these Lakes, whereof the Country is full; which are generally in places somewhat rais'd, so that you need do no more than make a little Dam upon the plain-side to keep in the water. These Dams or Banks are sometimes half a league long: and after the rainy seasons are over, they open the Sluces from time to time to let out the water into the adjacent Fields, where it is receiv'd by divers little Channels to water particular grounds.

Bagnager is the name of the Metropolis of this Kingdom; but vulgarly it is call'd Golconda, from the name of a Fortrefs, not above two leagues distant from it, where the King keeps his Court. This Fortrefs is about two leagues in circuit, and by consequence requires a numerous Guard. It is as it were a Town where the King keeps his Treasure: having left Bagnagar, ever since it was sack'd by the Army, which Alireng-zeb brought against it.

Bagnagar is then the City, which they vulgarly call Golconda; and it was founded by the great Grandfather of the present King; upon the importunity of one of his Wives, whom he passionately lov'd, whose name was Nagar. Before that, it was only a place of Pleasure, where the King had very fair Gardens, till at length his Wife continually representing to him the delicacies of the situation for the building a City and a Palace, by reason of the River; he laid the foundations, and order'd that it should bear the name of his Wife, calling it, Bag-Nagar, that is to say, the Garden of Nagar. This City lies in seventeen degrees of Elevation, wanting two minutes. The Country round about is a flat Country, only neer the City are several Rocks, as you see about Fontain-Bleau. A great River washes the Walls of the City upon the South-west-side, which, neer to Adaslipatan, falls into the Gulf of Bengala. At Bagnagar you cross this River over a Bridg no less beautiful than Pont-Neuf at Paris. The City is little less than Orleans, well-built, and full of Windows. There are many fair large Streets, but not being well-pav'd, they are dusty, as are all the Cities of Persia and India, which is very offensive in the Summer.

Before you come to the Bridg, you must pass through a large Suburb, call'd Erengabad, about a league in length; where live all the Merchants, the Brokers, Handicraft-Trades, and in general, all the meaner sort of people; The City being inhabited only by persons of Quality, Officers of the King's House, Ministers of Justice, and Officers of the Army. From ten or eleven in the forenoon, till four or five in the evening, the Merchants, Brokers, and Workmen come into the City to trade with the Forreign Merchants; after which time they return to their own Houses. In the are Suburb two or three fair Mosques, which serve for Inns for the Forreigners, besides several Pagods in the Neighbouring-parts. Through the same Suburb lies the way to the Fortrefs of Golconda.

So soon as you are over the Bridg, you enter into a large Street, that leads you to the King's Palace. On the right-hand are the Houses of some Lords of the Court; and four or five Inns two Stories-high: wherein there are fair Halls and large Chambers to let in the fresh Air. At the end of this Street there is a large Piazza; upon which stands one of the sides of the Palace; in the middle whereof there is a Balcony, wherein the King comes to sit, when he pleases to give Audience to the People. The great Gate of the Palace stands not upon this Piazza, but upon another very neer adjoining; and you enter first into a large Court Court surrounded with Portico's, under which lies the King's Guards. Out of this Court you pass into another, built after the same form, encompassed with several fair Apartments, the Roofs whereof are terraced. Upon which, as upon those where the Elephants are kept, there are very fair Gardens, wherein there grow Trees of that bigness, that it is a thing of great wonder, how those Arches should bear so vast a burthen.

About fifty years since, they began to build a magnificent Pagod in the City; which would have been the fairest in all India, had it been finished. The Stones are to be admired for their bigness. And that wherein the Nich is made, which is on that side where they say their Prayers, is an entire Rock, of such a prodigious bulk, that it was five years before five or six-hundred men, continually employ'd, could hew it out of its place. They were forc'd also to row it along upon an Engine with Wheels, upon which they brought it to the Pagod; and several affirm'd to me, that there were fourteen-hundred Oxen to draw it. I will tell you hereafter the reason it remains imperfect. For had it been finish'd, in all reason it had excell'd all the boldest Structures of Asia.

On the other side of the City, as you go to Maslipatan, there are two great Lakes, being each about a league in compass, wherein there ride several Pinks richly adorn'd for the King's Pleasure; and upon the Banks are several fair Houses that belong to the Principal Lords of the Court.

Upon three sides of the City stands a very fair Mosquee, wherein are the Tombs of the Kings of Golconda; and about four in the afternoon there is a Dole of Bread and Pilau to all the Poor that come. If you would see any thing that is rare, you must go to view these Tombs upon a Festival-day. For then from morning till night they are hung with rich Tapestry.

As for the Government and Policy which is observ'd in this City: In the first place, when a stranger comes to the Gates, they search him exactly, to see if he have any Salt or Tobacco about him; for those Commodities bring the King his greatest Revenue. Sometimes a Stranger shall wait a day or two, before he shall have leave to enter. For a Souldier first gives notice to the officer that commands the Guard, and then he sends to the Deroa, to know what he shall do. Now, because it many times happens that the Deroa is busy, or gone to take a walk out of the City, or else for that sometimes the Souldier himself pretends he cannot find the Deroa, only, to create himself more errands, to get the more Money; a Stranger is forc'd to endure all this delay, sometimes, as I have said before, for a day or two.

When the King sits to do Justice, I observe that he comes into the Balcone that looks into the Piazza, and all that have business stand below, just against the place where the King sits. Between the People and the Walls of the Palace are fix'd in the ground three rows of Poles, about the length of an Half-Pike, to the ends whereof they tie certain ropes a-cross one upon another. Nor is any person whatsoever permitted to pass beyond those bounds, unless he be call'd. This Bar, which is never set up, but when the King sits in Judgment, runs along the whole breadth of the Piazza; and just against the Balcone there is a Bar to open, to let in those that are call'd. Then two men, that each of them hold a Cord by the end, extended all the breadth of the passage, have nothing to do but to let fall the Cord, for any person that is call'd to step over it. A Secretary of State sits below under the Balcone, to receive all Petitions; and when he has five or six together, he puts them in a Bag, and then an Eunuch, who stands in the Balcone near the King, lets down a string, to which the Bag being ty'd, he draws it up, and presents it to his Majesty.

Every Munday the chiefest of the Nobility mount the Guard, every one in their turn, and are never reliev'd till at the eight days end. There are some of these Lords that have five or six thousand men under their command; and they lie encamp'd in their Tents round about the City. When they mount the Guard, every one goes from his own Habitation to the Rendezvous; but when they are reliev'd, they march in good order over the Bridg, thence through the long Street into the Piazza, where they draw up before the Balcone. In the first place, march ten or twelve Elephants, more or less, according to the quality of the Captain of the Guard. There are some of these

Elephants

Elephants that carry Cages, which in some sort resemble the Body of a little Coach; there are others that have but one man to guide them, and another in the Cage who carries a Banner.

After the Elephants, follow the Camels by two and two, sometimes to the number of thirty or forty. Every Camel carries a kind of Packsaddle, upon which is fasten'd a little Culverine, which a certain Engineer, clad in a skin from head to foot, and sitting upon the Crupper of the Camel, with a lighted Match in his hand, dextrously manages from one side to another before the Balcone, where the King sits.

After them come the Coaches, attended by the Domestick Servants of the Commander: Next to them follow the lead-Horses, and then the Lord appears, to whom all this Equipage belongs, attended by ten or twelve Curtisans, that stay for him at the end of the Bridg, an skip and dance before him to the Piazza. Behind him the Cavalry and infantry march in good order: which being a shew, wherein there was much of delight and state, all the while I staid at Bagnabar, which was about four Months, I had the divertisement to see them out of my Lodging in the great Street every week as they march'd by.

The Souldiers wear no other Clothes than only three or four ells of Calicut, with which they cover half their Bodies behind and before. They wear their hair very long, and tie it up in a knot upon the top of the crown, like the women, who have no other Headgear than only a piece of Linnen with three corners, one that comes to the middle of the head, and the other two, which they tie under their chins. The Souldiers do not wear Hangers or Scimitars like the Persians; but broad Swords like the Switzers, as well for a thrust, as a blow, which they hang in a Girdle. The Barrels of their Muskets are stronger than ours, and much neater; for their Iron is better, and not so subject to break. Their Cavalry carry Bows and Arrows, a Buckler and a Battel-Ax, an Headpiece and a Jacket of Mail, that hangs down from the Head-piece over their Shoulders.

There are so great a number of common Women as well in the City as in the Suburbs, and in the Fortrefs, which is like another City, that there are generally above twenty thousand set down in the Deroga's Book; without which licence, it is not lawful for any Woman to profess the Trade. They pay no tribute to the King; only they are oblig'd to come, a certain number of them, with their Governels, and their Musick every Friday, and present themselves before the Balcone. If the King be there, they dance before him. if he intend not to come, an Eunuch comes into the Balcone, and makes them a sign to retire. In the cool of the evening they stand at the doors of their Houses, which are for the most part little Huts; and when night comes, they set up a Candle or a lighted Lamp for a Signal. Then it is also that they open all the Shops where they sell Tari; which is a certain drink made of the juice of a Tree, and is as Sweet as our new Wines. They fetch it some five or six league off, upon Horses, that carry two earthen-Bottles of each side, and trot at a great rate; of which there come every day to the City above five or six hunder'd. This King has a considerable Revenue by the Impost which he lays upon this Tari. And for that reason he permits so many common Women, in regard it is for their sake that so much Tari is consum'd; those that sell it, for that cause, keeping their Shops by those Houses.

These sort of Women are so nimble and active, that when the present King went to see Maslipatan, nine of them undertook to represent the figure of an Elephant; four making the four feet, four the body, and one the trunk; upon which the King, sitting in a kind of Throne, made his entry into the City.

All the Men and Women of Golconda are well proportion'd, and of comely, features; and fair enough in their countenances; only the Country-people are a little more swart.

The present King of Golconda bears the Name of Abdoul-Conton-Sha; and I will tell the Reader in a few words, from whence he drew his Original. In the Reign of Axbar King of India, the Father of Jehan-Guir, the Territories of the Great Moguls did not extend farther Southward then Narbider; so that the River which runs by it, and which coming from the South, empties it self into Ganges, separated their Dominions from the Territories of the Raja of Narsingue, that stretch'd stretch'd as far as Cape-Comorin, the other Raja's being only his Subjects and depending upon him. This Raja and his Successors have been always at Wars with them that succeeded to Tamerlane or Temur-leng in India; and their Power was so great, that the last Raja, who was at War with Akbar, brought into the Field four Armies under as many Generals. The most considerable of his Armies lay in those Provinces, which at this day are call'd the Kingdom of Golconda; the second was quarter'd in the Provinces of Visapour, the third in the Province of Dulatabat, and the fourth in the Territories of Brampour. The Raja of Narsingue dying without Children, the four Generals divided among themselves the Countries which they possess'd with their Army, and took upon them the title of Kings, the one of Golconda, the other of Visapour, the other of Brampour, and the fourth of Dulatabat. Though the Raja were an Idolater, nevertheless his four Generals were Mahumetans; and he of Golconda was of the Sect of Haly, descended from an Ancient Family of the Turcomans, which inhabit the Country of Hamadan in Persia. This General, as I have said, was more considerable than any of the rest; and some few days after the death of the Raja, they won a famous Victory from the Mogul; so that he could not hinder them from assuming their several Sovereignities. But after that, Jehan-Guir, the Son of Akbar, conquer'd again the Kingdom of Brampour, Cha-jehan the Son of Jehan-Guir recover'd the Kingdom of Dulatabat, and Aureng-zeb the Son of Cha-jehan recover'd some part of the Kingdom of Visapour. As for the King of Golconda, neither Cha-jehan, nor Aureng-zeb disturb'd him, but let him rest in peace, upon condition that he should pay to the Mogul an annual tribute of 200000 Pagods. At present the greatest Raja on this side Ganges is the Raja of Velou, whose Territories extend to Cape-Comorin, and who succeeded to some part of the Territories of the Raja of Narsingue: But in regard there is no Trade in his Country, and by consequence no concourse of strangers, there is little notice taken of him. The present King of Golconda has no Sons, but three Daughters, who are all married.

The eldest Espous'd one of the Kinsmen of the Grand-Chek of Mecca. Nor must we forget some passages that fell out before this Marriage. The Chek coming to Golconda in the habit of a Faquir, for some Months lodg'd without the Gate of the Palace, disdain'd to give any answer to several Courtiers, that demanded what his business was. At length the thing being made known to the King, he sent his chief Physician, who spoke good Arabick, to know of the Chek what he had to request, and the reason of his coming. The Physician, and some other Lords of the Court that discours'd him also, finding him to be a person of great Wit and Learning, brought him to the King, who was very well satisfi'd with his aspect and his presence. But at length the Chek declaring to him, that he came to Espouse the Princess; that proposal very much surpriz'd the Prince, and was look'd upon by the greatest part of the Court, as made by a person not well in his wits. At first the King only laugh'd at him. But when he found him obstinately persevering in his demand, in-so-much that he threatn'd the Countrey with some strange Calamity, if the Princess were not given to him in Marriage, he was committed to Prison, where he lay a long time. At length the King thinking it more to the purpose to send him back into his own Countrey, caus'd him to be ship'd away at Maslipatan, in a Vessel that carri'd Goods and Pilgrims to Moecca, whence they travel by land to Moecca. About two years after the same Chek return'd again to Golconda, and order'd his affairs so well, that he Espous'd the Princess, and won an high reputation in the Kingdom, which he governs at this day, and is very Potent. He it was that kept the King from surrendring the Forts of Golconda, whither he was retir'd, when Aureng-zeb and his Son took Bagnagar, as I shall tell you by and by, threatning to kill him, if he would not resolve to hold it out, and not deliver the keys to the enemy. This bold action was the reason which made the King love him ever afterwards; and that he takes his counsel in all weighty affairs, not as he is the King's Son-in-Law, but as he is a great Minister of State, and the chiefest person, next the King, in all the Court. He it was that has put a stop to the finishing the great Pagod in Bagnagar, having threaten'd the whole Kingdom with some great Calamity, if they went forward with the work. This Prince is a passionate Lover of all those that profess the Mathematicks, and understands them as well. For which reason, though he be a Mahumetan, he is a great Favourer of all the Christians, who are vers'd in that Science, as he has particularly testifi'd to Father Ephraim, a Capuchin, passing through Golconda for Pegu, whither he was sent by his Superiors. He did all he could to oblige him to stay in the Country, and offer'd to build him a House and a Church at his own expences; telling him, he should neither want employment, nor Hearers, in regard there were several Portuguese Christians, and several Armenians that came thither to trade. But Father Ephraim having a particular Order to go to Pegu, could not accept of his Offer; yet when he went to take his leave of the Check, he presented him with a Calaat, the most noble that was in his Wardrobe; being the whole habit; the Cap, the Cabay or large Vest, the Arcalon or short Caslock, two pair of Drawers, two Shirts, and two Scarfs, which they wear about their necks, and over their heads to keep off the heat of the Sun. The Friar was surpriz'd at the present, and gave the Check to understand, that it was not proper for him to wear it: however the Check would force him to take it, telling him he might accommodate some of his Friends with it. Two months after Father Ephraim bestow'd the same Present upon me, being at Surat; for which I return'd him thanks.

The Check seeing he could not detain the Father, and unwilling he should go a-foot from Golconda to Maſſipatan, oblig'd him to take an Oxe, with two Men to lead it; and because he could not perswade him to take also thirty Pagods, which he presented the Father withall, he commanded the two men, when they came to Maſſipatan, to leave the Oxe and the thirty Pagods with him, which they did very punctually; for otherwise at their return to Golconda, they had forfeited their lives. I will finish the History of Father Ephraim, when I come to the description of Goa, which is the principal place that the Portugals have in the Indies.

The second Daughter of the King of Golconda was married to Sultan Mahumad, the eldest Son of Aurengzeb; the occasion whereof was this: Mir-gimola, Generalissimo of the King of Golconda's Army, and who had been very serviceable to his Master, to settle the Crown upon his head, according to the custom, left with the King as a mark of his fidelity, both his Wife and Children in Hostage; for he was sent to reduce certain Raja's in Bengala, that were in Rebellion. He had several Daughters; but only one Son, who had a great train, and made a great noise at Court. The reputation and riches which Mir-gimola had gain'd, rais'd him up several Enemies, who endeavour'd in his absence to ruine him, and to put him out of the Kings favour. They pretended that the great power of Mir-gimola was very much to be suspected; that all his designs tended to dethrone him, and to settle the Kingdom of Golconda upon his own Son; that it behov'd him not to stay till the remedy were past cure, but to rid himself of an Enemy, so much the more to be fear'd, the closer he kept his intentions; and that the shortest and best way was to poison him. The King being easily perswaded, gave them leave and authority to act as they pleas'd for his security; but having mis'd of their design for three or four times together, Mir-gimola's Son began to smell the plot; and immediately gave advice thereof to his Father. It is not known what instructions he receiv'd from his Father; but so soon as he had his answer, he went to the King, and spoke boldly to him, taxing him with the services which his Father had done him, and that without his assistance he had never come to the Crown. The young Lord, naturally of a fiery disposition, kept on this discourse, so displeasing to the King, till at length his Majesty flung away; and the Lords that were present, fell upon the young man, and basely misus'd him. At the same time also he was arrested and committed to prison, together with his Mother and Sisters. Which action, as it made a great noise at Court, coming to Mir-gimola's ears, so incens'd him, that having an Army under his command, and being belov'd by the Soldiers, he resolv'd to make use of the advantages he had, to revenge himself for the injury done him. He was then not far from Bengala, being sent, as I said before, to reduce certain Raja's to obedience, whose Territories lye upon the Ganges; and Sultan-Sajah, Cha-jehan's second Son, being then Governor of Bengala, the General thought it his best way to address himself to him; as being the next Prince, with whom he might join his Forces against the King of Golconda, whom he look'd upon now no more as his Master, but as one of his most inveterate Enemies. Thereupon he wrote to the Prince to this effect: That if he would join with him, he would give him an opportunity to possess himself of the whole Kingdom of Golconda; and that he should not neglect so fair an opportunity to enlarge the Dominions of the Great Mogul, the succession whereof might as well concern him, as any of the rest of his Brothers. But the answer which Sultan-Sujah sent him, was contrary to his expectation; who told him, that he could not tell how to trust a person, who as he went about to betray his King, might more easily be drawn to betray a Foreign Prince, whom he had inveig'd only for the sake of his Revenge; and that therefore he should not rely upon him. Upon Sultan-Sujah's refusal, Mirgimola wrote to Aurengzeb, who was then in his Government of Brampoure, who being not so nice as his Brother, accepted of the proposal that was made him. Thus while Mirgimola advanc'd with his Troops toward Bagnabar, Aurengzeb hasten'd toward Decan, and both Armies being join'd, they came to the Gates of Bagnabar before the King was in a posture to receive them. He had only time to retreat into his Fortrefs of Goleonda, to which Aurengzeb, after he had rifl'd the City of Bagnabar, and plunder'd the Palace, lay'd a close Siege. The King seeing himself thus vigorously press'd, sent away to Mirgimola his Wife and Children very honourably. For there is vertue and generosity in the Indians, as well as in the Europeans; of which I will give you an illustrious Example in the person of the King of Golconda. Some days after the Enemy had besieg'd the Fortrefs, a Canoneer espying Aurengzeb upon his Elephant, riding about to view the Fortifications of the Castle, told the King, being then upon the Bastion, that if he pleas'd he would fetch off Aurengzeb with a Canon-shot; and at the same time was about to give fire; but the King holding his hand, told him he perceiv'd it well enough, but that it behov'd Kings to be better Husbands of the Lives of Princes. The Canoneer obey'd the King, and instead of shooting at Aurengzeb, he took off the Head of the General of his Army, who was a little before him; which put a stop to the Assault they were about to have giv'n, the Army being in a confusion upon his death. Abdul-jaber-Beg, General of the King of Golconda's Army, lying not far from the Camp, with a flying Army of four thousand Horse, understanding the disorder of the Enemy by reason of the loss of their General, laid hold of so favourable an opportunity, gave them a desperate charge in that confusion, and putting them to the rout, pers'd them till night, for four or five Leagues. Some few days before the General's death, the King of Golconda finding that his provisions fail'd him in the Fortrefs, was about to have deliver'd the Keys; but as I said before, Mirza-Mahomed, his Son-in-Law, snatch'd them out of his hand, and threatned to kill him, if he persever'd in that resolution. Which was the reason, that the King who lov'd him not before, had ever after the greatest affection imaginable for him as long as he liv'd.

Aurengzeb being thus constrain'd to raise his Siege, stay'd some days to rally his Troops; and having receiv'd a recruit of fresh men, return'd again to the Siege, with new resolutions. But Mirgimola, who had still some kindness for the King remaining in his breast, would not permit Aurengzeb to use the utmost extremity, but by his wit and good management gain'd a suspension of Arms.

Cha-jehan, the Father of Aurengzeb, had formerly had great kindnesses shew'n him by the King of Golconda, to whom he fled after he had lost the Battel, together with his eldest Brother, which he fought against Jehan-guir his Father, with whom he made War. The eldest Son was taken, and Jehan-guir caus'd his eyes to be put out; but Cha-jehan being more wary, fled, and was entertain'd by the King of Golconda, with whom he enter'd into a particular and strict friendship, Cha-jehan making an Oath to his Benefactor, that he would never wage War against him upon any occasion whatever. Mirgimola therefore knowing that it would be no difficult thing to bring two Kings, that were Friends, to an accommodation, wrought underhand with both, toward the conclusion of a Peace. And he so brought his business about, that the King of Golconda writ a Letter first to Cha-jehan, wherein he submissively requested him to be an Arbitrator between Aurengzeb and him, promising to submit wholly to him, and to sign such Articles as he should propose. By the same policy of Mir-gimola, Cha-jehan was advis'd, in answer to the King of Golconda's Letter to propose a Match between his second Daughter and Sultan Mahomed, the Son of Aurengzeb, upon condition that after the death of the King her Father, the Son-in-Law should inherit the Kingdom of Golconda. This proposition being accepted, the Peace was concluded, and the Nuptials celebrated with an extraordinary Magnificence. As for Mir-gimola, he quitted the service of the King of Golconda, and went with Aurengzeb to Brampour. Soon after Cha-jehan made him his Prime Minister of State, and Generalissimo of his Armies; and he it was that so potently assisted Aurengzeb to get the Crown, by the defeat of Sultan-Sujah. For Mir-gimola was a person of great wit, and no less understanding in Military than in State affairs. I had occasion to speak with him several times; and I have no less admir'd his justice, than his dispatch to all people that had to do with him; while he gave out several Orders, and sign'd several Dispatches at the same time, as if he had but one entire business in hand.

The other Princess of Golconda was promis'd to Sultan Sejed, another Chek of Mecca; and the Match went on so fairly, that the day was appointed for the celebration of the Nuptials; but Abdoul-Jaber-Beg, General of the Army, with six other Lords, went to the King to divert him from his intention; and they brought it so to pass, that the Match was broken off, and the Princess was given in Marriage to Mirza-Abdoul-Cosing, the Kings Cousin; by whom she has two Sons, which have wholly annull'd the Pretensions of Aurengzeb's Son; whose Father now keeps him in Prison, in the Fort of Gavaleor, for having taken his Uncle Sultan Sujah's part against him. The Princess had been given before to Mirza-Abdoul-Cosing, but for his debauchery, which render'd him little regarded by the King. But since his marriage he is very much reclaim'd.

Now the King of Golconda does not stand in so much fear of the Moguls; for in imitation of them, he keeps his Money in his own Country, and has already hoarded up a Treasury sufficient to maintain his Wars. Besides, he is altogether addicted to the Sect of Haly, so that he will not wear a Bonnet, like the other Mahumetans, because they say Haly wore none; but another sort of attire for the head. Which is the reason that the Persians, that come into India to seek their fortune, apply themselves rather to the King of Golconda than to the Great Mogul. Such is the condition of the King of Visapour also, whom the Queen, Sister to the King of Golconda, takes care to educate in the Sect of Haly, which invites great numbers of Persians into her Service.

CHAP. XI.

The Road from Golconda to Maslipatan, al. Masalipatan.

From Maslipatan they count it an hundred costes or leagues, taking the right way. But if you go by the Diamond-Mine, which in the Persian Language is call'd Coulour, in the Indian, Gani; they reckon it an hundred and twelve leagues: and this is the Road which I generally took.

From Golconda to Tenara, costes 4

Tenara is a sweet place, where there are four very fair Houses, to every one of which belongs a large Garden. One of the four standing upon the left hand along the High-way, is much more beautiful than any of the other three. It is built of Free-stone two stories high, wherein there are several fair Galleries, Halls, Parlors, and lodging-Chambers. Before the front of the House is a large four-square Piazza, little inferior to the Place Royale in Paris. Upon every one of the other three fronts there is a great Portal, on each side whereof there is a fair Platform rais'd from the earth above four or five-foot-high, and well-Arch'd, where Travellers of Quality are lodg'd. On the top of each Portal there is a strong Bauluster, luster, and a little Chamber for the Ladies. When Persons of Quality care not to be in their Houses, they set up Tents in their Gardens; and you must take notice that there is no dwelling for any person but only in the three Houses; for the fourth, which is the fairest, belongs only to the Queen. When she is not there however, any body may see it, and take a walk in the Garden, which is a very lovely place, and well-stor'd with water. The whole Piazza is encompassed with several Chambers for the lodging of poor Travellers; who every day toward the evening have an Alms bestow'd upon them, of Rice, or Pulse, which they boil ready to their hands. But for the Idolaters that eat nothing which is provided by other hands, they give them flower to make Bread, and a little Butter. For when their Bread is bak'd like a broad thin Cake, they dip it in the melted-Butter.

The greatest part of the way from Lakabaron to Coulour, especially when you come near to Coulour, is very rocky; so that I was forc'd in some places to take my Coach off the Carriages, which was presently done. If you meet with any good Earth between those Rocks, there you shall find Cassia-Trees, that bear the best Cassia, and the most laxative in all India. Which I found by its working with my men that eat of it by the way.

There runs a great River by the Town of Coulour, which falls into the Gulf of Bengala near Masipatan.

Masipatan is a great City, the Houses whereof are only of Wood, built at a distance from one another. The place it self, which stands by the Sea, is famous for nothing but the Road for Ships which belongs to it, which is the best in the Gulf of Bengala; and from hence they set Sail for Pegu, for Siam, for Aracan, for Bengala, for Cochinchine, for Mecca, and for Ormuz, also for the Islands of Madagascar, Sumatra and the Manille.

You must take notice, that from Golconda to Masipatan, there is no travelling by Waggon, by reason of the high Mountains, Lakes and Rivers that make the Road very streight and impassable. 'Tis a very difficult thing to carry a little Coach thither; for I was forc'd to have my own taken off the Carriages, and so to have it lifted out of the bad way. The Road is every jot as bad between Golconda and Cape-Comorin; a Waggon being hardly so much as made mention of all the way; for that there is no other way to travel, or for the carriage of Goods, than with Horses and Oxen. But instead of Coaches, they have the convenience of Pallekie's, wherein you are carried with more speed and more ease than in any part of India.

CHAP. XII.

The Road from Surat to Goa, and from Goa to Golconda through Visapour.

YOU may go from Surat to Goa, partly by Land, and partly by Sea. But the Road being very bad by Land, generally Travellers go by Sea, and hiring an Almadier, which is a Barque with Oars, they go by the Shoar to Goa: though sometimes the Malavares or Indian Pirats are very much to be fear'd all along those Coasts, as I shall tell you in due place.

The way from Surat to Goa, is not reckon'd by Coffes, but by Gos, one of which makes four of our common Leagues.

The great danger which you run along the Coast, is the hazard of falling into the hands of the Malavares, who are violent Mahumetans, and very cruel to the Christians. I saw a bare-foot Carmelite-Friar who had been taken by those Pirats. This Friar, to get his ransom the sooner, they put to that kind of torture, that his right-arm was shorter by one half than his left, and so it was with one leg. The Captains do not give above six Crowns to every Souldier for the whole six months that they are usually out at Sea: Then the Souldiers may return home, and if their Captains will have them stay longer, they must allow 'em more pay. They seldom venture out above 20 or 25 leagues at Sea, which is no great hazard of the Vessel. But sometimes the Portuguese's snap them, and then they either hang 'em up presently, or throw 'em over-board. These Malavares carry sometimes 200, sometimes 250 men, and they sail together in Squadrons of ten or fifteen Barques to attack a great Vessel, not caring a rush for the great Guns. They come board and board so suddenly, and cast such a quantity of Pots of Artificial Fire upon the deck, that if there be not speedy remedy appli'd, they will presently do a world of mischief. Generally our Seamen, knowing the custom of these Pirats, when they come within ken, presently shut up the Scuttles, and fill the deck with water, to hinder the Fire-Pots from doing execution.

An English Captain, whose name was Mr. Clark, coming from Bantam to Surat, not far from Cochin, met a Squadron of these Malavares, consisting of 25 or 30 of these Barques. Who came board and board, and vigorously attack'd him. The Captain seeing he could not withstand their first Fury, put fire to some Barrels of Powder, and blowing up the deck, blew a great number of the Pirats into the Sea. Nevertheless, the rest were nothing discourag'd, but boarded the Ship a second time. The English Captain seeing there was no help, put his men into two Shallops, and staying behind in his Cabin, where the Pirats could not enter so suddenly, he set fire to a Train which he had laid, that reach'd to all the rest of the Powder, and at the same time leaping into the Sea, was taken up by his own men. In the mean time the Ship being all a-fire, the Pirats leapt into the Sea also. But for all this, the two Shallops, wherein there were about forty English, were taken by the rest of the Malavares, that were Fresh-men; and I was then at breakfast with the English President, Mr. Fremelin, when he receiv'd a Letter from Captain Clark, that he was a Slave to Samorin, who is the most considerable King all along the Pirats Coast. The Prince would not leave the English in the hands of those Scoundrels, knowing that they would have been in great danger of their lives, by reason that above twelve-hunder'd Women had lost their Husbands, in the two times that the ship had been fir'd. However the King found found a means to appease them, promising to each of them that had lost their Husbands two Piafers, every Piafer being four shillings apiece, which came to above two thousand four hundred Crowns, besides four thousand, which were to be paid for the Ransom of the Captain and the other Sea-men, immediately the President sent the Money, and I saw them at their return, some in health, others in violent Feavers. The Malavares are a People so superstitious, that they never touch any thing that is foul or soyl'd, with their Right Hands, but only with the Left, the Nails of which Fingers they let grow, and use instead of Combs, for they wear their Hair long like the Women, tying it about their Heads in wreaths, and binding it with a Linnen cloath with three corners.

Since I have mention'd Daman, I will tell you in a few words how that City was besieg'd by Aureng-Zeb the present Great Mogul. Some are of opinion that Elephants do great matters in War; which may be sometimes true, but not always; for very often instead of doing mischief to the Enemy, they turn upon those that lead them, and rout their own party as Aureng-Zeb found by experience, at the Siege of this City. He was twenty days before Daman, and resolv'd at length to Storm it upon a Sunday, believing that the Christians were like the Jews and would not defend it upon that day. He that commanded the Place was an old Souldier, who had serv'd in France, and had three Sons with him. In the Town were eight hundred Gentlemen, and other stout Souldiers, who came from all parts to signalize their valour at that Siege. For though the Mogul had in his Army above forty thousand men, he could not hinder relief from being put into Daman by Sea, in regard that he wanted Ships. The Sunday that the Prince intended to Storm, the Governour of Daman, as had been order'd at the Council of War, caus'd Mafs to be said presently after Midnight, and then made a Sally with all his Cavalry and some part of his Infantry, who were to fall on upon that quarter which was guarded by two hundred Elephants. Among those Elephants they fung a great number of Fire-works which so affrighted them in the dark of the Night, that knowing not whither they went, nor being to be rul'd by their Governours, they turn'd upon the Besiegers with so much fury, that in less than two or three hours half the Army of Aureng-Zeb was cut in pieces, and in three days the Siege was rais'd; nor would the Prince after that, have any more to do with the Christians.

I made two Voyages to Goa, the one at the beginning of the year 1641. the second at the beginning of the year 1648. The first time I stay'd but five days, and return'd by Land to Surat. From Goa I went to Bicholly, which is upon the main Land, thence to Visapour, thence to Golconda, thence to Aureng-abat, and so to Surat. I could have gone to Surat without passing through Golconda, but my business led me that way.

Which takes up generally eight days journey.

Which I travel'd in nine days.

From Golconda to Aureng-abat, the Stages are not so well order'd, being sometimes sixteen, sometimes twenty five, sometimes twenty Leagues asunder.

From Aureng-abat to Surat takes up sometimes twelve, sometimes fifteen, sometimes sixteen days journey.

Visapour is a great scrambling City, wherein there is nothing remarkable, neither as to the publick Edifices, nor as to Trade. The Kings Palace is a vast one but ill built; and the access to it is very dangerous, in regard there are abundance of Crocodiles that lie in the Water which encompasses it. The King of Visapour has three good ports in his Dominions, Rejapour, Daboul, and Crapaten. The last is the best of all, where the Sea beats upon the foot of the Mountain, and you have fourteen or fifteen Fathom Water near the Land. Upon the top of the Mountain there is a Fort, with a Spring of Water in it. Crapaten is not above five days journey from Goa to the North. And Rabaque, where the King of Visapour sels his Pepper, is as far distant from it to the East. The King of Visapour and the King of Golconda have been formerly tributary to the Great Mogul: but now they are absolute of themselves.

This

This Kingdom was for some time disquieted by the revolt of Nair-seva-gi, Captain of the King of Visapour's Guards; after which the young Seva-gi his Son conceiv'd so deadly a hatred against the King, that he made himself the head of certain Banditti, and as he was both wise and liberal, he got together so many Horse and Foot, as made a Compleat Army; the Souldiers flocking to him from all parts, for the reputation of his Liberality. And he was just about to have led them to action, when the King of Visapour happen'd to dye without Children, so that with little or no trouble he got possession of one part of the Coast of Malavar; taking Rejapour, Rasigar, Crapaten, Daboul, and other places. They report that upon his demolishing the fortifications of Rasigar, he found vast Treasures, which help'd him to pay his Souldiers, who were always well paid. Some years before the death of the King, the Queen perceiving no probability, of having any Children, adopted a little Boy, upon whom she bestow'd all her affections, and caus'd him to be brought up in the Doctrine of Haly's Sect. The King upon his Death-bed caus'd this Adopted Son to be Proclaim'd King; but Seva-gi having a numerous Army continu'd the War, and much disturb'd the Regency of the Queen. At length he made the first propositions for Peace; which was concluded upon conditions, that he should quietly enjoy the Territories which he had subdu'd; that he should become Tributary to the King, and pay him the half of all his Revenue. The young King being thus fix'd in his Throne, the Queen Regent went in Pilgrimage to Mecca; and I was at Ispahan, when she pass'd through the Town in her return home.

When I made my second Voyage to Goa, I embark'd in a Dutch Vessel call'd the Maestricht, which carry'd me to Mingrela, where I landed the eleventh day of January, 1648.

Mingrela is a large Town, extended half a League in length upon the Sea, in the Territories of Visapour. It is one of the best Roads in all India, where the Hollanders take in fresh Provisions every time they sail to block up Goa, as also when they are bound upon Trade for many other parts of India. For at Mingrela there is both excellent Water, and excellent Rice. This Town is also very famous for Cardamoms, which the Eastern people esteem the best of Spices, not being to be had in any other Country; which makes that sort of Commodity very scarce and very dear. There is also made great store of coarse Calcuts, that are spent in the Country; besides great quantities of coarse Matting, that serves to pack up goods. So that both in respect of Trade, as also for the furnishing their ships with fresh Provisions, the Hollanders have a Factory in the Town. For, as I said before, not only all Vessels that come from Batavia, from Japon, from Bengala, Ceylan, and other places, and those that are bound for Surat, the Red Sea, Ormus, Balsara, &c. both going and coming, come to an Anchor in the Road of Mingrela, but also while the Hollanders are at Wars with the Portugals, and lye before the Bar of Goa, where they have usually eight or ten Sail, they send their small Barks to Mingrela for Provisions. For the Hollanders lye eight months in a year before the mouth of the Port of Goa so that there can nothing pass in to Goa by Sea all that time. You must also take notice, that the Bar of Goa is also stop't up some part of the year by the Sands which the South and West-winds that precede the great Rains, cast up; so that there is not above a foot, or a foot and half Water for very small Boats. But when the great Rains come, the Water swells and carrying away the Sands, opens a passage for the great Vessels.

CHAP. XIII.

Observations upon the present State of the City of Goa.

GOA lies in 15 Degrees, 32 minutes of Latitude, in an Island six or seven leagues about, upon the River of Mandoua, ten leagues from the mouth of the River. The Island abounds in Corn and Rice, and bears several sorts of Fruit, as Manga's, Anana's, Adam's-Figs, and Coco's. But most certainly a Pippin is far beyond all those fruits. All those that have seen Europe and Asia, agree with me, that the Port of Goa, the Port of Constantinople, and the Port of Toulon, are three of the fairest Ports of all our vast Continent. The City is very large, and the Walls are of good Stone. The Houses are for the most part very magnificently built, especially the Vice-Roy's Palace. There are in it a great number of Apartments, and in one part of the Rooms and Chambers, which are very large hang several Pictures, wherein are severally painted by themselves, the Ships that come from Lisbon to Goa, with those that are bound from Goa to Lisbon, with the name of the Vessel, the Captain, and the number of Guns which the Ship carries. If the City were not so closely environ'd with Hills, it would doubtless be better inhabited, and the air would be much more wholsom. But these Mountains keep off the cool winds, which is the reason that the heats are very excessive. Beef and Pork is the ordinary diet of the Inhabitants of Goa. They have good store of Poultry, and some few Pidgeons; but though Goa be very neer the Sea, Fish is very scarce. They have abundance of all sorts of Sweet-meats, and feed upon them very much.

Before the Hollanders had brought down the power of the Portugals in India there was nothing to be seen at Goa, but Magnificence and Riches: but the Dutch having every where got their Trade out of their hands, they have lost their springs of Gold and Silver, and are fallen from their former splendor. In my first Voyage to Goa I met with people of fashion, that had above two-thousand Crowns Revenue; at my second Voyage the same persons came privately to me in the evening, to beg an Alms; yet abating nothing, for all that of their inherent pride and haughtiness: Nay, their Women will come in Palleks's to the door, and stay while a Boy, that attends them, has brought you a Complement from his Mistress. Then usually you send them what you please, or carry it your self, if you have a curiosity to see their faces; which rarely can be done, because they cover themselves with a veil from head to foot. Moreover, if you go your self to present them your Charity, they will give you a little note, containing a recommendation of some religious Person, who signifies what substantial persons they have been, and how they came to fall to decay. Sometimes, if the person be handsome, she is desir'd to walk in; and to take a Collation, which lasts most commonly till the next day. Had not the Portugals so many Fortresses to keep upon the Land; or had, they not, out of their contempt of the Hollander neglected their affairs, they could never have been reduc'd to so low a condition.

The Portugueses have no sooner made the Cape of Good-Hope, but they are all Fidalgues or Gentlemen; and add the Title of Dom to the single name of Pedro or Jeronimo, which they receiv'd at their Baptism: From whence they are call'd the Fidalgues or Gentlemen of the Cape of Good-Hope. As they change their Names, they also change their Nature; for it may be truly said, that the Indian-Portugals are the most revengeful persons and the most jealous of their Wives of any persons in the World. And when the least suspicion creeps into their noddles, they rid themselves of them either by Poison or Dagger. If they have an enemy, they never pardon him; but if he be a person of that courage that they dare not grapple with him, their persons have attending upon them a sort of black Slaves, that if they command them to kill any one, the Slaves will do it with a blind obedience; which they do either with a Dagger, or a Pistol, or else by knocking the party on the head with a club, which they always carry, about the length of an Half-Pike. If it happen that they stay too long before they can meet with an opportunity portunity ere they can dispatch their mischief; and that they cannot conveniently meet the person to be murder'd, in the Fields or in the City, they are no such Saints, but they will kill him at the very Alter, while he is at his devotions; of which I saw two fatal presidents, the one at Goa, the other at Daman. At Daman three or four of these black Slaves perceiving some persons whom they were to murder, at Mass in the Church, discharg'd their Musquets at them through the windows, never considering what other mischief they might do to any other persons, against whom they had no quarrel or design. The same thing happen'd at Goa, where seven men were kill'd close by the Alter, and the Priest that said Mass was dangerously wounded at the same time. Nor do their Courts of Justice take any cognizance of these crimes, for generally the guilty persons are the chiefest of the Countrey. As for their Suits of Law, there is no end of them, for they are manag'd by the Canarins, who are Natives of the Countrey, whose business it is to follow the Law; the most subtil and crafty sort of people in the World.

To return to the ancient Power of the Portugals in India, most certain it is, that if the Hollanders had never come among them, you should not have seen a bit of Iron in any Portugal Merchant's House; but all Gold or Silver; for they needed no more than to make three or four Voyages to Japan, the Philippin, or Molucca Islands, or to China to enrich themselves; gaining at their return above five or six for one upon rich Merchandizes. The very Souldiers as well as the Captains and Governors enrich'd themselves by Trade. There was not any person, unless it be the Governor, who was not a Trader; or if he does Trade, it is in another man's name, for he has Revenue enough without it. Formerly it was one of the finest employments of the World to be Vice-Roy of Goa: and there are but few Monarchs, that have Governments at their disposal, which are equal in value to some of those which depend upon this Vice-Roy. The chief Command is that of Mozambique for three years. In those three years the Governor gets above four or five hunder'd-thousand Crowns, and sometimes more, if in all that time they receive no losses from the Cafres. These Cafres are people that bring Gold for the Commodities which they carry away; and if any one of them happen to dye, going or coming, whatever you trusted them withall is lost without redemption. The Governour of Mozambique trades also with the Negro's that inhabit all along the Coast of Melinda; and they ordinarily pay for the goods they buy, either in Elephants Teeth, or Ambergreese. When I was last in Goa, the Governour of Mozambique, who return'd to Goa after he had been three years in his Command, had by him only in Ambergreese, two hundred thousand Crowns, not reckoning his Gold, and his Elephants Teeth, which amounted to a far larger sum.

The second Government was that of Malaca, by reason of the Custom which was there to be paid. For it is a Streight through which all Vessels that are bound from Goa, for Japon, China, Cochinchina, Java, Macassar, the Philippin Islands, and many other places, must of necessity pass. They may sail another way by the Island of Sumatra, toward the West, and so through the Streight of Sonde, or else leave the Island of Java to the North; but when the Ships return to Goa, they must shew a discharge from the Custom-House of Malaca, which obliges them to go that way.

The third Government is that of Ormuz, by reason of the great Trade which is there, and the Custom which all Ships are to pay that are bound in and out of the Persian Golf. The Governour of Ormuz exacted great Tolls from those that went to the Island of Bakren to fish for Pearls, for if they did not take a Licence from him, he would sink their Vessels. The Persians at present exact this Custom from the English, who have a small share in that Trade, as I have related in my Persian Voyages. But though they are severe enough to the Merchants, their Customs amount to nothing neer so much as what the Portugueses made of it. The Hollanders are in the same condition at Malaca, not receiving hardly sufficient to pay their Garrison which they keep there.

The fourth Government is that of Moscate, the revenue whereof was very great. For all Vessels that are bound from India, from the Persian Golf, from the Red Sea, and from the Coast of Melinda, must come under the Point of Muscate, where they generally take in fresh Water. If there be any Ships that would not come to an Anchor there, the Governour sent for his Custom, which was four in the hundred; and if they refus'd, the Governour had his Galeasses ready to sink them.

The fifth Government was that of the Island of Ceyland, to which belong'd all those places which the Portugals had, as well upon the Coast of Malabar the Gulf of Bengala, and other parts of India; the worst of which employments was worth ten thousand Crowns per ann.

Besides these five great Governments, which were at the disposal of the Vice-Roy, he had abundance of other Offices in his Gift, as well in Goa, as in other parts of India. The very day that he makes his Entry into Goa, the Captain of his Guards gets above four thousand Crowns. The three Offices of Engineer Major, Visitor of the Forts, and chief Master of the Ordinance, yielded every year twenty thousand Pardo's; every Pardo being worth twenty-seven Sous of our Money. The Portugueses were then all very rich; the Nobility by reason of their Governments and Commands, the Merchants by their Trade, till the English and Hollanders cut them short. When they had Ormuz, they would not let any Merchant pass by Sea into India; so that they were forc'd to go by Land through Candahar. Then, when the Turky, Persian, Arabian, Muscovits, Polonian, and other Merchants arriv'd at Bander-Abassy, they join'd together, and deputed four of the most experienc'd persons among them, to view all the sorts of Commodities, and to understand their quality and price. After they have made their report, they agree upon their price, and fetch away their goods, which are distributed to every one proportionably according to the number of Merchants. It is also the custom of all Asia, that there is nothing sold, but a Broker has a hand in the Bargain. They make good the Money to those that have sold, and receive it from them that buy; and there are some sorts of Commodities upon which there is due to them for Brokage, sometimes one in the Hundred, sometime one and a half, and two.

At that time the Portugueses made great profit, without any loss. For the Vice-Roy took care to preserve them against the Pyrats. Who as soon as the Rains are over, and that it was seasonably to put to Sea, always sent a sufficient convoy to guard the Merchants twenty-five or thirty Leagues to Sea, the Malvares not daring to stir above fifteen or twenty. The Captains of the Galiots, and the Soldiers drive a small Trade also in their Voyages, and in regard they pay no custom, they gain enough to maintain themselves handsomely all the time they lye in Garrison, which is during the Rains. There was also care taken for the advancement of the Soldiery; for every Soldier that came from Portugal, after nine years service, had some Command either by Sea or Land bestow'd upon him; and if he would not accept of it, they gave him leave to Trade as a Merchant. So that if there happen'd to be any person of understanding among them, he could not fail, to raise his fortune, having all the credit he could desire. For there were people enough that being glad to let out their Money, would venture with him at Cent. per Cent. upon his return. If the Vessel be lost, they that lend their Money, lose either their Money or their goods; but if the Ship come safe home, of one they make three or four.

The Natives of the Country, call'd Canarins, are not permitted to bear any Offices among the Portugueses, but only in reference to the Law, that is to say, either as Advocates, or Solicitors, or Scriveners; for they keep them very much under. If one of these Canarins or Blacks, happen to strike a White or European, there is no pardon for him, but he must have his hand cut off. As well the Spaniards as Portugueses, make use of them as Receivers, and to follow their business. And in the Manilla's, or Philippin Islands, there are some of these Blacks so rich, that many of them have offer'd twenty thousand Croisats to the Vice-Roy, for liberty to wear Hose and Shoo's, which they are not permitted to wear. Some of these Blacks have thirty Slaves attending upon them, very richly habited; but only they go barefoot. And had the Portugals permitted them to set out Ships of their own, and to have chosen Captains and other Officers at their own pleasure, the Portugueses would not have made such large, large, at least not so easie Conquests in the Indies. These Blacks are very Couragious and good Soldiers, and several of the Religious Orders have assur'd me, that they will learn more in six months in one of their Colledges, than the Portugal Children in a year, whatever Science you put them to; which is the reason that the Portugals keep them so low. The natural Inhabitants of the Country about Goa, are Idolaters, and worship several sorts of Idols, which they say are the Resemblance of several that have done good works, to whom they ought to give praise by adorning their Portraitsures. There are many of these Idolaters who worship Apes. And therefore in the Island of Salsete, there was a Pagod, where the Idolaters kept in a Chest, like a Tomb, the Bones and Nails of an Ape, which they said had been mighty serviceable to their Ancestors, by bringing news and intelligence to them, when any hostile Princes prosecuted them; for which purpose they would sometimes swim through the very Sea it self. The Indians come from several parts in procession, and make offerings to this Pagod. But the Clergy of Goa, especially the Inquisitors, caus'd the Tomb one day to be taken away, and brought it to Goa, where it remain'd a good while, by reason of the difference which it made between the Ecclesiasticks and the people. For the Idolaters offering a great sum of Money to have their Reliques again, the people were willing to have restor'd them; saying, that the Money would do well upon any occasion of War, or else to relieve the poor. But the Clergy were of a contrary opinion, and maintain'd that such a piece of Idolatry was not to be endur'd upon any account whatsoever. At length the Arch-Bishop and the Inquisitors, by their own Authority, took away the Tomb, and sending it in a Vessel twenty Leagues out to Sea, caus'd it to be thrown to the bottom of the Ocean. They thought to have burn'd it, but the Idolaters would have rak'd up the Ashes again, which would have been but a new food to their Superstition.

There are in Goa abundance of Clergy-men; for besides the Arch-Bishop and his Clergy, there are Dominicans, Austin-Friars, Franciscans, Barefoot Carmelites, Jesuits, and Capuchins, with two Religious Houses, whereof the Austin-Fryars are Directors or Governours. The religious Carmelites, that came last, are the best seated; for though they are somewhat at a distance from the heart of the City, yet they have the advantage of a fine Air, and the most healthy situation in all Goa. It stands upon a rising ground, free to the refreshment of the Wind; and it is very well built, with two Galleries one over the other. The Austin-Fryars, who were the first that came to Goa, were indifferently well seated, at the foot of a little rising ground, their Church also standing upon a rising ground with a fair Piazza before it; but when they had built their Habitation, the Jesuits desir'd them to sell that rising ground, which was then a void place, under pretence of making a Garden in it for the recreation of their Scholars. But after they had purchas'd it, they built a most stately Colledge upon the same ground, which quite stops and choaks up the Austin-Friars Convent, so that they have no Air at all. There happen'd several Contests about this business, but at length the Jesuits got the better. The Jesuits at Goa, are known by the name of Paulists; by reason that their great Church is dedicated to St. Paul. Nor do they wear Hats or Corner-Caps, as in Europe, but only a certain Bonnet, resembling the Skull of a Hat without the Brims; somewhat like the Bonnets which the Grand Siegnors Slaves wear; of which I have given you a description in my relation of Seraglio. They have five Houses in Goa, the Colledg of St. Paul, the Seminary, the Professors House, the Noviciate, and the Good Jesus. The paintings in this House are admirable pieces of Workmanship. In the year 1663 the Colledge was burnt by an accident which happen'd in the night, so that it cost them near sixty thousand Crowns to rebuild it.

The Hospital of Goa was formerly the most famous in all India. For in regard the Revenues thereof ere very great, the sick persons were very carefully look'd after. But since the change of the Governours, there is but very bad accommodation; and several of the Europeans that have been put in, have never come forth again, but in their Coffins. However, they have lately found out a way to save some by frequent Blood-letting. They let Blood sometimes as occasion requires, thirty or forty times, even as often as any ill-blood comes forth; as they did by me one time that I was at Surat. Butter and flesh is very dangerous to them that are sick, and many times cost them their lives. Formerly they made several sorts of well-tasted diet for those that recovered: Now they serve the Patient only with young Beef-broth, and a dish of Rice. Usually the poorer sort that recover their health, complain of drowth, and call for water. But they that look after them, being only Blacks, or Mongrels, a sort of covetous and pittiless people, will not give them a drop, unless they put money in their hands; and to colour their wickedness, they give it them by stealth, pretending what they do to be against the Physician's order. As for Sweet-meats and Preserves, there is no want of them; but they are not a diet which contributes over-much to the restoring of decay'd strength, especially in those hot Countreys where the body requires rather cooling and refreshing nourishment.

I have forgot one thing in reference to their more frequent blood-lettings than among us Europeans. Which is, that to bring their colour again, and to restore them to perfect health, they order the Patient to drink for twelve days together three glasses of Cow's Urine; one in the morning, another at noon, and another at night. But in regard it is a very nauseous sort of drink, the Patient swallows as little as he can, how desirous soever he may be of his health. They learnt this remedy from the Idolaters of the Country; and whether the Patient will take it or no, they never let him stir out of the Hospital, till the twelve days are expired wherein he ought to drink it.

CHAP. XIV.

What the Author did, during his stay at Goa, the last time he went thither in the year 1648.

TWO days before I departed from Mingrela for Goa, I wrote to Monsieur St. Amant, who was Engineer, to send me a Man of War, for fear of the Malvares which are upon the Coast, which he immediately did. I parted from Mingrela the 20th of January 1648, and arriv'd at Goa the 25th. And in regard it was late, I staid till the next morning before I went to visit the Vice-Roy, Don Philip de Mascaregnas, who had formerly been Governor of Ceylan. He made me very welcome, and during the two months that I tarri'd at Goa, he sent to me a Gentleman five or six times, who brought me still to the Powder-House, which was without the City, where he often us'd to be. For he took great delight in levelling Guns, wherein he ask'd my advice, esteeming very much a Pistol very curiously and richly inlaid, which I presented him at my arrival. This Pistol the French-Consul at Aleppo gave me, the fellow of it being unhappily lost: for else the Pair had been presented by the French-Nation to the Basha, who might then have boasted himself the Master of the fairest and best-made pair of Pistols in all Asia. The Vice-Roy admits no person whatever, no not his Children to sit at his Table. But there is a little partition in the Dining-room, where there is a Cloath laid for the Principal Officers, as is usual in the Courts of the German-Princes. The next day I went to wait upon the Arch-Bishop, and the next day after I design'd to have visited the Inquisitor; but I understood by one of his Gentlemen that he was busy, writing into Portugal; there being two Ships ready to weigh Anchor, that only staid for his dispatches. After the Ships were set sail, he sent the same Gentleman to tell me that he expected me at the Inquisition-House, about two or three in the afternoon. I fail'd not to go thither at the time prefix'd. When I came, a Page brought me into a large Hall, where after I had walk'd a quarter of an hour, an Officer came and carri'd me into the Chamber where the Inquisitor was. After I had pass'd through two Galleries, and some Chambers, I enter'd into a little Chamber where the Inquisitor sat at the end of a great Table like a Billiard-Table, which, as well as the Chairs and Stools in the Chamber, was cover'd cover'd with green Cloath, such as is carri'd out of England. He told me I was welcome, and after a Complement or two, he ask'd me what Religion I was of; I answer'd him, of the Protestant Religion. He ask'd me then, if my Father and Mother were of the same Religion; and after I had satisfi'd him that they were so; He told me again I was welcome, calling out at the same Time for some other persons to enter. Thereupon, the Hangings being held up, there came in ten or twelve persons out of another room hard-by. The first of the Train were two Austin-Friars, follow'd by two Dominicans, two barefoot-Carmelites, and some other of the Clergy; whom the Inquisitor told who I was, and assur'd them I had brought no prohibited Books; for indeed, knowing their orders, I had left my Bible at Mingrela. We discours'd about two hours of several things, but particularly of my Travels; the whole Company testifying their desire to hear me make some repetitions. Three days after the Inquisitor sent for me to dine with him at a fair House, about half a league from the City, which belongs to the Bare-foot Carmelites. It is one of the loveliest Structures in all the Indies; and I will tell you in short how the Carmelites came by it. There was a Gentleman in Goa, whose Father and Grandfather had got great Estates by Merchandizing; and he it was that had built this House, which might well have past for a most noble Palace. He had no mind to Marry, but being altogether addicted to his devotions, he very much frequented the Austin-Friars, to whom he shew'd himself so affectionate, that he made his Will, wherein he gave them all his Estate, provided they would bury him on the right-side of the High-Altar where he intended a sumptuous Monument. Now according to the common report, this Gentleman was a Leaper, which some jealous persons endeavour'd to make the World believe, seeing he had given away all his Estate to the Austin-Friars. Thereupon they told him that the ground on the right-hand of the High-Altar was a place only fit for a Vice-Roy; and that a leaprous person was not to be laid there: which was the opinion of the generality of the people, and of a good part of the Austin-Friars themselves. Thereupon some of the Fathers of the Covent coming to speak with the Gentleman, on purpose to perswade him to choose some other place in the Church, he was so offended at the proposal, that he never went more to the Austin-Friars, but always went to perform his devotions among the Carmelites, who receiv'd him with open arms, and accepted the conditions which the other had refus'd. Nor did he live long after he had interested himself with that Order; so that the Carmelites having magnificently buri'd him, enjoy'd all his Estate, with this same House, where we were splendidly entertain'd with Musick all the time of Dinner.

I staid at Goa from the twenty-first of January till the eleventh of March, departing thence that very day in the evening, after I had taken leave of the Vice-Roy. I begg'd leave also of the Vice-Roy for a French-Gentlemen, whose name was Belloy, to go along with me: which was granted me; but through the imprudence of that Gentleman, who did not tell me the reason of his coming to Goa, he had like to have been taken from me again, and it was an even-lay, that we had not been both carri'd to the Inquisition. This Gentleman had left the place of his Nativity to travel over Holland, where having run himself in debt, and finding no person that would lend him any Money, he resolv'd to go for India. Thereupon he list'd himself as a private Souldier upon the accompt of the Holland-Company; and came to Batavia at the same time that the Hollanders made War against the Portuguezes in Ceylan. Being arriv'd, they sent him away among the recruits which were sent into that Island; and the Holland-General seeing such a reinforcement of stout men commanded by a French-Captain, whose name was St. Amant, a person of great courage and experience; he resolv'd to besiege Negombe, a considerable Fort in the Island of Ceylan. They made two assaults wherein the French-men behav'd themselves valiantly, especially St. Amant, and John de Rose, who were both wounded. The General of the Dutch, seeing them to be two such men of courage, made a promise that if Negombe were taken, one of them two should be Governor. The place was taken, and the General kept his word with St. Amant: but the News being carri'd to Batavia, a young Gentleman of kin to the General, and but newly arriv'd out of Holland, obtain'd to be Governour of Negombe, to the prejudice of St. Amant, and came with an order order from the Council at Batavia to displace him. St. Amant incens'd at such ill-usage, inveigles to his Party a matter of fifteen or twenty, most part French-Souldiers, among whom were Monsieur Belloy, Marests, and John de Rose, and revolts to the Portugueses. The Portugals encourag'd by the reinforcement of such a stout, though small number of men, storm'd Negombe again, and took it at the second assault. At that time was Don Philip de Mascaregnas Governor of Ceylan, and all the places belonging to it, under the jurisdiction of the Portugal. He liv'd also at the City of Colombo; and then it was, that having receiv'd Letters from Goa that the Vice-Roy was dead, and that the Council and all the Nobility desir'd him to come and succeed in his place, he resolv'd to see St. Amant and his Companions before his departure, to the end he might bestow upon them some proper reward. So soon as he saw them, he was resolv'd to take them along with him to Goa. Whether it were that he thought he might have better opportunities to advance them there; or that he thought it convenient to have stout men about him, by reason of the Malavares who lay in wait for him with forty Vessels, whereas he had but twenty-two. But they were no sooner come, to make Cape-Comorin, when the winds rose, and such a Tempest follow'd, that the Vessels were dispers'd, and many of them unfortunately cast away. They that were in Don Philip's Vessel did all they could to get to the shoar, but seeing they could not, and that the Ship was ready to split, St. Amant and his Six other Companions threw themselves into the Sea with cords and pieces of planks, and so bestirr'd themselves, that they made a shift not only to save themselves, but Don Philip also. Hereupon Don Philip coming to Goa, after he had made his entrance, gave to St. Amant the Command of Grand Master of the Artillery, and Superintendent General over all the Forts which the Portugueses had in India. He marri'd him also to a young Virgin, with whom he had twenty-thousand Crowns, whose Father was an English-man, who had quitted the Company, and marri'd a Natural Daughter of one of the Vice-Roy's of Goa. As for John de Rose, he desir'd leave of the Vice-Roy to return to Colombo, where, by his favour, he marri'd a young Widow, half Native, half Portuguese, by whom he had a fair fortune. Marests the Vice-Roy made Captain of his Guards, the most considerable Command in all his Court, being oblig'd to Marests for his life, who was the person that bore him upon his shoulders to save him from drowning. Du Belloy desir'd leave that he might go to Macao, which was granted him. For he understood that the greatest part of the Portugal-Gentry, retir'd to that place, after they had got Estates by Merchandizing; that they were very courteous to strangers, and withal extremely addicted to play, which was Du Belloy's chief delight. He liv'd two years at Macao, very much to his content; for when he wanted Money, the Gentry lent it him freely. One day he had won above six-thousand Crowns, but going to play again, he was so unfortunate as to lose it all, besides a good sum of Money which his friends had lent him. Being thus at a loss, and finding that no-body would lend him any more Money, he began to swear against a Picture that hung in the room, which was the Portraiture of some Papistical Saint; saying in his passion that it was an usual thing with them that plaid, that if they saw a Saint Picture hang in their sight, it made them lose; and that if that Picture had not been there he had certainly won. Immediately the Inquisitor was inform'd of this, (for in every City in India under the Jurisdiction of the Portugueses there is one. However his power is limited; having no other authority than to seize the person of him that says or acts any thing against their Religion, to hear the Witnesses, and to send the Offender with the examinations to Goa in the first ship which is bound thither: where the inquisitor-General has an absolute Power either to absolve him, or to put him to death.) Thereupon Du Belloy was put aboard a small Vessel of ten or twelve Guns loaded with Irons: with a strict charge to the Captain to keep him safe, and some threats that he should be answerable for him if he escap'd. But so soon as the Ship was out at Sea, the Captain, who was of a noble disposition, and knew Du Belloy to be of a good Family, took off his Irons, and made him sit at his own Table; giving him also Linnen, and other convenient Apparel necessary for the Voyage, which was to continue forty days. They put into Goa the nineteenth of February 1649; and the Ship was no sooner come into Harbour, but St. Amant came a-board by the Govctnor's order, as well to

to receive his Letters, as to hear what news in China. But his surprize was very great, to see Belloy in that condition, and that the Captain would not let him go, before he had surrender'd him up into the hands of the Inquisitor. Nevertheless, in regard that St. Amant was a person of great credit, he obtain'd of the Captain, that Belloy should go along with him into the City. As for Belloy he immediately and for the nonce shifted himself into his old Cloaths, which were all to tatters and full of Vermin; and St. Amant, who knew there was no dallying with the Inquisition, took that season to present him to the Inquisitor; who seeing a Gentleman in such a sad condition, had some compassion upon him, and allow'd him the whole City for his Prison; on condition he should surrender his body, upon demand, when he understood what was inform'd against him. In the interim St. Amant brings Du Belloy to my Lodging just as I was going to visit the Arch-Bishop of Mira, whom I formerly knew at Constantinople, when he was Prior of the Franciscans at Galata. I desir'd them to stay a while and to dine with me, which they did; after which I proffer'd my House and Table to Du Belloy, who liv'd with me; and for whom I also bought two new Suits of Apparel, and Linnen convenient. However, all the while that I stay'd at Goa, which was ten or twelve days, I could not perswade the Sieur Du Belloy to put on those new Cloaths, not knowing the reason, though he promis'd me every day. But being upon my departure, I told him I was going to take leave of the Vice-Roy; whereupon he desir'd me to procure leave for him also; which I did. We departed toward evening in the same Vessel wherein I came, and about midnight the Sieur Belloy began to shift himself, and when he had done he threw his old raggs into the Sea, swearing against the Inquisition like a mad man; I understanding nothing all this while of the business. When I heard him swear in that manner, I told him we were not yet out of the Portugals hands; neither were he and I with five or six Servants, able to defend our selves against forty Sea-men that belong'd to the Ship. I ask'd him then, why he swore so heartily against the Inquisition; he reply'd, that he would tell me all the circumstances of the Story; which he did, when we came to Mingrela, which was about eight a Clock in the morning. When we landed we met certain Hollanders with the Commander, who were eating Oysters and drinking Sack upon the Shoar. Immediately they ask'd me who that person was with me. I told them it was a Gentleman who attending the French Ambassador into Portugal, had taken Shipping there for India, together with four or five more whom he had left at Goa; but that neither the situation of the place, nor the humour of the Portugals pleasing him, he had desir'd my assistance in his return for Europe. Three or four days after, I bought him an Oxe to carry him to Surat; and I gave him a Servant to assist him, together with a Letter to Father Zenon, a Capuchin, wherein I desir'd him to speak to my Broker to pay him ten Crowns a month for his subsistence, and to desire of the English President to embark him for Europe with the first opportunity. But it fell out contrary to my Intentions; for Father Zenon carri'd him back again along with him to Goa, where he had some business to do for Father Ephraim his Companion; of whom I shall speak in the next Chapter. Father Zenon without doubt believ'd, that Du Belloy making his appearance to the Inquisition, and desiring his pardon might have easily obtain'd it. 'Tis very true he did obtain it, but it was after he had been two years in the Inquisition, from which he was not discharg'd but with a sulphur'd Shirt, with a St. Andrews Cross upon his Stomack. There was with him another Gentleman, call'd Lewis de Bar upon the Seine, who was us'd in the same manner; and they always put them to accompany those who were put to death. The Sieur Du Belloy did very ill to return to Goa, and worse to appear afterwards again at Mingrela, where the Hollanders, who understanding he had formerly revolted out of their service, by the intelligence they receiv'd from their Commander at Surat, seiz'd his person, and sent him away in a Ship that was going for Batavia. They pretended that they sent him to the General of the Company, to do with him as he should think fitting. But I am in part assur'd, that as soon as the Vessel was out at Sea, they put the poor Gentleman into a Sack, and threw him into the Sea. This was the end of the Sieur Du Belloy.

As for Sieur des Marests, he was a Gentleman, born in the Dauphinate, near to Loriot, who having kill'd his adversary in a Duel, fled into Poland, where he so far signaliz'd himself, that he won the esteem and affection of the General of the Polonian Army. At that time the Grand Seignior kept in the prison of the Seven Towers at Constantinople, two Noble Polonians; whereupon the Polonian General observing the courage and address of this Des Marests, who was a daring Fellow, and a good Engineer besides, made a proposal to him, to go to Constantinople, and to endeavour, if he could by any means in the world, to set those princes at liberty. Des Marests willingly accepted the employment, and without doubt he had succeeded in his design, had he not been discovered by some Turks, who accus'd him for having been too circumspect in viewing the seven Towers, seeing him with a Chalk Pencil in his hand, ready to take the draught thereof, which seem'd to tend to no good design. This had been enough to have ruin'd the Gentleman, had not Monsieur de Ceszy, the French Ambassadour still'd the further examination of the business by some Present; which in Turky is the most sovereign remedy upon all accidents of danger; telling the Visier, that he was only a French Gentleman that travel'd for his pleasure, and one that was going for Persia with the first opportunity. However it was not Marests design at that time to go very far, for he intended to have return'd into Poland, so soon as he had us'd his utmost indeavours to set the Princes at liberty; but for his own safety it behov'd him to give it out that he was gone to Persia; and at length he was constrain'd to go thither indeed. As for the Grand Seignior, he had resolv'd never to set the two Noblemen at liberty. But at length they were so fortunate as to gain the love of a young Turk, who was the Son of the Captain of the Seven Towers; with whom the Father usually trusted the Keys to open and shut the Gates of the Prison. The night appointed for their flight, he made as if he had shut some doors, the Padlocks whereof he left all open. But he durst not do so by the two first Gates, near one of which the Captain with a strong Guard lay, for fear of being discover'd. The young man, who had entirely devoted himself to serve the Princes, having foreseen this difficulty before, had bethought himself of Rope-Ladders to get over the two Walls; to which purpose it was necessary to have a correspondence within and without. Finding therefore that because the utmost of severity was not us'd toward those Princes, they had the liberty to receive several Dishes of Meat from the French Ambassadors Kitchen, the Clerk of the Kitchen was made of the plot, who thereupon sent them in several Cords in Pasties, whereof they made Ladders. The business succeeded so well, that the escape was made, and the young Turk fled with the Polonian Lords into Poland, where he turn'd Christian, and receiv'd ample rewards both in Employments and Money. The same gratitude proportionably was observed toward those who had contributed toward the liberty of the Princes, who amply acknowledg'd the services which they had receiv'd from every one of them.

In the mean time the Sieur Des Marests arrives at Ispahan, and addressing himself to the Capuchin Fryars, they brought him to my Lodging, where he had the freedom of my Table, and a Chamber. He staid some time at Ispahan, during which he got acquainted with the English and Hollanders, who had a great esteem for him, finding him to be a person of merit. But it happen'd one day, that his curiosity putting him upon a bold attempt, had like to have been the ruine of him and all the Franks in Ispahan. Never the Inn where we lodg'd there was a large Bath, where the men and women by turns take their times to come and bath themselves; and where the Queen of Visapour, during her stay at Ispahan, as she return'd home to Mecca, delighted to go and prattle with the French mens wives. The Sieur Des Marests having a passionate desire to see what the women did, satisfi'd his curiosity, by means of a cranny in the Arch of the Vault, which he had observed when he went thither; for having found out a way without side to get up to that Arch, through a blind hole that was next to the Inn where he lay, the Arch being flat, as I have describ'd them in my relations of Persia, and the Seraglio, he laid himself upon his belly, and saw throtgh the cranny what he so much long'd to behold. He was at this sport some ten or twelve times; and not being able to contain himself, he told me one day what he had done: I bid him have a care of going there any more, for fear of ruining himself and all the French men in that City. But he contrary to my advice went thither two or three times after that, till at length he was discover'd by one of the women of the Bath that took care of the Linnen, and dry them without, upon Perches as high as the top of the Arch, to which they get up by a little Ladder. The woman seeing a man lying all along upon his belly, seiz'd upon his Hat, and began to cry out. But Marests, to get himself out of the mire, and to hinder the woman from making more noise, put two Tomans, into her hand. When he return'd to the Inn, I perceiv'd him to look as if he had been scar'd, and conjecturing that some ill accident had befall'n him, I press'd him to confess what was the matter. He was loath at first, but at length he confess'd how he had been discover'd by a woman, and how he had stop'd her mouth with money. Thereupon I told him, that there was a necessity for him to fly, for that the danger was far greater than he imagin'd. The Dutch President also, to whom I thought it convenient to tell what had pass'd, was of the same opinion; upon which we gave him a Mule, and as much money as was necessary for him, ordering him to go to Bander, and thence by Sea to Surat. I gave him a Letter of Recommendation to the English President, who was my Friend; whom I also desir'd to let him have two hundred Crowns, if he had occasion for them. I wrote very much in his commendation; and mention'd the proffer which the Dutch President at Ispahan had made him, to send him with Letters to the General, who would not fail to employ him according to his merit. For indeed at that time that the Hollanders had War with the Portugueses in Ceylan, any person of wit, and courage, like the Sieur Des Marests, was very acceptable to them. Which made them very earnest with him, to take an employment among them; and to that end, they caress'd him, and presented him very nobly during his stay at Ispahan. But he told them, that not being of their Religion, he was unwilling to serve them against the Portugueses; which was the only reason that hinder'd him from accepting the offers which I had made him. These particulars I wrote in his behalf to the English President at Surat; so that the Sieur Des Marests being desirous to go to Goa to serve the Portugals, the President wrote in his behalf to the Vice-Roy, by whom he was very much belov'd, relating to him, besides, what the Hollanders had proffer'd him, that his recommendation might be the more acceptable. Thereupon the Vice-Roy made him very welcome; and upon the Sieur Marests desire to be employ'd in Ceylan in the Portugal Army, he sent him away with the first opportunity, with Letters of Recommendation to Don Philip de Mascaregnas, who was then Governour of Ceylan, and all those places that belong'd to it under the jurisdiction of the Portugueses. It happen'd three days after, that they lost Nagombe, and when they retook it, the Sieur Marests was one of those that receiv'd most wounds, and won most honour in the Assaults. He it was that afterwards was most instrumental in saving Don Philip from being drown'd; so that when Don Philip came to be Vice-Roy of Goa, he could not think he deserv'd a less reward than the Command of his Guards; in which employment he dy'd within three or four Months. He was very much lamented by the Vice-Roy, by whom he was entirely belov'd. But he left his Estate to a Priest, with whom he had contracted a particular friendship; upon condition that he should only pay me two hundred and fifty Crowns that I had lent him; which however I had much ado to get out of the Priest's Clutches.

While I stay'd at Goa, I was told a pretty story concerning a Caravel, or Portugal Vessel, which arriv'd there but a little before, and came from Lisbon. When she was about to make the Cape of good Hope, there happen'd such a violent Tempest, as lasted five or six hours, and put the Marriners to such a nonplus, that they knew not where they were. At length they fell into a Bay, where they saw several Inhabitants; and as soon as they came to an Anchor, they beheld the shore cover'd with men, women, and children, that testify'd a strange amazement to see white people, and such kind of people as the Caravel. The mischief was, that they could not understand one another, but by signs. But after the Portugals had giv'n those Cafres Tobacco, Bisket, and Water, the next day the people brought them a great quantity of young Ostriches, and other

Fowl that seem'd to resemble large Geese, but so fat, that they had very little lean. The Feathers of those Birds were very lovely, and those upon the Belley proper for Beds. One of the Portugueses Mariners told me a large Cushion stuff'd with those Feathers, and related to me what had happen'd to them in that Bay, where they stay'd seven and twenty days. They gave those Cafres one thing or other every foot, as Knives, Axes, false Coral, and false Pearls, out of hopes to have discover'd some Trade, and particularly whether they had any Gold; for they observ'd that some of them wore pieces of Gold in their Ears; some beaten thin upon one side, and others like the Nails of a Lock. They brought two of the people to Goa; and I saw one of them that wore several of those pieces of Gold in several parts of each Ear. The Mariner told me, that there were some of their women that wore of those pieces of Gold under their Chins, and in their Nostrials. Eight or nine days after the Portugals arriv'd in that Bay, those Cafres brought them little pieces of Ambergreese, some Gold, but very little; some Elephants teeth, but very small; some Ostriches, and other Birds, some Venison; but for Fish there was abundance. The Portugals endeavour'd all they could by signs to know where they found the Ambergreese, for it was very good. The Vice-Roy shew'd me a piece that weigh'd not above half an Ounce, but he assur'd me withall that he had never seen so good. They also labour'd to discover where they had the Gold. After the Elephants teeth they made no great enquiry seeing a great number of Elephants that came to drink at a River that threw it self into the Bay. At length after they had stay'd three weeks, the Portugals finding it impossible for them to discover any thing more, because they understood not one another, resolv'd to set sail with the first wind. And because they had always some of these Cafres aboard in regard they were very liberal of their Tobacco, Bisket, and strong Water, they thought good to bring two of them along in the Vessel; in hopes that they might learn the Portuguese Language, or that there might some Child be found out that might understand what they said. The Mariners told me, that when they set sail, after the Cafres saw that they had carri'd two of their people away, who perhaps were no inconsiderable persons, they tore their Hair, struck their Breasts, as if they had been frantick, and set up a most horrible yelling and howling. When they were brought to Goa, they could never be brought to learn any thing of the Portugal Language. So that they could get out of them nothing of that further discovery at which they aim'd, of a Country from whence they only brought away two pound of Gold, three pound of Ambergreese, and thirty-five or forty Elephants teeth. One of the Cafres liv'd but six months, the other fifteen; but both languish'd and pin'd to death for grief to be so trappann'd.

From Goa I pass'd to Mingrela, where there fell out an accident not to be forgotten. An Idolater dying, and the Fire being ready prepar'd for the burning of the Body, his Wife who had no Children, by the permission of the Governour, came to the Fire, and stood among the Priests and her Kindred, to be burnt with the Body of her deceas'd Husband. As they were taking three turns, according to custom, about the place where the Fire was kindl'd, there fell of a sudden so violent a Shower, that the Priests willing to get out of the rain, thrust the Woman all along into the Fire. But the Shower was so vehement, and endur'd so long a while, that the Fire was quench'd, and the Woman was not burn'd. About midnight she arose, and went and knock'd at the door of one of her Kinsmens Houses, where Father Zenon and many Hollanders saw her, looking so gaffly and grimly, that it was enough to have scar'd them; however the pain that she endur'd did not so far terrifie her, but that three days after accompany'd by her Kindred, she went and was burn'd according to her first intention.

CHAP. XV.

The Story of Father Ephraim, and how he was put into the Inquisition at Goa by a surprisal.

THE Chek, who had marri'd the Eldest of the Princesses of Golconda, not being able to perswade Father Ephraim to stay at Bagnabar, where he promis'd to build him an House and a Church, gave him an Ox and two men to carry him to Maslipatan, where he staid to embark for Pegu, according to the order of his Superiors. But finding no Vessel ready to set sail, the English drew him to Madrespatan, where they have a Fort call'd St. George, and a general Factory for every thing that concerns the Countreys of Golconda, Pegu and Bengala. They over-perswaded him that he might reap a fairer Harvest in this place, than in any other part of the Indies; to which end they presently built him a very neat House, and a Church. But in the conclusion, the English sought not so much the interest of Father Ephraim, as their own. For Madrespatan is but half a league from St. Thomas, a Sea-Town upon the Coast of Cormandel, indifferently well-built, as formerly belonging to the Portugals. In that place there was a very great Trade, especially for Calicuts, and a very great number of Merchants and Workmen liv'd there, the greatest part whereof desir'd to inhabit at Madrespatan with the English, but that there was no place for them to exercise their Religion in that place. But when the English had built a Church, and perswaded Father Ephraim to stay, many of the Portugueses quitted St. Thomas, by reason of the frequent Preaching of Father Ephraim, and his great care as well of the Natives, as of the Portugals. Father Ephraim was born at Anxerre, the Brother of Monsieur Chateau de Boys, Councillor of the Parliament of Paris; who was very happy in learning Languages, so that in a little time he spoke English and Portuguez perfectly well. But now the Clergy of St. Thomas-Church seeing Father Ephraim in so high a reputation, and that he drew the greatest part of their Congregation to Madrespatan, were so enrag'd against him that they resolv'd to ruine him. And thus they laid their plot. The English and Portugueses being neer-neighbours, could not choose but have several quarrels one among another, and still Father Ephraim was applid to for the composing their differences. Now one day it happen'd, that the Portugueses quarrell'd on purpose with some English Mariners that were in St. Thomas-Road, and the English came by the worst. The English President resolving to have satisfaction for the injury, a War broke out between the two Nations: which had ruin'd all the Trade of that Country, had not the Merchants on both sides been very diligent to bring things to an accommodation: not knowing any thing of the wicked contrivance of particular persons against Father Ephraim. But all the interposition of the Merchants avail'd nothing: the Friar must be concern'd in the affair, he must be the Mediator to act between party and party, which he readily accepted. But he was no sooner enter'd into St. Thomas, but he was seiz'd by ten or twelve Officers of the Inquisition, who shipp'd him away in a Frigate that was bound at the same time for Goa. They fetter'd and manac'l'd him, and kept him two and twenty days at Sea, before they would let him once put his foot a-shore: though the best part of the Mariners lay a-shoar every night. When they came to Goa, they staid till night before they would land Father Ephraim, to carry him to the Inquisition-House. For they were afraid, lest if they should land him in the day, the people should know of it, and rise in the rescue of a person, who was in an high veneration over all India. The news was presently spread abroad in all parts, that Father Ephraim was in the Inquisition, which very much amaz'd all the French-men. But he that was most surpriz'd, and most troubl'd at it was Friar Zenon, the Capuchin, who had been formerly Father Ephraim's Companion; who after he had consulted his friends, resolv'd to go to Goa, though he were put into the Inquisition himself. For when a man is once shut up there, if any one have the boldness to speak to the Inquisitor, or to any of his Council in his behalf, he is presently put into the Inquisition also also, and accounted a greater Offender than the other. Neither the Arch Bishop nor the Vice-Roy themselves dare interpose; though they are the only two persons over whom the Inquisition has no power. For if they do any thing to offend them, they presently write to the Inquisitor and his Council in Portugal, and as the King and the Inquisitor-General commands, they either proceed against, or send those two great persons into Portugal.

Notwithstanding all these considerations, Father Zenon, taking along with him the Sieur de la Boulay, a decay'd Gentleman, goes to Goa; where, when he arriv'd, he was visited by some friends, who advise him to have a care not to open his mouth in the behalf of Father Ephraim, unless he intended to bear him company in the Inquisition. Father Zenon seeing he could do nothing at Goa, advis'd the Sieur de Boulay to return to Surat: and goes himself directly to Madrespatan, more particularly to inform himself concerning the reason of Father Ephraim's being sent away. But when he understood how he had been betray'd at St. Thomas, he resolv'd to have satisfaction, and without acquainting the English-President, communicates his design to the Captain that commanded in the Fort: Who being inclin'd, as were all the Souldiers, at the injury done Father Ephraim, not only approv'd, but also promis'd Father Zenon to assist him in his design. Thereupon the Father sets his spies; and understanding by them, that the Governor of St. Thomas went every Saturday-morning, early to a Chappel upon a Mountain half a league from the City, dedicated to the Virgin-Mary, he causes three Iron-Bars to be fix'd in the window of a little Chamber in the Covert with two good locks to the door, and as many padlocks. And having so done, he goes to the Governor of the Fort, who was an Irish-man, and a very stout person; who with thirty Souldiers, and Father Zenon, issu'd out of the Fort about midnight, and hid themselves till day near the Chappel, in a part of the Mountain, where they could not be discover'd. The Governor of St. Thomas came exactly, according to his custom, a little after Sun-rising; and as soon as ever he alighted from his Pallesquin, was immediately surpriz'd by the Ambuscade, and carri'd to Maslipatan, into the Chamber in the Covert which the Friar had provided for him. The Governor thus surpriz'd, made great protestations against Father Zenon, and threaten'd him with what the King would do when he should come to hear what he had practis'd against the Governor of one of his Garrisons. To which Father Zenon said no more, but only that he believ'd that he was better us'd at Madrespatan, than Father Ephraim was us'd at the Inquisition at Goa, whither he had sent him: That if he would obtain liberty for Father Ephraim to return, he would leave him in the same place where they had seiz'd his person, with as much Justice, as he had to send Father Ephraim to Goa. Many people came to the English President, desiring him to use his authority for the Governor's liberty. But his answer was, that the Governor was not in his jurisdiction, neither could he compel Father Zenon to release him, who had been one of the Authors of the injury which had been done his Companion. So that he contented himself only to desire of Father Zenon that his Prisoner might dine at his Table in the Fort, promising him to return him when he should require his body; a request which he easily obtain'd, but could not so easily keep his word. For the Drummer of the Garrison being a French-man, with a Merchant of Marseilles, call'd Roboli, then in the Fort, two days after came to the Governor, and promis'd him, for a good reward, to procure his escape. The agreement being made, the Drummer in the morning beat the Reveille sooner than he was wont to do, and lowder, while Roboli and the Governor let themselves down at a corner of a Bastion that was not very high; and were presently as nimbly follow'd by the Drummer; so that Madrespatan and St. Thomas being but half a league asunder, they were all three in the Town before their escape was known. The whole City greatly rejoyc'd at the return of their Governor, and immediately dispatch'd away a Barque to Goa to carry the news. The Drummer also and the Merchant set sail at the same time, and when they came to Goa with Letters of recommendation in their behalf, there was no House or Covert which did not make them Presents: The Vice-Roy also himself caref'd them extremely, and took them into his own Ship to have carri'd them into Portugal along with him; but both he and the two French-men dy'd at Sea.

Never

Never did any Vice-Roy depart from Goa so rich as Don Philippo de Mascaregnas; for he had a great parcel of Diamonds, all large stones, from ten Carats to forty. He shew'd me two when I was at Goa, one whereof weigh'd 57 Carats, the other 67 and an half; clean Stones, of an excellent water, and cut after the Indian manner. The report was that the Vice-Roy was poison'd in the Ship, and that it was a just punishment of Heaven, for that he had poison'd several others, especially when he was Governor of Ceylan. He had always most exquisite poisons by him, to make use of when his revenge requir'd it: for which reason, having rais'd himself many enemies, one morning he was found hung in Effigie in Goa; when I was there in the year 1648.

In the mean time, the Imprisonment of Father Ephraim made a great noise in Europe; Monsieur de Chasteau des Bois, his Brother complain'd to the Portugal Embassadour, who presently wrote to the King his Master to send a positive command by the first Ships, that Father Ephraim should be discharg'd. The Pope also wrote, declaring that he would excommunicate all the Clergy of Goa, if they did not set him at liberty. But all this signify'd nothing. So that Father Ephraim was beholding for his liberty to none but the King of Golconda, who had a love for him, and would have had him have staid at Bagnagar. For the King was then at Wars with the Raja of Carnatica, and his Army lay round about St. Thomas's. Hearing therefore what a base trick the Portuguezes had plaid with Father Ephraim, he sent orders to his General Mirgimola to lay siege to the Town, and put all to Fire and Sword, unless the Governor would make him a firm promise that Father Ephraim should be set at liberty in two months. A Copy of this Order was sent to the Governor, which so alarm'd the Town, that they dispatch'd away Barque after Barque to press the Vice-Roy to use his endeavours for the release of Father Ephraim. Thereupon he was releas'd; but though the door were set open, he would not stir, till all the Religious Persons in Goa came in procession to fetch him out. When he was at liberty he spent 15 days in the Covent of the Capuchins. I have heard Father Ephraim say several times, that nothing troubl'd him so much all the while of his imprisonment, as to see the ignorance of the Inquisitor and his Council, when they put him any question: and that he did not believe that any one of them had ever read the Scripture. They laid him in the same Chamber, with a Maltese, who never spake two words without a desperate oath; and took Tobacco all day, and a good part of the night, which was very offensive to Father Ephraim.

When the Inquisitors seize upon any person, they search him presently; and as for his Goods and wearing-Apparel, it is set down in an Inventory, to be return'd him again in case he be acquitted; but if he have any Gold, Silver, or Jewels, that is never set down; but is carri'd to the Inquisitor to defray the expences of the Process. They search'd the Reverend Father Ephraim, but found nothing in his Cloak-pockets, unless it were a Comb, an Inkhorn, and two or three Handkerchiefs. But forgetting to search the little Pockets which the Capuchins carry in their sleeves toward their armpits, they left him four or five black-lead pens. These Pencils did him a great kindness. For the Maltese calling for such a deal of Tobacco, which is always cut and ti'd up in white-paper, for the profit of the seller, who weighs both Tobacco and Paper together: these Papers Father Ephraim kept very charily, and with his pencil wrote therein whatever he had studi'd at any time: though he lost the sight of one of his eyes, through the darkness of the Chamber, which had but one window, half a foot square, and barr'd with iron. They would never so much as lend him a Book, or let him have an end of Candle; but us'd him as bad as a certain Miscreant that had been twice let out already with his Shirt sulphur'd, and at St. Andrews-Cross upon his stomach, in company with those that are lead to the Gallows, and was then come in again.

Father Ephraim having staid 15 days in the Covent of the Capuchins to recover his strength after 20 months imprisonment, return'd for Madrespatan, and passing through Golconda, went to return his humble thanks to the King of Golconda and his Son-in-law, who had so highly interest'd themselves for his liberty. The King importun'd him again to stay at Bagnagar, but seeing him resolv'd to return to his Covent at Madrespatan, they gave him as before, an Oxe, two Servants, and Money for his journey.

CHAP. XVI.

The Road from Goa to Maslipatan through Cochin, here describ'd in the story of the taking of that City by the Hollanders.

After the Dutch had dispossest the Portugals of whatever they had in Ceylan, they cast their eyes upon Cochin, in the Territories whereof grows the Bastard Cinnamon, which hinder'd the utterance of Ceylan Cinnamon. For the Merchants seeing that the Hollanders kept up their Cinnamon so dear, bought up that of Cochin, which they had very cheap; and that coming into request, was transported to Gomron, and distributed there among the Merchants that came from Persia from Tartary, from Moscovia, from Georgia, Mingrela, and all the places from the black Sea. It was also carried away in great quantities by the Merchants of Balsara and Bagdat, who furnish Arabia; as also by the Merchants of Mesopotamia, Anatolia, Constantinople, Romania, Hungary, and Poland. For in all those Countries, they use it either whole or beaten in most of their meats, to heighten the taste thereof.

The Army which was commanded out of Batavia for the Siege of Cochin, landed at a place call'd Belli-Porto; where the Hollanders had a Fort made of Palm-Trees. It is near to Cranganor, a small City which the Hollanders took the year before; not being able to take Cochin then, though they had made some attempts upon it. So soon as the Army landed, they march'd within Cannon-shot of the City, there being a River between them and the City. That part where the Hollanders encamp'd, is call'd Belle-Epine, where after they had fortifi'd themselves, as well as the Nature of the place would permit, they rais'd some Batteries, which could not much annoy the City, by reason of the distance. They lay there till they had recruits of more men; for they had but three Ships full, though he that commanded them were one of the bravest Captains of his time. Some few days after, the Governour of Amboyna arriv'd with two Ships more, and afterwards a Dutch Captain brought a great number of Chinglas, who are the Natives of the Island of Ceylan. For the Forces of the Hollanders would not be so considerable as they are, did they not make use of the Natives of the Country to fill up the Companies which they bring out of Europe. The Natives of Ceylan, are good for digging Trenches, and raising Batteries, but for a Storm they signifie little. Those of Amboyna are good Soldiers, four hundred of which were left at Belle-Epine. The Body of the Army took Shipping again, and landed near to Cochin, not far from a Church dedicated to St. Andrew; where the Portugals, with certain Malavares, seem'd to have stay'd ashore for the Hollanders coming: But seeing the Enemy to land with so much resolution, they only gave them one Volly and retreated. In their March the Hollanders descry'd certain Companies of Portugueses near the Sea-shore, others somewhat farther up in the Land, in a Church call'd St. Johns. Thereupon they sent out some Horsemen to discover their number; but the Portugals still retreated, after they had set fire to the Church. Thereupon the Hollanders made their approaches to the Town; and after they had belieg'd it for some time, a French Soldier, who was under their pay, seeing a Pannier ty'd at the end of a Cord, hanging over one of the Bastions, ventur'd notwithstanding all the Bullets that flew about his Ears, to see what was in it. But he was strangely surpriz'd, to find nothing but a languishing Infant, which the Mother had hung there, that she might not see it perish for hunger. The Soldier mov'd to compassion, took the Infant and gave it such as he had to eat; at which the Dutch General was so incens'd, saying that the Soldier should have let the Infant perish, that he call'd a Council of War, where he would have had the Soldier run the Gauntlet, which was very cruel; but the Council moderating the sentence, condemn'd him only to the Strappado.

The same day ten Soldiers out of every Company were commanded to go to one of the Houses of the King of Cochin; but they found no body there, having having plunder'd it the year before. At which time the Hollanders slew four Kings of the Country, and six hundred Blacks; nor did there escape but only one ancient Queen, who was taken alive by a common Soldier, call'd Vau Rex, whom the Commander of the Army made a Captain immediately, for his reward. They left one Company in that House; but the Queen stay'd there but six days, for they gave her into the custody of Savarin, one of the most potent of the petty Kings upon that Coast, to whom the Hollanders had promis'd to give the City of Cranganor, if they took Cochin, provided he would be faithful to them.

Six weeks pass'd ere any thing considerable was done; but then the Hollanders, storming the Town by night, were repuls'd, and lost abundance of men, slain and taken Prisoners, through the Governour of Cranganor's fault, who commanded them, and was drunk when the assault was made. Two months after, the General of the Hollanders resolv'd to make another assault in the same place; and because he would not want men, he sent for those that lay upon the side of Belle-epine. But by misfortune the Frigate struck upon the Sands, and splitting, abundance of the Soldiers were drown'd. They that could swim, got to land near Cochin, not finding any other place convenient, and were all taken Prisoners by the Portugals, being not above ten in all, Soldiers and Mariners. The General however would not give over the assault, but causing the Sea-men to land, he arm'd some with half-Pikes, others with Swords, to others he gave hand-Granadoes, and about ten a Clock in the morning he began the assault, with four Companies, consisting each of a hundred and fifty men. The Hollanders lost abundance of men in this last assault, and so did the Portugueses, for they defended themselves stoutly, being seconded by two hundred Soldiers, who were all Dutch-men, tho they sided with the Portugueses, because their Countrymen had abated them six months and a half pay for the loss of Touan. Without the assistance of these Soldiers, the City had never held out two months, there being among them one of the best Dutch Engineers of his time, who had left his Countrymen by reason of their ill usage of him.

At length the Hollanders having enter'd the Town toward evening, on Calivete side, and being Masters of the chief Bulwark, the Portugals came to a Capitulation, and the City was surrender'd. The Portugals by their Articles march'd out of Cochin with their Arms and Baggage; but when they came out of the City where the Hollanders were drawn up in Battalia, they were all forc'd to quit their Arms, and to lay them at the Generals feet; except the Officers, who kept their Swords. The General had promis'd the Soldiers the Pillage of the Town, but not being able to keep his word, for several plausible reasons which he told, he promis'd them six months pay, which in a few days after was reduc'd to eight Roupies a man. Samarin also demanded of him the City of Cranganor, according to his promise; which the General made good; but he caus'd all the Fortifications to be slighted first, and left Samarin nothing but the bare Walls. For being of a very mean Extraction, he was naturally as cruel and barbarous in his disposition. One time the Souldiers being so put to it for four days together, that they could get no food for money, two of them had somewhere taken a Cow and kill'd her; for which the General, when he came to know of it, caus'd one of them to be hang'd immediately, and had order'd the other to have run the Gauntlet, had not King Perca interceded for him.

King Perca, was a petty King of that Countrey, with whom the General was then in Treaty; and the Treaty being at length concluded, the General muster'd all his Land and Sea-men, to the number of about six thousand men. A few days after, he sent some Companies to besiege the City of Cananor, which surrender'd without any resistance. When they return'd, the General caus'd a Crown to be made for the new King of Cochin, the other being expell'd his Countrey. And upon the day which he had appointed for this most solemn Coronation, the General sat upon a kind of a Throne, at the foot whereof, a Malavare or Pirat, being led thither between three Captains of each side, fell upon his knees to receive the Crown from the Generals hand, and to do homage for a petty Kingdom, that is to say, the little City of Cochin and its Territories, which were very small. The King and the King-maker were both alike: For no doubt it could not but be a pleasant sight, to see a Hollander, that had been only the Cook of a Ship, crowning a miserable Pirat with those hands that had oft'ner handled a Ladle than a Sword.

In the mean time the Ships that carried the Inhabitants of Cochin to Goa, return'd laden with the spoils of those distressed people; for contrary to the Articles of Capitulation, the Hollanders were no sooner out at Sea, but they took from those poor Creatures whatever they had, rifling both men and women, without any regard to sex or modesty.

The General being return'd into Batavia, they sent a Governour to Cochin, who to make the place the stronger, demolish'd a great part of the City. But this Governour us'd the greatest rigor imaginable, even toward the Souldiers; he shut them up in the City as if they had been in a Prison; nor could they drink either Wine, or Sury, or Strong-water, by reason of the great Imposts which he laid upon them. (Sury is a drink which flows from the Palm-trees.) So that when the Portugueses kept Cochin, men might live better for five or six Sous, than under the Hollander for ten. This Governour was so severe, that he would banish a man for the smallest fault in the world, to the Island of Ceylan, to a place where they made Brick, sometimes for five or or six years, sometimes as long as the party liv'd. For it is oftentimes observ'd, that when any one is banish'd thither, though the sentence be only for a term of years, yet the Exile never obtains his freedom afterwards.

CHAP. XVII.

The Passage by Sea from Ormus to Massipatan.

I Departed from Gomron to Massipatan the eleventh of May, 1652, and went aboard a great Vessel of the King of Golconda's, which is bound every year from Persia, laden with fine Calicuts, Chites, or Calicuts painted with a Pencil, which makes them much more beautiful and dearer than those which are printed. The Holland Company are wont to allow to those Vessels which belong to any of the Kings or Princes of India, a Pilot, and two or three Gunners; neither the Indians nor Persians being expert in Navigation. In the Vessel where I was aboard there were but six Dutch Mariners at most, but above a hundred Natives. We sailed out of the Persian Golf, with a pleasing and favorable Gale; but we had not sail'd very far before we found the Sea very rough, and the Winds at South-West, so violent, though full in our Stern, that we were not able to carry out more than one small Sail. The next day, and for some days after, the Wind grew more violent, and the Sea more boist'rous; so that being in the sixteenth Degree, which is the elevation of Goa, the Rain, the Thunder, and Lightning, render'd the Tempest the more terrible; insomuch that we could not carry out any other than our top-sail, and that half furl'd. We pass'd by the Maldives Islands, but were not able to discern them, besides that the Ship had taken in very much water in the Hold. For the Ship had lain five months in the Road of Gomron, where if the Mariners are not very careful to wash the Planks that lye out of the water, they will be apt to gape, which causes the Ship to leak when she is loaden. For which reason the Hollanders wash the outside of their Ships morning and evening. We had in our Vessel five and fifty Horses, which the King of Persia had sent as a Present to the King of Golconda, and about a hundred Merchants, Persians and Armenians together, who were Traders to India. One whole day and night together there rose a cross Wind, so violent, that the Water rowl'd in from Stern to Stern, and the mischief was, that our Pumps were nought. By good fortune there was a Merchant that had two Bails of Russia Leather, besides four or five Sadlers that knew how to sow the Skins, who were very serviceable as well to

to the whole Ship as to themselves. For they made great Buckets of the Skins, four Skins to a Bucket, which being let down from the Masts with Pullies, through certain great Holes which were cut in the Deck, drew up a vast quantity of Water. The same day the violence of the Tempest continuing, there fell three Thunderbolts into the Ship. The first fell upon the Boltsprit, and split it quite in two; and running along upon the Deck, kill'd three men. The second fell two hours after, and kill'd two men, shooting along as the other did from Head to Stern. The third follow'd presently after, the Master, the Masters Mate, and my self standing together near the main Mask. At what time the Cook coming to ask the Master whether he should take up the Victuals, the Thunderbolt took him in the lower part of his Belly, made a little hole, and took off all the Hair as clean as they dress a Pig with hot water and Rosin, without doing him any more harm. Only when they came to anoint the little hole with Oil of Coco's he roar'd out through the sharpness of the pain which he endur'd.

The twenty-fourth of June in the morning, we discover'd Land; and making toward it, we found our selves before Ponte de Galle, the first Town in the Island of Ceylan, which the Hollanders had taken from the Portugals. From thence to the Road of Maslipatan we had very good weather; where we arriv'd the second of July, an hour or two after Sun-set. There I went ashore, and was most civilly treated by the Dutch President, and Merchants, as also by the English.

The eighteenth and nineteenth of June, the Sieur Du Jardin and I, bought us two Palleki's, and six Oxen to carry our selves, our Servants, and our Luggage. Our design was to have gone directly to Golconda, there to have sold the King a parcel of long Pearls, the least whereof weigh'd thirty-four Carats, and the biggest thirty-five, with some other Jewels, the most part whereof were Emraulds. But the Hollanders assuring us, that our journey would be to no purpose, in regard the King would buy nothing that was rare, or of a high price, till Mirgimola, his General and prime Minister of State, had view'd the Commodity; understanding therefore, that he was then at the Siege of Gandicot, in the Province of Carnatica, we resolv'd to go thither to him.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Road from Maslipatan to Gandicot, a City and Garrison in the Province of Carnatica. And of the dealings which the Author had with Mirgimola, who commanded the King of Golconda's Army. With a discourse at large concerning Elephants.

WE set forth from Maslipatan the twentieth of June, about five of the Clock in the Evening.

The next day, being the one and twentieth, we travell'd three Leagues, and lay at a Village call'd Nilmol.

The two and twentieth, we travell'd six Leagues, to Wouhir, another Village; crossing the River upon a floating Bridge, before we came thither.

The three and twentieth, after we had travel'd six hours, we came to Pate-met, a pitiful Village, where we were constrain'd to lye three days by reason of the Rains.

The twenty-seventh, we came to a great Town, call'd Bezouart; not being able to travel above a League, and a half, because the Road was overflow'd. There we were forc'd to stay four days, for the Rains had so swell'd the River which we were to cross, that the Ferryman could not govern his Boat against the violence of the Stream. There we also left the Horses which the King of Persia sent to the King of Golconda; which by that time were reduc'd to fifty.

While we stay'd at Bezouart, we went to see several Pagods, of which the Country is full; there being more than in any other part of India; for unless it be the Governours of Towns; and some of their Domesticks, all the rest of the Inhabitants are Idolaters. The Pagod belonging to the Town of Bezouart, is a very large one, but not clos'd with Walls; it consists of fifty-two Pillars twenty foot high, that uphold a flat roof of Free-stone; they are adorn'd with several emboss'd Figures of ugly Devils, and several sorts of Creatures. Some of those Devils are made with four Horns, others with many Legs and many Tails, others lolling out their Tongues, and others in several other ridiculous postures. The same Figures are cut in the Stone of the Roof, and between the Pillars stand the Statues of their Gods upon Pedestals. The Pagod is built in the midst of a Court, of a greater length than breadth, encompass'd with Walls, which are adorn'd within and without, with the same Figures as the Pagod; and a Gallery upheld by sixty-six Pillars, runs round the Wall, after the manner of a Cloyster. You enter into this Court through a wide Portal, upon which are two Niches, one above another, the first upheld by twelve, the other by eight Pillars. At the bottom of the Pillars of the Pagod, are certain old Indian Characters, of which the Priests of those Idolaters themselves can hardly tell the meaning.

We went to see another Pagod, built upon a Hill, to which there is an ascent of a hundred and ninety-three steps, every one a foot high. The Pagod is four-square, with a Cupola at the top; and has the same emboss'd Figures, as the Pagod of Bezouart, round about the Walls. In the middle there is an Idol sitting cross-leg'd, after the manner of the Country; and in that sitting posture it is about four foot high; upon the Head it has a Triple Crown, from which four Horns extend themselves; and it has the face of a man, turn'd toward the East. The Pilgrims that come out of devotion to these Pagods, when they enter, clasp their hands together, and rear them up to their foreheads; then they advance toward the Idol, tossing their two hands so claspt together, and crying out several times Ram, Ram, that is to say, God, God. When they come near, they ring a little Bell that hangs upon the Idol itself, after they have besmear'd the Face, and several parts of the Body, with several sorts of Painting. Some there are that bring along with them Vials of Oil, with which they anoint the Idol; and besides, they make an Offering to it of Sugar, Oil, and other things proper to be eaten; the richer sort also adding pieces of Silver. There are sixty Priests that belong to the Idol, and maintain themselves, their Wives and Children upon the Offerings brought to the Idol. But to the end the Pilgrims may believe the Idol takes them, the Priests let them lye two days, and the third day in the evening they take them away. When any Pilgrim goes to a Pagod, to be cur'd of any distemper, he brings the Figure of the Member affected made either in Gold, Silver, or Copper, according to his quality, which he offers to his god; and then falls a singing, as all the rest do, after they have offer'd. Before the Gate of the Pagod, there is a flat Roof, upheld by sixteen Pillars, and right against it, is another upheld by eight; which serves for the Priests Kitchen. On the South-side there is a large Platform cut in the Mountain, where there is a pleasing shade of many fair Trees, and several Wells digg'd in the ground. Pilgrims come far and near to this Pagod; and if they be poor, the Priests relive them with what they receive from the rich, that come there out of devotion. The great Feast of this Pagod is in the month of October, at which time there is a great concourse of people from all parts. While we were there, there was a Woman that had not stirr'd out of the Pagod for three days together; and her prayer to the Idol was, since she had lost her Husband, to know what she should do to bring up her Children. Thereupon asking one of the Priests, wherefore she had no answer, or whether she was to have any answer or no; he told me, that she must wait the pleasure of their God, and that then he would give her an answer to what she expected. Upon this I mistrusted some cheat, and to discover it, I resolv'd to go into the Pagod when all the Priests were absent at Dinner, there being only one that stood at the Gate, whom I sent to fetch me some water at a Fountain two or three Musket-shot from the place. During that time time I went in, and the Woman hearing me, redoubled her cries; for there being no light in the Pagod, but what comes in at the door, it is very dark. I felt my way to the Idol, and by the glimmering light observ'd an hole behind the Idol. I could not do this so quickly, but that the Priest return'd before I had done, He curst me for prophazing his Temple, as he call'd it. But we became suddenly very good friends by the mediation of two Roupies which I put into his hands, whereupon he presently presented me with some of his Betlé.

The one and thirtieth, we departed from Bezouart, and past the River which runs to the Mine of Gani or Coulour. It was then neer half a league broad, by reason of the great Rains which had fall'n continually for eight or nine days together. After we had travell'd three leagues on the other side of the River ew, came to a great Pagod built upon a large Platform, with an ascent of 15 or 20 steps. Within it stood the Figure of a Cow, all of very black-Marble: and a number of deformed Idols four or five-foot-high; some having many heads, others many hands and legs: and the most ugly are most ador'd, and receive most Offerings.

A quarter of a league from this Pagod is a large Town; but we travell'd three leagues farther, and came to lie at another Town, call'd Kab-Kali, neer to which there is a small Pagod, wherein there stand five or six Idols of Marble very well-made.

The first of August we came to a great City call'd Condevir, with a double-Moat, pav'd at the bottom with Free-stone. The way to this Town is clos'd on each side with strong Walls, and at such and such distances are built certain round Towers of little or no defence. This City toward the East stretches out to a Mountain about a league in compass, and surrounded with Walls. At the distance of every 150 paces, there is as it were an half-Moon, and within the Walls are three Fortresses.

The second, we travell'd six leagues, and lay at a Village call'd Copenour.

The third day, after we had travell'd eight leagues, we came to Adanquige, a very fair Town, where there is a very large Pagod, with abundance of Chambers which were built for the Priests; but are now gone to ruine. There are also in the Pagod certain Idols, but very much maim'd, which the People however very superstitiously adore.

The fourth, we travell'd eight leagues, and came to lie at the Town of Nesdrepur. Half a league on this side there is a great River; but at that time it had but little water in it; by reason of the drowth.

The fifth, after eight leagues journey we lay at Condeconr.

The sixth, we travell'd seven hours, and lay at a Village call'd Dakije.

The seventh, after three leagues journey we came to Nelour, where there are many Pagods, and having cross'd a great River, a quarter of a league farther, we travell'd six leagues, and came to Gandarou.

The eighth, after a journey of eight hours we lay at Sereplé, a small Village.

The ninth, we travell'd nine leagues, and lay at a good Town call'd Ponter.

The tenth, we travell'd eleven hours, and lay at Senepgond, another good Town.

The eleventh, we went no farther than Palicat, which is but four leagues from Senepgond; and of those four leagues we travell'd above one in the Sea, up to the Saddles of our Horses in water. There is another way, but it is the farther about by two or three leagues. Palicat is a Fort that belongs to the Hollanders that live upon the Coast of Coromandel; and where they have their chief Factory, where lives also the chief Intendent over all the rest that are in the Territories of the King of Golconda. There are usually within the Fort 200 Souldiers, or thereabouts, besides several Merchants that live there upon the account of Trade; and several others, who having serv'd the Company according to their agreement, retire to that place. There also dwell some of the Natives of the Country; so that Palicat is now as it were a little Town. Between the Town and the Castle there is a large distance of ground, lest the Fort should be annoy'd by shot from the Town. The Bastions are well-stor'd with good Guns: And the Sea comes up to the very Wall of it; but there is no Haven, only a Road. We staid in the Town

Town till the next day in the evening, where we observ'd, that when the Inhabitants fetch their water to drink, they stay till the Sea is quite out, and then digging holes in the Sand as neer the Sea as they can, they meet with fresh-water.

The twelfth, we departed from Calicut, and the next morning about ten of the clock we came to Madrespatan, otherwise call'd Fort St. George, which belongs to the English, having travell'd not above seven or eight leagues that day. We lay at the Covent of Capuchins, at what time Father Ephraim, and Father Zenon were both there.

The fifteenth, we went to St. Thomas's Town, to see the Austin-Friars, and the Jesuits Church, in the first whereof is an Iron-lance, wherewith they say that St. Thomas was Martyr'd.

The two and twentieth, in the morning we departed from Madrespatan, and after a journey of five leagues we arriv'd at a large Town call'd Serravaron.

The three and twentieth, after 7 leagues travel, we came to Oudecot, the whole days journey being over a flat sandy Countrey. On each side there are only Copfes of Bambon's that grow very high. Some of these Copfes are so thick, that it is impossible for a man to get into them; but they are pester'd with prodigious numbers of Apes: Those that breed in the Copfes upon one side of the way, are enemies to them that are bred on the other side; so that they dare not cross from one side to the other, but they are in danger of being immediately strangl'd. Here we had good sport by setting the Apes together by the ears; which is done after this manner. This part of the Country, at every leagues end, is clos'd up with Gates and Barricado's where there is a good Guard kept, and where all Passengers are examin'd whither they go, and whence they come; so that men may safely travel there with their Money in their hands. In several parts of this Road there is Rice to be sold; and they that would see the sport, cause five or six Baskets of Rice to be set in the Road, some forty or fifty paces one from the other, and close by every Basket they lay five or six battoons about two-foot-long, and two inches about; then they retire and hide themselves: presently they shall see the Apes on both sides of the way descend from the tops of the Bambon's, and advance toward the Baskets which are full of Rice: They are about half an hour shewing their teeth one at the other before they come near the Baskets; sometimes they advance, then retreat again, being loath to encounter. At length the female-Baboons, who are most couragious than the males, especially those that have young ones, which they carry in their arms, as woman do their Children, venture to approach the Basket, and as they are about to put in their heads to eat, the males on the other side advance to hinder them. Immediately the other party comes forward, and thus the feud being kindled on both sides, they take up the Battoons that lie by the Baskets, and thrash one another in good earnest. The weakest are constrain'd to flie into the wood with their pates broken, and their limbs maim'd; while the Masters of the Field glut themselves with Rice. Though it may be, when their bellies are full, they will suffer some of the female-party to come and partake with them.

The four and twentieth, we travell'd nine leagues, all the way being like the Road the day before, as far as Naravéron.

The five and twentieth, after a journey of eight hours, through a Countrey of the same nature, meeting at every two or three leagues end with Gates and Guards, we came in the evening to Gazel.

The six and twentieth, we travell'd nine leagues, and came to lie at Courva, where there was nothing to be found neither for Man nor Beast, so that our Cattel were forc'd to be contented with a little Grass, which was cut on purpose for them. Courva is only a celebrated Pagod; by which, at our arrival, we saw several bands of Souldiers pass by, some with Half-pikes, some with Muskets, and some with Clubs, who were going to joyn with one of the principal Commanders of Mirgimola's Army, who was encamp'd upon a rising-ground not far from Courva; the place being pleasant and cool, by reason of the great number of Trees and Fountains that grace it. When we understood the Captain was so neer, we went to wait upon him, and found him sitting in his Tent with many Lords of the Country all Idolaters. After we had presented him with a pair of Pocket-Pistols

Pistols inlaid with Silver, he demanded of us what had brought us into that Country; but when we told him that we came to attend Mirjimola, Generalissimo of the King of Golconda's Army, about business, he was infinitely kind to us: However, understanding that he took us for Hollanders, we told him we were not Hollanders, but French-men. Thereupon, not understanding what Nation we were, he fell into a long discourse with us about the Government of our Country, and the Grandeur of our King. Six or seven days before, they had taken five or six Elephants, three whereof had escap'd, having kill'd ten or twelve of the Natives who assisted in the Chace; in pursuit whereof the General was preparing; and because we could not stay to see the sport, we were contented to inform our selves of the manner of hunting that vast Animal; which is thus. They cut out several Alleys or Walks in the Wood, which they dig full of great deep holes, and cover with Hurdles strow'd over with a little earth. Then the Hunters hooping and hollowing, and beating up Drums, with Pikes that have Wild-fire ti'd to the end of them, force the Elephant into those Walks, where he tumbles into the holes, not being able to rise again. Then they fetch Ropes and Chains: and some they bring under their bellies, others they wind about their legs and trunk, and when they think they have sufficiently hamper'd the Beast, they have certain Engines ready, wherewithal to draw him up. Nevertheless, of five, three escap'd, notwithstanding the cords and chains about their bodies and their legs. The people told us one thing which seem'd very wonderful; which was, that these Elephants having been once deceiv'd, and having escap'd the snare, are very mistrustful ever after; and when they get into the Wood again, they break off a great bough from one of the Trees with their trunk, with which they examine every step they go, before they set down their feet, to try whether there be any hole or no in their way. So that the Hunters that told us the Story, seem'd to be out of hopes of ever taking those three Elephants which had escap'd. Had we been assur'd that we might have been eye-witnesses of this miraculous precaution of the Elephant, we would have staid three or four days, what-ever urgent business we had had. The Captain himself was a kind of a Brigadeer; that commanded three or four-thousand men, who were quarter'd half a league round the Country.

The seven and twentieth, after two hours travel, we came to a great Village, where we saw the two Elephants which had been so lately taken. Every one of the two wild Elephants was plac'd between two tame ones. Round about the wild Elephants stood six men, with every one an Half-pike in their hands, and a lighted-Torch fasten'd at the end of the Pike, who talk'd to the Beasts, giving them meat, and crying out in their language, Take it, eat it. The food which they gave them was a little bottle of Hey, some pieces of brown-Sucre, and Rice boil'd in water, with some few corns of Pepper. If the wild Elephants refus'd to do as they were bidden, the men made signs to the tame Elephants to beat them, which they did, banging the refractory Elephant upon the head and forehead with their trunks; and if he offer'd to make any resistance, the other Elephant thwackt him on the other side; so that the poor Elephant, not knowing what to do, was constrain'd to learn obedience.

Being thus fall'n into the Story of Elephants, I will add some other observations, which I have made upon the nature of those Animals. Though the Elephant never meddles with the female, after he is once taken, yet he is sometimes seiz'd with a kind of lustful rage. One day that Sha-jehan was an Hunting upon one of his Elephants, with one of his Sons that sat by him to fan him, the Elephant became so furious by reason of his lust, that the Governor who was by no means able to master him, declar'd to the King, that to allay the fury of the Elephant, who would else doubtless bruise him to pieces among the Trees, there was no way; but for one of the three to forfeit his life: and that he would willingly sacrifice his for the safety of the King and the Prince his Son. Only he desir'd his Majesty to take care of three small Children which he must leave behind him. Having so said, he threw himself under the Elephant's-feet, who had no sooner taken him in his trunk and squeez'd him to pieces with his feet, but he grew as quiet and peaceable as before. The King, as an acknowledgment for so famous a deliverance, gave to the poor two-hunder'd-thousand Roupies, and highly advanc'd every every one of the Sons of him that had so generously laid down his life for the safety of his Sovereign.

I observ'd also, that though the Elephant's skin be very hard while he is alive; yet when he is dead, it is just like melted-glue.

Elephants are brought from several parts of India; as from the Island of Ceylan, where they are very small; but the most couragious of all: from the Isle of Sumatra; from the Kingdom of Cochin; from the Kingdom of Siam; and from the Frontiers of the Kingdom of Boutam near the Great-Tartarie. They are brought also from the Coast of Melinda, Eastward of Affrica: where they are in very great numbers, according to the report of a Portuguese-Captain, made at Goa, who came from thence to make some complaint against the Governor of Mozambique. He told me that he had seen all along that Coast several Parks that were empal'd with nothing but Elephants-teeth, the least of which Parks is above a league about: He added farther, that the Blacks of the Country hunt their Elephants, and eat the Flesh. But they are oblig'd to give the tusks of every one they kill to the Lord of the place. When they intend to take their Elephants in the Island of Ceylan, they make a long lane, clos'd in on both sides, so that the Elephant can neither run to the right nor to the left: this lane is broad at the first, but grows narrower and narrower, till there is no more room left at the farther-end than for the female-Elephant to lie down, which must be one that is covetous of the male at the same time. Though she be tame, yet she is bound with good Ropes and Cords, and by her cries will call the male-Elephant, who presently runs through the lane towards her. Now when the Elephant comes where the lane grows narrow, they that lie hid for that purpose, immediately barricado up the lane behind, and when he comes near the female, there is another Barricado set up, that stops him from going any farther. When he is thus between the Barricados, they so entangle his legs and trunk with ropes and cords, that he is soon taken, having no way to help himself. The same way they use for the most part in the Kingdoms of Siam, and Pegu, only that the Natives there mount the female-Elephant, and go to find out the male in the Forrests. And when they have met with his haunt, they tie the female to the most convenient place they can find, and then they fix their snares for the Elephant, who in a short time hastens toward the female, hot for Generation, where her cries call him.

This is observable of the female-Elephant, that when she begins to be hot, she gathers together a great heap of herbs and weeds, and makes her self a kind of bed some four or five-foot-high from the ground, where contrary to the custom of all other creatures, she lies upon her back, in expectation of the male, whom she calls to her by a peculiar cry.

This is also particular to the Elephants in the Isle of Ceylan, that only the first Elephant which the female produces, has any tusks. And it is also observable, that the Ivory which comes from Achen when it is wrought, has this peculiar quality with it, that it never grows yellow, like that which comes out of the Continent, and from the East-Indies, which makes it more esteem'd, and dearer than any other.

When the Merchants bring Elephants to any place to sell, 'tis a pleasant sight to see them go along. For in regard there are generally old and young together, when the old ones are gone by, the children will be running after the little ones to play with them, and give them something or other to eat. While the young Elephants, which are very wanton, are busily taking what is offer'd them, the children leap upon their backs: but when the young Elephants that lately stop for the lucre of the Victuals perceiving their Dams, a great way before, double their pace, and playing with their trunks, throw the children off their backs to the ground, yet without doing them any harm.

Notwithstanding all the enquiry I have made, I could never find exactly how long an Elephant will live. Nor can all the Governors and keepers of those creatures tell you more, than such an Elephant has been in the possession of their Father, their Grandfather, and great Grandfather. And by that computation, I found that they had liv'd some of them six-score, or an hunder'd and thirty years.

The greatest part of those that have made Relations of India, boldly affirm that the Great Mogul keeps three or four-thousand Elephants. But being myself at Jehanabad, where the King at present resides, he that was chief Master of the Elephants, assur'd me that the King had not above five-hunder'd Elephants, which were call'd Elephants of the House, made use of only to carry the Women, their Tents, and Luggage; but that for the Wars, he only kept fourscore, or four-score and ten at most. The noblest of the latter sort is always reserv'd for the King's Eldest Son, the allowance for his food and other necessaries being 500 Roupies a month, which comes to 750 Livres. There are some that are not allow'd above 50, others 40, others 30, and some but 20 Roupies. But those Elephants that are allow'd an hunder'd, two-hunder'd, three-hunder'd or four-hunder'd Roupies a-month, have belonging to them certain Horse-men that live upon the same pay, and two or three young fellows to fan them during the heat of the weather. All these Elephants are not always kept in the City: the greatest part being led out every morning into the fields, or among the thickets, where they feed upon the branches of Trees, Sucre-canes, and Millet, to the great detriment of the poor Country man. But not a little to the profit of their Keepers; for the less they eat at home, the more they gain into their own purses.

The twenty-seventh of August, we travell'd six leagues, and lay at a great Town call'd Ragia-peta.

The twenty-eighth, after eight leagues journey we came to Ondecour.

The twenty-ninth, after nine hours travel we arriv'd at Outemeda, where there is one of the greatest Pagods in all India. It is all built of large Free-stone, and it has three Towers, where there stand several deform'd figures of Emboss'd-work. It is encompass'd with many little Chambers for the Priests Lodgings: five-hunder'd paces beyond there is a wide Lake, upon the banks whereof are built several Pagods eight or ten-foot-square; and in every one an Idol representing the shape of some Devil, with a Brameré, who takes care that no stranger that is not of their superstition, shall come to wash, or take any water out of the Lake. If any stranger desires any water, they bring it in earthen-pots: and if by chance their pot touches the stranger's Vessel, they break it immediately. They told me also, that if any stranger, not of their superstition, should happen by accident to wash in that Lake, they must be forc'd to drain the lake of all the water that was in at that time. As for their alms, they are very charitable; for there passes by no person in necessity, or that begs of them, but they give them to eat and drink of such as they have. There are several Women that sit upon the Road, whereof some of them always keep fire for Travellers to light their Tobacco by. Nay, they will give a Pipe to some that have none at all. Others boil Rice with Quicheri, which is a grain somewhat like our Hemp-seed. Others boil Beans with their Rice, because the water wherein they are boil'd never puts those that are over-hot into a pleurisy. There are Women that have vow'd to perform these acts of Charity to strangers for seven or eight years, some for more, some for less, according to their convenience. And to every Traveller they give some of their Beans, and Rice-water, and an handful of Rice to eat. There are other Women upon the high-way, and in the fields, looking behind their Horses, their Oxen, and their Cows, who have made vows never to eat but what they find indigested in the dung of those Beasts. Now in regard there is neither Barly nor Oats in that Countrey, they give their Cattle certain great crooked Pease, which they bruise before between two Mill-stones: and then lay them in steep for half an hour; for they are a very solid substance, and hard to be digested. They give their Cattel these Pease every evening; and in the morning they feed them with two pound of dark-brown-Sugar, like Wax, kneaded together with as much Meal, and one-pound of Butter, whereof the Oflers or Grooms make little round Balls which they thrust down their throats; for otherwise they would never eat them. Afterwards they wash their mouths, that are all over clamm'd, especially their teeth, which makes them have such an aversion against that sort of food. All the day long they pull up the grass and weeds, by the roots, and give their Cattel, being very careful of letting them eat any of the earth.

The thirtieth, we travell'd eight leagues, and lay at a place call'd Goulupalé.

The one and thirtyth, after we had travell'd nine hours, we stopt at Gogeron. The first of September we travell'd but six leagues, and came to lie at Gandicot. It was but eight days before, that the Nahab had taken that City, after a Siege of three months. Nor had it been taken without the assistance of certain Frenchmen, who had forsaken the service of the Dutch-Company, by reason of ill-usage. They had also several English and Dutch-Cannoneers, with two or three Italians, which mainly forwarded the surrender of that place.

Gandicot is one of the strongest Cities in the Kingdom of Carnatica. It is situated upon the point of an high Mountain; there being but one ascent to it, not above twenty or five and twenty-foot-broad at most; in some places not above seven or eight-foot-wide. On the right-hand of the way, which is cut out of the Mountain, there is a most hideous precipice; at the bottom whereof runs a vast River. Upon the top of the Mountain there is a small plain, but a quarter of a league broad, and about half a league long. This is all sow'd with Rice and Millet, and water'd with many little Springs. The top of the plain on the South-side, where the City is built, is encompassed with precipices, two Rivers running at the bottom, which form the point. So that there is but one Gate to enter into the City from the plain-side; and that too fortifi'd with three good walls of Free-stone, with Moats pav'd at the bottom with Free-stone; so that the besieg'd had but only one quarter of the City to defend, containing about five hunder'd paces. They had but two Iron-Guns, the one carrying twelve-pound-Ball, the other eight. The one was planted upon the Gate, the other upon a point of a kind of a Bastion. So that until the Nahab had found the way to mount his Cannon upon a very high place neer the City, he lost a great number of men by several sallies which the Besieg'd made. The Raja that was within, was esteem'd one of the bravest and most experienc'd Captains that ever were amongst the Idolaters: whereupon, the Nahab finding that the place was not to be taken, unless he could get up his Cannon to the top of that steep ascent, sent for all the Frenchmen that were in the King's service, promising to every one four months extraordinary pay, if they could find a way to mount his Cannon up to the top of such a place; wherein they had the good-hap to be very succesful. For they mounted four pieces of Cannon, and were so prosperous, as to hit the great Gun that was planted upon the Gate, and render it unserviceable. At length, when they had beaten down good part of the Wall of the City, the Besieg'd came to capitulate, and march'd out of the Town upon good Articles. The day we arriv'd, all the Army was encamp'd at the foot of the Mountain, in a plain, through which there ran a very fair River; where the Nahab muster'd his Cavalry, and found them in a very good condition. An English-Cannoneer and an Italian seeing Monsieur Jardin and my self pass by, guess'd us to be Frangui's; and because it was late, accosted us very civilly, and oblig'd us to stay with them all night. By them we understood that there was in the City a French-Engineer, whose name was Claudius Maille of Bourges, and that he was employ'd by the Nahab to cast some pieces of Cannon which the Nahab intended to leave in the City.

The next day we went into the City, and found out Maille's Lodging, having been acquainted with him at Batavia; who informing the Nahab of our arrival, he presently sent us Provision for our selves and our beasts.

The third day we went to wait upon the Nahab, who had pitch'd his Tents upon that part of the plain neer the place where the way is cut out of the Rock. We inform'd him of the cause of our coming, telling him that we had some Commodities that were rare, and worth the King's buying; but that we were unwilling to shew them to the King till he had seen them; believing it our duty to render him that respect. The Nahab was very well-pleas'd with our Complement; and after he had caus'd us to be presented with Betlé, we took our leaves of him, and return'd to our Lodgings, whither he sent to us two Bottles of Wine, one of Sack, and the other of Schiras, which is a rare thing in that Countrey.

The fourth day we waited upon him again, and carried along with us some Pearles of an extraordinary weight, beauty and bigness; the least whereof weigh'd twenty four Caratts. After he had vew'd them and shew'd them to some of the Lords that were about him, he ask'd the price, which when we had set him, he return'd us our Jewels and told us he would consider of it.

The

The tenth day he sent for us in the morning, and after he had caus'd us to sit down by him, he sent for five small Bags full of Diamonds, every Bag containing a good handful. They were loose Stones, of a very black Water, and very small; none of them exceeding a Carat, or a Carat and a half; but otherwise very clean. There were some few that might weigh two Carats. After the Nahab had shew'n us all, he ask'd us whether they would sell in our Country. We made answer, that they might have been for sale in our Country, provided they had not been of a black Water; for that in Europe we never esteem'd any Diamonds, but such as were clean and white, having but a small esteem for any others. It seems, that when he first undertook the Conquest of this Kingdom for the King of Golconda, they inform'd him that there were Diamond Mines in it. Whereupon he sent twelve thousand men to dig there; who in a whole years time could find no more than those five small Bags full. Whereupon the Nahab perceiving that they could find none but brown Stones, of a Water enclining much more to black than white, thought it but loss of time, and so sent all the people back to their Husbandry.

The eleventh, the French Canoneers came all to the Nahabs Tent, complaining that he had not paid them the four months pay which he had promis'd them; threatening him, that if he did not discharge it, they would leave him; to which the Nahab promis'd to give them satisfaction the next day.

The twelfth, the Canoneers not failing to give him another visit, the Nahab paid them three months, and promis'd to pay them the fourth before the month were out; but so soon as they had receiv'd their Money, they fell a feasting one another, so that the Dancing Wenches carried away the greatest part of their Coin.

The thirteenth, the Nahab went out to see the Guns which Maille had undertaken to cast. For which purpose he had sent for Brass from all parts, and got together a great number of Idols which the Soldiers had pillag'd out of the Pagods as they march'd along. Now you must know, that in Gandicor there was one Pagod, said to be the fairest in all India, wherein there were several Idols, some of Gold, and others of Silver; amongst the rest there were six of Brass, three sitting upon their Heels, and three upon their Feet, ten foot high. These Idols were made use of among the rest. But when Maille also had provided all things ready, he could not make those six Idols run, that were taken out of the great Pagod of Gandicor, though he melted all the rest. He try'd several ways, but it was impossible for him to do it, whatever expence the Nahab was at; nay though the Nahab threaten'd to hang the Priests for having enchanted those Idols. And thus Maille could never make any more than only one single piece, and that split upon trial; so that he was forc'd to leave the work unfinished, and soon after left the Nahabs service.

The fourteenth, we went to take our leaves of the Nahab, and to know what he had further to say to us, concerning the Commodities we had then shew'n him. But then he told us, he was busie at present about the examination of certain Offenders which were brought before him. For it is the custom of that Country, never to put a man in Prison; but as soon as the Offender is taken, he is examin'd, and sentence is pronounc'd upon him, according to his crime, which is immediately executed; or if the party taken be found innocent, he is as soon acquitted. And let the controversy be of what nature it will, it is presently decided.

The fifteenth in the morning, we went to wait upon him again, and were immediately admitted into his Tent, where he sat with his two Secretaries by him. The Nahab was sitting according to the custom of the Country, bare-foot, like one of our Taylors, with a great number of Papers sticking between his Toes, and others between the Fingers of his left hand, which Papers he drew sometimes from between his Toes, sometimes from between his Fingers, & order'd what answers should be given to every one. After his Secretaries had wrote the answers, he caus'd them to read them, and then took the Letters and seal'd them himself; giving some to Foot Messengers, others to Horsemen. For you must know, that all those Letters which are sent by Foot-Posts all over India, go with more speed than those which are carried by Horsemen. The reason is, because at the end of every two Leagues there are little Huts, where there are men always ready, who are engag'd to run away immediately; so that when one of these men that carries the Letters, comes to one of these Huts, he throws the Letters into the Hut, and then he that is appointed, runs with them to the next Stage. They look upon it as an ill Omen, to give the Letters into the Messengers hands; but they must be thrown at his feet, and he must gather them up. It is to be observ'd also, that the high ways in most parts of India, are like Walks of Trees; and that where there are no Trees, at every five hundred paces distance there are set up little Heaps of Stones, which the Inhabitants of the next Villages are bound to white-wash from time to time, to the end those Letter-Carriers may not miss their ways in dark and Rainy nights. While we stay'd with the Nabab, certain Officers came to tell him, that they had brought certain Offenders to the door of his Tent. He was above half an hour before he return'd them any answer, writing on, and giving instructions to his Secretaries; but by and by, all of a sudden he commanded the Offenders to be brought in, and after he had examin'd them, and made them confess the crime of which they stood accus'd, he was above an hour before he said a word, still writing on, and employing his Secretaries. In the mean while several of the Officers of the Army came to tender their respects to him in a very submissive manner, all whom he answer'd only with a nod. There was one of the Offenders which were brought before him, had broken into a House, and had kill'd the Mother and three Children. He was condemned upon the spot to have his Hands and Feet cut off, and to be cast out into the high way, there to end his days in misery. Another had rob'd upon the Highway; for which the Nabab order'd his Belly to be ript up, and himself to be cast upon the Dunghill. I know not what crimes the other two had committed, but their heads were both cut off. When we perceiv'd him at a little leisure, we ask'd him whether he had any other Commands, to lay upon us, and whether he thought our Commodities fitting to be shew'n to the King. He answer'd, that we might go to Golconda, and that he would write to his Son in our behalf, and that his Letter would be there sooner than we. And in order to our journey, he order'd us sixteen Horsemen to convoy us, and to provide us necessaries upon the Road, till we came to a River, thirteen Leagues from Gandicot, which no persons are to pass, unless they have the Nabab's Passport, to keep the Soldiers from running from their Colours.

CHAP. XIX.

The Road from Gandicot to Golconda.

THE sixteenth in the morning, we set out of Gandicot, accompanied with the greatest part of the Canoneers, who brought us the first days journey upon our way; and that day having travel'd seven Leagues, we came to lye at Coteepali.

The seventeenth, the Canoneers took their leaves of us; and we kept on our journey with our Horsemen; and having travel'd six Leagues, we lay at a Village call'd Coteen, on the other side of the River, which is very broad. So soon as we had cross'd it, the Horsemen took their leaves of us; and though we made them a present of Roupies, to buy them Tobacco and Betle, yet we could not perswade them to take it. Their Ferry-Boats wherewith they cross the River, are like broad bottom'd Wicker Flaskets, cover'd without with Ox's Hides; at the bottom whereof they lay certain Faggots, over which they spread a piece of old Tapestry, to keep the Wares and Merchandise from the wet. As for their Coaches and Waggon, they fasten them between two Boats, by the Wheels and the Pole; the Horses swimming all the while, one man w'hipping them on behind, while another in the Boat holds them up by the Head-Stall.

Stall. As for the Oxen that carry the Luggage, as soon as ever they come to the River side, and that they have unladed them, they only drive them into the River, and they will swim over of themselves. There are four men that stand upright at the four Corners of the Boat, and row it along with broad pieces of Wood, made like Shovels. If they do not all strike their stroaks together, but that any of the four misses, the Boat will turn round two or three times; and the stream carries it a great way lower than where they intended to land.

The eighteenth, after five hours travel we arriv'd at Morimal.

The nineteenth, we travel'd nine Leagues, and lay at Santesela.

The twentieth, we travell'd nine Leagues more, and lay at Goremeda.

The one and twentieth, after six hours travel, we spent the night at Kaman, a Frontier Town in the Kingdom of Golconda, till the Conquest of Carnatica by Mirjimola.

The two and twentieth, we travel'd seven Leagues, and came to lye at Emelipata. When we were about half the way, we met above four thousand persons, men and women; and above twenty Palleki's, in every one whereof was an Idol. They were adorn'd with Coverings of Sattin, purfled with Gold, and Velvets with Gold and Silver Fringe. Some of these Palleki's were born by four men; others by eight, and some by twelve, according as the Idols were in bigness and weight. On each side of the Pallekie, walk'd a man, with a large Fan in his hand, five Foot in compass, made of Ostriches and Peacocks Feathers, of various colours. The handle of the Fan was five or six foot long, laid all over with Gold and Silver, about the thickness of a French Crown. Every one was officious to carry one of those Fans, to keep the Flies from the Idols Face. There was another Fan, which was carried close by the Idol, somewhat larger than the Former, without a handle, and was born just like a Target. It was adorn'd with Feathers of several colours, and little Bells of Gold and Silver, round about the Edges. He that carried it went always near the Idol upon the same side, to shade the Idol; for to have shut the Curtains would have been too hor. Ever and anon, he that carried that sort of Fan, brandish'd it in the air, to make the Bells ring; which they presum'd to be a kind of Pastime to the Idol. All these people with their Idols came from Brampour, and the adjacent parts, and were going to visit their great Ram, that is to say, their chief God, who stands in a Pagod in the Territories of the King of Carnatica. They had been about thirty days upon the Road, and were to travel fourteen or fifteen more, before they came to this Pagod. One of my Servants, who was a Native of Brampour, and of the same Superstition, beg'd me to give him leave to bear his gods Company, telling me, withall, that he had made a vow long since to go this Pilgrimage. I was constrain'd to let him go. For had I not given him leave, I knew he would have taken it, by reason he had much acquaintance and kindred among the Rabble. About two months after, he return'd again to us to Surat, and because he had faithfully serv'd Monsieur Jardin and my self, we made no scruple to take him again. Asking him some questions about his Pilgrimage, he related to me this following passage: six days after he left me, all the Pilgrims had made an account to go and lye at such a village, to which before they came they were to cross a River, that has but little Water in Summer, so that it is easily fordable. But when it rains in India, the Water falls with such a force, that it seems to be a perpendicular deluge; and in less than an hour or two a small River shall swell three or four foot high. The Rains having overtaken those Pilgrims, the River was swell'd in that manner, that it was impossible to pass it that day. Now because it is not necessary for Travellers in India to carry provisions, especially for the Idolaters, who never eat any thing that ever had life; in regard that in the least village you may meet with abundance of Rice, Meal, Butter, Milk Meats, Lentils, and other Pulse, besides Sugar, and Sweet-Meats, dry and moist. The people were very much surpriz'd, having no victuals, when they came and saw the River swell'd. In short, they had nothing to give their Children to eat; which caus'd great lamentations among them. In this extremity the chiefest of their Priests sat himself down in the midst of them, and covering himself with a sheet, began to cry out that they they who would have any Victuals should come to him; when they came, he ask'd every one what they would have, whether Rice, or Meal, and for how many persons; and then lifting up the corner of the sheet, with a great Ladle he distributed to every one that which they ask'd for; so that the whole multitude of four thousand Souls was fully satisfi'd. My Servant did not only tell me this story, but going several times afterwards to Brampour, where I was known to the chief men in the City, I enquir'd of several, who swore to me by their Ram, Ram, that it was truth. Though I am not bound to believe it.

The twenty-third, we arriv'd at Doupar, after we had travel'd eight leagues, and cross'd several Torrents.

The twenty-fourth, we travel'd eight leagues, and came to Tripante; where there is a great Pagod upon a Hill, to which there is a circular ascent of Freestone every way; the least Stone being ten foot long, and three broad: and there are several Figures of Demons in the Pagod. Amongst the rest, there is the Statue of Venus, standing upright, with several lascivious Figures about her; all which Figures are of one piece of Marble; but the Sculpture is very ordinary.

The twenty-fifth, we travel'd eight leagues, and came to Mamli.

The twenty-sixth, we travel'd eight leagues more, and came to lye at Ma-cheli.

The twenty-seventh, we travel'd not above three leagues, being to cross a wide River in Boats like Panniers; which usually takes up half the day; for when you come to the River side, there is neither Pannier nor any thing else to cross it. There was only one man, with whom we bargain'd for our passage; who to try whether our money be good or no, made a great fire and threw it into the flame, as he does to all others that pass that way. If among the Roupies which he receives, he meets with any one that turns a little black, you must give him another, which he presently heats red hot; when he finds his Money to be good, he calls to his Companions to fetch the Manequin or Flasket-Boat, which lay hid before in some other part of the River. For these sort of people are so cunning, that if they descry any Passengers afar off, they will row their Manequin to the other side, because they will not be constrain'd to carry any person over without Money. But the Money being paid, the man that receives it; calls his Companions together, who take the Boat upon their Shoulders, and when they have launch'd it into the River, they fetch their Passengers and goods from the other side.

The twenty-eighth, having travel'd five leagues, we came to a place call'd Dabir-Pinta.

The twenty-ninth, after twelve hours travel, we came to lye at Holcora.

The thirtieth, we travell'd eight leagues, and came to spend our night at Peridera.

The first of October, after we had travel'd ten leagues, we came to lye at Atenara. This is a House of Pleasure, which the present King's Mother caus'd to be built. There are many Chambers in a great Piazza belonging to it, for the convenience of Travellers.

You must take notice, that in all the Countries where we travel'd as well in the Kingdom of Carnatica, as the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour, there are no Physicians, but such as attend Kings and Princes. As for the common people, after the Rains are fall'n, and that it is time to gather Herbs, you shall see every morning the good women of the Towns going into the Fields, to gather such Simples which they know to be proper for such Diseases as reign in the Family. 'Tis very true, that in great Cities there may be one or two men that have some common Receipts, who go every morning, and sit in some known places, to give their Remedies to such as enquire for them, whether they be Potions or Plaisters. First they feel their Pulses, and then giving them some remedy, for which they do not demand the value of six pence; they also at the same time mutter certain words between their teeth.

The second of October, we had but four leagues to travel before we came to Golconda. We went immediately to the Lodging of a young Dutch Chirurgion, belonging to the King, whom the Sieur Cheteur, Envoy from Batavia, had had left at Golconda upon the King's earnest entreaty. The King was always very much troubl'd with the head-ach: For which reason the Physicians had order'd that he should be let blood in four places under the tongue; but there was no person that would undertake to do it: for the Natives of the Country understand nothing of Chirurgery. Now before that Peter de Lan, for that was the Dutch-Chirurgion's name, was entertain'd in the King's service, he was ask'd whether he could let blood? To which he answer'd, that there was nothing so easy in Chirurgery. Some few days after the King sent for him, and gave him to understand that he was resolv'd to be let blood the next day in four parts under the tongue, as the Physicians had order'd, but he should take a care of not drawing away above eight ounces. De Lan returning the next day to Court, was lead into a Chamber by three Eunuchs, and four Old-women, who carri'd him to a Bath, and after they had undrest him, and wash'd him, especially his hands; they anointed him with Aromatick-drugs, and instead of his own European-Clothes, they brought him a Robe according to the fashion of the Countrey. After that, they brought him before the King; where he found four little Porringers of Gold, which the Physicians, who were present, had weigh'd. In short, he let the King blood under the tongue in four parts, and perform'd his business so well, that when the blood came to be weigh'd, it weigh'd but bare eight ounces. The King was so satisfi'd with the Operation, that he gave the Chirurgion three-hunder'd Pagods, which comes to almost seven-hunder'd Crowns. The Young-Queen and the Queen-Mother understanding what he had done, were resolv'd to be let-blood too. But I believe it was rather out of a curiosity to see the Chirurgion, than out of any necessity which they had to be let-blood. For he was a handsom young-man; and perhaps they had never seen a stranger neer at hand, for at a distance, it is no improbable thing, in regard the Women are shut up in such places where they may see, but not be seen. Upon this, de Lan was carri'd into a Chamber where the same Old-women that he had waited on him before he let the King blood, stript up his arm, and wash'd it, but more especially his hands; which when they were dry, they rubb'd again with sweet-Oils as before. That being done, a Curtain was drawn, and the Queen stretching out her arm through a hole, was let-blood; as was the Queen-Mother afterwards in the same manner. The Queen gave him fifty Pagods, and the Queen-Mother thirty, with some pieces of Cloath of Gold.

Two days after we went to wait upon the Nahab's Son, but were told we could not speak with him that day; the next day receiving the same answer, we were advertiz'd upon enquiry, that we might wait long enough in that manner; that he was a young Lord that never stirr'd from the King; or that if he did leave the Court, it was only to keep his Misses company in his own Haram. The young Chirurgion seeing us so delaid, offer'd to speak to the King's first Physician, who was also of the King's Council, and who had testify'd a great affection toward the Batavian-Envoy, and for de Lan himself; for which reason he thought he might embrace an opportunity to do him a kindness. In short, de Lan had no sooner spoke to him, but he sent for us, and having, after much civility shewn us, inform'd himself of the cause of our coming, he desir'd us to shew him our Pearls, which we did the next day. After he had view'd them, he made us seal them up again in our own bags: for all that is presented to the King must be seal'd with the Merchants-Seal; and when the King has had a sight of the Commodity, it is seal'd up with his own Seal, to prevent any fraud. Thereupon we left the Pearls, so seal'd up, in his hands, who promis'd to shew them to the King; and to give us a good account of the trust we had put into his hands.

The next day about nine of the Clock before noon we went to the River to see how they wash the King's and the Great Noble-men's Elephants. The Elephant goes up to the belly in the water, and lying down upon one side, with his trunk he throws the water several times upon that side which lies out of the water; and when he has soak'd himself sufficiently, the Master comes with a kind of a Pumice-stone, and rubbing the Elephant's-skin, cleanses it from all the filth that clings to it. Here some believe, that when this creature is once laid down, it cannot rise of its self; which is contrary to what I have seen. For when the Master has well-cleans'd the one side, he commands the Elephant to turn the other, which the beast immediately does; and when both sides are well-wash'd, he comes out of the River, and stays a-while upright upon the bank-side to dry himself. Then comes the Master with a pot full of some red or yellow colour, and streaks the best in the forehead, about the eyes, upon the breast, and all behind, rubbing him afterwards with Oil of Coco's to strengthen the nerves; and some when all is done, he fastens a gilt-Plate upon their foreheads.

The fifteenth, the chief Phisitian sent for us, and return'd us our bags again, seal'd with the King's Signet, wherewith his Majesty had seal'd them after he had look'd upon them. He demanded the price; which we told him. Whereupon, an Eunuch that stood by him, and wrote down every thing, wondring at the high-price of the Pearls, told us that we took the King of Golconda's Courtiers for persons that have neither knowledg nor judgment; and that he saw every day things of greater value brought to the King. I briskly retorted upon the Eunuch, that he was better skill'd in the price of a young Slave, than the value of a Jewel; and so saying, we put up our Pearls; and return'd to our Lodging. The next day we set out from Golconda for Surat, in which Road there is nothing considerable but what I have already describ'd, only this is to be remember'd, that we were not gone above five days journey from Golconda, but the King, who had not heard in two days after we were gone, what I had retorted upon the Eunuch, sent four or five Horse-men after us with Orders, if they overtook us, to bring us back: but in regard we were got one days journey into the Territories of the Mogul before one of the Horse-men overtook us, (for the rest staid upon the Frontiers of the two Kingdoms;) I, that knew the humour of the Countrey very well, made answer for my self and Companion, that at that time our business would not permit us; and that therefore we begg'd in most humble manner his Majesty's pardon; and afterwards I made my Companion allow my reasons.

Being arriv'd at Surat, Monsieur de Jardin dy'd of an overflowing of choler. And I made a full account to have gone to Agra to Sha-jehan who then reign'd. But at the same instant the Nahab, Sha-Est-Kan, the King's Brother-in-Law, and Governor of the Province of Guzerat, sent one of the principal Officers of his House to me from Amadabat, to tell me he understood I had some extraordinary Jewels to sell; for which reason he would be glad to see me, and that he would pay me as much for them as the King should do. I receiv'd this Message while Sieur de Jardin lay sick, and the ninth day after his death I got to Amadabat, and spake with the Nahab. Now in regard he was a man that understood Jewels perfectly well, we presently came to an agreement: so that we had no dispute together, but about the quality of the Coin to be paid. He allow'd me two sorts to choose, Roupies of Gold, or Roupies of Silver: but the Prince seeming to intimate to me that he should not be well-pleas'd to let such a Sum in Silver to be seen to go out of his House, he wish'd I would rather accept my payment in Roupies of Gold, that made not such a great heap. I consented to his desire; and he shew'd me very fair Gold, and many Roupies, that had not seen the Sun in a long time. But in regard the price currant of a Roupie of Gold, is not above fourteen Roupies of Silver, and for that he would have had me taken my Roupies at fourteen and a half, or at least for fourteen and a quarter, it had like to have spoil'd our bargain; for I gave him to understand, that in so large a sum, it would not quit cost to lose a fourth part in every Roupie of Gold. At length to please him, I was forc'd to take the Gold at fourteen Roupies of Silver and an eighth part. Thus a Prince otherwise magnificent and generous, yet in matter of buying and selling, would needs approve himself to be a good Husband. While I stay'd at Amadabat, he sent me every day to my Lodging four Silver Plates of Pilaw, and other excellent Dyet; and one day that the King had sent him as many Apples as ten or twelve men could carry, he sent me as many as for their rarity at Amadabat, were worth three or four hundred Roupies. Besides all this, he gave me a compleat Habit of Honour, with a Sword and a Cangiar, worth a thousand Roupies; and resolving also to give me a Horse, he ask'd me what kind kind of one I would have. I told him, since he was pleas'd to give me my choice, that I rather desir'd a young lively Horse, rather than an old one. Thereupon he sent me one that was so given to bounding and prancing, that he threw a young Hollander out of the Saddle; but upon my desire to have him chang'd, he sent me another, which I sold afterwards for four hundred Roupies.

From Amadabat I return'd to Surat; from Surat I travel'd again to Golconda, and thence to the Mine to buy Diamonds. From whence returning back for Surat, I resolv'd for Persia.

CHAP. XX.

My return from Surat to Ormus.

Being upon my return to Surat from the Diamond Mine, I understood that the War was proclaim'd between the English and the Hollanders, and the latter would send no more Ships into Persia. The English also gave out the same resolutions; for indeed they had sent four Ships into Persia, which they expected back every hour. While I was thus in fear of staying long in a place where I had no business, there arriv'd at Surat five great Dutch Ships from Batavia; three of which being rather Men of War, than Merchant-Men, were order'd to be unladen with all speed, with an intention to look out for the four English Vessels that were expected out of Persia. The other two were appointed to follow two or three days after, being in that time to take in provisions for the whole Fleet.

In one of those two Vessels I embark'd, and setting sail the eighth of January, we came before Diu the twelfth, where we overtook the other three Ships. There it was debated at a Council of War, what course to steer to meet the English; and it was resolv'd, that we should steer away for Scindi, where we arriv'd the twentieth of the same month, and stay'd there till the twenty-eighth, and then setting sail with a fair wind, we landed at Gomrom the seventh of March.

TRAVELS IN INDIA.

The Second Book.

Containing an Historical and Political Description of the Empire of the Great Mogul.

CHAP. I.

A Relation of the last Wars of Indolstan ; which gives an insight into the present Estate of the Empire and Court of the Moguls.

I Have written this History in such manner, as I knew things to be transacted, during my stay in the Country ; leaving it to the Reader to make his own reflections as he pleases ; it being sufficient for me to make a faithful description of the Potent Empire of the Moguls, according to the Observations I have taken upon the place.

This great and vast Empire, which contains the greatest part of Indolstan, and which extends from the Mountains on this side the River Indus, to the Mountains on the other side of Ganges ; borders Eastward upon the Kingdoms of Ara-can, Tipra, and Assa. Toward the West upon Persia, and the Usbeg Tartars. Southward upon the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour. Northward it runs up as far as the Mountain Caucasus. North-Eastward the Kingdom of Bantam, whence comes our Musk, parts it. North-Westward it borders upon the Country of Chegathay, or the Usbegs.

They are call'd Moguls, that is, white of complexion ; for the last Conquerors of the Indies where Whites ; the Natives being all Brown, or Olive-colour.

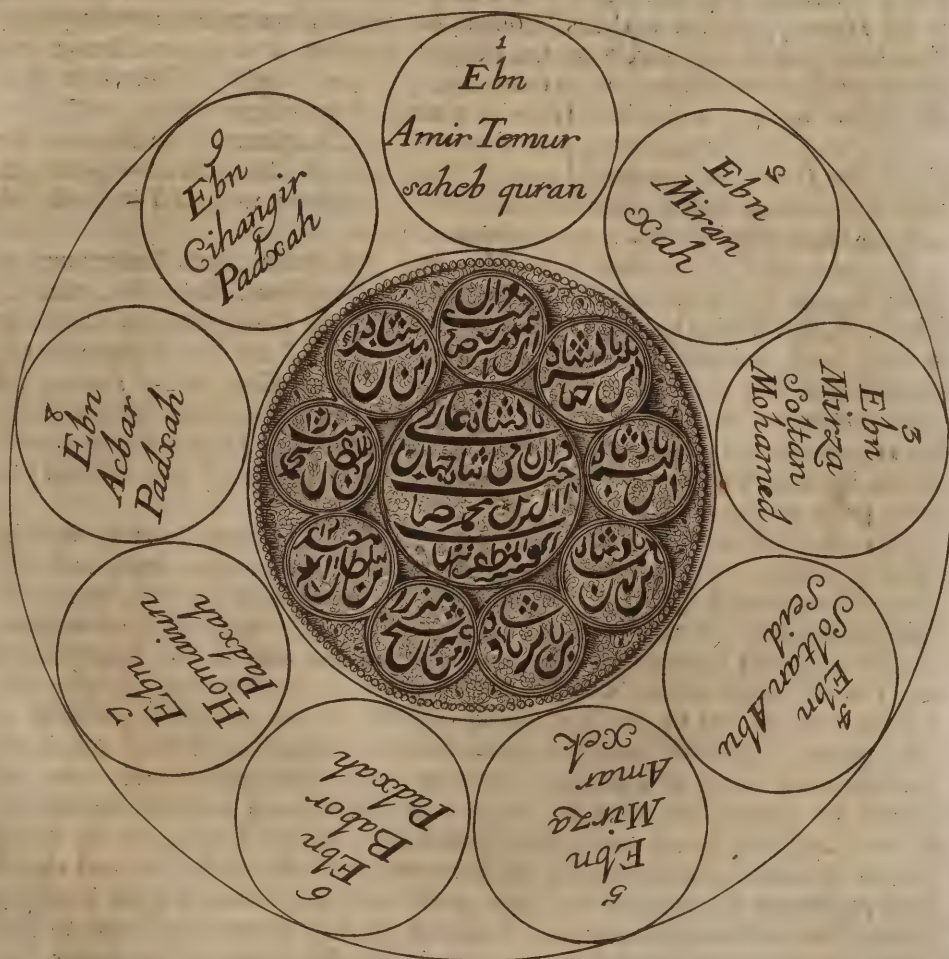

Aureng-zeb, the present Emperor, is the eleventh in a direct line, of the Descendants from the great Temur-Leng, commonly call'd Tamerlane ; the extent and renown of whose Conquests, from China to Poland, has exceeded all the actions of the greatest Captains of the former Ages. His Successors compleated the Conquest of all India between the two Rivers, with the destruction of several Kings. So that Aureng-zeb has at this time under his Dominion, the Territories of Gouzerat, Decan-Dchly, Multan, Labor, Kashemire, Bengala, and many other Territories ; not to mention several Raja's, or petty Kings, who pay him Tribute, and are his Vassals. The Succession of the Kings of India is as follows :

1. Temur-Leng, that is to say, the Lame, because one of his Legs was shorter than the other, lies buried at Samarchand, in the Country of Chegathay, or the Usbeg Tartars, being the place of his Nativity.

2. Miram-

2. Miram-Cha, the Son of Temurleng.
3. Sultan Mahomer, the Son of Miram-Cha.
4. Sultan Abonsaid-Mirza, the Son of Mahomer.
5. Hameth-Sheck, the Son of Sultan Abonsaid.
6. Sultan Babur, that is, the Valiant Prince, the first Mogul that was of greatest power in India. He dy'd in the year 1532.
7. Homajon, that is, the Happy, the Son of Sultan Babur, dyed in the year 1552.
8. Abdul Feta Gelal-Eddin Mahomer, commonly call'd Akabar, that is, the Great, reign'd fifty four years, and dyed in the year 1605.
9. Sultan Selim, otherwise call'd Jehan-guir Paisha, that is, the Victorious Emperor of the World, succeeded Akabar his Father, and dy'd 1627. He had four Sons, the eldest nam'd Sultan Kosron, the second Sultan Kourom, the third Sultan Perviz, the fourth Cha-Daniel.
10. Sultan Kourom, the second of the four, succeeded Jehan-guir his Father; and was acknowledg'd by all the Nobility, at the Castle of Agra, by the Name of Cha-Bedin Mahomed, but he would be call'd Cha-jehan, that is, King of the World.
11. Aureng-zeb, that is, the Ornament of the Throne, is the present Monarch.

The following Figure shews you what sorts of pieces the Kings cause to be thrown among the people when they come to the Throne. They represent the Arms or Signets of the Kings which I have nam'd. The biggest, in the middle, was Cha-jehan's, the tenth King. These pieces are most of them Silver; there being very few of Gold. And as for Aureng-zeb, he never coin'd any particular pieces to throw away at his Coronation.

The Great Mogul is without all question the richest and most potent Monarch of Asia; the Territories which he possesses, being his own Hereditary Possession; and being absolute Master of all the Territories whence he receives his Revenues. For in the Territories of this Prince, the great Lords are but the Royal Receivers, who give an account of the King's Revenues to the Governours of the Provinces, and they to the chief Treasurers, and Controllers of the Exchequer.

CHAP. II.

Of the Sickness and suppos'd Death of Cha-jehan, King of India, and the Rebellion of the Princes his Sons.

THIS great King had reign'd above forty years, not so much as a King over his Subjects, but rather as a Father over his Family and Children. Inasmuch, that during his Reign there was such a strictness in the Civil Government, and particularly for the security of the High-ways, that there was never any occasion to put any man to death for Robbery. In his declining years he fanci'd a young Lady of an extraordinary Beauty, that was not above thirteen years of age; and because the strength of nature would not permit him to satisfy his passion, he took certain provocatives, which were so hot, that he fell thereupon into a distemper that had almost kill'd him. This oblig'd him to shut himself up in his Haram, together with his Women, for two or three months; during which time he appear'd very rarely to the people, and that at a great distance too, which made them believe he was dead. For they are oblig'd by Custom to shew themselves to the people three times in a week, or in fifteen days at most.

Cha-jehan had six Children, four Sons and two Daughters. The Name of the eldest was Dara-Cha, the second was call'd Sultan Sujah, the third Aureng-zeb, and the fourth Morad-Bakche. The eldest of his two Daughters was call'd Begum-Saheb, and the name of the second was Rauchenara Begum.

Cha-jehan lov'd all his four Sons alike, and had made them Governours or Vice-Roys of four of his principal Provinces or Kingdoms. Dara-Cha, who was the eldest, stay'd with his Father in Dehly, and had the Government of the Kingdom of Sandi, into which he put a Deputy. Sultan Sujah had for his share the Government of Bengala. Aureng-zeb was Vice-Roy of the Kingdom of Decan; and Morad-Bakche of the Kingdom of Guzerat. But though Cha-jehan endeavour'd to give equal content to his four Sons, their Ambition was not satisfi'd with this division, but ruin'd all the good designs which so kind a Father had lay'd to preserve peace among his Children.

Cha-jehan being thus sick, and retir'd into the Womens quarter, without shewing himself for many days; the report ran that he was dead, and that Dara-Cha conceal'd his death, to gain time to provide for himself, and to secure the Empire. True it is, that the King believing he should dye, commanded Dara-Cha to call together all the Omrabs or Lords, and to seat himself upon the Throne, which belong'd to him, as the eldest of his Brothers. He also testifi'd the desire he had to see him quietly settled in the peaceable possession of the Empire. And this intention of his was look'd upon as the more just, in regard the other three Brothers had been for some time observ'd to have less respect for their Father, than Dara-Cha. Dara-Cha, who honour'd and respect-ed the King with a real tenderness, made answer to the King, that he desir'd of Heaven nothing more than the preservation of his Majesties life, and that so long as Heaven should continue that preservation, he should take it to be a greater honour to continue himself a Subject, than to ascend the Throne. And indeed he was never absent from his Father, that he might be the better able to serve him in his sickness; and because he would be present upon all occasions, sions, he lay by his Fathers Bed-side, upon a Tapestry spread upon the ground.

During the false report of the death of Cha-jehan, his three other Sons immediately rebell'd, every one laying claim to their Fathers Crown. Morat-Bakche the youngest, who had the Government of Guzerat, sent away Forces immediately to besiege Surat, the most considerable Port, and most frequented of any other all over India. The City made no resistance, for the Walls are very weak, and broken down in several places. But they defended the Cittadel, where the Treasure was, very stoutly; though the young Ambitious Prince did all he could to make himself Master of it. Chabas-Kan, one of his Eunuchs, who was General of his Army, an industrious and active person, and who carri'd on the Siege with all the experience of an old Captain; when he saw he could not carry the Castle by main force, caus'd it to be undermin'd in two places, by the assistance of an European Engineer, which took effect; so that upon the twenty-ninth of December, 1659, he threw down a good part of the Walls, and fill'd up the Moat; which very much terrifi'd the besieg'd. But they presently recover'd their courage, and though they were but a small number, they defended themselves for above forty days, to the great Dammage and slaughter of Morat-Bakche's Army. Chabas-Kan, provok'd at such a vigorous resistance, sought for all the Wives and Children, Parents and Kindred of the Canoneers that were within the Castle, to place them at the head of his men, when they made their approaches. He also sent one of the Brothers of the Governour of the place, to offer him advantageous conditions. But the Governour, being a very loyal person, and uncertain of the Kings death, rejected all his offers. The Eunuch perceiving the Resolution of the Governour, threaten'd the besieg'd to kill all their Wives and Children, Parents and Kindred, if they did not surrender the place the next day. But neither did any of those considerations prevail, till at length the breach being made wider, and the number of defendants decreasing, the Governour surrender'd upon honourably conditions; which were punctually perform'd by Chabas-Kan, who seiz'd upon all the Treasure, and carried it to Amadabat; where Morat-Bakche was busily employ'd in squeezing the people to get Money.

The news of the taking Surat being brought to this Prince, he presently provided himself a Throne, and sitting upon it on the day which was appointed for the Ceremony, he caus'd himself to be declared King, not only of Guzerat, but of all the Dominions of Cha-jehan his Father. At the same time he also coin'd Money, and sent Governors into all the Cities. But his tottering Throne, not being well fix'd, fell soon to the Ground; and the youngest of all the Brothers, for having usurp'd a Scepter that no ways appertain'd to him, was confin'd to a severe imprisonment. Prince Dara-Cha vain would have reliev'd Surat; but it was impossible. For besides that he was busied in the assistance of his Father the King, his second Brother Sultan-Sujah, more powerful than Morat-Bakche, found him far more work to do. He was already advanc'd into the Kingdom of Lahor, having absolutely reduc'd the Kingdom of Bengala. All that Dara-Cha could do, was to send Soliman Checour his eldest Son, with an Army against Sultan-Sujah. The young Prince having defeated his Uncle, and driven him back into Bengala, the Frontiers whereof he secur'd with good Garisons return'd to Dara-Cha his Father. In the mean time Morat-Bakche, acknowledged for King in the Kingdom of Guzerat, bends all his Force and Counsels to make himself Emperor of the Indies, to destroy his Brothers, and to fix his Throne either in Agra or Jehanabat.

Whiles these things pass'd, Aureng-zeb as ambitious, but more crafty than his Brothers, lets them alone to kindle the first Fires; and conceals his own designs, which afterwards appear'd so much to the damage of the rest. At first he feign'd to lay no claim to the Empire, but liv'd a private life, like a Dervich, or Religious Hermit. And the better to act his part, he declar'd to his younger Brother Morat-Bakche, whom he saw to be so ambitious, how willing he should be to assist him in his designs; telling him, that because he merited the Empire by his Valour, he would aid him with his Money and his Forces to overthrow Dara-Cha, who only stood in his way. The young Prince, blinded with the hopes of his good Fortune, easily believ'd Aureng-zeb. And so so joining Forces together, he advances towards Agra, to make himself Master of that City. Dara-Cha marches to meet them; but the Battel was as imprudently mannag'd by him, as fortunately fought by his Brothers. For Dara-Cha, confiding too much in the principal Officers of his Army, against the advice of his General, who was his chief Minister of State, and faithful to him; thought himself sure of the Victory, by falling on before his Brothers had time to repose themselves. The first onset was very rude and bloody, where Morat-Bakche, full of fire and courage, fighting like a Lyon, was shot with five Arrows into the body. The Victory leaning to Dara-Cha, Aureng-zeb retreated; but soon turn'd head again, when he saw those Traytors advancing to his aid, who were in the Army of Dara-Cha, and who had treacherously deserted him, after he had lost his best Officers and his General. With this assistance Aureng-zeb renews the fight against Dara-Cha; who seeing himself betray'd, and unable to maintain the fight with the small number of men which he had left, retreats to Agra, where the King his Father was, who began to mend. The King advis'd his Son to retire to the Fortrefs of Dehly, and to carry the Treasure that was in Agra with him; which he did without delay. Thus the Victory fell intirely to Aureng-zeb and Morat-Bakche, who before the end of the Battel, being weaken'd with the loss of blood, was forc'd to retire to his Tent, to have his wounds drest. Now it was an easie thing for Aureng-zeb to gain those Traytors, as well by reason of the vast Treasures which he had, as also for that the Indians are very inconstant, and want generosity. Besides, the Commanders are generally Fugitive Persians, persons of little worth, who are altogether for them that give most. Cha-Est-Kan, who was Uncle to these four Princes, whose Mother was the King's Sister, went over to Aureng-zeb with the greatest part of the principal Commanders that had adher'd to Dara-Cha, and Morat-Bakche, and had forsaken their Masters. Morat-Bakche then began to see his Error in having trusted Aureng-zeb, who seeing himself favour'd by Fortune, lost no time to accomplish his ends. Thereupon Morat-Bakche sends to his Brother for the half of the Treasure that he had seiz'd, that he might retire to Guzerat. But Aureng-zeb for answer assur'd him, that he had no other design than to advance him to the Throne, to which purpose he desir'd to confer with him by word of Mouth. Morat-Bakche in order to that, finding himself indifferently well recover'd of his wounds, goes to visit his Brother, who kindly welcom'd him, extoll'd his courage, and told him he deserv'd the best Empire of the world. The young Prince was charm'd by the melody of such sweet language, while his Eunuch, Shabas-Kan, did all he could to make him sensible of the snares that were laid for him. But when Morat-Bakche should have taken the Eunuchs advice, it was too late; for Aureng-zeb had already laid his plot to destroy him. He invites Morat-Bakche to a Feast; and the more the one excuses himself, the more the other presses him to come. The young Prince perceiving he would take no denial, resolv'd to go, for fear of discovering the mistrust he had, although he verily believ'd that that day would be the last of his life, and that some deadly poyson was brew'd for him. However, he was deceiv'd in that particular, for Aureng-zeb not aiming at his life then, contented himself only to deprive him of his liberty, and so instead of advancing him to the Throne, sent him away, to be safely kept in the Castle of Gavaleor.

CHAP. III.

Of the Imprisonment of Cha-jehan, and how he was punish'd by Aureng-zeb his third Son, for the injustice he had done Prince Boulaki his Nephew, the Grandchild of Gehan-guir, to whom, as to the Son of the Eldest Son, the Empire of the Moguls belong'd.

Gehan-guir, King of India, Son of Achbar, and Grandchild to Houmaïon, reign'd very peaceably during the space of twenty-three years, equally belov'd both by his Subjects and Neighbours. But his life seem'd too long to his two Sons, who were both ambitious to reign. The eldest rais'd a powerful Army near Labor, with an intention to have surpriz'd his Father, and to have possess'd himself of the Throne by force. The King incens'd at the insolence of his Son, resolv'd to chastise him; meets him with a considerable Army, defeats him, and takes him Prisoner; with many of the most considerable Nobility that adher'd to him. After which, out of a natural affection to his Children, he sav'd his life, but put out his Eyes. And when he was blind he always kept him about his person, with an intention to have prefer'd his eldest Son Boulaki to the Crown, whose Father had already many Sons, but all very young. But Sultan Courom, his second Son, believing it his right to be prefer'd before a Nephew, resolv'd to leave no stone unturn'd to remove him from his hopes, and to settle himself in possession before the death of his Father. However he conceal'd his intentions from him, appearing outwardly very obedient to his Father, who always kept about him the Children of his eldest Son. By that submission he more easily brought about his designs; for having by that means gain'd the good will of his Father, he obtain'd leave to carry along with him the blind Prince, his eldest Brother, to his Government of the Kingdom Decan. He laid before his Father, that it would be far better to remove from his sight, an object that could not chuse but be so afflicting to him; and that the prince himself, being blind, would spend the rest of his days more comfortably in Decan, where he might be more retir'd. The King not penetrating into his design, readily consented to his request. Who when he had that Poor Prince in his Clutches, made him away with that secresie which was not to be discover'd; and under the most plausible pretence imaginable, to conceal him from the eyes of men.

After the death of the blind Prince, Sultan Courom took upon him the name of Cha-jehan, that is, King of the World; and to uphold his Title, he rais'd an Army to finish what his Brother had begun, which was to dethrone his Father, and to take possession of the Empire. The King incens'd as well at the death of his Son, as at the attempt against his own person, sent a considerable Army to chastise Courom for so bold an Enterprize. But the rebellious Prince finding himself too weak to stand his Father's force, quitted the Kingdom of Decan, and with certain Vagabonds that follow'd him, wander'd from place to place, till he came to Bangala, where he rais'd an Army with an intention to give the King Battle. To which purpose, passing the Ganges, he marches directly toward the Kingdom of Labor; whom the King in person met, with an Army much more numerous and stronger than his. But Gehan-guir being old, and wearied with the troubles that his Sons had put him to, dy'd by the way, leaving Cha-jehan at liberty to pursue his own designs. However before he expir'd, the good King had time to recommend his Grandchild Boulaki to Afouf-Kan, his Generalissimo and prime Minister of State, who was Protector of the Empire. He commanded also all the Officers of the Army to acknowledg him for King, as being the lawful Heir; declaring Sultan Komrom a Rebel, and incapable of the Succession. Moreover he made Afouf-Kan to swear in particular, that he would never suffer Boulaki to be put to death, which way soever affairs went; which Afouf-Kan swore upon his Thigh; and as religiously observ'd as to the Article of not putting him to death; but not as to that of helping him to the Crown, which he design'd for Cha-jehan, who had married his eldest Daughter, the Mother of four Princes, and two Princesses.

The news of the Kings death being known at Court, caus'd a general lamentation. And presently all the Grandees of the Kingdom set themselves to execute the Kings Will and Testament, acknowledging Sultan Boulaki for Emperor, who was very young. That Prince had two Cousin-Germans, who were both of them by the Kings consent turn'd Christians, and made publick profession thereof. Those two young Princes, being very apprehensive, perceiv'd that Afouf-Kan, Father-in-Law to Cha-jehan, and Father of Cha-Est-Kan, had no good intentions toward the young King, and gave him notice of it; which cost them their lives, and the King the loss of his Dominions. For the young King, having no more wit than was agreeable to his age, openly declar'd to Afouf-Kan what his Cousins had reveal'd to him in private, and ask'd the General whether it were true, that he had a design to set up his Uncle against him or no. Afouf-Kan immediately accus'd the Reporters of falsity and impudence, and protested his fidelity to his King, and vow'd, to spend the last drop of his blood to preserve him in the possession of the Empire. However feeling his Conspiracy discover'd, he resolv'd to prevent the punishment; to which end having got the two Princes into his possession, he put them both to death. But before that, in regard of his power in the Army and in the Empire, he had already brought over to Cha-jehans party the greatest part of the Commanders and Lords of the Court; and the better to play his game, and deceive the young King, he rais'd a report that Cha-jehan was dead; and because he had desir'd to be buried near his Father Gehan-guir, the body was to be brought to Agra. This Stratagem being cunningly manag'd, Afouf-Kan himself gave advice of the feign'd death to the King; telling the King withall, that it would be but a common civility for him to go and meet the Corps when it came within a League or two of the City, being an Honour due to a Prince of the Blood of the Moguls. All this while Cha-jehan kept himself incognito, till coming within sight of the Army that lay about Agra, he caus'd himself to be put into a Coffin, wherein there was only a hole left for him to breath at. This Coffin being carri'd under a moving Tent, all the principal Officers who were of the plot with Afouf-Kan, came to perform the usual Ceremonies of State to the Body of the deceas'd Prince, while the young King was upon the way to meet the body. But then Afouf-Kan finding it seasonably to execute his design, caus'd the Coffin to be open'd, and Cha-jehan rising up, and shewing himself to the eyes of all the Army, was saluted Emperor by all the Generals and other principal Officers, who had their Cue ready; so that the name of Cha-jehan running in a moment from one mans mouth to another, the Acclamation became publick, and the Empire was settled upon him. The young King hearing the news by the way, was so surpriz'd, that he thought of nothing but how to save himself by flight, being upon a sudden forsaken by all his followers. And Cha-jehan not believing it any way necessary to pursue him, suffer'd him to wander a long time in India like a Fakir. At length he retir'd into Persia, where he was magnificently receiv'd by Cha-Sefi, who allow'd him a pension fit for so great a Prince, which he still enjoys.

Cha-jehan having thus usurp'd the Crown, the better to secure himself, and to stifle all Factions that might arise during the life of the lawful Prince, whom he had so unjustly despoil'd of his right, by degrees but to death all those that had shew'n any kindness to his Nephew. So that the first part of his Reign was noted for many acts of cruelty, that blemish'd his Reputation. No less unfortunate was the end of his Reign. For as he had unjustly depriv'd the lawful Heir, of the Empire which belong'd to him; he was himself, while he yet liv'd, depriv'd of his Crown by Aureng-zeb his own Son, who kept him Prisoner in the Fortrefs of Agra.

For after Dara-Cha had lost the Battel against his two Brothers, Aureng-zeb and Morat-Bakche in the Plain of Samonguir, and was treacherously abandoned by the principal Officers of the Army, he retir'd into the Kingdom of Lahor, with all the Treasure which the confusion of his affairs would suffer him to get together. In the the King to resist the violence of his victorious Sons, shut himself up in the Castle of Agra, to the end he might not be surpriz'd, but have time and leisure to observe how far the insolence of his Children would transport them. As for Aurengzeb, who had Morat Bakche safe enough, he enters Agra, feigning to believe a report that Chajehan was dead, that he might have liberty to get into the Fortrefs, where he said one of the Omra's would make it out. The more he reported the death of Cha-jehan, the more did the King endeavour to let the people know he was alive. But finding both Power and Fortune had taken Aureng-zeb's party; and being also in great necessity for want of water, he sent Fazel-Kan, grand Master of his Household, to assure his Son that he was alive; and withal to tell him that it was the King's command, that he should retire to his vice-Roy-ship in Decan, without putting him to any more vexation, and that upon his obedience, he would forgive whatever had past. Aurengzeb, firm in his resolution, return'd for answer to Fazel-Kan, that he was certain that the King, his Father was dead, and that upon that account he had only taken Arms to secure the Crown to himself, which he thought he deserv'd, as well as the rest of his Brothers. That if his Father were living, he had too great a respect for him to undertake the least enterprize that should displease him; and therefore that he might be certain he was not dead, he desir'd to see him, and to kiss his feet; and having so done, he would retire to his Government, and punctually obey his Commands. Fazel-Kan return'd this answer to the King, who declared that he should be glad to see his Son, and sent back Fazel-Kan, to tell him he should be welcome. But Aureng-zeb more cunning than Cha-jehan, assur'd Fazel-Kan that he would not set his foot in the Castle, till the Garrison that was in it should be sent away to make room for his men. For the Prince was afraid, and not without reason, if he should adventure into a Fortrefs where he was not absolute Master himself, lest they should seize his person, of which the King being apprehensive, consented to his proposal, not being able to do better at that time. Thereupon the Garrison which belong'd to Cha-jehan was sent out of the Castle, and another of Aureng-zeb's enter'd, commanded by Sultan Mahomet the eldest of his Sons, to whom he gave order to secure his Father's person. When they were thus got in, and his Father safe, he delaid seeing his Father from day to day, waiting (as he gave out for excuse) a kind opportunity for the interview; and pretending his Astrologers did not presently think it seasonable, he retir'd into the Countrey, to a House about two or three leagues from Agra, which very much displeased the people, who waited every day for the fortunate hour, from which they expected a conclusion of their miseries by the Father and Son's discourse together. But Aureng-zeb, who was in no great hast to see his Father, took up another resolution, which was to seize upon all his Father's treasure, which Dara-Sha had not time to carry away. He also shut up in the same Fortrefs Begum-Sahib his Sister, to keep the King company, by whom she was entirely belov'd: and took into his own hands all the wealth she had got, by her Father's liberality.

Cha-jehan enrag'd to see himself us'd in that manner by his own Son, made an attempt to escape, and kill'd some of the Guards that oppos'd him; which caus'd Aureng-zeb more strictly to confine him. In the mean time it was a wonderful thing to see that not one of the Servants of so great a King so much as offer'd to help him; that all his Subjects should forsake him, and turn their eyes upon the rising Sun; acknowledging only Aureng-zeb for King, while they seem'd to have forgotten Cha-jehan, though still alive. Thus this great Monarch sadly ended his days in Prison, and dy'd in the Fortrefs of Agra in the year 1666 the last time that I was in India.

During his reign he had begun to build the City of Jehanabad, though he had not quite finish'd it, and therefore he desir'd to see it once more before he dy'd; but Aureng-zeb would not give him leave, unless he would be content to go and come back by water, or else to be confin'd to the Castle of Jehanabad, as he was at Agra, which refusal of his Son did so torment him, that it hasten'd his end. Which as soon as Aureng-zeb heard of, he came to Agra, and seiz'd upon all the Jewels, which he had not taken from his Father while he liv'd. Begum-Sahib had also a quantity of Jewels, which he had not taken from her when he put her into the Castle. But now, because she had formerly taken her Father's part, he found out a way to deprive her of them after a very plausible manner ; making a shew of bestowing very great Honours and Caresses upon his Sister, and taking her along with him to Jehanabad. But in a short time after we heard the news of her death ; which prov'd, and all people suspected her to have been poison'd.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Flight of Dara-cha to the Kingdoms of Scindi and Guzerat : Of the second Battel which he fought against Aureng-zeb : His being taken Prisoner, and death.

D*Ara-cha* having carri'd along with him the best part of the Gold and Silver which was in the Fortrefs of Agra by his Father's advice, and being got into the Kingdom of Labor, was in good hopes to have rais'd an Army in a short time to have stopt the proceedings of his Brother. His most faithful Servants and Friends had always accompani'd him in his misfortune. And as for his Eldest Son, Soliman Shekour, he went, with the Raja Roup, into the Territories of that Raja's own demeans, to levy men ; carrying along with him five-millions of Roupies, which make of our Money seven-millions and 500000 Livres. But that great Sum opening the Raja Roup's eyes, he most treacherously and infamously seiz'd upon it ; whereupon Soliman Chekour, fearing he should proceed farther, and make some attempt upon his person, fled in all hast into the Kingdom of Sireneguer, under the protection of the Raja Nakti-Rani, who more foully and basely deliver'd him up sometime after to Aureng-zeb.

Dara-cha having notice of the Raja Roup's treason, and seeing all his friends had forsook him, and were revolted to Aureng-zeb, quitted Labor, and retir'd into the Kingdom of Scindi. Before he left the Fortrefs, he sent all the Gold, Silver, Jewels and Wealth that was in the Fort, away by water to Baker, a Fort in the midst of the River Indus. To guard all that Wealth, he left an Eunuch, and six-thousand men, with all provisions necessary for a Siege ; after that he went to Scindi, where he left several great pieces of Cannon. Then he march'd through the Territories of the Raja of Kachnagana, who made him mountainous promises to no effect ; then he came into the Kingdom of Guzerat, where the people receiv'd him as their lawful King and Heir to Cha-jehan. He sent his Orders to all the Cities, and particularly to Surat, where he appointed a Governor ; but the Governor of the Fortrefs, who was left there by Morat-Bakche, refus'd to submit to Dara-cha, so that he was forc'd to let him alone.

In the mean time Dara-cha receiv'd news at Amadabat, that Jessomseing, one of the most potent Raja's in all India, was fall'n off from Aureng-zeb. The same Raja also solicits him to advance with his Army. Dara-cha confiding in his words, follow'd his Counsel, and march'd to Emir, which was the place of Rendezvous appointed. But Raja Jessomseing being regain'd by the persuasions of Raja Jessing, more potent than himself, to favour Aureng-zeb, never met according to his promise ; nor did he come till the last push ; and then only with a design to betray the poor Prince. Thus the two Brothers meeting, they came to a Battel which lasted three dayes ; but in the heat of all the Fight, Jessomseing shewing an apparent treachery, went over to Aureng-zeb ; upon which Dara-cha's Souldiers immediately fled. Dara-cha having thus lost all his hopes, and finding Fortune contrary to all his expectations, fled away likewise with his Wives, some of his Children, and his most faithful Servants, in an equipage that drew compassion. But coming to Amadabat, the Governor having declar'd for Aureng-zeb, deni'd him entrance. Thereupon he discamp'd in the middle of the night, and took the road for Scindi.

He arriv'd at Scindi, with an intention to pass into Persia, where Cha-Abas the Second expected him with a magnificent Retinue, and a resolution to have assisted him him with Men and Money. But not daring to trust himself by Sea; as he pass'd through the Countrey of the Paranes, in the way to Candahar, he was unworthily betraid by one of the Lords of the Countrey, call'd Gion-Kan; who had been an Officer under the King his Father, and who having been condemn'd for his crimes by the mouth of his Father, and ready to be thrown under the Elephant's-foot, had been pardon'd at the intercession of Dara-cha. For an addition to his affliction, before he came to Gion-Kan's House, he receiv'd the news of the death of that particular Wife which he lov'd most entirely, and which had always accompani'd him in his misfortunes. He understood that she dy'd through heat and drowth, not being able to get a drop of water in the Countrey to refresh her thirst. The Prince was so mov'd at the news, that he fell down, like one that had been struck quite dead; and when he came to himself, he tore his clothes in the excess of his grief: an ancient custom still continu'd in the East. He had always shew'd himself insensible upon all other occasions of misfortune, but this fatal stroke so deeply pierc'd him, that he would receive no consolation from his friends. After this, he clad himself according to his misfortune; and instead of a Turbant, he only put about his head a piece of coarse Calicut. In this miserable equipage he enter'd into the House of the Traytor Gion-Kan, where being laid down to rest himself upon a Field-bed, a new subject of sorrow awak'd him. For Gion-Kan having a design to seize Sepper-Shekour, Dara-cha's second Son, the young Prince, though but a Youth, made a bold resistance, and with his Bow and Arrows laid three men upon the ground; but not being able to resist a multitude, he was at length taken. Dara-cha waken'd with the noise, saw before his eyes his Son, whom they were leading toward him, with his hands ty'd behind him. Then the miserable Father of the young Prince, no longer misdoubting the horrid treason of Gion-Kan, could not refrain from letting fall in his passion those expressions. Finish, said he, ingrateful and infamous Villain as thou art, finish the work thou hast begun; we are become Victims to bad fortune, and Aureng-zeb's unjust Ambition. But remember that I only deserve death for having sav'd thy life: for never Prince of the Royal Blood had his hands ty'd behind him before. Gion-Kan in some measure mov'd at these words, caus'd the little Prince to be unbound, and only set guards upon Dara-cha and his Son. At the same time he also sent expresses to Raja Jessomseing, and to Abdulla-Kan, to give them advice that he had seiz'd upon Dara-cha and his Train. Thereupon they made hast to share in the spoils of that poor Prince. But they could not be so swift, but that Gion-Kan had seiz'd upon all that Dara-cha had of most precious in the World; using as inhumanly both his Wives and his Children. The Raja and Abdulla being arriv'd, provided Elephants for the Prince, his Son, and his Wives, and carri'd them away immediately to Jehanabat; the people crowded to behold them, every one being desirous to see the Prince whom they so earnestly desir'd to have had for their King. Aureng-zeb caus'd them to be shewn in all the Streets and Market-places of Jehanabat, that no man might question hereafter their being taken; and as if he had glori'd in his treachery toward his Brother, he presently condemn'd and sent him away to the Castle of Affer. But of all that crowded to behold, not one would stir to assist or succour their lawful Prince. Only some few generous Souldiers who had serv'd him, and had receiv'd some kindnesses from him, seeing themselves not able to deliver their Prince, yet desirous to shew him some proofs of their acknowledgment, fell with all their fury upon the Traitor Gion-Kan, who though he were rescu'd from them at that time, yet soon after met with the reward due to his crime; for he was kill'd as he was crossing a Wood in his return home.

In the mean time Aureng-zeb, like a good Polititian, and an extraordinary Dissembler, gave it out, that it was by no order of his that Dara-cha was seiz'd; only he desir'd him to retire out of the Kingdom, which he refusing to do, Gion-Kan, unknown to him, had unworthily seiz'd his person; and without respect to the Royal-Blood, had shamefully ty'd the hands of the young Sepper-Shekour behind him: which being a crime and an indignity done to his Majesty, had been punish'd by the death of Gion-Kan and his accomplices. But this was only publish'd to abuse the people; for had it been true, Aureng-zeb would never have given order to have his brother's head cut off.

For Dara-Cha being sent from Jehanabat with a Guard to the place of his imprisonment; when he came to a fair place where he thought to repose himself, they dress'd up the Tent where he was to leave his Head. After he had eaten, Seif-Kan came and brought him the sentence of his Death. Dara-Cha seeing him enter, told him he was very welcome, and that he was glad to see one of his most faithful Servants. Seif-Kan made answer, that indeed he had formerly been one of his Servants, but that now he was the Slave of Aureng-zeb, who had commanded him to bring him his Head. Must I dye then? said Dara-Cha. 'Tis the Kings command, reply'd Seif-Kan, and I am entrusted to execute it. Sepper-Chekour, who lay in an anti-Chamber of the Tent, waking upon this contest, would have seiz'd upon certain Weapons which had been taken from him, with an intention to have assisted his Father; but he was prevented by those that accompany'd Seif-Kan. Dara-Cha would have made some resistance himself, but seeing it was in vain, he only desir'd time for his devotions, which was granted him. In the mean time Sepper-Chekour was taken from him; and while they held him in a story, a Slave took off Dara-Cha's Head, which was carried to Aureng-zeb by Seif-Kan. This bloody Tragedy being thus acted, Sepper-Chekour was sent to the Castle Gonaleor, to keep his Uncle Morat-Bakche company. As for the Wives and Daughters of Dara-Cha, they were allotted an Apartment in Aureng-zeb's Haram.

CHAP. V.

How Aureng-zeb caus'd himself to be declar'd King; and of the Flight of Sultan-Sujah.

AS it is the custom at the performance of that Ceremony, for the new King to seat himself upon the Throne; there was not much time requir'd to prepare one, in regard that Cha-jehan before his Imprisonment had finish'd that which the Great Tamerlane had begun; which was the richest and most magnificent that ever was seen. But as the Grand Cadi of the Empire, and Chief of the Law was to Proclaim the new King, Aureng-zeb found himself oppos'd by him. For the Cadi told him, that the Law of Mahomet and the Law of Nature equally forbid him to declare him King, while his Father liv'd; besides, that he had put his elder Brother to death, to whom the Empire belong'd after the death of Cha-jehan their Father. This stout resistance of the Cadi did not a little perplex Aureng-zeb; and therefore that he might not seem to appear irreligious, he call'd all the Doctors of the Law together, to whom he represented the incapacity of his Father to govern, through Age and many infirmities, that troubled him; as for Dara-Cha his Brother, he had put him to death because he was a slihter of the Law, drank Wine, and favour'd Infidels. Those reasons, intermix'd with threats, caus'd his Council of Conscience to conclude, that he deserv'd the Empire, and ought to be proclaim'd King; though the Cadi obstinately persisted in his first resolution. There was no other Remedy therefore, but to remove him from his Employment, as a disturber of the publick Peace, and to chuse another for the Honour of the Law, and the Good of the Kingdom. The person who was elected by the Council was soon confirm'd by Aureng-zeb; in acknowledgment whereof, he proclaim'd him King the twentieth of October, 1660. This Proclamation being made in the Mosquee, Aureng-zeb seated himself upon the Throne, and receiv'd the Homages of all the Grandeess of the Kingdom.

However, Aureng-zeb did not think his throne fast enough, nor himself secure in the Empire, so long as Sultan Sujah was raising a powerful Army in Bengala to release his Father. Thereupon he sent a considerable Force against him, under the Command of Sultan Mahomed his eldest Son; to whom he appointed for his Lieutenant the Emir-Jemla, one of the greatest Captains that ever came out of Persia into India. His great Conduct and Courage had render'd him a person to be reverenc'd by all posterity, had he been faithful to the the Princes whom he serv'd. But first he betray'd the King of Golconda, under whom he advanc'd his Fortune; and next to him Cha-jehan, under whose protection he rose so high, that there was not a Nobleman in all India more powerful or richer than he. Otherwise he is both belov'd and fear'd by the Soldiers, and perfectly understands the Art of War, according to the custom of the Country. The two Armies engaging several times, the Victory sometimes on the one side, and sometimes on the other; so that Sultan Mahomed finding it likely to be a tedious War, assisted by the Counsels of his Lieutenant, resolv'd to add policy to strength. Thereupon he treats underhand with the Officers of his Uncle's Army, makes them magnificent promises, and so earnestly solicites them to come over to Aureng-zeb's party, whom he call'd the Pillar and Protector of Mahomet's Law, that he gain'd the principal, to whom he sent considerable Presents, to confirm them in their resolutions. This was a mortal blow to Sultan-Sujah, against which he could not provide. For they that adher'd to him being a mercenary generation, that serves whoever gives most, finding they had little more to expect from a Prince whose Exchequer was empty, resolv'd to drive a Trade with Aureng-zeb, who was Master of all the Treasure in the Kingdom. And thus did Aureng-zeb debauch the Army of his Brother, who in the last Battel, seeing himself abandon'd by all his Soldiers, was forc'd to save himself by flight, with his Wives and Children. The Traytors ashamed of their treachery, did not so smartly pursue the unfortunate Prince as they might have done, but presently fell to plund'ring his Tents and Baggage; which Emir-Jemla, suffer'd them to do, in recompence of their Treason. Sultan-Sujah in the mean time crossing the Ganges with his Retinue, retir'd some time afterwards into the Kingdom of Arakan, upon the Confines of Bengala, where we shall leave him for a time.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Imprisonment of Sultan-Mahomed, Aureng-zeb's eldest son; and of Sultan Soliman Chekour, eldest son of Dara-Cha.

Though Aureng-zeb were esteem'd a very great Politician, and were so indeed, yet he fail'd in his Politicks, to trust his Son with such a powerful Army, under the Conduct of a Captain who had already betray'd two Masters. However at length he began to be jealous, lest Heaven should inspire his own Son to revenge the crimes which he had committed. And upon this, receiving intelligence, that Sultan Mahomed began to be very pensive and melancholy, he then absolutely believ'd that his Son was practising mischief against him; for the better discovery whereof, he wrote to Emir-Jemla. But the Letter unhappily miscarrying, was taken by Sultan Mahomed's Guards, and giv'n to the young Prince; who being a person of a quick apprehension, conceal'd the business from Emir-Jemla; and fearing lest he should receive other Orders more precise to take away his life, he resolv'd to pass the Ganges and throw himself upon his Uncle Sultan-Sujah; from whom he expected more mercy than from his Father. With this resolution he feign'd to go a fishing, and passing the Ganges, with several Officers that adher'd to him, he went directly to Sultan Sujah's Camp, which lay on the other side of the River; the Sultan having rais'd a considerable Force in the Kingdom of Arakan. Sultan Mahomed coming into his Uncle's presence, threw himself at his feet, begging his pardon for having taken Arms against him, as being forc'd thereto by his Father. Now though Sultan Sujah had reason enough to believe, that Mahomed's coming into his Camp, was only a trick of his Father, to send his Son as a Spy to discover his condition; yet being a virtuous and generous Prince, and seeing his Nephew prostrate at his feet, he could not but raise him up; after which, embracing him, he assur'd him of his Protection against Aureng-zeb. Some days after, these two Princes made an attempt, and passing Ganges, and fetching a compass thought to have surpriz'd the Enemies Army, who dreamt not of their coming. They made a vigorous onset, and kill'd a great number of men. But when they found the whole Army had taken the Alarm, they contented themselves with the mischief they had done, and repass'd the Ganges, for fear of being surrounded by number.

Emir-Jemla had already given intelligence to Aureng-zeb of the Flight of his Son; which sensibly griev'd the Father, though he durst not shew his anger, for fear of incensing the Emir to betray him, as he had betray'd his Father. Thereupon he cunningly wrote to him, that he rely'd altogether upon his prudence and policy to retrieve his Son to his duty; that he was young, and that what he had done, was only out of his heat of youth, and the inconstancy incident to his years. The confidence which Aureng-zeb seem'd to put in Emir-Jemla incited the General to use all his endeavours to get Mahomed out of Sultan Sujah's hands. Thereupon he gave the young Prince to understand his Father's good intentions toward him, and that he was ready to receive him with open Arms, so that he would but make good use of his Residence with Sultan Sujah, which he might pretend was done for the advantage to his Father, and for which his Father would have rather cause to extol his Prudence and affection than otherwise. The young Prince easily suffer'd himself to be perswaded, and the same way he went to his Uncle's, the same way he return'd to his Father's Camp; where Emir-Jemla receiv'd him honourably, and with all the demonstrations of joy. He advis'd him also, to tell his Father when he saw him, that he did not go over to Sultan Sujah, but only with a design to observe what Forces he had, and the Discipline of his Army; and that he intended to have speedily return'd, and to have given him an account of what he had done for his service. Presently Orders came from Aureng-zeb, that his Son should be sent to him; so that Mahomed, whether by constraint, or willingly, set forward for Jehanabar, attended by the Guards which Emir-Jemla had appointed. The King having notice of his arrival, his Majesty order'd him a Lodging without the Palace, and would not permit him to kiss his hands; pretending he was not well.

All this while Soliman Chekour, after he had been betray'd by the Raja Roup, had continu'd under the protection of Nakti-Rani in the Province of Serenaguer. This Prince, as stout as he was unfortunate, was constrain'd to lead a Savage life among the Mountains, for fear of falling into the hands of Aureng-zeb, nor could he with all his Forces do him any harm in that place. Beside Nakti-Rani had assur'd him with an Oath, accompany'd with all the Ceremonies that could make it solemn, and invioable; that he would rather lose his Territory, than that Aureng-zeb should do the least violence to that protection which he afforded him. This was done upon the Banks of a River, which passes through his Country, where he wash'd his body, in token of the purity of his Soul; and being thus purify'd in the Water, he made his protestations to Soliman-Chekour, never to forsake him, taking his Gods to Witness of the sincerity of his intentions. Upon this, Soliman-Chekour never took any farther care, but every day went to divertise himself with hunting. While he gives up himself to his pleasure, Aureng-zeb marches his Army toward the Mountains, thinking to force Nakti-Rani to surrender Soliman-Chekour into his power. But the Raja with a thousand men being able to defend the Avenues of his Country against a hundred thousand, Aureng-zeb finding he could do no good, that way, has recourse to policy. He undertakes at first to treat with the Raja, but in vain, for the Raja would not violate his Oath; and his Priests assur'd him besides, that Aureng-zeb should ere long be depos'd, and that Soliman-Chekour should Reign in his room.

Aureng-zeb thus prevented, resolves to make another kind of War upon him. Thereupon he forbids all commerce between his and the Raja's Subjects; which was very prejudicial to the latter. This caus'd the people to murmur at the protection which he had given to Soliman-Chekour; and at length they publickly cry'd out, that it was to the prejudice of the Publick. Their Priests also, thus alarm'd, began to doubt the truth of their Oracles, and to think it convenient to put another interpretation upon them. But the main thing was, that the Raja Jessomseing who had betrayed Dara-Cha, wrote privately to Nacti-Rani, that it was for the safety of his Person and Dominions, to submit to Aureng-zeb; and to surrender his kinsman up into his hands. This advice of Jessomseing put him to a very great plunge; dreading on the one side the breach of his oath; on the other, the revolt of his people. Uncertain what course to take, he consults the Bramins, who gave their opinions that it was his duty rather to preserve his People and his Laws, which would be both destroyed, should they fall into the hands of Aureng-zeb, than to keep his Faith with a Prince from whom he could never expect any advantage. These consultations being kept private from Soliman Chekour, his ruine was concluded upon, while he thought himself most secure. Thereupon Nacti-Rani, with a Salvo, as he thought, to his Honour and his Conscience, return'd for answer to Jessomseing, that he could not consent to betray the Prince; but that Aureng-zeb might take his opportunity to seize his person, yet preserve his reputation too: in regard that Soliman Chekour was wont to go a Hunting upon certain Mountains in his Countrey with a small retinue, and that it would be an easy thing for him to send a number of Souldiers sufficient to apprehend him.

So soon as Jessomseing had receiv'd this answer, he gave order to his Son to see the business affected as the plot was laid. So that Soliman Chekour one day going a Hunting to the usual place, was snapt by a strong party that lay in Ambuscade. The Prince presently apprehended the treason, and defended himself with the assistance of his Attendants, who were all slain; he himself slew nine, but at length over-number'd, was taken and carri'd to Jehanabat. When he came into Aureng-zeb's presence, the King ask'd him how he did? As well as a Prisoner of yours can do, said he, who expects no better usage from you, than his Father receiv'd before. The King bid him not be afraid, that he had no design to put him to death, but only to secure his person. Aureng-zeb after that, demanding of him what was become of all the Treasure which he had carri'd away, the Prince made answer that he had spent a great part in raising Souldiers against him to have ruin'd him, if it had been his good fortune. That a good part was in the hands of Raja Roup, whose avarice and perfidiousness was sufficiently known. And that Nacti-Rani had got the remainder to deliver him to his enemies, to the prejudice of his word and honour. Aureng-zeb was surpriz'd and touch'd at the boldness of his Nephew; but ambition shutting his eyes, and stifling all thoughts of justice, which the just remorse of Conscience might excite within him, he gave order that Sultan Mahomet his Son, and Soliman Chekour his Nephew should both be committed to the Fort of Gonaleor to keep Morat-Bak-che company, which was done the 30th of Jan. 1661.

Sultan Sujah, who was yet alive, but still miserably, was the last thorn in Aureng-zeb's foot; and the person that drew it out for him, and rid him of his last pain, was the King of Arakan, whither the unfortunate Prince was at length forc'd to retire. Who finding all his hopes to be lost, began to think of a Pilgrimage to Mecca, and from thence to go into Persia, and implore a Sanctuary under the protection of that Prince. To this purpose he thought he might obtain a Vessel from the King of Arakan, or the King of Pegu, to carry him to Mecca: but he was ignorant that neither of those Kings had any Vessels, that would live in the main Ocean. So that he was constrain'd to stay with the King of Arakan, an Idolater, whose Daughter he desir'd in Marriage, which the King granted, and by whom he had a Son. But that which ought to have been the greatest occasion of friendship between the Son-in-law and the Father-in-law, was the greatest reason of their hatred and falling-out. For some Lords of the Country, who began to be jealous of Sultan Sujah, buzz'd the King of Arakan in the ear, as if he had an intention by vertue of his Marriage, to dispossess him of his Throne, and to leave it to his own Son. The Pagan King easily believ'd what they said. Nor were these supitions ill-grounded; for Sultan Sujah having good store of Gold and Jewels, easily corrupted several Mahumetans that liv'd in the Kingdom of Arakan, and with those and about two-hunder'd men more that had follow'd him after the rout of his Army, he undertook a most bold enterprize, which was yet a mark rather of despair than courage. He appointed a day to those of his party to force the Palace, and after they had put all the Royal Family to the Sword, to proclaim him King of Arakan. But this Plot being discover'd the day it should have been executed, Sultan Sujah, and Sultan Bangue, his Son, had no other way to save themselves, but by flight into the Kingdom of Pegu. But their way lying over Mountains almost impassable, and through thick Forrests full of Tigers and Lions, and being also closely pursu'd, their flight avail'd them little or nothing. Sultan Bangue however being behind, to keep the Pursuers in play while his Father and his Family gain'd ground, stoutly defended himself against the first Assailants, but at length being overpower'd by number, he was taken together with his two little Brothers, his Mother and his Sisters; who were all put in Prison, where they were very ill-us'd. But some time after, the King having a desire to marry the eldest Sister of Sultan Bangue, they had a little more liberty allow'd them. However they enjoy'd it not long, for the young Prince being of a turbulent and ambitious spirit, plotted new treasons against the King, which being discover'd, the King immediately caus'd the whole Family to be put to death, not sparing the young Princess his Wife, though she were big with Child.

As for Sultan Sujah, who was formost among those that fled, it is more generally thought that either he was slain by the Souldiers who were sent to apprehend him, or that he was torn in pieces by the Tigers and Lions; of which those Forrests are full.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Beginning of Aureng-zeb's Reign, and the Death of Cha-jehan his Father.

SOME days before he ascended the Throne, he sent to his Father to send him some of his Jewels, to the end he might appear before his people with the same magnificence as his Predecessors had done. Cha-jehan taking this request of his Sons for an affront put upon him in Prison, fell into such a rage that he continu'd mad for some dayes, and had like to have dy'd upon it. In the excess of his vexation he call'd several times for a Morter and a Pestle, threatening to beat all his Jewels to powder before his Son should have them. But Begum-Sahib, his eldest Daughter, never forsook him, throwing her self at his feet, and by vertue of that criminal power which she had over him, as being both his Daughter and his Wife, kept him from using that extremity; more out of a design to preserve the Jewels for her self, than for her Brother, to whom she had always been a mortal enemy. For this reason, when Aureng-zeb ascended the Throne, he had no more than one Jewel upon his Bonnet: This Bonnet cannot be call'd a Crown; and by consequence neither can the Ceremony be call'd a Coronation.

At the time that Aureng-zeb took possession of the Throne, he would not eat any wheaten-bread, nor meat, nor fish, but fed upon barley-bread, herbs and sweet-meats, which was a kind of Penance that he impos'd upon himself for so many crimes.

When Aureng-zeb was settled in the Empire, several Embassadors came to Jehanabat to congratulate him, on the behalf of the Kings their Masters, as from the King of the Osbeck Tartars, the Seriff of Mecca, the Prince of Balsara, and the Kings of Arabia Felix, and Ethiopia. The Hollanders also sent Menheir Adrican, chief of their Factory in Surat, who was kindly receiv'd, and first dispatch'd. For 'tis a piece of State, to keep the Embassadors a good while at Court before they have Audience. All these Embassadors presented Aureng-zeb with the rarities of their Countrey; who to get himself a good name in Asia, sent them away very well satisfi'd.

Some months before the death of Cha-jehan Aureng-zeb sent an Embassador into Persia, who was magnificently receiv'd. For a month together he was nothing but feasted and carest with all manner of divertisements. The day that he was to make his Present from the Great Mogul, the King of Persia fate upon his Throne in a most magnificent habit; and having receiv'd the Embassador's Present, he presently divided it in contempt among the Officers of his House; only keeping for himself a Diamond that weigh'd sixty Carats. Some few days after he call'd for the Embassador, and after some discourse, he ask'd him if he were of the Sect of the Turks? To which the Embassador returning an answer, and letting some words fall against Haly, the King ask'd him what his name was. He reply'd that Cha-jehan had given him the Name of Baubec-kan, that is, Lord of a free heart; and had honour'd him with one of the chief employments at Court. Then th'art a Villain, reply'd the King of Persia, with an angry countenance, to desert thy Sovereign in his necessity, having receiv'd so many favours from him, and to serve a Tyrant, that keeps his Father in Prison, and has massacr'd all his Brothers. How dares he, pursu'd the King, take upon him the arrogant Title of Alem-guir Aureng-sha, or King of all the World, who never conquer'd any thing, but possesses all he has by treachery and parricide? Hast thou been one of those that counsell'd him to shed so much blood, to be the Executioner of his Brothers, and to keep his Father in Prison? Thou art not worthy to wear a Beard; and with that immediately caus'd it to be shav'd off; which is the greatest indignity that can be put upon a man in that Countrey. Shortly after he commanded the Embassador to return home, sending along with him for a Present to Aureng-zeb, an hunder'd and fifty beautiful Horses, with a great quantity of Gold and Silver-Carpets, Cloath of Gold, rich Shashes, and other Stuffs, to a vast value. When Baubec-kan was come back to Agra, where the King was then, Aureng-zeb incens'd at the affront which the Sophi of Persia had giv'n him in the person of his Embassador, he took the Horses and sent some of them into the great Piazza, others to the corners of the Streets, causing it to be proclaim'd that the followers of Haly could not ride those Horses without being Niggs, that is to say, unclean, as coming from a King that did not obey the true Law. After that he caus'd the Horses to be kill'd, and all the rest of the Present to be burnt; uttering many reproachful words against the King of Persia, with whom he was mortally offended.

At length Cha-jehan happ'ning to dye toward the end of the year 1666. Aureng-zeb found himself rid of an object that every hour reproach'd his Tyranny; and began to enjoy himself with more delight. Soon after he receiv'd his Sister Begum-Saheb into favour, restoring to her all her Governments, and giving her the Name of Cha-Begum, that is to say, Princess Queen. The truth is, she is a Woman of Prodigious parts, and able to govern the whole Empire. And had her Father and Brothers taken her counsel at the beginning of the War, Aureng-zeb had never been King. As for Rauchenara Begum his Sister, she had always taken his side, and when she heard he had taken Arnis, she sent him all the Gold and Silver she could procure. In recompence whereof he promis'd her, when he came to be King, to give her the Title of Cha-Begum, and that she should sit upon a Throne: in all which he was as good as his word; and they continu'd very loving together till I was last at Genanabat: but then they were not so good friends, upon this occasion. The Princess having cunningly stoll'n into her Apartment a handsom young fellow, could not so privately let him out again after she had quite tir'd him; but the King was advertiz'd thereof. Thereupon the Princess to prevent the shame and reproach, ran to the King in a great pretended fright and told him that there was a man got into the Haram, even to her very Chamber, and that his intention was certainly either to have kill'd or robb'd her: that such a thing was never seen; that it concern'd the safety of his Royal Person, and that he would do well to punish severely the Eunuchs that kept guard that night. Presently the King ran in person with a great number of Eunuchs, so that the poor young man had no way to escape but by leaping out of a window into the River that runs by the Palace-walls; whereupon a world of people ran out to seize him; the King commanding them to do him no harm, but to carry him to the Officer of Justice. However he has not been heard of ever since that time.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Preparations against the Feast of the Great Mogul, when he is weigh'd solemnly every year. Of the richness of his Thrones, and the Magnificence of his Court.

His great Feast begins the fifth of November, and lasts five days. They usually weigh the King at the time of his Birth; and if he weighs more than he did the year before, there is great rejoicing. When he is weigh'd he seats himself upon the richest of his Thrones; and then all the Grandees of the Kingdom come to congratulate and present him. The Ladies of the Court send him their Presents also, as likewise do the Governours of Provinces, and others in great Employments. The Presents consists of Jewels, Tissues, Carpetts and other Stuffs; besides Camels, Elephants, Horses, and indeed any thing that is rare and of value. 'Tis said he receives that day thirty Millions of Livres.

They begin to prepare for this Feast the seventh of September, about two Months before it begins. The first thing they do, is to cover the two great Courts overhead, from the middle of each Court to the Hall, which is open upon three sides. The Pavilions that cover these two void places, are of Purple Velvet, Embroider'd with Gold, and so weighty, that the Posts which sustain them are as big as the Mast of a Ship; some thirty, some forty foot high. There are thirty-eight of these Posts to uphold the Tent in the first Court; and those next the Hall, are plated with Gold as thick as a Duckett. The rest are plated with Silver of the same thickness. The Cords are of Cotton of divers colours; some of them as big as a good Cable.

The first Court is surrounded with Portico's and little Chambers, where the Omrabs keep Guard. For every eight days the Omrabs relieve the Guard; and during those eight days, the Omrab who is upon the Guard, has a Dish of Meat out of the Kings Kitchen. When he sees it coming afar off, he makes three obeysances, laying his hand three times upon the Ground, and three times upon his Head, crying out, at the same time, God preserve the Kings health, give him long Life and Victory over his Enemies. They take it for a great Honour to Guard the King; and when they go upon the Guard, they put on all their most sumptuous Apparel; and their Horses, Camels, and Elephants are all richly adorn'd. Some of the Camels carry a small Piece of Ordnance, with a man behind to shoot it off. The meanest of these Omrabs commands a thousand Horse; but if he be a Prince of the Blood, he commands six thousand.

The Great Mogul has seven Thrones, some set all over with Diamonds; others with Rubies, Emraulds, and Pearls.

The largest Throne, which is set up in the Hall of the first Court, is in form like one of our Field-Beds, six foot long, and four broad. The Cushion at the back is round like a Bolster; the Cushions on the sides are flat.

I counted about a hundred and eight pale Rubies in Collets, about this Throne, the least whereof weigh'd a hundred Carats; but there are some that weigh two hundred. Emraulds I counted about a hundred and sixty, that weigh'd some threescore, some thirty Carats.

The under-part of the Canopy is all embroider'd with Pearls and Diamonds, with a Fringe of Pearls round about. Upon the top of the Canopy, which is made like an Arch with four Panes, stands a Peacock, with his Tail spread, consisting all of Saphirs, and other proper colour'd Stones; the Body is of beaten Gold, enchas'd with several Jewels; and a great Ruby upon his breast, at which hangs a Pearl, that weighs fifty Carats. On each side of the Peacock stand two Nose-gays, as high as the Bird, consisting of several sorts of Flowers, all of beaten Gold enamel'd. When the King seats himself upon the Throne, there is a transparent Jewel, with a Diamond Appendant, of eighty or ninety Carats, encompass'd with Rubies and Emraulds, so hung that it is always in his Eye.

Eye. The twelve Pillars also that uphold the Canopy, are set with rows of fair Pearl, round, and of an excellent Water, that weigh from six to ten Carats a piece. At the distance of four feet, upon each side of the Throne, are plac'd two Parasols, or Umbrello's, the handles whereof are about eight foot high, cover'd with Diamonds; the Parasols themselves are of crimson Velvet, embroider'd and fring'd with Pearls.

This is the famous Throne which Tamerlane began, and Cha-jehan finish'd; which is really reported to have cost a hundred and sixty Millions, and five hundred-thousand Livres of our Money.

Behind this stately and magnificent Throne there is another less, in the form of a Tub, where the King bathes himself; it is an Oval, seven foot long, and five broad. The outside whereof shines all over with Diamonds and Pearls; but there is no Canopy over it.

Coming into the first Court, on the right hand, you see a particular Tent, where during all the Feast, the Morice-Dancers are appointed to make sport, while the King sits upon his Throne. On the left hand is another Tent, appointed from the Principal Officers of the Army and Household.

In the same Court, while the King sits upon his Throne, are to be seen thirty Horses, fifteen upon one side, and fifteen upon the other, lead by two men. Their Bridles are very short, but for the most part enrich'd with Diamonds, Rubies, Emraulds, and Pearls, the bits whereof are of pure Gold. Every Horse wears between his Ears a rich Plume of Feathers, with a little Cushion upon his Back, ty'd on with a Surcingle, both being embroider'd with Gold; and about his Neck hung some fair Jewel, which was either a Diamond, a Ruby, or an Emrauld. The worst of those Horses cost three thousand, some five thousand Crowns; and some there were, that were never bought under ten thousand. The young Prince, who was between seven and eight years old, rode upon a Horse no higher than a good big Greyhound, but very well shap'd.

About an hour after the King has been sitting upon his Throne, seven stout Elephants bred up for War, are brought out. One of those Elephants has his Seat fix'd upon his back, if the King should have a mind to ride out. The others are cover'd with Cloaths richly embroider'd, with Chains of Gold and Silver about their Necks; and there are four that carry the Kings Standard upon their Cruppers, fasten'd to a Half-Pike, which a man seated on purpose close by, holds upright with his hand. These Elephants are brought within fifty paces of the Throne, and when they come before the King, they make their obeysances to him, laying their Trunks to the ground, and then lifting them up above their Heads three times; every time he makes a great cry, and then turning his back to the King, one of the Leaders turns up the Cloath, that the King may see he is in good case. There belongs also to every one a Cord, which is put round his body, to shew how much he is grown since the last year. The first of these Elephants, which the King most esteems, is a great furious Creature, that has five hundred Roupies allow'd him every month. He is fed with good Victuals, and a great quantity of Sucre, and they give him Aqua-vita to drink. When the King rides forth upon his Elephant, the Omrabs follow on Horseback. And when he rides on Horseback, the Omrabs follow him on foot.

After the King has seen his Elephants, he rises up, and goes into his Haram through a little oval door behind the Throne.

The five other Thrones are set up in another magnificent Hall in another Court, all cover'd over with Diamonds, without any colour'd Stone.

When the King has staid about half an hour, he comes out again, attended by three or four Eunuchs, and seats himself in the other Hall, upon the middlemost of the five Thrones, where the Omrabs come, as long as the five days of the Festival last, and make their Presents to him.

CHAP. IX.

Some other Observations upon the Court of the Great Mogul.

AFTER Aureng-zeb had settled himself in the Empire, which he usurp'd from his Father and his Brothers, he impos'd upon himself a very severe penance, eating nothing but Pulse and Sweet-meats, which has made him very meagre and lean. All the time the Comet lasted in the year 1665, which appear'd very great in the Indies, where I then was, Aureng-zeb drank nothing but Water, and eat nothing but Bread made of Millet; which so impair'd his health, that it had like to have cost him his life. Besides, he always lay upon the ground, only with a Tigers Skin under him; since which time he has never been perfectly well.

I saw him drink three several times, while he sat upon his Throne; to which purpose he had brought him a large Cup of Crystal of the Rock, round and all of a piece, with a Gold Cover, enrich'd with Diamonds, Rubies, and Emraulds, the foot thereof being of the same. But no persons see the King eat, only his Wives and his Eunuchs. And it is but very rarely that he goes to Dine or Sup with any of his Subjects. When I was last in India, Giafer-Kan, who was his Grand Vizier, and his Uncle by marriage of his Wife, invited the King to see a new Palace which he was building, who went accordingly, and it was the greatest Honour his Majesty could do him; in retaliation whereof, Giafer-Kan, and his Wife presented him with Jewels, Elephants, Camels, Horses, and other things, to the value of a Million and fifty thousand Livres of our Money. For Giafer-Kan's Wife is the most magnificent and liberal Woman in all India, and spends more her self than all the Kings Wives and Daughters, which makes her Husband in debt, though he be almost Lord of all the Empire.

When the King is carried in his Palleki to the Mosquee, one of his Sons follows him, a Horseback, and all his Omrabs and officers of his Household come behind him a foot. Those that are Mahumetans stay for him at the top of the ascent to the Mosquee, and when he is ready to come out, they march before him to the Gate of his Palace. Eight Elephants always go before the King, to every one of which belong two men; one to lead the Elephant, and the other, who sits upon his back, carries a Standard fix'd to a Half-Pike. The other four carry Seats or Thrones upon their backs, the one square, the other round; one cover'd, the other inclos'd with Glafs of several fashions. When the King goes abroad, he has usually five or six hundred men to attend him for his Guard, arm'd every one with a kind of an Half-Pike. To the heads of their Pikes they tie two Squibs cross-wise, about a foot long, and as big as a mans Arm, which will carry the Half-Pike five hundred paces. The King is also attended by three or four hundred Musquiteers; but they are very Cowards, and hardly know how to shoot off their pieces. He has also a certain number of Cavalry, which are Soldiers much alike. A hundred Europeans might well beat a thousand Indians; but they would hardly accustom themselves to live such sober lives. For as well the Horse as the Infantry will live upon Meal kneaded with Water and brown Sugar; but in the evening, when they have convenience, they make Quichery, which is Rice boil'd in Water and Salt, with a Grain, so call'd. When they eat it, they stir it with the ends of their Fingers in melted Butter, which is the usual food of the Soldiers and poor people. Beside, the heat would kill our Souldiers, who would never be able to endure the Sun all the day long, as the Indians do. By the way, give me leave to tell you, that the Country people have no other cloathing than a piece of Linnen to hide their secret parts, being miserable poor; for if their Governours know they have any thing about them, they seize it either as their right, or by force. There are some Provinces in India that lye waste, the Natives being forc'd to fly, by reason of the cruelty of their Governours. Under the pretence of being Mahumetans they persecute the poor

Ido-

Idolaters beyond all measure; and if any one of them embrace Mahometism, 'tis only because they would not work any longer. For they turn Souldiers or Faquirs, who are a sort of people that profess a renunciation of the World, and live upon Alms, but are indeed very Rascals. They reckon that there are in India 800000 of these Mahometan Faquirs, and twelve hunder'd-thousand Idolaters.

Once in fifteen days the King goes a Hunting, mounted upon his Elephant, and so continues during the chase. All the Game he takes is brought within Musket-shot of his Elephants. Which consists generally of Lions, Tigers, Harts, and wild-Goats. For they will not meddle with Boars, as being Mahometans. When he returns home, he puts himself into his Palleki, and goes in the same order, and with the same Guard, as when he returns from the Mosquee, saving that when he goes a Hunting, he is attended with three or four-hunder'd Horsemen, that ride without any discipline in the World.

As for the Princesses, as well the Wives, Daughters and Sisters of the King, they never stir out of the Palace, unless it be to spend a few days in the Countrey for their pleasure. Some of them go abroad, but very rarely, to visit some great Noble-mens Wives, as the Wife of Giafer-Kan, who is the King's Aunt. But that is only by particular leave of the King. And then it is not the custom as in Persia, where the Ladies make their visits only by night, and with a great number of Eunuchs, who clear the Streets of all people they meet. For in the Mogul's Court, they usually go out about nine in the morning, with only three or four Eunuchs, and ten or twelve Slaves, which are instead of Maids of Honour.

The Princesses are carri'd in Palleki's cover'd over with Embroider'd Tapestry, and a little Coach to hold one single person that follows the Palleki, drawn by two men, the wheels not being above a foot in diameter. The reason why they carry that Coach along with them, is, because that when the Princesses arrive at the House where they intend to alight, the men that carry the Palleki, not being permitted to go any farther than the first Gate, they then take their Coaches, and are drawn by their female-Slaves to the Womens Apartment. I have also observ'd, that in all the Houses of great Noble-men, the Womens Apartment is at the farther end of all. So that you must cross two or three great Courts, and a Garden or two, before you can come at it.

When the Princesses are married to any of the Court-Grandees, they become absolute Mistresses of their Husbands; so that if they study not to please them, and do not as they would have them, in regard of their free access to the King they over-rule the King many times to their prejudice, even to the turning them out of their Employments.

As it is a custom that the first-born always is Heir to the Throne, though he be the Son of a Slave, so soon as the Princesses of the King's Haram perceive that there is any one among them big with Child, they use all the artifices imaginable to make them miscarry. Insomuch that being at Patna in the year 1666, Cha-Est-Kan's Chirurgion assur'd me, that the Wife of Cha-Est-Kan had procur'd the miscarrying of eight Women, because she would suffer no other Womens Children but her own.

CHAP. X.

Of the Commodities which are brought as well out of the Dominions of the Great Mogul, as out of the Kingdoms of Golconda and Vissapour, and other neighbouring Territories.

IT will be necessary for the Reader to take notice what I have already said concerning the weights and Measures in use among the Indians, where I spoke concerning the Mines, and the Serre. Now for the Cobit.

The Cobit is a measure for all Commodities that are measur'd by the Ell, of which there are several sorts, as in Europe there are several sorts of Ells. The Cobit is divided into 24 Tafots: and in regard the greatest part of the Commodities of India are utter'd at Surat, I have giv'n you a description in the margin of the fourth part of a Surat-Cobit, divided into six Tafots.

Of their Silk.

Kasembasar, a Village in the Kingdom of Bengala, sends abroad every year two and twenty-thousand Bales of Silk; every Bale weighing a hunder'd pound. The two and twenty Bales make two millions and two-hunder'd-thousand pound, at sixteen ounces to the pound. The Hollanders usually carry away six or seven-thousand Bales, and would carry away more, did not the Merchants of Tartary, and the Mogul's Empire oppose them: for they buy up as much as the Hollander; the rest the Natives keep to make their Stuffs. This Silk is all brought into the Kingdom of Guzerat, the greatest part whereof comes to Amadabat, and to Surat, where it is wrought up.

In the first place they make Carpets of Silk and Gold, others of Silk and Silver, others all of Silk: For the Worsted Carpets are made at Verrapour, some twelve leagues from Agra.

In the second place they make Satins with streaks of Gold and Silver; others plain; with Taffata's after the same fashion.

In the third place they make Patoles, which are a sort of Silk-stuff very thin, but painted with all sorts of Flowers, the manufacture whereof is at Amadabat. They cost from eight Roupies to forty the piece. This is a Commodity wherein The Dutch will not suffer any one of the Hollanders to trade in particular: for they transport it to the Philippine-Islands; to the Islands of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, and other neighbouring Islands.

The raw-Silk of Kasembasar is yellowish, as are all the raw-Silks that come from Persia and Sicily; but the Natives of Kasembasar have a way to whiten it, with a Lye made of the Ashes of a Tree which they call Adam's Fig-tree; which makes it as white as the Palestine-Silk. The Hollanders send away all their Merchandize which they fetch out of Bengala, by water, through a great Canal that runs from Kasembasar into Ganges, for fifteen leagues together; from whence it is as far by water down the Ganges to Ougueh, where they laid their Ships.

Of the Calicuts: and first of the painted Calicuts, call'd Chites.

CHites or Painted Calicuts, which they call Calmendar, that is to say, done with a Pencil, are made in the Kingdom of Golconda; and particularly about Maslipatan. But there is made so little, that though a man should employ all the Workmen that understand the art of weaving Calicuts, he would hardly find enough to make three Bales.

The Chites which are made in the Empire of the Great Mogul are all Printed; and nothing so beautiful, neither for the figures nor the fineness of the Linnen. Those which are made at Lahor, are the coarsest, and consequently the cheapest of all. They are sold by Corges, every Corge consisting of twenty pieces, which cost from 16 to 30 Roupies.

The

The Chites which are made at Seronge, are sold from 20 to 50 Roupies the Corge, or thereabouts.

These Chites serve for Coverlets for Beds, for Sofra's or Table-cloaths after the Countrey-fashion, Pillowbears, Handkerchiefs, but more especially for Waistcoats as well for men as women in Persia.

The fine Calicut-Chites are made at Brampour; and are us'd for handkerchiefs by those that snuff Tobacco.

The women also, over all Asia, make Veils of these Calicuts, to wear over their heads, and about their shoulders, which Veils are call'd Ormis.

The Basta's or Calicuts painted red, blue, and black, are carr'd white to Agra, and Amadabat, in regard those Cities are nearest to the places where the Indigo is made that is us'd in colouring. They cost from two Roupies to 30 or 40 a-piece, according to the fineness and the quantity of Gold at the ends, and sometimes upon the sides. The Indians have a way to dip some of these Calicuts in a certain water that makes them look like Water'd-Chamlets, which adds also to the price.

That sort which is sold for two Roupies, and so onward till ye come to twelve, is transported to the Coast of Melinda, and it is the greatest Trade the Governour of Mozambique drives, who sells them to the Cafres, that vend them again among the Abyssins, and into the Kingdom of Saba: for those people not understanding the use of Soap, need no more but only to wash these Calicuts in water. That sort which is valu'd from 12 Roupies upward, is transported to the Philippine-Islands, the Islands of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, and other adjacent places. Where the women wear no other clothes, than a single piece of this Calicut. One part whereof, without cutting it, serves for a Petticoat; the other they wind about their stomachs and their heads.

White Calicuts.

White Calicuts come partly from Agra, and about Labor, part from Bengala: some from Bronda, Baroche, Renonsari, and other places. They are brought out of the Loom to Renonsari, and Baroche, where they are whiten'd by reason of the convenience of their Meadows, and the great store of Limons, that grow thereabouts. For the Calicuts are never so white as they should be, till they are dipt in Limon-water.

The Calicuts that come from Agra, Labor, and Bengala, are sold by the Corge, and they are of several prices, from seventeen Roupies to three or four-hunder'd, as the Merchant will have them wov'n.

The Calicuts that come from Renonsari, and Baroche, are one and twenty cubits long, new out of the Loom; but in the whitening they shrink to twenty cubits.

Those of Bronda twenty cubits from the Loom, and shrink in the whitening to nineteen and a half.

All the Calicuts or Basta's that come from these three Cities, are of two sorts: for some are broad, some are narrow. The narrow are those I have already mention'd, the prices whereof are various, from two Mamoudi's to six.

The broad Basta's are a cubit, and one third part wide; the whole piece twenty cubits long. The usual price of them is from five Mamoudi's to twelve: but a Merchant being upon the place, may cause them to be made much more large and fine, till they are worth five-hunder'd Mamoudi's a-piece. I saw two pieces sold for a thousand Mamoudi's.

The English bought one, and the Hollanders another, each piece containing eight and twenty cubits.

Mahamed Alibeg returning into Persia out of India, where he had been Embassador, presented Cha-Sef the second with a Coco-nut, about the bigness of an Aufrich-egg, all beset with Pearls: and when it was open'd there was taken out of it a Turbant that had sixty cubits of Calicut in length to make it, the Cloath being so fine, that you could hardly feel it in your hand. For they will spin their thread so fine, that the eye can hardly discern it, or at least it seems to be but a Cobweb.

Twisted

Twisted-Cotton.

Cotton twisted and untwisted comes from the Provinces of Brampour and Guzerat. Untwisted Cotton is never transported into Europe, being too cumbersome, and of little value; only they send it to Ormuz, Balsara, and sometimes to the Philippine-Islands, and the Islands of Sinde. As for the twisted Cottons, the English and Hollanders transport a good quantity, not of the finest, but of that sort which is priz'd from fifteen to fifty Mamoudi's: It serves for wicks for Candles, for Pack-saddles, and for the ground of Silk-stuffs.

Indigo.

Indigo comes from several parts of the great Mogul's Empire; and according to the diversity of the places it differs in quality, and consequently in price.

In the first place, it comes from the Territories of Biana, Indoua, and Corfa, a day or two's journey from Agra: which is esteem'd the best of all. It is made also eight days journey from Surat, in a Village call'd Sarques, two leagues distance from Amadabat. Here the flat Indigo is made. There is also Indigo little inferior in goodness and price, which comes from the King of Golconda's Territories. The Mein of Surat, which contains 42 Serre's, or 34 and a half of our pounds, is valu'd from 15 to 20 Roupies. They make as good as this at Baroche. That which is made up about Agra is made up in half Balls, and is the most sought for in all India. It is sold by the Mein, which in those places contains 60 Serres, or 51 and three quarters of our pounds. The usual price is from 36 to 40 Roupies. There grows also Indigo some 36 leagues from Brampour, about a great Village call'd Raout, and round about the neighbouring Towns in the road to Surat: of which the Natives usually make above a hunder'd-thousand Roupies.

There comes Indigo also from Bengala, which the Holland-Company transports for Maslipatan. But they buy this Indigo, and that of Brampour and Amadabat, cheaper by twenty four in the hunder'd, than that of Agra.

Indigo is made of an Herb which they sow every year after the rains are over: which when it is grown up, is very like our Hemp. They cut it three times a year; first when it is about two or three foot high; and they cut it within half a foot of the ground; the first cutting far exceeds the two latter. The second cutting is worse than the first by ten or twelve in the hunder'd, and the third worse than the second by twelve in the hunder'd. The difference is found by breaking a piece of the Paste, and observing the colour. The colour of that Indigo which is made of the first cutting, is a violet-blue, but more brisk and lively than the two others: and that which is made of the second is more lively than the third.

When they have cut the Herb, they throw it unto Pits which they make with Lime, which becomes so hard, that you would judg it to be one intire piece of Marble. They are generally fourscore or a hunder'd paces in circuit; and being half full of water, they fill them quite up with the Herb. Then they bruise and jumble it in the water till the leaf, for the stalk is worth nothing, become like a kind of thick mud. This being done, they let it settle for some days; and when the settling is all at the bottom, and the water clear above, they let out all the water. When the water is as drain'd out, they fill several baskets with this slime, and in a plain Field you shall see several men at work, every one at his own basket, making up little pieces of Indigo flat at the bottom, at the top sharp like an egg. Though at Amadabat they make their pieces quite flat like a small cake. Here you are to take particular notice, that the Merchants, because they would not pay custom for an unnecessary weight, before they transport their Indigo out of Asia into Europe, are very careful to cause it to be sifted, to sepearate the dust from it; which they sell afterwards to the Natives of the Countrey to dye their Calicuts. They that sift this Indigo must be careful to keep a Linnen-cloth before their faces, and that their nostrils be well-stopt, leaving only two little holes for their eyes. Besides, they must every half hour be sure to drink milk, which is a great preservative against the piercing quality of the dust. Yet notwithstanding standing all this caution, they that have sifted Indigo for nine or ten days, shall spit nothing but blew for a good while together. Once I laid an Egg in the morning among the sisters, and when I came to break it in the evening it was all blew within.

As they take the Paste out of the Baskets with their Fingers dipt in Oil, and make it into Lumps, or Cakes they lay them in the Sun to dry. Which is the reason that when the Merchants buy Indigo, they burn some pieces of it, to try whether there be any dust among it. For the Natives who take the Paste out of the Baskets to make it into Lumps, lay it in the Sand, which mixes with the Paste, and souls it. But when the Merchants burn it, the Indigo turns to Ashes, and the Sand remains. The Governours do what they can to make the Natives leave their Knavery; but notwithstanding all their care, there will be some deceit.

Salt-Peter.

Great store of Salt-Peter comes from Agra and Patna; but the refin'd costs three times more than that which is not. The Hollanders have set up a Ware-House fourteen Leagues above Patna, and when their Salt-Peter is refin'd, they transport it by Water by Ogueli. A Mein of refin'd Salt-Peter is worth seven Mamoudi's.

Spices.

Cardamom, Ginger, Pepper, Nutmegs, Nutmeg-Flowers, Cloves and Cinnamon, are all the different sorts of Spices known to us. I put Cardamom, and Ginger in the first place because that Cardamom grows in the Territories of Visapour, and Ginger in the Dominions of the Great Mogul. And as for other Spices, they are brought from other Forreign parts to Surat, which is the grand Mart.

Cardamom is the most excellent of all other Spices, but it is very scarce; and in regard there is no great store in the place where it grows, it is only made use of in Asia, at the Tables of great Princes. Five hundred pound of Cardamoms, are priz'd from a hundred to a hundred and ten Reals.

Ginger is brought in great quantities from Amadabat, where there grows more than in any other part of Asia; and it is hardly to be imagin'd how much there is transported candied into Foreign parts.

Pepper is of two sorts. There is a sort which is very small, another sort much bigger; both which sorts are distinguish'd into small and great Pepper. The larger sort comes from the Coast of Malavare; and Tuticorin and Calicut are the Cities where it is brought up. Some of this Pepper comes from the Territories of the King of Visapour, being vend'd at Rejapour, a little City in that Kingdom. The Hollanders that purchase it of the Malavares, do not give Money for it, but several sorts of Commodities in Exchange; as Cotton, Opium, Vermillion, and Quicksilver; and this is the Pepper which is brought into Europe. As for the little Pepper that comes from Bantam, Afchen, and some other parts toward the East, there is none of it carried out of Asia, where it is spent in vast quantities, especially among the Mahumetans. For there are double the Grains of small Pepper in one pound, to what there are of the great Pepper; besides that the great Pepper is hotter in the mouth.

The little Pepper that comes to Surat, has been sold some years for thirteen or fourteen Mamoudi's the Mein; and so much I have seen the English give for it, to transport it to Ormus, Balsara, and the Red Sea. As for the great Pepper which the Hollanders fetch from the Coast of Malavare, five hundred pound in truck brings them in not above thirty-eight Reals; but by the Commodities which they give in Barter, they gain Cent. per Cent.

The Nutmeg, the Nutmeg-Flow'r, the Clove, and Cinnamon, are the only Spices which the Hollanders have in their own hands. The three first come from the Molucca Islands; the fourth, which is Cinnamon, from the Island of Ceylan.

'Tis observable of the Nutmeg, that the Tree which bears it is never plant'd, which has been confirm'd to me by several persons that have liv'd several years in the Countrey. They related to me, that the Nutmeg being ripe, several Birds come from the Islands toward the South, and devour it whole, but are forc'd to throw it up again before it be digested. The Nutmeg then besinear'd with a viscous matter, falling to the ground takes root, and produces a Tree, which would never thrive were it plant'd. This puts me in mind of making one observation upon the Birds of Paradise. These Birds being very greedy after Nutmegs, come in flights to gorge themselves with the pleasing Spice, at the season, like Felfares in Vintage time; but the strength of the Nutmeg so intoxicates them, that they fall dead drunk to the Earth, where the Emets in a short time eat off their Legs. Hence it comes, that the Birds of Paradise are said to have no Feet; which is not true however, for I have seen three or four that had Feet; and a French Merchant sent one from Aleppo as a Present to Lewis the Thirteenth that had Feet; of which the King made great account, as being a very lovely Fowl.

But notwithstanding all the Hollanders Projects, you may buy Cloves at Macassar without purchasing them of the Hollander; in regard the Islanders buy them of the Dutch Captains and Soldiers, which the Hollanders have in those places where the Cloves grow, giving them in exchange Rice, and other necessaries for the support of life, without which they would starve, being very sadly provided for.

When the Natives of Macassar are thus furnish'd of Cloves, they barter them in Exchange for such Commodities as are brought them; sometimes they give Tortoise-Shells in exchange, and Gold Dust; by which the Merchant gains six or seven in the hundred, being better than the Money of the Island, though it be Gold, by reason the King oftentimes enhances the value of it. The places where Cloves grow, are Amboyna, Ellias, Seram, and Bouro.

The Islands of Banda also, in number six, viz. Nero, Lontour, Pouleay, Roseguin, and Grenapuis, bear Nutmegs, in great abundance. The Island of Grenapuis is about six Leagues in compass, and ends in a sharp point, where there is a continual fire burning out of the Earth. The Island of Darume, where there grows great store of Nutmegs, and very big, was discover'd in the year 1647, by Abel Tasman, a Dutch Commander.

The price of Cloves and Nutmegs, as I have known them sold to the Hollanders at Surat, was as follows:

The Mein of Surat contains forty Serres, which make thirty-four of our Pounds, at sixteen Ounces to the Pound.

A Mein of Cloves was sold for a hundred and there Mamoudi's and a half.

A Mein of Mace was sold for a hundred and fifty-seven Mamoudi's and a half.

Nutmegs for fifty-six Mamoudi's and a half.

Cinnamon comes at Present from the Island of Ceylan. The Tree that bears it is very much like the Willow, and has three Barks. They never take off but the first and second, which is accounted the best. They never meddle with the third, for should the Knife enter that, the Tree would dye. So that it is an art to take off the Cinnamon, which they learn from their youth. The Cinnamon Spice is much dearer to the Hollanders than people think; for the King of Ceylan, otherwise call'd King of Candy, from the name of his principal City, being a sworn Enemy to the Hollanders, sends his Forces with an intention to surprize them, when they gather their Cinnamon; so that they are forc'd to bring seven or eight hundred men together to defend as many more that are at work. Which great expence of theirs very much enhances the price of the Cinnamon. There grows upon the Cinnamon Tree a certain fruit like an Olive, though not to be eaten. This the Portugals were wont to put into a Caldron of Water, together with the tops of the Branches, and boil'd it till the Water was all consum'd. When it was cold, the upper part became a PASTE like white Wax; of which they made Tapers to set up in their Churches, for no sooner were the Tapers lighted, but all the Church was perfum'd. Formerly the Portugals brought Cinnamon out of other Countries, belonging to the Raja's about Cochin.

Cochin. But the Hollanders have destroyed all those places, so that the Cinnamon is now in their hands. When the Portugals had that Coast, the English bought their Cinnamon of them, and usually paid for it by the Mein fifty Mamoudi's.

Drugs that are brought to Surat, and brought from other Countries, with the price of every one by the Mein.

Salt Armoniack, according to the usual price, costs by the Mein twenty Mamoudi's.

Borax, comes unrefin'd from Amadabat, as does Salt Armoniack, and costs by the Mein thirty-five Mamoudi's.

Gum-Lack, seven Mamoudi's and a half.

Gum-Lack wash'd, ten Mamoudi's.

Gum-Lack in sticks of Wax, forty Mamoudi's.

There are some of these Sticks that cost fifty or sixty Mamoudi's the Mein, and more when they mix Musk in the Gum.

Saffron of Surat, which is good for nothing but for colouring, four Mamoudi's and a half.

Cumin White, eight Mamoudi's.

Cumin Black, three Mamoudi's.

Arlet small, three Mamoudi's.

Frankincense, that comes from the Coast of Arabia, three Mamoudi's.

Myrrh, that which is good, call'd Mirra Gilet, thirty Mamoudi's.

Myrrh Bolli, which comes from Arabia, fifteen Mamoudi's.

Cassia, two Mamoudi's.

Sugar Candy, eighteen Mamoudi's.

Asutinat, a sort of Grain, very hot, one Mamoudi.

Annise-Seed Gross, three Mamoudi's and a half.

Annise-Seed small and hot, one Mamoudi and a half.

Oupelote, a Root, fourteen Mamoudi's.

Cointre, five Mamoudi's.

Auzerout, from Persia, a hundred and twenty Mamoudi's.

Aloes Succotrine, from Arabia, twenty eight Mamoudi's.

Licorice, four Mamoudi's.

Lignum Aloes, in great pieces, two hundred Mamoudi's.

Lignum Aloes, in small pieces, four hundred Mamoudi's.

Vez-Cabouli, a certain Root, twelve Mamoudi's.

There is a sort of Lignum Aloes very Gummy, which comes to, by the Mein, four thousand Mamoudi's.

Gum-Lake for the most part comes from Pegu; yet there is some also brought from Bengala, where it is very dear, by reason the Natives fetch that lively Scarlet colour out of it, with which they paint their Calicuts. Nevertheless, the Hollanders buy it, and carry it into Persia for the same use of painting. That which remains after the colour is drawn off, is only fit to make sealing Wax. That which comes from Pegu is not so dear, though as good for other Countries. The difference is only this, that it is not so clean in Pegu, where the Pismires foul it, as in Bengala, where it grows in a healthy place, full of Shrubs, where those Animals cannot so well come at it. The Inhabitants of Pegu never make any use of it in painting, being a dull sort of people, that are in nothing at all industrious.

The women of Surat get their livings by cleansing the Lake after the Scarlet colour is drawn from it. After that they give it what colour they please, and make it up into Sticks for sealing Wax. The English and Holland Company carry away every year a hundred and fifty Chests. The price is about ten Sous the pound.

Powder'd Sugar is brought in great quantities out of the Kingdom of Bengala; it causes also a very great Trade at Ougeli, Patna, Daca, and other places. I have been told it for a very great certainty, by several ancient people in Bengala, that Sugar being kept thirty years becomes absolute poison, and that there is no Venome more dangerous, or that sooner works its effect. Loaf-Sugar is also made at Amadabat, where they are perfectly skill'd in refining it ; for which reason it is call'd Sugar Royal. The Sugar-Loaves usually weigh from eight to ten pound.

Opium is brought from Brampour, a Town of good Trade between Agra and Surat. The Hollanders buy great quantities, which they truck for their Pepper.

Tobacco also grows in abundance round about Brampour ; sometimes there has been so much that the Natives have let vast quantities rot upon the ground, for want of gathering.

Coffee grows neither in Persia nor in India, where it is in no request ; but the Hollanders drive a great Trade in it, transporting it from Ormuz into Persia as far as Great Tartary, from Balsara into Caldea, Arabia, Mesopotamia, and other Provinces of Turky. It was first found out by a Hermite, whose name was Scheck-Siadeli, about twenty-years ago, before which time it was never heard of in any Author either ancient or modern.

Deceits in Silk Wares.

Plain Silk Wares may be alter'd in length, bredth, and quality. The quality shews it self when they are of an even thread, when the weight is equal, and when there is no Cotton thread in the Weft.

The Indians not having the art of guilding silver, put into their strip'd Wares threads of pure Gold, so that you must count the quantity of Gold threads to see whether the Silk have its due number. And this also you must observe in your Silks wov'n with Silver. As for Taffata's, your are only to mind whether the pieces be all of a fineness, and to see by unfolding some of them, that there be nothing within to augment the weight, and then weighing all the pieces by themselves, to see that they all agree.

The colours of those Carpetts which are made in India, do not last so long as the colour of those which are made in Persia ; but for the Workmanship it is very lovely. The eye of the Broaker is to judg of the largeness, beauty, and fineness of those Carpetts which are wrought with Gold and Silver, and whether they be fine and rich. But whether they be Carpetts, or other Stuffs mix'd with Gold and Silver, it behoves the Buyer to pull out some of the Gold and Silver Threads, to see whether they be of the right value or no.

Deceits in the White Calicuts.

The deceits usually put upon Calicuts, are in fineness length, and breadth. Every Bale may contain two hundred pieces ; among which they will juggle in five or six or ten, less fine, or less white, shorter and narrower than according to the scantling of the Bale, which cannot be found out but by examining them piece by piece. The fineness is discern'd by the eye, the length and breadth by the measure. But the Indians practise a more cunning way, which is to count the number of threads which ought to be in the breadth, according to the fineness of the scantling. When the number fails, it is either more transparent, more narrow, or more coarse. The difference is sometimes so difficult to be perceiv'd, that there is no way to find it out but by counting the threads. And yet this difference in a great quantity comes to a great deal. For it is nothing to coufen a Crown or two Crowns, in a piece that comes but to fifteen or twenty Crowns. Those that whiten these Calicuts, to save charges of a few Limons, will knock the Calicuts excessively upon a Stone, which does fine Calicuts a great injury, and loars the price.

As for their Calicuts dy'd blew or black, you must take care that the Workmen do not knock them after they are folded, to make them look sleek ; for many times when they come to be unfolded, you shall find holes in the creases.

As for your painted and printed Calicuts, which are painted and printed as they come out of the Loom, the Merchant must take care that what he bespeaks be finish'd before the end of the Raines, for the thicker the Water is where where they are wash'd, the more lively will the printed and painted colours appear. It is easy to distinguish between the printed and the painted Calicuts; and between the neatness of the work : but for the fineness and other qualities, they are not so easily discern'd ; and therefore the Broaker must be more careful.

Cheats in Cotton.

THE cheat in the weight is twofold. The first, by laying them in a moist place ; and thrusting in the middle of every Skain something to add to the weight. The second, in not giving good weight when the Broaker receives it from the Workman, or Merchant that delivers it.

There is but one cheat in the quality, that is by putting three or four Skains, of a coarser Commodity than that which is uppermost, into one Mein. Which in a great quantity mounts high ; for there are some Cottons that are worth an hunder'd Crowns the Men. These two cheats being often us'd by the Holland-Company, there is no way but to weigh your Commodity in the presence of the Dutch-Commander, and his Council, and to examine every Mein, Skain by Skain. When this is done, they who are order'd to be at this examination, are oblig'd to fix to every Bale a ticket of the weight and quality : for if there be a faileur, they who fix the ticket are engag'd to make good what is wanting.

Deceits in Indigo.

I Have told you, that when the Work-men have made up the Indigo-Paste into lumps, with their fingers dipt in Oil, they lay them in the Sun a drying. Now those that have a design to cheat the Merchants, dry them in the sand, to the end that the sand sticking to the Indigo, should encrease the weight. Sometimes they lay up their Paste in moist places, which makes it give, and consequently renders it more heavy. But if the Governour of the place discovers the cheat, he makes them severely pay for it : and the best way of discovery is to burn some pieces of Indigo, for the sand will remain.

Indian Broakers.

THE Broakers are as it were the Masters of the Indian Families ; for they have all Goods at their disposal. The Work-men choose the most aged and most experienc'd, who are to endeavor equal advantages for the whole Tribe they undertake for. Every evening that they return from their business, and that, according to the custom of the Indians, who make no Suppers, they have eaten some little piece of Sweet-meat, and drank a glass of water, the eldest of the Tribe meet at the Broaker's House, who gives them an account of what he has done that day, and then they consult what he is to do next. Above all things, they caution him to look to his hits, and to cheat, rather than be cheated.

CHAP. XI.

Of Diamonds, and the Mines and Rivers where they are found; and first of the Author's journey to the Mine of Raolconda.

THE Diamond is the most precious of all Stones, and it was in that sort of Commodity wherein I most dealt. And therefore to acquire a perfect experience, I went to all the Mines; and to one of the Rivers where they are found. To which purpose I travell'd to four Mines; of which I will give you a description; and of one of the Rivers where I have also been.

The first of these Mines, where I was, is in the Territories of the King of Visapour, in the Province of Carnatica; and the place is call'd Raolconda, five days journey from Goleconda, and eight or nine from Visapour. This Mine was discover'd not above two-hunder'd years ago, as I was Inform'd by those of the Countrey.

Round about the place where the Diamonds are found, the ground is sandy, full of Rocks, much resembling the parts near Fountain-Bleau. There are in the Rocks several veins, some half a finger, some a whole finger-wide: And the Miners make use of Irons with hooks at the end, with which they pick out the earth or Sand, which they put into tubs, and among that earth, they find the Diamonds. But because these veins do not run always streight, but sometimes down, sometimes upward, the Miners are constrain'd to break the Rock, following always the trace of the veins: When they have open'd all the veins, and taken out all the sand, then they wash it two or three times over to look for the Diamonds. In this Mine it is that they find the cleanest Stones, and of the whitest water. But the mischief is, that to fetch the sand out of the Rock, they are forc'd to strike such terrible blows with a great Iron-leaver, that they flaw the Diamond, and make it look like Crystal. Which is the reason there are found so many soft Stones in this Diamond-Mine, though they make a great shew: If the Stone be clean, they only give it a turn or two upon the wheel, not caring to shape it, for fear of losing the weight. If there be any flaws, or any points, or any black or red specks in it, they cut all the Stone into Fosslets; or if there be only a little flaw, they work it under the ridg of one of the Fosslets, to hide the defect. Now because a Merchant desires rather to have a black speck than a red one; 'tis but burning the Stone, and the speck becomes black. This trick at length I understood so well, that when I saw any Stones in them that came from the Mine made into Fosslets, especially very small ones, I was certain there was either some speck or some flaw in the Stone.

There are several Diamond-Cutters at this Mine, but none of them have above one Mill, which is of Steel. They never cut but one Stone at a time upon each Mill, casting water continually upon the Mill, to find out the grain of the Stone; which being found they pour on Oil, (not sparing for powder of Diamonds, though it be very dear,) to make the Stone slide the faster; and they lay on more weight than we do. I have seen them lay upon one Stone an hunder'd and fifty pound of Lead. I must confess it was a great Stone, which weigh'd an hunder'd and three Carats, after it was cut; and the Mill was like ours, only the great Wheel was turn'd by four Negros. The Indians are not of the same opinion that we are; for they do not believe that the weight gives any luster to the Stones. If theirs be not subject to take their luster, 'tis because there is always a Boy that stands with a thin wooden-slice in his hand, and waters the Wheel continually with Oil and Powder of Diamonds. Besides, their Wheel does not go so fast as ours, because the Wooden-wheel that turns the Steel-wheel, is not above three foot in Diameter.

They cannot give that lively polishment to Stones, as we give to ours in Europe; and I believe the reason to be, because their Wheel does not run so flat as ours. For in regard it is of Steel, to rub it upon the Emeril, as must be done every four and twenty hours, the Tree must be taken off, which can never be put on again again so as to run so flat as it did. Had they the invention of Iron-mills, upon which they never use Emeril, but only the File, because there is no necessity to take off the Tree to file the Mill, they might polish their Stones better than they do. I have told you they must either rub the Mill with Emeril, or file it every four and twenty hours. For when the Stone has run for some time, that part of the Mill becomes as smooth and bright as glass: so that if you do not rough it again either with Emeril or the File, the powder will not stay; whereas if the powder stay, there is more work done in an hour than otherwise in two.

Though a Diamond be naturally very hard, having a kind of a knot, as you see in wood, the Indian Lapidaries will cut the Stone, which our European Lapidaries find great difficulty to do, and usually will not undertake to perform; which makes the Indians require something more for the fashion.

As for the Government of the Mines, they trade very freely, and very faithfully. They pay two per cent. to the King for all that they buy: besides that, he has also a duty from the Merchants for leave to dig. The Merchant after he has made search with the Miners, who know all the places where the Diamonds grow, chooses out a place about two-hundred paces in compass, where they set at work sometimes fifty, sometimes an hundred Miners, as they are in haste of work. And from the day that they begin to work, to the day that they end, the Merchants pay to the King two Pagods a-day; and four when they employ an hundred men.

These poor people never get above three Pagods all the year long, though they understand their business extremely well; so that their wages being so small, they make no scruple, when they can handsomely, to hide a Stone for their own profit; and in regard they are quite naked, only for a rag about their privities, sometimes they are so dextrous, as to swallow the Stone. The chief of the Merchants who employ these Miners shew'd me one of them, that had cozen'd him of a Stone, and had put it into the corner of his eye, but he took it from the fellow so soon as he had discover'd the cheat. To prevent this cozenage, there are twelve or fifteen in fifty, who are engag'd to the Merchant, that he shall have no injury done him, nor any thefts committed. If by accident they meet with a Stone that weighs 14 or 16 Carats, they presently carry it to the Master of the work, who gives him in recompence the Sarpo, which is a piece of Calicut to make him a Bonnet, to the value of 25 Sous, together with half a Pagod in Silver, or else a whole Pagod, when he gives him neither Rice nor Sugar.

The Merchants that come to trade at the Mines keep their Lodgings; and every morning about ten or eleven a clock, after they have din'd, the Masters of the Mines bring their Diamonds to shew them. If the Stones are large, or that there be so many as amount from two-thousand to sixteen-thousand Crowns, they will leave them with the strange Merchant seven or eight days, for the Merchants to consider. When the Merchant has seen the Stones, it becomes him to agree upon the price in a short time. Otherwise the party that owes the Stones, takes them away again; and you shall never see the same Stones again, unless mix'd with others. When the bargain is concluded, the Purchaser gives a Bill of Exchange upon the Banker. If you have agreed to pay him in four days, and make him stay longer, you must pay him down one and an half in the hundred for a months interest. Most commonly when they know the Merchant to be sufficient, they will choose to take a Bill of Exchange for Agra, for Golconda, or Visapour, but more especially for Surat, as being the most frequented Port in all India, where they may furnish themselves with all Commodities which they want.

'Tis very pleasant to see the young children of the Merchants and other people of the Countrey, from the age of ten to fifteen or sixteen years, who seat themselves upon a Tree, that lies in the void place of the Town: Every one of them has his Diamond-weights in a little Bag hanging at one side, on the other his Purse, with five or six-hundred Pagods in Gold in it. There they sit expecting when any person will come to sell them some Diamonds. If any person brings them a Stone, they put it into the hands of the eldest Boy among them, who is as it were their chief; who looks upon it, and after that gives it to him that is next him; by which means it goes from hand to hand, till it return to him again, none of the rest speaking one word. After that he demands the price, to buy it if possible; but if he buy it to dear, 'tis upon his own account. In the evening the Children compute what they have laid out, then they look upon their Stones, and separate them according to their water, their weight, and clearness. Then they bring them to the great Merchants, who have generally great parcels to match: and the profit is divided among the children equally; only the chief among them has a fourth in the hunder'd more than the rest. As young as they are, they so well understand the price of Stones, that if one of them have bought any purchase, and is willing to lose one half in the hunder'd, the other shall give him his Money. They shall hardly bring you a parcel of Stones, above a dozen, wherein there is not some flaw or other defect.

When I came to the Mine, I went to wait upon the Governour, who told me I was welcome; and because he made no question but that I had brought Gold with me, (for they talk of nothing under Gold at the Mines,) he bid me only lay it in my Chamber, and he would undertake it should be safe. Thereupon he presented me with four servants to watch my Gold day and night, and to follow my orders, bidding me withal fear nothing, but eat, drink, and sleep, and take care of my health; but withal he told me I must be careful of not cheating the King. Thereupon I fell to buying, and found profit enough, above twenty in the hunder'd cheaper than at Golconda.

I have one thing to observe which is more than ordinarily curious, concerning the manner how the Indians, as well as Mahumetans as Idolaters, drive their bargains. Every thing is done with great silence, and without any talking on either side. The buyer and the seller sit one before another like two Taylors, and the one of the two opening his Girdle, the seller takes the right-hand of the purchaser, and covers his own hand and that with his Girdle: under which, in the presence of many Merchants that meet together in the same Hall, the bargain is secretly driven without the knowledge of any person. For then the purchaser nor seller speak neither with their mouths nor eyes, but only with the hand, as thus. When the seller takes the purchaser by the whole hand, that signifies a thousand, and as often as he squeezes it, he means so many thousand Pagods or Roupies, according to the Money in question. If he takes but half to the knuckle of the middle-finger, that's as much as to say fifty: The small end of the finger to the first knuckle signifies ten. When he grasps five fingers, it signifies five-hunder'd; if but one finger, one-hunder'd. This is the mystery which the Indians use in driving their bargains. And many times it happens, that in the same place, where there are several people, one and the same parcel shall be sold seven or eight times over, and no person know that it was sold in that manner every time.

As for the weight of the Stones, no person can be deceiv'd in them, unless he purchase them in hugger-mugger. For if they are publicly bought, there is a person on purpose paid by the King, without any benefit from particular persons, whose place it is to weigh the Diamonds; and when he has spoken the weight, the buyer and seller are satisfi'd in his words, as not being a person any way oblig'd to favour any person.

Having dispatch'd all my business at the Mine, the Governour appointed me fix Horse-men to convoy me through the Territories under his Government, which extends to a River that separates the Kingdom of Visapour from that of Golconda. 'Tis a very difficult thing to cross that River, it being deep, broad and rapid; besides that, there are no Boats. But they ferry over Men, Carriages, Oxen and Coaches upon a round Vessel, ten or twelve foot in Diameter, made of Osier-twigs, like our Fluskets, and cover'd without with Ox-hides; as I have already related. They might easily use Boats, or make a Bridg; but the King of Golconda will not suffer either, because the River parts the two Kingdoms. Every evening the Ferry-men on both sides are bound to carry to two Governours on each side the River, an exact account of the Persons, Carriages and Merchandizes which they ferri'd over that day.

Coming to Golconda, I found that the person whom I had left in trust with my Chamber, was dead: but that which I observ'd most remarkable, was, that I found the door seal'd with two Seals, one being the Cadi's or chief Justice's, the other the Sha-Bander's, or Provost of the Merchants. An Officer of Justice, together with the Servants I had left behind, watch'd the Chamber night and day. This Officer Officer hearing of my arrival, went and gave notice to the Cadi and Sha-Bander, who sent for me. The Cadi presently ask'd me, if the Money I had left in the Chamber where the person dy'd were mine, and how I could prove it. I told him I had no better proofs than the Letters of Exchange which I had brought to the Banker that paid it by my order to the person deceas'd; to whom I had also giv'n farther order, that if the Banker paid me in Silver, he should change the sum into Gold. Thereupon the Bankers were sent for, who affirming the payments accordingly, the Cadi sent his Deputy to op'n the Chamber door; nor would he leave me, till I had counted over my Money, and had assur'd him it was right. After that I return'd to the Cadi and the Sha-Bander, and signifi'd as much to them; and having paid them some Fees which they demanded. to the value of four Crowns and a half of our Money, I return'd them my thanks for their care. This I relate to shew the justice of the Country.

CHAP. XII.

The Authors Journey to the other Mines; and how they find the Diamonds there.

SEVEN days journey from Golconda Eastward there is another Diamond Mine, call'd in the language of the Country Gani, in the Persian tongue Conlour. It is near a great Town, by which the same River runs, which I cross'd coming from the other Mine; and a League and a half from the Town is a high Mountain in the form of a Half-Moon; the space between the Town and the Mountain is a Plain where they dig and find Diamonds. The nearer they dig to the Mountain, the larger Stones they find; but at the top they find nothing at all.

It is not above a hundred years since this Mine was found out by a Countryman, who digging in a piece of ground to sow Millet, found therein a pointed Stone that weigh'd above twenty-five Carats; he not knowing what the Stone was, but seeing it glister, carry'd it to Golconda, where as it happen'd well for him, he met with one that traded in Diamonds. The Merchant informing himself of the place where the Stone was found, admir'd to see a Jewel of that bigness, not having seen any one before that weigh'd above ten or twelve Carats. However his report made a great noise in the Country; insomuch that the Money'd men in the Town set themselves to work, and causing the ground to be search'd, they found, and still do find bigger Stones, and in greater quantity than in any other Mine. For they found a great number of Stones from ten to forty Carats, and sometimes bigger; among the rest that large Stone that weigh'd nine hundred Carats, which Mirjimola presented to Aureng-zeb.

But though this Mine of Conlour be so considerable for the quantity of great Stones which are there found, yet the mischief is, the Stones are not clean; the Waters having something of the quality of the Earth where they are found. If the Ground be merfhy, the Water inclines to black; if it be red, there is a redness in the Water; in other places the Stones appear somewhat greenish, in others yellowish; such a diversity of Soils there is between the Town and the Mountain. Upon the most part of these Stones after they are cut, there appears a kind of greasie moisture, which must be as often wip'd off.

As for the Water of the Stones, it is remarkable, that whereas in Europe we make use of day-light to examine the rough Stones, and to judg of their Water, and the specks that are found therein, the Indians do all that in the night-time, setting up a Lamp with a large Wick, in a hole which they make in the Wall, about a foot square; by the light whereof they judg of the Water and clearness of the Stone, which they hold between their Fingers. The Water which they call celestial is the worst of all, and it is impossible to discern it so long as the Stone is rough. The most infallible way to find out that Water, is to carry the Stone under a Tree thick of Boughs, for by the verdure of that shade you may easily discern whether the Water be blewish or no.

The first time I was at the Mine, there were above sixty thousand persons at work, men, woman, and children; the men being employ'd to dig, the women, and Children to carry the Earth.

After the Miners have pitch'd upon the place where they intend to work, they level another place close by, of the same extent, or else a little bigger, which they enclose with a Wall about two foot high. In the bottom of that little Wall, at the distance of every two foot, they make small holes to let in the water; which they stop up afterwards, till they come to drain out the water again. The place being thus prepar'd, the people that are to work meet all together, men, women, and children, with the Workmaster in the Company of his Friends and Relations. Then he brings along with him some little Image of the God that they adore; which being plac'd upright upon the ground, they all prostrate themselves three times before it, while their Priest says a certain prayer. The prayer being ended, he marks the forehead of every one with a kind of Glue, made of Saffron and Gum, to such a compass as will hold seven or eight Grains of Rice, which he sticks upon it; then having wash'd their bodies with water, which every one brings in his pot, they rank themselves in order to eat what the Workmaster presents them, before they go to work, to encourage them both to labour and be faithful. This Feast consists of nothing else but every one his Plate of Rice, distributed by the Bramin; for an Idolater may eat any thing from the hands of one of their Priests. The Plates are made of the Leaves of a certain Tree, not much unlike our Walnut-tree Leaves. Besides this, every one has a quarter of a pound of Butter, melted in a small Copper pot with some Sugar.

When their Feast is over, the men fall to digging, the women and children to carry Earth to the place prepar'd in that mannner as I have already describ'd, They dig ten, twelve, and sometimes fourteen foot deep; but when they come to any water they leave off. All the Earth being carry'd into the place before-mention'd, the men, women, and children with Pitchers throw the water which is in the drains upon the Earth, letting it soak for two or three days, according to the hardness of it, till it come to be a kind of Batter; then they open the holes in the Wall to let out the water, and throw on more water still, till all the mud be wash'd away, and nothing left but the Sand. After that they dry it in the Sun; and then they winnow the Sand in little Winnows, as we winnow our Corn. The small dust flies away, the great remains, which they pour out again upon the ground.

The Earth being thus winnow'd, they spread with a kind of Rake, as thin as they possibly can; then with a wooden Instrument, like a Paviers Rammer, about half a foot wide at the bottom, they pound the Earth from one end to the other, two or three times over. After that they winnow it again then; and spreading it at one end of the Van, for fear of losing any of the Earth, they look for the Diamond.

Formerly they were wont to pound the Earth with Flint-stones, instead of wooden Rammers; which made great flaws in the Diamonds, and is therefore now left off.

Heretofore they made no scruple to buy those Diamonds that had a green outside; for being cut, they prov'd very white, and of an excellent water.

Since they have been more nice; for there was a Mine discover'd between Conlong and Raolconda, which the King caus'd to be shut up again, by reason of some cheats that were us'd there; for they found therein that sort of Stones which had this green outside, fair and transparent, and which appear'd more fair than the others; but when they came to the Mill they crumbld to pieces.

CHAP. XIII.

A Continuation of the Authors Travels to the Diamond Mines.

I come to the third Mine, which is the most ancient of all, in the Kingdom of Bengala. You may give it the name of Soumelpour, which is the name of the Town next to the place where the Diamonds are found; or rather Gonel, which is the name of the River in the Sand whereof they seek for the Stones. The Territories through which this River runs, belong to a Raja, who was anciently tributary to the Great Mogul, but revolted in the time of the Wars between Sha-jehan and Gehan-guir his Father. So soon as Sha-jehan came to the Empire, he sent to demand his Tribute of this Raja, as well for the time past, as to come; who finding that his Revenues were not sufficient to pay him, quitted his Country, and retir'd into the Mountains with his Subjects. Upon his refusal, Sha-jehan believing he would stand it out, sent a great Army against him, perswading himself that he should find great store of Diamonds in his Country. But he found neither Diamonds, nor People, nor Victuals, the Raja having burnt all the Corn which his Subjects could not carry away; so that the greatest part of Sha-jehans Army perish'd for hunger. At length the Raja return'd into his Country, upon condition to pay the Mogul some slight Tribute.

The Way from Agra to this Mine.

From Agra to Halabas, costes

From Halabas to Banarous, costes 130

From Agra to Sasaron, costes 33

From Agra to Sasaron you travel Eastward; but from Sasaron to the Mine

you must wind to the South, coming first to a great Town, costes 21

This Town belongs to the Raja I have spoke of. From thence you go to a Fortrefs call'd Rodas, costes 4

This is one of the strongest places in all Asia, seated upon a Mountain fortifi'd with six Bastions, and twenty-seven pieces of Cannon, with three Moats full of Water, wherein there are good Fish. There is but one way to come to the top of the Mountain, where there is a Plain half a League in compass, wherein they sow Corn and Rice. There is above twenty Springs that water that Plain; but all the rest of that Mountain from top to bottom is nothing but a steep Precipice cover'd with over-grown Woods. The Raja's formerly us'd to live in this Fort with a Garrison of seven or eight hundred men. But the Great Mogul has it now; having taken that Fort by the policy of the famous Mirjimola, which all the Kings of India could never take before. The Raja left three Sons, who betray'd one another; the eldest was poison'd, the second went and serv'd the Great Mogul, who gave him the command of four thousand Horse; the third possesses his Fathers Territories, paying the Mogul a small Tribute.

From the Fortrefs of Rodas to Soumelpour, costes 30

Soumelpour is a great Town, the Houses whereof are built of Earth, and cover'd only with Branches of Coco-trees. All these thirty Leagues you travel through Woods, which is a very dangerous passage, as being very much pester'd with Robbers. The Raja lives half a League from the Town, in Tents set upon a fair rising ground, at the foot whereof runs the Gonel, descending from the Southern Mountains, and falling into Ganges.

In this River they find the Diamonds. For after the great Rains are over, which is usually in December, they stay all January till the River be clear; by reason that by that time in some places it is not above two foot deep, and in several places the Sand lies above the water. About the end of January, or the beginning of February, there flock together out of the great Town, and some others adjoining, above eight thousand persons, men, women and children, that are able to work. They that are skilful know by the sand whether there be any Diamonds or no, when they find among the sand little Stones like to those which we call Thunder-Stones. They begin to make search in the River from the Town of Soumelpour to the very Mountains from whence the River falls, for fifty Leagues together.

Where they believe there are Diamonds, they encompass the place with Stakes, Faggots, and Earth, as when they go about to make the Arch of a Bridge to drain all the water out of that place. Then they dig out all the Sand for two foot deep, which is all carried and spread upon a great place for that purpose prepar'd upon the side of the River; encompass'd with a little Wall about a foot and half high. When they have fill'd this place with as much Sand as they think convenient, they throw water upon it, wash it, and sift it; doing in other things as they do at the Mines which I have already describ'd.

From this River come all those fair Points which are call'd natural Points, but a great Stone is seldom found here. The reason why none of these Stones have been seen in Europe, is because of the Wars, that have hinder'd the people from working.

Besides the Diamond Mine which I have spoken of in the Province of Carnatica, which Mirjimola caus'd to be set up, by reason of the yellowness of the Diamonds, and the foulness of the Stones; there is in the Island of Borneo, the largest Island in the World, another River call'd Succadan, in the Sand whereof they find Diamonds as hard as any in the other Mines. The principal reason that dissuaded me from going to the Island of Borneo was, because I understood that the Queen of the Island would not permit any Strangers to carry away any of those Diamonds out of the Island. Those few that are exported, being carry'd out by stealth, and privately sold at Batavia. I say the Queen, and not the King, because in that Island the Women have the Sovereign Command, and not the Men. For the people are so curious to have a lawful Heir upon the Throne, that the Husband not being certain that the Children which he has by his Wife are his own; but the Wife being always certain that the Children which she bears are hers, they rather choose to be govern'd by a Woman, to whom they give the Title of Queen; her Husband being only her Subject, and having no power but what she permits him.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the diversity of Weights us'd at the Diamond Mines. Of the Pieces of Gold and Silver there Currant; and the Rule which they observe to know the Price of Diamonds.

AT the Mine of Raolconda they weigh by Mangelins, a Mangelin being one Carat and three quarters, that is seven Grains.

At the Mine of Gani or Conlour they use the same weights.

At the Mine of Soumelpour in Bengala, they weigh by Rati's, and the Rati is seven eighths of a Carat, or three Grains and a half. They use the same Weights over all the Empire of the Mogul.

In the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour, they make use of Mangelins; but a Mangelin in those parts is not above one Carat and three eighths. The Portugals in Goa make use of the same Weights in Goa; but a Mangelin there is not above five Grains.

As for the Money in use: First, in Bengala, in the Territories of the Raja before mention'd, in regard they lye enclos'd within the Dominions of the Great Mogul, they make their payments in Roupies.

At

At the two Mines about Raolconda in the Kingdom of Visapour, the payments are made in new Pagods, which the King coins in his own Name, as being independent from the Great Mogul. The new Pagod is not always at the same value; for it is sometimes worth three Roupies and a half, sometimes more, and sometimes less; being advanc'd and brought down according to the course of Trade, and the correspondence of the Bankers with the Princes and Governors.

At the Mine of Colour or Gani, which belongs to the Kingdom of Golconda, they make their payments in new Pagods, which are equal in value to the King of Visapour's. But sometimes you are forc'd to give four in the hunder'd more, by reason they are better Gold, and besides, they will take no others at the Mine. These Pagods are coin'd by the English and Hollanders, who, whether willingly or by force, are priviledg'd by the King to coin them in their Forts: And those of the Hollanders cost one or two per cent. more than the English, by reason they are better Gold, and for that the Miners choose them before the other. But in regard the Merchants are prepossess'd that the Miners are a rude and savage sort of people, and that the ways are dangerous, they stay at Golconda, where the Workmasters keep correspondence with them, and send them their Jewels. There they pay in old Pagods coin'd many ages ago by several Princes that Reign'd in India before the Mahumetans got footing therein. Those old Pagods are worth four Roupies and a half, that is to say, a Roupie more than the new: not that there is any more Gold in them, or that they weigh any more. Only the Bankers, to oblige the King, not to bring down the price, pay him unually a very great Sum, by reason they get very much by it. For the Merchants receive none of those Pagods without a Changer to examin them, some being all defac'd, others low-metal others wanting weight: so that if one of these Bankers were not present at the receipt, the Merchant would be a greater loser, sometimes one, sometimes five, sometimes six i'th' hunder'd: for which they also pay them one quarter in the hunder'd for their pains. When the Miners are paid, they also receive their Money in the presence of Bankers, who tells them which is good, and which is bad; and has for that also one quarter i'th' hunder'd. In the payment of a thousand or two-thousand Pagods, the Banker, for his fee, puts them into a bag, and seals it with his Seal; and when the Merchant pays for his Diamonds, he brings the Seller to the Banker, who finding his bag entire, assures the party that all is right and good within; and so there is no more trouble.

As for the Roupies, they take indifferently, as well the Great Mogul's as the King of Golconda's: by reason that those which that King coins, are to be coin'd, by Articles, with the Great Mogul's stamp.

'Tis an idle thing to believe that vulgar error, that it is enough to carry Spices, Tobacco, Looking-glasses, and such trifles to truck for Diamonds at the Indian Mines: For I can assure ye, these people will not only have Gold, but Gold of the best sort too.

As for the roads to the Mines, some fabulous modern relations have render'd them very dangerous, and fill'd them full of Lions, Tigers, and cruel People; but I found them not only free from those wild creatures, but also the People very loving and courteous.

From Golconda to Raolconda, which is the principal Mine, the road is as follows: the road being measur'd by Gos, is four French-leagues.

From Golconda to Canapour, one Gos.

From Canapour to Parquel, two Gos and a half.

From Parquel to Cakenol, one Gos.

From Cakenol to Canol-Candanor, three Gos.

From Canol-Candanor to Setapour, one Gos.

From Setapour to the River, two Gos.

That River is the bound between the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour.

From the River to Alpour, three quarters of a Gos.

From Alpour to Canal, three quarters of a Gos.

From Canal to Raolconda, two Gos and a half.

Thus from Golconda to the Mine, they reckon it seventeen Gos, or 68 French-Leagues.

From Golconda to the Mine of Colour or Gani, is reckon'd thirteen Gos and three quarters, or 55 French-leagues.

From

From Golconda to Almaspinda, three Gos and a half.
 From Almaspinda to Kaper, two Gos.
 From Kaper to Montecour, two Gos and a half.
 From Montecour to Naglepar, two Gos.
 From Naglepar to Eligada, one Gos and a half.
 From Eligada to Sarvaron, one Gos.
 From Sarvaron to Mellaferon, one Gos.
 From Mellaferon to Ponocour, two Gos and a quarter.
 At Ponocour you only cross the River to Conlour.

CHAP. XV.

The Rule to know the just price and value of a Diamond of what weight soever, from three to a hundred, and upwards: a secret known to very few people in Europe.

I Make no mention of Diamonds of three Carats, the price thereof being sufficiently known.

First then, as to others above that weight, you must know how much the Diamond weighs, and see if it be perfect; if it be a thick Stone, well-squar'd, and have all its corners, if the water be white and lively, without specks and flaws. If it be a Stone cut in Facets, which we call a Rose-Diamond, you must take notice whether the form be round or oval, whether it be of a fair breadth, and not of Stones clapt together; whether it be of a good water, and without specks or flaws.

Such a Stone weighing one Carat, is worth 150 Livres or more. Now to know how much a Stone of the same perfection, weighing 12 Carats, is worth.

Multiply 12 by 12, it makes 144. Then multiply 144 by 150, which is the price of a Stone of one Carat, it comes to 21600 Livres.

As for Example.

$$\begin{array}{r}

 \hline
 144 \\
 150 \\
 \hline
 7200 \\
 144 \\

 21600 \text{ Livres.}
 \end{array}$$

To know the price of imperfect Diamonds, you must observe the same rule, grounded upon the price of a Stone of one Carat.

You have a Diamond of fifteen Carats shewn ye, neither of a good water, nor good form, and full of specks and flaws besides: such a Diamond cannot be worth above 60, or 80, or 100 Livres at most, according to the goodness of the Stone. Multiply therefore the weight of the Diamond of 15 Carats by 15: then multiply the product, which is 225, by the value of the Stone of one Carat, which we will grant to be 80 Livres, the product whereof is 18000 Livres, the price of a Diamond of 15 Carats.

The

The Example.

By that it is easie to discover the difference between a perfect and an imperfect Stone. For if that Stone of 15 Carats were perfect, the second multiplication should be wrought by 150, which is the price of a perfect Stone of one Carat: and then the Diamond would come not to 10000 Livres, but to 33750 Livres, that is 23750 Livres more than an imperfect Diamond of the same weight.

By this rule observe the price of two the greatest Diamonds of the World for Cut-stones, the one in Asia, belonging to the Great Mogul; the other in Europe, in the possession of the Duke of Tuscany.

The Great Mogul's Diamond weighs 279 and 9 16th Carats. It is of a perfect good water, of a good shape, with only a little flaw in the edg of the cutting be low, which goes round about the Stone. Without that flaw, the first Carat were worth 160 Livres, but for that reason I reckon it not at above 150; and so by the rule it comes to 11723278 Livres, 14 Sous, and three Liards. Did the Diamond weigh no more than 279 Carats, it would not be worth above 11676150 Livres, so that the nine 16ths comes to 47128 Livres, 14 Sous, and three Liards.

The Great Duke of Tuscany's Diamond weighs 139 Carats, clean and well-shap'd, cut in facets every way: but in regard the water inclines somewhat toward the colour of Citron, I do not value the first Carat above 135 Livres; so that by the rule the Diamond ought to be worth 2608335 Livres.

A Diamond by the Miners is call'd Iri, which the Turks, Persians and Arabians call Almas.

CHAP. XVI.

Of Colour'd Stones, and the Places where they are found.

There are but two places in all the East where Colour'd-Stones are found, within the Kingdom of Pegu, and the Island of Ceylan. The first is a Mountain twelve days journey, or thereabouts, from Siren, toward the North-east; the name whereof is Capelan. In this Mine are found great quantities of Rubies and Espinels, or Mothers of Rubies, yellow Topazes, blew and white Saphirs, Jacinths, Amethysts, and other Stones of different colours. Among these Stones which are hard, they find other Stones of various colours, that are very soft, which they call Bacan in the language of the Country, but are of little or no esteem.

Siren is the name of the City where the King of Pegu resides; and Ava is the Port of his Kingdom. From Ava to Siren you go by water in great flat-bottom'd-Barks, which is a voyage of sixty days. There is no going by land, by reason the Woods are full of Lions, Tigers, and Elephants. It is one of the poorest Countreys in the World, where there is no Commodity but Rubies; the whole Revenue whereof amounts not to above a hunder'd-thousand Crowns. Among all the Stones that are there found, you shall hardly see one of three or four Ca-rats that is absolutely clean, by reason that the King strictly enjoyns his Subjects not to export them out of his Dominions; besides that, he keeps to himself all the clean Stones that are found. So that I have got very considerably in my Travels, by carrying Rubies out of Europe into Asia. Which makes me very much suspect the relation of Vincent le Blanc, who reports that he saw in the King's Palace, Rubies as big as eggs.

All Rubies are sold by weights, which are call'd Ratis; that is, three grains and a half, or seven 8ths of a Carat: and the payments are made in old Pagods.

A Ruby weighing one Ratis , has been sold for Pagods	20
A Ruby of 2 Ratis and one 8th , Pagods	85
A Ruby of 3 Ratis and one 4th , Pagods	185
A Ruby of 4 Ratis and five 8ths , Pagods	450
A Ruby of 5 Ratis , Pagods	525
A Ruby of 6 Ratis and a half, Pagods	920

If a Ruby exceed six Ratis, and be a perfect Stone, there is no value to be set upon it.

The Natives of the Country call all Colour'd-Stones Rubies, distinguishing them only by the colour. Saphirs they call Blue-Rubies, Amethysts they call Violet-Rubies, Topazes Yellow-Rubies; and so of other Stones.

The other place where Rubies are found, is a River in the Island of Ceylan, which descends from certain high Mountains in the middle of the Island; which swells very high when the rains fall; but when the waters are low, the people make it their business to search among the Sands for Rubies, Saphirs and Topazes. All the Stones that are found in this River, are generally fairer and clearer than those of Pegu.

I forgot to tell you that there are some Rubies, but more Balleis-Rubies, and an abundance of Bastard-Rubies, Saphirs and Topazes found in the Mountains that run along from Pegu to the Kingdom of Camboya.

Colour'd-Stones are also found in some parts of Europe, as in Bohemia and Hungary. In Hungary there is a Mine where they find certain Flints of different bigness, some as big as eggs, some as big as a man's fist, which being broken, contain a Ruby within as hard and as clean as those of Pegu.

In Hungary there is a Mine of Opals, which Stone is no-where else to be found in the World but there.

The Turquoise is no-where to be found but in Persia. Where there are two Mines. The one is called the Old-Rock, three days journey from Meched, toward the North-west, near a great Town which goes by the name of Michabourg. The other which is call'd the New-Rock is five days journey off. Those of the New-Rock are of a Paler blue enclining to white, and less esteem'd, so that you may have a great many for a little Money. Some years since the King of Persia commanded that no Turquoises should be digg'd out of the Old-Rock, but only for himself; making use of those Turquoises instead of enamelling, to adorn Hilts of Swords, Knives and Daggers; of which the Persians are altogether ignorant.

As for Emraulds, it is a vulgar error to say they come originally from the East. And therefore when Jewellers and Gold-smiths, to prefer a deep-colour'd Emrauld enclining to black, tell ye, it is an Oriental Emrauld, they speak that which is not true. I confess I could never discover in what part of our Continent those Stones are found. But sure I am, that the Eastern-part of the World never produc'd any of those Stones, neither in the Continent, nor in the Islands. True it is, that since the discovery of America some of those Stones have been often brought rough from Peruto the Philippine-Islands, whence they have been transported into Europe; but this is not enough to make them Oriental. Besides that, at this time they fend them into Spain through the North-Sea.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Pearles, and the Places where they Fish for them.

IN the first place, there is a Fishery for Pearls in the Persian Gulf, round about the Island of Bakren. It belongs to the King of Persia, and there is a strong Fort in it, Garrison'd with three hundred men. The Water which the people dring in that Island, and all along the Coast of Persia, is brackish and ill-tasted, so that only the Natives of the Country can drink it. Fresh water costs Strangers very dear; for the people fetch it sometimes on League, sometimes two Leagues from the Island, from the bottom of the Sea, being let down by a Rope, with a Bottle or two ty'd about their waists, which they fill, and stop it well; and then giving the Rope a twitch, are hall'd up again by their Companions.

Every one that fishes pays to the King of Persia five Abass's, whether he get any thing or no. The Merchant also pays the King some small matter for every thousand Oysters.

The second Fishery for Peralis is right against Bakren upon the Coast of Arabia the happy, near the City of Caifaz, which together with all the Country about it, is under the Jurisdiction of an Arabian Prince. The Pearls that are fish'd in these places are sold to the Indians, who are not so nice as we; for they give a good price for all, as well the uneven as the round ones. Over all Asia they chuse the yellow Water enclining to white; for they say those Pearls that encline somewhat to a Gold colour, are more brisk, and never change colour; but that the white ones will change in thirty-years time, through the very heat of the weather and the sweat of the person that wears them, turning the scandalously yellow.

There is a wondrous Pearl in the possession of an Arabian Prince, that took Mascat from the Portugals. He then call'd himself Imenheft Prince of Mascat; being known before only by the name of Aceph Ben-Ali Prince of Norrenae. It is but a small Province, but it is the best of all in the Happy Arabia. Therein grow all things necessary for the life of man; particularly, delicate fruits, but more especially most excellent Grapes, which would make most incomparable Wine. This Prince has the most wonderful Pearl in the world, not so much for its bigness, for it weighs not above twelve Carats and one sixteenth, not for its perfect roundness, but because it is so clear and so transparent that you may almost see through it. The Great Mogul offer'd him by a Banian forty thousand Crowns for his Pearl, but he would not accept it. By which you see, that it is more profitable to carry Jewels that are rare out of Europe into Asia, than to bring them out of Asia into Europe; unless it be to Japan or China, where Jewels are little esteem'd.

There is another Fishery for Pearles in the Sea that beats against the Walls of a great Town call'd Manar, in the Island of Ceylan. For their roundness and their Water, they are the fairest that are found in any other Fishery; but they rarely weigh above three or four Carats.

There are excellent Pearls, and of a very good water, and large, which are found upon the Coast of Japan; but there are few fish'd for, in regard Jewels are of no esteem among the Natives.

There are other Fisheries, in the West Indies; in the first place all along the Island of Cubagna, three Leagues in compass, lying ten Degrees and a half of Northern Latidue, a hundred and sixty Leagues from Santo Domingo. The Pearls are small, seldom weighing above five Carats.

The second Fishery is in the Island of Manguerita, or the Island of Pearles, a League from Cubagna, but much bigger. This Fishery is not the most plentiful, but it is the most esteem'd of all those in the West Indies, by reason the Pearles are of most excellent water, and very large. I sold one Pear-fashion'd to Sha-Est-Kan, the Great Mogul's Uncle, that weigh'd fifty-five Carats.

The third Fishery is at Camoete, near the Continent.

The fourth at Rio de la Hacha, all along the same Coast.

The fifth and last, at St. Martha's, sixty Leagues from Rio de la Hacha. All these three Fisheries produce very weighty Pearls; but they are generally ill-shap'd, and of a water inclining to the colour of Lead.

As for Scotch Pearl, and those that are found in the Rivers of Bavaria, tho a Neck-lace of them may be worth a thousand Crowns, yet they are not to be compar'd with the Eastern and West Indian Pearls.

Some years since there was a Fishery discover'd in a certain place upon the Coast of Japan, and I have seen some which the Hollanders have brought thence. They are of a very good water, and large, but very uneven.

Take this observation along with you, touching the difference of their waters; some being very white, others inclining to yellow, others to black, others to a leaden colour. As for the last, there are no such but only in America, which proceeds from the nature of the Earth at the bottom of the Water, which is generally more ozzy than in the East. I once met with six Pearls in the return of a Cargo from the West Indies that were perfectly round, but black like jet, which weigh'd one with another twelve Carats. I carried them into the East Indies to put them off, but could meet with no Chapman to buy them. As for those that incline to yellow, it proceeds from hence, that the Fishermen selling the Oysters to the Merchants in heaps, while they stay fourteen or fifteen days till the Oysters lose their water, the Oysters wast and begin to smell, for which reason the Pearl grows yellow by infection, which appears to be a truth, in regard that where the Oysters preserve their liquor the Pearls are white. Now the reason why they stay till the Oysters open of themselves, is because that if they should force them open, they might perhaps injure and cut the Pearl. In short, the Eastern people are much of our humour in matter of whiteness, for they love the whitest Pearls and the blackest Diamonds; the whitest bread, and the fairest women.

CHAP. XVIII.

How the Pearls are bred in the Oysters; how they Fish for them, and at what time.

SOME ancient Writers have vulgarly reported, that Pearls are produc'd by the Dew of Heaven, and that there is but one in an Oyster; but experience teaches the contrary. For the Oyster never stirs from the bottom of the Sea, where the Dew can never come, which is many times twelve fathoms deep; besides, that it is as often observ'd, that there are six or seven Pearls in one Oyster; and I have had in my hands an Oyster, wherein there were above ten beginning to breed. 'Tis very true, that they are not always of the same bigness; for they grow in an Oyster after the same manner as Eggs in the Belly of a Pullet. But I cannot say there are Pearls in all, for you may open many Oysters and find none.

'Tis no advantage to them that fish for Pearls; for if the poor people could find any other employment, they would never stick to such a one as meerly keeps them alive. But the Land is so barren, that you may travel twenty Leagues before you meet with one blade of Grass; and the people are so miserably poor, that they feed upon nothing but Dates and Salt-fish.

They fish in the Eastern Seas twice a year; the first time in March and April, the second time in August and September; and they keep their Fairs in June and November. However they do not fish every year; for they that fish, will know beforehand whether it will turn to account or no. Now to the end they may not be deceiv'd, they send to the places where they are wont to fish, seven or eight Barks, who bring back each of them about a thousand Oysters, which which they open, and if they find not in every thousand Oysters to the value of five Fano's of Pearl, which amounts to half a Crown of our Money, 'tis a sign that the Fishing will not turn to account, in regard the poor people would not be able to defray their charge. For partly for a stock to set out, and partly for victuals while they are abroad, they are forc'd to borrow Money at three or four in the hundred a month. So that unless a thousand Oysters yield them five Fano's of Pearls, they do not fish that year. As for the Merchants, they must buy their Oysters at hap-hazard, and be content with what they find in them. If they meet with great Pearls, they account themselves happy; which they seldom do at the Fishery of Manar, those Pearls being fit for little else but to be sold by the Ounce, to powder. Sometimes a thousand Oysters amounts to seven Fano's, and the whole Fishery to a hundred thousand Piasters. The Hollanders take of every Diver eight Piasters, in regard they always attend the Fishery with two or three small Men of War, to defend them from the Malavares Pyrats.

The more Rain falls in the year, the more profitable the Fishery happens to be. They fish in twelve fathom water, five or six Leagues off at Sea, sometimes two hundred and fifty Barks together, among which there is not above one or two Divers at most.

There is a Cord ty'd under the Arms of them that dive, one end whereof is held by them that are in the Bark. There is also a great stone of eighteen or twenty pound ty'd to the great Toe of him that dives; the end of the Rope that fastens it being also held by them in the Vessel. The Diver has beside a Sack made like a Net, the mouth whereof is kept open with a Hoop. Thus provided, he plunges into the Sea, the weight of the stone presently sinking him; when he is at the bottom, he slips off the stone, and the Bark puts off. Then the Diver goes to filling his Sack, as long as he can keep his breath; which when he can do no longer, he gives the Rope a twitch, and is presently hall'd up again. Those of Manar are better Fishers, and stay longer in the water than those of Bakren and Carifa; for they neither put Pincers upon their Noses, nor Cotton in their Ears, as they do in the Persian Gulf.

After the Diver is draw'n up, he stays half a quarter of an hour to take breath, and then dives again, for ten or twelve hours together. As for the Oysters themselves, they throw'em away, as being ill-tasted and unsavoury.

To conclude the discourse of Pearls, you are to take notice, that in Europe they sell them by the Carat weight, which is four Grains. In Persia they sell them by the Abas, and one Abas is an eighteenth less than our Carat. In the Dominions of the Mogul, the Kings of Visapour and Golconda weigh them by the Ratis, and one Ratis is also an eighteenth less than our Carat.

Goa was formerly the greatest place of the World for the trade of jewels and Pearls. You must know therefore, that in Goa, and in all other places which the Portugals had in the Indies, they us'd a particular weight to sell their Pearls by, which they call Chego's; the proportion whereof to Carats appears in the following Table.

CHAP. XIX.

Observations upon the fairest and largest Diamonds and Rubies which the Author has seen in Europe and Asia, represented according to the Figures in the Plates; as also upon those which the Author sold to the King upon his last return from the Indies; with the Figure of a large Topaz, and the fairest Pearls in the World.

Numb. 1.

THis Diamond belongs to the Great Mogul, being cut into the same form; and it weighs 319 Ratis and an half, which make 279 and nine 16ths of our Carats: when it was rough, it weigh'd 907 Ratis, which make 793 Carats.

Numb. 2.

Is the figure of a Diamond belonging to the Great Duke of Tuscany. It weighs 139 Carats and an half: the fault of it is, that the water enclines somewhat to a Citron-colour.

Numb. 3.

Is a Stone that weighs 176 and one 8th Mangelins, which makes 242 Carats and five 16ths. A Mangelin coming to one and three 8ths of our Carats. Being at Golconda I saw this Stone; and it was the biggest that ever I saw in my life in a Merchant's hands. It was valu'd at 500000 Roupies, or 750000 Livres of our Money: I offer'd 400000 Roupies, but could not have it.

Numb. 4.

Is the figure of a Diamond which I bought at Amadabat; and it weigh'd 178 Ratis, or 157 Carats and a quarter.

Numb. 5.

Is the figure of the fore-mention'd Diamond, after it was cut on both sides; there remaining 94 Carats and a half; the water being perfect. The flat-side where there were two flaws below, was as thin as a sheet of brown-paper. When the Stone was cut, I caus'd all that thin side to be taken off, with one part of the end above, where there remains one little speck of a flaw.

Numb. 6.

Is another Diamond which I bought at the Mine of Coulour. It is fair and clean, and weighs 36 Mangelins, or 63, and 3 8ths of our Carats.

Numb. 7. and 8.

Are two pieces of a Stone that was cut in two, which being entire, weigh'd 75 Mangelins and a half, or 104 Carats. Though it were of a good water, it seem'd so foul in the middle, that, in regard it was large, and held at a high price, there was ne're a Banian would venture upon it. At length an Hollander bought it, and cutting it in two, found in the middle of it, eight Carats of filth like a rotten-weed. The small piece happen'd to be clean, excepting a little flaw hardly to be perceiv'd, but for the other, wherein there are so many other cross flaws, there was no way but to make seven or eight pieces of it. The Hollander ran a great risco in cutting it a-funder; for it was very great luck that it had not broke into a hunder'd pieces. Yet for all that it did not turn to account; so that it is in vain for another to buy that which a Banian refuses.

CHAP. XX.

The Forms of twenty Rubies which the Author sold to the King upon his last return from the Indies. The first part of the Plate shews the weight, extent, and thickness of every Stone.

Numb. 1.

IS the Figure of a Ruby that belongs to the King of Persia. It is in shape and bigness like an Egg, board through in the middle, deep colour'd, fair and clean, except one flaw in the side. They will not tell you what it cost, nor let you know what it weighs; only it appears by the Register that it has been several years in the Kings Treasury.

Numb. 2.

Is the Figure of a Balleis Ruby; sold for such to Giafer-Kan, the Great Mogul's Uncle, who paid 950000 Roupies, 1425000 Livres for it. But an old Indian Jeweller affirming afterwards, that it was no Balleis Ruby, that it was not worth above 500 Roupies, and that Giafer-Kan was cheated; and his opinion being confirm'd by Sha-jehan, the most skilful in Jewels of any person in the Empire Aureng-zeb compell'd the Merchant to take it again, and to restore the Money back.

Num. 3, and 4.

Is the Figure of a Ruby belonging to the King of Visapour. Numb. 4, is the height of the Stone above the Gold. And Numb. 3, is the roundness of the Beazil.

Beazil. It weighs fourteen Mangelins, or seventeen Carats and a half; a Visa-pour Mangelin being but five Grains. It cost the King 14200 new Pagods, or 74550 Livres.

Numb. 5.

Is the Figure of a Ruby that a Banian shew'd me at Banarous; it weighs 58 Rati's, or 50 Carats and 3 quarters; being of the second rank in beauty. In shape it is like a Plump Almond, bor'd through at the end. I offer'd 40000 Roupies, or 60000 Livres for it; but the Merchant demanded 55000 Roupies.

Numb. 6.

Is the Figure of a great Topaz belonging to the Great Mogul; nor did I see him wear any other but that, all the while I was in India. This Topaz weighs 181 Rati's and half a quarter, or 157 Carats and three quarters. It was bought at Goa for the Great Mogul, and cost 181000 Roupies, or 271500 Livres of our Money.

Numb. 7, 8, 9.

Are the Figures of three several Rubies belonging to the King of France.

Numb. 1.

Is the Figure of a Pearl which the King of Persia bought at the Fishery of Cattifa in Arabia. It cost him 32000 Tomans, or 1400000 Livres of our Money, at forty-six Livres and six Deneers to a Toman. It is the fairest and most perfect Pearl that ever was yet found to this hour, having no defect.

Numb. 2.

Is the Figure of the biggest Pearl that ever I saw in the Court of the Great Mogul. It hangs about the artificial Peacocks neck that adorns his great Throne.

Numb. 3.

Is the Figure of a Pearl that I sold to Cha-Est-Kan; the Water is somewhat faint, but it is the biggest Pearl that was ever carried out of Europe into Asia.

Numb. 4.

Is a great perfect Pearl, as well for its Water as for its form, which is like an Olive. It is in the midst of a Chain of Emraulds and Rubies, which the Great Mogul wears; which being put on, the Pearl dangles at the lower part of his Breast.

Numb. 5.

Is a Pearl perfectly round, the biggest I ever saw, and belongs to the Great Mogul. The like could never be found; for which reason the Great Mogul lays it up very charily, and never uses it. For if it could be match'd, both would make a Pair of Pendants for the Ears, set between Rubies or Emraulds, according to the custom of the Country; there being no person of any quality that does not wear a Pearl between two colour'd Stones in his Ear.

CHAP. XXI.

Of Coral, and Tellow Amber, and the places where it is found.

Coral, but little valu'd in Europe, is highly esteem'd in all the three other parts of the World; and there are three places where they fish for it upon the Coast of Sardigna. That of Arguerrel is the fairest of all. The second place is call'd Boza; and the third is neer the Island of St. Peter. There are two other places upon the Coast of France, the one neer the Bastion of France; the other at Tabarque. There is also another Fishery upon the Coast of Sicily, neer Trepano, but the Coral is small, and ill-colour'd. There is another upon the Coast of Catalogna, neer Cape de Quiers; where the Coral is large, and of an excellent colour, but the branches are short. There is a ninth Fishery in the Island of Majorque, much like that neer the Island of Corfica. And these are all the places in the Mediterranean-Sea, where they fish for Coral; for there is none at all in the Ocean.

Because that Coral grows under the hollow Rocks where the Sea is deep, the Fishers fix two spars of wood a-crofs, fastening a great piece of Lead in the middle to make it sink: after that they wind carelessly about the spar good store of tufted Hemp, and fasten the wood to two Cords, one end whereof hangs at the Poop, the other at the Prow of the Vessel. Then letting go the wood with the stream or current by the sides of the Rock, the Hemp twists it self among the Coral, so that sometimes they stand in need of five or six Boats to pull up the wood again: and if one of the Cables should chance to break with the stress, all the Rowers are in danger to be lost. While they tear up the Coral thus by force, there tumbles as much into the Sea as they fetch up: and the bottom of the Sea being generally very ouzy, the Coral will be eaten as our fruits are eaten by the worms; so that the sooner they get it out of the mud, the less it will be wasted.

This puts me in mind of one thing that I saw at Marseilles in a Shop where they dealt in Coral. It was a great piece of Coral, as big about as a man's fist, which because it was a little worm-eaten, was cut in two pieces. When it was so cut, there was a worm that stirr'd, and had life, and liv'd for some months after, being again put into the hole. For among some branches of Coral there engenders a kind of spongy-matter, like our honey-combs, where these worms lye like bees.

Some think that Coral is soft in the Sea, though in truth it be hard. But this indeed is as true, that in certain months of the year you may squeeze out of the end of a branch a kind of milky-substance; and this perhaps may be a kind of seed, which falling upon any thing that it first meets with in the Sea (as if it light upon a dead Skull, the blade of a Sword, or a Pomgranate) produces another branch of Coral. And I have seen a Pomgranate, and had it in my hand, that had fallen into the Sea, about which the Coral had twin'd at least half a foot high.

They fish for Coral from the beginning of April to the end of July; to which purpose there are employ'd above 200 Vessels, some years more, and some years less. They are built all along the River of Genoa, being very swift. Their sails are very large for more swiftness, so that there are no Gallies can reach them. There are seven men and a boy to every Barque. They never fish above forty miles from the Land, where they think there are Rocks, for fear of the Pyrats, from which they make all the Sail they can when they see them, and easily scape them through the nimbleness of their Vessels.

I have one observation to make concerning Coral, in respect of the Eastern-people. The Japponners make little account of Jewels or Pearls; valuing nothing so much as a good grain of Coral, wherewith they pull the string that shuts their Purfes, such as we had formerly in England. So that they strive who shall have the fairest grain of Coral hanging at the end of the Silk-string that draws their Purfes. For this reason a piece of Coral as big as an egg, fair and clean without any flaw, will produce what any man will ask in reason for it. The Portugueses have have assur'd me they would sometimes give 20000 Crowns for such a piece. And no wonder they will give so much Money for a piece of Coral, who despising all other Jewels and Pearls, care for nothing but that which is in no esteem any where else. They set a great value upon the Skin of a certain Fish which is rougher than a Seal-skin. Upon the back of the Fish there are six little holes, and sometimes eight, somewhat elevated, with another in the middle; in the form of a Rose. They make Scabberds for Swords of the Skin; and the more those holes grow in the form of a Rose, the higher value they put upon them; having giv'n ten-thousand Crowns for a Skin. To conclude the discourse of Coral, you must know that the meaner sort of people use it for Bracelets and Neck-laces, all over Asia, especially toward the Northern Territories of the great Mogul; and all along the Mountains as you go to the Kingdom of Asen and Boutan.

Yellow-Amber is only found upon the Coast of Prussia in the Baltick-Sea, where the Sea throws it upon the Sand when such and such winds blow. The Elector of Brandenburgh, who is Sovereign of that Coast, farms it out for 20000 Crowns a year, and sometimes 22000. And the Farmers keep guards on both sides of the shoar, in regard the Sea casts it up sometimes upon one side, and sometimes upon the other, to prevent the stealing of it.

Amber is nothing but a certain congelation made in the Sea, like a certain Gum; for you shall find in several pieces, Flies, Gnats, and other insects congeal'd therein. I saw seven or eight Flies so congeal'd in one piece.

In China, when any great Lord makes a Feast, it is for his Grandeur and Magnificence to cause three or four several sorts of Perfuming-pots to be set upon the Table, and to throw into every one of them a vast quantity of Amber; for the more it burns, and the bigger the pieces are, the more magnificent is the Entertainment accounted. The reason of this custom is, because they adore the fire; and besides, that the Amber casts forth a scent pleasing to the Chineses, there is a kind of Oil in it, that flames after a more unusual manner than other materials of fire. This wast of Amber makes it the best Commodity that could be imported into China, if the Trade were free for Strangers. At present the Hollanders have engross'd all this Trade to themselves, and the Chineses come all to Batavia to buy it.

As for Amber-grise; there is no person in the World that knows either what it is, or where, or how it is produc'd. But the fairest probability is, that it must be only in the Eastern-Sea: though some parcels have been found upon the Coast of England, and in some other parts of Europe. The greatest quantity is found upon the Coast of Melinda, but more especially in the mouth of a River call'd Rio de Sena. The Governor of Mozambique gets in the three years of his Government above 300000 Pardo's of Amber-grise, every Pardo containing 27 Sous of our Money. Sometimes they meet with very large and very considerable pieces. In the year 1627 a Portugal setting Sail from Goa to the Manilles, after he had past the Streight of Malacca, was by tempest driv'n near an unknown Island, where they came to an Anchor. Several of the Ship's-Company ventring a-shore, met with a River; and going to bath themselves in it, one of them found a great piece of Amber-grise that weigh'd thirty-three pounds; but falling together by the ears about their shares, the Captain, to reconcile them, told them 'twas pitty to deface it, in regard it was a Present fit for the King; and therefore advis'd them to present it to the Vice-Roy, who would no doubt reward them for their pains. By that means the Captain got the parcel out of their Clutches, and presenting it to the Vice-Roy, got a reward for himself; and the Party that found it: but the rest had nothing at all.

In the year 1646 or 1647, a Middleburgher of good quality found a piece of forty-two pounds upon the Coast of the Island of St. Maurice, where he commanded for the Holland-Company, East of the Island of St. Lawrence, and sent it to Batavia: but there being a mark, as if some piece of it were broken off, the Zelander, was accus'd to have taken half, and turn'd out of his Command, whatever he could say to justify himself.

CHAP. XXII.

Of Musk and Bezoar; and some other Medicinal Stones.

THE best sort, and the greatest quantity of Musk, comes from the Kingdom of Boutan, from whence they bring it to Patna, the chief City of Bengala, to truck it away for other Commodities. All the Musk that is sold in Persia comes from thence. And the Musk-Merchants had rather deal with you for Coral and Yellow-Amber, than for Gold or Silver; in regard the other is more in esteem among the Natives where they live. I was so curious as to bring the Skin of one to Paris, of which I caus'd the figure to be cut.

After they have kill'd the creature, they cut off the bladder that grows under the belly as big as an egg, nearer to the genital parts than to the navil. Then they take out the Musk that is in the bladder, which at that time looks like clotted blood. When the natives would adulterate their Musk, they stuff the bladder with the liver and blood of the Animal sic'd together, after they have taken out as much of the right Musk as they think convenient. This mixture in two or three years time produces certain Animals in the bladder that eat the good Musk; so that when you come to open it, there is a great wast. Others, so soon as they have cut off the bladder, and taken out as much of the Musk, as that the deceit may not be too palpable, fill up the Vessel with little stones to make it weight. The Merchants are less displeas'd at this deceit than the former, by reason that they do not find the Musk to be eaten. But the deceit is harder to be discover'd, when they make little Purfes of the skin of the belly of the Beast, which they sow up with strings of the same skin, which are like the true bladders; and then fill those Purfes with what they have taken out of the right bladders, and the other fraudulent mixture which they design to put among it. True it is, that should they tie up the bladder as soon as they cut it off, without giving it air or time to lose its force, the strength of the perfume would cause the blood to gush out of the nose, so that it must be qualifi'd to render it acceptable, or rather less hurtful to the brain. The scent of the Beast which I carri'd to Paris, was so strong, that I could not keep it in my Chamber; for it made all peoples heads ake that came near it. At length my Servants laid it in a Garret, and cut off the bladder, and yet the scent remain'd very strong. This creature is not to be found in 65 degrees, but in 60 there are vast numbers, the Countrey being all over cover'd with Forrests. True it is, that in the months of February and March, after these creatures have endur'd a sharp hunger, by reason of the great Snows that fall where they breed, ten or twelve foot deep, they will come to 44 or 45 degrees to fill themselves with Corn and new Rice. And then it is that the Natives lay gins and snares for them to catch them as they go back: shooting some with Bows, and knocking others o'the head. Some have assur'd me that they are so lean and faint with hunger at that time, that you may almost take them running. There must be surely a prodigious number of these creatures, none of them having above one bladder no bigger then a Hen's-egg, which will not yield above half an ounce of Musk: and sometimes three or four will not afford an ounce; and yet what a world of Musk is bought up?

The King of Boutan fearing that the cheats and adulterations of Musk would spoil the Musk-Trade, order'd that none of the Bladders should be sow'd up, but that they should be all brought to Boutan, and there, after due inspection, be seal'd up with his Seal. Yet notwithstanding all the wariness and care of the King, they will sometimes cunningly open them, and put in little pieces of Lead to augment the weight. In one Voyage to Patna I bought 7673 bladders, that weigh'd 2557 ounces and an half; and 452 ounces out of the bladder.

Bezoar comes from a Province of the Kingdom of Golconda toward the North-east. It is found among the ordure in the paunch of a wild-Goat that browzes upon a certain Tree, the name whereof I have forgot. This shrub bears little buds, round about which, and the tops of the boughs, the Bezoar engenders in the maw of the Goat. It is shap'd according to the form of the buds or tops of the branches which the Goats eat: which is the reason there are so many shapes of Bezoar-Stones. The Natives, by feeling the belly of the Goat, know how many Stones she has within, and sell the Goat according to the quantity. This they will find out by sliding their hands under their bellies, and then shaking both sides of the paunch; for the Stones will fall into the middle, where they may easily count them all by their feeling.

The rarity of Bezoar is in the bigness; though the small Bezoar has the same vertue as that which is larger. But there is more deceit in the large Bezoar; for the Natives have got a trick to add to the bigness of the Stone, with a certain Paste compos'd of Gum, and something else of the colour of Bezoar. And they are so cunning too, to shape it just like natural Bezoar. The cheat is found out two ways; the first is by weighing the Bezoar, and then steeping it in warm water; if neither the water change colour, nor the Bezoar lose any thing of its weight, the Stone is right. The other way is to thrust a red-hot Bodkin of Iron into the Stone; if the Bodkin enters, and causes it to fry, there is a mixture. Bezoar is dearer according to the bigness of the Stones, advancing in price like Diamonds. For if five or six Bezoars weigh an ounce, an ounce will be worth fifteen or eighteen Franks; but if it be a Stone of one ounce, that very ounce is well worth 100 Franks. I have sold one of four ounces and a half for 2000 Livres.

I have been very curious to inform my self of all things that concern'd the nature of Bezoar; but could never learn in what part of the body of the Goat it was to be found. One time among the rest, having oblig'd several Native Merchants by putting off for them a great quantity of Bezoar; upon my request, though it be death without mercy to transport any of these Goats out of the Countrey, they brought me six Goats by stealth to my lodging. When I ask'd the price of them, I was surpriz'd, when they told me one was worth but three Roupies; that the two other were worth four Roupies; and the three others four and three quarters a piece. I ask'd them why some were more worth than others; but I found afterwards that the first had but one Bezoar, that the rest had two, or three, or four. The six Goats had in all seventeen Bezoars in them, and a half one, as big as the half of a Hazel-nut. The inside was like the soft ordure of the Goat, the Bezoar lying among the dung, which is in the belly of the Goat. Some averr'd that they grew right against the liver, others right against the heart, but I could never find out the truth.

As well in the East, as West, there are a great quantity of Bezoars that breed in the same manner in Cows; of which there have been some that have weigh'd seventeen or eighteen ounces; For there was such a one that was giv'n to the Great Duke of Tuscany. But those Bezoars are little esteem'd, six grains of the other Bezoar working more powerfully than thirty of this.

As for the Bezoar which breeds in Apes, as some believe, it is so strong, that two grains work as effectually as six of Goat's-Bezoar: but it is very scarce, as being only found in those Apes that breed in the Island of Macassar. This sort of Bezoar is round, whereas the other is of several fashions, as I said before. As the Apes Bezoar is stronger, and scarcer than the Goats, so it is dearer, and more sought after; a piece as big as a nut, being sometimes worth a hunder'd Crowns. The Portugals make great account of this Bezoar, standing always upon their guard for fear of being poison'd.

There is another Stone in great esteem, that is call'd the Porcupine's-Stone, which that creature is said to carry in its head, and is more precious than Bezoar against poison. If it be steep'd in water a quarter of an hour, the water becomes so bitter, that nothing can be more bitter. There is also a Stone sometimes found in the belly of that creature of the same nature; and as good as that which comes from the head; nevertheless with this difference, that being steep'd in water, it loses nothing of its weight nor bulk, as the other does. I have bought in my time three of those Stones. One of them cost me 500 Crowns, and I exchang'd it to advantage. I paid four-hunder'd Crowns for the other, which I kept, the other was sold me for 200 Crowns, which I presented to a friend.

There

There is the Serpent-Stone not to be forgot, about the bigness of a double; and some are almost oval, thick in the middle, and thin about the sides. The Indians report that it is bred in the head of certain Serpents. But I rather take it to be a Story of the Idoloter's Priests, and that the Stone is rather a composition of certain Drugs. Whatever it be, it is of excellent vertue to drive any venom out of those that are bit by venomous creatures. If the person bit be not much wounded, the place must be incis'd; and the Stone being appli'd thereto, will not fall off till it has drawn all the poison to it. To cleanse it, you must steep it in Womans-milk, or for want of that, in Cows-milk; after the Stone has lain ten or twelve hours, the milk will turn to the colour of an Apostemated matter. The Arch-Bishop of Goa carrying me to his Cabinet of Rarities, shew'd me one of these Stones; and after he had assur'd me of the rare qualities it had, gave it me. Once as he cross'd a Marsh in the Island of Salseté where Goa stands, one of the men that carr'd his Pallequis, being half naked, was bit by a Serpent, and heal'd at the same time. I bought several; but there are none but the Bramines that sell them, which makes me believe that they compound them. There are two ways to try whether the Serpent-Stone be true or false. The first is, by putting the Stone in your mouth, for then it will give a leap, and fix to the Palate. The other is, by putting it in a glass full of water; for if the Stone be true, the water will fall a boyling, and rise in little bubbles up to the top of the Glass.

There is another Stone, which is call'd the Stephen's-Stone with the hood. This is a kind of Serpent that has a kind of a hood hanging down behind the head, as it is represented in the Figure. And it is behind this hood that the Stone is found, many times as big as Pullet's-egg. There are some Serpents both in Asia and America of a monstrous bigness, 25 foot long; as was that, the skin whereof is kept in Batavia, which had swallow'd a Maid of 18 years of age. These Stones are not found in any of those Serpents that are not at least two foot long. This Stone being rubb'd against another Stone, yields another slime, which being drank in water by the person that has the poison in his body, powerfully drives it out. These Serpents are no-where to be found but upon the Coasts of Melinde; but for the Stones you may buy them of the Portuguese Mariners and Souldiers that come from Mozambique.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the Places where they find their Gold both in Asia and America.

Japon, which consists of several Islands Eastward of China, bending to the North, some people believing that Nippon, which is the biggest, is in a manner join'd to the firm Land, is that Region of all Asia that yields the greatest quantity of Gold: Though others believe it is found in the Island of Formosa, and carri'd thence to Japon. For as long as the Hollanders have had the Island, they could never yet tell what is the Trade of that Coast, whence they believe the Gold comes.

There comes also Gold from China, which the Chineses exchange for the Silver which is brought them. For price for price, they love Silver better than Gold; because they have no Silver-Mines. Yet it is the coarsest metal of all the Asiatick Gold.

The Island of Celebes or Macassar produces Gold also, which is drawn out of the Rivers, where it rowls among the Sand.

In the Island of Achen or Sumatra, after the rainy season, when the Torrents are wasted, they find veins of Gold in the Flints, which the waters wash down from the Mountains that lye toward the North-east. Upon the West-side of the Island, when the Hollanders come to lade their Pepper, the Natives bring them great store of Gold, but very coarse metal, if not worse than that of China.

Toward the Thibet, which is the ancient Caucasus, in the Territories of a Raja, beyond the Kingdom of Chachemir, there are three Mountains close one by another one of which produces excellent Gold, the other Granats, and the third Lapis-Lazuli.

There is Gold also comes from the Kingdom of Tipra, but it is coarse, almost as bad as that of China; and these are all the places in Asia that produce Gold. I shall now say something of the Gold of Africa, and the places where it is found in greatest quantities.

Observe by the way, that the Vice-Roy of Mozambique has under his Command the Governors of Sofala and Chepon-Goura. The first of these two Governments lies upon the River Sene, sixty leagues from the Mouth of the River; and the other ten leagues higher. From the Mouth of the River to those very places on each side of the River, great numbers of Negro's inhabit, which are all commanded by one Portuguese. The Portuguezes have been Masters of this Countrey for many years, where they take upon them like Lords, and make War one upon another for the slightest occasions in the World; some of them having under them five-thousand Cafres, which are their Slaves. The Governor of Mozambique furnishes them with Calicuts, and all other necessary Commodities which they want, which he sells them at his own rates. When he enters upon his Government he carries with him great quantities of all sorts of Commodities, especially Calicuts dy'd black. His Correspondents also in Goa send him every year two Vessels, which he sends to Sofala, Chepon-Goura, and even as far as the City of Monomotopa, the chief City of a Kingdom of the same name, otherwise call'd Vouuebaran, distant from Chepon-Goura fifty leagues, or thereabouts. He that commands all that Countrey, assumes the name of Emperor of Monomotopa, extending his Dominions as far as the Confines of Prefter John's Countrey. From this Country of Monomotopa it is, that the most pure and finest Gold of all Africa comes: where they dig it with ease out of the earth, not being put to labour above two or three foot deep. In some places of that Countrey which are not inhabited by reason of the scarcity of water, the people find great pieces of Gold, of several forms and weights, upon the surface of the earth; some of which weigh an ounce. One I have by me that weighs an ounce and a half, or thereabouts. Being at Surat, I went to visit the Embassadour of the King of the Abyssins. He shew'd us the Present which his Master had sent to the Great Mogul, consisting of fourteen stately Horses, the remainder of 30, the rest dying by the way; and a great number of Slaves of both Sexes. But what was most remarkable remarkable, was a natural Tree, all of Gold, two foot and four inches high, and six inches about in the stock. It had ten or twelve branches, some whereof shot out half a foot in length, and an inch about; others much smaller. In some parts of the great branches appear'd certain bunches that resembl'd buds. The roots of the Tree, which were also natural, were thick and short; the longest not exceeding four or five inches.

The Natives of Monomotopa knowing the time of the year that the Commodities arrive, come to Sofala and Chepon-Goura to furnish themselves. Thither also come the Cafres of other Provinces and Kingdoms for the same purpose. Whereupon the Governors of those places sell them what they want, trusting them till the next year, when they oblige themselves to bring their Gold, which they are very punctual to do, for else there could be no Trade between them. The Natives of Monomotopa never live long, by reason of the badness of the waters in the Countrey: For at the age of five and twenty years they begin to be dropsical; so that it is a great wonder if any among them live above forty years. The Province where the River Sene has its head, is call'd Monkaran, and is under the Jurisdiction of a certain King, beginning a hunder'd leagues, or thereabouts, above Chapon-Goura. The people of that Countrey find great store of dust-Gold in the Rivers that fall into the Sene; but it is much coarser than the other, though they bring it to Chepon-Goura and Sofala. The Countrey is very healthy, and the people live as long as they do in Europe. Some years there are Cafres that come from beyond the Province of Monkaran, even as far as the Cape of good Hope. The Portuguez have enquir'd after their Countrey, and the name; but they can tell no more, only that it is call'd Sabia, commanded by a King; and that they are four months generally travelling to Sofala. The Gold which they bring is very fine, and in pieces like that of Monomotopa, which they say they find in the high Mountains, digging only ten or twelve foot in the ground. They also bring great quantities of Elephants-teeth; wherewith, by their report, the Countrey does so abound, that you may see them in herds in the fields; and that all the Palisado's of their Fortresses, and the Pales of their Parks, are made of Elephants-teeth. Their usual Diet is Elephants-flesh; which four Cafres will kill with their Ageagayes, or a sort of Half-pikes. The water of their Countrey is very bad, which is the reason that their thighs are swell'd, and it is a wonder to see any one of them free.

Beyond Sofala there is a Countrey commanded by a King, who is call'd the King of Beroe. In some parts of his Countrey there grows a Root about an inch-thick, and of a yellow colour. It heals all sorts of Fevers, causing the Patient to vomit. But because it grows very scarce, the King strictly forbids his Subjects to export it. The tast of it is very bitter upon the tongue.

As for Silver-Mines, there are none in all Asia but only in Japon; but some years since, at Delegora, Sangora, Bordelon and Bata, have been discover'd plentiful Mines of Tin, to the great damage of the English, there being now enough in Asia of their own besides.

CHAP. XXIV.

The Relation of a Notable piece of Treachery, whereby the Author was abus'd when he Embark'd at Gomrom for Surat.

IN the Month of April 1665, being ready to depart from Gomrom for Surat, in a Vessel that belong'd to a Holland-Broker, commanded by a Holland-Captain, the English Agent gave me a Packet of Letters to deliver to the President at Surat. The Packet was large, containing not only the Companies-Letters, but several private Letters to particular persons at Surat and other parts of India. This Packet I receiv'd in the presence of one Casembrot, a Hollander, who inform'd another Dutch-man, whose name was Wanwuck, of it. Thereupon they presently contriv'd contriv'd a design to seize this Packet, upon the report that ran of the rupture between England and Holland. Casembrot having seen the bigness of the Packet, gives Wauwuck a discription of it, and so both together they contrive another of the same form and bigness as neer as they could. When I came a-board, I took the English Packet, and lock'd it up in my Bouccha, which is the sort of Cloak-bag that is us'd in that Countrey, and laid it behind my Bolster. There were two Shallops sent a-board us, wherein there were sixty bags of Silver, containing some fifty, some a hunder'd Tomans a piece. These bags they unladed very leisurely to gain time, watching when I would be gone to bed. But when they saw that I did not go to rest, the Dutch consulted together, and agreed to let fall a bag of Tomans into the Sea; and so came all a-board, sending away a Shallop to Gomron for a Diver. When I found that the Vessel would not set Sail till two or three hours after day-light, I went to rest, my Bouccha lying in the same place, half out, and half with in-side of my Bolster: But when my Servants were gone, and I alone and a-sleep in the Cabin, they cunningly stole my Bouccha, took out the English Packet, and left the other which they had counterfeited, in the place; being only so many Letters of blank-paper. Coming to Surat the sixth of May following, I gave the Packet, as I thought, which I had receiv'd from the English Agent at Gomron, to two Capuchin-Friers to deliver to the President at Surat. But when the President came to open the Packet before several of the Company, there was nothing but white-paper made up in the form of Letters; which when I heard, too much to my sorrow, I understood the villanous trick that Van-Wuck had put upon me. I wrote a smart Letter of complaint to the Dutch-General in Batavia, but finding no redress, was forc'd to undergo the hard censure of the English, who would not permit me to justify my self. However, as it is rare to see treachery go unpunish'd, the Complotters all dy'd miserably. Van-Wuck fell into a violent Fever, and being charg'd with the theft; thinking to defend himself with an equivocation, that if he took the Cloak-bag, he wish'd he might dye without speaking a word, in three days ended his life just in the same manner, and at the same time that he had imprecated upon himself. Bozan his Lieutenant, after a great debauch, going to sleep upon the Terrass of the Cabin, where he lay for coolness, (there being no balisters,) rolling and tumbling in his sleep, fell down, and the next day was found dead in the Sea.

The Captain, four or five days after his arrival at Surat, being met in the Street by a Mahometan, who was jealous of his Wife, and being mistak'n by him for one among several Franks, that had parted him, and kept him from correcting his Wife some few days before, was stabb'd by him in three or four places with a Dagger, and kill'd him out right. And this was the end of those treacherous people.

TRAVELS IN INDIA.

The Third Book.

CHAP. I.

Of the particular Religion of the Mahometans in the East Indies.

THE diversity of Opinions among the Maahometans, does not consist in the different Expositions which they put upon the Alcoran; but in the contrariety of Belief which they receiv'd by Tradition from the first Successors of Mahomet. From thence there sprung two Sects, directly opposite: The one, which is call'd the Sect of the Sounnis, follow'd by the Turks; and the other of the Chiais, which is adher'd to by the Persians. I will not enlarge my self upon these two Sects, that divide all Mahometism; it being my design, only to tell you how the condition of that false Religion stands in the Empire of the Great Mogul, and in the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour.

When Mahometism was first brought into the Indies, there was an excess of pride, but no devotion among the Christians; and the Idolaters were an effeminate people, able to make little resistance; so that it was easie for the Mahometans to subdue both the one and the other by force of Arms, which they did so advantageously, that many, as well Christians as Idolaters, embrac'd the Mahometan Religion.

The Great Mogul, with all his Court, follows the Sect of the Sounnis; the King of Golconda, that of the Chiais. In the King of Visapour's Territories the Sounnis and Chiais are mingl'd together; which may be said also of the Court of the Great Mogul, in regard of the great numbers of Persians that flock thither to serve in his Armies. True it is, that though they abhor the Sounnis, yet they adhere to the Religion of the Prince; holding it lawful for the preservation of their Estates to conceal their belief. As for what concerns the Kingdom of Golconda, Koutoub-Cha, the present King, very zealously maintains the Law of the Chiais; in regard the Grandees of his Court are almost all Persians.

Aureng-zeb testifies above all things an extraordinary devotion for the Sect of the Sounnis; of which he is so zealous an observer, that he surpasses all his Predecessors in outward profession; which was the Cloak under which he usurp'd the Crown. When he took possession of his Throne, he gave it out that he did it only out of a design to cause the Law of Mahomet to be more strictly observ'd, which had been very much neglected in the Reign of Shah-jehan his Father, and Gehan-guir his Grandfather; and to shew himself more zealous to the Law, he turn'd Faquir or Dervich, that is, poor Volunteer; and under, under that false pretence of Piety he cunningly made way to the Empire. And indeed though he has a great many Persians under his pay, yet he will not permit them to keep holy the day consecrated to the memory of Hosen and Heuffin, the two sons of Ali, who were put to death by the Sounnis; besides that they, to please him, are willing enough to conform.

CHAP. II.

Of the Faquirs, or poor Mahometan Volunteers in the East Indies.

They reckon that there are in the Indies eight hundred thousand Faquirs, and twelve hunder'd thousand Idolaters; which is a prodigious Number. They are all of them Vagabonds, and lazy Drones, that dazle the eyes of the people with a false zeal, and make them believe that whatever comes out of their mouths is an Oracle.

There are several sorts of Mahometan Faquirs. The one sort go almost naked like the Idolatrous Faquirs, having no certain abode in the world, but giving themselves up to all manner of uncleanness. There are others whose Garments are of so many different pieces and colours, that a man can hardly tell of what they are made. These Garments reach down to the half Leg, and hide the rags that are underneath. They go generally in Troops; and have their Superiour of the Gang, who is known by his Garment, which is generally poorer, and consists of more patches than the other. Besides, that he draws after him a great Iron Chain, which is ty'd to his Leg, and is about two Ells long, and proportionably thick. When he says his prayers, he does it with a loud voice, and ratling his Chain all the while, which is accompany'd with an affected gravity, that draws the Veneration of the people. In the mean time the people prepare Dinner for him and his company, in the place where he takes up his stand, which is usually in some street or publick place. There he causes his Disciples to spread certain Carpets, where he sets himself down to give audience to the people. On the other side, the Disciples go about publishing through the Country the vertues of their Master, and the favours he receives from God, who reveals his most important secrets to him, and gives him power to relieve persons in affliction by his counsel. The people, who give credit to him, and believe him to be a holy man, approach him with a great devotion, and when they come near him, they pull off their Shoes, and prostrate themselves to kiss his feet. Then the Faquir, to shew his humility reaches out his hand to kiss; that done, he causes them that come to consult him, to sit down by him, and hears every one apart. They boast themselves to have a prophetick Spirit; and above all to teach barren women a way how to have Children, and to be belov'd by whom they please.

There are some of these Faquirs who have above two hundred Disciples, or more, which they assemble together by the sound of a Horn, or the Beat of a Drum. When they travel, they have their Standard, Lances, and other Weapons which they pitch in the ground, near to their Master, when he repofes in any place.

The third sort of East Indian Faquirs, are those that being born of poor Parents, and desirous to understand the Law, to the end they may become Moullas or Doctors, retire to the Mosques, where they live upon the Alms which is given them. They employ all their time in reading the Alcoran, which they get by heart; and if they can but add to that study the knowledge of some natural things, and an exemplary life withall, they come to be chief of the Mosques, and to the dignity of Moullahs, and Judges of the Law. Those Faquirs have their Wives; and some, out of their great zeal to imitate Mahomet, have three or four; thinking they do God great service in begetting many Children to be followers of their Laws.

CHAP. III

Of the Religion of the Gentiles, or Idolatrous Indians.

THE Idolaters among the Indians are so numerous, that they are reckon'd to be five or six for one Mahometan. It seems a wonderful thing, that such a prodigious multitude of men should be cow'd by a handful, and bow so easily under the yolk of the Mahometan Princes. But that wonder well may cease, when we consider that those Idolaters are not in union among themselves; for Superstition has introduc'd such a diversity of Opinions and Customs, that they can never agree one with another. An Idolater will not eat Bread nor drink Water in the House of any one that is not of his Caste; though it be more noble, and much more superior to his own. Yet they all eat and drink in the Bramins Houses, which are open to all the world. A Caste among the Idolaters, is very near the same thing which was anciently call'd a Tribe among the Jews. And though it be vulgarly believ'd, that there are seventy-two Castes, yet I have been inform'd by some of their most ingenuous Priests, that they may all be reduc'd into four Principal ones, from whence all the rest drew their Original.

The first Caste is that of the Bramins, who are the Successors of the ancient Brachmans, or Indian Philosophers, that study'd Astrology. You may also meet with some of their Ancient Books, in reading whereof the Brammins spend all their time; and are so vers'd in their observations, that they never fail a minute in the Eclipses of the Sun and Moon. And to preserve this knowledg among themselves they have a kind of University, in a City which is call'd Benarez, where they make all their exercises in Astrology, and where they have Doctors that expound their Law, which they very strictly observe. But in regard they are so great a number, and cannot all come to study at that University, they are all very ignorant, and consequently very superstitious; those that go for the most refin'd Wits, being the greatest Sorcerers.

The second Caste is that of the Raspoutes or Keris, that is to say, Warriors and warlike people. These are the only Idolatrous Indians that have any courage to signalize themselves in War. All the Raja's that I have so often mention'd, are of this Caste. These are so many petty Kings, whom their disunion has render'd Tributary to the Great Mogul. But in regard that the greatest part of them are in his service, they are highly recompenc'd by the large Salaries they receive for the small Tribute which they pay. These Raja's, and the Raspoutes their Subjects, are the chiefest support of the Dominions of the Great Mogul; for indeed the Raja's Jessing and Jessomseing were those that lifted up Aurengzeb to the Throne. But you must take notice, that all of this second Caste are not Warriors; for they are the Raspoutes only that go to War, and are all Horsemen. But for the Keris, they are degenerated from their Ancestors, and of Soldiers are become Merchants.

The third Caste is that of the Bannians, who are altogether addicted to Trade; of whom some are Sheraffs or Bankers, others Broakers, employ'd between Merchant and Merchant for buying and selling. Those of this Caste are so subtil and nimble in Trade, that as I have said before, the Jews may be their Prentices. They accustom their Children betimes to fly Idleness. And instead of suffering them to lose their time in playing in the Streets, as we generally do, they teach them Arithmetick; which they are so perfect at, that without making use either of Pen or Ink, or Counters, but only of their memories, they will in a moment cast up the most difficult account that can be imagin'd. They always live with their Fathers, who instruct them in Trade, and do nothing but what they shew them. If any man in the heat of passion chafe at 'em, they hear him patiently without making any reply, and parting coldly from him, will not see him again in three or four days, when they think his passion may be over. They never eat any thing that has life; nay they would rather dye, than kill the smallest Animal or Vermin that crawls ; being in that point above all things the most zealous Observers of the Law. They never fight, nor go to War ; neither will they eat or drink in the House of a Raspoute, because they kill the Victuals they eat, all but Cows, which they never touch.

The fourth Caste is that of the Charados or Sondras ; who go to War as well as the Raspoutes, but with this difference, that the Raspoutes serve on Horseback, and the Charados on foot. Both of them take it for an Honour to dye in Battel ; and let him be Horse or Foot, that Soldier is accounted infamous that retreats in Fight ; 'tis an eternal blot in his Family. upon which subject I will tell you a story. A Soldier who was passionately in love with his Wife, and reciprocally belov'd by her, had fled from the fight, not so much out of any fear of death, as out of a consideration of the grief which it would occasion to his Wife, should he leave her a Widow. When she knew the reason of his flight, as soon as he came to the door, she shut it against him, and order'd him to be told, that she could never acknowledg that man for a Husband, who had preferr'd the Love of a Woman before his Honour ; that she did not desire to see him any more, as being a stain to the Reputation of her Family ; and that she would endeavour to teach her Children to have more courage than their Father. The Wife continuing firm to her resolution, the Husband to regain his Honour and her affection, return'd to the Army, where he so behav'd himself, that he became famous ; and having highly made amends for his Cowardise, the door of his House was again set open, and his Wife receiv'd him with her former kindness.

The rest of the Natives, that are not reckon'd in the number of these Castes, are call'd Pauzeours. These are such as employ themselves in Handicraft Trades ; among which there is no other distinction, but according to the Trades which they follow from Father to Son. So that a Taylor cannot prefer his Son, but only in his own Calling, though he be never so rich ; nor marry either a Son or Daughter, but to one of his own Craft. By the same rule, when a Taylor dies, all those of his own Trade accompany the corps to the place where it is burnt : and the same practise is observ'd in all other Trades.

Among the particular Castes, there is one that goes by the name of Alecors, whose employment is only to clean Houses ; for which every Family pays him something once a month, according to their proportion and quality. If a person of quality in the Indies keeps fifty Servants, let him be Mahometan or Idolater, there is not one of them will take a Besome in his hand to sweep the House ; for he would think himself affronted, it being one of the greatest scorn you can put upon an Indian, to call him Alacor. Besides, every one of those Servants knows his business ; whether it be to carry the pot of Water to drink by the way, or to give his Master his Pipe of Tobacco when he calls for it ; so that if the Master should bid one to do that which the other was appointed to do, that Servant would stand like a Statue, and never make him any answer. But for the Slaves, they are oblig'd to do what ever the Master commands them. These Alacors having no other business but only to make clean the Houses, eat the scraps of all other Castes ; and so without scruple feed upon any thing. There are none but those of this Tribe make use of Asles, to carry away the filth of the Houses into the Field ; for which reason none of the rest of the Indians will so much as touch that Animal ; which is quite otherwise in Persia, as well for carriage, as to ride upon. Moreover, there are none of the other Indians, except the Alacors that will eat.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Kings and Idolatrous Princes of Asia.

THE chiefest of the Idolatrous Kings of Asia, are the King of Aracan, the King of Pegu, the King of Siam, the King of Cochinchina, and the King of Tunquin. As for the King of China, we know that he was an Idolater before the Tartars invaded his Dominions. But since that, we know not what to report of certainty, in regard that the Tartars who are now Masters of the Country, are neither Idolaters nor Mahometans, but rather both together. In the Islands, the King of Japon, the King of Ceylan, and some petty Kings of the Molucca Islands are Idolaters; as are all the Raja's as well in the Empire of the Great Mogul, as in the neighbouring Kingdoms of Visapour and Golconda. In a word, all the meaner sort of people, as well in the Territories of the Great Mogul, Kings of Golconda and Visapour, as in the Isles of Achan, Java, and Macassar, though their Kings are Mahumetans, are all themselves Idolaters.

Some fifty years ago, one of the Kings of Ceylan became a Christian, and was baptiz'd by the name of John, being call'd before the Emperor Priapender. But as soon as he had embrac'd the Christian Faith, the Princes and Priests of the Country set up another King in his room. He endeavour'd all he could to bring his people to follow his example; to which purpose he assign'd to the Father Jesuits, twelve large Villages about Colombo, for the bringing up the youth of the Country in their Colledges; to the end that they being well instructed, might instruct others. For the King made it plain to the Jesuits, that it was impossible for them so well to understand the Language of the Country, as to be able to preach to the Natives. Besides, that they found the ingenuities of the Youth of Ceylan so quick and apprehensive, that they learnt more Latin, Philosophy, and other Sciences in six months, than the Europeans learnt in a year; and that they put such subtle Questions to their Masters, as were beyond imagination.

Some years after the King had profess'd Christianity, a witty man of the Island of Ceylan, and a good natural Philosopher, whose name was Alegamme, Moriar, or the Master of the Philosophers, after he had convers'd with the Jesuits and other Religious persons, was inspir'd to turn Christian. Thereupon he went to the Jesuits, and told them, that he desir'd to be a Christian; but withall he was very earnest to know what Jesus Christ had done, and left in writing. They gave him the new Testament, which he set himself to read with that heed and study, that in less than six months there was hardly a passage which he could not repeat. After that he again testifi'd to the Jesuits and other Religious persons, that he had a great desire to turn Christian, in regard he found their Religion to be such as Jesus Christ had taught; but only he wonder'd that they themselves did not follow his example. For that he could never find by his reading, that Jesus Christ ever took any money of any body; but that they took all they could get, and never baptiz'd nor buri'd unless they were well paid. But though he started the Question, he was baptiz'd, and afterwards became a sedulous converter of others.

CHAP. V.

What the Idolaters believe touching a Divinity.

THOUGH the Idolatrous Indians attribute to the Creature, as to Cows, Apes, and several Monsters, those Divine Honours which are only due to the true Deity; yet they acknowledge one only Infinite God, Almighty, and only Wife, the Creator of Heaven and earth, who fills all places with his presence. They call him in some places Permesseer, in others Peremael, and Westnon among the Bramins that inhabit the Coast of Cormandel. It may be, because they have heard that the Circle is the most perfect of all Figures, therefore it is that they say God is of an Oval Figure; for they have in all their Pagods an Oval Flintstone, which they fetch from Ganges, and worship as a God. They are so obstinately wedded to this foolish imagination that the wisest among the Bramins will not so much as hear any argument to the contrary. So that it is no wonder that a people led by such blind Guides, should fall into such Abysses of Idolatry. There is one Tribe so superstitious, in reference to that article, that they carry those Oval Flints about their Necks, and beat them against their Breasts, when they are at their devotions. In this dark and lamentable mist of ignorance, these Idolaters make their Gods to be born like men, and assign them Wives, imagining that theirs are the pleasures of men. Thus they take their Ram for a great Deity, in regard of the Miracles which they believe he wrought while he liv'd upon Earth. Ram was the Son of a potent Raja, who was call'd by the name of Désérét, and the most vertuous of all his Children, which he had by two lawful Wives. He was particular belov'd by his Father, who design'd him to be his Successor. But the Mother of Ram being dead, the Raja's other Wife, who had her Husband entirely at her beck, prevail'd with him to exterminate Ram and his Brother Lokeman from his House, and all his Territories; upon whose exclusion the Son of that Wife was declar'd the Raja's Successor. As the two Brothers were about to be gone, Ram's Wife Sita, of whom he went to take his leave, and whom the Idolaters worship as a Goddess, beg'd of him that she might not leave him, having made a resolution never to forsake him; whereupon they all three went together to seek their fortunes. They were not very successful at first; for as they pass'd through a Wood, Ram being in pursuit of a Bird, stray'd from the Company, and was missing a long time; insomuch that Sita fearing that some disaster was befall'n him, besought Lokeman to look after him. He excus'd himself at first, by reason that Ram had oblig'd him never to leave Sita alone, foreseeing by a Prophetick Spirit what would befall her, should she be left to her self. Nevertheless Lokeman being over perswaded by the prayers of his fair Sister, went to seek for Ram his Brother; but in the mean time Rhevan another of the Idolaters Gods, appear'd to Sita in the shape of a Faquir, and beg'd an Alms of her. Now Ram had order'd Sita, that she should not stir out of the place where he left her; which Rhevan well knowing, would not receive the Alms which Sita presented him, unless she would remove to another place; which when Sita had done, either out of negligence or forgetfulness, Rhevan seiz'd upon her, and carry'd her into the thick of the Wood, where his Train stay'd for him. Ram at his return missing Sita, fell into a swoon for grief, but being brought again to himself by his Brother Lokeman, they two immediately went together in search of Sita, who was so dearly belov'd by her Husband.

When the Bramins repeat this Rape of their Goddess, they do it with tears in their eyes, and great demonstrations of sorrow; adding upon this subject, an infinite company of Fables more ridiculous, to shew the great courage of Ram in pursuit of the Ravisher. They employ'd all Creatures living upon the discovery; but none of them had the luck to succeed, only the Monkey call'd Harman. He cross'd over the Sea at one Leap, and coming into Rhevan's Gardens, found Sita in the extremity of affliction; and very much surpriz'd to hear an Ape speak to her in her Husbands behalf. At first she would not give any credit to such an Ambassador; but the Ape, to shew that his Commission was authentick, presents her with a Ring which her Husband had giv'n her, and that she had left behind her among her Furniture. She could hardly however believe so great a Miracle, as that Ram her Husband should make a Beast speak, to bring her the news of his health, and to testify as he did the marks of his affection. But the Ape Harman wrought Miracles himself, for being taken for a Spy by some Rhevans Servants, who therefore would have burnt him, he made use of the fire which they had prepar'd to burn him, to set Rhevans Palace on fire, which he almost consum'd to the ground, with all the tatters and rags which were ty'd to his tail and his body. When the Ape had thus done, the better to escape out of Rhevans hands, he took the same way he came, and repassing the Sea again at one jump, he came and gave Ram an account of his adventures; and told him in what a sorrowful condition he had found Sita, who did nothing but mourn by reason of her absence from her Husband. Ram touch'd with his Wives affection, resolv'd to deliver her out of Rhevans hands, whatever it cost him; whereupon he rais'd Forces, and being guided by the Ape, at length he came to Rhevans Palace, that still smok'd, the fire had been so great; and by reason that Rhevans Servants were dispers'd, Ram had an easie opportunity to see his belov'd Sita again, whom Rhevan abandon'd wholly to him, flying for fear to the Mountains. Ram and Sita were infinitely overjoy'd at their coming together again, and return'd very great Honours to Harman, who had done him so great service.

As for Rhevan, he spent all the rest of his days like a poor Faquir, seeing his Country ruin'd by Ram's Troops, who was resolv'd to be reveng'd for the injury which he had receiv'd; and from this Rhevan it was, from whence that infinite multitude of Faquirs, that swarm all over India, first took their Original.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Faquirs, or poor Volunteers among the Indians, and of their Pennances.

THE Original of the Faquirs, as I said before, came from that Rhevan, whom Ram dispos'd of his Kingdom; at which he conceiv'd such an unspeakable sorrow, that he resolv'd to lead a Vagabond life, and to wander about the world, poor, stript of all, and in a manner quite naked. He found enough to follow him in a course of life that gives them so much liberty. For being worship'd as Saints, they have in their hands all opportunities of doing evil.

These Faquirs wander generally in Troops, every one of which has a Superior. And in regard they are quite naked, Winter and Summer lying upon the hard ground, when it is cold, the young Faquirs, and others that are most devout, go in the afternoon to seek for the dungs of Cows and other Creatures, of which they make their fires. They rarely burn Wood, for fear of killing any living Animal which is wont to breed in it; and therefore the Wood wherewith they burn their dead, is only such as has floated long in the Water, which never breeds in any sort of living Creature. The young Faquirs having got together a good quantity of dung, mix'd with dry turf, make several fires, according to the bigness of the Company; round about every one of which the Faquirs seat themselves. When they grow sleepy, they lay themselves upon the ground, spreading the Ashes abroad which serve them for a Mattress; without any other Canopy than that of Heaven.

As for the Faquirs that do Pennance, when they are laid down in the same posture as you see them in the day time, they kindle a good fire on each side of them, for otherwise they would not be able to endure the cold. The rich

Idola-

Idolaters account themselves happy, and their Houses to be fill'd with the benedictions of Heaven, when they have any of these Faquirs for their Guests, which the more austere they are, the more they honour: and it is the glory of the Troop to have one among them that does some considerable act of Penance.

The Crews of Faquirs many time joyn together to go in Pilgrimage to the Principal Pagods, and publick Washings, which they use upon certain dayes in the year in the River Ganges, whereof they make the chiefest account; as also in that which separates the Territories of the Portugals of Goa from the Dominions of the King of Visapour. Some of the most austere Faquirs live in little pittiful Huts neer their Pagods, where they have once in four and twenty hours something to eat bestow'd upon them for God's sake. The Tree whereof I have giv'n the description, is of the same sort as that which grows neer Gomron, which I have describ'd in my Persian Relations. The Franks call it the Bannians-Tree, because in those places where those Trees grow, the Idolaters always take up their quarters, and dress their victuals under them. They have those Trees in great reverence, and oft-times build their Pagods either under or very neer them. That which the Reader sees here describ'd, grows at Surat; in the trunk whereof, which is hollow, is the figure of a Monster, representing the face of a deform'd Woman, which they say was the first Woman, whose name was Mamaniva; thither great numbers of Idolaters every day resort: neer to which there is some Bramin or other always appointed to be ready to say Prayers, and receive the Alms of Rice, Millet, and other Grains which the charitable bestow upon them. The Bramin marks the forehead of all, both Men and Woman, that come to pray in the Pagod, with a kind of Vermillion, wherewith he also besmeares the Idol; for being thus mark'd, they belive the evil Spirit cannot hurt them, as being then under the protection of their God.

Number 1. is that part where the Bramins paint their Idols; such as Mamaniva, Sita, Madedina, and others; whereof they have a great number.

Numb. 2, is the figure of Mamaniva, which is in the Pagod.

Numb. 3, is another Pagod neer the former. There stands a Cow at the door, and within stands the figure of their God Ram.

Numb. 4, is another Pagod, into which the Faquirs, that do Penance, often retire.

Numb. 5, is another Pagod dedicated to Ram.

Numb. 6, is a Hut into which a Faquir makes his retirement several times a year, there being but one hole to let in the light. He stays there according to the height of his devotion, sometimes nine or ten days together, without either eating or drinking; a thing which I could not have believ'd, had I not seen it. My curiosity carri'd me to see one of those penitents, which the President of the Dutch-Company, who set a spy to watch night and day whether any body brought him any victuals. But he could not discover any relief the Faquir had, all the while sitting upon his Bum like our Taylors, never changing his posture above seven days together, not being able to hold out any longer, by reason the heat and stench of the Lamp was ready to stifle him. Their other sorts of Penance out-doing this, might be thought incredible, were there not so many thousand witnesses thereof.

Numb. 7, is the figure of another Penitentiary, over whose head several years have past; and yet he never slept day nor night. When he finds himself sleepy, he hangs the weight of the upper part of his body upon a double-rope that is fasten'd to one of the boughs of the Tree; and by the continuance of this posture, which is very strange and painful, there falls a humour into their legs that swells them very much.

Numb. 8, is the figure of two postures of two doing Penance; who, as long as they live, carry their arms above their heads in that manner; which causes certain Carnosities to breed in the joynts, that they can never bring them down again. Their hair grows down to their waists, and their nails are as long as their fingers. Night and Day, Winter and Summer they go always stark naked in the same posture, expos'd to the heat and rain, and the stinging of the Flies; from which they have not the use of their hands to rid themselves. Numb. 9, is the posture of another Penitent, who every day for several hours stands upon one foot, holding a chafing-dish in his hand, into which he pours Incense, as an Offering to his God, fixing his eyes all the while upon the Sun.

Num. 10 and 11, are the figures of two other Penitents sitting with their hands rais'd above their heads in the air.

Numb. 12, is the posture wherein the Penitents sleep, without ever resting their arms; which is certainly one of the greatest torments the body of man can suffer.

Numb. 13, is the posture of a Penitent, whose arms, through weakness, hang flapping down upon his shoulders, being dry'd up for want of nourishment.

There are an infinite number of other Penitents; some who in a posture quite contrary to the motion and frame of nature, keep their eyes always turn'd toward the Sun. Others who fix their eyes perpetually upon the ground, never so much as speaking one word, or looking any person in the face. And indeed there is such an infinite variety of them, that would render the farther discourse of them more tedious.

True it is, that I have hid those parts which modesty will not suffer to be expos'd to view. But they both in City and Countrey go all as naked as they came out of their Mothers wombs; and though the Woman approach them to take them by the fingers-ends, and to kiss those parts which modesty forbids to name; yet shall you not observe in them any motion of sensuality; rather quite contrary, seeing them never to look upon any person, but rowling their eyes in a most frightful manner, you would believe them in an extasie.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Idolaters belief touching the estate of the Soul after death.

THIS is an Article of the Idolaters Faith, that the Souls of Men departing out of the body, are presented to God; who according to the lives which they lead, orders them another body to inhabit. So that one and the same person is born several times into the World. And that as for the Souls of wicked and vicious persons, God disposes them into the bodies of contemptable Beasts, such as Asses, Dogs, Cats, and the like; to do Penance for their crimes in those infamous Prisons. But they believe that those Souls that enter into Cows are happy; presuming that there is a divinity in those creatures. For if a man dye with a Cows-tail in his hand, they say it is enough to render him happy in the other World.

The Idolaters believing thus the transmigration of the Souls of men into the bodies of other creatures, they abhor to kill any creature whatever, for fear they should be guilty of the death of some of their kindred or friends, doing Penance in those bodies.

If the Men in their life-time are famous for their vertuous deeds, they hold that their Souls pass into the bodies of some Potent Raja's: where they enjoy the pleasures of this life in those bodies, as the reward of those good works which they did.

This is the reason why the Faquirs put themselves to such horrible Penances. But because that all are not able to endure so much torment in this World, they labour to supply the defect of that cruel Penance by good works. And besides, they charge their Heirs in their Wills to give Alms to the Bramins, to the end that by the powerful effect of their Prayers, their God may assign them the body of some Noble Personage.

In January 1661, the Broaker belonging to the Holland Company, whose name was Mondas-Parek, dy'd at Surat. He was a rich Man, and very charitable, giving his Alms very liberally as well to the Christians as to the Idolaters; The Capuchins at Surat living one part of the year upon the Rice, Butter and Pulse which he sent them. This Banian was not sick above four or five days; during all which time, and for eight days more after he was dead, his Brothers distributed nine or ten-thousand Roupies; and in the burning of his body they mix'd Sandal-wood, and Lignum-Aloes, with the ordinary wood, believing that by that means the Soul of their Brother transmigrating into another body, he would come to be some great Lord in another Country. There are some that are such fools that they bury their treasure in their life-time, as it is the usual custome of all the rich Men in the Kingdom of Afen; to the end that if they should be condemn'd to the body of some poor miserable person, they might have wherewithal to supply their necessities. I remember one day that I bought in India an Agate Cup half a foot high; he that sold it me, assur'd me that it had been buried under ground above 40 years, and that he kept it to serve his occasions after death; but that it was to him a thing indifferent whether he buried his Cup or his Money. In my last Voyage I bought of one of these Idolaters sixty-two Diamonds of about six grains a-piece; and while I was wondring to see so fair a parcel, he told me I need not wonder; for he had been fifty years getting them together, to serve him after his death, but that having occasion for Money, he was forc'd to part with them. This buried treasure stood the Raja-Seva-Gi in great stead, when he took Arms against the Great Mogul, and the King of Visapour. For that Raja having taken Callian-Biondi, a small City in the Kingdom of Visapour, by the advice of the Bramins, who assur'd him he should find great store of treasure bur'd, caus'd the greatest part thereof to be demolish'd; and found so much wealth, as to maintain his Army, which was above thirty-thousand Men. It is impossible to convince these poor Idolaters of their errors; in regard they will hear no reason, but submit themselves altogether to their old forms and customs.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Custom among the Idolaters to burn the Bodies of their Dead.

THE custom of burning the Bodies of the dead is very ancient among the Gentiles; which Ceremony they most commonly perform by the banks of Rivers, where they wash the dead; which is the last purgation of them from their sins. Nay, their superstition is so great sometimes, that they will carry the sick person, death approaching, to the bank of some River or Pond, and put his feet in the water. As nature fails, they dip him deeper and deeper till at length they hold him expiring up to the chin in the River: to the end that the same time that the Soul departs out of the Body, both Body and Soul may be cleans'd from all defilement; and then plunging the newly dead Body over head and ears, they bring it out, and burn it in the place appointed; which is generally neer some Pagod. There are some persons that make it their business to fetch Wood, and agree what they shall have for their pains. An Idolater being dead, all those of his Caste or Tribe assemble together at the House of the deceas'd, and laying the Body upon a Bier cover'd with clean fine Linnen according to his Quality and Estate, they follow the Bier, which is carri'd by such as are appointed for that purpose to the place where the Body is to be burn'd. As they go along they sing certain Prayers to their God, pronouncing several times the words Ram, Ram, while another going before the Bier, sounds a little Bell, to advertize the living to pray for the dead. The Body being set down by the bank of the River or Pond, they first plunge it into the water, and then they burn it. According to the quality of the deceas'd they also mingle with the ordinary wood Sandal-wood, and other other Sweet-woods. But the Idolaters do not only burn the Bodies of the dead, but the Bodies of the living. They scruple to kill a serpent, or a louse, but account it a meritorious thing to burn a living Wife with the body of the deceas'd Husband.

C H A P. X.

How the Wives are burnt in India with the Bodies of their deceas'd Husbands.

IT is also an ancient custom among the Indians, that the Husband happening to dye, the Wife can never marry again. So that as soon as the Man is dead, the Wife retires to bewail her Husband; some days after that, they shave off her hair; she lays aside all the ornaments of her apparel; she takes off from her arms and legs the Bracelets which her Husband put on when he espous'd her, in token of her submission, and her being chain'd to him: and all the rest of her life she lives slighted and dispis'd, and in a worse condition than a Slave in the very House where she was Mistress before. This unfortunate condition causes them to hate life, so that they rather choose to be bur'd alive with the body of their deceas'd Husbands, than to live in the scorn and contempt of the World. Besides that, the Bramins make them believe, that in dying after that manner, they shall revive again with him in another World, with more honour and more advantages than they enjoy'd before. These are the motives that perswade the Woman to burn with their Husbands; besides that, the Priests flatter them with a hope, that while they are in the midst of the flames, before they expire, Ram will appear, and reveal wonderful visions to them; and that after their Souls have transmigrated into various Bodies, they shall at length obtain a high degree of Honour to eternity.

However, there is no Woman that can burn her Husband's body, till she has the leave of the Governor of the place where she inhabits, who being a Mahometan, and abhorring that execrable custom of Self-murder, is very shy to permit them. Besides, there are none but Widows that have no children, that lie under the reproach that forces them to violent death. For as for the Widows that have children, they are by no means permitted to burn themselves; but quite the contrary, they are commanded to live for the education of the children. Those Woman whom the Governour will not permit to burn themselves, spend the rest of thir lives in doing Penance, and performing works of Charity. Some make it their business to sit upon the Road to boyl certain Pulse in water, and to give the liquor to Travellers to drink. Others sit with fire always ready for them to light their Tobacco. Others make vows to eat nothing but the undigested grains which they find in Cow-dung.

The Governour finding no perswasions will alter the Woman's resolution, but more especially perceiving by the sign which his Secretary makes him, that he had receiv'd the Coin, in a surly manner gives the Woman leave, bidding the Devil take her and all her kindred.

When they have got this leave, their Musick begins to strike up, and away they ding to the House of the deceas'd, with Drums beating, and Flutes playing before them; and in that manner they accompany the person that is to be burnt, to the place appointed. All the kindred and friends of the Widow that is to dye, come to her, and congratulate her for the happiness she is to enjoy in the other World: and for the honour which the Caste she is of receives by her generous resolution, she dresses her self as she were going to be marri'd, and she is conducted in triumph to the place of execution. For the noise is loud of Musical Instruments, and Womens Voices, that follow her singing Songs in honour of the miserable creature that is going to dye. The Bramins that accompany her, exhort her to give publick testimonies of her constancy and courage: and many of our Europeans are of opinion, that to take away the fears of death, which naturally terrifies humanity, the Priests do give her a certain Beverage to stupify and disorder the senses, which takes from her all apprehension of her preparations for death. 'Tis for the Bramins interest that the poor miserable creatures should continue in their resolutions; for all their Bracelets as well about their legs as their arms, the Pendants in their ears; their Rings sometimes of Gold, sometimes of Silver; (for the poor wear only Copper and Tin,) all these belong to the Bramins, who rake for them among the Ashes when the party is burn'd.

I have seen Women burnt after three several manners, according to the difference of the Countrey. In the Kingdom of Guzerat, as far as Agra and Dehli, they set up a little Hut above twelve foot square upon the bank of a Pond or River. 'Tis made of Reeds, and all sorts of small Wood, with which they mingle certain pots of Oil and other Drugs to make it burn more vehemently. The Woman is plac'd in the middle of the Hut, in a half-lying-down posture, leaning her head upon a kind of a wooden Bolster, and resting her back against a Pillar, to which the Bramin ties her about the middle, for fear he should run away when she feels the fire. In this posture she holds the body of her deceas'd Husband upon her knees, chewing Beité all the while: and when she has continu'd in this posture about half an hour, the Bramin goes out, and the woman bids them set fire to the Hut; which is immediately done by the Bramins, and the kindred and friends of the Woman; who also cast several pots of Oil into the fire, to put the Woman the sooner out of her pain. After the Woman is burnt, the Bramins search the Ashes for all her Bracelets, Pendants and Rings, whether Gold, Silver, Copper or Tin, which is all free booty to themselves.

In Bengala they burn the Woman after another fashion. In that Country a Woman must be very poor that does not accompany the Body of her deceas'd Husband to the Ganges to wash his Body, and to be wash'd her self before she is burnt. I have seen dead Carcasses brought to the Ganges above twenty days journey off from the place, and smelt 'em to boot; for the scent of them has been intollerably noysom. There was one that came from the Northern Mountains near the Frontiers of the Kingdom of Bontan, with the body of her Husband carri'd in a Waggon; she travel'd twenty days a-foot, and neither eat nor drank for 15 or 16 days together till she came to the Ganges, where after she had wash'd the body that stank abominably, and had afterwards wash'd her self, she was burnt with him with an admirable constancy. Before the Woman that is to be burnt, goes the Musick, consisting of Drums, Flutes and Hautboys, whom the Woman in her best Accoutrements follows, dancing up to the very Funeral-pile, upon which she gets up, and places her self as if she were sitting up in her Bed; and then they lay a-cross her the body of her Husband. When that is done, her kindred and friends, some bring her a Letter, some a piece of Calicut, another pieces of Silver or Copper, and desire her to deliver them to their Mother, or Brother, or some other Kinsman or Friend. When the woman sees they have all done, she asks the Standers-by three times, if they have nothing more of service to command her; if they make no answer, she ties up all she has got in a piece of Taffata, which she puts between her own belly, and the body of her Husband, bidding them to set fire to the Pile; which is presently done by the Bramins and her Kindred. I have observ'd, because there is scarcity of Wood in Bengala, that when these poor Creatures are half griddl'd, they cast their bodies into the Ganges, where the remains are devour'd by the Crocodiles.

I must not forget a wicked custom practis'd by the Idolaters of Bengala. When a Woman is brought to bed, and the Child will not take to the Teat, they carry it out of the Village, and putting it into a Linnen Cloath, which they fast'n by the four Corners to the Boughs of a Tree, they there leave it from morning till evening. By this means the poor Infant is expos'd to be tormented by the Crows, insomuch that there are some who have their eyes pickt out of their heads: which is the reason that in Bengala you shall see many of these Idolaters that have but one eye, and some that have lost both. In the evening they fetch the child away, to try whether he will suck the next night; and if he still refuse the teat, they carry him again to the same place next morning; which they do for three days together; after which, if the Infant after that refuses to suck, they believe him to be a Devil, and throw him into Ganges, or any the next Pond or River. In the places where the Apes breed, these poor Infants are not so expos'd to the Crows; for where the Ape discovers a Nest of those Birds, he climbs the Tree, and throw the Nest one way and the Eggs another. Sometimes some charitable people among the English, Hollanders, and Portugals, compassionating the misfortune of those Children, will take them away from the Tree, and give them good education.

All along the Coast of Cormandel, when the Woman are to be burnt with their Husbands, they make a great hole in the ground nine or ten foot deep, and twenty-five or thirty foot square, into which they throw a great quantity of Wood and Drugs to make the fire burn more fiercely. When the fire is kindled, they set the body of the man upon the brink; and then presently up comes the Woman dancing and chewing Betle; accompany'd by her Friends and Kindred, with Drums beating, and Flutes sounding. Then the Woman takes three turns round the hole, and every time she has gone the round, she kisses her Friends and Kindred. After the third time the Bramins casts the Carcass of her Husband into the flame; and the woman standing with her back to the fire, is pusht in by the Bramins also, and tumbles backward. Then her Kindred and Friends cast Oil and other combustible Drugs upon the fire, to make it burn more vehemently, that the Bodies may be the sooner consumed.

In most places upon the Coast of Cormandel, the Women are not burnt with their deceas'd Husbands, but they are buried alive with them in holes which the Bramins make a foot deeper than the tallness of the man and woman. Usually they chuse a Sandy place; so that when the man and woman are both let down together, all the Company with Baskets of Sand fill up the hole above half a foot higher than the surface of the ground, after which they jump and dance upon it, till they believe the woman to be stiff'd.

When some of the Idolaters upon the Coast of Cormandel are upon the point of death, their Friends do not carry them to the side of a River or Lake to cleanse their Souls, but they carry them to the fattest Cow they can find; and laying the sick party just behind the Cow, they lift up her Tail, and provoke her to piss. If she piss, so that it falls upon the face of the sick party, all the Company are overjoy'd, saying, that his Soul is happy. But if the Cow do not piss, to wash the sick parties face, they burn him with a great deal of sadness. If a Cow be sick, the owner must be careful to lead her to a Pond or River; for should she dye at his House, the Bramins would fine him.

Remarkable Stories of Women that have been burnt after their Husband decease.

THE Raja of Velou having lost his City and his life, through the loss of a Battel gain'd against him by the King of Visapour's General, he was extremely lamented at Court. Eleven of his Wives also were no less concern'd for his death, and resolv'd to be burnt when his Body was burn'd. The General of Visapour's Army understanding their resolution thought at first to divert them, by promising them all kind usages. But finding persuasions, would not prevail, he order'd them to be shut up in a Room. He who had the order, going to put it in execution, the Women in a rage told him, that 'twas to no purpose to keep them Prisoners, for if they might not have leave to do what they had resolv'd, in three hours there would not one of them be alive. The person entrusted, laugh'd at their threats; but the Keeper of those women opening the door at the end of the three hours, found them all stretch'd out dead upon the place ; without any mark in the world to be seen that they had any way hasten'd their own deaths.

Two of the most potent Raja's of India came to Agra in the year 1642, to do homage to Sha-jehan, who then reign'd ; who not having acquitted themselves as they ought to have done, in the judgment of the Grand-Master of the Kings Household, he told one of the Raja's one day, in the presence of the King, that they had not done well, to behave themselves in that manner toward so great a Monarch, as was the King his Master. The Raja looking upon himself to be a great King, and a great Prince, he and his Brother having brought along with them a Train of 15 or 16000 thousand Horse, was nett'd at the bold reproof which the Grand Master gave him, and drawing out his Dagger, slew him upon the place, in the presence of the King. The Grand Master falling at the feet of his own Brother, who stood close by him, he was going about to revenge his death, but was prevented by the Raja's Brother, who stab'd him, and laid him athwart his Brothers Body. The King, who beheld these two murders one upon the neck of the other, retir'd into his Haram for fear. But presently the Omrals and other people fell upon the Raja's, and cut 'em to pieces. The King incens'd at such an attempt committed in his House and in his presence, commanded the Rajah's bodies to be thrown into the River ; which their Troops that they had left about Agra understanding, threaten'd to enter the City and pillage it. But rather than hazard the City, the King was advis'd to deliver them the Bodies of their Princes. When they were to be burn'd, thirteen Women belonging to the two Raja's Houses, came dancing and leaping, and presently got upon the Funeral pile, holding one another by the hands, and being presently after stiff'd with the smoak, fell together into the fire. Presently the Bramins threw great heaps of Wood, pots of Oil, and other combustible matter upon them, to dispatch them the sooner.

I observed a strange passage at Patna, being then with the Governour, a young Gentleman of about twenty-four years of age, in his own House. While I was with him, in came a young woman, very handsome, and not above two and twenty years old, who desir'd leave of the Governour to be burnt with the Body of her deceas'd Husband. The Governour compassionating her youth and beauty, endeavour'd to divert her from her resolution ; but finding he could not prevail, with a surly countenance, he ask'd her whether she understood what the torment of fire was, and whether she had ever burnt her fingers ? No, no, answer'd she more stoutly than before, I do not fear fire, and to let you know as much, send for a lighted Torch, hither. The Governour abominating her answer, in great passion bid her go to the Devil. Some young Lords that were with the Governour, desir'd him to try the Woman, and to call for a Torch ; which with much ado he did, and a lighted Torch was brought. So soon as the woman saw the lighted Torch coming, she ran to meet it, and held her hand in the flame, not altering her countenance in the least ; still searing her arm along up to the very elbow, till her flesh look'd as if it had been broil'd ; whereupon the Governour commanded her out of his sight.

A Bramin coming to Patna, and assembling all his Tribe together, told them, that they must give him two thousand Roupies, and twenty-seven Ells of Calicut. To which the chief among them made him answer, that they were poor, and could not possible raise such a sum. However he persisted in his demand, positively affirming to them, that he would stay there without eating or drinking till they brought him the Money and the Cloath. With this resolution he climb'd a Tree, and setting in the fork between the boughs, remain'd there without eating or drinking for several days. The noise of this extravagance coming to the ears of the Hollanders where we lay, we set Sentinels to watch whether it were true, that a man could sit so long without victuals, which he did for thirty days together. The one and thirtieth day of such an extraordinary Fast, the Idolaters fearing to kill one of their Priests for want of granting him his demand, club'd together, and brought him his twenty-seven Ells of Calicut, and two thousand Roupies. So soon as the Bramin saw the Money and the Cloath, he came down from the Tree ; and after he had upbraided those of his Tribe for want of Charity, he distributed all the Roupies among among the poor, reserving only five or six for himself. The Cloth he cut into little pieces, and gave away, keeping only to himself enough to cover his own nakedness; and having made this distribution, he disappear'd of a sudden, and no body knew what became of him, though dilligent searh was made after him.

When a Chinefe lies at the point of death, all his Kindred and Friends gather about him, and ask him whither he intends to go; they tell him also, that if he want any thing, he need but only ask and have, let it be Gold, Silver, or a Woman. When they are dead they perform many Ceremonies at their Funerals, which consists chiefly in artificial fires, wherein the Chineses are the most expert in the world; so that he must be a very poor man that has no fire-works at his Funeral. Besides that, they put Money in a little Box, and bury it by the deces'd; and leave good store of victuals upon the Grave, out of an opinion that they rise and eat. Which the Souldiers of Batavia observing, us'd to fill their Bellies at these Graves every time they walk'd their rounds. But when the Chineses perceiv'd it, they poyson'd the victuals to spoil the Dutchmens feasting. The Townsmen of Batavia taking the Souldiers part, accus'd the Chineses for poysoning several of the Dutch. But the Chineses pleaded, that if the Souldiers had over-eat themselves, or surfeited themselves upon what was left for the dead to eat, 'twas none of their fault; for that they did not leave their victuals for the Souldiers; and besides that, among all the multitudes which they had buried, they never had heard the least complaint before of any one that ever came by any harm by eating their food. Thus the business was hush'd over; nor did the Souldiers dare to pilfer any more.

CHAP. IX.

Of the most celebrated Pagods of the Idolaters in India.

THE Indian Idolaters have a great number of Temples, small and great which they call Pagods, where they pray to their Gods, and make their Offerings. But the poor people that live in the Woods and Mountains, and remote from Towns, are contented only with some stone, whereon they make a rude kind of Nose, and paint it with some Vermillion colour, which serves all the whole neighbourhood to worship.

The four most celebrated Pagods, are Jagrenate, Banarons, Matura, and Triperi.

Jagrenate is one of the mouths of Ganges, whereupon is built the Great Pagod, where the Arch Bramin, or chief Priest among the Idolaters keeps his residence. The great Idol that stands upon the Altar in the innermost part of the Pagod, has two Diamonds for his Eyes, and another that hangs about his neck, the least of those Diamonds weighing about forty Carats. About his Arms he wears Bracelets sometimes of Pearls, and sometimes of Rubies; and this magnificent Idol is call'd Resora. The Revenues of this Pagod are sufficient to feed fifteen or twenty thousand Pilgrims every day; which is a number often seen there, that Pagod being the greatest place of devotion in all India. But you must take notice, that no Goldsmith is suffer'd to enter this Pagod, because that one of them being lock'd in all night long, stole a Diamond out of one of the Idols eyes. As he was about to go out, when the Pagod was open'd in the morning, he dy'd at the door; their God, as they affirm, revenging his own sacrileg. That which renders this Pagod, which is a large building the most considerable in all India, is, because it is situated upon the Ganges; the Idolaters believing that the waters of that River have a particular quality to cleanse them from their sins. That which makes it so rich (for it maintains above twenty thousand Cows) is the vast Alms that are continually bestow'd by so incredible a multitude as comes from all parts. Which Alms are not so much as at the discretion of the Donor, at the Will of the chief Priest, Priest, who before he gives them leave to shave and wash in Ganges, taxes them according to their quality, of which he has information. Thus he collects vast sums, of which he makes little or no profit himself; all going to feed the poor, and the repair of the Pagod. The chief Bramin causes Victuals to be distributed to the Pilgrims every day; as Milk, Rice, Butter and Wheat; but to the poor, who want wherewithall to cook it, they distribute their food ready drest. In the morning they boil a quantity of Rice in Earth'n pots of different bigness; and at the hour when the Pilgrims come for their meat, the chief Bramin orders another Bramin to take a pot of boil'd Rice; this pot he lets fall; and if there be five, the pot breaks into five equal parts, and every one takes his own share. And in the same manner he breaks it into more pieces, if there be more persons, to whom he is to distribute the food. Which is a thing very strange and worthy observation. They never boil twice in an Earthen pot; but in a Copper pot; nor have they any other Dishes, than only certain Leaves, which they fasten together, and a certain kind of a Bason, about a foot in compass, wherein they melt their Butter, and stir the Rice with the ends of their fingers when they eat. They have also a kind of a Shell, wherein they pour their melted Butter, which they will swallow down, as we do Sack.

Now for the description of a particular Idol which stands upon the Altar in the Pagod of Jagrenate: It is cover'd from the Shoulders downward with a great Mantle that hangs down upon the Altar. This Mantle is of Tissue of Gold or Silver, according to the Solemnities. At first it had neither feet nor hands; but after one of their Phropets was taken up into Heaven, while they were lamenting what to do for another, God sent them an Angel in the likeness of that Prophet, to the end they might continue their Veneration toward him. Now while this Angel was busie in making this Idol, the people grew so impatient, that they took him out of the Angels hands, and put him into the Pagod, without hands or feet; but finding that the Idol appear'd in that manner too deform'd, they made him hands and arms of those small Pearls which we call Ounce-Pearls. As for his feet, they are never seen, being hid under his Cloak. There is no part op'n but his hands and feet; the head and body being of Sandal-wood; round about the Duomo, under which this Idol stands, being very high, from the bottom to the top, are only Niches fill'd with other Idols; the greatest part whereof represent most hideous Monsters, being all of different colours. On each side of this Pagod, there stands another much less, where the Pilgrims make their lesser Offerings. And some that have in sickness, or upon business made any Vows to any Deity, bring thither the resemblance thereof in remembrance of the good which they have receiv'd. They rub this Idol every day with sweet Oils, that make it of a black colour. And at the right hand of this Idol sits his Sister, who stands upon her feet, and is well clad, being call'd by the name Sorora; upon his left, stands his Brother, cloath'd all over also, whom they call Balhadar. Before the Idol, somewhat toward his left hand, stands the Idols Wife upon her feet, all of massy Gold, by the name of Remin; whereas the other three, are only of Sandal-wood.

The other two Pagods are appointed for the residence of the chief Bramin, and other Bramins that officiate in the great Pagod. All these Bramins go with their heads bare, and for the most part shav'd; having no other Cloathes but only one piece of Calicut, with one half whereof they cover their bodies; the other part serves them instead of a Scarf. Neer the Pagod stands the Tomb of one of their Prophets, whose name was Cabir, to whom they give great honour. You are to take notice also, that their Idols stand upon a kind of Altar encompass'd with Iron Bars. For no persons are to touch them, but only certain Bramins, appointed for that service by the chief Bramin.

Next to that of Jagrenate, the most famous Pagod is that of Banarous, being also seated upon the Ganges, in a City that bears the same name. That which is most remarkable is, that from the Gate of the Pagod to the River there is a descent all of Stone; neer to which are certain Platforms, and small blind Chambers, some of the Bramins lodging, others where they dress their victuals; viſuals; for ſo ſoon as the Idolaters have ſaid their Prayers, and made their Offerings, they dreſs their food, not ſuffering any perſon to touch it but themſelves, for fear leſt any unclean perſon ſhould come near it. But above all things, they paſſionately deſire to drink of Ganges water; for as often as they drink it, they are waſh'd, as they believe, from all their ſins. Great numbers of theſe Bramins go every day to the cleaneſt part of the River, where they fill their little round earthen-pots full of water, the mouths whereof are very ſmall, and contain every one of them a Bucket-full. Being thus fill'd they bring them before the great Prieſt, who covers them with a fine piece of flame-colour'd Calicut, three or four times doubl'd, to which he ſets his Seal. The Bramins carry theſe pots, ſome fix of them ty'd together with ſix little cords faſten'd to the end of a ſtick as broad as a lath, ſhifting their ſhoulders often; travelling ſometimes three or four hunder'd leagues with thoſe precious burthens up into the Countrey. Where they ſell it, or preſent it; but that is only to the rich, from whence they expect great rewards. There are ſome of the Idolaters, who when they make any great Feaſt, eſpecially when they marry their children, will drink four or five hunder'd Crowns in this water. They never drink of it till the end of their meals; and then a glaſs or two according to the liberality of the Maſter of the Feaſt. The chief reaſon why they eſteem the water of Ganges ſo highly, is, becauſe it never putrifies, nor engenders any Vermin; though I know not whether they may be believ'd, conſidering the great quantity of dead bodies which they ſling into the Ganges.

The body of the Pagod of Banarous is made like a Croſs, as are all the reſt of the Pagods, the four parts whereof are equal. In the miſt there is a Cupola rais'd very high, the top whereof is pyramidal; at the end alſo of every four parts of the Croſs there is a Tower, to which there is an aſcent on the out-ſide. Before you come to the top, there are ſeveral Balconies and Niches wherein to take the freſh air: and round about are figures of all ſorts of creatures, but very Leud work. Under the Duomo, in the middle of the Pagod there is an Altar, like a Table, eight foot long, and ſix foot broad, with two ſteps before, that ſerve for a footſtool, which is cover'd ſometimes with a rich Tapeſtry, ſometimes with Silk, ſometimes with Cloath of Gold or Silver, according to the ſolemnity of their Feſtival. Their Altars are cover'd with Cloath of Gold or Silver, or elſe with ſome painted Calicuts. Approaching the entry of the Pagod, you ſee the Altar right before ye, together with the Idols which are upon it. For the Women and Virgins worſhip without, not being permitted to enter the Pagod, no more than is a certain Tribe which is among them. Among the Idols that ſtand upon the great Altar, there is one plac'd upright ſome five or ſix foot high; but you can ſee neither arms, nor legs, nor body: nothing appears but the head and neck, all the reſt being cover'd down to the Altar with a Robe that ſpreads it ſelf below. Sometimes you ſhall ſee the neck ſet out with ſome rich Chain either of Gold, Rubies, Pearls or Emraulds. This Idol was made in honour and likenes of Bainma-don, who was heretofore a very great and holy Perſonage among them, whoſe name they oft'n have in their mouths. Upon the right-ſide of the Altar ſtands the figure of a Chimera, part Elephant, part Horſe, part Mule. It is of maſſive Gold, and they call it Garon, not ſuffering any perſon to approach it but the Bramins. They ſay it is the reſemblance of the Beaſt which carri'd that holy perſon when he liv'd upon earth. And that he travell'd long journeys upon his back, to ſee if the people remain'd in their duty, and whether they did no wrong one to another. Between the great Gate and the great Altar upon the left-hand, there is a little Altar, upon which there ſtands an Idol of black Marble ſitting croſs-legg'd, about two foot high. While I was there, a little Boy who was the Son of the High-Prieſt ſtood upon the left-ſide of the Altar, and all the people threw him certain pieces of Taffata, or imbroider'd Calicut, like Handkerchiefs, all which he return'd to the people again after he had wip'd them upon the Idol. Others threw him Bracelets of Coral, others of yellow-Amber, others threw him fruits and flowers; whatever they threw him, he rubb'd it upon the Idol, put it to his lips; and then reſtor'd it to the people. This Idol is call'd Morli-Ram, that is to ſay God-Morli, and was the Brother of him that ſtands upon the great Altar.

Under

Under the Portal of the Pagod sits one of the principal Bramins with a great Bason by him, full of a yellow colour mix'd with water. All these poor Idolaters come and present themselves before him, who gives them a mark from between the eyes to the top of the nose, then upon the arms, and upon the stomach; by which marks they know who have wash'd themselves in Ganges, and who not. Those that never wash'd themselves but in the waters of their own Wells, or have only sent for it from the River, they do not believe to be perfectly purifi'd, and by consequence they are not to be mark'd with that colour. By the way take notice, that these Idolaters are mark'd with different colours, according to the Tribe they are of. But in the Empire of the Great Mogul, they who are painted with yellow compose the biggest Tribe, and are the least defil'd. For when they are necessitated to the deeds of nature, some think it enough to wash the part defil'd; but they first rub the part with a handful of sand, then they scour it with water. After so doing, they affirm their bodies to be clean, and that they can eat their food without fear.

Neer to this great Pagod upon the Summer-West, stands a kind of a Colledg, which the Raja Jesseing, the most potent of all the Idolaters in the Mogul's Empire, built for the education of the youth of the better sort. I saw two of the children of that Prince there at School, who had for their Masters several Bramins, who taught them to write and read in a language peculiar to the Idolaters Priests, and far different from the speech of the common people. Entering into the Court of that Colledg, and casting my eyes up, I discover'd two Galleries that went round the Court, where I saw the two Princes sitting, attended by several petty Lords and Bramins, who made several Mathematical Figures upon the ground with chalk. The two Princes seeing me, sent to know who I was; and understanding that I was a Frank, they sent for me up, and ask'd me several questions touching Europe, and particularly touching France. Whereupon there being two Globes in the room which the Hollanders had giv'n the Bramins, I shew'd the Princes where France lay upon one of them. After I had taken leave, I ask'd one of the Bramins when I might see the Pagod open: he answer'd me, the next morning before Sun-rising. When I came there, I observ'd before the door, a Gallery supported with Pillars, where there was already a great crowd of men, women and children expecting when the Pagod would be open'd. By and by, the Gallery, and a great part of the Court being full, there came eight Bramins, four of each side of the Gate, with every one a Censer in his hand, follow'd by a rabble of other Bramins that made a hideous noise with Drums and other Instruments. The two eldest of the Bramins sing a Song; and then all the people falling into the tune, fall a singing and playing, with every one a Peacock's-tail, or some other kind of fable, to drive away the flies, that the Idol may not be annoy'd when they open the Pagod. This fanning, and the Musick, lasted a good half hour. Then the two principal Bramins made a great noise three times with two little Bells, and with a kind of a Mallet knockt at the Pagod-door. Which was presently open'd by six Bramins within, discovering, some six or seven paces from the entrance, an Alter with an Idol upon it, which they call Rám, Ram, the Sister of Morli-Ram. Upon her right-hand she has a child made like a great Cupid, which they call the God La-kemin, and in her left-arm a little Girl, which they call the Goddess Sita. So soon as the Pagod was open, and that a great Curtain was drawn, the people, who perceiv'd the Idol, fell upon the ground, laying their hands upon their heads, and prostrating themselves three times. Then rising up, they threw great quantities of Nofegays and Garlands to the Priests; with which the Bramins touch'd the Idol, and then restor'd them again. Before the Alter stood a Bramin, who held in his hand a lamp of nine wicks lighted, upon which he cast Incense every foot, and then held it to the Idol. All these ceremonies lasted above an hour; after which the people departed, and the Pagod was shut. They presented the Idol with great store of Rice, Meal, Butter, Oil, and Milk-meats, of which the Bramins lose nothing. Now in regard this Idol is the representation of a Woman, the Women all invoke it, and call her their Patroness: which is the reason that the place is generally crowded with Women and Maids. The Raja, to have this Idol in the Pagod of his own house, and for taking it out of the great Pagod, has expended as well upon the Bramins, as in alms to the poor, above five Lacres of Roupies, or 750000 Livres of our Money. On

On the other side of the Street where the Colledg is built, there stands another Pagod, call'd Richourdas, from the name of the Idol, which is within upon the Altar: and somewhat lower upon another small Altar stands another Idol, which they call Goupaidas, the Brother of Richourdas. You see nothing but the face of all these Idols, which is either of wood or jet; unless it be the Idol of Morly-Ram, which stands in the great Pagod stark naked. As for the Idol Ram-Kam, which stands in the Raja's Pagod, it has two Diamonds instead of eyes, which the Prince caus'd to be set there, with a Coller of Pearl, and Canopy over his head, supported with four Silver-Pillars.

Some eight days journey from Banarous, bending Northward, you enter into a Mountainous Countrey; but which sometimes op'ns it self into very large plains, sometimes three or four leagues in length. They are very fertil in Corn, Rice, Wheat, and Pulse. But that which is the plague and ruine of the people of that Countrey, is the vast number of Elephants that breed there, and devour their Harvest. If a Caravan pass through any part of that Countrey where there are no Inns, in regard the people are forc'd to lye in the op'n Fields, they have much ado to defend themselves from the Elephants that will come to take away their provisions. To skare them, the people make great fires, shoot off their Muskets, hooping and hollowing ever and anon. In this place there is another Pagod, well-built, and very ancient, adorn'd with many figures both within and without, which are only the representations of Maids and Women; so that Men are seldom known to repair thither for devotion's sake; and therefore it is call'd the Women's Pagod. There is an Altar in the middle, as in other Pagods; and upon the Altar an Idol of massy Gold, four foot high, representing a Maid standing upright, which they call Ram-Marion. At her right-hand stands a Child of massy Silver, about two foot high; and they say that the Maid liv'd a very holy life, that that Child was brought to her by the Bramins to be instructed in her belief, and in the knowledge of well-living: but that after two or three years that the Child had liv'd with her, the Infant grew so knowing and ready witted, that all the Raja's of the Countrey long'd for her company; so that being stoll'n from her one night, she was never seen afterwards. Upon the left-hand of this Idol, stands another Idol, representing an old Man; who, as they say, was the servant of Ram-Marion and the Infant: for which reason the Bramins do very much reverence this Idol. They never come but once a year in devotion, but they must be there upon a prefix'd day, which is the first of November, though they never op'n the Pagod till the full of the Moon. During those fifteen days, the Pilgrims, as well Men as Women, fast from time to time, and wash themselves three times a-day, not leaving a hair in any part of their bodies, which they take off with a certain earth.

CHAP. XII.

A Continuation of the description of the principal Pagods of the Indian Idolaters.

NEXT to the Pagods of Jugrenate and Banarous, the most considerable is that of Matura, about eighteen leagues from Agra, upon the way to Debly. It is one of the most sumptuous Edifices in all India, and the place to which the greatest number of Pilgrims was wont to resort: But now there are very few or none; the Idolaters having sensibly lost the reverence which they had for that Pagod, since the River of Gemena, that formerly ran by that Pagod, has chang'd its course, above half a league from it. For it requires so much time to return to the Pagod, after they have wash'd in the River, that they were many times defil'd again before they could reach it. Though this Pagod stand in a bottom, yet you may discover it five or six leagues before you come at it, the building being very lofty and magnificent. The Stones are of a red colour, which they fetch from a Quarry, near Agra. They cleave like our Slates, some of them being fifteen foot long, and nine or ten foot broad, yet not above six fingers thick, especially when you cleave them as you would have them for use. They also make very fair Pillars. The Fortrefs of Agra, the Walls of Jehanabad, the King's House, the two Mosques, and several Noblemens Houses are all built of this Stone.

The Pagod is built upon a great Platform of an Octogonal Figure, pav'd with Free-stone; being adorn'd round about with the figures of all sorts of creatures, especially Apes. There is an ascent to it two wayes of fifteen or sixteen steps a-piece, every step being two foot broad, for two persons to go a-brest. One of the ascents leads up to the great Portal of the Pagod, the other behind up to the Chancel. The Pagod does not take up above half the Platform, the other half serving for a Piazza before it. The Structure is in the form of a Cross, like the rest of the Pagods, in the midst whereof a great Duomo, with two others of each side somewhat less, advance themselves above the rest of the building. The out-side of the building from top to bottom is adorn'd with the figures of Rams, Apes and Elephants, and several sorts of Monsters. From one foot below every one of these Duomo's to the Roof, at such and such spaces, are Windows, some five, some six feet high, and to every Window, belongs a Balcone, where four persons may stand. Every Balcone is cover'd with a little Arch, supported by four Pillars, others by eight, every two touching one another. Round about the Duomo's are Niches fill'd with the figures of Demons. Some with four arms, some with four legs. Some with mens heads upon the bodies of Beasts, and long tails that hang down to their thighs. There are abundance of Apes; and indeed it is an ugly sight to behold so many deform'd spectacles. There is but one great door to the Pagod, upon each side whereof there are Pillars and Figures of Men and Monsters. The hinder-part is clos'd with a close Balister of Stone-Pillars five or six inches in Diameter, into which, as into a kind of Sanctum Sanctorum, none but the Bramins are permitted to enter: but for Money, I got in, and saw a square Altar some fifteen or sixteen foot from the door cover'd with an old Tissue of Gold and Silver, upon which stood the great Idol, which they call Ram, Ram. You see nothing but his head, which is of a very black Marble, with two Rubies instead of eyes. All the body, from the shoulders to the feet, is cover'd with a Robe of Purple-Velvet, with some small embroidery. There are two other Idols of each side of him two foot high, apparl'd in the same manner; only their faces are white, which they call Becchor. There I saw a Machine sixteen foot square, and between twelve and fifteen foot high; cover'd with painted Calicuts, representing the shapes of Devils. This Machine running upon four Wheels, they told me, was a moving Altar, upon which they carri'd their great God in Procession to visit the other Gods, as also to the River, whither all the people went upon their great Festival.

The fourth Pagod is that of Tripeti, in the Province of Carnatica, toward the Coast of Coromandel, and Cape Comorin. I saw it as I went to Massipatan. It is a Pagod to which there belong a great number of little lodgings for the Bramins: so that altogether it seems to be a great Town. There are several Ponds round about it; but their superstition is so great, that no Passenger dare take any water out of them, but what the Bramin gives him.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Pilgrimages of the Idolaters to their Pagods.

ALL the Idolaters under the Dominion of the Great Mogul, and other Princes, both on this side and beyond Ganges, at least once in their lives go in Pilgrimage to one of these Pagods that I have nam'd; but most generally to that of Ingrenate, as being the first and most considerable above all the rest. The Bramins and rich people go oftner. For some go every four years, some every six, or eight; and putting the Idols of their Pagods upon Pallekies cover'd with Tissues, they travel with their Bramins, as it were in procession to the Pagod which they most esteem.

They go not in Pilgrimage, one by one, or two and two, but whole Towns, and many times several Towns together. The poor that go a great way, are supply'd by the rich; who spend very freely in such acts of Charity. The rich travel in Pallekies or Chariots, the poor on foot, or upon Oxen; the Wife carrying the Child, and the man the Kitchin Implements.

The Idol which they carry in procession, by way of visit, and out of respect to the great Ram-Ram, lies at length in a rich Palleky, cover'd with Tissue of Gold and Silver, fring'd as richly; the Mattress and Bolster being of the same stuff under the head, feet, and elbows. The Bramins also distribute Flabets to the most considerable of the Company, the handles whereof being eight foot long, are plated with Gold and Silver. The Flabet being three foot in Diameter, of the same Tissue as the Pallekies; round about, it is adorn'd with Peacocks Feathers to gather more wind, and sometimes with Bells to make a kind of tingling. There are six of these Flabets usually employ'd to keep off the Flies from their God; the better sort taking it by turns, that the honour of waiting upon their God may be more equally shar'd.

CHAP. XIV.

Of divers Customs of the Indian Idolaters.

THE Bramins are well skill'd in Astrology; and will exactly foretell to the people the Eclipses of the Sun and Moon. The second of July 1666, about one a Clock in the afternoon, at Patna in Bengala, there was an Eclipse of the Sun; at which time it was a prodigious thing to see the multitudes of people, men, women, and children, that ran to the River Ganges, to wash themselves. But it behoves them to begin to wash three days before the Eclipse; all which time they labour day and night in providing all sorts of Rice Milk, Meats, and Sweatmeats, to throw to the Fish and Crocodiles, as soon as the Bramins give the word. Whatever Eclipse it be whether of the Sun or Moon, the Idolaters as soon as it appears, break all their Earthen Pots and Dishes in the house, which makes a hideous noise altogether.

Every Bramin has his Magick Book, wherein are abundance of Circles and Semicircles, Squares, Triangles, and several sorts of Cifers. They also make several Figures upon the ground, and when they find that the good hour is come, they cry aloud to the people to feed the fish. Then there ensues a most horrible Din of Drums, Bells, and great noise of sounding Mettal, which they twang one against another. And as soon as the victuals are thrown into the River, the people are to go in and wash and rub themselves till the Eclipse be over. So that in regard the waters were at that time very high, for more than three Leagues above and below the City, and all the breadth of the River, there was nothing to be seen but the heads of the people. As for the Bramins, they stay ashore to receive the richer sort, and those that give most; to dry their bodies and to give them dry Linnen to their bellies. Afterwards they cause them to sit down in a Chair, where the most liberal of the Idolaters have provided Rice, Pulse, Milk, Butter, Sugar, Meal, and Wood. Before the Chair the Bramin makes a place very clean about five foot square; then with Cow-dung steep'd in a kind of yellow Bason, he rubs all the place, for fear any Emet should come there to be burnt. For indeed they would never make use of Wood if they could help it; and when they do, they are very careful that there be no Worms or Insects in it. In the place which they have thus cleans'd, they draw several Figures, as Triangles, Ovals, Half-Ovals, &c. Then upon every Figure they lay a little Cows-dung, with two or three small sticks of Wood, upon every one of which they lay a several sort of Grain; after that pouring Butter, and setting fire to each; by the smoak which rises, they judg of the plenty of every sort of Grain that year.

When the Moon is at the full in March, they keep a solemn Festival for their Idol, which is in form of a Serpent. This Festival continues nine dayes; and when it comes, they do nothing but make Holiday all the while, as well men as beasts, which they beautifie by making Circles about their eyes with Vermillion, with which they also colour the Horns; and if they have a particular kindness for the beast, they hang them with Leaves of Gilded Tin. Every morning they worship the Idol, and the Maids dance about it for an hour; to the noise of Fluits and Drums; after which they eat and drink and are merry till the evening, and then they worship and dance about their Idol again.

Though the Idolaters never drink any strong drink at other times, yet at this Festival they drink Palm-wine, and strong water, which is made of the same in remote Villages; for else their Mahometan Governour would not suffer them to make Wine, nor to sell any which might be brought out of Persia.

Their strong Water is thus made: They take a great Earthen pot, well glaz'd within, which they call Martavane; into one of these Vessels, that holds three hundred Paris pints, of Palma-wine, they put in fifty or sixty pound of brown Sugar unrefin'd, which looks like yellow Wax; with about twenty pound of a great thick bark of a Thorn, not much unlike that which our Leather-dressers use. This bark sets the Palma-wine a bubling and working just like our new wines, for five or six days together, till it becomes of a sweet Liquor, as sower as our Crabs. Then they distill it, and according to the taste they would give, they either put into a Cauldron full, a little Bag of Mace, or three or four handfuls of Annise-seed. They can make it also as strong as they please.

Being at Agra in the year 1642, an Idolater, whose name was Woldas, Broker to the Hollanders, about seventy years of age, receiving news that the chief Bramin at the Pagod of Matura was dead, went to the Hollander and desir'd him to even all accounts; for said he, the chief Priest being dead, it behoves me to dye, that I may serve him in the other world. Thereupon having ended his accounts, he took his Coach, with some of his Kindred; but having neither eaten nor drank from the time he receiv'd the news, he dy'd by the way; having famish'd himself for grief.

The Indian Idolaters have a custom, that when any person gives a thing, they snap their fingers, crying out, Gi-Narami, remember Narami, who was a great Saint among them, for fear the Evil Spirit, should enter into the body of him that gives.

Being at Surat in the year 1653, a Raspoute being demanded Custom for three or four pieces of Calicut, boldly ask'd the Governour, whether a Souldier that had serv'd the King all his life-time, ought to pay Custom for two or three pitiful pieces of Calicut, not worth four or five Roupies; telling him it was only to cloath his Wife and Children. The Governour netl'd at his sawciness, call'd him Bethico, or Son of a Whore; adding, that if he were Prince he would make him pay his Customs. Whereupon the Souldier incens'd at the affront, making as if he felt for Money to pay his dues, bearing up to the Governour, stab'd him in the belly, so that he dy'd immediately. But the Souldier was presently cut in pieces by the Governours Servants.

Though

Though the Idolaters are in utter darknes as to the knowledg of the true God, however the Law of Nature teaches them Morality in many things. When they are married they are seldom false to their Wives. Adultery is very rare among them. And as for Sodomy I never heard it mention'd. They marry their Children between seven and eight years old, for fear they should fall into that vice; the Ceremonies whereof are these. The day before the Nuptials, the Bridegroom, accompany'd by all his Kindred, goes to the House where the Bride lives, with a great pair of Bracelets, two fingers thick, hollow within, and in two pieces, with a hinge in the middle to open them. According to the quality of the Bride those Bracelets are of more or less value, sometimes of Gold, sometimes of Silver, Tin, or Latten, the poorest sort of all making use of Lead. The next day there is a great Feast at the Bridegrooms House, whither all the Kindred on both sides are invited, and about three a Clock in the afternoon the Bride is brought thither. Then the chief of the Bramins that are there, of which there are always several laying the head of the Bride to the Bridegrooms, pronounces several words, sprinkling their heads and bodies all the while with water. Then they bring him upon Plates or Fig-leaves several sorts of Meats, Calicuts, and Stuffs; and then the Bramin asks the Bridegroom, whether so long as God shall make him able, he will let his Wife share with him, and whether he will endeavour to maintain her by his labour. If he says yes, they all set themselves down to the Feast prepar'd for them, where every one eats by himself. If the Bride be rich, and be acquainted among the Nobility, their Weddings are very pompous and expensive. The Bridegroom is mounted upon an Elephant, and the Bride rides in a Chariot; the whole Company carrying Torches in their hands. They also borrow of the Governour and the Nobility of the place, as many Elephants and prancing Horses as they can get. And they walk some part of the night with Fireworks, which they throw about the Streets and Piazza's. But the greatest expence to those that live three or four hundred Leagues from it, is to get the water of Ganges; for in regard they account that water sacred, and drink it out of devotion, it must be brought them by the Bramins, and in Earthen Vessels, glaz'd within side, which the chief Bramin of Ingrenate fills himself with the purest Water of the River, and then seals up with his own Seal. They never drink this water till the end of the Feast, and then they give their guests three or more glasses apiece. This water coming so far, and the chief Bramin demanding a Tribute for every pot, which contains a Pail-full, sometimes a wedding comes to two or three thousand Roupies.

The eighth of April, being in a City of Bengala call'd Malde, the Idolaters made a great Feast, according to the particular Custom of that place; they all go out of the City, and fasten Iron hooks to the boughs of several Trees, then come a great number of poor people and hang themselves, some by the sides, some by the brawn of their backs, upon those hooks, till the weight of their body tearing away the flesh, they fall of themselves. 'Tis a wonderful thing to see that not so much as one drop of blood should issue, from the wounded flesh, nor that any of the flesh should be left upon the hook; besides, that in two days they are perfectly cur'd by such Plaisters as their Bramins give them. There are others who at that Feast will lye upon a bed of nails, with the points upward, the nails entring a good way into the flesh; however while these people are under this Pennance, their Friends come and present them with Money and Linnen. When they have undergone their Penance, they take the presents and distribute them to the poor, without making any farther advantage of them. I ask'd one, why they made that Feast, and suffer'd those severe Penances; who answer'd me, that it was in remembrance of the first man, whom they call'd Adam, as we do.

In the year 1666, I saw another sort of Penance, as I cross'd the Ganges; upon the Bank of which River they had prepar'd a clean place, where one of the poor Idolaters was condemn'd to rest upon the ground, touching it only with his hands and feet; which he was to do several times a day, and every time to kiss the earth three times before he rose up again. He was to rise up upon his left foot, never touching the ground with his right all the while. And every day for a month together before he either eat or drank he was oblig'd to this posture for fifty times together, and consequently to kiss the ground a hundred and fifty times. He told me that the Bramins had enjoin'd him that Penance because he had suffer'd a Cow to dye in his House, and had not lead her to the water to be wash'd before she dy'd.

When an Idolater has lost any piece of Gold or Silver, or sum of Money either by negligence, or as being stoln from him, he is oblig'd to carry as much as he lost to the great Bramin; for if he does not, and that the other should come to know of it, he is ignominiously cast out of his Tribe, to make him more careful another time.

On the other side the Ganges Northward, toward the Mountains of Naugrocor, there are two or three Raja's, who neither believe God nor the Devil, Their Bramins have a book containing their Belief, full of ridiculous absurdities, whereof the Author whose name is Bandon gives no reason. These Raja's are the Great Moguls Vassals, and pay him Tribute.

To conclude, the Malavars carefully preserve the nails of their left hands and let their hair grow like women's. These nails, which are half a finger long, serve them instead of Combs; and it is with their left hand that they do all their drudgery, never touching their faces, nor what they eat, but with their right hands.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Kingdom of Boutan whence comes the Musk, the good Rhubarb, and some Furs.

THE Kingdom of Boutan is of a large extent; but I could never yet come to a perfect knowledg thereof. I have set down all that I could learn at Patna, whither the Merchants of Boutan come to sell their Musk. The most excellent Rhubarb comes also from the Kingdom of Boutan. From hence is brought also that Seed which is good against the worms, therefore call'd Wormseed; and good store of Furs. As for the Rhubarb, the Merchants run a great hazard which way soever they bring it; for if they take the Northern Road, toward Caboul, the wet spoils it; if the Southern Road, in regard the journey is long, if the Rains happen to fall, there is as much danger that way, so that there is no Commodity requires more care than that.

As for the Musk, during the heats the Merchant loses by it, because it dries and loses its weight. Now in regard this Commodity pays twenty-five in the hundred Custom at Gorochepour, the last Town belonging to the Great Mogul, next to the Kingdom of Boutan, when the Indian Merchants come to that City, they go to the officer at the Custom-House, and tell him that they are going to Boutan, to buy Musk or Rhubarb, and how much they intend to lay out; all which the Officer registers, with the name of the Merchant. Then the Merchants instead of twenty-five, agree with him for seven or eight in the hundred, and take a Certificate from the Officer or Cadi, that he may not demand any more at their return. If the Officer refuses a handsom composition, then they go another way, over Desarts and Mountains cover'd with Snow, tedious and troublesome, till they come to Caboul, where the Caravans part, some for great Tartary, others for Belch. Here it is that the Merchants coming from Boutan barter their Commodities for Horses, Mules, and Camels; for there is little Money in that Country. Then those Tartars transport their Commodities into Persia, as far as Ardevile and Tauris; which is the reason that some Europeans have thought that Rhubarb and Wormseed came out of Tartary. True it is, that some Rhubarb comes from thence; but not so good as that of Boutan, being sooner corrupted; for Rhubarb will eat out its own heart. The Tartars carry back out of Persia Silks of Small value, which are made in Tauris and and Ardevile, and some English Cloth brought by the Armenians from Constantinople and Smyrna. Some of the Merchants that come from Caboul and Boutan go to Candabar, and thence to Ispahan; whither they carry Coral in Beads, yellow Amber, and Lapis Lazuli Beads, if they can meet with it. The other Merchants that come from the Coast of Multan, Labor, and Agra, bring only Lincons, Indigo, and store of Cornelian and Christal Beads. Those that return through Gorrockepour, and are agreed with the Officer of the Custom-House, carry from Patna and Daca, Coral, yellow Amber, Bracelets of Tortoise-shells, and other Shells, with great store of round and square thick pieces of Tortois. When I was at Paina, four Armenians who had been before at Boutan, return'd from Dantzick, where they had made certain Figures of yellow Amber, representing the shapes of several Creatures and Monsters, which they were carrying to the King of Boutan, who is an Idolater, as are all his people, to set up in his Pagods. For the Armenians for Money will sell any thing of Idolatry; and they told me besides, that if they could but have made the Idol which the King of Boutan bespoke of them, they should have done their business. Which was to have been a Monsters head, with six horns, four ears, four arms, and six fingers upon every hand, all of yellow Amber; but they could not find pieces big enough.

The Caravan is three months travelling from Patna, to the Kingdom of Boutan. It sets out from Patna about the end of December, and eight days after arrives at Gorrockepour.

From Gorrockepour to the foot of the high Mountains, is eight or nine days journey more, during which the Caravan suffers very much hardship, for the Country is nothing but wild Forrests, full of wild Elephants. So that the Merchants, instead of taking their rests, are forc'd to watch, keep fires, and shoot off their Muskets all the night long. For the Elephant making no noise in treading, would else be upon the Caravan before they were aware; not that he comes to do any mischief to the men, but to get what victuals he can find. You may travel from Patna to the foot of those Mountains in Palleki's. But generally they ride upon Oxen, Camels, or Horses, bred in the Countrey. Those Horses are generally so little, that when a man is upon the back of them, his feet touch the Ground; but they will travel twenty Leagues an end, and never bait, or else with a very small one. Some of those Horses cost two hundred Crowns; for indeed when you come to cross the Mountains, you can make use of no other sort of carriage but them in regard of the narrowness and ruggedness of the Passes; which many times put the Horses very much to it, as strong and as low as they are.

Five or six Leagues beyond Gorrockepour you enter into the Territories of the Raja of Nupal, which extend to the Frontiers of the Kingdom of Boutan. This Raja is a Tributary to the great Mogul, and pays him every year an Elephant for his Homage. He resides in the City of Nupal, from whence he derives his Title; but there is little either Trade or Money in his Country, which is all Woods and Forrests.

The Caravan being arriv'd at the foot of these Mountains which are call'd at this day by the name of Naugrocot, abundance of people come from all parts of the Mountain, the greatest part whereof are women and maids, who agree with the Merchants to carry them, their Goods and provisions cross the Mountains, which is eight days journey more.

The women carry upon each shoulder a woollen Roll, to which is fasten'd a large Cushion, that hangs down upon their backs, upon which the man sits. There are three women to carry one man, relieving one another by turns. And for their luggage and provisions, they lade them upon Goats, that will carry a hundred and fifty pound weight apiece. Those that will ride, are in many places forc'd to have their Horses hoisted up with Cords. They never feed them but morning and evening mixing a pound of meal, half a pound of brown Sugar, and half a pound of Butter together, with water sufficient. In the evening they must be contented only with a few flat Peason, bruis'd, and steep'd half an hour in water. The women that carry the men, get for their ten days travel two Roupies apiece, and as much for every burthen which the Goats carry, and for every Horse which they lead. After

After you have pass'd the Mountains, you may travel to Boutan upon Oxen, Camels, Horses, or Palkei's, which you please. The Country, is good, abounding in Rice, Corn, Pulse, and store of Wine. All the people both men and women are clad in the Summer with a large piece of Fustian, or Hempen-Cloath; in the Winter with a thick Cloath, almost like Felt. Both men and women wear upon their heads a kinde of Bonnet, much like our drinking Cans, which they adorn with Boars teeth, and with round and square pieces of Tortois-Shells. The richer sort intermix Coral and Amber Beads, of which their women make them Neck-Laces. The men as well as the woman wear Bracelets upon their left hands only, from the wrist to the elbow. The woman wear them strait, the men loose. About their necks they wear a silken twist, at the end whereof hangs a Bead of yellow Amber or Coral, or a Boars Tooth, which dangles upon their Breasts. On their left sides, their Girdles are button'd with Beads of the same. Though they be Idolaters, yet they feed upon all sort of food, except the flesh of Cows, which they adore as the common Nurses of all men; they are besides great lovers of strong water. They observe also some Ceremonies of the Chineses, burning Amber at the end of their Feasts, though they do not worship fire like the Chineses. For which reason the Merchants of Boutan will give at Patna for a Serre of large pieces of yellow Amber, as big as a Nut, bright and clean, thirty-five and forty Roupies. The Serre of yellow Amber, Musk, Coral, Ambergrease, Rhubarb, and other Drugs, containing nine Ounces to the pound. Saltpeter, Sugar, Rice, Corn, and other Commodities, are also sold by the Serre in Bengala; but the Serre contains seventy-two of our Pounds, at sixteen Ounces to the Pound; and forty Serres make a Mein, or 2824 Pounds of Paris.

To return to yellow Amber a piece of nine ounces is worth in Boutan from 250 to 300 Roupies, according to its colour and beauty. Coral rough, or wrought into Beads, yields profit enough; but they had rather have it rough, to shape it as they please themselves.

The Women and Maids are generally the Artists among them, as to those toys. They also make Beads of Crystal and Agat. As for the Men, they make Bracelets of Tortoise-shell, and Sea-shells, and polish those little pieces of Shells which the Northern people wear in their ears, and in their hair. In Patna and Daca there are above two thousand persons that thus employ themselves, furnishing the Kingdoms of Boutan, Asem, Siam, and other Northern and Eastern parts of the Mogul's Dominions.

As for Wormfeed, the Herb grows in the Fields, and must dye before the Seed can be gather'd; but the mischief is, that before the Seed is ripe, the wind scatters the greatest part, which makes it so scarce. When they gather the Seed, they take two little Hampers, and as they go along the Fields, they move their Hampers from the right to the left, and from the left to the right, as if they were mowing the Herb, bowing it at the top, and so all the Seed falls into the Hampers.

Rhubarb is a Root which they cut in pieces, and stringing them by ten or twelve together, hang them up a drying.

Had the Natives of Boutan as much art in killing the Martin as the Muscovite, they might vend great store of those rich Furs, considering what a number of those Beasts there are in that Countrey. No sooner does that creature peep out of his hole, but the Muscovites, who lye upon the watch, have 'em presently, either in the nose or in the eyes; for should they hit 'em in the body, the blood would quite spoyl the skin.

The King of Boutan has constantly seven or eight thousand Men for his Guard. Their Weapons are for the most part Bows and Arrows. Some of them carry Battel-axes, and Bucklers. 'Tis a long time ago since they had the first use of Muskets and Cannons: their Gun-Powder being long, but of an extraordinary force. They assur'd me that some of their Cannons had Letters and Figures upon them, that were above five hunder'd years old. They dare not stir out of the Kingdom without the Governor's particular leave; nor dare they carry a Musket along with them, unless their next Kindred will undertake for them that they shall bring it back. Otherwise I had brought one along with me; for by the characters rafters upon the Barrel, it appear'd to have been made above 180 years, It was very thick, the mouth of the bore being like a Tulip, polish'd within as bright as a Looking-glass. Two thirds of the Barrel were garnish'd with emboss'd Wires, with certain Flowers of Gold and Silver inlaid between; and it carri'd a Bullet that weigh'd an ounce. But I could not prevail with the Merchant to sell it me nor to give me any of his powder.

There are always fifty Elephants kept about the King's House, and twenty-five Camels, with each a Pice of Artillery mounted upon his back, that carries half a pound Ball. Behind the Gun sits a Cannoneer that manages and levels the Guns as he pleases.

There is no King in the World more fear'd and more respected by his Subjects than the King of Boutan; being in a manner ador'd by them. When he sits to do Justice, or give Audience, all that appear in his presence hold their hands close together above their foreheads; and at a distance from the Throne prostrate themselves upon the ground, not daring to lift up their heads. In this humble posture they make their Petitions to the King; and when they retire, they go backwards till they are quite out of his sight. One thing they told me for truth, that when the King has done the deeds of nature, they dilligently preserve the ordure, dry it and powder it, like sneezing-powder: and then putting it into Boxes, they go every Market-day, and present it to the chief Merchants, and rich Farmers, who recompence them for their kindness: that those people also carry it home, as a great rarity, and when they feast their Friends, strew it upon their meat. Two Boutan Merchants shew'd me their Boxes, and the Powder that was in them.

The Natives of Boutan are strong and well proportion'd; but their noses and faces are somewhat flat. Their women are said to be bigger and more vigorous than the men; but that they are much more troubled with swellings in the throat than the men, few escaping that disease. They know not what war is, having no enemy to fear but the Mogul. But from him they are fenc'd with high, steep, craggy, and snowey Mountains. Northward there are nothing but vast Forrests and Snow. East and West nothing but bitter water. And as for the Raja's near them, they are Princes of little force.

There is certainly some Silver Mine in the Kingdom of Boutan, for the King coins much Silver, in pieces that are of the value of a Roupie. The pieces are already describ'd. However the Boutan Merchants could not tell me where the Mine lay. And as for their Gold, that little they have is brought them from the East, by the Merchants of those Countries.

In the year 1659, the Duke of Muscovy's Embassadors pass'd through this Country to the King of China. They were three of the greatest Noblemen in Muscovy, and were at first very well receiv'd; but when they were brought to kiss the Kings hands, the custom being to prostrate themselves three times to the ground, they refus'd to do it, saying that they would complement the King after their manner, and as they approach'd their own Emperor, who was as great and as potent as the Emperor of China. Thereupon, and for that they continu'd in their resolution, they were dismiss'd with their presents, not being admitted to see the King. But had those Ambassadors conform'd to the custom of China, without doubt we might have had a beaten rode through Muscovy and the North part of Great Tartary, and much more Commerce and knowledge of the Country than now we have.

This mentioning the Muscovites, puts me in mind of a story that several Muscovy Merchants averr'd to be true, upon the rode between Tauris and Is-pahan, where I overtook them, of a woman of four score and two years of age, who at those years was brought to bed in one of the Cities of Muscovy of a Male Child, which was carry'd to the Duke, and by him brought up at the Court.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Kingdom of Tipra.

Most people have been of opinion till now, that the Kingdom of Pegu, lies upon the Frontiers of China; and I thought so my self, till the Merchants of Tipra undeceiv'd me. I met with three, one at Daca, and two others at Patna. They were men of very few words; whether it were their own particular disposition, or the General habit of the Country. They cast up their accounts with small Stones likes Agats, as big as a mans nail, upon every one of which was a Cypher. They had every one their weights, like a Steller; though the Beam were not of Iron, but of a certain Wood as hard as Brazile; nor was the Ring that holds the weight, and is put thorough the Beam to mark the weight, of Iron, but a strong Silk Rope. And thus they weigh'd from a Dram to ten of our Pounds. If all the Natives of the Kingdom of Tipra, were like the two Merchants which I met at Patna, I dare affirm them to be notable toppers; for they never refus'd whatever strong Liquor I gave them, and never left till all was out; and when I told them by my Interpreter that all my Wine was gone, they clapt their hands upon their stomachs and sigh'd. These Merchants travell'd all three through the Kingdom of Arakan, which lies to the South and West of Tipra, having some part of Pegu upon the Winter west. They told me also, that it was about fifteen days journey to cross through their Country; from whence there is no certain conjecture of the extent to be made, by reason of the inequality of the stages. They ride upon Oxen and Horses, which are low, but very hardy. As for the King and the Nobility, they ride in their Pallekies, or upon their Elephants of War. They are no less subject to Wens under their throats, than those of Boutan; insomuch that the women have those Wens hanging down to their Nipples; which proceeds from the badness of the waters.

There is nothing in Tipra which is fit for strangers. There is a Mine of Gold, but the Gold is very coarse. And there is a sort of very coarse Silk, which is all the Revenue the King has. He exacts no Subsidies from his Subjects; but only that they, who are not of the prime Nobility, should work six days in a year in his Mine, or in his Silk-works. He sends his Gold and his Silk into China, for which they bring him back Silver, which he coins into pieces to the value of ten Sous. He also makes thin pieces of Gold, like to the Aspers of Turky; of which he has two sorts, four of the one sort making a Crown, and twelve of the other.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Kingdom of Afem.

IT was never known what the Kingdom of Asem was, till Mirginola had settl'd Aureng-zeb in the Empire. For he considering that he should be no longer valu'd at Court, after the War was at an end, being then General of Aureng-zeb's Army and powerful in the Kingdom where he had great store of Creatures, to preserve the Authority he had, resolv'd to undertake the Conquest of the Kingdom of Asem; where he knew he should find little or no resistance, that Kingdom having been at peace above 500 years before. 'Tis thought these were the people that formerly invented Guns and Powder; which spread it self from Asem to Pegu, and from Pegu to China, from whence the invention has been attributed to the Chineses. However certain it is, that Mirginola brought from thence several pieces of Canon, which were all Iron Guns; and store of excellent Powder, both made in that Country. The Powder is round and small, like ours, and very strong.

Mirginola embark'd his Army in one of the mouths of Ganges, and sailing up one of the Rivers that comes from the Lake Chiamay, to the twenty-ninth or thirtieth Degree, he landed his Army, and came into a Country abounding in all humane necessities, still finding the less resistance because the people were surpriz'd. Being a Mahumetan, he spar'd not the very Pagods, but burn'd and sack'd all where-ever he came to the thirty-fifth Degree. There he understood that the King of Asem was in the field with a more powerfull Army than he expected, and that he had several pieces of Canon, and great store of fire-works withall. Thereupon Mirginola thought it not convenient to march any farther; though the chief reason of his return was the drawing on of Winter; which the Indians are so sensible of, that it is impossible to make them stir beyond the thirtieth or thirty-fifth Degree, especially to hazard their lives.

Mirginola therefore turns to the South-west, and besieges a City call'd Azoo, which he took in a small time, and found good plunder therein. In this City of Azoo, are the Tombs of the Kings of Asem, and of all the Royal Family. For though they are Idolaters, they never burn their dead bodies, but bury them. They believe that the dead go into another world, where they that have liv'd well in this, have plenty of all things; but that they who have been ill livers, suffer the want of all things, being in a more especial manner afflicted with hunger and drowth; and that therefore it is good, to bury something with them to serve them in their necessities. This was the reason that Mirginola found so much wealth in the City of Azoo. For many ages, together, several King had built them Chappels in the great Pagod to be buried in, and in their life times had stor'd up in the Vaults of their particular Chappels, great sums of Gold and Silver, and other moveables of value. Besides, that when they bury the deceas'd King, they bury with him likewise whatever he esteem'd most precious in his life-time, whether it were an Idol of Gold or Silver, or whatever else, that being needful in this, might be necessary for him in the world to come. But that which favours most of Barbarism is, that when he dies, all his best beloved Wives, and the principal Officers of his House poyson themselves, to be bur'd with him, and to wait upon him in the other world. Besides this, they bury one Elephant, twelve Camels, six Horses, and a good number of Hounds, believing that all those Creatures rise again to serve their King.

The Kingdom of Asem is one of the best Countries of all Asia, for it produces all things necessary for humane subsistence, without any need of foreign supply. There are in it Mines of Gold, Silver, Steel, Lead, Iron, and great store of Silk, but coarse. There is a sort of Silk that is found under the Trees, which is spun by a Creature like to our Silk-worms, but rounder, and which lives all the year long under the trees. The Silks which are made of this Silk glist'n very much, but they fret presently. The Country produces also great store of Gum-Lake; of which there is two sorts, one grows under the trees of a red colour, wherewith they paint their Linnen, and Stuffs; and when they have drawn out the red juice, the remaining substance serves to varnish Cabinets, and to make Wax; being the best Lake in Asia, for those uses. As for their Gold they never suffer it to be transported out of the Kingdom, nor do they make any Money of it; but they preserve it all in Ingots, which pass in trade among the Inhabitants; but as for the Silver, the King coins it into Money, as is already describ'd.

Though the Country be very plentiful of all things, yet there is no flesh which they esteem so much as Dogs flesh; which is the greatest delicacy at all Feasts; and is sold every month in every City of the Kingdom upon their Market-days. There are also great store of Vines, and very good Grapes, but they never make any Wine; only they dry the Grapes to make Aqua Vita. As for salt they have none but what is artificial, which they make two ways. First they raise great heaps of that green Stuff that Swims at the tops of standing waters, which the Ducks and Frogs eat; This they dry and burn; and the ashes thereof being boil'd in a Cloth in water, become very good Salt. The other way most in use is to take the leaves of Adams Fig-tree, which they dry and burn; the ashes whereof make a Salt so tart, that it is impossible to eat until the tartness be tak'n away; which they do by putting the ashes in water, where they stir them ten or twelve hours together; then they strain the substance through a Linnen Cloth and boil it; as the water boils away, the bottom thick'ns; and when the water is all boil'd away they find at the bottom very good and white Salt.

Of the Ashes of these Fig-leaves they make a Lye, wherewith they wash their Silk, which makes it as white as Snow; but they have not enough to whiten half the Silk that grows in the Country.

Kenneroo is the name of the City, where the King of Asem keeps his Court; twenty-five or thirty days journey from that which was formerly the Capital City, and bore the same name. The King requires no Subsidies of his people; but all the Mines in his Kingdom are his own; where for the ease of his Subjects, he has none but slaves that work; so that all the Natives of Asem live at their ease, and every one has his house by himself, and in the middle of his ground a fountain encompass'd with trees and most commonly every one an Elephant to carry their Wives; for they have four Wives, and when they marry, they say to one, I take thee to serve me in such a thing; to the other, I appoint thee to do such business; so that every one of the wives knows what she has to do in the House. The men and women are generally well complexion'd; only those that live more Southerly are more swarthy, and not so subject to Wens in their throats; neither are they so well featur'd, besides that the women are somewhat flat Nos'd. In the Southern parts the people go stark naked, only covering their private parts, with a Bonnet like a blew Cap upon their heads, hung about with Swines teeth. They pierce holes in their ears, that you may thrust your Thumb in where they hang pieces of Gold and Silver. Bracelets also of Tortoise-shells, and Sea-shells as long as an egg, which they saw into Circles, are in great esteem among the meaner sort; as Bracelets of Coral and yellow Amber among those that are rich. When they bury a man, all his Friends and Relations must come to the burial; and when they lay the body in the ground, they all take off their Bracelets from their Arms and Legs, and bury them with the Corps.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Kingdom of Siam.

THE greatest part of the Kingdom of Siam lies between the Gulf of Siam, and the Gulf of Bengala; bordering upon Pegu toward the North, and the Peninsula of Malacca toward the South. The shortest and nearest way for the Europeans to go to this Kingdom, is to go to Ispahan, from Ispahan, to Ormus, from Ormus to Surat, from Surat to Golconda, from Golconda to Maslipatan, there to embark for Denouferin, which is one of the Ports belonging to the Kingdom of Siam. From Denouferin to the Capital City, which is also call'd Siam, is thirty-five days journey, part by Water, part by Land, by Waggon, or upon Elephants. The way, whether by Land or Water, is very troublesome; for by Land you must be always upon your guard for fear of Tigers and Lions; by Water, by reason of the many falls of the River, they are forc'd to hoise up their Boats with Engines.

All the Country of Siam, is very plentiful in Rice and Fruits; the chiefest whereof are Mangos, Durions, and Mangustans. The Forests are full of Harts, Elephants, Tigers, Rhinocero's, and Apes; where there grow also large Bambou's in great abundance. Under the knots of these Bambou's are Emets nests as big as a mans head, where every Emet has his apartment by himself; but there is but one hole to enter into the nest. They make their nests in these Canes to preserve themselves from the rains which continue four or five months together.

In the night time the Serpents are very busie. There are some two foot long, with two heads; but one of them has no motion.

There is also another creature in Siam, like our Salamander, with a forked tail, and very venomous.

The Rivers in this Kingdom are very large; and that which runs by Siam is equally as large as the rest. The water is very wholesome; but it is very full of Crocodiles of a monstrous bigness, that devour men if they be not very careful of themselves. These Rivers overflow their banks while the Sun is in the Southern Tropick; which makes the fields to be very fertile as far as they flow; and it is observ'd, that the Rice grows higher or lower, as the floods do more or less increase.

Siam, the Capital City of the Kingdom, where the King keeps his Court, is wall'd about, being about three of our Leagues in circuit; it is situated in an Island, the River running quite round it, and might be easily brought into every street in the Town, if the King would but lay out as much Money uppon that design, as he spends in Temples and Idols.

The Siamers have thirty-three Letters in their Alphabet. But they write from the left to the right, as we do, contrary to the custom of Japon, China, Cochinchina, and Tunquin, who write from the right to the left.

All the Natives of this Kingdom are slaves, either to the King or the great Lords. The women as well as the men cut their hair; neither are they very rich in their habits. Among their Complements, the chiefest is, never to go before a person that they respect, unless they first ask leave, which they do by holding up both their hands. Those that are rich have several Wives.

The Money of the Country is already describ'd.

The King of Siam is one of the richest Monarchs in the East, and stiles himself King of Heaven and Earth; though he be Tributary to the King of China. He seldom shews himself to his Subjects; and never gives Audience, but to the Principal Favourites of his Court. He trusts to his Ministers of State, for the management of his affairs, who sometimes make very bad use of their authority. He never shews himself in publick above twice a year; but then it is with an extraordinary magnificence. The first is, when he goes to a certain Pagod within the City, which is gilded round both within and without. There are three Idols between six and seven foot high, which are all of massie.

Gold;

Gold; which he believes he renders propitious to him, by the great store of Alms that he distributes among the poor, and the presents which he makes to the Priests. Then he goes attended by all his Court, and puts to open view the richest Ornaments he has. One part of his magnificence consists in his train of two hundred Elephants; among which there is one that is white, which the King so highly esteems, that he styles himself King of the White Elephant.

The second time the King appears in publick, is when he goes to another Pagod five or six Leagues above the Town, up the River. But no person must enter into this Pagod, unless it be the King and his Priests. As for the people, so soon as they see the Door op'n, they must presently fall upon their Faces to the Earth. Then the King appears upon the River with two hundred Gallies of a prodigious length; four hundred Rowers belonging to every one of the Gallies; most of them being gilded and carv'd very richly. Now in regard this second appearance of the King is in the month of November, when the waters begin to abate, the Priests make the people believe that none but the King can stop the course of the waters, by his Prayers and by his Offerings to this Pagod. and they are so vain as to think that the King cuts the waters with his Sabra, or Skain; thereby commanding it to retire back into the Sea.

The King also goes, but incognito, to a Pagod in an Island where the Hollanders have a Factory. There is at the entry thereof an Idol sitting cross-leg'd with one hand upon his knee, and the other arm akimbo. It is above sixty foot high; and round about this Idol are about three hundred others, of several sorts and sizes. All these Idols are gilt. And indeed there are a prodigious number of Pagods in this Country; for every rich Sioner causes one to be built in memory of himself. Those Pagods have Steeples and Bells, and the Walls within are painted and gilded; but the Windows are so narrow that they give but a very dim light. The two Pagods to which the King goes publickly, are adorn'd with several tall Pyramids, well gilded. And to that in the Hollanders Island there belongs a Cloyster, which is a very neat Structure. In the middle of the Pagod is a fair Chappel, all gilded within side; where they find a Lamb, and three Wax Candles continually burning before the Altar, which is all over cover'd with Idols, some of Massie Gold, others of Copper gilt. In the Pagod in the midst of the Town, and in one of those to which the King goes once a year, there are above four thousand Idols; and for that which is six Leagues from Siam, it is surrounded with Pyramids, whose beauty makes the industry of that Nation to be admir'd.

When the King appears, all the Doors and Windows of the Houses must be shut; and all the people prostrate themselves upon the ground, not daring to lift up their eyes. And because no person is to be in a higher place than the King, they that are within doors, are bound to keep their lowest Rooms. When he cuts his hair, one of his Wives performs that office, for he will not suffer a Barber to come near him.

This Prince has a Passionate kindness for his Elephants; which he looks upon as his Favourites, and the Ornaments of his Kingdom. If there be any of them that fall sick, the Lords of the Court are mighty careful to please their Sovereign; and if they happ'n to dye, they are buried with the same Funeral Pomp as the Nobles of the Kingdom; which are thus perform'd. They set up a kind of Mausoleum, or Tomb of Reeds, cover'd with Paper; in the midst whereof they lay as much sweet wood as the body weighs, and after the Priests have mumbld certain Orisons, they set it a-fire, and burn it to ashes; which the rich preserve in Gold or Silver Urns, but the poor scatter in the wind. As for offenders, they never burn, but bury them.

'Tis thought that in this Kingdom there are above two hundred Priests, which they call Bonzes, which are highly reverenc'd, as well at Court as among the people. The King himself has such a value for some of them, as to humble himself before them. This extraordinary respect makes them so proud, that some of them have aspir'd to the Throne. But when the King discovers any any such design, he puts them to death. And one of them had his head lately struck off for his Ambition.

These Bonzes wear yellow, with a little red Cloth about their Waists; like a Girdle. Outwardly they are very modest, and are never seen to be angry. About four in the morning, upon the tolling of their Bells, they rise to their prayers, which they repeat again toward evening. There are some days in the year when they retire from all converse, with men. Some of them live by Alms; others have Houses with good Revenues. While they wear the Habit of Bonzes, they must not marry; for if they do, they must lay their Habit aside. They are generally very ignorant, not knowing what they believe. Yet they hold the transmigration of Souls into several Bodies. They are forbid to kill any Creature; yet they will make no scruple to eat what others kill, or that which dies of it self. They say that the God of the Christians and theirs were Brothers; but that theirs was the eldest. If you ask them where their God is, they say, he vanish'd away, and they know not where he is.

The chief strength of the Kingdom is their Infantry, which is indifferent good; the Soldiers are us'd to hardship, going all quite naked, except their private parts; all the rest of their body, looking as if it had been cupt, is carv'd into several shapes of beasts and flowers. When they have cut their skins, and stanch'd the blood, they rub the cut-work with such colours as they think most proper. So that afar off you would think they were clad in some kind of flower'd Satin or other; for the colours never rub out. Their Weapons are Bows and Arrows, Pike and Musket, and an Azagaya, or Staff between five and six foot long, with a long Iron Spike at the end, which they very dextrously dart at the Enemy.

In the year 1665, there was at Siam a Neapolitan Jesuite who was call'd Father Thomas; he caus'd the Town and the Kings Palace to be fortifi'd with very good Bulwarks, according to Art; for which reason the King gave him leave to live in the City, where he has a House and a little Church.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the Kingdom of Macassar; and the Embassadors which the Hollanders sent into China.

THE Kingdom of Macassar, otherwise call'd the Ile of Celebes, begins at the fifteenth Degree of Southern Latitude. The heats are excessive all the day; but the nights are temperate enough. And for the Soil, it is very fertile; but the people have not the art of building. The Capital City bears the name of the Kingdom, and is situated upon the Sea. The Port is free; for the Vessels that bring great quantities of goods from the Adjacent Islands, pay no Customs. The Islanders have a custom to poyson their Arrows; and the most dangerous poyson which they use, is the juice of certain Trees in the Island of Borneo; which they will temper so as to work swift or slow, as they please. They hold that the King has only the secret Receipt to take away the force of it; who boasts that he has the most effectual poyson in the world, which there is no remedy can prevent.

One day an English man in heat of blood had kill'd one of the Kings of Macassars Subjects; and though the King had pardon'd him, yet both English, Hollanders, and Portugals fearing if the English man should go unpunish'd, lest the Islanders should revenge themselves upon some of them, besought the King to put him to death; which with much ado being consented to, the King unwilling to put him to a lingering death, and desirous to shew the effect of his poyson, resolv'd to shoot the Criminal himself; whereupon he took a long Trunk, and shot him exactly into the great Toe of the right foot, the place particularly aim'd at. Two Chirurgeons, one an English man, and the other a Hollander, provided on purpose, immediately cut off the member; but for all that, the poyson had dispers'd it self so speedily, that the English man dy'd at the same time. All the Kings and Princes of the East are very diligent in their enquiry after strong Poysons. And I remember that the chief of the Dutch Factory and I try'd several poyson'd Arrows, with which the King of Achen had presented him, by shooting at Squirrels, who fell down dead, as soon as ever they were touch'd.

The King of Macassar is a Mahometan, and will not suffer his Subjects to embrace Christianity. Yet in the year 1656, the Christians found a way to get leave to build a fair Church in Macassar. But the next year the King caus'd it to be pull'd down, as also that of the Dominican Friars, which the Portugals made use of. The Parish Church, which was under the Government of the secular Priests, stood still, till the Hollanders attack'd Macassar, and compell'd him to turn all the Portugals out of his Dominions. The ill conduct of that Prince was in part the occasion of that war: to which the Hollanders were mov'd, to revenge themselves upon the Portugal Jesuits, who had cross'd their Embassy to China. Besides, that they offer'd great affronts to the Hollanders at Macassar, especially when they trod under foot the Hat of one of the Dutch Envoys, who was sent to treat with the King in behalf of the Company. Thereupon the Hollanders resolv'd to unite their forces with the Bouquises, that were in rebellion against their Sovereign, and to revenge themselves at any rate.

Now as to the business of China, it happen'd thus: Toward the end of the year 1658, the General of Batavia and his Council, sent one of the chief of the Holland Company, with Presents to the King of China; who arriving at Court, labour'd to gain the friendship of the Mandarins, who are the Nobility of the Kingdom. But the Jesuits, who by reason of their long abode in the Country, understood the language, and were acquainted with the Lords of the Court, left the Holland Company should get footing to the prejudice of the Portugals, represented several things to the Kings Council to the prejudice of the Hollanders; more especially charging them with breach of Faith in all the places where they came. Upon this the Holland Agent was dismiss'd, and departed out of China, without doing any feats. Afterwards coming to understand what a trick the Portugal Jesuits had put upon him, he made report thereof to the General and his Council at Batavia; which so incens'd them, that they resolv'd to be reveng'd. For by the Deputies accounts, the Embassy had cost them above fifty thousand Crowns; for which they consulted how to make the Portugals pay double. Understanding therefore the trade which the Jesuits drove in the Island of Macao, and to the Kingdom of Macassar, whither upon their own account they sent seven Vessels, laden with all sorts of Commodities, as well of India as China; they took their opportunity, and the seventh of June 1660, appear'd with a Fleet of thirty Sail before the Port of Macassar. The King thinking himself oblig'd to make defence against so Potent an Enemy, endeavour'd to sustain the brunt of the Hollander with the Portugal Ships in the Road; but the Hollander dividing their Fleet, part of them fought the Portugal, the other half batter'd the Royal Fortrefs so furiously, that they carry'd it in a short time. Which so terrifi'd the King that he commanded the Portugals not to fire any more for fear of farther provoking his Enemies. The Prince Patinsaloo, was slain in the fight, which was a great loss to the King of Macassar, who was become formidable to his neighbours by the good Conduct of that Minister. As for the Hollanders, they took, burnt, and sunk all the Portugal Vessels, and sufficiently re-imburs'd themselves for their China Expences.

The thirteenth of June the King of Macassar, whose name was Sumbaco, hung out a white Flag from another Tower, whence he beheld the fight environ'd by his Wives. During the truce, he sent one of the *Grande*es of his Court to the Dutch Admiral, to desire peace, which was granted, upon condition he should send an Ambassador to Batavia, expel the Portugals out of the Island, and not permit his Subjects to have any more to do with them.

Thereupon the King of Macassar, sent eleven of the greatest Lords of his Court, with a train of seven hundred men; the Chief of the Embassy being the the Prince of Patinfaloo. The first thing they did, was to pay two hundred Loaves of Gold to redeem the Royal Fortrefs again; and then submitting to the Conditions which the Dutch Admiral had propos'd, the General of Batavia sign'd the Articles, which are punctually observ'd. For the Portugals had in all quitted the Country, some departing for Siam and Camboya, others for Macao and Goa. Macao, formerly one of the most famous and richest Cities of the Orient, was the principal motive that enclin'd the Hollanders to send an Embassadour into China; for being the best station which the Portugals had in all those parts, the Dutch had a design to win it wholly. Now, this City, lying in twenty-two Degrees of Northern Latitude, in a small Island next to the Province of Kanton, which is a part of China, has very much lost its former luster.

But this was not all which the Jesuits and the Portugal Merchants suffer'd. The Chief of the Dutch Factory at Mingrela, which is but eight Leagues from this City, understanding the bad success of the Dutch in China, had a contrivance by himself to be reveng'd. He knew that the Jesuits of Goa and other places, drove a great trade in rough Diamonds, which they sent into Europe, or else carry'd along with them when they return'd; and that for the more private carrying on of their trade, they were wont to send one or two of their Order, that knew the language, in the habit of a Faqir, which consists of a Tygers Skin to cover their back-parts, and a Goats Skin to cover the breast, reaching down to the knees. Thereupon the Chief of the Factory of Mingrela taking his opportunity, and having notice that two of the suppos'd Faquirs were gone to the Mines, to lay out 400000 Pardo's in Diamonds, gave order to two men, which he had fe'd for the purpose, that as soon as the Fathers had made their purchase, he should give notice to the Officer of the Custom-House at Bicholi.

Bicholi is a great Town upon the Frontiers of those Lands that part the Kingdom of Visapour from the Territories of the Portugals; there being no other way to pass the River, which encompasses the Island where the City of Goa is built.

The Fathers believing that the Customer knew nothing of their purchase, went into the Boat to go over the River; but as soon as they were in, they were strictly search'd, and all their Diamonds confiscated.

To return to the King of Macassar; you must know, that the Jesuits once endeavour'd to convert him; and perhaps they might have brought it to pass, had they not neglected one proposal which he made them. For at the same time that the Jesuits labour'd to bring him to Christianity, the Mahumetans us'd all their endeavours to oblige him to stick to their Law. The King willing to leave his Idolatry, yet not knowing which part to take, commanded the Mahumetans to send for two or three of their most able Moullas, or Doctors from Mecca; and the Jesuits he order'd to send him as many of the most learn'd among them, that he might be instructed in both Religions; which they both promis'd to do. But the Mahometans were more diligent than the Christians, for in eight months they fetch'd from Mecca two learned Moullas; whereupon the King seeing that the Jesuits sent no body to him, embrac'd the Mahumetan Law. True it is, that three years after there came two Portugal Jesuits, but then it was too late.

The King of Macassar being thus become a Mahumetan, the Prince, his Brother was so mad at it, that when the Mosquee, which the King had caus'd to be built, was finish'd, he got into it one night, and causing the throats of two Pigs to be cut, he all besmear'd the Walls of the new Mosquee, and the place which was appointed for the Moulla to perform Divine Service with the blood; so that the King was forc'd to pull down that, and build Another. After which the Prince with some Idolatrous Lords stole out of the Island, and never since appear'd at Court.

CHAP. XX.

The Author pursues his Travels into the East, and embarks at Mingrela for Batavia. The danger he was in upon the Sea; and his arrival in the Island of Ceylan.

I Departed from Mingrela, a great Town in the Kingdom of Visapour, eight Leagues from Goa, the fourteenth of April, 1648, and embark'd in a Dutch Vessel bound for Batavia. The Ship had orders to touch at Bokanour, to take in Rice. Whereupon I went ashore with the Captain, to obtain leave of the King to buy Rice. We found him upon the shore, where he had about a dozen Huts set up, which were cover'd with Palm-leaves. In his own Hut there was a piece of Persian Tapestry spread under him, and there we saw five or six women, some fanning him with Peacocks Feathers, others giving him Berlé, others filling him his Pipe of Tobacco. The most considerable persons of the Country were in the other Huts; and we counted about two hundred men that were upon the Guard, arm'd only with Bows and Arrows. They had also two Elephants among 'em. 'Tis very probable, that his Palace was not far off, and that he only came thither to take the fresh air. There we were presented with Tari or Palm-wine; but being new, and not boil'd, it caus'd the head-ach in all that drank it, insomuch that we were two days before we could recover it. I ask'd the reason, how the Wine came to do us so much prejudice; to which they answer'd me, that it was the Planting of Pepper about the Palm-trees, that gave such a strength to the Wine.

We were no sooner got aboard, but a mighty tempest arose, wherein the Ship, men, and goods had all like to have been cast away, being near the shore; but at length, the wind changing, we found our selves by break of day three or four Leagues at Sea, having lost all our Anchors; and at length came safe to Port in the Haven of Ponté de Galle, the twelfth of May.

I found nothing remarkable in that City; there being nothing but the ruins made by the underminings and Cannon-shot, when the Hollanders besieg'd it, and chas'd the Portugals from thence. The Company allow'd ground to build upon, to them that would inhabit there, and land to till; and had then rais'd two Bulwarks which commanded the Port. If they have finish'd the design which they undertook, the place cannot but be very considerable.

The Hollanders, before they took all the places which the Portugals had in the Island of Ceylan, did believe that the trade of this Island would have brought them in vast sums, could they but be sole Masters of it; and perhaps their Conjectures might have been true, had they not broken their words with the King of Candy, who is the King of the Country; but breaking faith with him, they lost themselves in all other places thereabouts.

The Hollanders had made an agreement with the King of Candy, that he should be always ready with twenty thousand men, to keep the passages that hinder the Portugals from bringing any succours from Colombo, Negombe, Manar, or any other places which they possess'd upon the Coast. In consideration whereof the Hollanders, when they had taken Ponté de Galle, were to restore it to the King of Candy; which they not performing, the King sent to know why they did not give him possession of the Town; to which they return'd answer, that they were ready to do it, provided he would defray the expences of the war. But they knew, that if he had had three Kingdoms more, such as his own, he could never have pay'd so great a sum. I must confess indeed the Country is very poor, for I do not believe that the King ever saw fifty thousand Crowns together in his life; his Trade being all in Cinnamon and Elephants. As for his Cinnamon, he has no profit of it since the Portugals coming into the East Indies. And for his Elephants, he makes but little of them; for they take not above five or six in a year; but they are more esteem'd than any other Country Elephants, as being the most courageous in war. One thing I will will tell you hardly to be believ'd, but that which is a certain truth, which is, that when any other King or Raja has one of these Elephants of Ceylan, if they bring him among any other breed in any other place whatsoever, so soon as the other Elephants behold the Ceylan Elephants, by an instinct of nature they do him reverence, laying their trunks upon the Ground, and raising them up again.

The King of Achen, with whom the Hollanders also broke their word, had more opportunity to be reveng'd upon them than the King of Candy. For he deny'd them the transportation of Pepper out of his Country, without which their trade was worth little. His Pepper being that which is most coveted by the East. So that they were forc'd to make a composition with him. The King of Achen Embassadour coming to Batavia, was strangely surpriz'd to see women sitting at the Table; but much more, when after a health drank to the Queen of Achen, the General of Batavia commanded his Wife to go and kiss the Embassadour. Nor was the King behind hand with the Dutch Embassadour another way; whom the King beholding in a languishing distemper, ask'd him whether he had never any familiarity with any of the Natives. Yes, replied the Embassadour; however I left her to marry in my own Country. Upon that the King commanded three of his Physicians to cure him in fifteen days, upon the forfeiture of their lives. Thereupon they gave him a certain potion every morning, and a little Pill at night; and at the end of nine days he took a great Vomit. Every body thought he would have dy'd with the working of it; but at length brought up a stopple of course hair, as big as a nut; after which he presently recover'd. At his departure the King gave him a Flint about the bigness of a Goose Egg, with veins of Gold in it, like the veins of a mans hand, as the Gold grows in that Country.

CHAP. XXI.

The Authors departure from Ceylan, and his arrival at Batavia.

THE twenty-fifth of May we set sail from Ponte Galle. The second of June we pass'd the Line. The sixth we saw the Island call'd Nazaco's. The seventeenth we discover'd the Coast of Sumatra, the eighteenth the Island of Ingamina, and the nineteenth the Island of Fortune. The twentieth we were in ken of certain little Islands, and the Coast of Java; among which Islands there are three call'd the Islands of the Prince. The one and twentieth we discover'd Bantam, and the two and twentieth we anchor'd in the Road of Batavia.

There are two Councils in Batavia, the Council of the Fort, where the General presides, and where all the affairs of the Company are manag'd. The other which is held in a House in the City, and relates to the Civil Government, and decides the petty differences among the Citizens.

All the kindness I had shew'n me here, was to be prosecuted by the City Council, for being suspected to have bought a parcel of Diamonds for Monsieur Constant, my very good Friend, and President of the Dutch Factory at Gomron; but when they could make nothing of it, they ceas'd their suit, ashamed of what they had done.

CHAP. XXII.

The Author goes to visit the King of Bantam, and relates several Adventures upon that occasion.

Being so ill treated in Batavia, I resolv'd to visit the King of Bantam; to which purpose I took my own Brother along with me, because he spoke the Language call'd Malaye; which in the East is as universal as Latin among us. Being arriv'd at Bantam in a small Bark, which we hir'd for our selves; we went first and visited the English President, who kindly entertain'd and lodg'd us.

The next day I sent my Brother to the Palace, to know when it would be seasonable for me to come and kiss the King's Hand. When the King saw him (for he was well known to him) he would not suffer him to return, but sent others to fetch me, and to tell me withall, that if I had any rare Jewels, I should do him a kindness to bring them along with me.

When I saw my Brother return'd not with the persons which the King sent, I was almost in the mind not to have gone; remembering how the King of Achen had serv'd the Sieur Renaud. For the French having set up an East India Company, sent away four Vessels, three great ones, and one of eight Guns, for the service of the Country. Their Voyage was the shortest that ever was heard of; arriving at Bantam in less than four months. The King also courteously receiv'd them, and let them have as much Pepper as they desir'd, and cheaper by twenty in the hundred then he sold it to the Hollanders. But the French not coming only for Pepper, sent away their small Ship with the greatest part of their Money to Macassar, to try the Market for Cloves, Nutmegs, and Mace.

The French being so soon dispatch'd at Bantam, had not patience to stay till the return of the small Vessel which they had sent to Macassar; but to pass the time, must needs run over to Batavia, being not above fourteen Leagues off; so that you may be at Batavia from Bantam in a tide with a good wind. When they came to an Anchor, the General of the French Fleet sent to Complement the General of Batavia, who fail'd not to answer his civility, and invited the Admiral ashore. Moreover he sent to those that stay'd aboard, great store of excellent chear, and a good quantity of Spanish and Rhenish Wine, with particular order to them that carry'd it, to make the French drunk. His order was so well follow'd, that 'twas easie to set the Ships on fire, according to the private Instructions which they had. So soon as the flame was discover'd from the Generals window, which overlook'd all the Road, there was a wonderful pretended astonishment among the Dutch. But the French Admiral too truly conjecturing the ground and Authors of the treachery, beholding the company with an undaunted courage; Come, come, cry'd he, lets drink on; they that set the Ships a-fire shall pay for 'em. However the French Ships were all burnt, though the men were all sav'd in Boats which were forthwith sent to their relief. After that, the General of Batavia made them great offers, which they refus'd, and return'd to Batavia, in expectation of their small Vessel. When it return'd, they could find out no better way then to sell Ship and goods, and all to the English, and to share the Money among themselves, every one according to their condition.

But the trick which they put upon the English was far more bloody. The English were the first that found out the danger of failing from Surat, Masipatan, or any other distant parts, to Japon without touching by the way. Whereupon they thought it convenient to build a Fort in the Island of Formosa, which not only sav'd the loss of several Vessels, but also brought them in great gain. The Hollanders mad that the English were possess'd of such an advantageous scituation, being the only place in all the Island where Vessels could ride in safety; and finding they could not carry it by force, bethought them-themselves of a Stratagem; to which purpose they sent away two Ships, wherein they stor'd the best of their Souldiers, who pretending they had been in a storm in Sea, put into the Harbour of Formosa, with some of their Masts by the board, their Sails scatter'd, and their Seamen seemingly sick. The English compassionating their miseries, which was only in outward appearance, invited the chief of them to come ashore to refresh themselves; which they were very ready to do, carrying as many men with them as possibly they could under pretence of sickness. While the chief of them were at Dinner with the chief of the English, they all ply'd their Cups; and when the Dutch saw the English had drunk hard enough, taking their opportunity, they pickt a quarrel with the Commander of the Fort, and drawing their Swords, which they had hidden under their Coats for that purpose, they easily surpriz'd and cut all the throats of the Soldiers in the Garrison; and being thus Masters of the Fort, they kept it from that time till they were routed out by the Chineses.

Now for the trick that the King of Achen serv'd the Sieur Renaud; he having got a good Estate by Jewels, arriv'd at length at Achen, and as it is the custom for the Merchants to shew the King what Jewels they have, the King had no sooner cast his eye upon four Rings which the Sieur Renaud shew'd him, but he bid him fifteen thousand Crowns for them; but Renaud would not bate of eighteen thousand. Now because they could not agree, the Sieur Renaud carry'd them away with him, which very much displeas'd the King; however he sent for him the next day. Whereupon Renaud returning to him, the King paid him his eighteen thousand Crowns; but he was never seen after that, and it is thought he was secretly murther'd in the Palace.

This story came to my remembrance, when I found my Brother did not come along with those that were sent to fetch me. However I resolv'd to go, taking with me 12 or 13000 Roupies worth of Jewels; the greatest part being in Rose Diamond Rings, some consisting of seven, some of nine, and some of eleven Stones; with some small Bracelets of Diamonds and Rubies. I found the King with three of his Captains and my Brother sitting together, after the manner of the East, with five great Plates of Rice before them of divers colours. For their drink they had Spanish Wine, strong waters, and several sorts of Sherberts. After I had complemented the King, and presented him with a Diamond Ring, a blew Saphir Ring, and a little Bracelet of Diamonds, Rubies, and blew Saphirs, he commanded me to sit down, and order'd me a glass of strong Water to whet my appetite. The glass held a quarter of a pint, and therefore I refus'd it, which the King very much wonder'd at; but being told by my Brother, that I never drank any strong Water, he order'd me presently a glass of Sack.

After that he rose up, and seated himself in a Chair, the Elbows whereof were gilded. His feet and legs were bare, having a Persian Carpet of Gold and Silk to tread upon. He was clad with a piece of Calicut, part whereof cover'd his body from his waste to his knees, the rest being wound about his back and shoulders like a Scarf. Instead of Shoes he had a pair of Sandals, that stood by the Chair side, the straps whereof was embroider'd with Gold and small Pearl. About his head he had a thing like a Handkerchief, with three Corners, bound about his head like a Fillet. His hair also, which was very long, was twisted and ty'd together over his head. Two persons stood behind him with great Fans of long Peacock Feathers, the handles whereof were five or six foot in length. Upon his right hand stood an old black woman, holding in her hand a little Mortar and Pestle of Gold, to beat his Betlé, in; where-with he mix'd the Kernel of the Nut of Araqué, and Seed Pearl dissolv'd. When it was all beaten together, the old woman gave it the King over his Shoulders, who opening his mouth, the old woman fed him as our women feed their Children. For the King had chaw'd so much Betlé, and taken so much Tobacco, that his teeth were all fall'n out of his head.

The King of Bantam's Palace was never built by any curious Architect. It is a square place, encompass'd with a great many Pillars, varnish'd over with several sorts of colours, against which the King leans when he sits down. At the four Corners there are four great Pillars set in the earth, at forty foot distance the the one from the other, lin'd with a Mat made of the Rhind of a certain Tree, so thin that it looks like a piece of Linnen, which neither Fleas nor Punies will come near. The roof was cover'd with Coco-Branches. Not far off, under another Roof supported with four great Pillars, he had sixteen Elephants, the noblest of all those that are in the Kings service: for he has a far greater number train'd up for war, that are not afraid of wild-fire. For his guard he might have about two thousand men, that were drawn up in Companies under the shade of the next Trees. They are good Soldiers as well by Sea as by Land; great Mahometans, and stand not at all in fear of death. His Haram, or the Womens Apartment, was certainly a very small Place. For when he had view'd what I brought him, he sent for two old women, to whom he gave some of the Jewels, to go and shew them to his Wives. The two women return'd back through a little pitiful door; the enclosure being nothing but a kind of Wall made up of Earth and Cow-dung mix'd together. Whatever he sent to the Women, they never return'd any thing again. Which made me believe they would bear a good price; and indeed whatever I sold to him, I sold to good profit, and had my Money well paid me. After this we took our leaves; but the King oblig'd us to come next day in the evening, because he had a desire to shew us a Turky Dagger, the Haft whereof, being thin of Diamonds, he had a mind to enrich with more Stones. Coming to the English House with our Money, they wonder'd that the King had laid out twenty thousand Roupies, telling me, they believ'd it was the best part of his treasure.

The next day my brother and I went to wait upon him at the appointed hour, and we found him sitting in the same place where he sat before. There was a Moulla then read to him, who seem'd to interpret to him something of the Alcoran in the Arabick Language. The Lecture being ended, they both rose and went to prayers; which being concluded, the King sent for the Dagger and the Haft which was of Gold. The top of the Handle was already set with Diamonds, and upon the upper part of the cross Bar was cut in Facets, which could not be less worth than fifteen or sixteen thousand Crowns. The King told me, it was presented to him by the Queen of Borneo, and that it was cut at Goa; but that he put a far higher value upon it than I esteem'd it to be worth. The Dagger, as well as the Sheath was full of Beazils, or Collets, in very good order; but the King had neither Diamond, Ruby, nor any other Stone to set in the Collets; and therefore desir'd me to help him to some that might come at an easie rate. I told him it was impossible to find Stones that would fit the Beazils; and therefore that it was better, when he had got Stones enough, to fix other Beazils according to the proportion of the Stones. To which purpose he was first to range all his Stones in Wax; which I shew'd him how to do at the same time; but that was above his skill. And therefore do what I could to excuse my self to the contrary, he would needs oblige me to carry the Dagger to Batavia; whereupon I took my leave of the King, and departed.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Authors return to Batavia. His re-visiting the King of Bantam. And a relation of several Extravagancies of certain Faquirs in their return from Mecca.

ABOUT elev'n a Clock at night, we embark'd for Batavia; for the night winds blowing from the Land, are the only winds to serve our turn; so that we were at Batavia between ten and elev'n the next morning. There I stay'd twenty days for the King of Bantam's sake, to make him believe I had sought for that which I knew was impossible to be found. I had nothing to do all the while, for in Batavia there is no other recreation than gaming and drinking, which was none of my business. At that time the Sieur Candy, one of the Indian Counsellors, who was sumptuously burid for his good services done to the Company; but the people complain'd heavily of the injustice which he had done as well to the Souldiers as Mariners.

Having stay'd twenty days at Bantam, I resolv'd to go and return the King of Bantam his Dagger again; for it was impossible to meet with stones to fit his Beazils. However I took along with me some other Stones which he had not seen. Coming to Bantam, the King caus'd us to be lodg'd in one of his own Houses in the City, which was made of Bamboos. Thither in less than a quarter of an hour, the King sent us some Pateches, or sweet Water-Melons, red within like Scarlet. We had also Mongo's, and a certain large Fruit call'd Pompone, red also within, the meat of it being soft and spungy, but of an excellent taste. Having stay'd our stomachs, we went to wait upon the King, whom we found in the same place, with his old Mortar-bearer, who every foot fed him with Beilè with her fingers. There were sitting about the Hall five or six of his Captains, viewing a certain parcel of Fire-works, as Granado's, Rochets, and other divices to run upon the water, which the Chineses had brought; who are the most exquisite at those sports of any people in the world. When the King was at leisure, I return'd him his Dagger, telling him, that Batavia was no place to meet with stones; and that such as were to be found, were valu'd at double the price they were worth; and that there was no place where he could fit himself, but at Golconda, Goa, or the Diamond Mines. Thereupon the old woman took the Dagger, and carry'd it into his Haram; nor did the King speak one word more about it. After that I shew'd him what other stones I had brought, a parcel whereof I sold him to good profit; the King ordering us to come the next day for payment.

The next day about six a Clock in the morning, my Brother and I, and a Dutch Chirurgion, were going along a narrow way, between a River on the one hand, and the Pales of a great Garden on the other. Behind the Pales a Rascally Bantamois, had hid himself; one of those that was newly come from Mecca, and was upon the design Moqua; that is, in their Language, when the Rascality of the Mahumetans return from Mecca, they presently take their Cric in their hands, which is a kind of Poniard, the Blade whereof is half poyson'd; with which they run through the streets, and kill all those which are not of the Mahumetan Law, till they be kill'd themselves. These Furies think that in so doing they do God and Mahomer good service, and shall be sav'd thereby. If any of these madmen be kill'd, the Rabble of Mahumetans buries them as Saints, and every one contributes to make a fair Tomb. Sometimes you shall have an idle Rogue, in the habit of a Dervish, that will build him a Hut near the Tomb, which he undertakes to look to, and strew with Flowers. And as his alms increase, he adds some other ornament to it. For the Fairer and better set out the Tomb is, the more devoutly it is worship'd, and the more Alms it brings in. I remember in the year 1642, that at Sonali, which is the Port of Surat, it happen'd that a Vessel of the great Moguls return'd from Mecca, with a great number of Faquirs or Derviches. For every every year the King sends two Vessels to carry and bring back the Pilgrims, who have their passage free. And when these Vessels are to go, the Faquirs come from all parts of India to embark. These Vessels are lad'n with very good Commodities, which are sold at Mecca, and the profit is distributed among the poor Pilgrims. But the principal is brought back for the next year, amounting to six hundred thousand Roupies at least. 'Tis an ill Market when they do not gain 30 or 40 per Cent. by their Commodities; nay there are some that produce Cent. per Cent. besides, that the principal persons of the Moguls Haram, and other particular persons, send very large gifts to Mecca.

One of these Faquirs returning from Mecca in the year 1642, and being landed at Souali, had no sooner said his prayers, but he took his Dagger, and ran among several Dutch Mariners that were unlading goods upon the shore, and before they were aware this mad Faquir had wounded seventeen of them, of which thirteen dy'd. The Canjare which he had in his hand, was a kind of Dagger, the Blade whereof toward the Handle was three fingers broad; and because it is a very dangerous weapon, I have here given you the Figure of it.

At length the Sentinel that stood at the entry of the Tent where the Governour and Merchants were, shot him through the body, so that he fell down dead. Immediately all the other Faquirs and Mahumetans that were upon the place took up the body and buried it: and at the end of fifteen days they put him up a fair Monument. Every year the English and Hollanders pull it down; but when they are gone, the Faquirs set it up again, and plant Banners over it; nay some there are that perform their devotions to it.

But to return to the Bantam Faquir. That Villain lying, as I said, behind the Pales, as my Brother and I, and the Dutch Chirurgion came toward him, all three a-breast, thrust his Pike between the Pales, thinking to have stabb'd it into one of our breasts. The Dutch man being next the River, and somewhat before the rest, the head of his Pike ran into his Breeches; whereupon we both laid hold of the Staff. But my Brother being next the Pales, presently leap'd over, and ran the Faquir thorough. Whereupon several Chineses, and other Idolaters, came and gave my Brother thanks for killing him. After that we waited upon the King, and told him what my Brother had done; who was so far from being displeas'd, that he gave my Brother a Girdle. For the King and his Governours are glad when those Rogues are slain, knowing them to be Desperado's, not fit to live.

The next day, coming to take my leave of the English President, he shew'd me two strings of Diamonds, and two Services of Silver, which came from England. He would have sold them all, but I only bought one of the strings of Diamonds, the other being foul; and for the Silver, I would have bought it, had they coin'd Silver in Batavia, as they were wont to do. Formerly the Hollanders coin'd Reals, Half-Reals, and Quarter-Reals, bearing on the one side the stamp of a Ship, on the other V, O, C, like a Character, as in the Figure, signifying in Dutch, Vor Oost Indian, Compagnie, for the East Indian Company. Which they did for the Sake of the Chineses, who loving Silver better than Gold, carri'd away all the Silver that was coin'd at Batavia, at good rates. But at length they left it off, finding so few people that made use of Silver.

CHAP. XXIV.

Of the War of the Hollanders with the Emperor of Java.

HAVING taken my leave of the English President, I return'd to Batavia; where having little to do, I resolv'd to give a visit to the King of Japar, otherwise call'd the Emperor of Java. This King was formerly King of all the Island, till the King of Bantam, who was only Governour of a Province, rebell'd against him; the Hollanders being made by the divisions of those two Princes. For when the King of Japar besieg'd Batavia, the King of Bantam reliev'd the Hollanders; and when they were attack'd by the King of Bantam, the King of Japar came to their assistance. And when those two Kings were together by the ears, the Hollanders always aided the weakest.

The King of Japar keeps his Court in a City of the same name, distant from Batavia some thirty Leagues. You may coast along the shore to it by Sea; but the City stands above eight Leagues up in the Land. From the City there is a fine Walk to the Sea, where there is a handsom Port, and fairer Houses than any in the City. And the King would live there if he thought it safe.

The day before I departed, I went to take my leave of one of the Indian Counsellors, and telling him that I was going to wait upon the King of Japar, he stood amaz'd, in regard the King and the Hollanders were mortal Enemies; of which he gave me this account: The deceas'd King, Father to the King that now reigns, since the Hollanders built their Fort of Batavia would never have any peace with them. And though that during the war the Hollanders took ten of his Subjects, for one of theirs, and offer'd ten for one in exchange, yet he would never exchange one upon any condition whatsoever, and charg'd his Son upon his death-bed never to release one. This obstinacy very much troubld the Dutch General, and all the rest in Batavia, and oblig'd them to consult upon ways how to right themselves. Now it is the custom when a Mahometan King dyes, that his successor sends certain great Lords of his Court to Mecca with Presents, as well to engage them to pray for the Soul of the deceas'd; as also to give thanks to God and Mahomet for the coming of a new King to the Throne without any Impediment; and to pray for the blessing of Victory over all his Enemies. But the new King and his Council were at a loss how to accomplish this Voyage; for first the King had none but little Vessels, that were wont only to sail along by the shore, by reason of the inexperience of his Seamen; and in the second place the Dutch were always plying to and fro about the mouths of his Havens, to surprize his Subjects if they stirr'd forth. For the safety therefore of his Pilgrims, the King at last Concludes upon making an agreement with the English. For which reason he dispatches away an Envoy to Bantam, to the English President and his Council, who promis'd to lend him the biggest Vessel and the best mounted which the company had in the Indies. In lieu whereof the English were to pay but half Customs for ever, for all Commodities exported or imported out of his Country. Which Treaty being ratifi'd, the English furnish'd him with three stout Vessels, Mann'd and Gunn'd beyond an ordinary rate. Thereupon nine of the principal Lords of the Court, and most of the Blood Royal, with a Train of a hundred persons, embark'd themselves in the great Vessel. But all these preparations could not be carri'd so privately, but that the Dutch had intelligence of it by their Spies. Thereupon the General of the Dutch makes ready three Ships, and lying just in the freight of Bantams mouth; so soon as the English came up, (for they had no other way) let fly at them so roundly, that the English fearing lest their Vessels would be sunk, struck Sail; which the Java Lords seeing, call'd the English Traytors, and drawing their poyson'd Daggers, cry'd a Moeca upon the English, killing a great number of them before they had time to put themselves into a posture of defence. And perhaps there would not one of them have escap'd, had not the Hollanders come aboard as they did. Some of the Java Lords, and about twenty of their Attendants, would take no quarter; so that the Hollanders were forc'd to fight for't, and at last they got the better, with the loss of seven or eight men. The English Vessel being carri'd into Batavia, the General very civilly sent both the Prisoners and the Vessel home again; withall giving notice to the King, that he was ready to make an exchange of Prisoners with him. But the King would not so much as hearken to any such proposition; returning for answer, that though the Hollanders had three times as many of his Subjects he would not release so much as one Hollander. So that the poor Dutch were kept slaves in Java, and the Javanners dy'd miserable in Batavia.

As for the Javanners, they are good Souldiers. And it is reported, that while Batavia was belieg'd by the King of Bantam in the year 1639, a Dutch Souldier lying in Ambuscade in a Marsh, a Javanner, little dreaming, that any body had been there, came to the same place to discover the Enemy, and was by the Dutch man thrust with his Pike into his Body. Upon which the Javanner finding himself wounded, did not strive to pull the Pike out of the body, but thrust himself farther upon it, to the end he might come at his Enemy, whom he stab'd to the heart, as soon as he got within his reach.

CHAP. XXV.

The Author buries his Brother; and is again quarrel'd withall by the General and his Council.

While I stay'd at Batavia, my Brother dy'd; and it was pretty to consider what the Dutch made me pay for his Funeral. The first expence is for the Fees of those that beg leave for the Corps to be bur'd of whom the more there are, the more honourable the Funeral is esteem'd, I sent six, and paid them to my wonder for that seventy-two Crowns. The fee for the Pall is a right that belongs to the poor, for which I paid two Crowns. There was a Vessel of Spanish Wine drank out, that cost me two hundred Piasters. I gave twenty-six more for three Westphalia Hams, and some Neats-tongues, and twenty-two for Bak'd Meats. To the Bearers I gave twenty Crowns, and sixteen for a place in the Church-yard, for they ask'd me a hundred to bury him in the Church. And all these are Fee's demanded. So that my Brothers Funeral cost me twelve hundred and twenty three Livres of French Money.

Being thus put by the two Voyages which I intended to Japan and Sumatra, I was advis'd to lay out my Money in Requerings or Debentures of the Servants of the Holland Company; which they that have no mind to return into their own Country, as being settled in the Indies, will sell at an easie rate; insomuch, that for sixty or seventy you may buy a hundred Piasters; the Act and Acquittance of the Seller being made and register'd by the Publick Notary. Thereupon I bought of one of the publick Notaries, who had Bills in his hands, to the value of about eleven thousand Guilders, at fourscore and two for the hundred. After that, I bought by means of the Advocate of the Treasury, six thousand Guilders more, at seventy-nine for the hundred. But some few days after, meeting with the same Advocate again, he pass'd a Complement upon me, and told me, he was very much troubl'd for those that had bought Debentures, in regard that the General and the Council had commanded him to recall all Debentures that had been sold; for they had consider'd, how sad a thing it would be, for the poor men to loose so much of their Salaries. I answer'd him, that for my part I was willing to return mine, provided I might have my Money again. About six or seven hours after, I was sent for by the General and his Council. When I came there, they ask'd me why I had not return'd the Debentures which I had bought. to the Advocate, who had demand'd them by their order. I answer'd them, that they were at Bantam, whither I had

I had sent them in order to my passage home; in regard that the English President had offer'd me a convenience to go along with him. The Council answer'd me, that the Dutch Ships were as good as the English, and very courteously assur'd me, they would give order for a Cabin to my self in the Vice-Admiral. But withall they told me, I must deliver up my Debentures before I stirr'd; assuring me, that they would give me a Bill to be re-imburs'd my Money by the Company in Holland. I thought it very hard, for I knew not how to trust 'em; but seeing the Merchants, Commanders, and all other persons clapt up, and their Papers taken from them by force, that had bought Debentures; I thought it the best way to deliver mine, and stand to their courtesie. I often press'd the General and the Council for my Bill, but after many delays the General ascertain'd me, that my Bill should be in Holland as soon as I. Thereupon desiring the Vice-Admiral and some others to be my witnesses of what the General promis'd, I took my leave of him, very much repenting my going to Batavia.

CHAP. XXVI.

The Author embarks in a Dutch Vessel, to return into Europe.

THE next day I went aboard the Vice admiral, and the third day after we set sail, and as soon as we were out of the Streight, we discover'd the Islands of the Prince. From thence being in the Altitude of the Coco Islands, we beat about two days to discover them; but all to no purpose, thereupon we made directly for the Cape of good Hope.

The forty-fifth day after our departure from Batavia, our Vice-Admiral neglected to put out his Lights; believing all the Fleet had been before at the Cape; so that it happen'd that one of the Fleet being behind, and not carrying any Lights out neither, it being a dark night, fell foul upon us, which put every man to his prayers, all people believing the Vessel had been lost; and indeed had she not been a sound stanch Ship (for the Provinces were so accounted) she should never have endur'd so terrible a shock. At length we clear'd our selves, by cutting of the Yards of the Maestricht, that hung in our Cordage.

The fifty-fifth we came within view of the Cape of good Hope; but were forc'd to keep the Sea, because the waves roll'd so that we were not able to come to an Anchor; not that the Wind was extream high, but because the South-wind had blown so long that it had forc'd the Water to that part. When the Sea grew calm, we came to an Anchor.

But of all the people that ever I saw in all my travels I never saw any so hideous nor so brutish as the Comoukes, of which I had spoken in my Persian Travels; and those of the Cape of good Hope, whom they call Cafres, or Hosentotes. When they speak, they make anoise with their tongues, like the breaking of wind backward; and though they hardly speak articulately, yet they easily understand one another. They cover themselves with the Skins of wild Beasts, which they kill in the Woods; in Winter wearing the hairy part innermost, and in Summer outermost. But there are none but the best fort among them who are thus clad, the rest wear nothing but a nasty rag about their privy parts. The men and the women are lean and short; and when they bring forth a Male-child, the Mothers cut out his right Stone; and presently give him Water to drink, and Tobacco to eat. They cut out the right Testicle, because, say they, it makes them swifter to run. There are some of them that will catch a Roe-Buck runnig. They neither know what belongs to Gold nor Silver; and for Religion, they have none among them.

So soon as we cast Anchor, four women came aboard us, and brought us four young Ostriches; which were boil'd for some sick people that we had aboard.

board. After that they brought great store of Tortoise-Shells, and Ostriches Eggs, and other Eggs as big as Goose Eggs; which though they had no Yolk, tasted very well. The Birds that lay these Eggs are a sort of Geese, and so fat that they are hardly to be eaten, tasting rather like Fish than Flesh. The women seeing our Cook throw away the Guts of two or three Fowl which he was dressing, took them up, and squeezing out the Ordure, eat them as they were; being hugely pleas'd with the Aqua Vita which the Captain gave them. Neither men nor women are ashamed to shew their nakedness, for indeed they are but a sort of human Beasts.

So soon as the Ship arrives, they bring their Beeves to the shore, with what other Commodities they have, to barter for strong Water and Tobacco, Crystal or Agat Beads; or any sort of old Iron work. If they are not satisfi'd with what you offer them, away they fly; and then giving a whistle all their Cattel follow 'em; nor shall you ever see 'em again. Some, when they saw 'em fly, would shoot and kill their Cattel; but after that for some years they would never bring any more. 'Tis a very great convenience for the Vessels that touch there, to take in fresh Victals; and the Hollanders did well to build a Fort there. It is now a good handsom Town, inhabited by all sorts, that live with the Hollanders; and all sorts of Grain, which are brought out of Europe or Asia and sow'd there, come to better perfection there than in other parts. The Country lies in thirty-five Degrees, and some few Minutes over, so that it cannot be said that either the heat or situation of the Climate makes these Cafres so black. Being desirous to know the reason, and why they stunk so terribly, I learnt it from a Girl that was bred up in the Fort, who was tak'n from her Mother, as soon as she was born, and was white like our women in Europe; she told me, that the reason why the Cafres are so black is, because they rub themselves with a Grease or Ointment compos'd of several sorts of Drugs; wherewith should they not anoint themselves very often, and as soon as they were born, they should become Hydrosical, as the Blacks of Africa, and the Abyssins are; or like the people of Saba, that never live above forty years, and are always troubl'd with one Leg twice as big as the other. These Cafres, as brutish as they are, have yet some knowledge of Simples, which they know to apply to several Diseases; which the Hollanders have several times experienc'd. Of nineteen sick persons that we had in our Ship, fifteen were committed to the care of these Cafres, being troubl'd with Ulcers in their Legs, and old wounds which they had receiv'd in the wars; and in less than fifteen days they were all perfectly cur'd. Every one of these had two Cafres to look after him; and according to the condition of the wound or Ulcer, they went and fetch'd Simples, which they bruise'd between two Stones, and apply'd to the sore. As for the other four, they were so far gone with the Pox, that they would not trust the Cafres with them, having been given over at Batavia, and so they all dy'd, between the Cape and St. Helens.

In the year 1661, a Gentleman of Britanny being at Batavia, was so bit by the Gnats in the night, that his Leg exulcerated presently in such a manner, as to puzzle all the art and skill of the Chirurgeons in that Town. When he came to the Cape of good Hope, the Captain of the Ship sending him ashore, the Cafres came about him, and after they had beheld him, they told him if he would trust to them they would cure him. The Captain thereupon committed him to their care, who cur'd him and made him a sound man in less than fifteen days.

When a Ship comes to an Anchor in the Cape, it is the fashion for him that commands the Ship, to give leave to some part of the Mariners and Souldiers to go ashore to refresh themselves. The sickly have first leave by turns, and go to the Town, where they are dyeted and lodg'd for seven or eight Sou's a day, and are very well us'd.

It is the custom of the Hollanders, when they stay here, to send out parties of Souldiers upon the discovery of the up-land Country, and they that go farthest are best rewarded. With this design a party of Souldiers, under the Command of a Serjant, far advanc'd in the Country; and night coming on, they made a great fire, as well to keep themselves from the Lions, as to warm themselves, and to lay down to sleep round about it. Being asleep, a Lion came and seiz'd one of the Souldiers Arms, which the Serjant perceiving, immediately shot the Lion with his Carbine; but when he was dead, they had much ado to open the Lions mouth, to get out the Souldiers Arm. Thus it appears a vulgar error, to believe that Lions would not come near the fire. As for the Souldier, the Cafres cur'd his Arm in twelve days. There are in the Fort abundance of Lions and Tigers Skins; among the rest, there was the Skin of a Horse which the Cafres had kill'd; it was white, cross'd with black streaks, spotted like a Leopard, without a Tail. Two or three Leagues from the Hollanders Fort, there was a Lion found dead, with four Porcupines Quills in his body, the third part were of had pierc'd his flesh. So that it was judg'd that the Porcupine had kill'd the Lion. The Skin, with the Quills in it, is kept in the Fort.

A League from the Fort, is a fair Town, that grows bigger and bigger every day. When the Holland Company arrives there with their Ships, if any Souldier or Mariner will live there, they are very glad of it. They have as much ground as they can mannage; where they have all sorts of Herbs, and Pulse, and as much Rice, and as many grapes as they can desire. They have also young Ostridges, Beef, Sea-fish, and sweet water. To catch the Ostridges, when they please, they got their Nests when they were young, and driving a stake in the ground, tye the Birds by one Leg to the stake, and when they are old enough they come and take them out of the Nest, from whence it is impossible to fly away.

When the Hollanders began to inhabit the Cape, they took a young Girl from her Mother, as soon as she was born; she is white, only her Nose is a little flat. A French man got her with Child, and would have marry'd her; but the Company were so far from permitting him, that they took away above a hundred Livres of the Maids wages from her, to punish her for the misdemeanour, which was somewhat hard.

There are great numbers of Lions and Tigers, which the Hollanders have a pretty invention to take; they fasten a Carbine to a stake, driv'n into the Earth, and lay meat round about the Gun, which meat is fasten'd with a string to the Trigger. So that when the Beast snatches the meat, the String pulls the Trigger, and the Gun going off, hits the Lion either in the throat or the breast.

The Cafres feed upon a Root like our Skerrets, which they roast and make bread of. Sometimes they grind it into flower, and then it tastes like a Walnut. For their food they eat the same Root raw, with raw Fish; with the Entrails of Beasts, out of which they only squeeze the ordure. As for the bowels of the wild Beasts, the women wear them dry'd about their Legs, especially the bowels of those Beasts which their Husbands kill, which they look upon as a kind of Ornament. They also feed upon Tortoises, when they have so far heated them at the fire, as to make the Shells come off. They are very expert in darting their Azagaya's; and those that have none, make use of pointed sticks, which they will lance a great way. With these they go down to the Sea-side, and as soon as ever they spy a Fish near the top of the water, they will not fail to strike him.

As for their Birds, which are like our Ducks, whose Eggs are without any Yolk; they breed in such great quantities in the Country, that in a Bay about eighteen Miles from the Cape, you may knock them on the head with a stick.

The Hollanders once carri'd a young Cafre to the General at Batavia, who bred him carefully up, teaching him to understand the Dutch and Portugal Languages perfectly well. At length being desirous to return into his Country, the General gave him very good Cloaths, and good Linnen, hoping that he would have liv'd among the Hollanders, and been serviceable to them in the discovery of the Country; but so soon as he got home, he flung his Cloaths in the Sea, and return'd wild among his fellow Natives, eating raw flesh as he did before, and quite forgetting his Benefactors.

When the Cafres go a hunting, they go a great number together, and make such a prodigious howling and yelling, that they fright the very Beasts themselves, and in that affright with ease destroy them; and I have been assur'd, that their cries do terrifie the Lions themselves.

The women are of so hot a Constitution of Body, that at the times that their monthly

monthly customs are upon 'em, they happen to make water, and that European chances to set his feet upon it, it causes an immediate Head-ach and Fever, which many times turns to the Plague.

C H A P. XXVII.

The Holland Fleet arrives at St. Helens. The description of the Island

HAVING staid two and twenty dayes at the Cape of good Hope, seeing that the Wind was favourable, we weigh'd, and steer'd for St. Helens. When we were under Sail, the Mariners cry'd out, they would sleep till they came into St. Helens-Road. For the wind is very constant, and carries you in sixteen or eighteen days to the Road of the Island. All the trouble that our Mariners had, was that fourteen days after our departure from the Cape, they were often forc'd to the Top-Mast head, upon discovery of the Island; for as soon as you discover the Island, the Pilot must take care to steer to the North-side of the Island, because there is no casting Anchor but on that side, and that very near the shore too; by reason of the deepness of the water; for if the Anchors come not to take hold, the current of the water and the wind carries the Ship quite out of the Road, which there is no recovering again, because the wind never changes.

So soon as the Ships came to an Anchor, part of the Seamen were sent ashore to get wild Hogs, of which there are great plenty; and to gather Sorrel, which grows in great abundance; and indeed they not only send the Seamen, but all the Pigs, Sheep, Geese, Ducks, and Pullets aboard, to feed upon that Sorrel, which purges them in such a manner, that in a few days they became so fat, that by that time we came to Holland they were hardly to be eaten. That Sorrel has the same operation upon the men, who boiling their wild Swines flesh, Rice, and Sorrel together, make thereof a kind of Potage so excellent, that it keeps their bodies open by an insensible purgation.

There are two places upon the Coast of St. Helens where Ships may come to an Anchor. But the best is that where we lay, by reason that ground is very good, and for that the water that falls from the Mountain is the best in the Island. In this part of the Island there is no plain, for the Mountain descends to the very shore of the Sea.

It is not so good anchoring in the other Road; but there is a very handsome plain, where you may sow or plant whatever you please. There are great store of Citrons, and some Oranges, which the Portugals had formerly planted there. For that Nation has that vertue, that wherever they come, they make the place the better for those that come after them; whereas the Hollanders endeavour to destroy all things wherever they set footing. I confess the Commanders are not of that humour, but the Sea-men and Souldiers, who cry one to another, we shall never come hither any more, and out of greediness will cut down a whole tree instead of gathering the fruit.

Some days after there arriv'd a Portuguese Vessel from Guiny, full of Slaves, which were bound for the Mines of Pernu. Some of the Hollanders that understood the language of the Negro's, tol'd 'em how miserably they would be us'd, and thereupon the next night two hundred and fifty of them threw themselves into the Sea. And indeed it is a miserable slavery; for sometimes after they have min'd in some places for some days together, the Earth being loose, falls down and kills four or five hundred at a time. Besides, that after they had been mining awhile, their Faces, their Eyes, and their Skins change colour; which proceeds from the vapours that arise from those concavities; nor could they subsist in those places, but for the quantity of strong Water which they give both to the men and women. There are some that are made free by their Masters, who labour however for their living; but between Saturday night and Munday morning they spend all their weeks wages in strong Water, which is very dear; so that they always live miserably.

Being ready to depart the Island of St. Helens, the Admiral call'd a Council, to advize which way to steer. The greatest part were for steering more to the West, then then to the South; because the season for sailing was far spent; and for that if we steer'd for the West Indies, we should find the wind more proper to carry us into Holland. But we had no sooner cross'd the Line, but we found the wind quite contrary to what the Mariners expected; so that we were forc'd to steer to the sixty-fourth Degree of Altitude with the Island, and so return by the North into Holland.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Holland Fleet sets Sail from St. Helens, and prosperously arrives in Holland.

THE next day after the Admiral had call'd a Council, we weigh'd and set Sail about ten a Clock at night. Three days after our departure from St. Helens, the Seamen were call'd very dully to prayers morning and evening; though all the time we staid in the rode, they never minded any such matter; which made me wonder, to find they should be more devout when they were out of danger, than when they were in jeopardy.

After several other days sailing, we discover'd the Coast of Island, and then the Island of Ferella, where we join'd with the Holland Fleet that stay'd for us. Here it is that the Commander in chief calls to account all the Mariners for their misdemeanours during the whole Voyage.

Our Ship was bound for Zealand; but we were forc'd to lye out at Sea seven days before we could get into Flushing, because the Sand had chang'd its place. Coming to an Anchor before Flushing, two of the Company came aboard to welcome us home, and to advise us to lock our Chests, and put our marks upon them; for all Chests are carry'd into the East India House, where when the owners come for them, they are order'd to op'n them, lest they should have any counterband goods therein. Thereupon I set a mark upon my Chests, and went ashore, after I had giv'n a good character of the Captain, and his civility to me all the Voyage, and thence proceed by Land to Middleburgh.

Four days after I came to Middleburgh, I went to fetch my Chests; and finding the two Directors there, one a Zealander, the other of Horn, who came first aboard us; I produc'd my Keys, and offer'd my Chests to be open'd. But the Zealander more civil than the Horner, deliver'd me my Keys again, and taking my word, told me I was free to take away my goods. And indeed I have always observ'd, that the Northern people are always more rude and ungentile than the Southern.

As for the 17500 Florins which the General of Batavia promis'd should be paid me upon my arrival in Holland, I receiv'd so many delays and put off's, that I was at length forc'd to commenced a Suit that lasted above two years; nor could I get a publick Notary either at Amsterdam or the Hague, that would make me out a protest, every one fearing the Directors, who were both Judges and Parties. At length after five years wrangling and jangling, the Director wrote to my Brother at Batavia (for I was then return'd again to the Indies) that if I would accept of 10000 Livres, he might receive it for me; which he did, and was forc'd to give them an acquittance form the whole.

This is the return which I made from the Indies in the year 1649, and the only time that ever I return'd by Sea; having perform'd all the rest of my Travels by Land, not counting my short Voyages through the Mediterranean for any thing. And as for my first Travels, perform'd them all by Land, from Paris through Germany and Hungary, as far as Constantinople; whither I return'd again in the year 1669. From Constantinople I went to Smyrna, thence I sail'd for Ligorn; from Ligorn I travel'd by Land to Genoa, thence to Turin, and so to Paris.

AN
OF A LETTER WRITTEN TO
Mr. H. Ouldinburgh,
FROM
Monsieur DE MONCEAUX:

Giving a Character of the BOOK here Englished, and its AUTHOR.

Virtue sometimes is no less interested than Affection: Both, Sir, are glad to receive from time to time pledges mutually answering for those that have united themselves in a close correspondence. Yours indeed should demand of me such, as might be a security to you for the advance you have been pleased to make me of your Friendship. But since at present I have nothing worth presenting you with; and yet am unwilling to give you any leisure to be diffident of my realness, or to repent for having so easily given me a share in your esteem, I here send you a Relation of Indostan, in which you will find such considerable Occurrences, as will make you confess, I could not convey to you a more acceptable Present, and that Monsieur Bernier, who hath written it, is a very Gallant Man, and of a mould, I wish all Travellers were made of. We ordinarily travel more out of Unsettledness than Curiosity, with a design to see Towns and Countries rather than to know their Inhabitants and Productions; and we stay not long enough in a place, to inform our selves well of the Government, Policy, Interests and Manners of its People. Monsieur Bernier, after he had benefitted himself for the space of many years by the converse of the famous Gassendi, seen him expire in his arms, succeeded him in his Knowledge, and inherited his Opinions and Discoveries, embarked for Ægypt, stay'd above a whole year at Cairo, and then took the occasion of some Indian Vessels, that Trade in the Ports of the Red Sea, to pass to Suratte; and after Twelve years abode at the Court of the Great Mogol, is at last come to seek his rest in his native Countrey, there to give an Accompt of his Observations and Discoveries, and to pour out into the bosom of France, what he had amassed in India.

Sir, I shall say nothing to you of his Adventures, which you will find in the Relations that are to follow hereafter, which he abandons to the greediness of the Curious, who prefer their satisfaction to his quiet, and do already persecute him to have the sequel of this History. Neither shall I mention to you the hazards he did run, by being in the Neighbourhood of Mecca; nor of his prudent Conduct, which made him merit the esteem of his Generous Fazelvan, who since is become the first Minister of that Great Empire, whom he taught the principal Languages of Europe, after he had Translated for him the whole Philosophy of Gassendi in Latin, and whose leave he could not obtain to go home, till he had got for him a select number of our best European Books, thereby to supply the loss he should suffer of his Person. This, at least, I can assure you of, that never a Traveller went from home more capable to observe, nor hath written with more knowledge, candour, and integrity; that I knew him at Constantinople, and in some Towns of Greece, of so excellent a Conduct, that I proposed him to my self for a Pattern in the Design I then had, to carry my Curiosity as far as the place where the Sun riseth; that I have often drowned in the sweetness of his entertainment the bitterneffes, which else I must have swallowed all alone, in such irksome and unpleasant passages, as are those of Asia.

Sir, You will do me a pleasure to let me know the sentiment, your Illustrious Society hath of this Piece. Their Approbation begets much emulation among the Intelligent, who all have no other Ambition than to please them. I my self must avow to you, that if I thought I could merit so much, I should not so stiffly oppose, as I do, the Publication of the Observations and Notes I have made in the Levant. I should suffer my Friends to take them out of my Cabinet, where from the slight value I have for them, they are like to lye imprisoned, except the King my Master, by whose Order I undertook those Voyages, should absolutely command me to set them at liberty, and to let them take their course in the world. Mean time, Sir, you will oblige me, to assure those Great Men, who this day compose the most knowing Company on Earth, of the Veneration I have for the Oracles that come from their Mouth, and that I prefer their Lyceum before that of Athens; and lastly, that of all their Admirers there is none, that hath a greater Concern for their Glory, than

HISTORY
OF THE Late Revolution
OF THE DOMINIONS
GREAT MOGOL.

THE desire of seeing the World having made me Travel into Palestina and Egypt, would not let me stop there; it put me upon a resolution to see the Red Sea from one end to the other. I went from Grand Cairo, after I had staid there above a year; and in two and thirty hours, going the Caravan-pace, I arrived at Suez, where I Embarked in a Gally, which in seventeen days carry'd me, always in sight of Land, to the Port of Gidda, which is half a days Journey from Mecca. There I was constrained (contrary to my hopes, and the promise which the Beig of the Red Sea had made me) to go ashore on that pretended Holy Land of Mahomet, where a Christian, that is not a Slave, dares not set his foot. I staid there four and thirty days; and then I Embarked in a small Vessel, which in fifteen days carried me along the Coast of Arabia the Happy to Moka, near the Streight of Babel-mandel. I resolved to pass thence to the Isle of Masowa and Arkiko, to get as far as Gouder, the Capital Town of the Countrey of Alebech, or the Kingdom of Ethiopia; but I received certain information, that, since the Portugueses had been killed there by the intrigue of the Queen-Mother, or expelled, together with the Jesuit Patriarch, whom they had brought thither from Goa, the Roman Catholicks were not safe there; a poor Capuchin having lost his head at Suaken, for having attempted to enter into that Kingdom: That indeed, by going under the name of a Greek, or an Armenian, I did not run so great hazard, and that even the King himself, when he should know, that I could do him service, would give me Land to Till by Slaves, which I might buy if I had money; but that undoubtedly they would forthwith oblige me to Marry, as they had lately done a certain Frier, who had passed there under the name of a Greek Physitian; and that they would never suffer me to come away again.

These considerations, among others, induced me to change my resolution. I went aboard of an Indian Vessel; I passed those Streights, and in two and twenty days I arrived at Suratte in Indostan, the Empire of the Great Mogol, in the Year 1655. There I found, that he who then Reigned there, was call'd Chah-Jehan, that is to say, King of the World; who, according to the History of that Countrey, was Son of Jehan-Guyre, which signifieth Conqueror of the World, Grandchild of Ekbar, which is Great, and that thus ascending by Houmayons, or the Fortunate, Father of Ekbar, and his other Predecessors, he was the Tenth of those that were descended from that Timur-Lengue, which signifieth the Lame Prince, commonly and corruptly call'd Tamerlan, so renowned for his Conquests; who married his near Kinswoman, the only Daughter of the Prince of the Nations of Great Tartary, call'd Mogols, who have left and communicated their Name to the Strangers, that now govern Indostan, the Countrey of the Indians, though those that are employ'd in publick Charges and Offices, and even those that are list'd in the Militia, be not all of the Race of the Mogols, but Strangers, and Nations gather'd out of all Countries, most of them Persians, some Arabians, and some Turks. For, to be esteem'd a Mogol, 'tis enough to be a Stranger white of Face, and a Mahumetan; in distinction as well to the Indians, who are brown, and Pagans, as to the Christians of Europe, who are call'd Franguis.

I found also at my arrival, that this King of the World, Chah-Jehan, of above seventy years of Age, had four Sons and two Daughters; that, some years since, he had made these four Sons Vice-Kings or Governors of four of his most considerable Provinces or Kingdoms; that it was almost a year that he was fallen into a great sickness, whence it was believed he would never recover: Which had occasioned a great division among these four Brothers (all laying claim to the Empire) and had kindled among them a War which lasted about five years, and which I design here to describe, having been present at some of the most considerable Actions, and entertained for the space of eight years at that Court, where Fortune and the small stock of Money (left me after divers Encounters with Robbers, and the Expences of a Voyage of six and forty days from Surratte to Agra and Debli, the Capital Towns of that Empire) obliged me to take a Salary from the Grand Mogol in the quality of a Physitian, and a little after from Danechmend-Kan, the most knowing Man of Asia, who had been Bakebis, or Great Master of the Horse, and was one of the most powerful and the most considerable Omrahs or Lords of that Court.

The Eldest of these four Sons of Chah-Jehan was call'd Dara, that is Darius. The Second was call'd Sultan-Sujah, that is, the Valiant Prince. The name of the Third was Aurenge-Zebe, which signifies the Ornament of the Throne. That of the Fourth was Morad-Bakebe, as if you should say, Desire accomplished. Of the two Daughters, the eldest was call'd Begum-Sabek, that is, the Mistress Princess; and the youngest Rauchenara-Begum, which is as much as Bright Princess, or the Splendor of Princesses.

'Tis the Custom of the Countrey, to give such Names to their Princes and Princesses. Thus the Wife of Chah-Jehan, so renown'd for her Beauty, and for having a Tomb, which much more deserved to be reckon'd among the Wonders of the World, than those unhapen Masses, and those heaps of Stones in Egypt, was called Tage-Mehalle, that is to say, the Crown of the Seraglio; and the Wife of Jehan-Guyre, who hath so long govern'd the State, whilst her Husband minded nothing but Drinking and Divertisements, was first called Nour-Mehalle, and afterwards, Nour-Jehan-Begum, the Light of the Seraglio, the Light of the World. The reason, why they give such kind of Names to the Great Ones, and not Names from their Land or Dominion (as is usual in Europe) is, because all the Land being the Kings, there are no Marquisates, Earldoms and Duchies, of which the Grandees might bear their Names; all consists in Pensions either of Land or ready Money, which the King giveth, increaseth, retrencheth, and takes away, as seems good unto him: And 'tis even for this reason, that the Omrahs have also no other but such Names; one (for example) being called Raz-Audaze-Kan, i. e. a Thunderer; another, Safe Cheken-Kan, a Breaker of Ranks; a third, Bare-Audaze-Kan, a Man of Lightening; others, Dianet-Kan, or Danechmend-Kan, or Fazel-Kan, i. e. the Faithful Lord, the Intelligent, the Perfect, and the like.

Dara, the Eldest Son, wanted not good Qualities. He was Gallant in Conversation, Witty in Repartees, exceeding Civil and Liberal, but entertained too good an Opinion of his person, esteeming himself alone capable of all, and thinking it scarce possible that any Body was able to give him counsel; insomuch, that he would give reproachful Names to those who pretended to advise him in any thing; whereby it came to pass, that even those, who were most affectionate to him, were shie to discover to him the most secret Intrigues of his Brothers. Besides, he was apt to be transported with passion, to menace, to injure, to affront, even the greatest Omrahs or Lords; but all passed over like a flash of light. Though he was a Mahumetan, and publickly expressed in the ordinary Exercises of Religion to be so, yet, in private, he was Heathen with the Heathen, and Christian with the Christians. He had constantly about him of those Heathen Doctors, to whom he gave very considerable Pensions, and who (as was said) had instilled into him Opinions contrary to the Religion of the Land; of which I may touch something hereafter, when I shall come to speak of the Religion of the Indians.

or Gentiles. He also hearkened of late very willingly to the Reverend Father Buzee a Jesuit, and began very well to relish what he suggested. Yet there are some who say, that at the bottom he was void of all Religion, and that whatever he pretended in it, was only for curiosity, or, as others say, out of policy, to make himself beloved by the Christians, who are pretty numerous in his Artillery; but above all, to gain the Affection of the Rajas, or Sovereign Gentiles, that were Tributary to the Empire, and to make them of his party upon occasion. Mean time, this hath not much furthered his Affairs, on the contrary, it will appear in the sequel of this History, that the pretence used by Aureng-Zebe, his third Brother, to cut off his head, was, that he was turned Kafer, that is to say, an Infidel, of no Religion, an Idolater.

Sultan Sujah, the second Brother, was much of the humor of Dara, but he was more close and more settled, and had better conduct and dexterity. He was fit to manage an Intrigue well, and he made, under-hand, Friends, by the force of Presents, which he heaped upon the great Omrahs, and principally upon the most powerful Rajas, as Jessomseigne, and some others; but he did somewhat too much indulge his pleasures, in entertaining an extraordinary number of Women, among whom when he was, he spent whole days and nights in drinking, singing, and dancing. He made them Presents of very rich Apparel; and he encreased or lessened their Pensions according as the fancy took him: By which kind of life his Affairs did languish, and the Affections of many of his People cooled. He cast himself into the Religion of the Persians, although Chah-Jehan, his Father, and all his Brothers, were of the Turkish. 'Tis known that Mahometanism is divided into several Sects, which made that famous Cbeck-Sady, Author of the Goulistan, say in Verse, which is to this effect in Prose; I am a Dervich Drinker, I seem to be without Religion, and I am known of sixty two Sects. But of all those Sects there are two principal ones, whose Partisans are mortal Enemies to one another. The one is that of the Turks, whom the Persians call Osmanious, that is, Sectators of Osman; they believing that 'tis he that was the true and lawful Successor of Mahomet, the Great Caliph or Sovereign Priest, to whom alone it did appertain to interpret the Alcoran, and to decide the Controversies to be met with in the Law. The other is that of the Persians, whom the Turks call Chias, Rafezys, Aly-Merdans, that is, Sectaries, Hereticks, Partisans of Aly, because they believe, contrary to the belief of the Turks, that this Succession and Pontifical Authority, which I just now intimated, was due only to Aly the Son-in-law of Mahomet. It was by reason of State that Sultan Sujah had embraced this latter Sect, considering that all the Persians being Chias, and most of them, or their Children, having the greatest power at the Court of Mogol, and holding the most important Places of the Empire, he had most reason to hope, that, when occasion served, they would all take his part.

Aureng-Zebe, the third Brother, had not that Gallantry, nor surprizing Presence of Dara, he appeared more serious and melancholy, and was indeed much more judicious, understanding the World very well, and knowing whom to chuse for his service and purpose, and where to bestow his favour and bounty most for his interest. He was reserved, crafty, and exceedingly versed in dissembling, insomuch that for a long while he made profession to be Fakire, that is, Poor, Dervich, or Devout, renouncing the World, and feigning not to pretend at all to the Crown, but to desire to pass his life in Prayer, and other Devotions. In the mean time he failed not to make a Party at Court, especially when he was made Vice-King of Decan; but he did it with so much dexterity, art, and secrecie, that it could hardly be perceived. He also had the skill to maintain himself in the affection of Chah-Jehan his Father, who although he much loved Dara, could yet not forbear to shew that he esteemed Aureng-Zebe, and judged him capable to Reign; which caused jealousy enough in Dara, who began to find it, insomuch that he could not hold from saying sometimes to his Friends in private, Of all my Brothers I apprehend only this Nemazi, that is, this Bigot, this great Praying-man.

Morad-Bakche, the youngest of all, was the least dextrous, and the least judicious. He cared for nothing but mirth and pastime, to drink, hunt, and shoot. Yet he had some good qualities, for he was very civil and liberal; he gloried in it, that he kept nothing secret; he despised Cabals; and he bragg'd openly, that he trusted only in his Arm and Sword: In short, he was very Brave, and if this Bravery had been accompanied with some conduct, he would have carried the Bell from all his Brothers, and been King of Indostan, as will appear in what is to follow.

Concerning the two Daughters, the Eldest, Begum-Sabeh, was very beautiful, and a great great Wit, passionately beloved of her Father. It was even rumoured, that he loved her to that degree as is hardly to be imagined, and that he alledged for his excuse, that, according to the determination of his Mullahs, or Doctors of his Law, it was permitted a Man to eat of the fruit of the Tree he had planted. He had so great a confidence in her, that he had given her charge to watch over his safety, and to have an eye to all what came to his Table: And she knew perfectly to manage his humor, and even in the most weighty Affairs to bend him as she pleased. She was exceedingly enriched by great Pensions, and by costly Presents, which she received from all Parts, for such Negotiations as she employed her self in about her Father: And she made also great Expences, being of a very liberal and generous disposition. She stuck entirely to Dara, her eldest Brother, espoused cordially his part, and declared openly for him; which contributed not a little to make the Affairs of Dara prosper, and to keep him in the affection of his Father; for she supported him in all things, and advertised him of all occurrences: Yet that was not so much, because he was the eldest Son, and she the eldest Daughter (as the People believed) as because he had promised her, that as soon as he should come to the Crown, he would marry her; which is altogether extraordinary, and almost never practised in Indostan.

I shall not scruple to relate here some of the Amours of this Princess, although shut up in a Seraglio, and well kept, like other Women. Neither shall I apprehend, that I may be thought to prepare matter for a Romancer; for they are not Amours like ours, followed by Gallant and Comical Adventures, but attended with Events dreadful and Tragical.

Now 'tis reported, that this Princess found means to let a young Gallant enter the Seraglio, who was of no great Quality, but proper, and of a good Meen. But among such a number of jealous and envious persons, she could not carry on her business so privately, but she was discover'd. Chah-Jehan, her Father, was soon advertised of it, and resolved to surprize her, under the pretence of giving her a Visit, as he used to do. The Princess seeing him come unexpected, had no more time than to hide this unfortunate Lover in one of the great Chaudrons made to Bath in; which yet could not be so done, but that Chah-Jehan suspected it. Mean time he quarrelled not with his Daughter, but entertained her a pretty while, as he was wont to do; and at length told her, that he found her in a careless and less neat posture; that it was convenient she should wash her self, and bath oftner; commanding presently, with somewhat a stern countenance, that forthwith a Fire should be made under that Chaudron, and he would not part thence, before the Eunuchs had brought him word, that that unhappy Man was dispatched. Some time after she took other measures, she chose for her Kane-saman, that is, her Steward, a certain Persian called Nazerkan, who was a young Omrah, the handsomest and most accomplished of the whole Court; a Man of Courage and Ambition, the Darling of all, insomuch that Chah-Hestkan, Uncle of Aureng-Zebe, proposed to marry him to the Princess: But Chah-Jehan received that Proposition very ill, and besides, when he was informed of some of the secret Intrigues that had been formed, he resolved quickly to rid himself of Nazerkan. He therefore presented to him, as 'twere to do him honour, a Betele, which he could not refuse to chew presently, after the custom of the Countrey. Betele is a little knot made up of very delicate leaves, and some other things, with a little chalk of Sea-Cockles, which maketh the mouth and lips of a vermillion colour, and the breath sweet and pleasing. This young Lord thought of nothing less than being poysoned: He went away from the Company very jocund and content, into his Paleky; but the Drug was so strong, that before he could come to his house, he was no more alive.

Rauchenara-Begum never passed for so handfom and spiritual as Begum-Sabeb, but she was not less cheerful, and comely enough, and hated pleasures no more than her Sister. But she addicted her self wholly to Aureng-Zebe, and consequently declared her self an Enemy to Begum-Sabeb and Dara. This was the cause, that she had no great Riches, nor any considerable share in the Affairs of the State: Nevertheless as she was in the Seraglio, and wanted no Wit and Spies, she could not but discover many important matters, of which she gave secret advertisement to Aureng-Zebe.

Chah-Jehan, some years before the Troubles, finding himself charged with these four Princes, all come to Age, all Married, all pretending to the Crown, Enemies to one another, and each of them making secretly a Party, was perplexed enough, as to what was fittest for him to do, fearing danger to his own person, and foreseeing what afterwards wards befell him: For, to shut them up in Goualeor, which is a Fortrefs where the Princes are ordinarily kept close, and which is held impregnable, it being situated upon an inaccessible Rock, and having within it self good water, and provifion enough for a Garifon; that was not fo eafie a thing. They were too potent already, each of them having a Princely Train. And again, he could not handfomly remove them far off, without giving them fome Government fit for their Birth; wherein he apprehended they would Cantonize themfelves, and become little independent Kings, as actually they afterwards did. Nevertheless, fearing left they should cut one anothers Throat before his Eyes, if he kept them ftill at Court, he at laft concluded to fend them away. And fo he fent Sultan Sujah, his fecond Son, into the Kingdom of Bengale; his third, Aureng-Zebe, into Decan; and the youngelt, Morad-Bakche, to Guzaratte; giving to Dara, the eldeft, Cabal and Multan. The three firft went away very well content with their Government, and there they acted each the Sovereign, and retained all the Revenues of their refpective Countries, entertaining great Troops, under the pretence of bridling their Subjects and Neighbours. As to Dara, becaufe the eldeft, and defigned to the Crown, he ftirred not from the Court; which that he fhould not do, feemed alfo to be the intention of Chah-Jehan, who entertained him in the hopes of fucceeding him after his death. He even permitted then, that Orders were iffued out by him, and that he might fit in a kind of Throne, beneath his, among the Omrabs; fo that it feemed, as if there were two Kings together. But as 'tis very difficult for two Sovereigns to agree, Chah-Jehan, though Dara fhew'd him great obfervance and affection, always harbour'd fome diffidence, fearing above all things the Morfel; and befides, for as much as he knew the parts of Aureng-Zebe, and thought him more capable to Reign than any of the reft, he had always (as they fay) fome particular correffpondence with him.

This it is, what I thought fit to premife concerning thefe four Princes, and their Father Chah-Jehan, becaufe 'tis neceffary for the underftanding of all that follows. I efteem'd alfo, that I was not to forget thofe two Princeffes, as having been the moft confiderable Actors in the Tragedy; the Women in the Indies taking very often, as well as at Constantinople, and in many other places, the beft part in the moft important Tranfactions, though men take feldom notice of it, and trouble their heads of seeking for other caufes.

But to deliver this Hiftory with clearnefs, we muft rife fomewhat higher, and relate what paffed, fome time before the Troubles, between Aureng-Zebe, the King of Golkonda, and his Vifier Emir-Jemla; becaufe this will difcover to us the character and temper of Aureng-Zebe, who is to be the Heros of this Piece, and the King of the Indies. Let us then fee, after what manner Emir-Jemla proceeded; to lay the firft foundation of the Royalty of Aureng-Zebe.

During the time that Aureng-Zebe was in Decan, the King of Golkonda had for his Vifier and General of his Armies this Emir-Jemla, who was a Persian by Nation, and very famous in the Indies. He was not a man of great Extraction, but beaten in Buftinefs, a perfon of excellent parts, and a great Captain. He had the wit of amaffing great Treafures, not only by the adminiftration of the affairs of this opulent Kingdom, but alfo by Navigation and Trade, fending Ships into very many Parts, and cauling the Diamond Mines, which he alone had farmed under many borrowed names, to be wrought with extraordinary diligence. So that people difcourfed almoft of nothing but of the Riches of Emir-Jemla, and of the plenty of his Diamonds, which were not reckon'd but by Sacks. He had alfo the skill to render himfelf very potent and confiderable, entertaining, befides the Armies of the King, very good Troops for his particular, and above all a very good Artillery, with abundance of Frangys or Chriftians to manage it. In a word, he grew fo rich, and fo puiffant, efpecially after he had found a way to enter into the Kingdom of Karnates, and to pillage all the ancient Churches of the Idols of that Countrey, that the King of Golkonda became jealous of it, and prepared himfelf to unfaddle him; and that the more, becaufe he could not bear what was reported of him, as if he had ufed too great familiarity with the Queen his Mother, that was yet beauteous. Yet he difcover'd nothing of his defign to any, having patience, and waiting 'till Emir came to the Court, for he was then in the Kingdom of Karnates with his Army. But one day, when more particular News was brought him of what had paffed between his mother and him, he had not power enough to diflemble any longer, but was tranfported by choler to fall to inveftives and menaces: Whereof Emir was foon made acquainted, having at the Court abundance of his Wives Kindred, and all his neareft nearest Relations and best Friends possessing the principal Offices. The King's Mother also, who did not hate him, had speedy information of the same. Which obliged Emir, without delay, to write to his only Son, Mahmet Emir-Kan, who then was about the King, requiring him to do the best he could to withdraw with all speed from the Court, under some pretence of Hunting, or the like, and to come and join with him. Mahmet Emir-Kan failed not to attempt divers ways; but, the King causing him to be narrowly observed, none of them all would succeed. This very much perplexed Emir, and made him take a strange resolution, which cast the King in great danger to lose his Crown and Life; so true 'tis, that he who knows not to Dissemble, knows not how to Reign. He writ to Aureng-Zebz, who was then in Daulet-Abad, the Capital of Decan, about fifteen or sixteen days Journey from Golkonda, giving him to understand, that the King of Golkonda did intend to ruine him and his Family, notwithstanding the signal Services he had done him, as all the World knew; which was an unexampled Injustice and Ingratitude; that this necessitated him to take his refuge to him, and to intreat him, that he would receive him into his protection; that, for the rest, if he would follow his advice, and confide in him, he would so dispose Affairs, that he would at once put into his hands both the King and Kingdom of Golkonda. This thing he made very easie, using the following Discourse: You need but take four or five thousand Horse, of the best of your Army, and to march with Expedition to Golkonda, spreading a rumor by the way, that 'tis an Ambassador of Chah-Jehan that goes in haste, about considerable matters, to speak with the King at Bag-naguer. The Dabir, who is he that is first to be addressed unto, to make any thing known unto the King, is allied to me, and my creature, and altogether mine; take care of nothing but to march with Expedition, and I will so order it, that without making you known, you shall come to the Gates of Bag-naguer; and when the King shall come out to receive the Letters, according to custom, you may easily seize on him, and afterwards of all his Family, and do with him what shall seem good to you; in regard that his house of Bag-naguer, where he commonly resides, is unwall'd and unfortified. He added, that he would make this Enterprize upon his own charges, offering him fifty thousand Roupies a day (which is about five and twenty thousand Crowns) during the whole time of the March.

Aureng-Zebe, who looked only for some such occasion, had no mind at all to lose so fair an one. He soon undertook the Expedition, and did so fortunately manage his Enterprize, that he arrived at Bag-naguer, without being otherwise known than as an Ambassador of Chah-Jehan. The King of Golkonda being advertis'd of the arrival of this pretended Ambassador, came forth into a Garden, according to custom, received him with honour, and having unfortunately put himself into the hands of his Enemy, ten or twelve Slaves, Gurgis, were ready to fall upon and to seize his person, as had been projected; but that a certain Omrab, touch'd with tenderness, could not forbear to cry out, though he was of the Party, and a creature of Emir, Doth not your Majesty see that this is Aureng-Zebe? Away, or you are taken. Whereat the King being affrighted, slips away, and gets hastily on horseback, riding with all his might to the Fortrefs of Golkonda, which is but a short League from thence.

Aureng-Zebe seeing he was defeated in his design, yet was not therefore discompos'd; but seized at the same time on the Royal House, taketh all the rich and good things he finds there; yet sending to the King all his Wives (which over all the Indies is very religiously observed) and goeth to besiege him in his Fortrefs. But as the Siege, for want of having brought along all Necessaries, held on long, and lasted above two months, he received order from Chah-Jehan to raise it, and to retire into Decan again; so that, although the Fortrefs was reduced to Extremities, for want of Victuals and Ammunition of War, he found himself obliged to abandon his Enterprize. He knew very well, that it was Dara and Begum that had induced Chah-Jehan to send these Orders, from the apprehension they entertained, that he would become too powerful; but in the mean time he never discover'd any resentment of it, saying only, that he ought to obey the Orders of his Father. Yet he withdrew not, without causing under-hand payment to be made to him of all the Charges of his Expedition: Besides, he married his Son Sultan Mahmond to the eldest Daughter of that King, with a promise, that he would make him his Successor, causing him also to give him for a Dowry the Fortrefs and the Appurtenances of Eamgnyre. He also made the King consent, that all the Silver Money that should be Coined for the future in that Kingdom, should bear on one side the Arms of Chah-Jehan; and that Emir-Jemla should withdraw with his whole Family, all his Goods, Troops, and Artillery.

These

These two great Men were not long together, but they framed great designs: On the way they besieged and took Bider, one of the strongest and most important Places of Visapour; and thence they went to Danlet-Abad, where they contracted so intimate a friendship together, that Aureng-Zebe could not live without seeing Emir twice a day, nor Emir without seeing Aureng-Zebe. Their Union began to cause a new Face in all the Affairs of those Parts, and laid the first foundations of the Royalty of Aureng-Zebe.

This Prince having used the Art to make himself to be called to the Court divers times, went with great and rich Presents to Agra to Chah-Jehan, presenting him his service, and inducing him to make War against the King of Golkonda, and him of Visapour, and against the Portugals. At first he presented to him that great Diamond, which is esteem'd matchless; giving him to understand, that the precious stones of Golkonda were quite other things, than those Rocks of Kandabar; that there it was, where the War ought to be made, to get the possession thereof, and to go as far as Cape-Comory. Chah-Jehan, whether it were that he was dazzled by the Diamonds of Emir, or whether he thought it fit, as some believe he did, to have an Army in the Field, somewhat to restrain Dara, whom he found active in making himself potent, and who with insolence had ill treated the Vizier Sadullah-Kan (whom Chah-Jehan passionately loved, and considered as the greatest Statesman that had been in the Indies) causing him even to be made away with Poison, as a Man not of his Party, but inclined to Sultan Sujah; or rather, because he found him too powerful, and in a condition to be the Umpire of the Crown, if Chah-Jehan should de cease; or lastly, because being neither Persian, nor of Persian Extraction, but an Indian, there were not wanting envious persons, who spread abroad, that he entertained in divers places numerous Troops of Patans, very gallant men, and well paid, with a design to make himself King, or his Son; or at least to expel the Mogols, and to restore to the Throne the Nation of the Patans, of whom he had taken his Wife. However it be, Chah-Jehan resolved to send an Army towards Decan, under the conduct of Emir-Jemla.

Dara, who saw the consequence of this Affair, and that the sending of Troops for those Parts, was to give strength to Aureng-Zebe, opposed it exceedingly, and did what he could to hinder it. Nevertheless, when he saw that Chah-Jehan was resolute for it, he at last thought it best to consent; but with this condition, that Aureng-Zebe should keep in Danlet-Abad, as Governor only of the Countrey, without meddling at all in the War, or pretending to govern the Army; that Emir should be the absolute General, who for a pledge of his Fidelity was to leave his whole Family at the Court. Emir struggled enough within himself, whether he should agree to this last condition, but when Chah-Jehan desir'd him to give that satisfaction to Dara, and promised him, that after a little while he would send him back his Wife and Children, he consented, and marched into Decan towards Aureng-Zebe with a very gallant Army, and without any stop entred into Visapour, where he besieged a strong place called Kaliane.

The Affairs of Indostan were in that condition, as I have been relating, when Chah-Jehan fell dangerously sick, I shall not speak here of his sickness, much less relate the particulars of it. I shall only say this, that it was little suitable to a man of above Seventy years of Age, who should rather think on preserving his strength, than to ruine it, as he did. This sickness did soon alarm and trouble all Indostan. Mighty Armies were levied in Dehly and Agra, the Capitals of the Empire. Sultan Sujah did the like in Bengale, and Aureng-Zebe in Decan, and Mord-Bakhe in Guzaratte: All four assembled to themselves their Allies and Friends; all four write, promise, and form divers Intrigues. Dara having surpris'd some of their Letters, shew'd them to Chah-Jehan, and made great noise about them; and his Sister Begum failed not to make use of this occasion, to animate the King against them. But Chah-Jehan was diffident of Dara, and fearing to be poisoned, gave order, that particular care should be had of what was brought to his Table. 'Twas also said, that he wrote to Aureng-Zebe; and that Dara being advertis'd thereof, could not forbear to menace, and to break into very passionate expressions. In the mean time the distemper of Chah-Jehan lingred, and 'twas bruited every where, that he was dead. Whereupon the whole Court was disorder'd, the whole Town alarm'd, the Shops for many days shut up; and the four Sons of the King made openly great Preparations, each for himself: And to say truth, it was not without reason, that they all made ready for War; for they all very well knew, that there was no hopes of Quarter, that there was no other way, than to vanquish or die, to be King or undone, undone, and that he that should be Conqueror would rid himself of all the rest, as formerly Chah-Jehan had done of his Brothers.

Sultan Sujah, who had heaped up great Treasures in that rich Kingdom of Bengale, ruining some of the Rajas or petty Kings that are in those Parts, and drawing great Sums from others, took the Field first of all with a puissant Army, and in the confidence he had of all the Persian Omrahs, for the Sect of whom he had declared himself, he boldly marched towards Agra, giving out openly, that Chah-Jehan was dead, that Dara had poison'd him; that he would revenge the death of his Father, and, in a word, that he would be King. Dara desired Chah-Jehan to write himself to him, and to forbid him to advance further; which he did, assuring him, that his sickness was not at all dangerous, and that he was already much better. But he having Friends at Court, who assured him that the sickness of Chah-Jehan was mortal, he dissembled, and ceased not to advance, saying still, that he knew very well Chah-Jehan was dead; and if he should be alive, he was desirous to come and kiss his feet, and to receive his Commands.

Aureng-Zebe immediately after, if not at the same time, taketh the Field also in Deccan, maketh a great noise, and prepareth to march towards Agra. The same prohibition was made to him also, as well from Chah-Jehan, as from Dara, who threaten'd him. But he dissembleth, for the same reason that Sultan Sujah had done, and giveth the like answer. Mean time, finding that his Treasure was low, and his Soldiery very inconsiderable, he devised two Artifices, which succeeded admirably well; the one, in regard of Morad-Bakche; the other, in respect of Emir-Jemla. To Morad-Bakche he writes with speed a very fair Letter, importing, that he had always been his true and intimate Friend; that, as for himself, he laid no claim at all to the Crown; that he might remember, he had all his life-time made profession of a Fakire, but that Dara was a person incapable to govern a Kingdom; that he was a Kafer, an Idolater, and hated of all the greatest Omrahs; that Sultan Sujah was a Rasezy, an Heretick, and by consequence an Enemy to Indostan, and unworthy of the Crown: So that, in a word, there was none but he (Morad-Bakche) that could reasonably pretend to the Succession; that the Crown did expect him; that the whole Court, which was not ignorant of his Valor, would be for him; and that for his particular, if he would promise him, that being King, he would give him leave to live quietly in some corner or other of his Empire, there to serve God the remainder of his days, he was ready to make a conjunction with him, to assist him with his Counsel and Friends; and to put into his hands his whole Army, to fight Dara and Sultan Sujah; that in the mean time he sent him an Hundred thousand Rupies (which make about Fifty thousand Crowns of our money) and prayed him to accept thereof as a pledge of his friendship; and that he would advise him to come with all possible speed to seize on the Castle of Suratte, where he knew to be the Treasure of the Land.

Morad-Bakche, who was neither too rich, nor too powerful, received with much joy this Proposition of Aureng-Zebe, and the Hundred thousand Rupies sent by him; and shew'd Aureng-Zebe's Letter to every body, thereby to oblige the Flower of that Country to take up Arms for him, and the substantial Merchants to lend him the more willingly such Sums of money as he demanded of them. He began in good earnest to act the King, made large promises to all, and, in short, did so well, that he set a good Army on foot, of whom he singled out some Three thousand, who, under the conduct of Chah-Abas, one of his Eunuchs, but a valiant man, should go to besiege Suratte.

Aureng-Zebe sent his eldest Son, Sultan Mahmoud (him whom he had married to the Daughter of the King of Golkonda;) to Emir-Jemla, who was yet employed in the siege of Kaliane, to perswade him to come to him to Daulet-Abad, pretending to have matter of the greatest importance to communicate to him. Emir, who soon suspected his intentions, excused himself, saying openly, that Chah-Jehan was not dead, that he had fresh News of his being alive, and that besides, all his Family being at Agra in the hands of Dara, he could by no means assist Aureng-Zebe, nor declare himself for him. Whereupon Sultan Mahmoud return'd to Daulet-Abad, without effecting any thing, and very much dissatisfied with Emir. But Aureng-Zebe lost no courage for all that, but sent the second time to Emir, yet not Sultan Mahmoud, but Sultan Mazum his second Son, who presented to him his Fathers Letter, and handled him with that dexterity, sweetness, and protestation of friendship, that it was not possible to resist him. Emir therefore pressed the siege of Kaliane, forced the besieged to surrender upon composition, took the choice choice of his Army, and with all diligence went away with Sultan Mazum. At his arrival, Aureng-Zebe courted him in the highest degree, treating him no otherwise than with the name of Baba and Babagy, that is, Father, Lord-Father; and after an hundred Embraces, he took him somewhat aside, and told him (according to what I could learn from persons who knew of it) That it was not just, that having his Family at the Court, he should adventure to do any thing in his behalf that might come to be known; but that, after all, there was nothing so difficult but an Expedient might be found. Give me leave therefore, said he, to propose to you a Design, which at first will possibly surprise you; but, since you apprehend the danger of your Wife and Children that are in Hostage, the best way of providing for their security would be, to suffer me to seize on your person, and to put you in Prison. It is out of doubt, that all the World will believe it done in earnest: For who would imagine, that such a person as you would be content to let your self be laid in Prison? In the interim, I could make use of part of your Army, and of your Artillery, as you shall judge most proper and convenient: You also could furnish me with a Sum of money, as you have frequently offered it; and besides, methinks I might tempt Fortune further, and we might together take our measures, to see in what manner I had best to demean my self, if you would also permit, that I might cause you to be transported into the Fortrefs of Daullet-Abad, where you should be Master; and that there I might have you kept by my own Son, Sultan Mazum, or Sultan Mahmoud; this would yet better palliate the matter, and I see not, what Dara could justly say of it, nor how he could reasonably treat your Wife and Children ill.

Emir, whether it were by reason of the friendship he had sworn to Aureng-Zebe, or for the great promises made to him, or the apprehension he had, of seeing near him Sultan Mazum, who stood by, very pensive and well armed, and Sultan Mahmoud, who looked grim upon him for his coming away at the solicitation of his Brother, not at that of his, and had at his very entrance lift up his foot, as if he would have hit him; whatever of these Considerations might induce him, consented to all what Aureng-Zebe desired, and approved of the Expedient to suffer himself to be imprison'd; so that Aureng-Zebe being no sooner gone, but the great Master of the Artillery was seen to approach with some fierceness to Emir, and to command him in the name of Aureng-Zebe to follow him, locking him up in a Chamber, and there giving him very good words, whilst all the Soldiery that Aureng-Zebe had thereabout, went to their Arms. The report of the detention of Emir-Jemla was no sooner spread, but a great Tumult arose; and those, whom he had brought along with him, although astonish'd, yet put themselves into a posture of rescuing him, and with their Swords drawn ran to force the Guards, and the Gate of his Prison, which was easie for them to do: For Aureng-Zebe had not with him sufficient Troops to make good so bold an Enterprize, the only name of Emir-Jemla made all tremble. But the whole matter being altogether counterfeited, all these Commotions were presently calmed, by the intimations that were given to the chief Officers of Emir's Army, and by the presence of Aureng-Zebe, who there appeared very resolute with his two Sons, and spoke now to one, then to another; and at last by Promises and Presents, liberally bestowed on those that were concerned. So that all the Troops of Emir, and even most of those of Chah-Jehan, seeing things troubled, and being without their General, and believing Chah-Jehan to be dead, or, at best, desperately sick; considering also the ample promises made to them of augmenting their stipend, and of giving them at that very time three months Advance, soon Listed themselves under Aureng-Zebe; who having seized on all the Equipage of Emir, even his very Camels and Tents, took the Field, resolved to march to the Siege of Suratte, and to hasten the taking it in; where Morad-Bakche was exceedingly embarrassed, because that his best Troops were employed there, and that he found more resistance in that place than he imagined. But Aureng-Zebe, after some days March, was informed, that the Governor had surrendered the Place; for which he sent Congratulations to Morad-Bakche, acquainting him withal of his Transactions with Emir-Jemla, and assuring him, that he had Forces and Money enough, and very good intelligence at the Court; that nothing was wanting; that he was directly going to Brampour and Agra; that he had expected him on the way, and therefore desired him to join with him.

'Tis true, that Morad-Bakche found not so much money in the Fortrefs of Suratte as he had imagined, whether it were that really there was not so much as was reported, or whether the Governor had diverted a part of it, as some believed: Yet notwithstanding that little he found there was useful to him, to pay the Soldiers that had Listed themselves in hopes of the advantages, they should make of the imagined vast Treasure of Suratte. 'Tis not less true, that he had no greater reason to boast of the taking of this Place, in regard there was not any Regular Fortification about it; and yet his Army had lain before it above a month, and would never have reduced it without the Hollanders, who furnished them with the Invention of Springing a Mine, which ruining a great side of the Wall, cast the besieged into such a Consternation, that it made them immediately surrender. The reduction of this Town did much advance his Design, Fame proclaiming immediately throughout these Countreys, that Morad-Bakche had taken Suratte; that he had sprung a Mine, which sounded very big among the Indians, who as yet do little understand that practice; and that there he had found a vast Treasure. Notwithstanding this great noise, and all the first advantages, joyned to all those frequent Letters and great Promises of Aureng-Zebe, the Eunuch, Chah-Abas, a Man of good Sense, of a great Heart, and exceedingly affectionate to the Service of his Master, was not of opinion, that Morad-Bakche should so much tye himself in Interest to Aureng-Zebe, or precipitate his conjunction with him, but advised, that he should amuse him with words, and let him advance alone towards Agra; that in the mean time there would come certain News of the sickness of Chah-Jehan; that he should first see what Channel Affairs would run in; that he should Fortifie Suratte, as a very good Post, able to render him Master of a very large and rich Countrey; and that perhaps in time he might seize Brampour, which is a very considerable Passage of a River, and as 'twere a Bar of Decan. But the continual Letters and Protestations of Aureng-Zebe, joyned to the small Forces, Artillery, and Treasure of Morad-Bakche, blinded with an excessive ambition to Reign, made him regardless of all other considerations; so that he went away from Amadevad, abandoned Guzaratte, and took his way through the Woods and Mountains, with all Expedition, to be at the Rendezvous, where Aureng-Zebe had looked for him these two or three days.

Great Solemnities of Joy were made at the conjunction of the two Armies, the Princes visited one another, Aureng-Zebe made a hundred Protestations and no less Promises to Morad-Bakche, assured him afresh, and solemnly, of his not caring for the Crown, as also of his being there for no other end than to assist him against Dara, their Common Enemy, and to place him in the Throne, which expected him.

Upon this Enterview, and confirmation of Friendship, both Armies marched together, Aureng-Zebe continuing always, during the March, in the Protestations of Friendship, and in his Courtship to Morad-Bakche, treating him never otherwise, whether in publick or private, but with the Title of Hazaret, that is, King and Majesty: So that Morad-Bakche was fully perswaded, that Aureng-Zebe meant sincerely, from an excess of affection towards him; whence he even willingly, and without Ceremony, suffered the submissions and respects he shewed him; instead of remembering what had lately passed at Golkonda, and of considering, that he, who had thus hazarded himself with so much boldness to usurp a Kingdom, was not of a temper to live and dye a Fakire.

These two Armies thus joyned made a Body considerable enough; which begot a great noise at Court, and gave cause of thoughtfulness, not only to Dara, but to Chah-Jehan himself, who knew the great parts and subtle Conduct of Aureng-Zebe, and the Courage of Morad-Bakche; and who foresaw very well, that a fire was a kindling, which would be very hard to quench. It was to no purpose to write Letters upon Letters, signifying that he was well, and giving Order that they should turn back to their respective Governments, and expressing also, that he would forget all that had passed hitherto. All his Letters were not able to hinder their Advance; and as the sickness of Chah-Jehan did still pass for mortal, there being no persons wanting to bring and spread such News, they still continued to dissemble, giving out, that they were Letters counterfeited by Dara; that Chah-Jehan was dead indeed; but that, in case he were alive, they would go to kiss his Feet, and deliver him from the hands of Dara.

What then should Chah-Jehan, this unfortunate King, do, who seeth, that his Sons have no regard to his Orders; who is informed at all hours, that they march apace towards Agra in the head of their Armies, and who in this conjuncture finds himself sick to boot in the hands of Dara, that is, of a man who breatheth nothing but War; who prepareth for it with all imaginable earnestness, and with all the marks of an enraged resentment against his Brothers; but what could he do in this extremity? He is constrained to abandon to them his Treasures, and to leave them to their disposal. He is forced to send for his old and most trusty Captains, whom he knows for the most part to be not very affectionate to Dara; he must command them to fight for Dara, against his own Blood, his own Children, and those, for whom he hath more esteem than for Dara; he is obliged forthwith to send an Army against Sultan Sujah, because 'tis he that is most advanced; and he is to send another against Aureng-Zebe and Mored-Bakche, who no less are marching towards him.

Soliman Chékouh, the eldest Son of Dara, a young Prince of about five and twenty years of Age, very proper of Body, and of good Parts and Conduct, generous, liberal, and universally beloved, especially of Chah-Jehan, who had already enriched him, and who considered him rather for his Successor than Dara, was he, that was made General of this Army against Sujah. Nevertheless Chah-Jehan, who wished much rather, that Sujah were returned to Bengale, than that the matter should be tryed by a bloody Combat, which could not be but very Tragical, and wherein he run the hazard of losing one or other of his Sons, gave him for Companion an Ancient Raja, called Jesseigne, who is at present one of the powerfulest and richest Rajahs of all Indostan, and one of the ablest in the whole Kingdom, with a secret Order not to fight, except it were altogether unavoidable; as also to endeavour by all means to induce Sujah to retire, and to reserve his Forces for a better occasion; that is to say, after they should have seen the event of the sickness of Chah-Jehan, and the success of Aureng-Zebe, and of Morad-Bakche. But this young Prince, Soliman Chékouh, full of heat and Courage, breathing after nothing but to signalize himself by some great action, and Sultan Sujah fearing lest Aureng-Zebe gaining a Battle should first make himself Master of the Capital Towns of the Empire, Agra and Dehly; it was impossible for the Raja Jesseigne to keep them from a Combat. The two Armies are no sooner in sight of one another, but they prepare to fall on, and they were not long from giving some Volleys of Cannon. I shall not relate the particulars of this Fight, for, besides that the narration of it would be too long and tedious, in the sequel of this History we shall be obliged to describe more considerable ones, by which the Reader will be able to judge of this. 'Tis sufficient to know in general, that the first onset was very sharp and obstinate on both sides, but that at length Soliman Chékouh did urge Sujah with that force and vigour that he disordered him, and made him fly: So that if Jesseigne, and the Patan Delil-kan, who was one of the first Captains and a valiant Man, but an intimate friend of the Raja, and did not act but being moved by him, had seconded him in good earnest, 'tis thought that the whole Army of Sujah would have been defeated, and himself in danger of being taken: But that was not the design of the Raja to destroy him, no more than it was that of Chah-Jehan, who had given him order to the contrary. Thus then had Sujah time to retreat, and that without losing any considerable number of his Men; yet because Soliman Chékouh kept the field, and brought away some pieces of Artillery, it was presently bruited at Court, that Sujah had been totally overthrown. This Defeat purchased great reputation to Soliman Chékouh, lessened much the esteem of Sultan Sujah, and cooled exceedingly all the Persians that had an inclination for him.

After that some days were spent in the pursuit of Sujah, the Prince Soliman Chékouh, who every day received News from the Court, and who learned that Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakche did approach with great resolution, well knowing, that his Father Dara had no great stock of Prudence, but good store of secret Enemies, resolved to quit the pursuit of Sultan Sujah, and with all speed to return to Agra, where in all appearance Dara was to give Battel against Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakche. This was the best counsel he could take, for no man doubts, that if he could have been there in good time, Aureng-Zebe would not have had the Advantage; and 'tis even believed, he would never have hazarded the Combat, the Party being too unequal; but the bad fortune of Dara did not permit it.

Whilst all that was thus transacted towards Elabas, which is the place where the Gemna is joyned to Ganges; the Scene was very different on the side of Agra. At the Court they were much surpris'd to hear, that Aureng-Zebe had pass'd the River of Brampour, and all the other passages that were most difficult between the Mountains; so that with all hast they sent away some Troops to dispute with him the passage of the River Eugenes, whilst the whole Army was making ready. For which purpose there were chosen two of the most considerable and the most powerful of the Kingdom to command it; the one was Kasem-Kan, a Renowned Captain and very affectionate to Chah-Jehan, but one that had no great inclination to Dara, and who went not but to oblige Chah-Jehan, whom he saw in the hands of Dara: The other was Jessomseigne, a potent Raja, not inferior to Jesseigne, and Son-in-law to that Raja Rana, who was at the time of Ekbar so puissant, as if he had been the Emperor of the Raja's. Dara at their farewell expressed to them great kindness, and presented them nobly; but Cbah-Jehan took his time, before their departure, to charge them in secret, as he had done the Raja Jesseigne, when he went away in the Expedition against Sultan Sujah with Soliman Chokuh. Neither were they wanting, in their March, to send several times to Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakhe, to persuade them to turn back; But this was in vain; their Envoys came not again, and the Army advanced with that diligence, that they saw it much sooner than they thought upon a rising ground, not far remote from the River.

It being then Summer, and the season of the greatest heats, the River was fordable; which was the cause, that at the same time Kasem-kan and the Raja prepared themselves to give Battel; besides that, they soon knew the resolution of Aureng-Zebe, that he would force them, since that, although his Army was not all come up, he gave them some Volleys of Cannon; his design being to amuse them, fearing lest they themselves should pass the River, not only to prevent his passage, but also to hinder his Army from repoling, and from taking an advantageous post; which was indeed in great disorder, and so tired by their March, and so faint by the heat, that if at the very first it had been assaulted, and kept from passing the Water, it would doubtless have been routed without much resistance. [I was not by in this first Encounter, but thus it was generally discoursed of, and it agreeth with the after-relation of many of our Frenchmen, who served Aureng-Zebe in the Artillery.] But they were content to stay at the River-side, to keep Aureng-Zebe from passing it, according to the Order they had received.

After that Aureng-Zebe had let his Army rest two or three days, and by amusing the Enemy, had fitted it to pass the River, he made his whole Artillery play, which was very well placed; and he commanded, that under the favour of the Cannon they should pass the River. Kasem-Kan and the Raja, on their part, discharged theirs also, and did what they could to repulse the Enemy, and to keep him from passing. The Combat was sharp enough at first, and very obstinately maintained, by the extraordinary Valour of Jessomseigne. For as to Kasem-Kan, although a great Captain, and a stout Man, he gave no great proof of his Valour in this occasion; yea, some accuse him of Treachery, charging him that he had in the night caused the Bullets and Powder to be hid under the Sand, there being no more of them to be found after two or three discharges. However it be, the Combat for all that was, as I said, very resolutely carried on, and the Passage long disputed. There were Rocks in the Bed of the River, which did much embarrass, and the Banks in many places were very high and difficult to climb up. But at last, Morad-Bakhe cast himself into the water with so much resolution and force, and shewed so much valour and boldness, that there was no resisting of him. He passed over, and with him a good part of the Army, which made Kasem-Kan to give back, and cast Jessomseigne into great danger of his Person. For by and by he found the whole Body of the Enemy upon him, and without the extraordinary resolution of his Ragipous, who almost all were killed about him, he had been a dead man. One may judge of the great danger he was in upon this occasion, by this, that after he had disengaged himself as well as he could, and was come back to his own, not daring to return to Agra, because of the great loss he had suffered, of seven or eight thousand Ragipous he had but five or six hundred of them remaining.

These Ragipous, who take their name from the Rajas, that is to say, the Children of the Rajas, are from Father to Son such Men as make the Sword their Profession. The Rajas, whose Subjects they are, do assign them Lands for their subsistence, on condition to be always ready to go to War when summoned. So that one might say, that they were a sort of Pagan Nobles, if the Rajas gave them their Lands in propriety for them and their Children. They are great takers of Opium; and I have sometimes wondered at the quantity I have seen them take: They accustom themselves to it from their youth. On the day of Battel they double the Dose, this Drug animating, or rather inebriating them, and making them insensible of danger; in so much that they cast themselves into the Combate like so many furious Beasts, not knowing what it is to run away, but dying at the feet of their Raja, when he stands to it. They want nothing but Order, Resolution they have enough. 'Tis a pleasure thus to see them, with the fume of Opium in their Head to embrace one another, when the Battel is to begin, and to give their mutual Farewells, as men resolved ved to dye. And that they do for this reason; that the Great Mogol, though a Mahometan, and by consequence an Enemy of the Heathen, yet for all that entertains always a good number of Rajas in his service, whom he considers as his other Omrabs, and imployes in his Armies as if they were Mahometans.

I cannot forbear to relate here the fierce reception, which the Daughter of the Rana gave to her Husband Jessomseigne, after his defeat and flight. When she heard that he was nigh, and had understood what had passed in the Battel; that he had fought with all possible courage; that he had but four or five hundred Men left; and that at last, not being able to resist any longer the Enemy, he had been obliged to retreat: She, in stead of sending one to receive him, and to condole him in his misfortunes, commanded in a dry mood to shut the Gates of the Castle, and not to let this infamous Man enter; that he was not her Husband; that she would never see him; that the Son-in-law of the Great Rana, could not have so low a Soul; that he was to remember, that being grafted into so Illustrious an House, he was to imitate the Virtue of it; and, in a word, that he was either to vanquish, or to dye. A moment after she was of another humour; she commands a Pile of Wood to be laid, that she might burn her self, that they abus'd her, that her Husband must needs be dead; that it could not be otherwise. And a little while after this, she was seen to change her countenance, to fall into passion, and to break out into a thousand reproaches against him. In short, she remained thus transported eight or nine days, without being able to resolve to see her Husband, 'till at last her Mother coming in, brought her in some degree to her self, and comforted her, assuring her, that as soon as the Raja had but a little refresh'd himself, he would raise another Army, to fight Aureng-Zebe, and repair his Honour at any rate.

By which story one may see a pattern of the Courage of the Women in that Countrey: To which I could add something I have seen some of them do, who burned themselves alive after the death of their Husbands; but we must reserve this Discourse for another place, where I shall also shew, that there is nothing which opinion, prepossession, custom, hope, and the point of honour, &c. may not make Men do or suffer.

Dara having understood what had passed at Eugenes, fell into that choler against Kasem-Kan, that it was thought he would have cut off his Head, if he had been upon the place. He was also transported against Emir-Jemla, as the Person that was the first and principal cause of the Misfortune, and who had furnish'd Aureng-Zebe with Men, Money, and Cannon. He is ready to kill his Son Mahmet Emir-Kan, and will send his Wife and Daughter to Basar, or the Market-place of prostituted Women; and 'tis past doubt, that he would have done some such thing, if Chab-Jehan, with much art and prudence, had not moderated the excess of his passion, in remonstrating to him, that Emir-Jemla had not so little conduct, nor so great a friendship for Aureng-Zebe, as to hazard, and in a manner to sacrifice his Family, for the advancing of his Interest; that Aureng-Zebe must needs have gulled and ensnared him, by his usual artifice and cunning.

As for Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakebe, the happy success of this first Encounter did so swell their hearts, and gave such Courage to their whole Army, that henceforth they believed themselves invincible, and capable to compass any thing. Besides, Aureng-Zebe, the more to animate his Soldiers, bragged openly, that he had Thirty thousand Mogols at his devotion in the Army of Dara; and there was something in it, as appeared by the sequel. Morad-Bakebe was for nothing but fighting, and would march with all diligence. But Aureng-Zebe represented to him, that it was necessary the Army should refresh themselves for some time upon the Banks of this sweet River; that in the mean time he would write to all his Friends, and get a full and certain information of the state of the Court, and of the condition of all Affairs. So that he marched not towards Agra, 'till he had rested some days, and after that he marched but slowly, to inform himself of all, and to take his time and measures.

Concerning Chab-Jehan, when he plainly saw the resolution of Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakebe, and that there was no hope left to make them turn back, he was in such a perplexity, that he knew not what to resolve, and foreseeing some great calamity, he would fain have hindred the last decisive Battel, for which he saw Dara preparing himself with great eagerness. But what could he do to oppose it? He was yet too weak of his sickness, and saw himself still in the hands of Dara, whom, as I have said, he trusted not much: So that he found himself obliged to acquiesce in his Will, and to commit to him all the Forces of the Empire, and to command all Captains to obey him. Immediately all was in Arms: I know not, whether there was ever a more gallant Army seen in Indostan. 'Tis said, that there were little less than an Hundred thousand Horse, and Twenty thousand Foot, with Four thousand pieces of Cannon, without reckoning the incredible number of Servants, Followers, Victuallers, whom Historians, methinks, do often put into the number of the Combatants, when they speak of those formidable Armies of Three or four hundred thousand men, of which their Books are full. Though this Army was very brave, and strong enough to cut in pieces two or three of such as Aureng-Zebe had, in which there were no more than Thirty Five or Forty thousand men in all, and these tired and harassed by a very long and irksom march, during the height of the Heats; and but a small number of Cannon, in respect of that of Dara. Mean time (which seems hard to believe) there was scarce any Body that pre-saged well for Dara, all knowing, that most of the chief Omrabs had no affection for him, and that all the good Soldiers that were for him, and whom he might confide in, were in the Army of Soliman Chekoub, his Son. And 'twas for this reason, that the most prudent and the most faithful of his Friends, and Chab-Jehan himself, counselled him, not to hazard a Battel: Chab-Jehan offering, as infirm as he was, that he would go into the Field himself, and be carried before Aureng-Zebe, to interpose; which was looked upon as a very good Expedient for Peace, and for accommodating the Affairs of Chab-Jehan. For 'tis certain, that Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakebe, would never have had the boldness to fight against their own Father; and if they should have attempted it, they would have smarted for it, because, besides that the match was not equal, and all the great Omrabs were so affectionate to Chab-Jehan, that they would not have failed to fight resolutely, if they had seen him in the head of the Army; besides this, I say, the Captains themselves of Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakebe, bore great affection and respect to this Prince, whose Creatures they most were; and the whole Army, in a manner, was his. So that in all appearance, not one of them would have presumed to draw his Sword against him, nor he been at the pains of drawing his.

Then they advised Dara, that if he would not hearken to this Expedient, he should at least not precipitate the business, but delay, 'till Soliman Chekoub, who made all haste to join, were come in. Which was also very good counsel, in regard that that Prince was beloved of all, and was lately come home victorious, and had the most faithful and the bravest Soldiers with him. But Dara would never hearken to any Proposition that could be made to him, and he thought on nothing else but to give Battel presently, and to go against Aureng-Zebe in person. And possibly he did not amiss, as to his own Honour and particular Interest, if he could have commanded Fortune, and made things succeed as he contrived them. For the Considerations he had (as he could not forbear now and then to discover) were some such as these:

He looked upon himself as Master of the person of Chab-Jehan; that he could dispose of him as he pleased; that he was also Possessor of all the Treasures and Forces of the Empire; that Sultan Sujah was half ruined; that his two other Brothers, with a weak and tired Army, were come to cast themselves into his hands; that, if he gained the Battel, they could not escape him; that he should all at once be absolute Master, and at the end of all his troubles, and at the height of his wishes, so as no body could contradict him in any thing, or dispute the Crown with him. Whereas if Chab-Jehan should take the Field, all Affairs would be accommodated, his Brothers would return to their Governments, Chab-Jehan, who began to recover his health, would resume the Government as before, and all things would return into their first Channel: That, if he should stay for Soliman Chekoub, his Son, Chab-Jehan might take some design to his disadvantage, or contrive something with Aureng-Zebe; that whatever he could do for gaining the Victory, the Reputation which Soliman Chekoub had purchased, would still give him all the honour of it. And after that, what would not he be capable to undertake, swelled with so much glory and success, and especially being supported, as he was, by the favour and affection of Chab-Jehan, and of the greatest part of the Omrabs? What did he know, whether he would keep any modesty, or any respect for him, and whither his Ambition might not carry him?

These Considerations made Dara resolve to stand out against the counsel of all, and to pursue his Point. And for that purpose, he commanded immediately the whole Army to take the Field, and thereupon came to take leave of Chab-Jehan, who was in the Fort-trefs of Agra. This good old Man was ready to melt in tears, when he embraced him; but withal failed not to represent to him, with a very grave countenance: Well, Dara, since thou art resolved to follow thine own Will, Go, God blefs thee, but remember well these few words: If thou lovest the Battel, take heed of ever coming into my Presence. But this made no great impression upon him; he goeth forth briskly, taketh Horse, and seizeth on the Passage of the River Tchembel, which is about twenty miles from Agra; where he fortified himself, expecting his Enemy. But the subtle and crafty Fakire, who wanted no good Spies, and People that gave him intelligence of all, and who knew that the Passage was there very difficult, took good heed to attempt the forcing it. He came to encamp himself near it, so that from the Camp of Dara one might discover his Tents. But what doth he in the mean time? He inveigles a certain Rebel of Raja, called Chempet, presents him richly, and promiseth him a thousand fine things, if he would let him pass thorough his Territories, that so he might go with speed to gain a certain place, where he knew that the River might be passed on foot with ease. Chempet agreeth, and offers of his own accord, that he would himself attend him, and shew him the way through the Woods and Hills of his Countrey. Aureng-Zebe raised his Camp the same night, without any noise, leaving some of his Tents to amuse Dara, and marching night and day, made such haste, that he was almost as soon on the other side of the River, as Dara could have notice of it. Which obliged Dara to abandon the River there, and to leave all his Fortifications, and to follow his Enemy, who, he was told, did advance with great diligence towards Agra, to gain the River of Gemna, and there without trouble, and at his ease, to enjoy the water, to fortifie, and to fix himself well, and so to expect Dara. The place where he encamped is but five Leagues from Agra, it was formerly called Samonguer, and now Fateabad, which is to say, Place of Victory. A little while after, Dara also came to encamp there, nigh the Bank of the same River, between Agra, and the Army of Aureng-Zebe.

The two Armies were there between three and four days in sight of one another, without fighting. Mean time Chah-Jehan wrote several Letters to Dara, that Soliman Cherkoub was not far off; that he should not precipitate; that he should come near Agra, and chuse an advantageous place to fortifie himself 'till he came. But Dara answered, that before three days were passed, he would bring to him Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakche tyed hand and foot, to do with them what he should think fit. And without expecting any longer, he began at that very hour to put his Army in Battel-Array.

He placed in the Front all his Cannon, causing them to be tyed the one to the other with Chains, to shut the passage to the Cavalry. Behind these Peeces of Cannon, he placed also front-wise a great number of light Camels, on the forepart of the Bodies, whereof they fasten a small Peece, of the bigness of a double Musquet; a Man sitting on the hind-part of the Camel, being able to charge and discharge without lighting. Behind these Camels stood the greatest part of the Musqueteers. Of the rest of the Army, which chiefly consisted in Cavalry, furnish'd with Bows and Arrows, (as ordinarily are the Mogols, that is, at present, White Men, Mahumetans, strangers, as Persians, Turks, Arabians, and Usbecks;) or with a Sword, and a kind of Halt-pike, as commonly are the Ragipous: Of all these, I say, there were made three different Bodies. The right Wing was committed to Calil-ullah-Kan, with thirty thousand Mogols under his Command; for he was made Great Bakche, that is, Great Master of the Cavalry, in the place of Danechmend-Kan, that was afterwards my Agah, who voluntarily resigned this Office, seeing that he was not well-beloved of Dara, for having always highly maintained against him the Interest and Authority of Chah-Jehan. The left Wing was given to Rustam-Kan Dakuy, a very renowned and very valiant Captain, together with the Raja Chatresale, and the Raja Kamseigne Routlé.

On the other side, Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakche put also their Army almost into the same Order; except that in the midst of the Troops of some Omrabs, they had hid some small Field-Peeces, which was, as was said, after the Way and Art of Emir-Jemla, and with no ill effect.

They hardly made use of any more Art, than what hath been now related; only they placed here and there some Men casting Banner, which is a kind of Granado fastened to a stick, that may be cast very far through the Cavalry, and which extremely terrifieth Horses, and even hurts and kills sometimes.

All this Cavalry turns about very easily, and they draw their Arrows with marvellous swiftswiftness; one Man being able to draw six of them, before a Musqueteer can twice discharge his Musquet. The same Cavalry keeps also very close in several Troops under their respective Officers, especially when they are going to fight hand to hand. But after all, I see not, that this way of putting an Army in Array, is any great matter, in comparison of our Armies, when in good order.

All things being thus disposed, the Artillery began to play on both sides; for 'tis always the Cannon that makes the prelude amongst them; and the Arrows were now seen to fly through the Air, when unexpectedly there hapned to fall a Storm of Rain, so violent, that it interrupted the Combat. The Rain ceasing, the Cannon began afresh to roar; and then it was that Dara appeared, who being mounted upon a proud Elephant of Ceilan, commanded that an Onset should be made on all sides; and himself advanced into the midst of the Body of the Cavalry, directly towards the Enemies Artillery, who received him warmly, kill'd store of Men about him, and put into disorder, not only the main Body which he commanded, but also the other Bodies of the Cavalry that followed him. Yet notwithstanding, because he was seen to keep firm upon his Elephant, without any appearance of giving back, and was observed to look every where about him with an undaunted look, and to make signs with his hands to advance and follow him, this disorder soon ceased, every one resuming his Rank, and advancing in the same place with Dara. But he could not reach the Enemy, without receiving another Volley of Cannon-shot, which caused a second and great disorder in his Men, and made a good part of them recoil; yet he, without any change in his Countenance, stood to it, encouraging his Troops, and gave still signs, that they should follow him, and advance with speed without any loss of time. Thus pressing vigorously forward, he forced the Enemies Artillery, broke the Chains, entred into their Camp, and made a Rout in their Camels and Infantry, and in every thing he met with on that side; opening also a good passage to the Cavalry that followed him. Then it was, that the Enemies Cavalry facing him, a fore Combat began. A shower of Arrows filled the Air from both sides, Dara himself putting his hand to that work: But, to say truth, these Arrows do but little Execution; more of them are lost in the Air, or broken on the ground, than hit. The first discharges of Arrows being made, they fought hand to hand with their Sables, peste peste, and the Combat was stoutly maintained on both sides. Dara is still seen to continue firm on his Elephant, encouraging, making a noise, and giving signs on all sides; and at last advancing with so much resolution and force, against all that opposed him in his March, that he overthrew the Cavalry; and made them to retire and run away.

Aureng-Zebe, who was not far from thence, and mounted also on an Elephant, seeing this great disorder, was in great trouble, and laboured with all his might to remedy it; but to no purpose. He made the main Body of his best Cavalry advance, to try whether he could make head against Dara; but it was not long before this Body also was forced to give back, and to retreat in great disorder, whatever Aureng-Zebe could say or do to hinder it. Mean time let us take notice of his courage and resolution: He saw that almost the whole Body of his Army was disordered, and in a flying posture, insomuch that he had not a thousand Men about him that kept their standing; (some told me, that there were scarce five hundred:) He saw, that Dara, notwithstanding the difficulty of the way, which was uneven, and full of holes in divers places, made as if he would rush in upon him: Yet, for all this, he lost no courage, and was so far from being struck with fear, or from retreating, that he stood firmly to it, and called by name most of his Captains that were about him, crying out to them, Delirane Kodabé, (these are his own words,) that is, Courage my old Friends, God is: What hope is there in flying? Know you not, where is our Decan? Kodabé, Kodabé, God is, God is. And that none might doubt of his being undaunted, and that he thought on nothing less than running away, he commanded before them all (oh strange extremity!) that forthwith Chains should be fastned to the feet of his Elephant; and was going to fasten them in good earnest, but that they all declared their courage and resolution, to live and dye with him.

Dara in the interim endeavoured to advance upon Aureng-Zebe, though he was yet at a good distance from him, and though the difficulty of the way embarrassed and retarded him much; he meeting also with some resistance, even from those disordered Horse of the Enemy, that covered all high and low places where he was to march. And this Encounter with Aureng-Zebe was looked upon as the thing, that was to assure Dara of the the Victory, and to decide the Battel. And doubtless, he would have overcome all these difficulties, and Aureng-Zebe, with the small number left him, would not have been able to bid head to this Victorious Army, if Dara had known how to profit of the prize he had in his hands. But here he failed; of which I shall now shew the occasion, and how thereby the Scale was turned to Aureng-Zebe's advantage.

Dara perceived that his left Wing was in great disorder, and he was informed, that Rustam-Kan and Chatresale were killed; that Ramseigne Routlé had too far advanced, that he had indeed forced the Enemy, and made way through the midst of them; but that now he was surrounded every way, and in very great danger. This it was, which made Dara desist from his design of making directly towards Aureng-Zebe, that he might go to succour his left Wing. There at first the Battel was also very sharp, but Dara at last carried it, forcing and routing all, yet so, as that there still remained something that resisted and stopped him. Mean time, Ramseigne Routlé fought with so much courage and vigour as was possible. He wounded Morad-Bakche, and came so near him, that he began to cut the Girdles of his Elephant, to make him fall down; but the valour and good fortune of Morad-Bakche gave not time enough for it. In short, never any Man fought and defended himself more bravely, than Morad-Bakche did on this occasion: All wounded as he was, and pressed by the Ragipous of Ramseigne Routlé, who were round about him, he was not daunted, nor gave way in the least, but knew so well to take his time, that although he was, besides defending himself, to cover with his shield a Son of his, but of seven or eight years of Age, who was sitting on his side, he made an Arrow-shot so luckily at Ramseigne Routlé, that it made him fall dead to the ground.

Dara soon heard the sad News of this Accident; but at the same time he understood also, that Morad-Bakche was in very great danger; the Ragipous fighting furiously, and like Lions, to revenge the death of their Master. And though he saw, on that side the way was very difficult, and that he still found some small Body opposing and retarding him; yet he was determined to rush through to Morad-Bakche: And doubtless this was the best he could do, and that, which was capable to repair the fault he had committed in not doing his business thoroughly with Aureng-Zebe. But his bad fortune kept him from it, or rather, one of the blackest Treacheries that ever was imagined, and the greatest oversight that was ever committed, did cause the entire loss and ruin of Dara.

Calil-ullah-Kan (he that commanded the thirty thousand Mogols, which made the right Wing, and were alone able to defeat the whole Army of Aureng-Zebe) did, whilst Dara and his left Wing fought with so much courage and success, keep off, as idle as if he were not concerned in the fray, not permitting any one of his Horsemen to shoot an Arrow, with a pretence, that they were for a Reserve, and that he had express Order not to fight but in the last extremity. But the true cause was, that he reserved in his breast the rancour of an old Affront, done him by Dara, when he commanded him to be struck. But after all, this Treachery would have done no great mischief, if this infamous Man had contented himself with this first Effect of his Resentment: Behold, how far he carried his rage, and revengefulness! He cut himself off from his main Body, and taking only a few men with him, rid with all possible speed towards Dara, at the same time when he was turning to fall on Morad-Bakche, and being come so near as to make himself be heard, cryed out with all his force; Mobbarack-bad, Hazaret, Salamet, Elhamdul-ella; God save your Majesty, you have obtained the Victory; what will you do any longer upon your Elephant? Is it not enough, that you have exposed your self so long? if the least of those shots, that have been made into your Dais, had reached your Person, what would have become of us? Are there Traitors wanting in this Army? In the Name of God come down quickly and take Horse. What remains more to be done, than to pursue those Run-aways. Let us do so, nor let us suffer that they shoulde escape our hands!

If Dara had had wit enough to discover the cheat, and to consider upon a sudden the consequences of his not appearing any more upon the Elephant, and being no more seen by the whole Army, always eying him, or rather, if he had presently commanded to cut off the Head of this Parasitical Traitor, he had been Master of all. But the good Prince suffered himself to be blinded by these sweet words: He hearkned to this advice, as if it had been very true and very sincere; he descended from his Elephant, and took Horse. But I know not whether there passed one quarter of an hour, but he perceived the Treachery of Calil-ullah-Kan, and repented himself extremely of the great fault he had committed. He looks about him, he seeketh, he asketh where he is; he saith, he is a Traitor, he will kill him. But the perfidious Villain is by this time at a good distance; the occasion is lost. Would it be believed, that as soon as the Army perceived Dara to be no more upon the Elephant, they imagined that there was Treason, that Dara was killed; and all were struck with such a terror, that every one thought on nothing, but how to escape the hands of Aureng-Zebe, and to save himself? What shall I say? All the Army disbands and flyeth. A sudden and strange revolution! He that saw himself just now Victorious, finds himself in a few moments vanquished, abandoned, and obliged to fly himself to save his life. Aureng-Zebe, by holding out firm a quarter of an hour upon his Elephant, seeth the Crown of Indostan upon his Head; and Dara for having come down a little too soon, seeth himself precipitated from the Throne, and the most unfortunate Prince of the World. Thus Fortune taketh pleasure, to make the gain or loss of a Battel, and the decision of a great Empire, depend upon a nothing.

These great and prodigious Armies, 'tis true, do sometimes great things; but when once terror seifeth, and disorder comes among them, what means of stopping the Commotion? 'Tis like a great River broke through its Dams; it must overrun all, without a Remedy. Whence it is, that as often as I consider the condition of such Armies, destitute of good order, and marching like flocks of Sheep, I perswade my self, that, if in these parts one might see an Army of five and twenty thousand men, of those old Troops of Flanders, under the conduct of Monsieur le Prince, or Monsieur de Turcme, I doubt not at all, but they would trample under foot all those Armies, how numerous soever they were. And this it is, that now maketh me not find it any longer strange or incredible, what we are told of ten thousand Greeks; and of fifty thousand Men of Alexander, overcoming six or seven hundred thousand Men of Darius; (if it be true, that there were so many, and that the Historian did not reckon the Servants, and all those numbers of Men; which were to follow the Army, to furnish it with Forrage, Cattle, Corn, and all other necessaries.) Bear only the first brunt, which would be no very difficult thing for us to do; and behold, they are all astonished: Or, do like Alexander, set vigorously upon one place, if that hold not out, (which will be very hard for them to do) you may be sure the work is done; all the rest presently take fright and flight together.

Aureng-Zebe, encouraged by such a wonderful success, is not wanting to turn every stone, to employ skill, dexterity, subtilty, craft, courage, to profit by all the Advantages, which so favourable an occasion puts into his hands. Calil-ullah-Kan is presently with him, offering him his Service, and all the Troops he could be Master of. He, on his side, wants not words of thanks and acknowledgments, nor a thousand fair Promises: But he was very cautious to receive him in his own name; he carried him presently and presented him to Morad-Bakche, who, as we may easily think, received him with open Arms; Aureng-Zebe in the mean time congratulating and praising Morad-Bakche, for having fought so valiantly, and ascribing to him all the honour of the Victory; treating him with the title of King and Majesty before Calil-ullah-Kan, giving him uncommon respect, and doing submissions to him becoming a Subject and Servant. In the interim, he labours night and day for himself, he writeth round about to all the Omrâhs, making sure to day of one, and next day of another. Chah-best-Kan, his Uncle, the great and old Enemy of Dara, by reason of an Affront he had received from him, did the same for him on his part; and as he is the Person who writeth best and subtillest of the Empire of Indostan, so he contributed not a little by his Cabals to the advancement of the Affairs of Aureng-Zebe, making strong Parties every where against Dara.

In the mean time let us still observe the artifice and dissimulation of Aureng-Zebe, Nothing of what he doth, treateth, promiseth, is for himself, or in his own Name; he hath still (forsooth) the design of living as a Fakire: all is for Morad-Bakche, 'tis he that commands; Aureng-Zebe doth nothing; 'tis Morad-Bakche doth all, 'tis he that is designed to be King.

As for the unhappy Dara, he comes with all speed to Agra, in a desperate condition, and not daring to go see Chah-Jehan, remembring, doubtless, those severe words which he let fall, when he took leave of him before the Battel, viz. That he should remember not to come before him, if he were overcome. Yet, for all that, the good old Father sent secretly a trusty Eunuch to him, to comfort him, to assure him of the continuance of his affection, to declare to him his trouble for his misfortune, and to remonstrate to him, that the case was not yet desperate, considering that there was a good Army with Soliman Chékouh, his Son, that he should go to Dehli, where he should find a thousand Horse in the Royal Stables; and that the Governor of the Fortrefs had Order to furnish him with Money and Elephants; for the rest, that he should not go further than he needs must; that he would often write to him: And lastly, that he very well knew how to find out and chastise Aureng-Zebe.

I have been informed, that Dara was then in such a confusion, and sunk so low, that he had not the power to answer a word to the Eunuch, nor the courage to send any one to Chab-Jehan; but that, after having sent several times to Begum-Sabeb, his Sister, he went away at midnight, taking with him his Wife, his Daughters, and his Grand-child Sepe-Chékouh; and that (which is almost incredible) he was attended with not above three or four hundred persons. Let us leave him in his Voyage to Dehli, and stay at Agra, to consider the dexterity and craft, wherewith Aureng-Zebe proceeded to manage Affairs.

He well knew, that Dara, and those of his Party, could yet place some hopes in the victorious Army of Soliman Chékouh, and therefore he resolved to take it from him, or to make it useless to him. To this end, he wrote Letters upon Letters to the Raja Jestsigne, and to Delil-Kan, who were the chief Heads of the Army of Soliman Chékouh, telling them, that there was no hope left for Dara and his Party; that he had lost the Battel; that his whole Army had submitted to him; that all had abandon'd him; that he was fled alone towards Dehli; that he could never escape him, and that Orders were distributed every where to seize on him. And as for Chab-Jehan, that he was in a condition hopeless of recovery; that they should take good care of what they had to do; and if they were Men of understanding, and would follow his fortune, and be his Friends, they should seize on Soliman Chékouh, and bring him to him.

Jestsigne found himself perplexed enough, what he should do, still much apprehending Chab-Jehan and Dara, and more, to lay hands upon a Royal Person, well knowing, that some mischief might therefore fall on him, sooner or later, even from Aureng-Zebe himself. Besides, he knew that Soliman Chékouh had too much courage to let himself be taken after that manner, and that he would rather die in defending of himself. Behold therefore, what he at last resolved! After having taken counsel with Delil-Kan, his great Friend, and after they had renewed to one another the Oath of mutual Fidelity, he went directly to the Tent of Soliman Chékouh, who with great impatience expected him, (for he also had heard the News of the Defeat of Dara his father) and had already divers times sent for him. To him he frankly discovered all things, shewed him the Letter of Aureng-Zebe, told him what course was best for him to take, represented to him the danger he was in; that there was no reason he should trust in Delil-Kan, or in Daoud-Kan, or in the rest of his Army; but that, as soon as he could, he should gain the Mountains of Serenaguer; that that was the best Expedient he could take; that the Raja of that Countrey being in inaccessible places, and not apprehending Aureng-Zebe, would doubtless receive him gladly; and, for the rest, he would soon see how things would go, and be always in a condition to come down from the Mountains, when he should think good.

The young Prince understood well enough by this kind of discourse, that there was no ground to trust henceforth in this Raja, and that there was no more safety for his Person; and that the rather, because he knew that Delil-Kan was altogether devoted to him, and he saw well enough, that there was a necessity to take this course suggested. Whereupon he soon commanded, that his Baggage should be put up to march towards the Mountains. Some of his most affectionate Friends, as a good number of Manseb-Dars, of Sajeds, and others, put themselves in order to attend him; the rest of the Army, altogether astonished, remain'd with the Raja. But that, which was very mean for a great Raja, and a very sordid barbarousness, was, that he and Delil-Kan sent under hand some to fall upon his Baggage, who also took other things, and among them an Elephant laden with Rupies of Gold, which caused a great disorder among those small Troops that followed him; and which was an occasion, that many of them return'd and abandon'd him; and invited also the Country-people to set upon his Men, pillaging them, and even killing some of them: Yet he made a shift to gain the Mountains with his Wife and Children, where the Raja of Serenagur received him with all the honour and civilities he could desire, assuring him, that he was in safety, as much as if he were King of that Countrey, and that he would protect and assist him with all his Forces. In the mean time, behold what hapned on Agra's side.

Three or four days after the Battel of Samonguer, the Victorious Aureng-Zebe, together with Morad-Bakche, came directly to the Gate of the Town into a Garden, which may be a little League distant from the Fortrefs, and sent from thence an able Eunuch, and one of those whom he most confided in, to Chah-Jehan, to salute him with a thousand fair Protestations of his affection and submission; that he was exceedingly sorry for what had passed, and for having been obliged, by reason of the ambition and evil designs of Dara, to proceed to all those extremities; that, for the rest, he rejoiced extremely to hear, that he began to find himself better, and that he was come thither for no other end than to receive his Commands. Chah-Jehan was not wanting to express to the Eunuch much satisfaction, as to the proceedings of Aureng-Zebe, and to receive the Submissions of this Son with all possible appearances of joy; though he saw very well, that matters had been carried too far, and sufficiently knew the reserved and crafty humour of Aureng-Zebe, and his secret passion for Reigning; and that therefore he was not much to be trusted, for all his fair words. And yet notwithstanding he suffers himself to be circumvented, and instead of playing the surest Chart, by using his utmost power, by stirring, by appearing, by causing himself to be carried through the Town, and by assembling all his Omrabs, (for it was yet time to do all this) he goes about to outwit Aureng-Zebe, him that was his Crafts-Master, and attempts to draw him into a snare, wherein he will be found taken himself. He then sends also an Eunuch to this Son, to let him know, that he well understood the ill conduct, and even the incapacity of Dara; that he could not but call to mind the particular inclination he always had and expressed towards him, that he could not doubt of his affection; and lastly, that he should come to see him, and to advise with him what was fit to be done in these disorders; and that he passionately wished to embrace him.

Aureng-Zebe, on his side, saw also well enough, that he was not to trust too much to the words of Chah-Jehan, knowing especially, that Begum-Sahib, his Enemy as well as Sister, was night and day about him, and that 'twas very probable, he acted nothing but by her motion. And he apprehended, that if he should come into the Fortrefs, he might be seized on, and ill-treated; as it was said, that the resolution was indeed taken to do so, and several of those lusty Tartarian Women, which serve in the Seraglio, were armed to set upon him as soon as he should enter. Whatever it be, he would never hazard himself, and yet spread a rumour abroad, that the next day he would go to see his Father Chah-Jehan. But when the day was come, he put it off till another, and so he delayed it from day to day, without ever making the Visit. In the mean time he continued his secret Negotiations and Cabals, and sounded the mind of all the greatest Omrabs, so far, that at last, after he had well and closely laid his Design, and politickly disposed all things for the success thereof, all were amazed to see, that one day, when he had sent Sultan Mahmoud, his eldest Son, to the Fortrefs, under a pretence of seeing Chah-Jehan in his name; this young Prince, bold and undertaking, falls presently on the Guards that were at the Gate, and vigorously driveth all before him, whilst a great number of Men appointed, who were there all ready, did enter with fury, and made themselves Masters of the Walls.

If ever a man was astonished, Chah-Jehan was, seeing that he was fallen into the snare which he had prepared for others, that himself was imprisoned and Aureng-Zebe Master of the Fortrefs. 'Tis said, that he presently sent to sound the mind of Sultan Mahmoud, promising him upon his Crown and upon the Alcoran, that if he would be faithful to him, and serve him in this conjuncture, he would make him King; that he should come presently to see him within, and not lose this occasion: Besides, that it would be an action that would accumulate on him the blessings of Heaven, and an immortal Glory; in regard it would be said for ever, that Sultan Mahmoud had delivered Chah-Jehan his Grandfather out of Prison.

And certainly, if Sultan Mahmoud had been resolute enough to give this stroke, and Chah-Jehan could have come abroad to shew himself to the Town, and to take the Field, no man doubts, but all his great Omrabs would have followed him; nor would Aureng-Zebe himself have had the boldness nor the savageness to fight against his own Father in Person, especially since he must have apprehended, that all the world would have abandon'd him, and possibly Morad-Bakche himself. And 'tis indeed the great fault which Chab-Jehan is observed to have committed after the Battel, and the flight of Dara, not to have come out of the Fortrefs. But yet I have conversed with many, who maintained that Chab-Jehan did prudently in it. For this hath been a question much agitated among the Politicians, and there are no reasons wanting to countenance the Sentiment of the latter sort; who also add, that Men almost always judge of things by the Event; that often very foolish Enterprises have been observed to succeed, and which therefore are approved by all; that if Chab-Jehan had prospered in his design, he would have been esteemed the most prudent and the most able Man in the World; but now being taken, he was nothing but a good old Man, that suffer'd himself to be led by a Woman, his Daughter Begum, which was blinded by her passion, and had the vanity to believe, that Aureng-Zebe would come to see her, that the Bird of it self would fly into the Cage, or at least, that he would never be so bold as to attempt the seizure of the Fortrefs, nor have the power to do so. These same Reasoners maintaining also stily, that the greatest fault that Sultan Mahmoud could possibly commit, was, that he knew not how to take the occasion to assure himself of the Crown, by the rarest and the most generous Action that ever was, to put his Grandfather at liberty, and thus to do himself Right and Justice, as the Sovereign Umpire of Affairs; whereas, as things now stand, he must one day go and dye in Gonaleor. But Sultan Mahmoud (whether it was that he feared his Grandfather would not keep his word with him, or that he should be himself detained within, or that he durst not play tricks with his Father Aureng-Zebe) would never hearken to any thing, nor enter into the Apartment of Chab-Jehan, answering very closely, that he had no order from his Father to go and see him, but that he was by him commanded not to return, without bringing him the Keys of all the Gates of the Fortrefs, that so he might come with all safety to kiss the Feet of his Majesty. There passed almost two whole days before he could resolve to surrender the Keys; during which time, Sultan Mahmoud staid there, unalterable in his resolutions, keeping himself upon his Guard night and day, with all his Troops about him; till at length Chab-Jehan, seeing that all his people that were upon the Guard at the little Gate, little by little disbanded, and that there was no more safety on his side, gave him the Keys, with an order to tell Aureng-Zebe, that he should come presently if he were wise, and that he had most important things to discourse with him about. But Aureng-Zebe was too cunning to commit so gross a fault: On the contrary, he made his Eunuch Etbarkan Governor of the Fortrefs, who presently shut up Chab-Jehan, together with Begum-Sabeb, and all his Women; causing divers Gates to be walled up, that so he might not be able to write or speak to any body, nor go forth out of his Apartment without permission.

Aureng-Zebe in the mean time writ to him a little Note, which he shewed to every body before he sealed it; in which, among other things, he told him with dry expressions, that he knew from good hands, that notwithstanding those great protestations of esteem and affection he made to him, and of contempt he made of Dara, he had, for all that, sent to Dara two Elephants charged with Rupies of Gold, to raise him again, and to re-commence the War; and that therefore, in truth, it was not he that imprisoned him, but Dara, and that he might thank him for it, as the cause of all these misfortunes; and if it had not been for him, he would have come the very first day to him, and paid him all the most dutiful respects he could have looked for from a good Son: That, for the rest, he begged his pardon, and a little patience; as soon as he should have disabled Dara from executing his evil designs, he would come himself and open the Gates to him.

I have heard it said concerning this Note, that Chab-Jehan in very deed, the same night that Dara departed, had sent to him these Elephants laden with Rupies of Gold, and that it was Rauchenara-Begum that found a way to discover it to Aureng-Zebe; as she also had detected to him that Plot, which was laid against him with those Tartarian Women; and that Aureng-Zebe himself had intercepted some Letters of Chab-Jehan to Dara.

I have

I have conversed with others, that maintain there is no such thing, and that this Writing, which Aureng-Zebe shewed to all, was only to cast Sand into the Eyes of the People, and to labour, in some degree, to justify himself in so strange an action, and to devolve the Cause of it upon Chah-Jehan and Dara, as if he had been forced to such proceedings. They are things, which are difficult enough well to discover. However it be, as soon as Chah-Jehan was shut up, almost all the Omrahs were in a manner necessitated to go and make their Court to Aureng-Zebe and Morad-Bakche; and (which is almost incredible) there was not one that had the Courage to stir, or to attempt the least in the behalf of his King, and for him that had made them what they were, and raised them from the dust, and perhaps from slavery it self (which is ordinary enough in that Court) to advance them to Riches and Honour. Yet some few there are, as Danechmend-Kan, and some others, that took no side; but all the rest declared for Aureng-Zebe.

'Tis notwithstanding to be noted what I said, that they were necessitated to do what they did. For 'tis not in the Indies, as in France, or other States of Christendom, where the Grandees and Nobles have large Possessions of Land, and great Revenues, which enables them for a while to subsist of themselves. There they have nothing but Pensions (as I have already touched above) which the King can take away from them at all hours, and thus ruin them in an instant; so that they shall be considered no more than if they never had been, nor have any credit to borrow a farthing.

Aureng-Zebe therefore having thus assured himself of Chah-Jehan, and of all the Omrahs, took what Sums of Money he thought fit out of the Treasury; and then having left Chah-Jest-Kan, his Uncle, Governor of the Town, he went away with Morad-Bakche to pursue Dara.

The day that the Army was to march out of Agra the particular Friends of Morad-Bakche, especially his Eunuch Chah-Abas, who knew, that the excess of civility and respect is ordinarily a sign of imposture, counselled him, that since he was King, and every body treated him with the Title of Majesty, and Aureng-Zebe himself acknowledged him for such, he should let him go to pursue Dara, and stay himself with his Troops about Agra and Debli. If he had followed this counsel, 'tis certain, that he would have embarrassed Aureng-Zebe not a little; but 'twas fatal, that he should neglect so good advice: Aureng-Zebe is too fortunate; Morad-Bakche entirely confideth in his promises, and in the Oaths of Fidelity they had sworn to one another upon the Alcoran. They went away together, and went with the same pace towards Debli.

When they were come to Maturas, three or four small days Journey from Agra, the friends of Morad-Bakche, who perceived something, endeavoured again to persuade him, that he should beware; assuring him that Aureng-Zebe had evil designs, and that beyond all doubt some mischief was upon the Anvil; that they had notice of it from all parts, and that by no means, for that day at least, he should go to see him; that it would be much better to prevent this stroke the soonest it might be; that he was only to forbear going to visit him that day, excusing himself with some Indisposition. But whatsoever could be said to him, he believed nothing of it, his Ears were stopped to all the good advice that was given him, and as if he had been enchanted by the friendship of Aureng-Zebe, he could not hold to go to him that very night, and to stay at Supper with him. As soon as he was come, Aureng-Zebe, who expected him, and had already prepared all things with Mirkan, and three or four of his most intimate Captains, was not wanting in embracements, and in redoubling his Courtship, Civilities and Submissions, insomuch as gently to pass his handkerchief over his face, and to wipe off his sweat and dust, treating him still with the title of King and Majesty. In the mean time the Table is served, they sup; the conversation grows warm, they discourse of various things as they use to do; and at last there is brought a huge Bottle of excellent Chiras Wine, and some other Bottles of Caboul Wine, for a Debauch. Then Aureng-Zebe, as a grave serious Man, and one that would appear a great Mahumetan, and very regular, nimbly riseth from Table, and having with much kindness invited Morad-Bakche, who loved a Glass of Wine very well, and who relished the Wine that was served, scrupled not to drink of it to excess. In a word, he made himself drunk, and fell asleep. This was the thing that was wished; for presently some Servants of his that were there, were commanded away, under a pretence, to let him sleep without making any noise; and then his Zable and Ponyard were taken from about him: But Aureng-Zebe was not long, but came himself and wakened him. He entred into the Chamber, and roughly hit him with his foot, and when he began to open a little his Eyes, he made to him this short and surprizing Reprimand: What means this, said he, What shame and what ignominy is this, that such a King as you are, should have so little temper, as thus to make himself drunk? What will be said both of you and me? Take this infamous Man, this Drunkard, tye him hand and foot, and throw him into that room to sleep out his Wine. No sooner said, but it was executed; notwithstanding all his appeal and out-cry, five or six persons fall upon him, and fetter his hands and feet. The things could not be done, but some of his Men that were thereabout had news of it. They made some noise, and would enter forcibly; but Allah-Couly, one of his chief Officers, and the Master of his Artillery, that had been gained long before, threatned them, and made them draw back. Without any delay, Men were sent through the whole Army to calm this first Commotion, which also might have proved dangerous; they made them believe it was nothing, they having been present, that Morad-Bakebe was only drunk, that in that condition he had railed at every body, and Aureng-Zebe himself, insomuch that there had been a necessity, seeing him drunk and furious, to keep him apart; that the next day they would see him abroad, after he had digested his Wine. In the meantime, the Presents walked about all night amongst the chief Officers of the Army, their Pay was forthwith encreased, they had great Promises made them; and as there was none, that had not long since apprehended some such thing, there was no great wonder to see almost all things quieted the next morning; so that the very next night this poor Prince was shut up in a little close house, such an one as is wont to be placed on Elephants to carry Women, and he was carried directly to Debli into Slimager, which is a little old Fortrefs in the midst of the River.

After that all was thus appeased, except the Eunuch Chah-Abas, who caused difficulty enough, Aureng-Zebe received the whole Army of Morad-Bakebe into his Service, and went after Dara, who marched apace towards Labor, with an intention well to fortifie himself in that place, and thither to draw his Friends. But Aureng-Zebe followed him with so much speed, that he had not time to do any great matter, finding himself necessitated to retreat, and to take the way of Multan, where also he could do nothing considerable, because that Aureng-Zebe, notwithstanding the great heat, marched night and day; insomuch, that to encourage all to make hatte, he sometimes advanced almost all alone two or three Leagues before the whole Army, finding himself often obliged to drink ill water like others, to be content with a crust of dry bread, and to sleep under a Tree, staying for his Army in the midst of the high-way, laying his head on his Shield like a common Souldier. So that Dara found himself constrained to abandon Multan also, that he might avoid being near Aureng-Zebe, whom he was not able to encounter. Here 'tis that the Statesmen of this Countrey have reasoned very diversly: For 'tis said, that if Dara, when he went out of Labor, had cast himself into the Kingdom of Caboul, as he was advised, he would there have found above ten thousand warlick Men, designed against the Augurs, the Persians, and the Usbecs, and for a Guard to that Countrey, the Governor whereof was Mohabet-Kan, one of the most potent and the most ancient of Indostan, and that had never been Aureng-Zebe's Friend; that, besides, he would have been there at the Gate of Persia and Usbec; that he was likely, that there being no want of Money, all that Militia and Mohabet-Kan himself, would have embraced his Party; and that further, he might have drawn assistance, not only from Usbec, but also from Persia, as well as from Honmayon, whom the Persians had restored to his Country against Zaber-Kan, King of the Patans, who had driven him thence. But Dara was too unfortunate to follow so good advice. Instead of that he went towards Scimdy, to cast himself into the Fortrefs of Tatabakar, that strong and famous place, seated in the midst of the River Indus.

Aureng-Zebe seeing him take this way, found it not fit to follow him further off, being extremely glad that he had not taken the way to Caboul. He contented himself to send after him seven or eight thousand Men, under the Conduct of Mir-baba, his Foster-brother, and turned back with the same expedition to the place whence he was come, much apprehending lest any thing should fall out about Agra; lest some or other of those potent Rajah's, as Jessigne, or Jessomseigne, should make an attempt in his absence, to free Chah-Jehan out of Prison; or left Soliman Chékouh, together with the Raja of Serenaguer, should descend from the Hills; or left also Sultan Sujah should approach too near Agra. Behold a little Accident, which one day befell him, for too great precipitation.

When he thus returned from Multan towards Labor, and marched his ordinary swift pace, he saw the Raja Jéssaigne come against him, accompanied with four or five thousand of his Ragipous, in a very good equipage; Aureng-Zebe, who had left his Army behind, and who also knew that this Raja was very affectionate to Chah-Jehan, was sufficiently surprised, as may easily be imagined, fearing lest this Raja should make use of this occasion, and do a Master-piece of State, by seizing on him, to draw Chah-Jehan out of Prison, which at that time was very easie to do. Neither is it known, whether this Raja had not some such design; for he had marched with extraordinary speed, insomuch that Aureng-Zebe had no news of it, believing him yet to be at Dehli. But what may not resolution and presence of mind do? Aureng-Zebe, without any alteration of his Countenance, marched directly towards the Raja, and as far off as he could see him, maketh signs to him with his hands, importing that he should make hast to a nearer approach, crying out to him with a loud voice, Salamed Bached Rajagi, Salamed Bached Babagi, treating him with the Titles of Lord Raja, and Lord Father. When the Raja was come to him; I expected you, said he, with great impatience; the work is done, Dara is lost, he is all alone; I have sent Mir-baba after him, from whom he cannot escape: And for an excess of kindness to him, he took off his Neck-lace of Pearls, and put it about the Neck of this Raja: And the sooner to rid himself handsomely of him, (for he wished him far enough) Go, saith he, with all the expedition you can to Labor, my Army is somewhat tyred; go quickly to attend me there; I apprehend that else something sinister might fall out there; I make you Governor of that place, and put all things into your hands. For the rest, I am exceedingly obliged to you for what you have done with Soliman Chékouh: Where have you left Delil-Kan? I shall find my revenge of him. Make all possible dispatch, Salamed Bached, Farewell.

Dara being arrived at Tata-baker, made Governor of that place a very understanding, gallant, and generous Eunuch, with a very good Garrison of Patans and Sayeds; and for Cannoneers, a good number of Franguis, Portugals, English, French, and Germans, who had followed him out of great hopes he had given them, (for, if his Affairs had prospered and he were become King, we must all have resolved to be Omrabs, as many Franguis as we were.) He there left also the greatest part of his Treasure; he wanted as yet no Gold nor Silver; and staying there but a very few days, he marched away with two or three thousand Men only, descending along the River Indus towards Scindy, and from thence crossing with an incredible celerity all those Territories of the Raja Katche, he arrived in Guzaratte, and came to the Gates of Amadevat. The Father-in-law of Aureng-Zebe, called Chah-Navaze-Kan, was Governor there, with a very good Garrison, able to resist. Yet notwithstanding, whether it was that he was surprised, or that he wanted courage (for although he was of those ancient Princes of Machate, yet he was no great Souldier, though a Man of a very obliging and civil conversation) he did not oppose Dara, but rather received him very honourably, and even managed him afterwards with so much dexterity, that Dara was so simple as to trust himself with him, and to communicate to him his Designs; insomuch as that he shewed him the Letters which he received from the Raja Jéssaigne, and of many other of his Friends, which prepared themselves to come to him; although it proved too true, what every body told him, and his Friends confirmed by Letters, that certainly this Chah-Navaze-Kan would betray him.

Never was any man more surprized than Aureng-Zebe, when he heard that Dara was in Amadevat: For he well knew, that he wanted no Money, and that all his Friends, and all the discontented Party, which was numerous, would not fail to betake themselves by little and little to him: And on the other side, he found it not safe to go and find him out himself in that place, by removing himself so far from Agra and Chah-Jehan, to go and embarase himself in all those Countries of the Rajab's, Jéssaigne, Jéssomseigne, and others, that are in those Provinces. Besides, he apprehended, lest Sultan Sujah should advance with a strong Army, which was already about Elabas; and lest the Raja of Serenaguer should descend from the Hills with Soliman Chékouh: So that he

he was sufficiently perplexed and troubled, not knowing which way to turn. At last he believed it best to leave Dara for a time quiet where he was, and to go thither where his presence and Army was most necessary, which was towards Sultan Sujah, who had already passed the River Ganges at Elabas.

This Sultan Sujah was come to encamp in a little Village called Cadjone, and had conveniently seized himself of a great Talab, or Reservoir of Water, which is there in the way; and Aureng-Zebe came to place himself on the side of a small Torrent, at the distance of a mile and an half from thence, on Agra's side. Between both was a very fair Campagne, very proper for a Battel. Aureng-Zebe was no sooner arrived, but being impatient to end this War, at break of day he went to face Sujah, leaving his Baggage on the other side of the Torrent. He fell upon Sujah with an effort unimaginable. Emir-Jemla, Prisoner of Decan, and who arrived just on the day of the Combat, fearing Dara no more, because his Family was more in safety, did there also lay out all his force, courage, and dexterity. But seeing that Sultan Sujah had well fortified himself, and was accompanied with a very good Artillery, advantageously placed, it was not possible for Aureng-Zebe to force him, nor to make him retreat from thence, so as to make him lose those Waters. On the contrary, he was obliged himself to draw back several times, so vigorously was he repulsed, insomuch that he found himself in great perplexity. Sultan Sujah not being willing to advance too far into the Campagne, nor to remove from that advantageous place where he was, pretending only to defend himself; which was very prudently done. For he foresaw, that Aureng-Zebe could not stay there long, and that in that hot season he would be absolutely obliged to turn back towards the Torrent for the Water; and that, when he should do so he would fall upon his Rear, Aureng-Zebe also foresaw well enough the same thing, and that was the reason why he was so forward and pressing; but behold another more troublesome accident.

In this very time he receiveth intelligence, that the Raja Jessomseigne, who in appearance had accommodated himself with him, was fallen upon his Rear, and plundered his Baggage and Treasure. This News astonished him much, and the more, because he perceived that his Army which had heard of it was thereby frightened, and fallen into disorder. Yet he loses not his judgment for all this; and being well aware, that to turn back was to hazard all, he resolved, as in the Battle of Dara, to bear up the best he could, and to expect with a steady foot all Events. In the mean time, the disorder grew worse and worse in his Army: Sujah, who was resolved to profit of the occasion, taketh his time, and presseth him vigorously. He that led Aureng-Zebe's Elephant is killed with the shot of an Arrow; he leads the Beast as well as he can himself, till another could be had in that Leaders place. Arrows rain upon him; he returns many himself, his Elephant begins to be frightened, and to go back. Behold him now in great extremity, and brought to that point, that one foot of his was out of the seat, as if he meant to cast himself to the ground; and no man knows what in that trouble he had not done, if Emir-Jemla, being nigh, and performing like a great Man as he was, beyond imagination, called to him, in holding up his hand Decan-ku, Decan-ku, where is Decan? This seems to have been the greatest extremity, to which Aureng-Zebe could be reduced. One would have said, 'twas now and here that Fortune had abandon'd him, and there is almost no appearance of a possibility to escape. But his good Fortune is stronger than all that: Sultan Sujah must be routed, and take flight, like Dara, to save his life: Aureng-Zebe must remain Victorious, carry away the Bell, and be King of the Indies.

We are to remember the Battel of Samonguer, and that, in appearance, slight accident which ruined Dara: 'Tis the same over-sight, or rather the same Treason, which is now destroying Sultan Sujah. One of his chief Captains, Allab-verdi-Kan, who (as some say) had been gained, useth the same Artifice that Calil-ullah-Kan had employed towards Dara; though there were some who believed, that there was no malice in the case, and that it was a meer piece of Flattery. For seeing that the whole Army of Aureng-Zebe was in disorder, he ran towards Sultan Sujah, telling him the same thing, that Calil-ullah Kan did to Dara, and begging of him with folded hands, that he would stay no longer in so great danger upon his Elephant. Come down, said he, in the name of God, mount on Horse-back, God hath made you Sovereign of the Indies, let us pursue those Fugitives, let not Aureng-Zebe escape us.

But not to stay long from declaring the strange Fortune of Aureng-Zebe, and the incredible conjuncture that recovers his desperate condition; Sultan Sujah, not more considerate than Dara, commits the same Fault; and he was no sooner come down from his Elephant, but his Army seeing him no more, was struck with a terror, believing there was Treason, and that he was either taken or slain. Whereupon they disbanded, without any more ado, as Dara's Army did in the Battel of Samonguer; and the Defeat was so great, that the Sultan was fortunate in that he could save himself.

Jessomseigne hearing this unexpected News, and perceiving it was not very safe for him to tarry there, contented himself with the Spoil he had got, and with all diligence marched streight to Agra, thence to pass to his Countrey. The noise was already in Agra, that Aureng-Zebe had lost the Battel; that he was taken, together with Emir-Jemla, and that Sultan-Sujah brought them both Prisoners. Intomuch, that Chah-Jehan, who was Governor of the Town, and Uncle to Aureng-Zebe, seeing Jessomseigne, whose Treachery he had heard of, at the Gates, and despairing of his Life, had taken into his hand a Cup of Poyson to make himself away, and had, as they say, in very deed swallowed it, if his Women had not fallen upon him, and hindred him: So that 'tis thought, if Jessomseigne had had the wit and courage to stay longer in Agra, if he had threatned boldly, and promised and acted vigorously for the freedom of Chah-Jehan, he might have drawn him out of Prison; so much the more easily, because all Agra was for two whole days in that belief, that Aureng-Zebe was overcome. But Jessomseigne, who knew how all things went, and who durst not long stay there, nor attempt any thing, did nothing but pass, returning with all speed homewards.

Aureng-Zebe, who apprehended mischief from Agra, and fear'd lest Jessomseigne should undertake something for Chah-Jehan, was not long in the pursuit after Sultan Sujah; he turn'd short for Agra with his whole Army, where he stay'd a good while, giving order for all things. Mean time he received intelligence, that Sultan Sujah had not lost many Men in his being routed, for want of farther pursuit; that also from the Lands of the Raja's, which are in those quarters, on the right and left of Ganges, he raised great Forces, upon the score of the reputation he had of being very rich, and very liberal, and that he fortified himself in Elabas, that important and famous Passage of Ganges, which, with its Fortrefs, is the first In-let into Bengale. And then he considered also, that he had about him two Persons, which indeed were very capable to serve him, Sultan Mahmoud his eldest Son, and Emir-Jemla; but he well knew, that those who have done good service to their Prince, grow often insolent, in the belief, that all is due to them, and that they cannot be recompenced enough. He perceived already, that the former of them began very much to emancipate himself, and that every day he became more arrogant, for having seized on the Fortrefs of Agra, and by that means had broken all the Designs which Chah-Jehan could have formed. And as to the latter, he knew indeed the force of his Understanding, his Conduct, and Valour; but that was the very thing which made him apprehend him the more: For knowing that he was very rich, that his Reputation was great, that he passed for the First Mover in Affairs, and for the ablest Man in all the Indies, he doubted not, but that after the Example of Sultan Mahmoud, he entertain'd himself with big hopes. All this certainly would have been able to perplex an ordinary Spirit, but Aureng-Zebe found a Remedy to all. He knew to remove them both with so much prudence, and even with so much handsomness, that neither of them found any cause to complain of it. He sent them both against Sultan Sujah with a puissant Army, letting Emir secretly know, that the Government of Bengale, which is the best quarter of Indostan, was design'd for him, to hold it during his life, and for his Son after his decease; and that thereby he would begin to express to him his acknowledgments for the great Services he had done him; and that therefore it belonged only to him to defeat Sujah, and that as soon as he should have compassed it, he would make him Mir-ul Omrahs, which is the first and the most honourable place of Indostan, and no less than the Prince of the Omrahs.

To Sultan Mahmoud his Son, he said only these few words: Remember that thou art the Eldest of my Children, that 'tis for thy self thou goest forth to fight; that thou hast done much, but yet nothing, if thou overcomest not Sujah, who is our greatest and powerfullst Enemy; I hope, God assisting me, to be soon Master of the rest.

With these words he dismissed them both, with ordinary Honours, that is, with rich Vests, some Horses and Elephants gallantly harnessed; making in the mean time Emir-Jemla to consent, that his only Son, Mahmet Emir-Kan, should stay with him for a good Education, or rather for a Pledge of his Fidelity; and Sultan Mahmoud, that his Wife should remain in Agra (which was the Daughter of the above-mention'd King of Golkonda) as too troublesome a thing in an Army, and in such an Expedition.

Sultan Sujah, who was always in the apprehension, lest the Raja's of the lower Bengale, which he had ill treated, should be raised against him, and who feared nothing more than to have to do with Emir-Jemla, had no sooner received this News, but apprehending that the passage to Bengale would be obstructed, and that Emir would pass in some other place the River Ganges, either lower or higher than Elabas, raised his Camp, and went down to Benares and Patna, whence he betook himself to Mogiere, a small Town seated upon the Ganges, a place commonly call'd the Key of the Kingdom of Bengale, being a kind of Streight between the Mountains and the Woods, which are not far from thence. He thought fit to stay in that place, and there to fortifie himself; and for greater safety, he caused a great Trench to be made, which I have seen, passing that way some years after, from the Town and River unto the Mountain, being well resolved there to attend Emir-Jemla, and to dispute that passage with him. But he was sufficiently astonish'd, when he was told, that the Troops of Emir, which slowly descended along the River Ganges, were certainly for nothing but to amuse him; that himself was not there; that he had gained the Raja's of those Mountains, which are on the right hand of the River; and that he and Sultan Mahmoud marched apace over their Lands with all the Flower of the Army, drawing straight to Rage-Mehalle, to intercept him: So that he was constrained to quit, as soon as he could, his Fortifications; yet notwithstanding he made so much haste, that though he was obliged to follow those windings, which the River Ganges on that side maketh towards the left hand, he prevented Emir by some days, and arrived first at Rage-Mehalle, where he had time to fortifie himself; because Emir having heard this News, took his March to the left hand towards Ganges, through very ill ways, there to expect his Troops, which came down with the Body of the Artillery and the Baggage along the River. As soon as all was come, he went to attack Sultan Sujah, who defended himself very well for five or six days; but seeing that the Artillery of Emir, which played incessantly, ruined all his Fortifications, which were made but of sandy Earth and Fagots, and that he could not but with much difficulty make resistance in that place, besides that the Season of the Rain began, he retired himself, at the favour of the Night, leaving behind two great Peeeces of Cannon. Emir durst not follow him in the night, for fear of some Ambush, putting off the pursuit 'till the next morning: But Sujah had the good luck, that at the break of day there began to fall a Rain, which lasted above three days; so that Emir could not only stir out of Rage-Mehalle, but saw himself obliged to pass the Winter there, by reason of the excessive Rains in that Countrey, which render the ways so troublesome for more than four Months, viz. July, August, September, and October, that the Armies cannot possibly march. And hereby Sultan Sujah had the means to retire himself, and to chuse what place he would, having time enough to fortifie his Army, and to send out of the inferiour Bengale for many Peeeces of Cannon, and a good number of Portugals; that were retired thither, because of the great fertility of the Countrey: For he much courted all those Portugal Fathers, Missionaries, that are in that Province, promising them no less than that he would make them all rich, and build Churches for them wheresoever they would. And they were indeed capable to serve him, it being certain, that in the Kingdom of Bengale there are to be found no less than eight or nine Thousand Families of Frangis, Portugals, and these either Natives or Mesticks.

But Sultan Mahmoud, who, for the reason above-mentioned, was grown fierce, and aspired, perhaps, to greater things than at that time he ought, did pretend to command the Army absolutely, and that Emir-Jemla should follow his Orders, letting also from time to time fall insolent words in reference to his Father Aureng-Zebe, as if he were obliged to him for the Crown, and uttering Expressions of Contempt and Threat against Emir-Jemla; which caused great coldness betwixt them two, which lasted a pretty while, until Sultan Mahmoud understood, that his Father was very much dissatisfied with his conduct: And apprehending, lest Emir had order to seize on his person, he went away to Sultan Sujah, accompanied with a very small number, and to him he made great promises, and swore Fidelity. But Sujah, who feared Aureng-Zebe and Emir-Jemla's snares, could not trust him, having always an Eye upon his Actions, without giving him any considerable Command; which he so disgusted, that some months after, not knowing what would become of him, he left Sultan Sujah, and returned to Emir, who received him well enough, assuring him, that he would write in his behalf to Aureng-Zebe, and do his utmost to make him forget that fault.

I think fit here to take notice, on the by, of what many have told me, viz. That this Escape of Sultan Mabmond was altogether made by the Artifices of Aureng-Zebe, who cared not much to hazard this Son of his to try to destroy Sujah, and who was glad enough, that whatever the Event were, he might have a specious pretence to put him in a place of surety. However it be, he afterwards shew'd himself much dissatisfied with him, and wrote to him a severe Letter, in which he enjoin'd him to return to Dehli, but giving order in the mean time, that he should not come so far: For he no sooner had passed the River Ganges, but he met with Troops that stopt him, and put him up in a small Chair, (as was done to Morad-Bakche) and carried him to Goualeor, whence 'tis thought he will never be set at liberty: Aureng-Zebe by this means freeing himself from great perplexity; who then also let his second Son, Sultan Mazum, know, that the point of Reigning is so delicate a thing, that Kings must be jealous even of their own shadow; adding, that if he be not discreet, the like may befall him what had befallen his Brother, and that he ought to think Aureng-Zebe was not a Man, that would suffer that to be done to himself, what Chab-Jehan did to his Father Jehan-Guyre, and what he had also lately seen done to Chab-Jehan.

And indeed we may on this occasion say, that if this Son continue to behave himself as he hath done hitherto, Aureng-Zebe will have no cause to suspect him, and to be dissatisfied with him: For no Slave can be more tractable, and Aureng-Zebe himself never appear'd more careless of Greatness, nor more given to Devotion than he: Yet I have known Men of Parts, who believed, that he is not so in good earnest, but by superlative policy and craft, like that of his Father, which we may have the proof of in time.

Whilst all these things were thus transacted in Bengale, and that Sultan Sujah resisted the best he could the Forces of Emir-Jemla, passing now on one side of the River Ganges, of a Channel, or some other River, (for that Countrey is full of them) then on the other; Aureng-Zebe kept himself about Agra, going to and fro; and at length, after he had also sent Morad-Bakche to Goualeor, he came to Dehli, where in good earnest he took upon him publickly to act the King, giving order for all Affairs of the Kingdom, and especially thinking on means to catch Dara, and to get him out of Guzaratte, which was a very hard thing, for the Reasons already mentioned. But the great good Fortune, and the singular dexterity of Aureng-Zebe soon drew him thence, which now follows next to be related.

Jessomseigne, who had retired himself to his Countrey, and made the best of what he had taken in the Battel of Kadjoue, raised a strong Army, and wrote to Dara, that he should come to Agra as soon as he could, and that he would join with his Forces. Dara, who had by this time set on foot a pretty numerous Army, (though it consisted, for the most part, but of gathered people) and who hoped, that approaching to Agra, many of his old Friends, seeing him with Jessomseigne, would not fail to join with him also, immediately leaveth Amadevad, and marcheth with great speed to Asmire, seven or eight days journey from Agra. But Jessomseigne kept not his word with him: The Raja Jessaigne interposed to make his peace with Aureng-Zebe, and to fasten him to his Party; or, at least, to hinder his design, which was capable to ruine himself, and to make all the Raja's rise; and wrote to him several Letters, giving him to understand the great danger he went to expose himself to, by espousing a Party in that Extremity, as that of Dara's was; that he should well consider what he was going to do; that he went about wholly to destroy himself, and all his whole Family; that Aureng-Zebe would never forgive him; that he was a Raja as himself; that he should think on sparing the blood of the Ragipous; that if he thought to draw the Raja's to his Party, he would find those that would hinder him from it. In a word, that it was a business which concern'd all the Gentry of Indostan, and exposed them to danger, if way were given to kindle a Fire, which would not be extinguish'd at pleasure. And lastly, if he would leave Dara to himself, Aureng-Zebe would forget all that had passed, and present sent him with all he had taken, and give him that very instant the Government of Guzaratte, which would be very convenient for him, that Countrey being near his Lands; that he could be there in full liberty and safety, and as long as he pleased, and that himself would be Caution for all. In a word, this Raja acted his part so well, that he made Jessomseigne return to his Land, whilst Aureng-Zebe approached with his whole Army to Asmire, and encamped in the sight of that of Dara.

And now what could this poor Prince Dara do? He seeth himself abandoned, and frustrated of his hopes. He considers, that to turn back safe to Amadevad was impossible, in regard that it was a March of Thirty and five days; that it was in the heat of Summer; that water would fail him; that they were all the Lands of Raja's, Friends or Allies of Jesseigne or Jessomseigne; that the Army of Aureng-Zebe, which was not harassed like his, would not fail to follow him. 'Tis as good, saith he, to perish here; and although the Match be altogether unequal, let us venture all, and give Battel once more. But alas! what does he mean to do? He is not only abandoned by all, but he hath yet with him Chah-Navaze-Kan, whom he trusts, and who betrays him, and discovers all his Designs to Aureng-Zebe. 'Tis true, that Chah-Navaze-Kan was punish'd for his Perfidiousness, and kill'd in the Battel; whether it was by the hands of Dara himself, as many told me, or (which is more probable) by some of Aureng-Zebe's Army, who being secret Partisans of Dara, found means to get to him, and to dispatch him, fearing lest he should discover them, and have some knowledge of the Letters they had written to Dara. But what did it benefit him at that time, that Chah-Navaze-Kan was dead? Dara should have sooner follow'd the advice of his Friends, and never have confided in him.

The Fight began between Nine and Ten of the Clock in the morning: Dara's Artillery, which was very well placed on a little Eminency, was loud enough; but, as was said, most of the Peeeces without Bullets; so was he betray'd by all! 'Tis needless to relate the other Particulars of this Battel; it was properly not a Battel, but a Rout. I shall only say, that hardly the Onset was begun, but Jesseigne was near and in sight of Dara, to whom he sent word, that he should flie presently, unless he would be taken. So that this poor Prince, being altogether surpris'd, was constrained to run away instantly, and with so much disorder and precipitation, that he had not leisure to put up his Baggage. It was no small matter, that he was able to get away with his Wife, and the rest of his Family. And 'tis certain, that if the Raja-Jesseigne would have done what he could, he could never have escaped; but he always had a respect to the Royal Family; or rather, he was too crafty and politick, and had too great forecast, to venture to lay hands on a Prince of the Blood.

This unfortunate Prince, deserted by almost all, and finding himself accompanied but of Two thousand Men at most, was forced in the hottest of Summer to cross, without Tents or Baggage, all those Countries of the Raja's, that are almost from Asmire to Amadevad. Mean time the Koullis, which are the Countrey People, and the worst of all the Indies, and the greatest Robbers, follow him night and day, rifle and kill his Soldiers, with so much cruelty, that no Man could stay Two hundred Paces behind the Body, but he was presently stripp'd naked, or butcher'd upon the least resistance. Yet notwithstanding, Dara made shift to get near Amadevad, when he hoped, that the next day, or soon after, he should enter into the Town to refresh himself, and to try once more to gather again some Forces: But all things fall out contrary to vanquished and unfortunate Men.

The Governor, whom he had left in the Castle of Amadevad, had already received both menacing and promising Letters from Aureng-Zebe, which made him lose Courage, and incline to that side; insomuch that he wrote to Dara, forbidding him to come nearer, if he did, he would find the Gates shut, and all in Arms.

Three days before I met this unhappy Prince, by a strange Accident, when he oblig'd me to follow him, having no Physician about him; and the Night before that he received this News from the Governor of Amadevad, he did me the favor to make me come into the Karavan-Serrak where he was, fearing lest the Koullis should assassinate me: And (what is hard enough to believe in Indostan, where the Grande'es especially are so jealous of their Wives) I was so near to the Wife of this Prince, that the Cords of the Kanates, or Wind screen, which enclosed them, (for they had not so much as a poor Tent) were fastned to the wheels of my Chariot. I relate this circumstance by the by only, to shew the extremity Dara was reduced to.

When

When these Women heard this sad News (which was at the break of day, as I well remember) they broke out upon a sudden into such strange cries and lamentations, that they forced tears from ones Eyes. And now behold all was in an unexpressible confusion: Every one looks upon his Neighbor, and no body knows what to do, or what will become of him. Soon after we saw Dara come forth, half dead, now speaking to one, then another, even to the meanest Soldiers. He seeth all astonish'd, and ready to abandon him. What counsel? whither can he go? he must be gone instantly. You may judge of the extremity he must needs be in, by this small accident I am going to mention. Of three great Oxen of Guzaratte, which I had for my Chariot, one died the Night before, another was dying, and the third was tyred out, (for we had been forced to march for three days together, almost night and day, in an intolerable heat and dust:) Whatever Dara could say or command, whether he alledged it was for himself, or for one of his Women that was hurt in her Leg, or for me; he could not possibly procure for me, whether Ox, or Camel, or Horse: So that he was obliged, to my good fortune, to leave me there. I saw him march away, and that with tears in his Eyes, accompanied with four or five hundred Cavaliers at most, and with two Elephants, that were said to be laden with Gold and Silver; and I heard them say, that they were to take their March towards Tatabakar; for he had no other Game to play, though even that seem'd in a manner impossible, considering the small number of People left him, and the great sandy Deserts to be waded through in the hottest season, most of them without water fit to drink. And indeed most of those that follow'd him, and even divers of his Women, did there perish, either of drought, or the unwholsom waters, or the tiresom ways and ill food; or lastly, because stripped by the Koullis above-mention'd. Yet notwithstanding all this, Dara made hard shift to get to the Raja Katche; unhappy even herein, that he perish'd not himself in this March.

This Raja at first gave him a very good Reception, even so far as to promise him assistance with all his Forces, provided he would give his Daughter in marriage to his Son. But Jesseigne soon wrought as much with this Raja, as he had done with Jessomsseigne; so that Dara one day seeing the kindness of this Barbarian, cooled upon a sudden, and that consequently his Person was in danger there, he betakes himself to the pursuit of his Expedition to Tatabakar.

To relate how I got away from those Robbers, the Koullis, in what manner I moved them to compassion, how I saved the best part of my small Treasure, how we became good Friends by the means of my Profession of Physick, my Servants (perplexed as well as my self) swearing that I was the greatest Physician of the World, and that the People of Dara, at their going away, had ill treated me, and taken from me all my best things: How, after having kept me with them seven or eight days, they had so much kindness and generosity, as to lend me an Ox, and to conduct me so far, that I was in sight of Amadevad: And lastly, how from thence after some days I returned to Debli, having lighted on an occasion to go with a certain Omrah passing thither; in which Journey I met from time to time, on the way, with Carcasses of Men, Elephants, Oxen, Horses, and Camels, the remainder of that unfortunate Army of Dara. These are things, I say, I must not insist upon to describe them.

Whilst Dara advanced towards Tatabakar, the War continues in Bengale, and much longer than was believed, Sultan Sujah putting forth his utmost, and playing his last Game against Emir-Jemla: Yet this did not much trouble Aureng-Zebe, who knew 'twas a great way between Bengale and Agra, and was sufficiently convinced of the prudence and valor of Emir-Jemla. That which disquieted him much more was, that he saw Soliman Chekoub so near (for from Agra to the Mountains 'tis but eight days Journey) whom he could not master, and who perpetually alarm'd him by the rumors that went continually about, as if he were coming down the Mountains with the Raja. 'Tis certainly very hard to draw him thence: But behold how he manages the matter to compass it.

He maketh the Raja Jesseigne write one Letter after another to the Raja of Serenaguer, promising him very great things, if he would surrender Soliman Chekoub to him, and menacing War at the same time, if he should obstinately keep him. The Raja answers, That he would rather lose his Estate, than do so unworthy an Action. And Aureng-Zebe, seeing his resolution, taketh the Field, and marcheth directly to the foot of the Hills, Hills, and with an infinite number of Pike-men causeth the Rocks to be cut, and the passage to be widen'd. But the Raja laughs at all that; neither hath he much cause to fear on that side. Aureng-Zebe may cut long enough, they are Mountains inaccessible to an Army, and stones would be sufficient to stop the Forces of four Indostans; so that he was constrained to turn back again.

Dara in the mean time approacheth to the Fortrefs of Tatabakar, and when he was but two or three days journey off, he received News, that Mir-baba, who had long held it besieged, had at length reduced it to extremity: As I afterwards learned of our French, and other Franguis that were there, a pound of Rice and Meat having cost there above a Crown, and so of other Victuals in proportion: Yet the Governour held out; made Sallies, which extremly incommoded the Enemy; and shew'd all possible prudence, courage and fidelity; deriding the endeavours of the General, Mir-baba, and all the menaces and promises of Aureng-Zebe.

And this also I learned afterwards of my Country-men, the French, and of all those other Franguis that were with him; who added, that when he heard Dara was not far off, he redoubled his liberalities, and knew so well to gain the hearts of all his Souldiers, and to encourage them to do bravely, that there was not one of them, that was not resolved to fall out upon the Enemy, and to hazard all to raise the Siege, and to make Dara enter; and that he also knew so well to cast fear and terrour into the Camp of Mir-baba, by sending Spies about very cunningly to assure, that they had seen Dara approach with great resolution, and very good Forces; that if he had come, as was believed he would do every moment, the Army of the Enemy was for disbanding upon his appearance, and even in part to go over to him. But he is still too unfortunate, to undertake any thing prosperously. Believing therefore, that to raise the Siege with such an handful of Men as he had, was impossible; he did deliberate to pass the River Indus, and to endeavour to get into Persia; although that also would have had mighty difficulties and inconveniencies, by reason of the Desarts, and the small quantity of good waters in those parts; besides, that upon those Frontiers there are but mean Rajas and Patans, who acknowledge neither the Persian nor the Mogol. But his Wife did very much dissuade him from it, for this weak reason, that he must, if he did so, expect to see his Wife and Daughter Slaves of the King of Persia; that that was a thing altogether unworthy of the Grandeur of his Family, and 'twas better to die, than to undergo this Infamy.

Dara, being in great perplexity, remembred, that there was thereabout a certain Patan, powerful enough, called Gion-Kan, whose Life he had formerly saved twice, when Chah-Jehan had commanded he should be cast under the feet of an Elephant, for having rebelled divers times: He resolved to go to him, hoping that he could give him sufficient Succours to raise the Siege of Tatabakar; making account, that thence he would take his Treasure, and that going from thence, and gaining Kandahar, he could cast himself into the Kingdom of Caboul, having great hopes of Mohabet-Kan, who was Governour of it, because he was both potent and valiant, well beloved of his Country, and had obtained this Government by his (Dara's) favour. But his Grandchild, Sepe-Chekoub, yet but very young, seeing his design, cast himself at his Feet, intreating him for God's sake, not to enter into the Country of that Patan. His Wife and Daughter did the same, remonstrating to him, that he was a Robber, a revolted Governour, that he would infallibly betray him; that he ought not to stand upon the raising of the Siege, but rather endeavour to gain Caboul, that the thing was not impossible, forasmuch as Mir-baba was not like to quite the Siege to follow him, and to hinder him from getting thither.

Dara, being carried head-long by the force of his unhappy Destiny, rejected this counsel, and would hearken to nothing of what was proposed to him, saying, as was true, that the March would be very difficult, and very dangerous; and maintaining always, that Gion-Kan would not be so mean, as to betray him, after all the good he had done him. He departed, notwithstanding all that could be said to him, and went to prove, at the price of his Life, That no trust is to be given to a wicked Man.

This Robber, who at first believed that he had numerous Troops following him, gave him the fairest reception that could be, and entertained him with very great kindness and civility in appearance, placing his Souldiers here and there among his Subjects, with a strict order to treat them well, and to give them what refreshments the Country afforded: But when he found that he had not above two or three hundred Men in all, he quickly shew'd what he was. It is not known, whether he had not received some Letters from Aureng-Zebe, or whether his avarice had not been tempted by some Mules said to be laden with Gold; which was all that could be saved hitherto, as well from the hands of Robbers, as of those that conveyed it. Whatever it be, on a certain morning, when no body looked for any such thing, all being taken up with the care of refreshing themselves, and believing all to be safe; behold this Traitor, who had bestir'd himself all night to get armed Men from all parts, fell upon Dara and Sepe-Chekoub, killed some of their Men that stood up to defend themselves; forgot not to seize on the loads of the Mules, and of all the Jewels of the Women; made Dara to be tyed fast upon an Elephant, commanding the Executioner to sit behind, and to cut off his head upon the least sign given, in case he should be seen to resist, or that any one should attempt to deliver him. And in this strange posture he was carried to the Army before Taba-bakar, where he put him into the hands of Mir-baba, the General, who caused him to be conducted in the company of this same Traitor to Labor, and thence to Debli.

When he was at the Gates of Debli, it was deliberated by Aureng-Zebe, whether he should be made to pass through the midst of the City, or no, to carry him thence to Gonaleor. Many did advise, that that was by no means to be done; that some disorder might arise; that some might come to save him; and besides, that it would be a great dishonour to the Family Royal. Others maintained the contrary, viz. That it was absolutely necessary he should pass through the Town, to astonish the World, and to shew the absolute Power of Aureng-Zebe, and to disabuse the People, that might still doubt, whether it were himself, as indeed many Omrabs did doubt; and to take away all hopes from those, who still preserved some affection for him. The Opinion of these last was followed; he was put on an Elephant, his Grand-child, Sepe-Chekoub, at his side; and behind them was placed Bhadur-Kan, as an Executioner. This was none of those brave Elephants of Ceilan or Pegu, which he was wont to ride on, with gilt Harness and embroidered Covers, and Seats with Canopies very handsomely painted and gilt, to defend themselves from the Sun: It was an old Caitiff Animal, very dirty and nasty, with an old torn Cover, and a pitiful Seat, all open. There was no more seen about him, that Necklace of big Pearls, which those Princes are wont to wear, nor those rich Turbants and Vests embroidered. All his Dress was a Vest of course Linnen, all dirty, and a Turbant of the same, with a wretched Scarf of Kachimere over his head, like a Varlet; his Grand-son, Sepe-Chekoub, being in the same equipage. In this miserable posture he was made enter into the Town, and to pass through the greatest Merchant-streets, to the end that all the People might see him, and entertain no doubt any more whether it was he.

As for me, I fancied we went to see some strange Massacre, and was astonish'd at the boldness of making him thus pass through the Town; and that the more, because I knew that he was very ill guarded, neither was I ignorant, that he was very much beloved by the lower sort of people, who at that time exclaimed highly against the cruelty and tyranny of Aureng-Zebe, as one that kept his Father in prison, as also his own Son Sultan Mahmoud, and his Brother Morad-Bakche. I was well prepar'd for it, and with a good Horse and two good Men I went, together with two others of my Friends, to place my self in the greatest street, where he was to pass. But not one Man had the boldness to draw his Sword, only there were some of the Fakires, and with them some poor people, who seeing that infamous Gion-Kan ride by his side, began to rail and throw stones at him, and to call him Traitor. All the Shops were ready to break for the crowd of Spectators, that wept bitterly; and there was heard nothing but loud Out-cries and Lamentations, Invectives, and Curses, heaped on Gion-Kan. In a word, Men and Women, great and small (such is the tenderness of the hearts of the Indians) were ready to melt into tears for compassion; but not one there was that durst stir to rescue him. Now after he had thus passed through the Town, he was put into a Garden called Heider-Abad.

There were not wanting to tell Aureng-Zebe, how the People at this sight had lamented Dara, and cursed the Patan, that had deliver'd him; and how the same was in danger to have been stoned to death, as also that there had been a great apprehension of some sedition and mischief. Hereupon another Council was held, whether he

he should indeed be carried to Gonaleor, as had been concluded before; or whether it were not more expedient to put him to death, without more ado? Some were of opinion; that he should go to Gonaleor with a strong Guard, that that would be enough; Danechmend-Kan, though Dara's old Enemy, insinuating much upon that. But Rauchenara-Begum, in pursuance of her hatred against this Brother of hers, pushed Aureng-Zebe to make him away, without running the danger there was in sending him to Gonaleor; as also did all his old Enemies, Galilullah-Kan, and Chah-best-Kan, and especially a certain Flatterer, a Physician, who was fled out of Persia, first called Hakim-Daoud, and afterwards being become a great Omrah named Takarrub-Kan: This Villain boldly rose up in a full assembly, and cryed out, that it was expedient for the safety of the State to put him to death immediately, and that the rather, because he was no Mussulman; that long since he was turn'd Kafire, Idolater, without Religion, and that he would charge the Sin of it upon his own head: Of which imprecation he soon after felt the smart; for within a short time he fell into disgrace, and was treated like an infamous Fellow, and dyed miserably. But Aureng-Zebe, carried away by these instances and motives, commanded that he should be put to death, and that Sepe-Chekoub, his Grand-child, should be sent to Gonaleor.

The Charge of this Tragical Execution was given to a certain Slave, call'd Nazer, that had been bred by Chah-Jehan, and was known to have been formerly ill treated by Dara. This Executioner, accompanied with three or four Parricides more, went to Dara, who was then himself dressing some Lentils with Sepe-Chekoub his Grandchild. He no sooner saw Nazer, but cryed out to Sepe-Chekoub, My dear Son, behold those that come to kill us! laying hold at the same time of a small Knife, which was all the Arms that were left him. One of these Butchers immediately fell upon Sepe-Chekoub; the others, upon the arms and legs of Dara, throwing him to the ground, and holding him under, 'till Nazer cut his throat. His Head was forthwith carried to the Fortrefs of Aureng-Zebe, who presently commanded it to be put in a dish, and that water should be fetch'd; which when brought, he wiped it off with an Handkerchief, and after he had caused the Face to be washed clean, and the blood done away, and was fully satisfied that it was the very head of Dara, he fell a weeping, and said these words; Ah Bed-Bakt! Ah unfortunate Man! Take it away, and bury it in the Sepulchre of Houmayon.

At night, the Daughter of Dara was brought into the Seraglio, but afterwards sent to Chah-Jehan, and Begum-Sahib, who asked her of Aureng-Zebe. Concerning Dara's Wife, she had ended her days before at Labor: She had poyson'd her self, foreseeing the extremities she was falling into, together with her Husband. Sepe-Chekoub was sent to Gonaleor. And after a few days, Gion-kan was sent for, to come before Aureng-Zebe in the Assembly: To him were given some Presents, and so he was sent away; but being near his Lands, he was rewarded according to his desert, being killed in a Wood. This barbarous Man not knowing, or not considering, that if Kings do sometimes permit such Actions for their Interest, yet they abhor them, and sooner or later revenge them.

In the mean time, the Governour of Tatabakar, by the same Orders that had been required of Dara, was obliged to surrender the Fortrefs. It was indeed upon such a composition as he would have, but it was also with an intention not to keep word with him. For the poor Eunuch, arriving at Labor, was cut in pieces, together with those few Men he had then with him, by Kalil-ullah-kan, who was Governour thereof. But the reason of the non-observance of the Capitulation was, that there was come intelligence, that he secretly prepar'd himself to go directly to Soliman-Chekoub, sparing no Gold, which under-hand he conveyed into the hands of our Franguis, and to all those that were come with him out of the Fortrefs to follow him, under pretext of accompanying him as far as Debli to Aureng-Zebe, who had often said, that he should be very glad to see so gallant a Man, and who had so valiantly defended himself.

There remained therefore none of the Family of Dara, but Soliman-Chekoub, who could not easily be drawn away from Serenaguer, if the Raja had been steady to his first Declarations. But the secret practices of the Raja Jeseigne, the promises and threats of Aureng-Zebe, the death of Dara, and the other Kajis his Neighbours that had been gain'd, and were prepared by the Orders, and at the cost of Aureng-Zebe, to make War against him, did at last shake the Faith of this pernicious Protector, and made him consent to their demands: Sepe-Chekoub, who was advertised of it, fled through the midst of those horrid Countries and fearful Desarts, towards the great Tiber. But the Son of the Raja, soon pursuing and overtaking him, caused him to be assaulted with stones. The poor Prince was hurt, seized, and carried to Debli, where he was imprison'd in Serenguer, that little Fortrefs, where at first they had put Morad-Bakche.

Aureng-Zebe, to observe what he had practis'd towards Dara, and that no body might doubt it was Soliman-Chekoub himself, commanded him to be brought before him in the presence of all the Grandees of the Court. At the entry of the Gate, the Chains were taken from his feet, leaving those he had about his hands, which seem'd gilt. When this proper young Man, so handsome and gallant, was seen to enter, there was a good number of Omrabs that could not hold their tears; and, as I was inform'd, all the great Ladies of the Court, that had leave to see him come in, fell a weeping. Aureng-Zebe, who appear'd himself to be touch'd at his misfortunes, began to speak very kindly to him, and to comfort him; telling him amongst other things, that he should fear nothing, that no hurt should be done to him; on the contrary, that he should be well treated, and therefore be of good courage; that he had caus'd his Father to be put to death for no other reason, than that he was turn'd Kafer, and a Man without Religion. Whereupon this young Prince return'd him the Salem, and blessed him, abating his hands to the earth, and lifting them, as well as he could, up to his head, after the custom of the Country; and told him with resolution enough, That if he were to drink the Pouft, he intreated him that he might dye presently, being very willing to submit to his Fate. But Aureng-Zebe promised him publicly, that he should drink none of it; that he should rest satisfied as to that, and not entertain any sad thoughts about it. This being said, he once more repeated the Salem: And after they had ask'd him several Questions, in the Name of Aureng-Zebe, touching that Eléphant which was charg'd with Roupies of Gold, taken from him when he went to Serenaguer, he was sent to Goualeor to the rest. This Pouft is nothing else else but Poppy express'd, and infused a night in water. And 'tis that potion, which those that are kept at Goualeor, are commonly made to drink; I mean those Princes, whose heads they think not fit to cut off: This is the first thing that is brought them in the morning, and they have nothing given them to eat 'till they have drunk a great cup full of it; they would rather let them starve. This emaciates them exceedingly, and maketh them dye insensibly, they losing little by little their strength and understanding, and growing torpid and senseless. And by this very means 'tis said, that Sepe-Chekoub, and the Grand-child of Morad-Bakche, and Soliman-Chekoub, were dispatch'd.

As to Morad-Bakche, he was made away by a more violent death. For Aureng-Zebe seeing, that though he was in prison, yet the generality had an inclination to him, and that many Verses were spread in the praise of his Valour and Courage, thought himself not safe enough by putting him to death in private, by giving him Pouft like others; apprehending, that his Death would be still doubted of, and that that might one time or other occasion some commotion, and therefore devis'd the following Charge against him.

The Children of a certain Sayed, very rich, whom he had caus'd to be put to death in Amadevad, to get his Estate, when he there made his preparations for War, and borrowed or took by force great Sums of Money from all the rich Merchants, appear'd in full Assembly, making their complaints, and demanding Justice, and the Head of Morad-Bakche, for the Blood of their Father. Not one of the Omrabs durst contradict it, both because he was a Sayed, that is, one of Mahomet's Kindred, to whom great Veneration was paid; and that every body sufficiently understood the design of Aureng-Zebe, taking this for a pretence to rid himself openly of Morad-Bakche, under a shew of Justice. So that the Head of him, that had killed the Father of the Plaintiffs, was granted them without any other form of Process. Whereupon they went, with necessary Orders issued out for that purpose, to cut it off in Goualeor.

There remained no other Thorn in the Foot of Aureng-Zebe but Sultan Sajah, who kept himself still in Bengale; but he also was forced to yield at last to the power and fortune of Aureng-Zebe. There were sent so many Troops of all sorts to Emir-Jemla, that at last he was encompass'd on all sides, both on this and that side of the River

Ganges;

Ganges; so that he was necessitated to flye to Dake, which is the last Town of Bengale on the Sea side; and here comes the conclusion of this whole Tragedy.

This Prince being destitute of Ships to put to Sea, and not knowing whether to flye, sent his eldest Son, Sultan-Banque, to the King of Racan or Moy, a Heathen or Idolatrous King, to know whether he would give him leave to make his Country his place of refuge only for some time, and do him the favour, when the Monsoons or the Season-winds should come, to furnish him with a Vessel for Mecha, from thence to pass into some part of Turky or Persia. That King sent answer, that he should be very welcome, and have all possible assistance. So Sultan Banque returned to Dake with some Galeasses, manned with Franguis (I mean, with those fugitive Portugals, and other straggling Christians, that had put themselves in service to that King, driving no other Trade than to ravage all this lower Bengale; upon which Sultan Sujah embarked, with his whole Family, viz. his Wife, his three Sons, and Daughters. They were well enough received; whatever was necessary for their subsistence, such as that Country would afford, was provided for them, in the name of that King. Some months pass, the Season of the favourable Winds come in, but not a word of the Vessel, though he demanded it no otherwise than for his Money; for as yet he wanted not Rupies of Gold, nor Silver, nor Gems: He had too great a plenty of them; his Riches were, in all appearance, the cause of his ruin, or at least contributed much to it. Those barbarous Kings have no true generosity, and are not much refrained by the Faith they have given, regarding nothing but their present Interests, without so much as considering the mischiefs that may befall them for their perfidiousness and brutality. To get out of their hands, one must either be the stronger, or have nothing that may tempt their avarice. Sultan Sujah may long enough solicit for a Vessel; all is in vain, he effects nothing: On the contrary, the King begins to shew much coldness, and to complain of his not coming to see him. I know not, whether Sultan Sujah thought it unworthy of himself, and too mean a thing to give him a Visit; or rather, whether he fear'd, that being in the Kings House he might not there be seized on, to take away all his Treasure, and then be delivered into the hands of Emir-Jemla, who for that purpose promised, in the name of Aureng-Zebe, great Sums of Money, and many other considerable advantages. Whatever the matter was, he would not go thither himself, but sent his Son Sultan Banque, who being near the Kings House, began to shew liberality to the people, throwing out to them a good quantity of half Rupies, and whole Rupies, of Gold and Silver. And being come before the King, he presented him with store of Embroideries, and of rare pieces of Goldsmiths-work, set with precious Stones of great value, excusing his Father, Sultan Sujah, as being indisposed, and beseeching him in his name, that he would remember the Vessel, and the promise made to him thereof. But all that did not advance his business; on the contrary, five or six days after, this King sent to Sultan Sujah, to ask of him one of his Daughters in Marriage; which he could never resolve to grant him, whereat this barbarous Prince was highly offended. What then could he do in this case? The Season passeth away. What shall become of him? What other resolution can he take, but to do a desperate Action? Behold a strange undertaking, which may give a great Example of what Despair can do!

Although this King of Racan be an Heathen, yet there is in his Dominions store of Mahumetans mingled with the people, that are retired thither, or have been, for the most part, taken Slaves, here and there, by those Franguis above-mention'd. Sultan Sujah did under-hand gain these Mahumetans; and with two or three hundred Men, whom he had yet remaining of those that follow'd him from Bengale, he resolved, one day to fall unexpectedly upon the House of this Barbarian, to kill all, and to make himself proclaim'd King of Racan. This was a very bold Enterprize, and such a one, as had more of a Desperado in it, than of a prudent Man. Yet notwithstanding, as I was inform'd, and by what I could learn from many Mahumetans, and Portugals, and Hollanders, that then were there present, the thing was feasible enough. But the day before the stroke was to be given, the Design was discover'd; which did altogether overthrow the Affairs of Sultan Sujah, and was soon after the cause of his ruin. For not finding hereafter any way more to recover himself, he attempted to flye towards Pegu; which was a thing in a manner impossible, by reason of the vast Mountains and Forests to be passed. Besides, he was immediately pursued so close, that he was overtaken the same day he fled. It may well be thought, that he defended himself with as much courage as was possible. He killed so many of those Barbarians, that it will scarce be believed, but he was so overpower'd by the multitude of pursuers, that he was obliged to quit the Combat. Sultan Banque, who was not so far advanced as his Father, defended him also like a Lion; but at length, being all bloody of the wounds, by stones poured upon him from all sides, he was seized on, and carried away, with his two little Brothers, his Sisters, and Mother.

As to the Person of Sultan Sujah himself, all what could be learnt of it, is this: That he, with one Woman, one Eunuch, and two other persons, got up to the top of the Mountain; that he received a wound in his Head by a stone, which struck him down, but yet he rose again, the Eunuch having wound his Head about with his Turbant, and that they escaped through the midst of the Woods.

I have heard the Relation three or four other manner of ways, even by those persons that were upon the place. Some did assure, that he had been found among the dead, but was not well known: And I have seen a Letter of the Chief of the Dutch Factory, confirming this. So that 'tis difficult enough to know aright what is become him. And this it is, which hath administred ground to those so frequent Alarms, given us afterwards at Debli: For at one time it was rumored, that he was arrived at Maslipatan, to joyn with the Kings of Golkonda and Visapour; another time it was related for certain, that he had passed in sight of Suratte with two Ships, bearing the Red Colours, which the King of Pegu, or the King of Siam had given him; by and by, that he was in Persia, and had been seen in Cbiras, and soon after in Kandahar, ready to enter into the Kingdom of Caboul it self. Aureng-Zebe one day said smiling, that Sultan Sujah was at last become an Agy or Pilgrim. And at this very day there are abundance of persons who maintain that he is in Persia, returned from Constantinople, whence he is said to have brought with him much Money. But that which confirms more than enough, that there is no ground for any of these reports, is that Letter of the Hollanders; and that an Eunuch of his, with whom I travelled from Bengale to Maslipatan, as also the Great Master of his Artillery; whom I saw in the Service of the King of Golkonda, have assured me, that he is no more in being, though they made difficulty to say any more concerning him; as also, that our French Merchants, that lately came out of Persia and from Hispahan, when I was yet at Debli, had in those parts heard no news at all of him; besides that, I have heard that a while after his Defeat, his Sword and Poynard had been found: So that 'tis credible, that if he was not killed upon the place, he soon dyed afterwards, and was the prey of some Robbers, or Tygers, or Elephants, of which the Forrests of that Country are full. However it be, after this last Action his whole Family was put in Prison; Wives and Children, where they were treated rudely enough; yet some time after they were set at more liberty, and they received a milder entertainment: And then the King called for the eldest Daughter, whom he married.

Whilst this was doing, some Servants of Sultan Banque, joyned with divers of those Mahumetans which I have mentioned, went to plot another Conspiracy like the first. But the day appointed for it being come, one of the Conspirators, being half drunk, began too soon to break out. Concerning this also I have heard forty different relations, so that 'tis very hard to know the truth of it. That which is undoubted is this, that the King was at length so exasperated against this unfortunate Family of Sujah, that he commanded it should be quite rooted out. Neither did there remain any one of it, that was not put to death, save that Daughter which the King had made his Wife. Sultan Banque, and his Brothers, had their Heads cut off with blunt Axes; and the Women were mured up, where they dyed of hunger and misery.

And thus endeth this War, which the lust of Reigning had kindled among those four Brothers, after it had lasted five or six years, from 1655, or thereabout, to 1660 or 1661; which left Aureng-Zebe in the peaceable possession of this puissant Empire.

The End of the FIRST TOME.

Par-

Particular Events :

O R ,

The most considerable Passages after the War for Five Years, or thereabout, in the Empire of the GREAT MOGOL.

THE War being ended, the Tartars of Usbec entertained thoughts of sending Ambassadors to Aureng-Zebe. They had seen him fight in their Countrey; when he was yet a young Prince; Chah-Jehan having sent him to command the Succors, which the Kan of Samarkand had desired of him against the Kan of Balk. They had experienced his Conduct and Valor on many occasions, and they consider'd with themselves, that he could not but remember the Affront they did him, when he was just taking Balk, the Capital Town of the Enemy: For the two Kans agreed together, and obliged him to retreat, alledging, That they apprehended he might render himself Master of their whole State, just as Ekbar had formerly done of the Kingdom of Kachimere. Besides, they had certain intelligence of all he had done in Indostan, of his Battels, Fortune, and Advantages; whence they might sufficiently estimate, that though Chah-Jehan was yet living, yet Aureng-Zebe was Master, and the only Person that was to be owned King of the Indies. Whether then they feared his just resentments, or whether it was, that their inbred Avarice and Sordidness made them hope for some considerable Present, the two Kans sent to him their Ambassadors to offer him their Service, and to Congratulate him upon the happy beginning of his Reign. Aureng-Zebe saw very well, that the War being at an end, this offer was out of season, and that it was nothing but fear or hope, as we said, that had brought them. Yet for all this, he received them honourably; and, since I was present at their Audience, I can relate the Particulars of it with certainty.

They made their Reverence at a considerable distance from him, after the Indian custom, putting thrice their hands upon their heads, and as often letting them down to the ground. Then they approached so near, that Aureng-Zebe himself might very well have taken their Letters immediately from their hands; but yet it was an Omrab that took and open'd them, and gave them to him. He forthwith read them with a very grave countenance; and afterwards commanded, there should be given to each of them an embroider'd Vest, a Turbant, and a Girdle of Silk in Embroidery; which is that which they call Ser-apah, that is, an Habit from head to foot. After this, their Presents were call'd for, which consisted in some Boxes of choice Lapis Lazulus, divers Camels with long hair, several gallant Horses, some Camel-loads of fresh Fruit, as Apples, Pears, Raisins and Melons; (for 'tis chiefly Usbec that furnishes these sorts of Fruit, eaten at Dehli all the Winter-long;) and in many Loads of dry Fruit, as Prunes of Bokara, Aprecocks, Raisins without any stones that appeared, and two other sorts of Raisins, black and white, very large and very good.

Aureng-Zebe was not wanting to declare, how much he was satisfied with the Generosity of the Kans, and much commended the Beauty and Rarity of the Fruit, Horses, and Camels; and after he had a little entertain'd them of the state of the Academy of Samarkand, and of the Fertility of their Countrey, abounding in so many rare and excellent things, he desired them to go and repose themselves, intimating withal, that he should be very glad to see them often.

They came away from their Audience full of contentment and joy, not being much troubled, that they had been obliged to make their Reverence after the Indian custom, though it have something of slavish in it; nor much resenting it, that the King had not not taken their Letters from their own hands. I believe if they had been required to kiss the ground, and even to do something of a lower nature, they would have complied with it. 'Tis true, it would have been in vain, if they had desired to make no other Salute, but that of their own Countrey, and to deliver to the King their Letters with their own hands; for that belongs only to the Ambassadors of Persia, nor have these this favour granted them, but with much difficulty.

They stay'd above four months at Debli, what diligence soever they could use to be dispatch'd, which did incommode them very much; for they fell almost all sick, and even some of them dyed, because they were not accustomed to such heats as are in Indostan, or rather because they were sordid, and kept a very ill Diet. I know not whether there be a more avaricious and uncleanly Nation than they are. They laid up the Money which the King had appointed them for their maintenance, and lived a very miserable life, altogether unworthy of Ambassadors; yet they were dismissed with great honour: The King, in the presence of all the Omrabs, presented each of them with two rich Ser-apabs, and gave order that Eight thousand Rupies should be carried to their Lodgings; which amounted to near Two thousand Crowns each. He also gave them for Presents to the Kans their Masters, very handsome Ser-apabs, store of the richest and best wrought Embroideries, a good quantity of fine Cloth, and Silk-stuffs, wrought with Gold and Silver, and some Tapestries, and two Poynards set about with precious stones.

During their stay, I went thrice to see them, being presented to them as a Physician by one of my Friends, that was Son of an Usbec, that had made his Fortune in that Court. I had a design to have learned something in particular of their Countrey, but I found them so ignorant, that they knew not so much as the Confines of their State, much less could they inform me of any thing concerning the Tartars that have conquer'd China of late years: In short, they told me nothing that I knew not before. I had once the Curiosity to dine with them, which liberty I obtained easily enough. They are not Men of much Ceremony; it was a very extraordinary Meal for such a one as I, it being meer Horse-flesh; yet for all this I got my Dinner with them; there was a certain Ragou, which I thought passable: And I was obliged to express a liking of so exquisite a Dish, which they so much lust after. During Dinner, there was a strange silence; they were very busie in carrying in with their whole hands, for they know not what a Spoon is; but after that this Horse-flesh had wrought in their stomachs, they began to talk, and then they would persuade me, they were the most dextrous at Bows and Arrows, and the strongest Men in the World. They call'd for Bows, which are much bigger than those of Indostan, and would lay a wager, to pierce an Ox or my Horse through and through. Then they proceeded to commend the strength and valor of their Women, which they described to me quite otherwise than the Amazons, telling me very wonderful stories of them, especially one, which would be admirable indeed, if I could relate it with a Tartarian Eloquence, as they did: They told me, that at the time when Aureng-Zebe made War in their Countrey, a Party of Twenty five or Thirty Indian Horsemen came to fall upon a small Village; whilst they plundered, and tyed all those whom they met with to make them Slaves, an old Woman said to them, Children, be not so mischievous, my Daughter is not far off, she will be here very shortly, retreat if you be wise, you are undone if she light upon you. They laughed at the old Woman, and her Advice, and continued to load, to tie, and to carry away her self; but they were not gone half a Mile, but this old Woman, looking often backward, made a great out-cry of Joy, perceiving her Daughter coming after her on Horse-back; and presently this generous She Tartar, mounted on a furious Horse, her Bow and Arrows hanging at her side, called to them at a distance, that she was yet willing to give them their Lives, if they would carry back to the Village all they had taken, and then withdraw without any noise. The Advice of this young Woman affected them as little as that of her old Mother; but they were soon astonish'd, when they found her let fly at them in a moment three or four great Arrows, which struck as many of their Men to the ground, which forced them to fall to their Quivers also. But she kept her self at that distance from them, that none of them could reach her. She laughed at all their Effort, and at all their Arrows, knowing how to attack them at the length of her Bow, and to take her measure from the strength of her Arm, which was of another temper than theirs: So that after she had killed half of them with her Arrows, and put them into disorder, she came and fell upon the rest with the Zable in her hand, and cut them all in pieces.

The Ambassadors of Tartary were not yet gone away from Debli, when Aureng-Zebe fell exceeding sick; a violent and continued fever made him sometimes lose his understanding: His Tongue was seized with such a Palsie, that he lost almost his speech, and the Physicians despaired of his Recovery; nothing was heard for the time, than that he was gone, and that his Sister Rauchenara-Begum concealed his death out of design. It was already bruited, that the Raja Jessomseigne, Governor of Guzaratte, was on the way to deliver Chah-Jehan; that Mohabet-Kan (who had at length obeyed the Orders of Aureng-Zebe) quitting the Government of Cakoul, and being already on this side Lahor to come back, made haste also with Three or four thousand Horse for the same end; and that the Eunuch Etbar-kan, who kept Chah-Jehan in the Fortrefs of Agra, would have the honour of his delivery. On one side we see Sultan Mazum bestir himself exceedingly with Bribes, endeavouring by Promises to assure himself of the Omrabs, so far, as that one Night he went disguised to the Raja Jessigne, entreating him with expressions of deep respect, that he would engage himself for his interest.

We knew from other hands, that Rauchenara-Begum, together with Teday-kan, the great Master of Artillery, and many Omrabs, declared for the young Prince Sultan Ekbar, the third Son of Aureng-Zebe, though he was but seven or eight years old; both Parties in the mean time pretending, they had no other design than to deliver Chah-Jehan: so that the People believed, that now he was going to be set at liberty, though none of the Grandees had any such thing in their thoughts, spreading this Rumor, only to gain Credit and Concourse, and because they feared, lest by the means of Etbar-kan, or some other secret Intrigue, he should one day appear in the Field. And indeed of all the Parties, there was not one that had reason to wish for his liberty and restoration to the Throne, except Jessomseigne, Mohabet-kan, and some others, that as yet had done no great matter to his disadvantage. The rest had been all against him, at least they had vilely abandon'd him. They knew very well he would be like an unchain'd Lyon, if he came abroad: Who then could trust him? And what could Etbar-kan hope for, who had kept him up so close? I know not, if by some Adventure or other, he should have come out of Prison, whether he would not have stood single, and been alone of his Party.

But though Aureng-Zebe was very sick, yet for all this he gave order for all things, and particularly for the sure custody of Chah-Jehan his Father; and though he had advised Sultan Mazum to go and open the Gates to Chah-Jehan, in case he should die, yet he omitted not to have Etbar-kan incessantly writ to. And the fifth day, in the height of his sickness, he caused himself to be carried into the Assembly of the Omrabs to shew himself, and to disabuse those who might believe him to be dead, and to obviate popular Tumults, or such Accidents as might have caused Chah-Jehan to be set at liberty. The seventh, ninth, and tenth day, he made himself to be carried again into the said Assembly for the same reason; and, what is almost incredible, the thirteenth, after he had recollected himself from a Fit of Swooning, which occasioned a rumor through the whole Town of his being dead, he called for two or three of the greatest Omrabs, and the Raja Jessigne, to let them see that he was alive, made himself to be raised in his Bed, called for Ink and Paper to write to Etbar-kan, and sent for the Great Seal, which he had trusted with Rauchenara-Bagum, and commonly enclosed in a small Bag, sealed with a Seal he always wore about his Arm, fearing lest she had already made use of it for her designs. I was nigh my Agah, when all this News was told him, and I understood, that lifting up his hands to Heaven, he said, What a Soul is this? A matchless Fortitude and Courage of Spirit! God preserve thee Aureng-Zebe, for greater things, certainly he will not that thou shouldst yet die. And indeed after this Fit, he recover'd by little and little.

He had no sooner recover'd his health, but he sought to get out of the hands of Chah-Jehan, and Begum-Sahab, the Daughter of Dara, to secure the Marriage of Sultan-Ekbar, his third Son, with this Princess, on purpose thereby to gain him Authority, and to give him the greater right to the Empire: For he it is, who is thought to be by him designed for it. He is yet very young, but he hath many near and powerful Relations at the Court, and is born of the Daughter of Chah-Navaze-kan, and consequently quently of the Blood of the Ancient Sovereigns of Machate; whereas Sultan Mahmud and Sultan Mazum are only Sons of Ragipontis, or Daughters of Raja's. These Kings, though Mahumetans, do, for all that, marry of the Daughters of the Heathen, either for State-interest, or for extraordinary Beauty. But Aureng-Zebe, was disappointed in this design: It will hardly be believed, with what height and fierceness of spirit Chah-Jehan and Begum rejected the Proposition, and the young Princess her self, who, in the fear of being carried away, was for some days desperate, and protested she would rather kill her self an hundred times over, if it were possible, than to marry the Son of him that had murdered her Father.

He had no better satisfaction from Chah-Jehan about certain Jewels which he asked of him, in order to finish a piece of work which he caused to be added to a famous Throne, which is so highly esteemed. For he fiercely answer'd, That Aureng-Zebe should take no other Care, but to rule better than he did; that he should let his Throne alone; that he was weary to hear of these Jewels; and that the Hammers were ready to beat them to dust, the first time he should be importun'd again about them.

The Hollanders would not be the last in doing Reverence to Aureng-Zebe: they had thoughts of sending an Ambassador to him. They pitched upon Monsieur Adrican, the Commander of their Factory at Suratte; and being a right honest man, and of good sense and judgment, not neglecting to take the counsel of his Friends, he well acquitted himself of this Employment. Aureng-Zebe, though he carries it very high, and affects to appear a zealous Mahumetan, and consequently to despise the Frangis, or Christians, yet thought fit to receive them with much Respect and Civility. He even was desirous, that this Ambassador should complement him in the mode of the Frangis, after he had been made to do it the Indian way. 'Tis true, he received his Letters by the hand of an Omrab; but that was not to be taken for any Contempt, he having shew'd no more Honour to the Ambassadors of Usbec. After this, he intimated to him, that he might produce his Present; and at the same time he caused him, and some of his Train, to be dressed with a Ser-Apab embroider'd. The Present consisted of store of very fine Scarlet, some large Looking-glasses, and divers excellent pieces of Chinese and Japonesè work, among which there was a Paleky, and a Tackrawan, or a Field-Throne of admirable workmanship.

This Ambassador was not so soon dispatch'd as he wish'd, it being the Custom of the Kings of Mogol to detain Ambassadors as long as they well can, from a belief they have, that 'tis the interest of their Greatness, to oblige Strangers to give long Attendance at their Court; yet he was not kept so long as the Ambassadors of Usbec. Mean time he had the misfortune, that his Secretary died there, and the rest of his Retinue began to grow sick. When the King dismissed him, he gave him such another Ser-Apab embroider'd, as the first was for himself; and another, a very rich one, for the General of Batavia, together with a Poynard, set about with Jewels, all accompanied with a very obliging Letter.

The chief Aim of the Hollanders in this Embassy was, to make themselves immediately known to the King, thereby to gain Credit, and to intimidate the Governors of the Sea-Ports, and other places, where they have their Factories; that so they may not attempt, when they please, to insult over them, or to trouble them in their Trade; thereby letting them know, that they had to do with a potent Nation, and that hath a door open to address themselves, and to complain immediately to the King. Their End also was, to make it appear, what interest the King had in their Commerce; and therefore they shew'd long Rolls of Commodities, bought up by them through the whole Kingdom, and Lists of considerable Sums of Gold and Silver, every year brought thither by them; but saying not a word of those which they draw thence, from the Copper, Lead, Cinamon, Cloves, Muscadin, Pepper, Wood of Aloes, Elephants, and other Commodities which they vend there.

About this time, one of the most considerable Omrabs of Aureng-Zebe address'd himself to him, and represent'd, that this multitude and variety of perplexing Affairs, and this perpetual Attention of mind in him, might soon cause a great Alteration in his Temper, and a dangerous Inconvenience in his Health. But Aureng-Zebe, seeming to take almost no notice of what that Omrab said, turn'd himself another way, and approaching to another of the prime Omrabs of the Court, a person of great knowledge and judgment, spoke to him in this purpose (as I was inform'd by the Son of this Lord, who was my Friend.)

You other Sages, are you not all of the mind, that there are times and conjunctions so urgent, that a King ought to hazard his life for his Subjects, and sacrifice himself for their defence with Arms in his hands? And yet this effeminate Man would dissuade me from taking pains, and dehort me from watching and solicitude for the Publick; and carry me by pretences of Health, to the thoughts of an easie life, by abandoning the Government of my People, and the management of Affairs, to some Visir or other. Doth he not know, that Providence having given me a Royal Extraction, and raised me to the Crown of Indostan, hath not made me for my self alone, but for the good and safety of the Publick, and for the procurement of Tranquility and Happiness to my Subjects, as far as that may be obtained by Justice and Power? He seeth not the consequence of his Counsels, and what mischiefs do attend Visirships. Doth he think it to be without reason, what our Grand Sady hath so generously pronounced, O Kings, cease, cease to be Kings, or govern your Kingdoms your selves? Go tell thy Countrey-man, that I shall well like of the care he is constantly to take of the faithful discharge of his Place; but advise him also, not any more to run out himself so far as he hath done. We have natural inclination enough to a long, easie, and careles life, and there need no Counsellors to shake off business and trouble. Our Wives, that lie in our bosom, do too often, besides our own genius, incline us that way.

At the same time there happen'd an Accident, that made a great noise at Dehli, especially in the Seraglio, and disabused a great many, that could as hardly believe as my self, that Eunuchs, though they had their Genitals quite cut away, could become amorous as other men. Didar-kan, one of the chief Eunuchs of the Seraglio, who had built an house, where he came often to divert himself, fell in love with a very beautiful Woman, the Sister of a Neighbor of his, that was an Heathen Scrivener.

These Amours lasted a good while, before any Body blamed them, since it was but an Eunuch that made them, which sort of men have the privilege to go where they please; but the familiarity grew so great, and so extraordinary betwixt the two Lovers, that the Neighbors began to suspect something, and to rally the Scrivener, which did so touch him, that he threatned both his Sisters and the Eunuch to kill them, if they should continue their Commerce. And soon after, finding them in the Night lying together, he stabbed the Eunuch out-right, and left his Sister for dead. The whole Seraglio, Women and Eunuchs, made a League together against him to make him away; but Aureng-Zebe dissipated all these machinations, and was content to have him turn Mahumetan. Mean time 'tis thought, he cannot long avoid the malice and power of the Eunuchs; for 'tis not, as is the common saying, with Men as with Brutes; these latter become gentler and more tractable when they are castrated; but men more vicious, and commonly very insolent, though sometimes it turneth to an admirable Fidelity and Gallantry.

It was also about the same time, that Aureng-Zebe was somewhat discontented with Rauchenara-Begum, because she was suspected to have given Access to two young Gallants into the Seraglio, who were discover'd, and brought before Aureng-Zebe. Yet this being but a suspicion, he expressed to her no great resentment of it; nor did he make use of so great rigor and cruelty against those poor men, as Chah-Jehan had done against the person above spoken of. The matter was related to me by an old Portuguese Woman (that had a long while been Slave to the Seraglio, and went out and in at pleasure) as followeth: She told me that Rauchenara-Begum, after she had drawn from a young man, hidden by her, all his Ability, deliver'd him to some Women, to convey him away in the Night thorough some Gardens, and so to save him: But whether they were discover'd, or whether they feared they should be so, or what else might be the cause, they fled, and left him there wandering in the midst of those Gardens, not knowing which way to get out: And being at last met with, and brought before Aureng-Zebe, who examined him strictly, but could draw nothing else from him, than that he was come in over the walls, he was commanded to get out the same way by which he entred: But it seems, the Eunuchs did more than Aureng-Zebe had given order for, for they cast him down from the top of the walls to the bottom. As for the other young Gallant, this same Woman assured me, that he was found wandering in the Garden like the first; and having confessed that he was come in by the Gate, Aureng-Zebe commanded likewise, that he also should pass away again by the same Gate; yet reserving to himself a severe chastisement for the Eunuchs, since not only the honour of the Royal House, but also the safety of the King's person is herein concerned.

Some months after, there arrived at Debli several Ambassadors, almost at the same time. The first was Xerif of Meccha, whose Present did consist in some Arabian Horses: The second and third Ambassadors were, he of the King of Hyeman, or Happy Arabia, and he of the Prince of Bassora, who likewise presented Arabian Horses. The two remaining Ambassadors were sent from the King of Ethiopia. To the three first no great regard was given; they appear'd in so miserable and confused an Equipage, that it was perceived they came only to get some money by the means of their Present, and of the many Horses, and other Merchandize, which under the pretence of Ambassadors, entred without paying any Duty into the Kingdom, there to be sold, and to buy for the money a quantity of Indian Stuffs, and so to return, without paying likewise any Impost at all.

But as to the Ethiopian Embassy, that deserves to be otherwise taken notice of; the King of Ethiopia having received the News of the Revolution of the Indies, had a design to spread his Name in those Parts, and there to make known his Grandeur and Magnificence, by a splendid Embassy: Or, as Malice will have it, or rather as the very truth is, to reap some Advantage by a Present as well as the rest. Behold therefore this great Embassy! He chose for his Ambassadors two persons, that one would think were the most considerable in his Court, and the most capable to make such a Design prosper. And who were they? The one was a Mahumetan Merchant, whom I had seen some years ago at Moka, when I passed there coming out of Egypt over the Red-Sea, where he was to sell some Slaves for that Prince, and to buy of the money, raised thence, some Indian Commodities. And this is the fine Trade of that great Christian King of Africa. The other was a Christian Merchant of Armenia, born and married in Aleppo, known in Ethiopia by the name of Murat. I had seen him also at Moka, where he had accommodated me with the half of his Chamber, and assisted me with very good Advice, whereof I have spoken in the beginning of this History, as a thing taking me off from passing into Ethiopia, according to my first design. He also came every year to that place, in that King's Name, for the same end that the Mahumetan did, and brought the Present which the King made every year, to the Gentlemen of the English and Dutch Company of the East-Indies, and carried away theirs. Now the King of Ethiopia, sutably to his design, and the desire he had of making his Ambassadors appear with great Splendor, put himself to great Expences for this Embassy: He gave them Thirty two young Slaves, of both Sexes, to sell them at Moka, and thence to make a Sum of Money to bear their Charges. A wonderful Largess! Slaves are commonly sold there for Twenty five or thirty Crowns apiece, one with another. A considerable Sum. Besides, he gave them for a Present to the Great Mogol Five and twenty choice Slaves, among which there were nine or ten very young, proper to make Eunuchs of. A very worthy Present for a King, and he a Christian, to a Mahumetan Prince! It seems the Christianity of the Ethiopians is very different from ours. He added to that Present, twelve Horses, esteem'd as much as those of Arabia, and a kind of little Mule, of which I saw the Skin, which was a very great Rarity, there being no Tyger so handsomly speckled, nor Silken Stuff of India so finely, so variously, and so orderly streaked, as that was. Moreover, there were for a part of the Present, two Elephants teeth, so prodigious, that they assured it was all that a very able bodied man could do, to lift up one of them from the ground. Lastly, an Horn of an Ox full of Civett, and so big, that the Aperture of it being measur'd by me, when it came to Debli, it had a Diameter of Half a Foot, and somewhat better. All things being thus prepared, the Ambassadors depart from Gondez, the Capital of Ethiopia, situated in the Province of Dambea, and came through a very troublefom Countrey to Beiloul, which is a dispeopled Sea-Port over against Moka, nigh to Babel-mandel, not daring to come (for Reasons elsewhere to be alledged) the ordinary way of the Caravans, which is made with ease in Forty days to Arkiko, and thence to pass to the Isle of Masoua. During their stay at Beiloul, and expecting a Bark of Moka, to waft over the Red-Sea, there died some of their Slaves, because the Vessel tarried, and they found not in that place those refreshments that were necessary for them. When they came to Moka, they soon sold their Merchandize, to raise a Stock of Money according to order. But they had this ill luck, that that year the Slaves were very cheap, because the Market was glutted by many other Merchants, yet they raised a Sum to pursue their Voyage: They Embark'd upon an Indian Vessel to pass to Suratte; their Passage was pretty good; they were not above Five and twenty days at Sea; but whether it was that they had made no good provision for want of stock, or what else the cause might be; many of their Slaves and Horses, as also the Mule, whereof they saved the Skin, died. They were no sooner arrived at Suratte, but a certain Rebel of Visapour, called Seva-Gi, came and ransacked and burned the Town, and in it their House, so that they could save nothing but their Letters, some Slaves that were sick, or which Seva-Gi could not light on, their Ethiopian Habits which he cared not for, and the Mule's Skin, and the Ox's Horn, which was already emptied of the Civett. They did very much exaggerate their misfortune; but those malicious Indians that had seen them arrive in such a wretched condition, without Provisions, without Habits, without Money, or Bills of Exchange, said, that they were very happy, and should reckon the Plunder of Suratte for a piece of their best Fortune, soasmuch as Seva-Gi had saved them the labour of bringing their miserable Present to Debli, and had furnished them with a very specious pretence for their beggarly condition, and for the sale they had made of their Civett, and of some of their Slaves, and for demanding of the Governor of Suratte Provisions for their subsistence, as also some Money and Chariots to continue their Voyage to Debli. Monsieur Adrican, chief of the Dutch Factory, my Friend, had given to the Armenian Murat a Letter of Recommendation to me, which he deliver'd himself at Debli, not remembring that I had been his Host at Moka. It was a very pleasant meeting when we came to know one another, after the space of five or six years. I embraced him affectionately, and promised him that I would serve him in whatever I could; but that, though I had Acquaintance at the Court, it was impossible for me to do them any considerable good Office there: For since they had not brought with them any valuable Present, but only the Mule's Skin, and the empty Ox's Horn, and that they were seen going upon the streets without any Paleky or Horses, save that of our Father Missionary, and mine (which they had almost killed) cloathed like Beggars, and followed with seven or eight Slaves, bare-headed and bare-foot, having nothing but an ugly Sharfe tyed between their Legs, with a ragged Cloth over their Left Shoulder, passing under their Left Arm like a Summer-Cloak; since, I said, they were in such a posture, whatever I could say for them was insignificant; they were taken for Beggars, and no body took other notice of them. Yet notwithstanding I said so much of the Grandeur of their King to my Agab Danechmendkan, who had cause to hearken to me, as managing all Foreign Affairs there, that Aureng-Zebe gave them Audience, received their Letters, presented them each with an Embroider'd Vest, a Silken Embroider'd Girdle, and a Turbant of the same, gave order for their Entertainment, and dispatched them in a little time, and that with more honour than there was ground to expect: For in dismissing them, he presented them each with another such Vest, and with 6000 Rupies for them all, which amounteth to about 3000 Crowns, of which the Mahumetan had four thousand, and Murat, because a Christian, but two thousand. He also gave them for a Present to their Master a very rich Ser-apah or Vest, two great silver and gilt Trumpets, two silver Tymbals, a Poynard cover'd with Jewels, and the value of about twenty thousand Francs in golden and silver Rupies, to let their King see Money coined, as a Rarity he had not in his Countrey: But Aureng-Zebe knew very well, that these Rupies would not go out of the Kingdom, and that they were like to buy Commodities for them: And it fell out so; for they laid them out, partly in fine Cotton Cloth, to make shirts of for their King, Queen, and their only lawful Son that is to be the Successor; partly in silken Stuffs streaked with Gold or Silver, to make Vests and Summer-Drawers of; partly in English Scarlet, to make two Arabian Vests of for their King also; and lastly, in Spices, and in store of coarser Cloth, for divers Ladies of his Seraglio, and for the Children he had by them, all without paying any Duty.

For all my friendship with Murat, there were three things that made me almost repent to have served them. The first, because Murat having promised me to leave with me for 50 Rupies, a little Son of his, that was very pretty, of a delicate black, and without such a swelled Nose, or such thick Lips as commonly the Ethiopians have, broke his word with me, and let me know, that he should take no less for him than 300 Rupies. For all this, I had thoughts of buying him, for Rarity's sake, and that I might say, a Father had sold me his Son. The second, because I found that Murat, as well as the Mahumetan, had obliged themselves to Aureng-Zebe, that they would employ their interest with their King, that he might permit in Ethiopia to rebuild an old Mosquee ruined in the time of the Portugals, and which had been built for a Tomb of a great Dervich, which went from Mecha into Ethiopia, for the propagation of Mahumetanism, and there made great progress. They receiv'd of Aureng-Zebe two thousand Rupies for this Engagement. This Mosquee had been pulled down by the Portugals, when they came with their Succors into Ethiopia, which the then King, who turn'd Catholic, had asked of them against a Mahumetan Prince, invading his Kingdom. The third, because they desired Aureng-Zebe, in the name of their King, to give them an Alcoran, and eight other Books, which I well remember, were of the most reputed in the Mahumetan Religion: Which proceeding seem'd to me very unworthy of a Christian Ambassador, and Christian King, and confirm'd to me what I had been told at Moka, that the Christianity of Ethiopia must needs be some odd thing; that it favors much of Mahumetanism, and that the Mahumetans increase exceedingly in that Empire, especially since the Portugals, that came in there for the Reason lately express'd, were either killed, upon the death of the King, by the Cabal of the Queen-Mother, or expell'd together, with the Patriarch Jesuite, whom they had brought along from Goa.

During the time that the Ambassadors were at Dehli, my Agah, who is more than ordinary curious, made them often come to him, when I was present, to inform himself of the State and Government of their Countrey, and principally to learn something of the source of the Nile, which they call Ababile, of which they discours'd to us as a thing so well known, that no body doubted of it. Murat himself, and a Mogol, who was returned out of Ethiopia with him, had been there, and told us very near the same Particulars with those I had received of it at Moka, viz. That the Nile had its Origine in the Countrey of Agams; that it issued out of the Earth by two Springs bubling up, near to one another, which did form a little Lake of about thirty or forty paces long; that coming out of this Lake, it did make a considerable River: and that from space to space, it receiv'd small Rivers increasing it. They added, that it went on circling, and making as 'twere a great Isle; and that afterwards it tumbled down from steep Rocks into a great Lake, in which there were divers fruitful Isles, store of Crocodiles, and (which would be remarkable enough, if true) abundance of Sea-Calves, that have no other vent for their Excrements than that, by which they take in their food; this Lake being in the Countrey of Dambea, three small days journey from Gondar, and four or five days journey from the source of the Nile. And lastly, that this River did break out of this Lake, being augmented with many River-waters, and with several Torrents falling into it, especially in the rainy Season, (which do regularly begin there, as in the Indies about July, which is very considerable and convincing for the inundation of the Nile) and so runs away through Sonnar, the capital City of the King of Fungi, Tributary to the King of Ethiopia, and from thence passeth to the Plains of Mesre, which is Egypt.

The Ambassadors were not wanting to say more than was liked on the subject of their King's Greatness, and of the strength of his Army, but the Mogolian did not over-much agree with them in it; and in their absence represented to us this Army, which he had seen twice in the Field, with the Ethiopian King on the head of it, as the most wretched thing in the world.

They also related to us divers Particulars of that Countrey, which I have put in my Journal, one day perhaps to be digested and copied: In the mean time I shall insert here three or four things which Murat told me, because I esteem them very extravagant for a Christian Kingdom. He said then, that there were few men in Ethiopia, who besides their lawful Wife, had not many others, and himself owned that he had two, without reckoning her which he had left at Aleppo: That the Ethiopian Women did not so hide themselves, as they do in the Indies among the Mahumetans, nor even as among the Gentiles: That those of the meaner sort of People, Maids, or married Women, Slaves or Free, were often together pell-mell, night and day, in the same Chamber, without those jealousies so common in other Countries: That the Women of Lords did not stick much to go into the house of a simple Cavalier, whom they knew to be a Man of Execution: That if I had gone into Ethiopia, they would soon have obliged me to marry, as they had done, a few years since, to a certain European, who named himself a Greek Physician: That an ancient man, of about fourscore years of age, did one day present to the King fourscore Sons, all of age, and able to bear Arms; and that the King asked him, Whether he had no more but them? To whom having answer'd, No, but only some Daughters, the King sent him away with this reproach; Be gone, thou Calf, and be ashamed for having no more Children at that age, as if Women were wanting in my Dominions! That the King himself had at least fourscore Sons and Daughters running about pell-mell in the Seraglio, for whom he had caused to be made a number of round varnished sticks, made like a little maze; those Children being fond of having that in their hand like a Scepter, distinguishing them from those that were Children of Slaves, or from others living in that place.

Aureng-Zebe sent also twice for these Ambassadors, for the same reason that my Agah did, and especially to enquire after the state of Mahumetanism in that Country. He had also the curiosity of Viewing the skin of the Mule, which remained, I know not how, in the Fortrefs amongst the Officers; which was to me a great mortification, because they had designed it for me for the good services I had done them. I made account to have one day presented it to some very curious person in Europe. I urged often, that together with the Mules skin, they should carry the great Horn to Aureng-Zebe, to shew it him; but they fear'd, lest he should make a question, which would have perplexed them; viz. how it came to pass, that they had saved the Horn from the plunder of Suratte, and lost the Civet?

Whilst these Ambassadors of Ethiopia were at Debli, it came to pass that Aureng-Zebe called together his Privy Council, and the most learn'd persons of his Court, to chuse a new Master for his third Son, Sultan Eckbar, whom he design'd for his Successor. In this Council he shew'd the passion he hath to have this young Prince well Educated, and to make him a great Man. Aureng-Zebe is not ignorant of what importance it is, and how much 'tis to be wished, that as much as Kings surmount others in Greatness, they may also exceed them in Virtue and Knowledge. He also well knows, that one of the principal sources of the Misery, of the mis-Government, of the un-Peopling, and the decay of the Empires of Asia proceeds from thence, that the children of the Kings thereof are brought up only by Women and Eunuchs, which often are no other than wretched Slaves of Russia, Circassia, Mingrelia, Gurgistan and Ethiopia; mean and servile, ignorant and insolent souls. These Princes become Kings, when they are of Age, without being instructed, and without knowledge what 'tis to be a King; amazed when they begin to come abroad out of the Seraglio, as persons coming out of another World, or let out of some subterraneous Cave, where they had lived all their life time; wondring at every thing they meet, like so many Innocents; believing all, and fearing all, like Children, or nothing at all, as if they were stupid: And all this, according to their Nature, and sutable to the first Images imprinted upon them; commonly high and proud, and seemingly grave, but of that kind of pride and gravity, which is so flat and distasteful, and so unbecoming them, that one may plainly see, 'tis nothing but brutality or barbarousness, and the effect of some ill-studied, and ill-digested Documents; or else they fall into some childish civilities, yet more unfavoury; or into such cruelties, as are blind and brutal; or into that mean and gross vice of drunkenness, or into an excessive and altogether unreasonable Luxury, either ruining their bodies and understandings with their Concubines, or altogether abandoning themselves to the pleasures of Hunting, like some carnivorous Animals, preferring a pack of Dogs before the life of so many poor people, whom they force to follow them in the pursuit of their Game, and suffer to perish of hunger, heat, cold, and misery. In a word, they always run into some extreme or other, being altogether irrational and extravagant, according as they are carried by their natural temper, or by the first impressions that are given them; thus remaining, almost all, in a strange ignorance of what concerns the state of the Kingdom; the reins of the Government being abandoned to some Visir, who entertains them in their ignorance and in their passions, which are the two strongest supports he can have to rule always according to his own mind, with most assurance, and the least contradiction; and given over also to those Slaves their Mothers, and to their Eunuchs, who often know nothing but to continue plots of cruelty, whereby they strangle and banish one another, and sometimes the Visirs, and even the Grand Signors themselves; so that no man whatsoever, that hath any Estate, can be in safety of his life.

But

But to return; after all these Ambassadors, which we have spoken of, there came at last news, that the Ambassador of Persia was upon the Frontiers. The Persian Omrabs, that are at the service of the Mogol, spread a rumor that he came for affairs of great importance; though intelligent persons much doubted of a Commission of that nature, considering that the time of great conjunctures was passed, and that those Omrabs, and the other Persians did what they did, rather to make a show, than for any thing else. Mean time, on the day of the Entry, this Ambassador was received with all possible respect: The Bazars, through which he passed, were all new-painted, and the Cavalry attending on the way for above the length of a whole League. Many Omrab's accompanied him with Musick, Tymbals and Trumpets, and when he entred into the Fortrefs, or the Palace of the King, the Guns went off. Aureng-Zebe received him with much civility, and was content he should make his Address to him after the Persian mode, receiving also, without any scruple, immediately from his hands the Letters of his King; which, out of respect, he lifted up even to his head, and afterwards read them with a grave and serious countenance: Which done, he caused an embroider'd Vest to be brought, together with a rich Turbant and Girdle, commanding it to be put on him in his presence. A little after, it was intimated to him, that he might order his Present to be brought in, which consisted of five and twenty as handsome Horses as ever I saw, led, and cover'd with embroider'd trapings; and of twenty very stately and lusty Camels, as big as Elephants: Moreover, of a good number of Boxes, said to be full of most excellent Rose-water; and of a certain distilled water, very precious, and esteemed highly cordial; besides, there were displayed five or six very rich and very large Tapisseries, and some embroider'd pieces exceeding noble, wrought in small flowers, so fine and delicate, that I know not whether in all Europe any such can be met with. To all this were added four Damaskin'd Swords, with as many Poynards, all cover'd with Jewels; as also five or six Harnasses of Horses, which were much esteem'd, being also very fine and rich, the stuff being raised with rich Embroidery set with small Pearls, and very fair Turcoises of the old Rock.

It was observ'd, that Aureng-Zebe beheld this Present very attentively; that he admired the beauty and rarity of every piece, and that several times he extolled the Generosity of the King of Persia; assigning to the Ambassador a place among his chief Omrabs. And after he had entertained him a while with a discourse about the inconveniencies and hardships of his Voyage, he dismiss'd him, and made instance, that he should come every day to see him.

During the four or five Months that the Ambassador staid at Dehli, he was always splendidly treated at Aureng-Zebe's charge; and the greatest Omrabs presented him one after another; and at last he was very honourably dismissed: For Aureng-Zebe had him apparelled with another rich Serapah or Vest, to which he added considerable presents for himself, reserving those he intended for his King, 'till he should send an Ambassador expressly; which some time after he did.

Notwithstanding all these testimonies of honour and respect which Aureng-Zebe had shew'd to this Ambassador, the same Persians, above spoken of, gave out, that their King had sensibly reproached him in his Letters, with the Death of Dara, and the Imprisonment of Chah-Jehan, as actions unworthy of a Brother, and a Son, and a Musulman; and that he had also hit him with the word Alem-Guire, or Conquerour of the World, which Aureng-Zebe had caused to be engraven on his Coyn. But 'tis hard to believe, that the King of Persia should do any such thing to provoke such a Victorious Prince, since Persia is not in a condition to enter into a War with Indostan; I am rather apt to believe, that Persia hath work enough to keep Kandahar on the side of Indostan, and the Frontiers on the side of Turky: Its Forces and Riches are known; it produceth not always such great Kings as the Chah-Abbas, Valiant, Intelligent, and Politick, knowing to make use of every thing, and to do much with small expences. If it were in a condition of undertaking any thing against Indostan, or really sensible of Piety and the Musal-Man Faith, why was it that in these last troubles and Civil Wars, which continued so long in Indostan, the Persians sat still and looked on, when Dara, Chah-Jehan, Sultan Sujah, and perhaps the Governour of Caboul desired their assistance; and they might with no very great Army, nor great expences have seized on the fairest part of India, beginning from the Kingdom of Caboul, unto the River Indus, and beyond it, and so made themselves Umpires of all things? yet notwithstanding standing there must needs have been some offensive Expressions in those Persian Letters, or else the Ambassador must have done or said something that displeased Aureng-Zebe; because two or three days after he had dismissed him, he made a rumor to be spread abroad, that the Ambassador had caused the Ham-strings of the presented Horses to be Cut; And the Ambassador being yet upon the Frontiers, he made him return all the Indian Slaves which he carried along with him, of which he had a prodigious number.

Mean while, Aureng-Zebe was not so much concern'd, nor troubled himself so much with this Ambassador, as Chah-Jehan, upon a like occasion, did with him, that was sent to him from the great Chah-Abbas. When the Persians are in the humor of Rallying against the Indians, they relate these three or four little Stories of them: They say, That Chah-Jehan seeing that the Courtship and Promises made to their Ambassador were not able to prevail with him, so as to make him perform his Salute after the Indian Mode, he devised this Artifice; he commanded to shut the great Gate of the Court of the Amkas, where he was to receive him, and to leave only open the Wicket, through which one man could not pass but very difficultly, by stooping and holding down his Head, as the fashion is, when one maketh an Indian Reverence, to the end that it might be said, he had made the Ambassador put himself in a posture, which was something lower than the Indian Salam, or Salute; but that that Ambassador being aware of this trick, came in with his Back foremost: And that Chah-Jehan, out of indignation to see himself catch'd, told him, Eh Bed-bake, Thou Wretch, dost thou think thou comest into a Stable of Asses, such as thou art? And that the Ambassador, without any alteration, answer'd, Who would not think so, seeing such a little Door?

Another story is this; That at a certain time Chah-Jehan taking ill some coarse and fierce Answers return'd to him by the Persian Ambassador, could not hold to tell him, What, hath Chah-Abbas no other men at his Court, that he must send to me such a Fool as thy self? And that the Ambassador answer'd, He hath many better and wiser than me, but to such a King, such an Ambassador. They add, That on a certain day Chah-Jehan, who had made the Ambassador to dine in his Presence, and sought some occasion to affront him, seeing that he was busie in picking and gnawing of Bones, asked him smiling, Eh Eltchy-Gi, My Lord Ambassador, What shall the Dogs eat? And that he answer'd readily, Kiebery, that is, a Dish of Pulse, which is the food of the meaner sort of People, and which he saw Chah-Jehan eat, because he loved it.

They say also, That Chah-Jehan once asked him, What he thought of his new Dehli (which he was building) in comparison of Hispahan? And that he answer'd aloud, and with an Oath, Billah, Billah, Hispahan doth not come near the dust of Dehli; which Chah-Jehan took for a high Commendation, though the Ambassador mocked him, because the dust is so troublesome at Dehli.

Lastly, They relate that Chah-Jehan one day pressing him to tell him, What he thought of the Grandeur of the Kings of Indostan, compared to that of the Kings of Persia? He answer'd, That, in his opinion, one could not better compare the Kings of India than to a large Moon of 15 or 16 days old, and those of Persia, to a small Moon of two or three days. And that this Answer did at first please Chah-Jehan, but that soon after he perceived, that that Comparison did him but little honour, the Ambassador's sence being, that the Kings of Indostan were decreasing, and those of Persia increasing.

Whether these Points are so commendable, and such marks of Wit, every one is free to judge, as he seeth cause. My opinion is, That a discreet and respectful Gravity is much more becoming Ambassadors, than Rallery and Roughness, especially, when they have to do with Kings, who will not be rallied with, witness an Accident that befell this very Ambassador; for Chah-Jehan was at length so weary of him, and his freedom, that he called him no otherwise than Fool; and one day gave secret order, that when he should enter into a pretty long and narrow Street, that is near the Fortrefs, to come to the Hall of the Assembly, they should let loose upon him an ill-conditioned and fierce Elephant; and certainly, if the Ambassador had not nimbly leapt out of his Paleky, and, together with his dextrous Attendants, shot some Arrows into the Trunk of the Elephant, which forced him to turn back, he had been utterly spoiled.

It was at this time, upon the departure of the Persian Ambassador, that Aureng-Zebe received with that admirable wisdom his Tutor Mallah-Sale, the History of which is rare and considerable. This old man, who long since had retired himself towards Caboul, and settled himself on some Lands, which Chah-Jehan had given him, had no sooner heard of the great fortune of Aureng-Zebe his Discipline, who had overcome Dara and all his other Brothers, and was now King of Indostan, but he came in haste to the Court, swelled with hopes of being presently advanced to no less than the dignity of an Omrab. He maketh his Court, and endeavors to engage all his Friends, and Rauehenara-Begum, the King's Sister, employs her self for him. But yet there pass three whole Months, that Aureng-Zebe does not so much as seem to look upon him; till at length wearied to have him always at his Elbow, and before his Face, he sent for him to a place apart, where there was no body but Hakim-lul-Mouluk, Danech-mend-kan, and three or four of those Omrabs, that pretend to Science, and then spoke to him to this effect (as I was informed by my Agah.)

What is it you would have of me Doctor? Can you reasonably desire I should make you one of the chief Omrabs of my Court? Let me tell you, if you had instructed me as you should have done, nothing would be more just: For I am of this persuasion, that a Child well educated and instructed, is as much, at least, obliged to his Master as to his Father: But where are those good Documents you have given me? In the first place you have taught me, that all that Frangistan (so it seems they call Europe) was nothing, but I know not what little Island, of which the greatest King was he of Portugal, and next to him he of Holland, and after him he of England; and as to the other Kings, as those of France and Andalusia, you have represented them to me as our petty Raja's; telling me, that the Kings of Indostan were far above them all together, and that they were the true and only Houmajons, the Ekbars, the Jehan-Guyres, the Chah-Jehans, the Fortunate ones, the Great ones, the Conquerors and Kings of the World; and that Persia and Usbec, Kachguer, Tartar and Catay, Pegu, China, and Matchina did tremble at the name of the Kings of Indostan: Admirable Geography! You should rather have taught me exactly to distinguish all those different States of the world, and well to understand their strength, their way of fighting, their Customs, Religions, Governments and Interests; and by the perusal of solid History, to observe their Rise, Progress, Decay, and whence, how, and by what accidents and errors, those great Changes and Revolutions of Empires and Kingdoms have happened. I have scarce learnt of you the name of my Grandfathers, the famous Founders of this Empire; so far were you from having taught me the History of their Life, and what course they took to make such great Conquests. You had a mind to teach me the Arabian Tongue, to read and to write, I am much obliged to you (forsooth) for having made me lose so much time upon a Language, that requires ten or twelve years to attain to its perfection; as if the Son of a King should think it to be an honour to him, to be a Grammarian, or some Doctor of the Law, and to learn other Languages than those of his Neighbors, when he cannot well be without them; he, to whom Time is so precious for so many weighty things, which he ought by times to learn. As if there were any spirit that did not with some reluctancy, and even with a kind of debasement, employ it self in so sad and dry an exercise, so long some and tedious, as is that of learning words.

Thus did Aureng-Zebe resent the pedantick Instructions of his Tutor; to which 'tis affirmed in that Court, that after some Entertainment which he had with others, he further added the following Reproof.

'Know you not, that Childhood well govern'd, being a state which is ordinarily accompanied with an happy memory, is capable of thousands of good Precepts and Instructions, which remain deeply impressed the whole remainder of a man's life, and keep the mind always raised for great Actions? The Law, Prayers, and Sciences, may they not as well be learned in our Mother-Tongue, as in Arabick? You told my Father Chah-Jehan, that you would teach me Philosophy. 'Tis true, I remember very well; that you have entertain'd me for many years with airy questions, of things that afford no satisfaction at all to the mind, and are of no use in humane Society, empty Notions, and meer Phancies, that have only this in them, that they are very hard to understand; and very easie to forget, which are only capable to tire and spoil a good understanding, and to breed an Opinion that is insupportable. I still remember, that after you had thus amused me, I know not how long, with your fine Philosophy, all I retained of it, was a multitude of barbarous and dark words, proper to bewilder, perplex, and tire out the best Wits, and only invented, the better to cover the vanity and ignorance of men like your self, that would make us believe, that they know all, and that under those obscure and ambiguous words, are hid great mysteries, which they alone are capable to understand: If you had season'd me with that Philosophy, which formeth the mind to ratiocination, and insensibly accustoms it to be satisfied with nothing but solid Reasons; if you had given me those excellent Precepts and Doctrines, which raise the Soul above the Assaults of Fortune, and reduce her to an unshakeable and always equal temper; and permit her not to be lifted up by Prosperity, nor debased by Adversity; if you had taken care to give me the knowledge of what we are, and what are the first principles of things; and had assisted me in forming in my mind a fit Idea of the greatness of the Universe, and of the admirable order and motion of the parts thereof; if, I say, you had instilled into me this kind of Philosophy, I should think my self incomparably more obliged to you, than Alexander was to his Aristotle; and believe it my duty to recompence you otherwise, than he did him. Should not you, instead of your flattery, have taught me somewhat of that point so important to a King, which is, what the reciprocal duties are of a Sovereign to his Subjects, and those of Subjects to their Sovereign? And ought not you to have consider'd, that one day I should be obliged with the Sword to dispute my Life and the Crown with my Brothers? Is not that the destiny almost of all the Sons of Indostan? Have you ever taken any care to make me learn, what 'tis to besiege a Town, or to set an Army in Array? For these things I am obliged to others, not at all to you. Go, and retire to the Village whence you are come, and let no body know who you are, or what is become of you.

At that time there arose a kind of Tempest against Astrologers, which did not displease me. Most people of Asia are so infatuated by Judiciary Astrology, that they believe there is nothing done here below, but 'tis written above (for so they speak.) In all their Undertakings therefore they consult Astrologers. When two Armies are ready to give Battel, they beware of falling on, till the Astrologer hath taken and determined the moment he fancies propitious for the beginning of the Combat. And so, when the matter is about electing a Captain-General of an Army, of dispatching an Ambassador, of concluding a Marriage, of beginning a Voyage, and of doing any other thing, as buying a Slave, putting on new Apparel, &c. nothing of all that is done, without the sentence of Mr. Star-Gazer; which is an incredible vexation, and a custom drawing after it such important consequences, that I know not how it can subsist so long: For the Astrologer must needs have knowledge of all that passeth, and of all that is undertaken, from the greatest Affairs to the least.

But behold, it happen'd, that the prime Astrologer of the King was drown'd, which occasioned a great noise at Court, and was a great discredit to Astrology: For he being the person that determined the moments of all Enterprizes and Actions for the King, and the Omrabs, every one wondred, how a man so experienced, and that for so long time had dispensed good Adventures to others, could not foresee his own misfortune. There were not wanting those, who pretended to be wiser than others, and said, that in Frangistan, where Sciences did flourish, the Grandees do suspect all such kind of people, and that some hold them even no better than Mountebanks, that 'tis much doubted, whether this knowledge is grounded upon good and solid reasons, and that it may very well be some fancy of Astrologers, or rather an Artifice to make themselves necessary to the great ones, and to make them in some measure to depend on them.

All these Discourses very much displeased the Astrologers; but nothing angered them so much as this Story, become very famous, viz. That the great Chah-Abas King of Persia, commanded to be digged and prepared a little place in his Seraglio to make a Garden; that the young Trees were all ready, and that the Gardener made account to plant them the next day. Mean time the Astrologer taking upon him, said, That a good nick of time was to be observed for planting them, to make them prosper. Chah-Abas being content it should be so, the Star Gazer took his Instruments, turned over his Books, made his Calculation, and concluded, That by reason of such and such a Conjunction and Aspect of the Planets, it was necessary they should be set presently. The Master-Gardener, who minded nothing less than this Astrologer, was not then at hand; yet for all that, they fell to work immediately, making holes, and planting the Trees, Chah-Abas himself setting them, that it might be said, that they were Trees set with Chah-Abas's own hands. The Gardener returning at Night, was sufficiently amazed when he saw the work done ; and finding that the right place and order designed by him, was not taken ; that, for Example, an Apricock-Tree stood where an Apple-Tree should stand, and a Pear-Tree where an Almond-Tree ; being heartily angry with the Astrologer, caused all the Trees to be plucked up again, and laid them down, with some Earth about them, for next morning, the time chosen by himself. The News hereof came soon to the Ears of the Astrologer, who presently told Chab-Abas of it : He forthwith sent for the Gardner, and with some indignation asked him, What had made him so bold, as to pull up those Young Trees he had planted with his own hand ? That the time had been so exactly taken for them, that so good an one would never be had again ; and that so he had marred all. The rude Gardener, who had a Cup of Chiras-Wine in his head, look'd aside upon the Astrologer, and grumbling and swearing, said to him these words, Billab, Billab, that must needs be an admirable point of time which thou hast taken for these Trees, Unhappy Astrologer ! They were planted this day Noon, and this Evening they have been plucked up again. When Chab-Abas heard this, he fell a laughing, turned his back upon the Astrologer, and went away.

I shall here add two Particulars, though hapned in the time of Chab-Jehan, because such things fall out often enough, and do withall give occasion to observe that ancient and barbarous custom, which makes the Kings of India Heirs of the Goods of those that die in their Service. The first was of Neiknam-kan, one of the most ancient Omrabs of the Court, and who for the space of 40 or 50 years, wherein he had always been employ'd in considerable Offices, had heaped up great store of Gold and Silver. This Lord seeing himself near his End, and thinking upon this unreasonable custom, which often renders the Wife of a great Man, upon his decease, poor and miserable in an instant, and necessitates her to present a Petition, begging some small Pension for her subsistence, and for that of her Children, who are constrained to lift themselves for common Soldiers under some Omrab, who, I say, considering this with himself, secretly distributed all his Treasure to indigent Knights, and poor Widows, filled his Trunks with old pieces of Iron, old Shoes, Rags and Bones, and locked and sealed them, telling every body that they were Goods belonging to Chab-Jehan, the King. These Trunks, after his death, were brought before Chab-Jehan, when he was in the Assembly ; and by his command instantly opened in the presence of all the Omrabs, that saw all this fine Stuff, which so provoked and discomposed Chab-Jehan, that he rose in great fury, and went away.

The other is only a piece of Gallantry. A rich Banean, or Heathen Merchant, being a great Usurer, (as most of them are) who had always been in Employment, and in the Pay of the King, came to dye. Some years after his death, his Son did extremely importune the Widow, his Mother, to let him have some Money : She finding him to be a prodigal and debauched Youth, gave him as little as she could. This young Fool, by the perswasion of others like himself, made his Complaints to Chab-Jehan, and was so silly, as to discover to him all the Goods his Father had left, which amounted to Two hundred thousand Rupies, or Hundred thousand Crowns. Chab-Jehan ; who soon got an itch for this Treasure, sent for the Widow, and commanded her in the open Assembly to send him an Hundred thousand Rupies, and to give Fifty thousand to her Son, giving order at the same time to put her away. The old Woman, though surprized at this Command, and perplexed enough, that she was so suddenly thrust out, without the liberty of speaking, yet lost not her judgment, but with a loud voice gave out, That she had something of moment to discover to his Majesty : Whereupon being brought in again, she said, God save your Majesty ; I find that my Son hath some reason to demand of me the Goods of his Father, as being of his and my flesh and blood, and therefore our Heir ; but I would gladly know, what Kindred your Majesty is to my deceased Husband, to be his Heir. When Chab-Jehan heard so plain a piece of Rallery, and a discourse of Parentage of the King of the Indies, with a She-Banian, or Idolatrous She-Merchant, he could not hold laughing, and commanded she should be gone, and that nothing should be asked of her.

But to return, I shall not relate all the other considerable things that have happened since the end of the War, that is, since 1660. unto my departure, which was above six years after ; though doubtless that would tend much to the design I had in relating the other Particulars, which is, to make known the Genius and Temper of the Mogols and Indians. This I may do in another place : Here I shall only give an Account of five or six Particulars, which those that shall have read this Relation, will doubtless be curious of.

The

The first, that though Aureng-Zebe made Chah-Jehan his Father, to be kept in the Fortrefs of Agra with all imaginable care and caution; yet notwithstanding he still left him in his old Apartment with Begum-Sabeh, his eldest Daughter, his other Women, Singers, Dancers, Cooks, and others, nothing of that kind was wanting to him. There were also certain Mullahs, that were permitted to come and to read the Alcoran to him (for he was become very devout.) And when he thought fit, there were brought before him brave Horses, and tamed Gazelles (which is a kind of Goat) to make them fight with one another; as also divers sorts of Birds of Prey, and several other rare Animals, to divert him as formerly. Aureng-Zebe himself used an Art to overcome at last his fierceness and obstinacy, which he had hitherto kept, though a Prisoner. And this was the effect of the obliging Letters, full of respect and submission, which he often wrote to his Father, consulting him often as his Oracle, and expressing a thousand cares for him; sending him also uncessantly some pretty Present or other, whereby Chah-Jehan was so much gained, that he also wrote very often to Aureng-Zebe touching the Government and State Affairs, and of his own Accord sent him some of those Jewels, which before he had told him of, that Hammers were ready to beat them to Powder the first time he should again ask for them. Besides, he consented that the Daughter of Dara, which he had so peremptorily denied, should be deliver'd to him; and granted him at length that pardon and paternal blessing which he had so often desired without obtaining it. Yet, under all this, Aureng-Zebe did not always flatter him; on the contrary, he sometimes return'd sharp Answers, when he met with strains in his Fathers Letters that were pregnant, or expressed something of his former height and authority. Of this we may judge by the Letter, which I know from a very good hand was once written to him by Aureng-Zebe, to this effect:

Sir, You would have me indispensably follow those ancient Customs, and make my self Heir to all those that are in my Pay with the wonted rigor: An Omrah, and even a Merchant can no sooner dye, and sometimes even before his death, but we seal up his Trunks, and seize on his Goods, and make a strict enquiry into his Estate, imprisoning and ill-treating the Officers of the House to discover to us all he hath, even to the least Jewels. I will believe that there is some policy in doing so, but it cannot be denied, that 'tis very rigorous, and sometimes very unjust; and to speak the very truth, we may deserve well enough, that the same should befall us every day, what hapned to you from your Neikman-kan, and from the Widow of your rich Indian Merchant. Moreover (said he) it seems, I am by you reputed proud and haughty now I am King: As if you knew not by the experience of more than Forty years of your Reign, how heavy an Ornament a Crown is, and how many sad and restless Nights it passeth through: as if I could forget that excellent passage of Mir-Timur, (commonly called Tamberlan) which is so seriously delivered to us by that great Grandfather of ours, Ekkbar, to the end that we might the more weigh the importance and value of it, and consider, whether we have cause to pride our selves so much in a Crown. You well know, that he said, that the same day when Timur took Bajazet, he made him come before him, and having fixed his eyes on him, fell a laughing; at which Bajazet being highly offended, fiercely said to him, Laugh not at my Fortune, Timur; know that 'tis God that is the Dispenser of Kingdoms and Empires; and that the same can befall you to morrow, that hath befallen me to day. Whereupon Timur made this serious and brave Answer, I know as well as you, Bajazet, that 'tis God that distributeth Kingdoms and Empires; I laugh not at your ill Fortune, God forbid I should do so: But beholding your face, I smiled, and had this thought, That certainly these Kingdoms and Empires must in themselves be very little and contemptible things in the eyes of God, since he giveth them to persons so ill made as you and I both are; a deformed one-ey'd man, as you; and a lame wretch, as thy self. You require also, that abandoning all my other Employments, which I believe very necessary for the establishment and happiness of this State, I should think on nothing but Conquests, and the enlargement of the Empire. I must confess that this is indeed the business of a great Monarch, and of a Soul truly Royal, and that I should not deserve to be of the Blood of the Great Timur, if I were not of that mind, and had not such inclinations. Mean time, I think I sit not idle, and my Armies are not useless in the Kingdoms of Decan and Bengale: But we must also aver, that the greatest Conquerors are not always the greatest Kings; that we too often see a Barbarian making Conquests, and that those great Bodies of Conquests do ordinarily fall of themselves, and by their own weight. He is a great King, that knows to acquit himself worthily of that Great and August Employment and Charge of Kings, which is to dispense Justice to their Subjects, &c. The rest is not come to my hands.

The second is in regard of the Emir-Jemla. It were to injure this great Man, to pass by with silence his deportment to Aureng-Zebe after the War, and the manner of ending his days. This eminent person after he had dispatched the Affair of Bengale, with Sultan Sujah (the second of these four Brothers) not like Gionkan, that infamous Patan with Dara; nor like the Raja of Serenaguer with Soliman-Chekoub; but like a Great Captain and dextrous Politician, pursuing him as far as the Sea-side, and necessitating him to fly and to escape out of his hands; after, I say, he had done these things, he sent an Eunuch to Aureng-Zebe, intreating him, that he would give him leave to transport his Family to Bengale; that now that the War was at an end, and he broken with Age, he hoped he would grant him the advantage of ending his life in the company of his Wife and Children.

But Aureng-Zebe is too sharp-sighted, not to pierce into the designs of Emir. He seeth him triumphing over Sujah; he knows his great credit and reputation, and that he hath the esteem of a very wise, undertaking, valiant and rich man; and that the Kingdom of Bengale is not only the best of all Indostan, but strong of it self, and further, that this Emir is in the head of a well disciplin'd Army, which both honours and fears him. Besides, he is not ignorant of his ambition, and foreseeth well enough, that if he should have with him his Son Mahmet-Emirkan, he would aspire to the Crown, and at least take full possession of Bengale, if he should not be able to advance things further. At the same time he is also well aware, that there is danger in refusing him, and that he may possibly prove such a man, as in case of denial, may run into some dangerous extream, as he had done in Golkonda. How then, think ye, did he carry himself in this conjuncture? He sends to him his Wife and Daughter, and all the Children of his Son: He maketh the Emir a Mir-Ul-Onrah, which is in that Empire the greatest degree of honour that a Favourite can be raised to: And as to Mahmet-Emirkan, he maketh him the Great-Bakchis, which is a dignity and charge like that of our Great Master of the Horse, the second or third Office in the State, but such an one as absolutely obligeth the possessor of it to be always at the Court, not suffering him, but very difficultly, to be absent from the person of the King.

The Emir soon perceived, that Aureng-Zebe had skilfully put by the stroke, that it would be in vain the second time to ask of him his Son; that he could not do it without offending him; and that therefore the safest way would be to rest contented with all the testimonies of Friendship, and with all the Honours, together with the Government of Bengale; being in the mean time always upon his guard, and in such a posture, that since he could attempt nothing against Aureng-Zebe, Aureng-Zebe should not be able to attempt any thing against him.

Thus have we seen these two Great Men carry themselves to one another: And in this condition did affairs remain for almost a year; till Aureng-Zebe, too well knowing that a great Captain cannot be long at rest, and that, if he be not employed in a Foreign War, he will at length raise a Domestick one; proposed to him to make War upon that rich and potent Raja of Acham, whose Territories are on the North of Dake, upon the Gulf of Bengale. The Emir, who in all appearance had already designed this same thing of himself, and who believed, that the Conquest of this Country, would make way for his Immortal Honour, and be an occasion of carrying his Arms as far as China, declared himself ready for this Enterprize. He embarked at Dake with a puissant Army; upon a River which comes from those parts; upon which having gone about an hundred Leagues North-Eastward, he arrived at a Castle called Azo, which the Raja of Acham had usurped from the Kingdom of Bengale, and possessed for many years. He attacked this place, and took it by force in less than fifteen days; thence marching over Land towards Chamdara, which is the Inlet into the Country of that Raja; he entred into it after 26 days journey, still Northward: There a Battel was fought, in which the Raja of Acham was worsted, and obliged to retreat to Guerguon, the Metropolis of his Kingdom, four miles distant from Chamdara. The Emir pursued him so close, that he gave him no time to fortifie himself in Guerguon: For he arrived in sight of that Town in five days, which constrained the Raja, seeing the Emir's Army, to fly towards the Mountains of the Kingdom of Lassa, and to abandon Guerguon, which was pillaged, as had been Chamdara. They found there vast riches, it being a great, very fair and Merchant-like Town, and where the Women are extraordinarily beautiful. Mean time, the season of the Rains came in sooner than usually; and they being excessive in those parts, and overflowing all the Countrey, except such Villages as stand on raised ground, the Emir was much embarrassed. For the Raja made his people of the Mountains come down from all parts thereabout, and to carry away all the provisions of the Field; whereby the Emir's Army (as rich as 'twas) before the end of the rains fell into great streights, without being able to go forward or backward. It could not advance, by reason of the Mountains very difficult to pass, and continually pester'd with great Rains; nor retreat, because of the like Rains and deep wayes; the Raja also having caused the way to be digged up as far as to Chamdara: So that the Emir was forced to remain in that wretched condition during the whole time of the Rain; after which, when he found his Army distast'd, tired out, and half starv'd, he was necessitated to give over the Design he had of advancing, and to return the same way he was come. But this Retreat was made with so much pains, and so great inconveniencies, by reason of the dirt, the want of Victuals, and the pursuit of the Raja falling on the Rear, that every body (but he) that had not known how to remedy the disorder of such a March, nor had the patience to be sometimes five or six hours at one passage to make the Souldiery get over it without confusion, would have utterly perish'd, himself, Army, and all; yet he, notwithstanding all these difficulties and obstacles, made a shift to come back with great honour and vast riches. He design'd to return thither again the next year, and to pursue his undertaking, supposing that Azo, which he had fortified, and where he left a strong Garrison, would be able to hold out the rest of the year against the Raja. But he was no sooner arriv'd there, but Fluxes began to rage in his Army: Neither had himself a body of Steel more than the rest; he fell sick and died, whereby Fortune ended the just apprehensions of Aureng-Zebe. I say, the just apprehensions; for there was none of those that knew this great man, and the state of the affairs of Indostan, who did not say, 'Tis this day that Aureng-Zebe is King of Bengale. And himself could not forbear to express some such thing; for he publicly said to Mahmet-Emir-kan; You have lost your Father, and I the greatest and the most dangerous Friend I had; yet notwithstanding he comforted this Son, and withal assured him, that he would ever be a Father to him. And whereas 'twas thought, that he would at least cut off his Salary, and make Inquisition into his Treasury, he confirm'd him in his Office of Bakebis, augmented his Pension to a thousand Rupies a month, and left him Heir of all the Estate of his Father, although the Custom of the Country empower'd him to seize on all.

The third is concerning Chah-best-kan, whom Aureng-Zebe made first Governour of Agra, when he went out to the Battel of Kadjone against Sultan Sujah; and afterward, Governour and General of the Army in Decan; and at last, after the death of Emir-Jemla, Governour and General of the Army in Bengale, together with the charge of Mirul Omrah which Emir-Jemla had possess'd. This Chah-best-kan is he, whom in our History we have mention'd as Uncle to Aureng-Zebe, and one that hath so much contributed to his happiness by his eloquent and skilful pen, as well as by his intrigues and counsels. It would be injurious to his Renown also, to be silent of the important enterprize, which he undertook presently when he entred upon his Government; and that the rather, because Emir-Jemla, whether out of Policy, or for another cause, had no mind to tempt him; as also, because the particularities, which I am going to relate, will shew not only the pass'd and present state of the Kingdoms of Bengale and Rakan, which hitherto hath not been well described to us by any; but also some other things that are worth knowing.

To the end therefore that the importance of Chah-best-kan's attempt may be well understood, and a good Idea be had of what passeth about the Gulf of Bengale, we are to know, that these many years there have always been in the Kingdom of Rakan or Moy, some Portugueses, and with them a great number of their Christian Slaves, and other Franguis, gather'd from all parts. That was the refuge of the Run-aways from Goa, Ceilan, Cochin, Malague, and all those other places, which the Portugueses formerly held in the Indies; and they were such as had abandoned their Monasteries, men that had been twice or thrice Married, Murtherers: In a word, such as had deserved the Rope, were most welcome and most esteem'd there, leading in that Country a life that was very detestable, and altogether unworthy of Christians, inso-much that they impunely butchered and poisoned one another, and assassinated their own Priests, who sometimes were not better than themselves. The King of Rakan in the apprehension he hath ever had of the Mogol, kept them for a guard of his Frontiers, in a Port-Town called Chategon, giving them Land, and liberty to live as they pleased. Their ordinary Trade was Robbery and Piracy. With some small and light Gallies they did nothing but coast about that Sea, and entring into all Rivers thereabout, and into the Channels and Arms of Ganges, and between all those Isles of the lower Bengale, and often penetrating even so far as forty or fifty leagues up into the Country, surprized and carried away whole Towns, Assemblies, Markets, Feasts and Weddings of the poor Gentiles, and others of that Country, making Women Slaves, great and small, with strange cruelty; and burning all they could not carry away. And thence it is, that at present there are seen in the mouth of Ganges so many fine Isles quite deserted, which were formerly well peopled, and where no other Inhabitants are found but wild Beasts, and especially Tygers.

This great number of Slaves, which thus they took from all quarters, behold what use they made of. They had boldness and impudence enough, to come and sell to that very Country the old people, which they knew not what to do with; where it so fell out, that those who had escaped the danger by flight, and by hiding themselves in the Woods, labour'd to redeem to day their Fathers and Mothers, that had been taken yesterday. The rest they kept for their service to make Rowers of them; and such Christians as they were themselves, bringing them up to robbing and killing; or else they sold them to the Portugueses of Goa, Ceilan, St. Thomas, and others, and even to those that were remaining in Bengale at Ogouli, who were come thither to settle themselves there by the favour of Jehan-Guyre, the Grandfather of Aureng-Zebe, who suffered them there upon the account of Traffick; and of his having no aversion to Christians, as also because they promised him to keep the Bay of Bengale clear from all Pyrates. And it was towards the Isle of Galles, near the Cape of Palmer, where this fine Trade was. These Pyrates lay there in wait at the passage for the Portugueses, who filled their Ships with them at a very easie rate; this infamous Rabble impudently bragging, that they made more Christians in one year, than all the Missionaries of the Indies in ten; which would be a strange way of enlarging Christianity.

These were the Pyrates that made Chah-Jehan, who was a more zealous Mahumetan than his Father Jehan-Guyre, to express at last his passion, not only against the Reverend Fathers the Jesuits, Missionaries of Agra, in that he caused to be pulled down the best part of a very fair and large Church that had been built, as well as that of Labor, by the favour of Jehan-Guyre, who as I said, did not hate Christianity; and upon which there stood a great Steeple with a great Bell in it, whose sound might be heard over all the Town, not only, I say, against those Jesuits, but also against the Christians of Ogouli: For being impatient to see them connive at the Pyrates, to make the name of the Franguis formidable, and to fill their houses with Slaves that were his own Subjects, he wasted and utterly ruined them, after he had both with fair words and menaces drawn from them as much money as he could: And because they were indiscreetly obstinate, in refusing what he demanded of them, he besieged them, and caused them all to be brought to Agra, even their very Children, their Priests and Friars. This was a misery and a desolation not to be parallell'd; a kind of Babylonian transmigration. There they were all made Slaves: The handfom Women were shut up in the Seraglio; the old Women and others were distributed among divers Omrabs. The young Lads were circumcised, and made Pages; and men of age renounced for the most part their Faith, either terrified by the threatnings they heard daily, that they should be trampled upon by Elephants, or drawn away by fair Promises. 'Tis true, that there were some of those Friars, who persisted, and that the Missionaries of Agra, who notwithstanding all this unhappiness, remained in their houses; found means afterwards, partly by Friends, partly by Money, to get many of them away, and to have them conveyed to Goa, and to other places belonging to the Portugueses.

They were also the same Pyrates, who some time before the desolation of Ogouli, offered to the Vice-Roy of Goa to put the whole Kingdom of Rakan into their hands for the King of Portugal; but he refused, they say, this offer, out of arrogance and jealousy, and would not send the succours, which for that end was demanded of him by a certain Bastian Consalve, who had made himself head of those people, and was become become so potent and considerable, that he married one of the Kings Daughters; being unwilling that it should be said, that a man of so mean Extraction as this Bastian was, had done such a Master-piece. But it may be said on this occasion, that this is not much to be wondred at, considering that the Portugueses in the Indies by such a conduct have divers times been faulty on the like occasions, in Japan, in Pegu, in Ethiopia, and other places; not to mention, that by this way, and that perhaps by a just Divine chastisement (as they all frankly confess themselves) they are become a prey to their Enemies, and fallen so low in the Indies, that I know not whether they will ever recover there; whereas formerly, before they were corrupted by vice, and degenerated through pleasure, they made all others tremble in those parts; forasmuch as then they were brave and generous men, zealous for the Christian Religion, considerable for gallant exploits and for riches; all the Indian Kings seeking their friendship.

Besides this, the same Pyrates seized at that time on the Isle of Sondiva, an advantageous Post to command a part of the Mouth of Ganges: In which Isle a certain Augustin Frier, a very famous man, acted the King for many years, having taken a course, God knows how, to rid himself of the Commander of that place.

Moreover, the same Robbers took Sultan-Sujab at Daka, to carry him away in their Galeasses, to Rakan, as we related above, and found means to open his Coffers, and to rob him of good store of Jewels, which afterwards were secretly, and at a very cheap rate, sold in Rakan, most of them being fallen into the hands of people that had no skill in them, and afterwards into the hands of the Hollanders, and others, who knew how to buy them up quickly, making those fellows believe, that they were soft Diamonds, and that they would pay them according to the degrees of their hardness.

Lastly, They are they that for many years have given exercise to the Great Mogol in Bengale; having obliged him there to keep always Garrisons every where upon the Passes, and a great Militia, and a Fleet also of Galeasses to oppose their courses, and who, notwithstanding all this, have made shift to make strange devastations, and often to enter far into the Country, and to laugh at all the Souldiery of the Mogols; in regard they were become so bold, and so dextrous at their Weapons, and so skilful in piloting their Galeasses, that four or five of them stuck not to set upon fourteen or fifteen Mogolians, which they also actually worsted, and took or run aground. And upon these Pyrates Chab best-kan cast his eyes as soon as he came into Bengale, taking a resolution to deliver the Country of this plague of people, that had so long waited it; and designing afterwards to pass on, and to attack the King of Rakan, according to the order of Aureng-Zebe, who at any price had a mind to revenge the blood of Sultan-Sujab, and all his Family, that had been so cruelly handled, and to teach that Barbarian, how the Blood Royal was to be regarded and esteemed on any occasion whatsoever: Behold now with what dexterity Chab best-kan carrieth on this design!

Knowing that 'tis impossible to pass any Cavalry by Land, no not so much as any Infantry, from Bengale into Rakan, because of the many channels and rivers upon the Frontiers; and also that on the other side, those Pyrates of Chatigon, whom we just now were speaking of, would be powerful enough to hinder him from transporting them by Sea; he thought upon this experiment, viz. to engage the Hollanders in his design. He therefore sent a kind of Ambassador to Batavia, empowering him to treat upon certain Conditions, with the General of that Company, jointly to subdue the whole Kingdom of Rakan; as formerly Chab-Abbas subdued that of Ormuz, in conjunction with the English. The General of Batavia seeing the thing to be possible, and that it was a means more and more to break the Portugueses in the Indies, and that it would turn to a very good account to the Company, dispatch'd away two Men of War for Bengale, to favour the transportation of the Mogolian Troops in spite of those Pyrates. But observe what Chab best-kan did before these Men of War arrived: He equipped a great number of Galeasses, and many large Vessels to transport the Army; threatned the Pyrates, utterly to spoil and ruin them; acquainted them with the design of Aureng-Zebe upon Rakan; that a potent Army of the Dutch was near; that they should think on themselves and their families, if they were wise; and in a word, if they would abandon the service of the King of Rakan, and take that of Aureng-Zebe, he would procure very good conditions for them, distribute amongst them as much Land in Bengale as they desired, and pay them the double of what they had now.

Aureng-

'Tis doubtful, whether these Menaces and Promises made impression upon them, or whether it was not an Accident that moved them, they having about that time assassinated one of the chief Officers of the King of Rakan, and apprehending a punishment for that Crime: However it be, they were caught, and they were one day struck with such a panick terror, that they shipp'd themselves all at once in forty or fifty of their Galeasses, and waisted over to Bengale to Chah-best-kan, and that with so much precipitation, that they hardly took time to embark their Wives and Children, and what else was most precious to them. Chah-best-kan receiv'd them with open Arms, courted them exceedingly, gave them very considerable Pay, and without letting them cool, made them, jointly with his whole Army, to attack and take the Isle of Sondiva, which was fallen into the hands of the King of Rakan, and thence to pass with all his Horse and Foot to Chatigon. About this time the two Holland Vessels arrived, but Chah-best-kan, who thought that henceforth it would be easie for him to compass his design, thanked them. I saw these Ships in Bengale, and their Commanders, who were but little contented with such thanks and liberalities of Chah-best-kan. As to the Pyrates, since now he holds them fast, and hopeless of ever returning to Chatigon, and hath no more need of them, he makes nothing of all those large Promises he made them, and treats them not as he should, but as they deserve, leaving them whole months without Pay, and not looking upon them otherwise than Traytors, and infamous men, unfit to be trusted, after they have so vilely deserted him, whose Salt they had eaten so many years. After this manner did Chah-best-kan put an end to this Rabble, which, as I said, have ruined and dispoiled all the lower Bengale. Time will shew whether he will be as happy in the remainder of his Enterprize against the King of Rakan.

The fourth Particular is concerning the two Sons of Aureng-Zebe, viz. Sultan Mahmud, and Sultan Mazum. He still keeps the first of them in Goualeor, but (if one may believe the common report) without making him take the Poult, which is the ordinary Drink of those that are put into that place. As to the other, though he hath always been a pattern of reservedness and moderation, yet one knows not whether he was not too forward in making a Party, when his Father was so extremely sick; or whether Aureng-Zebe have not upon other occasions perceiv'd something that might give him cause of jealousy; or whether he had not a mind to make an authentick proof of both his Obedience and Courage. However it be, one day he commanded him in an unconcerned manner, in a full Assembly of the Omrabs, to go and kill a Lyon that was come down to the Mountains, and had made great havock and waste in the Countrey; and this he did, without giving order to furnish him with those strong and large Nets, which they are wont to employ in this dangerous kind of hunting in a real mood; telling the great Hunting-Master, who presently call'd for those Nets, that when he was Prince, he did not look for such Formalities. It was the good fortune of Sultan Mazum, that he prosper'd in this Attempt, not losing any more than two or three men, and some Horses that were wounded; although, on the other hand, the matter went not off so pleasantly, the wounded Lyon having leapt up to the head of the Sultan's Elephant. Since that time, Aureng-Zebe hath not been backward to express much Affection to him; he hath given him even the Government of Decan, though with so little power and treasure, that there is no great cause to apprehend any thing upon that Account.

The fifth thing toucheth Mohabet-kan, the Governor of Kaboul; whom Aureng-Zebe took from his Government, and generously pardon'd; not willing, as he said, to lose so brave a Captain, and that had stuck so close to his Benefactor Chah-Jehan. He made him even Governor of Guzuratte, in the place of Jissomseigne, whom he sent to make War in Decan. It may very well be, that some considerable Presents he made to Rauchenara-Begum; and a good number of excellent Persian Horse and Camels, where-with he presented Aureng-Zebe, together with fifteen or sixteen thousand Rupies of Gold, did contribute to make his peace.

On this occasion, of mentioning the Government of Kaboul, which borders upon the Kingdom of Kandahar, which is now in the hands of the Persians, I shall here briefly briefly add some particulars, that serve to this History, and will still more discover that Country, and declare the Interests between Indostan and Persia, which no body, that I know of, hath explained hitherto.

Kandahar, that strong and important place, which is the Capital and the swaying City of this Noble and Rich Kingdom of the same Name, hath in these latter Ages been the subject of grievous Wars between the Mogols and Persians, each of them pretending a Right thereto. Ekbar, that great King of the Indies, took it by force from the Persians, and kept it during his life. And Chah-Abbas, that famous King of Persia, retook it from Jehan-Guyre, the Son of Ekbar. Afterwards it return'd to Chah-Jehan, Son of Jehan-Guyre, not by the Sword, but by the means of the Governor Aly-Merdan-kan, who surrendered it to him, and went over to live at his Court, apprehending the Artifices of his Enemies, who had brought him into disfavour with the King of Persia, that sent for him to make him give an accompt, and to deliver up his Government. The same City was besieged, and retaken afterwards by the Son of Chah-Abbas, and since that besieged twice again, yet without being taken by Chah-Jehan. The first time it was saved from being taken by the ill understanding and jealousy between the Persian Omrahs, that are Pensioners of the Great Mogol, and the most powerful of his Court, as also by the respect they bear to their Natural King: For they all behaved themselves very effeminately in the Siege, and would not follow the Raja Roup, who had already planted his Standards upon the Wall on the side of the Mountain. The second time it was saved by the jealousy of Aureng-Zebe, who would not fall into the breach of the Wall, that our Frangis, the English, Portugueses, Germans and French had made by their Canon, though it was a large one; being unwilling to have it said, that in the time of Dara, who was, in a manner, the first mover of that Enterprize, and was then in the City of Caboul; with his Father Chah-Jehan, the Fortress of Kandahar was taken. Chah-Jehan, some years before the late trouble, was also ready to besiege it the third time, had not Emir-Jemla diverted him from it, advising him to turn his Forces towards Decan, (as hath been said;) with whom Aly-Merdan-kan himself concurred, who was so earnest in his dissuading him from it, as to say to him these words, which I shall punctually relate, as having something extravagant in them:

Your Majesty will never take Kandahar, unless you had such a Traytor there as my self; except you were resolved never to bring a Persian into it, and to make the Bazzars or Markets wholly free, that is, to lay no Impost on those that furnish the Army with provision.

At length, Aureng-Zebe, like the others, had prepared himself in these latter years to besiege it also; whether it was that he was offended at the tart Letters, written to him by the King of Persia, or by reason of the affronts and ill treatment which he had offer'd to Tarbiet-kan his Ambassador; that hearing of the King of Persia's death, he turned back, saying, (which yet is not very credible) that he would not meddle with a Child, a new King; although Chah-Soliman, who hath succeeded his Father, is, in my opinion, about 25 years of age.

The sixth particular we purposed to speak of, concerns those that have faithfully served Aureng-Zebe. Those he hath almost all raised to great places. For first, as we have already related, he made Chah-bet-kan, his Uncle, Governor and General of the Army of Decan, and afterwards, Governor of Bengale. Next, he made Mir-kan Governor of Kaboul; Then Kalil-ullah-kan, of Labor; and Mirbaba, of Elabas; and Lasker-kan, of Patna. The Son of that Allah-Verdi-kan of Sultan Sujah, he appointed Governor of Scindy; and Fazel-kan, who had considerably serv'd him both by his counsels and dexterity, he made Kane-saman, that is, Great Steward of the House Royal: And Danechmend-kan, Governor of Dehli, with this particular grace and privilege, that since he is perpetually employed in studies and foreign Affairs, he so dispenseth with him for not coming twice a day (after the ancient custom) to wait on the King in the Assembly, as not to retrench any thing of his pension for his absence, as he doth to the other Omrahs, if they fail. He hath given to Dianet-kan the Government of Kacibmer (alias Cassimere) that little, and in a manner inaccessible Kingdom, which Ekbar seized on by craft, that earthly Paradise of the Indies; which hath its Histories written in its peculiar Language, whereof I have an abridgment in the Persian Tongue, made by the command of Jehan-Guyre, containing a large Catalogue of many very ancient Kings, Kings, that often were so powerful, that they subdued the Indies as far as China.

'Tis true, that Aureng-Zebe dismissed Nejabat-kan, who did very well in the two Battels of Samonguer and Kadjoue, but then 'tis not fit at all, that a Subject should ever reproach his King, as he did, with the services done him.

As to those infamous men, Gion-kan and Nazer, 'tis known, that the former hath been recompenced as he deserved; but the other no man knows what is become of him.

What concerns Jessomseigne and Jesseigne, there is something as to them that is intricate, which I shall endeavour to unfold. There is a certain Heathen revolted from the King of Visapour, who knew how to possess himself of many important Fortresses, and of some Sea-ports of that King. His name is Seva-Gi, that is, Lord Seva. He is a stout man, vigilant, bold, and undertaking in the highest degree, who gave Chah-best-kan more work and trouble in Decan, than the King of Visapour with all his Forces, and all his Raja's joined with him for their common defence: Insomuch that having designed to take away Chah-best-kan and his Treasures out of the midst of his Army, and of the Town Aureng-Abad, he carried on his design so far, that he had effected it, if he had not been discover'd a little too soon; for one night, accompanied with a number of resolute Fellows he hath about him, he was got into the very apartment of Chah-best-kan, where his Son, who was forward in the defence, was killed, and himself grievously wounded; Seva-Gi in the mean time getting away as well as he came: Who for all this was so far from being daunted, that he undertook another very bold and very dangerous Enterprize, which succeeded much better. He took two or three Thousand chosen men of his Army, with whom he took the Field without noise, spreading a report by the way, that it was a Raja going to the Court. When he was near Suratte, that famous and rich Port of the Indies, instead of marching further, (as he made the great Provost of that Country, whom he met, believe) he fell into that Town, where he staid about three days, cutting off the Arms and Legs of the Inhabitants, to make them confess where were the Treasures; searching, digging, and loading away, or burning what he could not carry with him. Which done, he returned, none opposing his return, loaden with millions of Gold, Silver, Pearls, Silken Stuffs, Fine Linnen, and other rich Merchandise. Jessomseigne was suspected to have had since intelligence with this Seva-Gi, which was the cause that Aureng-Zebe called him away from Decan; but he, instead of going to Debli, went to his own Territory.

I forgot to mention, that in the plunder of Suratte, that Ringleader Seva-Gi, like a Saint, had so much respect to the House of the Reverend Father Ambrose, a Missionary Capucian, that he gave order it should not be plundered; because, said he, I know that the Fathers Franguis are good men. He had also regard to the House of the deceased de Lale, because he understood that he had been great Almoner. He also consider'd the Houses of the English and Dutch, not from Devotion, as he did the former, but because they were in a good posture of defence; especially the English, who having had time to send for assistance from some of their ships that lay near the Town, behaved themselves gallantly, and saved, besides their own, several other houses near them. But a certain Jew of Constantinople, who had brought Rubies of a very great value, to sell them to Aureng-Zebe, carried away the Bell from all, by saving himself from the hands of Seva-Gi; for, rather than to confess that he had any Jewels, he was brought thrice upon his Knees, and the Knife held up to cut his Throat: But it became none save a Jew, hardly in Avarice, to escape in such a manner.

Touching Jesseigne, King Aureng-Zebe made him content to go General of the Army in Decan, sending Sultan-Mazum with him, without any power. He presently and vigorously besieged the principal Fortress of Seva-Gi, and knowing more than all the rest in matter of Negotiation and Treaty, he so order'd the business, that Seva-Gi surrendered before it came to extremity; and then he drew him to Aureng-Zebe's party against Visapour, King Aureng-Zebe declaring him a Raja, taking him under his protection; and giving the Pension of a very considerable Omrab to his Son. Some time after, Aureng-Zebe designing to make War against Persia, wrote to Seva-Gi such obliging Letters touching his Generosity, Ability and Conduct, that he made him resolve, upon the faith of Jesseigne, to come to him to Debli. There a Kinswoman of Aureng-Zebe, the Wife of Chah-best-kan, (who was then at Court) by the influence she had upon the spirit of Aureng-Zebe, persuaded him to arrest him that had murder'd her Son, Son, wounded her Husband, and sacked Suratte: So that one evening Seva-Gi saw his Pavilions beset with three or four Omrahs; but he made shift to get away in the night. This escape made a great noise at Court, every one accusing the eldest Son of the Raja Jasseigne to have assisted him in it. Jesseigne, who presently had news that Aureng-Zebe was very angry with him and his Son, and was advised no more to go to the Court, was day and night upon his guard, apprehending lest Aureng-Zebe should take this for a pretence to fall upon his Lands, and possess himself of them. Whereupon he also soon left Decan to secure his Estate; but when he was at Brampour, he died. Yet notwithstanding Aureng-Zebe was so far from expressing any coldness or resentment to the Son of Jesseigne, that he sent to condole with him for the death of his Father, and continued to him his Pension; which confirms what many say, that it was by the consent of Aureng-Zebe himself, that Seva-Gi escaped, forasmuch as he could retain him no longer at Court, because all the Women there had too great a spleen against him, and looked upon him as a man that had embroiled his hands in the blood of his Kinsmen.

But to return to Decan, we are to consider, that that is a Kingdom, which these Forty years hath constantly been the Theater of War, and upon the score whereof the Mogol hath much to do with the Kings of Golkonda, and of Visapour, and divers little Sovereigns, which is not to be understood, unless it be known, what considerable things have passed in those Parts, and the condition of the Princes that govern them.

All this great Peninsule of Indostan, cutting it from the Bay of Cambaja unto that of Bengale, near Jaganrate, and passing thence to Cape Comori, was scarce two hundred years since entirely (some mountainous Parts excepted) under the Dominion of one only Prince, who consequently was a very great and very potent Monarch: But now it is divided among many different Sovereigns, that are also of different Religions. The cause of this division was, that the King Ramras, the last of those that have possessed this mighty State entirely, did imprudently raise three Slaves, Gurgis, he had about him too high, so as to make them all three Governors of places: The first, of the greatest part of those Countries, which at present are possessed by the Mogol in Decan, about Daulet-Abad, from Bider, Paranda, Suratte, unto Narbadar: The second, of all the other Lands, now comprehended under the Kingdom of Visapour: And the third, of all that is contained under the Kingdom of Golkonda. These three Slaves grew very rich, and found themselves supported by a good number of the Mogols, that were in the service of Ramras, because they were all three Mahometans, of the Sect Chyas, like the Persians. And at length they all revolted together with one accord, killed King Ramras, and return'd to their Government, each taking upon him the Title of Chah or King. The Issue of Ramras, not finding themselves strong enough for them, were content to keep themselves in a corner, viz. in that Country which is commonly call'd Karnatek, in our Maps, Bisnaguer, where they are still Raja's to this very day. All the rest of the State was also at the same time divided into all those Raja's Naigues, and petty Kings, such as we see there. These three Slaves and their Posterity have always defended themselves very well in their Kingdoms, whilst they kept a good mutual Correspondence, and assisted one another in their grievous Wars against the Mogols. But when they once came to think every one to defend their Lands apart, they soon found the effects of their division. For the Mogol so well knew to take his time upon that occasion, (which is now about Thirty five, or Forty years since) that he possess'd himself within a little time of all the Country of Nejam-Chah, or King Nejam, the fifth or sixth of the Family of the first Slave, and at last took him Prisoner in Daulet-Abad, the Capital, where he died.

After that time, the Kings of Golkonda have maintain'd themselves well enough; not as if they could compare with the power of the Mogol, but because the Mogol hath always been employ'd against the two others; from whom he was to take Amber, Paranda, Bider, and some other places, before he could conveniently march towards Golkonda. And because they have always been so politick, being very opulent, as to furnish under-hand the King of Visapour with Money, and thereby to help him to maintain a War against the Mogol: Besides that, they ever have a considerable Army on foot, which is always ready, and never fails to take the Field, and to approach to the Frontiers, at the time when there is News that that of the Mogol marches against Visapour; to let the Mogol see, not only that they are always ready to defend themselves, but also that they could easily assist the King of Visapour, in case he should be reduced to any extremity.

tremity. Next, which is very considerable, they know also how to convey Money underhand to the Chieftains of the Mogolian Army; who thereupon advise the Court, that it is more to purpose to attack Visapour, 'as being nearer to Daulet-Abad. Further, They send every year very considerable Presents to the Great Mogol, by way of Tribute, which consist partly in some rare Manufactures of the Country; partly in Elephants, which they send for from Pegu, Siam, and Ceilan, partly in fair ready money. Lastly, The Mogol considers that Kingdom as his own, not only because he looks upon the King thereof as his Tributary, but chiefly since that Agreement heretofore spoken of, which the present King made with Aureng-Zebe, when he besieged Golkonda, and there being also no place able to resist, even from Daulet-Abad unto Golkonda, he judgeth, that when he shall think fit to push for it, he may take in the whole Kingdom in one Campaign; which, in my opinion, he would certainly have done, if he did not apprehend, lest sending his Forces towards Golkonda, the King of Visapour should enter into Decan; as, no doubt, he would do, knowing it to be very important to his Conservation, that that Kingdom may always subsist as now it is.

From all which, something may be understood of the Interests and Government of the King of Golkonda with the Mogol, and what way he taketh to support himself against him. Yet notwithstanding all this, I find this State much shaken, in regard that the King that now is, since that unhappy Affair of Aureng-Zebe and Emir-Jemla, seems to have lost heart, and as 'twere abandon'd the reins of the Kingdom, not daring any more to go forth of this Fortrefs of Golkonda, nor so much as appear in publick to give Audience to his People, and to render Justice, according to the custom of the Country: Which discomposeth things very much, and occasions the Grandees to tyrannize over the meaner sort of People, and to lose even their respect to the King, often slighting his Commands, and considering him no more than a Woman; and the People, weary of the injustice and ill treatment, breathing after nothing but Aureng-Zebe. 'Tis easie to judge of the streights this poor King is in, by four or five Particulars I am about to relate.

The first, that Anno 1667. when I was at Golkonda, King Aureng-Zebe having sent an Ambassador Extraordinary to declare War to that King, unless he would furnish him with Ten thousand Horse against Visapour, he did extraordinary honour, and give excessive Presents to that Ambassador, as well for him in particular, as for Aureng-Zebe, and made an agreement with him, to send him, not Ten thousand Horse, but as much Money as is necessary to maintain so many; which was all that Aureng-Zebe looked for.

The second is, That Aureng-Zebe's Ambassador in Ordinary, that is constantly at Golkonda, commands, threatens, striketh, gives Pass-ports, and saith and doth whatsoever he will, no man daring with the least word to cross him.

The third is, That Mahmet-Emir-kan, the Son of Emir-Jemla, though he be no more than a simple Omrab of Aureng-Zebe, is yet so much respected through that whole Kingdom, and especially in Maslipatan, that the Taptata, his Commissioner, is, as 'twere, Master thereof, buying and selling, bringing in and sending abroad his Merchants Ships, no Body daring to contradict him in any thing, nor to demand any Customs. So great was once the power of Emir-Jemla his Father in this Kingdom, which time hath not yet been able to root out.

The fourth is, That the Hollanders scruple not to threaten him sometimes, to lay an Embargo upon all the Merchants Ships of the Country that are in that Port; and not to let them go out, until their demands be granted; as also to put in Protestations against him: which I have seen actually done, upon the account of an English Vessel, which they had a mind to take by force in the Port of Maslipatan it self, the Governor having hindred it, by arming the whole Town against them, and threatening to put Fire to their Factory, and to put them all to death.

A fifth is, That the Portugueses, as poor, and miserable, and decayed, as they are in the Indies, yet stick not to threaten that King also with War; and that they will come and sack Maslipatan, and all that Coast, if he will not render them that place of St. Thomas, which some years ago they chose to put into his hands, rather than to be constrained to yield it up to the Dutch.

Yet for all this, I have been informed in Golkonda, by very intelligent persons, that this King is a Prince of very great judgment, and that whatever he so does and suffers, is only in policy, to the end to provoke no body, and principally to remove all suspicion suspicion from Aureng-Zebe, and to give him to understand, that he hath in a manner no share any more in the Kingdom: But that in the mean time a Son of his, that is kept hid, grows up, the Father watching for a fit time to declare him King, and so to laugh at the Agreement made with Aureng-Zebe. Of this, time will shew us more; in the mean time, let us consider somewhat of the Interests of Visapour.

The Kingdom of Visapour hath also not been wanting to support it self, though the Mogol do almost continually make War against it; not so much as if he of Visapour were able to bid head to the Mogolian Forces, but because there is never any great effort used against him. For it is not very frequent there, no more than 'tis elsewhere, for Generals of Armies to desire the end of a War; there being nothing so charming, as to be in the head of an Army, commanding like little Kings, remote from the Court. It is also grown to a Proverb, That Decan is the Bread and Life of the Soldiers of Indostan. Besides, the Country of Visapour is on the side of the Mogol's Dominions of a very difficult access, upon the account of the scarcity of good Waters, Forage, and Victuals; and because Visapour, the Capital City, is very strong, and situate in a dry and steril Country, there being almost no good Water but in the Town. And lastly, because there are many Fortresses in that Country, seated on Hills hard to climb.

Yet notwithstanding all this, that State is much shaken, if considering that the Mogol hath taken Paranda, the Key, as 'twere, of that Kingdom; as also that fair and strong Town Bider, and some other very important places: But principally, because the last King of Visapour died without Heirs Males, and he that now calls himself King, is a Youth, whom the Queen, Sister of the King of Golkonda, hath raised, and taken for her Son (a favour for which he hath made an ill return, having shew'd no esteem for this Queen after her return from Mecca, under the pretext of some ill demeanor in her on a Dutch Vessel that carried her to Moka:) Lastly, because that in the disorders of that Kingdom, the Heathen-Rebel, Seva-Gi, above discoursed of, found means to seize on many strong Holds, mostly seated on steep Mountains, where he now acteth the King, laughing at the Visapour, and the Mogol, and ravaging the Country every where; from Suratte, even to the Gates of Goa. This notwithstanding, if he wrongs Visapour one way, he helps to support it another, forasmuch as he is resolutely bent against the Mogol, preparing always some Ambush, and cutting so much work for his Army, that there is no discourse, no apprehension but of Seva-Gi; insomuch that he hath come and sacked Suratte, and pillaged the Isle of Burdes, which belongs to the Portuguese, and is near the Gates of Goa.

The seventh Particular, which I learn'd at Golkonda, when I was come away from Debli, is the death of Chah-Jehan; and that Aureng-Zebe had been exceedingly affected therewith, having discover'd all the marks of grief, that a Son can express for the loss of his Father: That at the very hour of receiving that News, he went towards Agra; that Begum-Sabeb caused the Mosque, and a certain place, where he was at first to stop, before he entred the Fortrefs, to be hung with richly embroider'd Tapisteries: That at his entring into the Seraglio, she presented him with a great Golden Bason, wherein were all her Jewels, and all those of Chah-Jehan; and in short, that she knew to receive him with so much Magnificence, and to entertain him with that dexterity and craft, that she obtain'd his pardon, gain'd his favour, and grew very confident with him.

To conclude, I doubt not, but most of those, who shall have read my History, will judge the ways taken by Aureng-Zebe, for getting the Empire, very violent and horrid. I pretend not at all to plead for him, but desire only, that before he be altogether condemned, reflection be made on that unhappy custom of this State, which leaving the succession of the Crown undecided, for want of good Laws, settling it, as amongst us, upon the eldest Son, exposeth it to the Conquest of the strongest, and the most fortunate; subjecting at the same time all the Princes born in the Royal Family, by the condition of their Birth, to the cruel necessity either to overcome, or to reign, by destroying all the rest, for the assurance of their power and life, or to perish themselves, for the security of that of others: For I am apt to believe, that upon this Consideration, the Reader will not find Aureng-Zebe's Conduct so strange as at first it appear'd. However I am persuaded, that those who shall a little weigh this whole History, will not take Aureng-Zebe for a Barbarian, but for a great and rare Genius, a Great States-man, and a Great King.

A Letter to the Lord COLBERT, of the Extent of INDOSTAN; the Circulation of Gold and Silver, coming at length to be swallowed up, there, as in an Abyss; the Riches, Forces, Justice, and the principal Cause of the Decay of the States of ASIA.

My Lord,

Since it is the Custom of Asia, never to approach Great Persons with Empty Hands, when I had the Honour to kiss the Vest of the Great Mogol Aureng-Zebe, I presented him with eight Roupies, [A Roupie is about Half a Crown] as an expression of respect; and the illustrious Fazel-kan, the prime Minister of State, and he that was to establish my Pension as Physician, with a Case of Knives garnished with Amber. My Lord, though I intend not to introduce new Customs in France, yet I cannot forget this upon my Return from those Parts; being persuaded, that I ought not to appear before the King, for whom I have a far deeper Veneration, than for Aureng-Zebe; nor before You, my Lord, for whom I have a much higher Esteem, than for Fazel-kan, without some little Present to both, which is rare, at least, for its Novelty, though it be not so upon the account of the presenting hand. The Revolution of Indostan, by reason of its extraordinary Occurrences and Events, hath to me seemed worthy of the Greatness of our Monarch, and this Discourse, for the quality of the matters therein contained, suitable to the rank you hold in his Counsels; to that Conduct, which at my Return appear'd to me so admirable in the Order, which I found settled in so many things, that I thought incapable of it; and to the passion you entertain to make it known to the Ends of the Earth, what a Monarch we have, and that the French are fit to undertake, and with Honour to atchieve, whatsoever you shall have design'd for their Honour and Advantage.

'Tis in the Indies, my Lord (whence I am lately return'd, after twelve years absence) where I learn'd the felicity of France, and how much this Kingdom is oblig'd to your cares; and where your Name is so diffused, and so well known. This were a fair Theme for me to enlarge upon; but my Design being no other than to discourse of things New, I must forbear to speak of those that are already so notorious to all the World. I shall doubtless please you better, by endeavouring to give you some Idea of the state of the Indies, which I have engaged my self to give you an account of.

My Lord, You may have seen before this, by the Maps of Asia, how great every way is the Extent of the Empire of the Great Mogol, which is commonly call'd India, or Indostan. I have not measur'd it Mathematically; but to speak of it according to the ordinary Journeys of the Country, after the rate of three whole months march, traversing from the Frontiers of the Kingdom of Golkonda, as far as beyond Kazni near Kandahar, which is the first Town of Persia, I cannot persuade my self otherwise, but that it is at least five times as far as from Paris to Lyons, that is, about Five hundred common Leagues.

Next, You may please to take notice, that of that vast Extent of Land, there are large Countries that are very fertile, and some of them to that degree, (for Example, that whole great Kingdom of Bengale) that they exceed those of Egypt, not only upon the account of the abundance of Rice, Corn, and all other things necessary for life, but also upon the score of all those Commodities so considerable, which Egypt is destitute of, as Silks, Cottons, Indigo, and so many others, sufficiently related by Authors.

Moreover, That of these same Countries there are many that are well enough peopled and cultivated, and where Tradefmen, though naturally very lazy there, are not wanting, either from Necessity, or other Causes, to apply themselves to work, as to Tappisteries, Embroideries, Cloth of Gold and Silver, and to all those kinds of Silk

Silk and Cotton Manufactures, that are used in the Country, or transported to other Parts.

You may further observe, how that Gold and Silver circulating as it were upon the Earth, comes at last, in part, to be swallow'd up in this Indostan. For of that which comes out of America, and is dispersed through the several Kingdoms of our Europe, we know, that one part is carried into Turky many ways, for the Commodities drawn thence; and that another part is conveyed into Persia, by the way of Smyrna, for the Silks afforded there: That all Turky generally needs Coffee, which comes out of Hyeman, or Happy Arabia, and is the common Drink of the Turks: That the same Turky as well as Hyeman and Persia cannot be without the Commodities of India; and that thus all those Countries are obliged to carry to Moka over the Red-Sea, near Babel-mandel; and to Bassora the utmost part of the Persian-Gulf; and to Bandar-Abbasi, or Gomoron near to Ormuz, a part of that Gold and Silver, that had been brought into their Country, to be thence transported into Indostan, in Vessels, that yearly, in the season of the Mounsons, come purposely to those three famous Parts: That on the other hand, all those Ships of India, whether they be Indian ones, or Dutch, or English, or Portuguese, that every year transport Merchandise out of Indostan to Pegu, Tanasserri, Siam, Ceilan, Achem, Macasser, the Maldives, Mosambic, and other places, bring back also much Gold and Silver from all those Countries, which meets with the same Destiny, that the other doth: That of that quantity of Gold and Silver which the Hollanders draw from Japan, (which is stored with Mines) a part also comes to be at length discharged in this Indostan: And that lastly, what is carried thither directly by Sea, whether from Portugal, England, or France, seldom comes back from thence but in Merchandise, the rest remaining there, as the former.

I very well know, that it may be said, that this Indostan needs Copper, Cloves, Nutmegs, Cinamon, Elephants, and sundry other things, which the Hollanders carry thither from Japan, the Molucques, Ceilan, and Europe; as also that it hath occasion for Lead, which in part, it is furnish'd with out of England; likewise for Scarlet, which it hath from France: Moreover, that it stands in need of a good number of Horses, it being certain, that from the side of Usbec it receives yearly more than 2500. That out of Persia also it is furnished with abundance of the same; as also out of Ethiopia, Arabia, the Ports of Moka, Bassora, and Bander-abbasy: Besides, that it needs that store of fresh Fruit, which comes thither from Samarkand, Ball-bocara, and Persia, as Melons, Apples, Pears, and Grapes, that are spent at Debli, and bought at great Rates, almost all the Winter long; as well as dry Fruit, which are had there all the year long, and come from the same Countries, as Almonds, Pistaches, Nuts, Prunes, Abricots, Raisins, and the like. And that lastly, it wants those little Sea-cockles of the Maldives, which serve for common Coyn in Bengale, and in some other places; as also Ambergreece, carried thither from the said Maldives and Mosambic, Rhinoceros-horns, Elephants-teeth, Musk, China-dishes, Pearls of Baboren, and Tutucoury near Ceilan; and, I know not of how many other things of this kind.

But all this makes not the Gold and Silver to go out of that Empire, because the Merchants at their return freight their Ships with the Commodities of the Country, finding a better account by so doing, than if they should bring back Money, so that that hinders not, but that Indostan proves, as we have said, a kind of Abyss for a great part of the Gold and Silver of the World, which finds many ways to enter there, and almost none to issue thence.

In a word, you may take notice, that this Great Mogol makes himself Heir of the Omrahs or Lords, and of the Mansebdars, or petty Lords, that are in his Pay; and (which is of very great consequence) that all the Lands of that Empire are his Property, excepting some Houses and Gardens, which he giveth leave to his Subjects to sell, divide, or buy amongst them, as they shall think fit.

These are the things, which sufficiently show, both that there must needs be a very great store of Gold and Silver in Indostan, though there be no Mines; and also that the Great Mogol, the Sovereign of the same, at least, of the best part of it, hath immense Revenues and Riches.

But on the other hand, there are also many things to be observed, which are a poise to these Riches. The first, that among those vast tracts of Land there is much, which is nothing but sand and steril Mountains, little Tilled or Peopled: That even of those that would be fertile, there is much, that is not used for want of Workmen, some of which which have perished by the too evil treatment of the Governors, who often take from them their necessary livelihood, and sometimes their very Children whom they make Slaves when they are not able, or are unwilling to pay: Others have abandon'd the Field for the same reason, and desponding out of the consideration that they labour'd only for others, have cast themselves into Towns, or into Armies, to serve there for Porters, or waiting men, and many have fled to the lands of the Rajas, because there they found less tyranny, and more kindness.

The second is, That in this same Extent of Country there are sundry Nations, which the Mogol is not full Master of, most of them retaining yet their particular Sovereigns and Lords, that obey him not, nor pay him Tribute but from constraint; many, that do little; some, that do nothing at all; and some also, that receive Tribute from him, as we shall see anon. Such are those petty Sovereigns, that are seated on the Frontiers of Persia, who almost never pay him any thing, no more than they do to the King of Persia: As also the Balouches and Augans, and other Mountineers, of whom also the greatest part pay him but a small matter, and even care but very little for him: witness the Affront they did him, when they stopp'd his whole Army by cutting off the Water, which they kept back within the Mountains, when he passed from Atek on the River Indus to Caboul, to lay siege to Kandabar; not suffering the Water to run down into the Fields, where was the Highway, 'till they had receiv'd Presents, although they ask'd them by way of Alms. Such are also the Patans, a Mahumetan People, issued from the side of the River Ganges towards Bengale; who before the Invasion of the Mogols in India, had taken their time to make themselves potent in many places, and chiefly at Dehli, and to render many Rajas thereabout their Tributaries. These Patans are fierce and warlike, and even the meanest of them, though they be waiting Men and Porters, are still of a very high spirit, being often heard to say by way of swearing, Let me never be King of Dehli, if it be not so: A People that despise the Indians, Heathens, and Mogols, and mortally hate the last, still remembering what they were formerly, before they were by them driven away from their large Principalities, and constrained to retire hither and thither, far from Dehli, and Agra, into the Mountains, where now they are settled, and where some of them have made themselves petty Sovereigns, like Rajas, but of small strength.

Such an one also is the King of Visapour, who pays to the Mogol nothing, and is always in War with him; maintaining himself in his Country, partly by his own Forces, partly because he is very remote from Agra and Dehli, the ordinary places of Residence of the Great Mogol; partly also, because his Capital City Visapour is strong, and of difficult access to an Army, by reason of the ill Waters, and the want of Forage on the way; and partly because many Rajas join with him for their common defence, as did the famous Seva-Gi, who, not long since, came pillaging and burning that rich Sea-port, Suratte, and who sometimes will pay little or no Tribute.

Such is likewise that potent and rich King of Golkonda, who underhand gives Money to the King of Visapour, and hath always an Army ready on the Frontiers for his own defence, and for the assistance of Visapour, in case he find him too much pressed.

Of the like sort are more than an hundred Rajas, or considerable Heathen Sovereigns, dispersed through the whole Empire, some near to, others remote from Agra and Dehli: amongst whom there are about fifteen or sixteen that are very rich and puissant; such as is Rana (who formerly was, as 'twere, Emperor of the Rajas; and who is said to be of the Progeny of King Porus;) Jesseigne and Jessomseigne; which are so great and powerful, that if they three alone should combine, they would hold him tack; each of them being able, in a very short time, to raise and bring into the Field Twenty five thousand Horse, better Troops than the Mogols. These Cavaliers are call'd Ragipouts, or the Children of Rajas. They are men, who, as I have elsewhere said, carry Swords from Father to Son, and to whom the Rajas allot Land, on condition to be always ready to appear on Horseback, when the Raja commands. They can endure much hardship, and they want nothing to make them good Soldiers, but good Order and Discipline.

The third thing to be noted is, That the Mogol is a Mahumetan, not of the Sect call'd Chias, who follow Aly and his Off-spring, (such as the Persians are, and consequently the greatest part of his Court;) but of that, which follows Osman, and thence are call'd Osmanlys, such as the Turks are. Besides, that he is a stranger, being of the Race of Tamerlan, who was the Head of those Mogols, that about the year 1401, over-ran

India,

India, where they made themselves Masters: so that he is in a Country, almost all hostile; and that the more, because not only for one Mogol, but in general, for one Mahumetan, there are hundreds of Gentiles or Heathen; which obligeth him, constantly to entertain (for his defence amongst so many domestick and potent Enemies, and against the Persians and Usbecks, his Neighbours) very great Armies, whether in time of Peace or War, as well about his Person, as in the Field; as well of the People of the Country, (Rajas and Patans,) as chiefly Mogolians, or at least esteemed such, because they are White, and Mahumetans; which sufficeth at present; his Court being no more now as 'twas at first, consisting altogether of true Mogols; but a mixture of all sorts of Strangers, Usbecks, Persians, Arabians, and Turks, or their Children; but with this distinction, that the Children of the third or fourth Generation, and that have taken the Brown colour, and the soft humor of the Country, are not so much esteem'd as the new comers; being also seldom rais'd to publick Offices, but counting themselves happy, if they may serve as simple Horsemen or Foot.

Of these Armies I am now going to give you some description, that thereby knowing the great Expences, which the Grand Mogol is oblig'd to be at, you may the better judge of his true Riches; let us first take a view of the Field Militia, he is necessitated to maintain.

The chief thereof are the Rajas, such as Jesseigne, Jessomseigne, and many others to whom he allows very great Pensions, to have them always ready with a certain number of Ragipouts, esteeming them like Omrabs, that is, like other Strangers, and Mahumetan Lords; both in the Army, that is always about his person, and in those also, that are in the Field. These Rajas are generally oblig'd to the same things, that the Omrabs are, even to the point of keeping Guard; yet with this distinction, that they keep not the Guard within the Fortrefs, as those, but without, under their Tents; they not liking to be shut up Twenty four hours in a Fortrefs, nor so much as ever to go thither, but well attended with Men, resolute to be cut in pieces for their service; as hath appear'd, when they have been ill dealt withal.

The Mogol is oblig'd to keep these Rajas in his service for sundry reasons.

The first, because the Militia of the Rajas is very good (as was said above,) and because there are Rajas, (as was intimated also) one of whom can bring into the Field above 25000 men.

The second, the better to bridle the other Rajas, and to reduce them to reason when they cantonize, or when they refuse to pay Tribute, or when out of fear or other cause, they will not go out of their Country to the Army, when the Mogol requireth it.

The third, the better to nourish jealousies and keennes amongst them, by favouring and caressing the one more than the other, which is done to that degree, that they proceed to fight with one another very frequently.

The fourth, to employ them against the Patans, or against his own Omrabs and Governors, in case any of them should rise.

The fifth, to employ them against the King of Golkonda, when he refuseth to pay his Tribute, or when he will defend the King of Visapour, or some Rajas his Neighbours, which the Mogol hath a mind to rattle, or to make his Tributaries; the Mogol in those cases not daring to trust his Omrabs overmuch, who most are Persians, and not of the same Religion with him, but Chias, like the Kings of Persia and Golkonda.

The sixth, and the most considerable of all, is, to employ them against the Persians upon occasion; not daring then also to confide in his Omrabs, who, for the greatest part, as was just now said, are Persians, and consequently have no stomach to fight against their natural King; and the less, because they believe him to be their Imam, their Caliph or High Priest, descended from Aly, and against whom therefore they believe they cannot make War without a Crime, or a great Sin.

The Mogol is farther oblig'd to entertain some Patans for the same, or somewhat like reasons, that he doth the Rajas.

At last he must entertain that stranger Militia of the Mogols, that we have taken notice of: And as this is the main strength of his State, and which obliges him to incredible charges, methinks it will not be amiss to describe to you, of what nature it is, though I should be somewhat long in doing it.

Let us therefore consider, if you please, this stranger Militia, both Cavalry and Infantry, as divided into two; the one, being always near the Mogol's Person; the other, disper-dispersed up and down in the several Provinces. And in the Cavalry that is about his Person, let us first take notice of the Omrabs; then, of the Mansebdars; next, of the Roufindars; last of all, of the simple Horsemen. From thence let us proceed to the Infantry, in which we shall consider the Musquetiers, and all those men on foot that attend the Ordnance, where something will occur to be said of their Artillery.

It is not to be thought, that the Omrabs or Lords of the Mogol's Court are Sons of great Families, as in France; All the Lands of that Empire being the Mogol's Propriety, it follows, that there are neither Dutchies, nor Marquissats, nor any Family rich in Land, and subsisting of its own Income and Patrimony. And often enough they are not so much as Omrab's Sons, because the King being Heir of all their Estates, it is consequent that the Houses cannot subsist long in their greatness; on the contrary, they often fall, and that on a sudden, insomuch that the Sons, or at least the Grandsons of a potent Omrab are frequently, after the death of their Father, reduced, in a manner, to Beggary, and oblig'd to list themselves under some Omrab for simple Horsemen. 'Tis true, that ordinarily the Mogol leaves some small Pension to the Widow, and often also to the Children; or, if the Father liveth too long, he may by particular favour advance them sooner, especially if they be proper men, white of Face, having as yet not too much of the Indian Complexion and temper, and so passing yet for true Mogols: Though this advancement by favour do always proceed in a slow pace; it being almost a general custom, that a man must pass from small Pays and small Places, to great ones. These Omrabs then are commonly but Adventurers and Strangers of all sorts of Nations, such as I have said; which draw one another to this Court; men of a mean descent, some of them slaves; most of them without instruction, which the Mogol thus raiseth to Dignities as he thinks good, and degrades them again, as he pleaseth.

Amongst these Omrabs, some are Hazary, others Don Hazary, others Penge, Hecht, and Deb Hazary, and even (such was the King's eldest Son) Dovazdeb Hazary, that is to say, Lord of a thousand Horse, of two thousand, five thousand, seven, ten, and twelve thousand; their Pay being less or more in proportion to the number of Horses; I say, of Horses, because they are not paid in respect of the Horsemen, but of the Horses; the Omrabs having power to entertain Horsemen of two Horses a man, to be the better able to serve in the hot Countries, where 'tis a common saying, That the Horseman that hath but one Horse, is more than half a Footman. Yet we must not think, that they are oblig'd to entertain, or that the King effectively pays so many Horse, as these great names of Dovazdeb or Hecht Hazary do impart, that is, 12000, or 8000 Horse. These are specious Names, to amuse and attract Strangers; the King determines the number of Horses in actual service, which they are bound to entertain; pays them according to this number; and besides that, he pays them a certain number which they are not bound to entertain; and this is that which ordinarily makes the principal part of their Pensions; not to speak of what they finger out of the Pay of every Horseman, and of the number of the Horses; which certainly amounts to very considerable Pensions; especially if they can obtain good Jah-ghirs, that is, good Lands for their Pension. For I saw, that the Lord, under whom I was, that was a Penge-hazary, or one of five thousand Horse, and who was only obliged to entertain five hundred in effect, had, after all his Cavalry was paid, remaining for his Pension near Five thousand Crowns a month; though he was Nagdy, that is, paid in Money drawn out of the Treasury, as all those are, that have not Lands. Yet notwithstanding all these great Pensions, I see none but very few that are rich, but many that are uneasie and indebted: Not that they are ruin'd by keeping too plentiful Tables, as elsewhere great Lords frequently are; but that which exhausteth them, are the great Presents which they are oblig'd to make to the King at certain Festivals of the year, every one after the rate of his Pay; next, the vast Expences they must be at for entertaining their Wives, Servants, Camels, and many Horses of great value, which they keep in their particular Stables.

The number of the Omrabs, as well of those, that are in the Field in the Provinces and Armies, as of those that are at the Court, is very great. I never could precisely learn it; nor is it determined: But I have never seen less of them at Court, than twenty five or thirty, that are thus Pensionaries according to a greater or lesser number of Horses to be entertain'd by them, from 12000 downward to 1000. These are the Omrabs, that arrive to the Governments and principal Offices of the Court and Armies; that are, as they speak, the Pillars of the Empire, and that keep up the splendor of the Court; never going abroad, but richly deck'd, sometimes riding on Elephants, some-sometimes on Horseback, sometimes carried in a Paleky or Chair, commonly attended by a good number of Horsemen, to wit, of those that have the Guard at that time, as also by many Footmen marching before, and on his sides, to make way, to drive away the Flies, to take off the dust with Peacocks tails, to carry water for drink, and sometimes Books of Accompts, or other Papers.

All those that are at Court, are oblig'd, under a considerable Penalty, to come twice every day to salute the King in the Assembly, once about Ten or eleven a clock in the morning, when he renders Justice; and the second time, about six hours at night. They are also oblig'd by turns to keep the Guard in the Castle once a week, during twenty four hours. Thither they carry at that time their Beds, Tapisseries and other Moveables, the King furnishing them with nothing but Provisions of Meat and Drink, which they receive with great reverence, making a treble obeisance, with their face turn'd to his Apartment, their hands down to the ground, and then lifted up upon their heads. Besides, they are oblig'd on Horseback to follow the King whithersoever he marcheth in any weather, rainy or dusty, whether he be carried in his Chair, or on an Elephant, or a Field-Throne, which last is done by eight men carrying him on their shoulders, eight others marching on his side, to relieve the others; himself being in all Marches well cover'd from the inconveniencies of the Weather, whether he go to War, or to Hunt, or to exercise his Soldiery. And this attendance those Omrabs are to give, except some of them be exempted by the Mogol, because of their peculiar Offices, or upon the account of sickness or old age, or to avoid embarrassment, as commonly 'tis practis'd, when he goeth only to some neighbouring Town to hunt, or to some house of Pleasure, or to the Mosque, there being then seldom any about him but those that keep the Guard that day.

Mansebdars are Cavaliers of Manseh, which is particular and honourable Pay; not so great indeed as that of the Omrabs, but much greater than that of the others; they being esteemed as little Omrabs, and of the rank of those, that are raised to that dignity.

These acknowledge also none for their Head but the King, and they are generally obliged to whatever we have said the Omrabs are. In a word, they would be true Omrabs, if they had, as divers heretofore have had, some Horsemen under them; whereas they have ordinarily but two, four, or six Horses, having the King's mark, and their Pay goes no higher than from 200, to 600 or 700 Roupies a month. Their number also is not fixed, but much exceeds that of the Omrabs, there being of them at the Court always two or three hundred, besides those that are in the Provinces and Armies.

Rouzindars are also a sort of Cavaliers, but such as have their Pay by the day, (as the word it self imports) which yet sometimes is greater than that of many Mansebdars, but not so honourable; but then they are not bound, as the Mansebdars, to take at a set price (which sometimes is not too reasonable) of those Tapisseries and other Household-stuff, that hath serv'd for the King's Palace. Their number is very great; they enter into the meaner Offices, many of them being Clerks, Under-Clerks, Signet-Men, and the like.

Simple Cavaliers, are those, that are under the Omrabs; amongst whom the most considerable, and having most Pay, are those that have two Horses marked on the Leg with the mark of their Omrab. Their Pay is not absolutely fixed, but depends chiefly from the generosity of the Omrab, who may favour whom he pleaseth. Yet the Mogol's intention is, that the Pay of a simple Cavalier or Horseman be no less than twenty five Roupies, or thereabout a Month, stating his account with the Omrabs upon that Foot.

The Pay of the Foot is the least; and their Musquetiers are pitiful men, unless they discharge when their Musquet leans on that small wooden Fork hanging to it; yet even then they are afraid of singeing their great Beards, and of burning their Eyes, but most of all, least some Dgen or evil Spirit burst their Musquet. Some of these have 20 Roupies a Month, some 15, some 10. But yet there are some Gunners that have great Pay, especially those of the Frangis or Christians, as Portugueses, English, Dutch, Germans, French, that retire thither from Goa, flying from English and Dutch Companies. Heretofore when the Mogols did not yet know how to manage Artillery, their Pay was very great. And there are yet some of that time, who have 200 Roupies a Month; but now they will receive none for more than thirty two.

Their Artillery is of two sorts; the one is the great and heavy Artillery, the other the light. As for the former, I remember, that when the King after his Sickness went with his whole Army abroad into the Country, diverting himself every day in Hunting, sometimes of Cranes, sometimes of the gray Oxen, (a kind of Elks) sometimes of Gazels, Leopards and Lions, and making his progress towards Labor and Kachmire (that little Paradise of India) there to pass the Summer, the Army had Seventy pieces of Cannon, most of them cast, not counting the two or three hundred Camels, carrying each a small Field-piece of the bigness of a good double Musquet, fastned to those Animals. The other light Artillery is very brave and well order'd, consisting of fifty or sixty small Field-pieces all of Brass, each mounted on a little Chariot, very fine and well painted, with a small Coffer before and behind for the Powder, drawn by two very fair Horses, driven by a Coachman like a Caleche, adorned with a number of small red Streamers, each having a third Horse led by the Chariot for relief.

The great Artillery could not always follow the King, who often left the Highway, and turn'd sometimes to the right, sometimes to the left hand, crossing the fields to find the true places for Game, and to follow the course of the Rivers. That therefore was to keep the Highway to go the more easily, and to avoid the embarrasments, which it would have met with in the ill passages, especially in those Boat-Bridges made to pass Rivers. The light Artillery is inseparable from the person of the King, it marcheth away in the morning, when the King comes out of his Tent; and whereas he commonly goes a little aside into the places for Game, this Artillery passeth on straight with all possible speed, to be in time at the Rendezvous, and there to appear before the King's Tent, which is there made ready the day before; as are also the Tents of the great Omrabs: And this whole Artillery giveth a Volley just when the King enters into his Tent, thereby to give notice to the Army of his arrival.

The Militia of the Field is not different from that which is about the King: There are everywhere Omrabs, Mansebdars, Rousfindars, simple Horsemen, and Foot and Artillery where-ever any War is made. The difference is only in the number, which is much greater in the Field-Army, than in the other. For that Army alone, which the Mogol is constrain'd perpetually to maintain in Decan, to bridle the potent King of Golkonda, and to make War upon the King of Visapour, and upon all the Raja's that join with him, must consist at least of twenty, or twenty five thousand Horse, sometimes of thirty.

The Kingdom of Kaboul, for its ordinary Guard against the Persians, Augans, Balouches, and I know not how many Mounteniers, requireth at least Fifteen thousand. The Kingdom of Kachmire, more than Four thousand; and the Kingdom of Bengale, much more; not counting those that are employ'd in the War, which must almost always be maintain'd on that side; nor those which the Governors of the several Provinces do need for their defence, according to the particular extent and situation of their Governments, which maketh an incredible number.

Not to mention the Infantry, (which is inconsiderable) I am apt to believe with many others, well inform'd of these matters, that the number of the Horse in actual service about the King's Person, comprehending the Cavalry of the Raja's and Patans, mounteth to Thirty five or forty thousand; and that this number, joined to those that is abroad in the Field, may make Two hundred thousand, and better.

I say, that the Infantry is inconsiderable; for I can hardly believe, that in the Army which is about the King, comprising the Musquetiers, and all the Gunners and their Mates, and whatever serves in this Artillery, can amount to much more than Fifteen thousand; whence you may make a near guess, what the number of the Foot must be in the Field. So that I know not whence to take that prodigious number of Foot, which some do reckon in the Armies of the Great Mogol, unless it be, that with this true Soldiery they confound all the Serving-men and Victuallers that follow the Army; for in that sense I should easily believe, that they had reason to reckon two or three hundred thousand men in that Army alone which is with the King, and sometimes more; especially when 'tis certain, that he is to be long absent from the Capital City: which will not seem so strange to him, that considers the multitude and confusion of Tents, Kitchens, Baggage, Women, Elephants, Camels, Oxen, Horses, Waiting-men, Porters, Foragers, Victuallers, Merchants of all sorts, that must follow the Army; nor to him, that knows the State and particular Government of that Country, wherein the King is the sole Proprietor of all the Lands of the Kingdom; whence it necessarily follows, that a whole Metropolitan City, such as Debly and Agra, liveth of almost nothing but of the Soldiery, Soldiery, and is consequently oblig'd to follow the King when he taketh the Field; those Towns being nothing less than Paris, but indeed no otherwise govern'd than a Camp of Armies a little better and more conveniently lodg'd than in the open Field.

Besides all these things, you may also consider, if you please, that generally all this Militia, which I have been representing to you, from the greatest Omrab, to the meanest Soldier, is indispensibly paid every two months, the King's Pay being its sole refuge and relief; nor can its Pay be deferred there, as 'tis sometimes with us; where, when there are pressing occasions of the State, a Gentleman, an Officer, and even a simple Cavalier, can stay awhile, and maintain himself of his own Stock, Rents, and the Income of his Land. But in the Mogol's Country, all must be paid at the time prefix'd, or all disbands and starves, after they have sold that little they have; as I saw in this last War, that many were going to do, if it had not soon ceased. And this the more, because that in all this Militia, there is almost no Soldier that hath not Wife and Children, Servants and Slaves, that look for this Pay, and have no other hope of relief. And hence it is, that many wonder, considering the huge number of persons living of Pay (which amounts to millions) whence such vast Revenues can be had for such excessive Charges: Although this need not to be so much wondred at, considering the Riches of the Empire, the peculiar Government of the State, and the said universal Propriety of the Sovereign.

You may add to all this, That the Grand Mogol keeps nigh him at Dehly and Agra, and thereabout, two or three thousand brave Horses, to be always ready upon occasion; as also eight or nine hundred Elephants, and a vast number of Mules, Horses, and Porters, to carry all the great Tents and their Cabinets, to carry his Wives, Kitchens, Household-stuff, Ganges-Water, and all the other Necessaries for the Field, which he hath always about him as if he were at home; things not absolutely necessary in our Kingdoms.

To this may be added those incredible Expences upon the Seraglio, more indispensable than will be easily believ'd; that vast store of fine Linnen, Cloth of Gold, Embroideries, Silks, Musk, Amber, Pearls, sweet Essences, &c. consumed there.

All these Charges being put together, and compar'd with the Revenues the Mogol may be thought to have, it will be easie to judge, whether he be indeed so very rich, as he is made to be. As for me, I very well know, that it cannot be denied, that he hath very great Revenues; I believe, he hath more alone than the Grand Seigneur, and the King of Persia, both together: But then, to believe all those extravagant Stories made of the vastness of his Revenues, is a thing I could never do: And if I should believe the best part of them, yet should I not believe him in effect and truly so rich, as the World rings of him; unless a man would say, that a Treasurer, who receiveth great Sums of money from one hand at the same time when he is oblig'd to disburse them to another, were therefore truly rich. For my part, I should count that King rich indeed; who, without oppressing and impoverishing his People too much, should have a Revenue sufficient to keep a great and gallant Court, (after the manner of that of ours, or otherwise) and a Militia sufficient both to guard his Kingdom, and to make an important War for divers years against his Neighbours; as also to shew Liberality, to build some Royal Edifices, and to make those other Expences which Kings are wont to make according to their particular Inclinations; and who, besides all this, should be able to put up in his Treasury, for a Reserve, Sums big enough to undertake and maintain a good War for some years. Now I am apt enough to believe, that the Great Mogol enjoyeth very near these Advantages, but I cannot persuade my self, that he hath them in that excess, as is thought and pretended. Those vast and inevitable Expences, that I have taken notice of, will certainly incline you to my Opinion without any other consideration; but you will, doubtless, be altogether of my mind, when I shall have represented to you these two things, which I am very well informed of.

The one is, that the Great Mogol, now reigning, about the end of this last Revolution, though the Kingdom was everywhere in peace (except in Bengale, where Sultan-Sujah yet held out) was much perplexed where to find means for the subsistence of his Armies, though they were not so well paid as at other times, and the War lasted no longer than five years, or thereabout, and though also he had laid hold of a good part of the Treasury of his Father Chah-Jehan.

The other is, That all this Treasure of Chah-Jehan, who was very frugal, and had Reigned above Forty years without considerable Wars, never mounted to six Kourours of of Roupies. A Roupy is about twenty nine pence. An hundred thousand of them make a Lecque, and an hundred Lecques make one Kourour. [So that the six Kourours would make about seven Millions and an half English Money.] 'Tis true, I do not comprehend in this great Treasure that great abundance of Goldsmiths work, so variously wrought in Gold and Silver; nor that vast store of precious Stones and Pearls of a very high value. I doubt, whether there be any King in the World that hath more. The Throne alone, cover'd with them, is valu'd at least three Kourours, if I remember aright: But then, it is to be consider'd also, that they are the spoils of those ancient Princes, the Patans and Rajas, gather'd and piled up from immemorial times, and still increasing from one King to another, by the Presents which the Omrabs are obliged yearly at certain Festival-days to make him; and which are esteem'd to be the Jewels of the Crown, which it would be criminal to touch, and upon which a King of Mogol in case of necessity would find it very hard to procure the least Sum.

But before I conclude, I shall take notice, whence it may proceed, that though this Empire of Mogol be thus an Abyss of Gold and Silver, (as hath been said,) yet notwithstanding there appears no more of it among the people, than elsewhere; yea, rather that the People is there less Monied than in other places.

The first reason is, that much of it is consumed in melting over and over all those Nose and Ear-rings, Chains, Finger-rings, Bracelets of Hands and Feet, which the Women wear, but chiefly in that incredible quantity of Manufactures, wherein so much is spent, which is lost, as in all those Embroideries, Silk-stuffs, enterwoven with Gold and Silver, Cloth, Scarf, Turbants, &c. of the same. For generally all that Militia loveth to be guided from the Omrabs to the meanest Soldiers with their Wives and Children, though they should starve at home.

The second, That all the Lands of the Kingdom being the Kings propriety, they are given either as Benefices, which they call Jab-ghirs, or, as in Turky, Timars, to men of the Militia for their Pay or Pension (as the word Jab-ghir imports:) Or else they are given to the Governours for their Pension, and the entertainment of their Troops, on condition that of the surplus of those Land-revenues they give yearly a certain sum to the King, as Farmers; Or lastly, the King reserveth them for himself as a particular Domaine of his House, which never or very seldom are given as Jab-ghirs, and upon which he keeps Farmers, who also must give him a yearly sum; which is to say, that the Timariots, Governours and Farmers have an absolute Authority over the Country-men, and even a very great one over the Tradesmen and Merchants of the Towns, Boroughs, and Villages, depending from them: so that in those Parts there are neither great Lords nor Parliaments, nor Presidial Courts, as amongst us, to keep these People in awe: nor Kadis or Judges, powerful enough to hinder and repress their violence; Nor, in a word, any person, to whom a Country-man, Trade-man, or Merchant, can make his complaints to, in cases of extortion and tyranny, often practised upon them, by the Soldiery and Governors, who every where do impudently abuse the Authority Royal, which they have in hand, unless it be perhaps a little in those places that are near to Capital Cities, as Debli and Agra, and in great Towns and considerable Sea-ports of the Provinces, whence they know that the complaints can be more easily conveyed to the Court. Whence it is, that all and every one stand in continual fear of these people, especially of the Governors more than any Slave doth of his Master: that ordinarily they affect to appear poor and money-less, very mean in their Apparel, Lodging, Household-stuff, and yet more in meat and drink; that often they apprehend even to meddle with Trade, lest they should be thought Rich, and so fall into the danger of being ruined: So that at last they find no other remedy to secure their Wealth, than to hide and dig their money deep under Ground, thus getting out of the ordinary commerce of men, and so Dying, neither the King nor the State having any benefit by it. Which is a thing not only happens among the Peasants and Artizans, but (which is far more considerable) amongst all sorts of Merchants, whether Mahumetans or Heathens, except some that are in the Kings, or some Omrabs Pay, or that have some particular Patron and support in power: But principally among the Heathens, which are almost the only Masters of the Trade and Money, infatuated with the belief, that the Gold and Silver, which they hide in their life-time, shall serve them after death. And this, in my opinion, is the true reason, why there appears so little money in Trade among the People.

But thence ariseth a Question very considerable, viz. Whether it were not more expedient, dient, not only for the Subjects, but for the State it self, and for the Sovereign, not to have the Prince such a Proprietor of the Lands of the Kingdom, as to take away the Meum and Tuum amongst private persons; as 'tis with us; For my part, after a strict comparing the State of our Kingdoms, where that Meum and Tuum holds, with that of those other Kingdoms, where it is not, I am thoroughly perswaded, that it is much better and more beneficial for the Sovereign himself, to have it so as 'tis in our parts. Because that in those parts where 'tis otherwise, the Gold and Silver is lost, as I was just now observing: There is almost no person secure from the violences of those Timariors, Governours, and Farmers: The Kings, how well soever they be disposed toward their people, are never almost in a condition (as I lately noted) to get Justice administered to them, and to hinder tyrannies; especially in those great Dominions, and in the Provinces remote from the Capital Towns; Which yet ought to be, as doubtless it is, one of the chief employments and considerations of a King. Besides, this tyranny often grows to that excess, that it takes away what is necessary to the life of a Peasant or Tradesman, who is starved for hunger and misery; who gets no Children, or if he does, sees them die young for want of food; or that abandons his Land, and turns some Cavalier's man, or flies whither he may to his Neighbours, in hopes of finding a better condition. In a word, the Land is not tilled but almost by force, and consequently very ill, and much of it is quite spoiled and ruined, there being none to be found, that can or will be at the charge of entertaining the ditches and channels for the course of waters to be convey'd to necessary places; nor any body that care to build Houses, or to repair those that are ruinous; the Peasant reasoning thus with himself: Why should I toil so much for a Tyrant that may come to morrow to take all away from me, or at least all the best of what I have, and not leave, if the fancy taketh him, so much as to sustain my life even very poorly? And the Timariot, the Governor and the Farmer, will reason thus with himself; Why should I bestow money, and take pains of bettering or maintaining this Land, since I must every hour expect to have it taken from me, or exchanged for another? I labour neither for my self, nor for my Children; and that place which I have this year, I may, perhaps, have no more the next. Let us draw from it what we can, whilst we possess it, though the Peasant should break or starve, though the Land should become a Desert, when I am gone!

And for this very reason it is, that we see those vast Estates in Asia go so wretchedly and palpably to ruine. Thence it is, that throughout those Parts we see almost no other Towns but made up of earth and dirt; nothing but ruin'd and deserted Towns, and Villages, or such as are going to ruine. Even thence it is, that we see (for Example) those Mesopotamia's, Anatolia's, Palestina's, those admirable Plains of Antioch, and so many other Lands, anciently so well tilled, so fertile, and so well peopled, at the present half deserted, untill'd and bandon'd, or become pestilent and uninhabitable Bogs. Thence it is also, that of those incomparable Lands of Egypt it is observ'd, that within less than four score years, more than the tenth part of it is lost, no people being to be found, that will expend what is necessary to maintain all the Channels, and to restrain the River Nile from violently overflowing on one hand, and so drowning too much the low Lands, or from covering them with Sand, which cannot be remov'd from thence but with great pains and charges. From the same root it comes, that Arts are languishing in those Countries, or at least flourish much less than else they would do, or do with Us. For what heart and spirit can an Artizan have to study well, and to apply his mind to his work, when he sees, that among the people, which is for the most part beggarly, or will appear so, there is none that considers the goodness and neatness of his Work, every body looking for what is cheap, and that the Grandees pay them but very ill, and when they please. The poor Tradesman often thinking himself happy, that he can get clear from them without the Korrah, which is that terrible Whip that hangs nigh the Gate of the Omrabs. Further, when he seeth that there is no help at all ever to come to any thing, as to buy an Office, or some Land for himself and Children; and that even he dares not appear to have a Penny in Cash, or to wear good Cloaths, or to eat a good Meal, for fear he should be thought rich. And indeed the beauty and exactness of Arts had been quite lost in those Parts long ago, if it were not that the Kings and Grandees there did give Wages to certain Workmen, that work in their Houses, and there teach their Children, and endeavour to make themselves able in order to be a little more consider'd, and to escape the Korrah; and if also it were not, that those great and rich Merchants of Towns, who are protected by good and powerful powerful Patrons, pay'd those Workmen a little better: I say, a little Better; for, what fine stuffs soever we see come from those Countries, we must not imagine; that the Workman is there in any honour, or comes to any thing; 'tis nothing but meer Necessity, or the Cudgel, that makes him work, he never grows rich; it is no small matter, when he hath wherewith to live, and to cloath himself narrowly. If there be any money to gain of the Work, that is not for him, but for those great Merchants of Towns, I was just now speaking of; and even these themselves find it often difficult enough to maintain themselves, and to prevent Extortion.

'Tis from the same cause also, that a gross and profound Ignorance reigns in those States. For, how is it possible, there should be Academies and Colleges well founded, where are such Founders to be met with? And if there were any; Whence were the Scholars to be had? Where are those that have means sufficient to maintain their Children in Colleges? And if there were, who would appear to be so rich? And if they would, Where are those Benefices, Preferments, and Dignities, that require Knowledge and Abilities; and that may animate young men to study?

Thence it is likewise, that Traffick languishes in all that Country, in comparison of ours. For how many are there, that care to take pains, to run up and down, to write much, and to run danger for another, for a Governor, that shall extort, if he be not in league with some considerable Sword-man, whose Slave he in a manner is, and that makes his own Conditions with him?

It is not there, that the Kings find for their service, Princes, Lords, Gentlemen, Sons of rich and good Families, Officers, Citizens, Merchants; and even Tradesmen, well born, well educated, and well instructed; men of Courage, that have a true affection and respect for their King, that often live a great while at the Court, and in the Army, at their own Expences, entertaining themselves with good hopes, and content with the favourable aspect of the Prince; and who, upon occasion, fight manfully, covetous to uphold the honour of their Ancestors and Families. Those Kings, I say, never see about them, but men of nothing, Slaves, Ignorants, Brutes, and such Courtizans as are raised from the Dust to Dignities; and that for want of good Education and Instruction, almost always retain somewhat of their Offspring, of the temper of Beggars, enriched, proud, unsufferable, heartless, insensible of honour, disingenuous, and void of affection and regard for the honour of their King and Country. Here it is, where those Kings must ruine all, to find means to defray all those prodigious Charges, which they cannot avoid for entertaining their great Court, which hath no other source to subsist but their Coffers and Treasure, and for maintaining constantly the vast number of Soldiers, necessary for them to keep the People in subjection, to prevent their running away, to make them work, and to get what is exacted from them, they being so many Desperado's, for being perpetually under hatches, and for labouring only for others.

Thence it is also, that in an important War that may happen (which may be almost at all times) they must almost of necessity sell the Government for ready Money; and immense Sums, whence chiefly that ruine and desolation comes to pass which we see. For the Governor, which is the Buyer, must not he be re-imburfed of all those great Sums of money, which he hath taken up, perhaps the third or fourth part, at high interest? Must not a Governor also, whether he have bought the Government or not, find means as well as a Timariot and a Farmer, to make every year great Presents to a Visir, an Eunuch, a Lady of the Seraglio; and to those other persons that support him at Court? Must he not pay to the King his usual Tributes, and withal enrich himself, that wretched Slave, half famish'd, and deeply indebted when he first appear'd, without Goods, Lands, and Revenues of his House, such as they all are. Do not they ruine all, and lay all waste? I mean those, that in the Provinces are like so many small Tyrants with a boundless and unmeasur'd Authority, there being no body there, as hath been already said, that can restrain them, or to whom a Subject can have refuge, to save himself from their Tyranny, and to obtain Justice?

'Tis true, that in the Empire of the Mogol, the Vakea-nevis, that is, those Persons, whom he sends into the Provinces to write to him whatever passeth there, do a little keep the Officers in awe, provided they do not collude together (as it almost always happens) to devour all; as also that the Governments are not there so often sold, nor so openly as in Turky; I say, not so openly (for those great Presents, they are from time to time obliged to make, are almost equivalent to Sales) and that the Governors ordinarily remain longer in their Governments; which maketh them not so hungry, fobeggarly, garly, and so deep in debt, as those new Comers, and that consequently they do not always tyrannize over the people with so much cruelty; even apprehending, lest they should run away to the Raja's; which yet falls out very often.

'Tis also true, that in Persia the Governments are not so frequently nor so publickly sold as in Turky; the Sons of the Governors also succeeding often enough to their Fathers; which is also the cause, that the people there is often not so ill treated as in Turky, and occasions withal, that there is more politeness, and that even some there are that addict themselves to study. But all that is really but a slight matter; those three States of Turky, Persia and Indostan, forasmuch as they have all three taken away the Meum and Tuum as to Land, and propriety of Possessions (which is the foundation of whatever is good and regular in the World) cannot but very near resemble one another: they have the same defect, they must at last, sooner or later, needs fall into the same inconveniencies, which are the necessary consequences of it, viz. Tyranny, Ruine, and Desolation.

Far be it therefore, that our Monarchs of Europe should thus be Proprietors of all the Lands which their Subjects possess. Their Kingdoms would be very far from being so well cultivated and peopled, so well built, so rich, so polite and flourishing as we see them. Our Kings are otherwise rich and powerful; and we must avow that we are much better and more royally served. There would be Kings of Desarts and Solitudes, of Beggars and Barbarians, such as those are whom I have been representing; who, because they will have all, at last lose all; and who, because they will make themselves too rich, at length find themselves without riches; or, at least, very far from that which they covet after, out of their blind Ambition and Passion, of being more absolute than the Laws of God and Nature do permit. For, where would be those Princes, those Prelates, those Nobles, those rich Citizens, and great Merchants, and those famous Artizans, those Towns of Paris, Lyons, Toulouse, Rome, London, and so many others? Where would be that infinite number of Burroughs and Villages, all those fair Country-houses and Fields, and Hillocks, tilled and maintained with so much Industry, Care and Labour? And where would consequently be all those vast Revenues drawn thence, which at last enrich the Subjects and the Sovereign both? We should find the great Cities, and the great Boroughs rendred inhabitable, because of the ill Air, and to fall to ruine without any bodies taking care of repairing them; the Hillocks abandoned, and the Fields overspread with the Bushes, or filled with pestilential Marishes, as hath been already intimated.

A word to our dear and experienc'd Travellers: They would not find those fair conveniencies of Travelling; they would be obliged to carry all things with them, like the Bohemians; and all those good Inns, for example, that are found between Paris and Lyons, would be like ten or twelve wretched Caravans-serrahs, that is, great Barns, raised and paved, such as our Pont-neuf is, where hundreds of men are found pel-mel together with their Horses, Mules and Camels, where one is stifled with heat in Summer, and starved of cold in Winter; if it were not for the breathing of those Animals, that warm the place a little.

But it will be said, we see some States, where the Meum and Tuum is not, (as for example, that of the Grand Seigneur, which we know better than any, without going so far as the Indies.) that do not only subsist, but are also very povverful, and encrease daily.

'Tis true, that that State of the Gr. Seigneur, of such a prodigious Extent as it is, having so vast a quantity of Lands, the Soil of which is so excellent, that it cannot be destroyed but very difficultly, and in a long time, is yet rich and populous; but it is certain also, that if it were cultivated and peopled proportionably to ours, (which it would be, if there were propriety among the Subjects throughout) it would be a quite different thing; it would have people enough to raise such prodigious Armies as in old times, and rich enough to maintain them. We have travelled through almost all the parts of it; we have seen how strangely it is ruined and unpeopled; and how in the Capital City there now need three whole months to raise five or six thousand men. We know also, what it would have come to ere this, if it had not been for the great number of Christian Slaves that are brought into it from all Parts. And no doubt but that, if the same Government were continued there for a number of years, that State would destroy it self, and at last, fall it by its own Weakness, as it seems that already it is hardly maintained but only by that means, I mean, by the frequent change of Governors;

there being not one Governor, nor any one man in the vvhole Empire, that hath a penny to enable him to maintain the least thing, or that can almost find any men, if he had money. A strange manner to make States to subsist! There vvhould need no more for making an end of the Seditions, than a Brama of Pegu, who killed the half of the Kingdom with hunger, and turned it into Forests, hindring for some years the Lands from being tilled, though yet he hath not succeeded in his Design, and the State have afterwards been divided, and that even lately Ava, the Capital Town, was upon the point of being taken by an handful of China Fugitives. Mean time, we must confess, that we are not like to see in our days that total ruine and destruction of this Empire we are speaking of, (if so be we see not something worse) because it hath Neighbors, that are so far from being able to undertake any thing against him, that they are not so much as in a condition to resist him, unless it be by those succours of strangers, which the remoteness and jealousy would make slow, small, and suspect.

But it might be yet further objected, that it appears not, why such States as these might not have good Laws, and why the People in the Provinces might not be enabled to come and make their Complaints to a Grand Visir, or to the King himself. 'Tis true, that they are not altogether destitute of good Laws, and that, if those which are amongst them were observed, there would be as good living there, as in any part of the World. But what are those Laws good for, if they be not observed, and if there be no means to make them to be executed? Is it not the Grand Visir, or the King that appoints for the People such beggarly Tyrants, and that hath no others to set over them? Is it not He that sells those Governments? Hath a poor Peasant or Tradesman means to make great Journies, and to come and seek for Justice in the Capital City, remote, perhaps, 150 or 200 Leagues from the place of his Abode? Will not the Governor cause him to be made away in his journey (as it hath often hapned) or catch him sooner or later? And will he not provide his Friends at Court, to support him there, and to represent things quite otherwise than they are? In a word, this Governor, hungry as well as the Timariots and Farmers (that are all men for drawing Oyl out of Sand, as the Persian speaks, and for ruining a World, with their heap of Women-harpies, Children and Slaves) this Governor, I say, is he not the absolute Master, the Superintendant of Justice, the Parliament, the Receiver, and all?

It may perhaps be added, That the Lands, which our Kings hold in Domaine, are no less well tilled and peopled, than other Land. But there is a great difference between the having in propriety some Lands here and there in a great Kingdom (which changes not the Constitution of the State and Government) and the having them all in propriety, which would alter it altogether. And then we in these Parts have Laws so rational, which our Kings are willing to be the first to observe, and according to which they will that their particular Lands shall be governed as those of their Subjects are, so as to give way, that Actions of Law may be laid against their own Farmers and Officers, so that a Peasant or Tradesman may have means to obtain Justice, and to find remedy against the unjust violence of those that would oppress him: Whereas in those Parts of Asia, I see almost not any refuge for those poor People; the Cudgel and the Hammer of the Governor being in a manner the only Law that rules, and decides all Controversies there.

Lastly, It may be said, that 'tis at least certain, that in such States there is not such a multitude of long-lasting Suits of Law, as in these Parts, nor so many Lawyers of all sorts, as amongst us. It is in my opinion, very true; that one cannot too much applaud that old Persian Saying, Na-hac Koua Beter-Ez-hac Deraz, that is, Short Injustice is better than long Justice; and that the length of Law-Suits is unsufferable in a State, and that it is the indispensable duty of the Sovereign, by all good means, to endeavor a remedy against them. And 'tis certain, that by taking away this Meum and Tuum, the Root would be cut of an infinite number of Law-Processes, and especially of almost all those that are of importance, and long and perplexed; and consequently there would not need so great a number of Magistrates, which our Sovereigns do employ to administer Justice to their Subjects, nor that swarm of men, which subsist only by that way. But 'tis also manifest, that the Remedy would be an hundred times worse than the Disease, considering those great inconveniences that would follow thereupon, and that in all probability the Magistrates would become such as those of the Asiatick States, who deserve not that Name; for, in a word, our Kings have yet cause to glory upon the account of good Magistracy under them. In those Parts, some Merchants chants excepted, Justice is only among the meanest sort of People, that are poor, and of an unequal condition, who have not the means of corrupting the Judges, and to buy false Witnesses, that are there in great numbers, and very cheap, and never punished. And this I have learn'd every where by the experience of many years, and by my solicitous Enquiries made among the People of the Country, and our old Merchants that are in those Parts, as also of Ambassadors, Consuls and Interpreters; whatever our common Travellers may say, who, upon their having seen by chance, when they passed by, two or three Porters, or others of the like Gang, about a Kady, quickly dispatching one or other of the Parties, and sometimes both, with some lashes under the sole of their Feet, or with a Maybalé Baba, some mild words, when there is no Wool to sheers, who, I say, upon sight of this, come hither, and cry out, O the good and short Justice! O what honest Judges are those in respect of ours! Not considering in the mean time, that if one of those Wretches, that is in the wrong, had a couple of Crowns to corrupt the Kady, or his Clerks, and as much to buy two false Witnesses, he might either win his Process, or prolong it as long as he pleased.

In conclusion, to be short, I say, That the taking away this Propriety of Lands among private men, would be infallibly to introduce at the same time Tyranny, Slavery, Injustice, Beggary, Barbarism, Desolation, and to open a Highway for the ruine and destruction of Mankind, and even of Kings and States: And that on the contrary, this Meum and Tuum, accompanied with the hopes that every one shall keep, what he works and labours for, for himself and his Children, as his own, is the main foundation of whatever is regular and good in the World: Insomuch that whosoever shall cast his eyes upon the different Countries and Kingdoms, and taketh good notice of what follows upon this Propriety of Sovereigns, or that of the People, will soon find the true source and chief cause of that great difference we see in the several States and Empires of the World, and avow, that this is in a manner that which changes and diversifieth the Face of the whole Earth.

The End of the SECOND TOME.

A LETTER

TO

Monfieur de la M O T H E le V A Y E R,

WRITTEN

At D E H L I, J U L Y 1. 1663.

CONTAINING

The Description of DEHLI and AGRA, and divers Particulars discovering the Court and Genius of the Mogols and Indians.

S I R,

I Know that one of the first Questions you are like to ask me, at my return in France, will be, Whether Debli and Agra are Cities as fair and large, and as well peopled as Paris. Concerning its Beauty, I shall tell you by way of Preface, that I have sometimes wonder'd to hear our Europeans, that are here, despising the Towns of the Indies, as not coming near ours, in respect of the Edifices. Certainly they ought not to resemble them; and if Paris, London, and Amsterdam, stood in the place where Debli is, the greatest part of them must be thrown down, to build them after another manner. Our Cities indeed have great Beauties and Embellishments, but they are such that are proper to them, and accommodated to a cold Climat. Debli also may have its Beauties peculiar to it, and futable to a very hot Climat: For you are to know, that the heat here obligeth all People, even the great Lords, and the King himself, to go without Stockings, in a kind of Slippers only, a fine and slight Turbant on their Heads, and the other Garments accordingly; that there are months in the Summer so excessively hot, that in the Chambers one can hardly hold ones hands against a Wall, nor ones head on a Cushion: And that People are oblig'd for the space of more than six months to lie without covering, at the door of their Chamber, as the Rabble doth in the open Streets, or as the Merchants, and other People of some Quality do, in some airy Hall or Garden, or upon some Terrass well watered at Night: thence you may judge, whether if there were such streets as that of St. Jacques, or St. Denis, with their Houses shut, and of so many Stories high, they would be habitable? And whether in the Night, especially when the heats are without wind and stuffing, it would be possible to sleep there? And who is there (I pray) that would have a mind in Summer, when he returns on Horseback from the City half dead, and in a manner stifled of the heat and dust, and all in a Sweat, (for so it is) to go climbing up an high pair of Stairs, which often is narrow and dark, to a fourth or fifth Story, and to abide in this hot and suffocating Air? On such occasions they desire nothing, but to throw down into the Stomack a Pint of fresh Water, or Lemonade, to undress, to wash the Face, Hands and Feet, to lie down in some cool and shady place all along, having a Servant or two to fan one by turns, with their great Pankas, or Fans. But, to leave this, we shall now endeavour to entertain you with the representation of Debli as it is, that so you may judge, whether it be truly said, that it is a fair City.

It

It is now about forty years that Chah-Jehan, Father of the Grand-Mogol Aureng-Zebe now reigning, to eternize his memory, caused to be built a Town contiguous to old Debli, which he called after his Name Chah-Jehan-Abad, and by way of abbreviation Jehan-Abad; that is to say, a Colony of Chah-Jehan, designing to make it the Capital of the Empire, instead of Agra, where he said, that the Summer heats were too violent. This nearness hath occasioned, that the ruins of old Debli have served to build a new City; and in the Indies they scarce speak any more of Debli, but only of Jehan-Abad. Yet notwithstanding, since the City of Jehan-Abad is not yet known amongst us, I intend to speak of it under the old name of Debli, which is familiar to us.

Debli then is a Town altogether new, seated in a plain Campagne, upon a River like our Loire, called Gemna, and built along one side of the River only; there being but one Boat-bridge to pass over into the Plain. This Town is surrounded with Walls, except the River side: these Walls are of Bricks, and without a considerable defence, they being without a Ditch, and having nothing to flank them but round Towers after the old way, distant from each other an hundred common paces, and a rampart behind them, four or five foot thick. The compass of these Walls, comprizing the Fortrefs, is not so big as is commonly believed: I have gone it round with ease in three hours; and I believe not, though I was on Horseback, that I dispatched more than one league in an hour: 'tis true, that if you will take into the Town a very long Suburb, which goeth towards Labor, as also what remains inhabited of old Debli, which is likewise a great and very long Suburb, and besides, three or four small Suburbs more, all that would make in a direct line above a league and a half, and such a compass which I cannot well determine, because that between the Suburbs are great Gardens, and large spaces not built; but I may say, that thus taken it would be of a prodigious bigness.

The Fortrefs, in which is the Mehalle, or Seraglio, and the other Royal Apartments, which I shall hereafter speak of, is built round upon the River; yet there is between the Water and the Walls a pretty large and long sandy space, where commonly Elephants are exercised, and where frequently the Militia of the Omrabs and Rajas is mustered in the King's presence, who looks out of the Windows of one of his Apartments. The Walls of the Fortrefs, as to their round antick Towers, are very near like those of the Town, but they are partly of Bricks, and partly of a certain red Stone resembling Marble, which maketh them look fairer than those of the Town; besides that, they are much higher, stronger and thicker, being able to bear some Field-pieces that are there planted towards the Town; and incompassed also, excepting that side which respects the River, with a fair Ditch, walled up with Free-stone, full of Water and Fish. But yet whether they are considerable for strength; a battery of some middle sized Canons would, in my opinion, soon cast them down.

Round about the Ditch there is a pretty large Garden, at all times full of Flowers and green Apricocks, which together with those great Walls all red, maketh a very fine sight.

About this Garden is the great Street, or rather the great Place Royal, to which the two great and principal Gates of the Fortrefs do answer, and to these Gates the two chief Streets of the Town.

In this great Place it is, where the Tents of the Rajas are, that are in the King's Pay, to keep there every one in his turn their weekly Guard; whereas the Omrabs and the Mansebdars, or small Omrabs, keep it within the Fortrefs. These little Sovereigns are not pleased to see themselves thus and so long shut up in a Fort.

In this very Place it is, where at the break of day are exercised the Horses of a long Royal Stable, near it. And here 'tis also, that the Kobat-kan, or great Commissioner of the Cavalry, carefully vieweth the Horses of those Cavaliers, that have been received into Service, to the end that if these Horses are of Turkistan, or Tartary, and large and strong enough for Service, the King's Mark, and that of the Omrabs, under whom such Cavaliers are to be listed, may be branded upon them: A thing not ill devised, to prevent the mutual Loan of Horses in the Musters.

This same Place is also a kind of Bazar, or Market, of an hundred things sold there, and a Rendezvous of Players, and Juglers of all sorts, as the Pont-neuf at Paris. It is no less the Meeting-place of the poor Astrologers, as well Mahometan as Heathen. These Doctors (forsooth) sit there in the Sun upon a piece of Tapestry, all covered with dust, having about them some old Mathematical Instruments, which they make shew of to draw Passengers, and a great open Book representing the Animals of the Zodiack. These men are the Oracles, but rather the Affronters of the Vulgar, to whom they pretend to give, for one Payssa, that is, a penny, good Luck ; and they are they, that looking upon the Hands and the Face, turning over their Books, and making a shew of Calculation, determine the fortunate moment when a Business is to be begun to make it successful. The mean Women, wrapt up in a white Sheet from Head to Foot, come to find them out, telling them in their Ear their most secret Concerns, as if they were their Confessors, and (which smells very strongly of Stupidity and Folly) entreat them to render the Stars propitious to them suitable to their Designs ; as if they could absolutely dispose of their Influences.

The most ridiculous of all these Astrologers, in my opinion, was that mongrel Portuguese, fugitive from Goa, who sat in that Place with much Gravity upon his piece of Tapestry, like the rest, and had a great deal of Custom, though he could neither write nor read, and as for Instruments and Books, was furnished with nothing else but an old Sea-Compass, and an old Romish Prayer-Book in the Portuguese Language, of which he shewed the Pictures for Figures of the Zodiack : A tal Bestias, tal Astrologo : For such Beasts, such Astrologer, said he to the Reverend Father Buzè, a Jesuit, who met him in that Place.

I here speak only of the pitiful Astrologers of the Bazar ; for there are others in these Parts, that are in the Courts of the Grandees, and are considered as great Clerks, and are very rich ; whole Asia being overspread with this Superstition. The Kings and the great Lords, who would not undertake the least things without consulting them, allow them great Salaries, that they may read to them what is written in the Heavens, (for so they speak here) and take out for them that fortunate moment, I was lately speaking of ; or find out, at the opening of the Alcoran, the decision of all their Doubts.

To return ; these two principal Streets, which I said do answer to the two Gates of the Fortress, and to the Place, may have twenty five or thirty common paces in breadth, and they run in a straight line as far as you are able to see : Yet that which leads to the Gate of Labor, is much longer than the other ; but they are both alike as to the Houses. There is on both sides nothing but Arches, as in our Place Royal ; yet with this difference, that they are but of Bricks, and that there is not any Building upon them, but only the Terraces. There is also this difference, that they are not continued Galleries. These Arches are generally severed by Rails that make Shops which are not to be shut, where Trades-men work in the day, where Bankers sit for their Business, and where Merchants set out their Wares, which at night they lock up in a Magazin, the little Door of which, to be shut, is in the bottom of every Arch.

It is upon this Magazin, which is in the back-part of the Arches, that the Houses of Merchants are built and raised, which make a Shew good enough towards the Street, and are also pretty convenient, being well aired, out of the way of the dust, and having for their Floor the terrasses of the Arches, upon which they can walk to look out upon the Street, and to sleep at night in fresco. But excepting these Houses of the chief Streets, and a few others, there are not many of these fair Houses, that are thus raised upon Terrasses ; nor are even these two Streets universally furnished with them, there being mostly upon the Magazin, or on the side, nothing but a small Building, not seen from the Street, the great Merchants having their Houses somewhere else, whither they retire at night.

Besides these two principal Streets, there are yet five others, which indeed are not so long nor so straight, but for the rest are altogether like them. There are also a great many other Streets crossing those on all sides, whereof there are also some furnished with Arches ; but because they have been built piece-meal by such particular persons, as have not observed the Symmetry that was requisite, they are, for the most part, neither so large nor so straight, nor so well built as the others.

Amongst all these Streets are spread every where the Houses of the Mansebdars, or little Omrabs, and those of the men of the Law, as also of many great Merchants, and other private men ; of which there is a good number that are passable. It is true, there are but few that are all of Brick or Stone, and there is even a good number of these, that are made all of Earth only, and thatched ; but for all that, they are convenient, because they are generally airy, being furnished with Courts and Gardens. Nor are they disagreeable within, forasmuch as besides the fine moveables, these thatched Coverings are supported by a layer of certain long Canes, that are hard and strong, and very pretty, and because also these earthen Walls are plastered over with very fine and very white Chalk.

Amongst

Amongst these Houses I have been speaking of, that are tolerable, there is also a prodigious number of other small ones, that are only made up of Earth and Straw, where all the simple Cavaliers, and their Servants, and all those little people of the Market, that follow the Court and the Army are lodged.

It is from these thatched Houses that Dehli is so subject to Fires. This last year there were burnt above sixty thousand such, at two or three times that they took Fire, when there blew certain impetuous Winds, that rise chiefly in Summer. The Fire was so quick and so violent, that it surpris'd the Houses, and many Houses also that could not be time enough loosened; and there were even some of these poor Women burnt, that never had been out of the Seraglio, and that are so weak and shamefaced when they see people, that they know nothing else but to hide their Faces.

And it is upon the account of these pitiful Houses of Earth and Straw, that I look upon Dehli almost no otherwise than as many Villages joyned together, and (which I have already said in another place) as a Camp of an Army, a little better and more commodiously placed, than in the Field.

As to the Houses of the Omrabs, that are also up and down in this City, and principally upon the River, and even in the Suburbs: You are to know that in these hot Countries, to entitle an House to the name of Good and Fair, it is required it should be commodious, seated in a Place well aired, and capable to receive the Wind from all sides, and principally from the North; having Courts, Gardens, Trees, Conservatories, and little jets of Waters in the Halls, or at least at the Entry; furnished also with good Cellars with great Flaps to stir the Air, for reposing in the fresh Air from twelve till four or five of the Clock, when the Air of these Cellars begins to be hot and stifling: or having in lieu of Cellarage certain Kas-kanays, that is, little Houses of Straw, or rather of odoriferous Roots, that are very neatly made, and commonly placed in the midst of a Parterre near some Conservatory, that so the Servants may easily, with their Pompion-bottles, water them from without. Moreover it is required for the beauty of an House, that it be seated in the midst of some great Parterre, that it have four great Divans or Ways raised from the ground to the height of a man, or thereabout, and exposed to the four Parts of the World, to receive the Wind and the Cold from all the Parts it may come from. Lastly, it is requisite for a good House to have raised Terrasses, to sleep upon in the night, such as are of the same Floor with some great Chamber, to draw in ones Bedstead upon occasion; that is to say, when there comes some Tempest of Rain or Dust, or when that rousing freshness of the break of day awakens you, and obliges you to look for a Covering: or else when you apprehend that small and light Dew of the morning, which pierceth, and causeth sometimes benumbing and paralytical Symptoms in the Limbs.

As to the interior part of an House, it is requisite that the whole Floor be covered with a matter of Cotton four inches thick, covered with a white fine linnen Sheet during Summer, and with a piece of silk Tapestry in Winter: That in the most conspicuous part of the Chamber, near the Wall, there be one or two cotton Quilts, with fine flowered Coverings, and set about with small and fine embroidery of Silk, wrought with Gold and Silver, for the Master of the House, or Persons of Quality coming in, to sit upon; and that every Quilt have its cross Board, purfled with Gold, to lean upon: that round about the Chamber, along the Walls, there be several of these cross Boards, as I just now mentioned, handsomely covered with Velvet or flowered Sattin, for By-standers also to lean upon. The Walls five or six foot from the Floor, must be almost all with Niches, or little Windows, cut in an hundred different manners, or shapes, very fine, well measured and proportioned to one another, with some porcelain Vessels and Flower-pots in them; and the Ground must be painted and gilded, yet without any figure of Man or Beast, their Religion not allowing thereof.

This is as near as I know, the Idea of a handsome and convenient House in these Parts: And as there is a good number of them in Dehli, that have all these Qualities mentioned, or at least in part, according to which they are more or less fair and gallant: I believe one may say, without any injury to our Towns, that Dehli is not without Houses that are truly handsome, although they be not like ours in Europe.

Concerning the Appearance and Riches of the Shops, (which is the thing that contributeth most to the beauty of our Towns in Europe) although Dehli be the Seat of a very potent and magnificent Court, and consequently the resort of infinite quantities and varieties of rich Wares; yet we are not to imagine, that you shall find there our Streets of St. Denis; I know not whether there be any such in all Asia. And even as to the most fine and the most rich Stuffs, they are commonly but in the Magazins, their Shops are not furnisht with them: So that for one Shop that maketh any shew, that is, where there are sold those fine sorts of Linnen, those Stuffs of Silk streaked with Gold and Silver, Cloth of Gold, Turbands embroidered with Gold, and other Commodities of great price; you shall always find five and twenty and more, that are filled with nothing but Pots of Oyl and Butter, and Panniers one upon another full of Rice, Barley, Pease, Corn, and many other sorts of Grain and Legume; which are the ordinary Food not only of all the Gentiles, that never eat any meat, but also of the meaner sort of the Ma-humetans, and of a good part of those of the Souldiery.

It is true that there is a Fruit-market that maketh some shew. One may there see in Summer abundance of Shops full of dry Fruit, that come out of Persia, Balk, Bokara, and Samarkand, as Almonds, Pistaches, small Nuts, Raisins, Prunes, Apricocks, and the like. And in Winter there are found excellent Raisins fresh, black and white, brought from the same Countries, well wrapt up in Cotton; also Apples and Pears of three or four sorts, and of these admirable Melons that last all Winter. But all this Fruit is very dear; I have seen Melons sold even for a Crown and an half a piece. And they are indeed the great delicacy and expence of the Omrabs. I have often seen in the House of my Aga, that there was eaten in Melons in one morning for more than twenty Crowns. There are none but the Melons of the Country that are cheap in Summer, but those are not so good. The Grandeers only, that take care to send for Seed out of Persia, and to get the Ground well fitted for them, may eat good ones; yet that but rarely neither, the Ground being not so proper but that the Seed degenerateth the very first year.

It is true, there is yet another Fruit called Amba, or Mangue, which in its season, during two Summer months, is found in great plenty and very cheap; but those of Dehli are none of the best, being very loose and flashy: those of Bengala, Golkonda, and Goa, are admirable. It hath a certain sweetness so peculiar, that I doubt whether there be any Comfit in the World so pleasant. There are also Pateques, or Water-Melons in abundance, and almost all the year long; but they also do not thrive well at Dehli; they never have their meat so ruddy, firm and sugary; and if there be any good, they are not to be found but amongst the Great ones, who take the pains of making them grow as Melons, with extraordinary care and cost.

There be also up and down in Dehli Shops of Comfit-makers; but all their Comfits are very ill done, being full of Dust and Flies.

There are besides many Shops of Bread every where, but because they have no Ovens like ours, it is never well baked: yet in the Fortrefs there is sold some that is reasonably good; and the Omrabs cause such to be made in their Houses that is very delicate, sparing no new Butter, Milk, nor Eggs: yet though they leaven it, it is always much inferior in goodness to our Bread of Gouesse, and to those other sorts of excellent Bread of Paris, it favouring always of the Cake or Simnel.

In these Bazars there are also some Tents, where they trade in Roast-meat, and in dressing I know not how many sorts of Dishes; but all that is but beggarly, nasty, and ill meat. I fear you sometimes meet with the flesh of Camels, Horses, or Oxen, dead of sickness: I do not much trust them; so that if you will eat any thing worth eating, you must have it dressed at home.

There are also many Shops every where where they sell Flesh; but you must take heed, lest they give you Mutton for Kid; the Mutton and Beef, but especially Mutton, though well enough tasted, being here very hot, windy, and of ill digestion. The best meat here is young Kid, but it is very rarely sold in the Market by Quarters; so that if you have a mind to eat any, you must buy a whole and a live one; which is inconvenient enough, because the meat is spoiled between one morning and evening, and is commonly so lean, that it is tasteless. Ordinarily you find in the Shambles nothing but the quarters of great Kids, which often also are very lean and hard. It is true, that since I have learned something of the manner of the Country, I find both Meat and Bread good enough, because I send my Servant to the Fortrefs to the King's Caterers, who are very ready to let him have what is good for good payment, though it cost them nothing. And it was in reference to this, that one day I made my Agah smile, when I told him that I had I know not how many years lived by artifice and stealing, and that for all the 150 Crowns pay he monthly allowed me, I was ready to be starved; whereas in France for half a Roupie, I could every day eat as good a bit of meat as the King.

They

They have no Capons, all that People being too tender-hearted towards all Animals but Men, whom they need for their Seraglios. But the Markets are full of Hens, that are very good and cheap: Among the rest there is one sort of little ones, that I called Æthiopian Hens, because they have their skin black like the Æthiopians, which are very tender and very delicate.

Pidgeons there are, but no young ones, because they will not kill them young; they would be (say they) too small, and it were ill done to kill such poor little Animals.

There are also Partridges, but smaller than ours, and generally (seeing they bring them afar off alive, knowing how to take them with Nets) they are worse than our Pullets. The like may be said of their Ducks and Hares, of which they also bring whole Cages full alive.

Concerning Fish, the People here are no great Fish-mongers; yet at times one meets with very good Fish, especially of two sorts, the one resembleth our Pike, and the other our Carp; but that is only when it is not cold, for the Indians fear that much more than we Europeans apprehend heat. And if at any time you meet accidentally with any, the Eunuchs, who love them excessively, (I know not why) carry them presently away. None but the Omrabs have power to make men fish when they please, which they do with the Korrah, that great common Whip always hanging at their Gates.

From all that I have said, you may by the By see, whether a man ought to leave Paris to come to Dehli to make good cheer. Certainly the Grandeess have all things, but that is upon the account of their many Servants, of the Korrah, and of the plenty of Money. And thence it was I once said, that at Dehli there is no mean; there you must either be a great Lord, or live miserably: for I have experienced it my self, in a manner dying of Hunger this good while, though I have had considerable Pay, and was resolved to spare nothing that way, because commonly there is found nothing in the Markets but the refuse of the Grandeess. Besides that, the soul of a Feast which is good Wine, is not there; not that no Grapes do grow there to make Wine, (for I have drunk some at Amadevad and Golkonda, in the Houses of English men and Hollanders, that was not ill) but because it is prohibited to make Wine, in regard that not only by the Law of Mahomet, but also by that of the Heathen, it is not permitted to drink any: So that it is very rare to find Wine, and that which we find comes out of Persia from Chiras by Land to Banderabassy, from thence by Sea to Suratte, and from Suratte hither by Land in forty six days: or it comes from the Canaries, brought also over Sea to Suratte by the Dutch. And both are so dear, that the cost (as the saying is) maketh it lose the taste; for a Bottle holding about three Parisian pints cometh often to six or seven Crowns, and more. That which is of this Countreys growth is called Arac, a strong Water made of Sugar not refined, and even this is expressly prohibited to be sold, and there are none but Christians that dare drink of it, except others do it by stealth. This is a Drink very hot and penetrant, like the Brandy made of Corn in Poland. It so falls upon the Nerves, that it often causeth shaking Hands in those that drink a little too much of it, and casts them into incurable Maladies. Here we must accustom our selves to fair and good Water, and to Lemonade, which is excellent, and may be made with small charges, and doth not spoil the Stomach. But to say all, a man hath no great inclination, in such hot Countries as these to drink Wine; and I am willing notice should be here taken together with me, that the abstinence from Wine in these Parts, joyned to the general sobriety of the Natives, and to the sweats and perpetual transpiration made by the pores, are the cause (in my opinion) that we almost know not what is the Gout, the Stone, Aches of the Kidneys, Rheumatisms, Quartans; and that those that bring any of these Sickneses hither, as I did, are at length totally freed from them: and further, that the Pox it self, though very frequent, is not so cruel nor so pernicious here as in Europe: so that People generally live here more healthily than with us. But then on the other hand, there is not so much vigour here in People, as in our cold Climate; and this feebleness and languor of body is a kind of perpetual malady, very troublesome to all, especially in the great heats of Summer, and especially to the Europeans, whose bodies are not yet inured to heat.

As for Shops of excellent Handy-craftsmen, that is also a thing we must not look for here: all we find is but very little; not that the Indians have not wit enough to make them successful in Arts, they doing very well (as to some of them) in many Parts of India, and it being found that they have inclination enough for them, and that some of them make (even without a Master) very pretty workmanship, and imitate so well our Work of Europe, that the difference thereof will hardly be discerned. I have seen amongst them even of our kind of Guns, very fine and very good; and pieces of Goldsmiths Work so well done, that I doubt whether in Europe they could be made better. I have also seen in Picture and Miniature such curious and delicate pieces, that I admired them. Amongst others, I have seen the Combats of Eckbar, represented upon a Buckler by a famous Painter, who was said to have been seven years working at it, which seemed to me an admirable piece of Work. It is manifest, that they want nothing but good Masters, and the precepts of Art to give them just proportions; and above all, that life of the Face, to which they have not yet been able to attain. The Reason therefore why in the Shops of Dehli there are rarely found good Handy-craftsmen, is not want of Wit, but contempt of the Workmen, who are ill treated, and whose Work is debased to too low a price. If some Omrab, or Mansebdar, will have any thing made by a Workman of the Bazar, he will send for him, and make him work in a manner by force, and afterwards pay him as he pleaseth; and the man will think himself happy too, if in part of payment he receive not the Korrah. What heart then can a poor Workman have to take pains to succeed in his Workmanship? He considers nothing but to dispatch his Work, thereby to earn something to put Bread into his Mouth. So that if there be any of them that succeed, they are of those whom the great Lords entertain in their Service, and that work only for them.

Touching the things within the Fortrefs, where are the Seraglio, and some other Royal Edifices, you must not look for a Louvre, or an Escorial; those Buildings do not resemble ours, nor by what I have said, ought they to resemble them: it is enough that they have that stateliness, which is proper to the Climat.

I find nothing remarkable at the entry, but two great Elephants of stone, which are on the two sides of one of the Gates. Upon one of them is the Statue of Jamel, that famous Raja of Chitar, and upon the other, that of Polta his Brother. These are those two gallant Men, that together with their Mother, who was yet braver than they, cut so much Work for Eckbar; and who in the Sieges of Towns, which they maintained against him, gave such extraordinary proofs of their Generosity, that at length they would rather be killed in the out-falls with their Mother, than submit: and for this Gallantry it is, that even their Enemies thought them worthy to have these Statues erected for them. These two great Elephants, together with the two resolute Men sitting on them, do at the first entry into this Fortrefs make an impression of I know not what greatness and awful terror.

After you have passed this Gate, you find a long and large Street, divided into two by a Channel of running Water, and having on both sides, as our Pont-neuf, a long raised Wall five or six foot high, and four broad; and further off some Arches shut, that follow one another all along in the form of Gates. It is upon this long raised Place that those Clerks, Controllers, and other small Officers sit to do their Office, without being incommoded by the Horses and People that pass along beneath. And it is there also where the Mansebdars, or little Omrabs, are at night to keep the Guard. The Water of the Channel runneth dividing it self through the whole Seraglio, and at length falleth into the Ditches to fill them. It is drawn out of the River by a Channel opened five or six leagues above Dehli, and conveyed cross the Field, and that through some Rocks that have cost great pains to be cut in divers places. And this is very near what may be seen at the entry into one of the two principal Gates, that answer to the great Piazza.

If you enter at the other Gate, you also find presently a pretty long and large Street, having its risings on the sides as the other, together with Shops upon them in lieu of the Arches. This Street is properly a Bazar, which is very commodious during the season of the Rains and Summer, because it is covered by a long and large Vault, which hath on the top great openings to let in light.

Besides these two Streets, there are many other small ones on the right and left hand, that lead to the Apartments, where the Omrabs keep their Guard, each in his turn, once a week, for twenty four hours. These Places are stately ones for Corps de Gardes, the Omrabs striving to beautifie them at their own charges. These are ordinarily great raised Places respecting a Parterre, that hath its little Channels of running Water, small Conservatories and Jets of Water. The Omrabs during the twenty four hours of Guard, take no care for their Table, the King sending them all their Meat ready dressed, and they being but to receive it, as they do, with very much Ceremony and Respect, spect, making three obeysances of thanks, by elevating their Hand upon their Head, and bowing down to the ground, their Face turned toward the King.

There are also found many raised Walks and Tents in sundry Places, that are the Offices of several Officers. Besides, there are many great Halls that are the Kar-kanays, or Places where Handy-craftsmen do work. In one of these Halls you shall find Embroiderers at work, together with their Chief that inspects them; in another you shall see Gold-smiths; in a third Picture-drawers; in a fourth Workmen in Lacca; in others, Joyners, Turners, Taylors, Shoo-makers; in others, Workmen in Silk and purified Gold, and in all those sorts of fine Cloth, of which they make Turbans, Girdles with golden flowers, and those Drawers of Ladies, that are so fine and delicate, as that sometimes they last them but one night, though they often cost them ten or twelve Crowns, when they are of that fashion, as I have mentioned; I mean, enriched with those fine Embroideries of Needle-work.

All these Handy-craftsmen come in the morning to those Kar-kanays, and work there all day long, and at night return to their several homes, every one passing his Life quietly, without aspiring above his condition: for the Embroiderer maketh his Son an Embroiderer, the Gold-smith maketh his Son a Gold-smith, and a Physician in a Town maketh his Son a Physician; and no body marrieth but with those that are of his Trade: which is religiously observed, not only among the Heathen, that are obliged to it by their Law, but almost always among the Mahometans themselves: Whence it is that you may often see very handsome young Women, that remain unmarried, passing their time as well as they can, though they might meet with good Matches, if their Parents would or could marry them into another Family, esteemed less noble than their own.

After all these Apartments, we come at length to the Am-kas, which is something very Royal. This is a great square Court with Arches, as may be our Place Royal: with this difference, that there are no Buildings atop, and that the Arches are severed from one another by a Wall, yet so that there is a small Gate to pass from one to the other. Over the great Gate, which is in the middle of one of the sides of this Square, there is a large raised Place, all open on the side of the Court, which is called Nagar-kanay, because that is the Place where the Trumpets are, or rather the Hoboys and Timbals, that play together in consort at certain hours of the day and night: but this is a very odd consort in the Ears of an European that is a new comer, not yet accustomed to it: for sometimes there are ten or twelve of those Hoboys, and as many Timbals, that sound altogether at once; and there is an Hoboy which is called Karna, a fathom and an half long, and of half a foot aperture below; as there are Timbals of Brass or Iron, that have no less than a fathom in diameter: whence it is easie to judge, what a noise they must needs make. Indeed this Musick in the beginning did so pierce and stun me, that it was unsufferable for me; yet I know not what strange power custom hath, for I now find it very pleasing, especially in the night, when I hear it afar off in my bed upon my Terrass; then it seemeth to me to carry with it something that is grave, majestic and very melodious. And there is some Reason for this melody; for seeing it hath its Rules and Measures, and that there are excellent Masters taught from their youth to manage it, and perfectly know how to qualify and temper those strong sounds of the Hoboys and Timbals, it cannot be otherwise, but they must thence obtain some sympathy that cannot be displeasing to the Ear, provided (as I said) that it be heard at a distance. And even for this Reason it is, that they have placed the Nagar-kanay very high, and remote from the Ears of the King, as you will hear by and by.

Over against the great Gate of the Court, upon which is the Nagar-kanay, beyond the whole Court, there is a great and stately Hall, with many ranks of Pillars high raised, very airy, open on three sides, looking to the Court, and having its Pillars and Ground painted and gilded. In the midst of the Wall, which separateth this Hall from the Seraglio, there is an opening, or a kind of great Window high and large, and so high that a Man cannot reach to it from below with his hand: There it is where the King appears seated upon his Throne, having his Sons on his sides, and some Eunuchs standing, some of which drive away the Flies with Peacocks-tails, others fan him with great Fans, others stand there ready with great respect and humility for several Services. Thence he seeth beneath him all the Omrabs, Rajas, and Ambassadors, who are also all of them standing upon a raised Ground encompassed with silver Rails, with their Eyes downwards, and their Hands crossing their Stomachs: somewhat further off he seeth seeth the Mansebdars, or lesser Omrabs, which are also all standing in the same posture and respect as the Omrabs do: and somewhat further off, in the remaining part of the Hall, and in the Court, he seeth a great crowd of all sorts of People. For there it is where the King every day about noon giveth a general Audience to all; which is the Reason that this great Hall is called Am-ka, that is, Place of Audience, or a Place of Meeting common to great and small.

During an hour and an half, or thereabouts, whilst this Assembly lasteth, the King is diverted by seeing pass before him a certain number of the handfomest Horses of his Stables, to see whether they be well dressed, and in good plight. So he doth see a good number of Elephants passing also before him, whose dirty bodies are then well washed and cleansed, and painted black like Ink, except that they have two great streaks painted red, which from the top of their Head come down to their Trunk, where they meet. These Elephants have then also certain deckings embroidered with a couple of silver Bells hanging down on the sides, fastened to the two ends of a great silver Chain, passing over their Shoulders; as also certain Cow-tails of the great Tibet, white and very dear, hanging at their Ears like great Mustachoes: and two little Elephants well accoutred going by their sides, as if they were their Slaves and appointed to serve them. These great Colosses, as if they were proud to see themselves so bravely adorned and attended, march with much gravity; and when they are come before the King, the Conductor that sits upon their Shoulders, with a pointed Iron in his Hand pricketh them, and speaketh to them, and maketh them bow with one Knee, and lift up the Trunk into the Air and make a noise, which the People take for a Taslim, or deep Salute.

After these Elephants there are brought divers tamed Gazelles, which are made to fight with one another; as also some Nilgaur, or grey Oxen, which in my opinion are a kind of Elands and Rhinoceros, and those great Buffalos of Bengala with their prodigious Horns to combat with a Lion or Tiger; likewise Leopards, or Panthers tamed, which he useth in the hunting of Gazelles: further, some of those handfom hunting Dogs of Usbeck of all sorts, every one with his little red Cover; store of Birds of prey of all kinds, some of which are for Partridges, others for Cranes, others to fall upon Hares, and, as they say, upon the very Gazelles, beating their Heads and blinding them with their Wings and Claws.

Often also one or two of the Omrabs cause at that time to pass their Cavalry for a review before the King: the Omrabs coveting that their Horsemen should appear gallant, advantageously decked with extraordinary Garments, and their Horses trapped with Iron, and harnessed with I know not how many different and odd fashions.

The King taketh sometimes pleasure himself to cause Cutlases, or short Swords, to be tryed upon dead Sheep, brought to him without the bowels, and very neatly packed up; where the young Omrabs, Mansebdars and Gourzeberdars, or Mace-bearers, strive to shew their force and dexterity by cutting asunder the four Legs joyned together, and the Body of the Sheep all in one stroke.

Mean time all these Divertisements are nothing but an Interlude of serious Affairs: for as I have said, the King omits not to make a Muster of his Cavalry, and well to view them himself. We have seen, that the War being ended, there is not one Cavalier, nor any other Souldier, but He hath seen him and examined him, either to increase his Pay, or to lessen it, or quite to cashier him. Besides it is seen every day, that he commands the Petitions, which are shewed him afar off in the crowd of the People, to be brought to him and to be read: ordering the Parties concerned to approach, and examining them, and often causing Justice to be done them immediately, although he hath the Adalet-kanay, the Chamber of Justice, where he ordinarily is present once a week, attended by his two first Kadys, or Chief Justices: and though also at one other time in the week he hath the patience to hear in private, for the space of two hours, ten Persons of the common People, whom a good and rich old Man presents to him. Whence it appears (to note that by the By) that those Kings, how barbarous soever esteemed by us, do yet constantly remember, that they owe Justice to their Subjects.

All what I have been relating to you of what is transacted in this Assembly of the Am-ka, seems to me great and royal; but that which hath extreemly offended me there, is a kind of Adulation too mean and flat, commonly heard in that Place. For the King cannot say a word to any purpose, but he is presently exalted, and some of the first Omrabs lifting up their Hands, as if they were to receive some Benediction from Heaven, cry out, Karamat ! Karamat ! Wonder ! Wonder ! Neither is there any Mogolian but he knoweth and glorieth in reciting this Proverb in Persian Verse :

Aguer chach ronzra Gonyed cheb est in Bubayed Goust inek mah on peruin.

If the King saith at Noon-day, it is Night, you are to say, behold the Moon and the Stars. This Vice passeth even unto the People. I have seen an hundred times People of Mogol, who having need of me in some Business, made no scruple to come and tell me to my Face for a Preamble, that I was Aristotalis, Bocrate, and Abonyfina Ulzaman ; the Aristotle, the Hippocrates, and the Avicenna of the Time. At first I endeavoured to fence my self against it by this ordinary Complement, that I was none such, and was far inferior to the merit of those Men : but that made them worse ; so that I thought it better to accustom my Ears to their Flattery, as I have done to their Musick. I cannot forbear imparting to you this little piece of Flattery, because that will let you see the more how far they carry it. A Pendet Brachman, or Heathen Doctor, whom I had put to serve my Agah, at the entring into his Service would needs make his Panegyrick, and after he had compared him to the greatest Conquerors that ever were, and told him an hundred gross and impertinent Flatteries, at last concluded seriously with this ; When you put your Foot into the Stirrup, my Lord, and when you march on Horse-back in the front of the Cavalry, the Earth trembleth under your feet, the eight Elephants, that hold it up upon their Heads, not being able to support it. I could not hold laughing, and I strove seriously to tell my Agah, who could not hold neither, that then he would do well not to go on Horse-back but very seldom, to prevent Earthquakes, which often cause so great Mischiefs. Who quickly made this Reparty with a constrained Countenance between serious and smiling : And it is therefore that I cause my self ordinarily to be carried in a Paley.

But no more of this : from the great Hall of the Am-kan one enters into a more retired Place, called the Goselkane, that is, the Place to wash in. But few are suffered to enter there ; neither is the Court of it so great as that of the Am-kan : but the Hall is very handfom, spacious, painted and gilded, and its Floor raised four or five foot high. There it is where the King is seated in a Chair, his Omrabs standing round about him, and giveth a more particular Audience to his Officers, receiveth their Accompts, and treateth of the most important Affairs of State. All the Omrabs are obliged to be without fail every evening at this Assembly, as in the morning at the Am-kan ; else something is retrenched of their Pay. There is only my Agah Danechmend-kan, that because he is a Person of Learning, and perpetually busie in studying, or in foreign Affairs, is dispensed with, except Wednesday, which is his day of being upon the Guard. These are indispenfible Customs, and it is very just they should be so in respect of the Omrabs, because they are in a manner so in respect of the King : for he almost never faileth to be at these two Assemblies, unless some urgent Affair do supervene, or he be exceeding sick. And we did see, that Aureng-Zebe, even in his last Sickness, which was very dangerous, failed not to make himself to be carried thither once a day at least. It is true, he being sick to extremity, that if he had not been seen there, the whole Kingdom would presently have been in disorder, and the Shops shut up in the City.

Whilst the King in this Hall of Gosle-kanay is busie, as I was saying, they omit not to let pass before him most of the things that are made to pass at the Am-kan. There is only this difference, that this Assembly being held in the evening, and the Court being then less, the review of the Cavalry of the Omrabs is not made, as in the morning at the Am-kan : but then there is this of particular, that all the Manseb-dars that are upon the Guard do salute the King, and pass before him with Ceremony enough : before them marcheth with sufficient Pomp that which is called the Kours, which are many Figures of Silver carried at the end of some great silver Sticks, that are very fine and very artificially made ; of which there are two that represent two great Fishes, two others that exhibit a phantastick Animal of an horrid figure, by them called Eiedebs ; others that represent two Lions, others two Hands, others Scales, and many more whereof they make Mysteries. Amongst these Kours and Manseb-dars, are mixt many Gourze-berdars, or Mace-bearers, who are chosen Men, tall of Stature, and of a good Mean, (spoken of elsewhere) and appointed to prevent Disorders in Assemblies, and to run about with speed to carry the Orders, and to execute the Commands of the King.

I now with I could lead you about in the Seraglio, as I have done in the rest of the Fortrefs: but who is the Traveller that can speak of that as an Eye-witness? I have sometimes entred into it when the King was not at Dehli, and I think pretty far, upon the occasion of a great Lady, that was so sick that she could not be carried to the Gate, according to custom; but I had always a Covering of Kachemire over my Head, which like a great Scarf hung down to my Feet, and an Eunuch conducted me by the Hand, like a blind Man, so that I cannot particularly describe to you what it is. Only in general I can tell you, according to what I have learnt from some Eunuchs, that in it there are very handfom Apartments severd one from another, more or less great and stately, according to the Quality and the Pensions of the Women; that there is almost no Chamber but it hath at its Door a Store-house of running Water; that 'tis full of Parterres, pleasant Walks, shady Places, Rivolets, Fountains, Jets of Water, Grotta's, great Caves against the heat of the day, and great Terrasses raised high, and very airy, to sleep upon in the cool: in a word, you know not there what 'tis to be hot. They principally boast of a little Tower respecting the River, being, say they, covered with Plates of Gold, as those two that are at Agra, and within all Gold and Azure, very handfom and rich Pictures and Looking-glasses.

This is very near what I can tell you of the Fortrefs, yet before we leave it, let us return once more to the Am-kas. I am now going to represent it to you after the manner I saw it at certain Festivals of the Year, especially at that which was kept after the War for an extraordinary rejoycing; for this is one of the most remarkable things I have seen.

The King appeared sitting upon his Throne, in the bottom of the great Hall of the Am-kas, splendidly apparelled. His Vest was of white Sattin flowred, and raised with a very fine Embroidery of Gold and Silk. His Turban was of Cloth of Gold, having a Fowl wrought upon it like an Heron, whose foot was covered with Diamonds of an extraordinary bigness and price, with a great Oriental Topas, which may be said to be matchless, shining like a little Sun. A Collar of big Pearls hung about his Neck down to his Stomach, after the manner that some Heathens wear here their great Beads. His Throne was supported by six high Pillars, or Feet, said to be of massie Gold, and set with Rubies, Emeralds and Diamonds. I am not able to tell you aright, neither the number nor the price of this heap of precious Stones, because it is not permitted to come near enough to count them, and to judge of their water and purity. Only this I can say, that the big Diamonds are there in confusion, and that the Throne is estimated to be worth four Kowroures of Roupies, if I remember well. I have said elsewhere, that a Roupie is almost equivalent to half a Crown, a Lecque to an hundred thousand Roupies, and a Kowroure, to an hundred Lecques: so that the Throne is valued forty millions of Roupies, which are worth about sixty millions of French Livers. Chah-Jehan, the Father of Aureng-Zebe, is he that caused it to be made, to shew so many precious Stones as successively had been amassed in the Treasury, of the Spoils of those ancient Patans and Rajas, and of the Presents which the Omrabs are obliged to make yearly upon certain Festival days. The Art and Workmanship of this Throne is not answerable to the Matter: that which I find upon it best devised, are two Peacocks covered with precious Stones and Pearls, which are the work of a French-man, called ——— that was an admirable Workman, and that after having circumvented many Princes with his Doublets, which he knew how to make admirably well, fled unto this Court, where he made his Fortune. Beneath this Throne there appeared all the Omrabs in splendid Apparel, upon a raised Ground covered with a great Canopy of purfled Gold with great golden Fringes, and inclosed by a silver Balistre. The Pillars of the Hall were hung with Tapestries of purfled Gold, having the ground of Gold; and for the roof of the Hall, there was nothing but great Canopies of flowred Sattin, fastened with red silken Cords, that had big tufts of Silk mixt with threads of Gold hanging on them. Below there was nothing to be seen but great silken Tapestries very rich, of an extraordinary length and breadth. In the Court there was set abroad a certain Tent they call the Asper, as long and large as the Hall and more. It was joyned to the Hall by the upper part, and reached almost as far as to the middle of the Court; mean time it was all inclosed by a great Balistre covered with Plates of Silver. It was supported by three Pillars, being of the thickness and height of a Barge-mast, and by some lesser ones, and they all were covered with Plates of Silver. It was red from without, and lined within with those fine Chitres, or Cloth painted by a Pencil of Maslipatan, purposely wrought and contrived with with such vivid Colours, and Flowers so natural drawn of an hundred several fashions and shapes, that one would have said, it were an hanging Parterre. Thus was the great Hall of the Am-kas adorned and set out.

As to those arched Galleries, which I have spoken of, that are round about the Court, each Omrab had received order to dress one of them at his own charges. And they now striving who should make his own most stately, there was seen nothing but purified Gold above and beneath, and rich Tapestries under foot.

The third day of the Feast, the King caused himself to be weighed with great Ceremony, and after him divers Omrabs, in great Scales, and with Weights said to be of massie Gold. I remember that all the Omrabs expressed a great joy, that the King weighed two pounds more now than the year preceding.

Every year there are held such kind of Festivals, but never any was seen done with so much splendor and charge. It is said, that that which induced Aureng-Zebe to celebrate this splendid Feast, was nothing else but to make the Merchants of purified Gold recover themselves, who had whole Magazines full of it, much spoiled in those four or five years of War, wherein they could not sell them. These Expences of the Omrabs were great; but the simple Cavaliers paid their share of it, because that the Omrabs after the Feast made them take off that Commodity to make Vests thereof.

There is an ancient Custom accompanying these Feasts, which little pleaseth the Omrabs: And it is this, that then they are by respect obliged to make some fair Presents to the King in proportion of their Pay. There are some, that to appear brave, or for fear of being searched for the Rapines by them committed in their Offices and Governments; or to purchase the Favour of the King, in the hopes of having their Pensions augmented, make him Presents that are extraordinary. Some (which is ordinary enough) do present fine Vessels of Gold set with precious Stones; others present fair Pearls, Diamonds, Emeralds, or Rubies; others (which also is very common) give him, without other Ceremony, a quantity of those pieces of Gold, that are worth about a Pistol and an half. I remember, that Aureng-Zebe, being gone to visit (during this great Festival) his Visir Jasir-kan, not as Visir, but as a Kinsman, and under the pretence of desiring to see a piece of Building, which he had caused to be raised anew, Jasir-kan presented him in these pieces of Gold, with the value of an hundred thousand Crowns, some good Pearls, and one Ruby valued forty thousand Crowns; but which Chah-Jehan, who was admirably well skill'd in Jewels, discovered not to be worth five hundred Crowns; the which perplexed the first Jewellers exceedingly, that had been deceived therein.

There is another thing sometimes attending these Feasts, which is odd enough: And that is a kind of Fair, then held in the Mehale, or the King's Seraglio. The Women of the Omrabs and of the great Mansab-dars, or little Omrabs (I mean those that are the handsomest and the most gallant) are the She-Merchants that keep the Fair, and sell Commodities; the King is the Merchant that buyeth, as also all those Begums or Princesses, and other great Ladies of the Seraglio. The Wares are fine purified Gold, or rich Embroideries of the new fashion, some rich Ribbons well wrought upon Cloth of Gold, or some pieces of that fine Cloth which is worn by the great Ladies, and other such Merchandize of great price. If they have ever a handsome Daughter, they forget not to bring her along with them to let the King see her, and so make her known to those Begums. The jest of this Fair is, that the King comes to bargain with those She-Merchants, like a petty Merchant, penny by penny, contesting that they are not in earnest, that it is too dear, that he will give no more than so much; that the Merchandize of such an one is far better, and the like. The Women, on the other hand, do their best to make good their part, and without considering that 'tis the King, (which is the best of the sport) they contend and stand upon their price, till sometimes they come to high words, as that that is to be a Merchant of Snow, (one of their phrases) that he understands nothing in the matter of Wares, that he may go to another Place, that that Commodity is not for him, &c. The Begums do the like, or worse, for they sometimes fall to downright railing, so that there is such a cry and noise, and boufonnery, that it cannot be parallel'd. But when any price is agreed on, whoever buyeth on this or that side, the King payeth, and the Begums pay, all with ready money: and it also falls out often enough, that the King and the Begums, instead of Silver Roupies, let slide (in favour of the handsome She-Merchant, or her Daughter) some Roupies of Gold, as if 'twere by mistake, and without taking notice of any thing. The She-Merchants also take it in like manner, all passeth with expressions of rallery and gallantry. Chah-Jehan, who did not hate the Sex, would still multiply this Fair, and have it at all Festival days, though he knew it did not very well please some Omrabs. But there is one thing, which to me seems to be a little too extravagant; which is, that the publick Women, I mean not those of the Bazar, but those more retired and considerable ones, that go to the great marriages in the houses of the Omrabs and Mansebdars to sing and dance, those that are called Kenchen, as if you should say, the guilded, the blossoming ones; that those, I say, did also enter in the time of Chah-Jehan into the Seraglio at such Fairs, and there passed even the whole night in singing and dancing. These are not of that sort which prostitute themselves promiscuously to all; and they are most of them handsome and well apparelled, and excellent singers and dancers, after the mode of the Country, surprising in the suppleness of their body, and the nimbleness of their motions, yet in the upshot of the rank of Publick Women. Chah-Jehan was not content only to have them come to the Seraglio at those Feasts, but when they came to salute him, according to that antient custom that obligeth them to come every Wednesday to do obeysance to the King in the Amkar, he often made them to enter there, and to pass all night with him in such sports and boufonries, Aureng-Zebe is more serious, he suffers them not to come into the Seraglio: he permits only (not to abrogate the custom) that they may ordinarily come every Wednesday to give him the Salam, or Salute, in the Am-kar, at a distance, but they must presently return home again.

But since we are upon these Feasts and Fairs, and speak of these Kenchens, what hurt were it if I should tell you a story to make you merry, of one of our French Men; since Plutarch is of opinion, that little things are not always to be passed by, and that they often mind us more of the genius and temper of men than the greatest. This French Man called Bernard, was at this Court about the latter years of King Jehan-Guire. He must needs have been some good Physitian, and withal Excellent in Chirurgery, according to the relations that are made of him. He was welcome to Jehan-Guire, and became very familiar with him, to that degree that they drank and debauched together. Nor did this Jehan-Guire ever think on any thing, but a good cup and merriment, leaving the management of the State to his Wife, the renowned Nour-Mehale, or Nour-Jehan-Begum, which he used to say, had wit enough to govern the Empire without his giving himself any trouble about it. Besides that this our Country-man had of the King ten Crowns daily pay, he gained yet more by treating those great Ladies of the Seraglio, and the grand Omrabs, that all made use of him, and presented him who could best, because he was both successful in his Cures, and extraordinarily favoured by the King: But he was a man that could keep nothing, what he received with one hand, he at the same time gave away with the other, so that he was known and loved by all, especially by those Kenchens, upon whom he made great expences, having always a set of them that passed the night at his house in singing and dancing. Mean time he chanced to fall in love with one of these Women that was young and beautiful, and danced exceeding well; but the Mother apprehending least the Daughter, by prostituting her self, should lose her strength and vigor (as it will fall out) would not let her go out of her sight: so that Bernard could never find any other way to compass his ends but this. One day when the King made him a Present in the Am-kar, before all the Omrabs, for a considerable Cure he had done in the Seraglio, he very submissively gave his Majesty thanks, waving the Present, but instead of it, begged this favour of him, that he would vouchsafe to give him this young Kencheny, which he was amorous of, and which stood behind him, ready to make the usual obeysance to the King. The whole Assembly brake out into laughter to see him wave the Present, and to hear him make so ridiculous a demand, he being a Christian, and the Woman a Mahometan and a Kencheny. But Jehan-Guire, who never troubled his head much with Mahometanism, and could not hold laughing aloud, presently commanded that this young Woman should be given him, saying, Lay her on his shoulders, and let him carry her away. So said, so done; and in the presence of the whole Assembly this Kenchen was put on Bernard's back, who went away thus charged, and carried her to his house.

I cannot forbear giving you here an account of a divertisement, which usually these Feasts end with, and which is unknown to us in Europe: and that is the combat of the Elephants, which the King, the Ladies of the Court, and the Omrabs do behold from several apartments of the Fortrefs, and which is shewn before all the people in this great sandy place which looks to the River.

They

They raise a wall of earth three or four foot broad, and five or six foot high. The two Elephants that are to fight, meet one another face to face, one on the one side of the wall, the other on the other, each having two Riders upon him; that so, if the first, who sits on his shoulders (having a great pointed iron in his hand, to turn the Beast on the right or left hand) should fall, the other, who sits backward, may cast himself into his place. These four Riders or Guides, do animate their Elephants to the Combat, and vigorously to fall upon their enemy, now flattering them, and by and by chiding them as cowards, and very rudely kicking them with their heels. After they have been a good while thus chafed and pulst on, then you shall see these two bulky masses come to the wall, and bluntly assault one another, and give such cruel blows with their teeth, head and trunk, that you would think they would soon strike one another dead. This fight continues a while, then ceaseth, and begins afresh several times, until the mud-wall being overthrown, the stoutest of the two passeth upon the other, maketh him turn his back, pursueth him with blows of his teeth and trunk, and gets such an hold-fast upon him, that there is no means of seperating them, except it be with the Cher-kys, that is, certain artificial fires cast betwixt them, this Animal being very fearful of fire: whence it comes, that since Fire-arms have been used in Armies, Elephants do almost no good at all. It is true indeed, that some of those brave ones that come out of Ceilan, are not so timorous; but that is not till they have been whole years accustomed to it, by discharging every day Muskets before them, and by casting squibs between their legs. Mean time, this conflict of the Elephants would be no such displeasing sight, if it were not so cruel, it often happening, that some of those poor Guides are trod under foot and perish: for the Elephants in the combat have this malice, that they strive above all things to strike with their trunk, and to pull down the conductor of their adversary; and thence it is, that on the day when these poor Riders know they are to make the Elephants fight, they bid farewell to their Wives and Children, as if they were condemned to death. That which encourages and comforts them, is, that if they escape and quit themselves well of their duty, the King increases their pay, and commands a sack of Peyffas, which amounts to about fifty French Livres, to be forthwith given them, or if they be killed upon the spot, he orders that pay to be made to the Widow, and the Office to be given to his Son, if he have any. There is another mischief, which often accompanieth this combat; which is, that in this great throng there are always some persons overthrown by the Elephant, or trod under foot by the Horses and People, that on a sudden run away all at once, and fall one upon another, when the Elephants are enraged, and the one pursueth the other, so that then one cannot at any nearness look on but with danger. For my part, the second time I saw it, I did sufficiently repent for having approached so nigh, and if I had not had a good Horse, and two good Servants, I believe I should have paid for my curiosity as dear as others.

But 'tis time we should leave the Fortrefs, and return into the City, there to observe to you two things I had forgot. The first is the great Mosquee, seen afar off in the midst of the Town, standing upon a rock, flatted to build upon, and to make round about a large place for four long and fair Streets to end upon, and answering to the four sides of the Mosquee, viz. one to the principal Gate, or Frontispiece, another behind that, and the two others to the two Gates that are in the middle of the two remaining sides. To come to the Gates, there are twenty five or thirty steps of fair and large Stones going round about, except the back-part, which is covered with other great Quarry-stones to cover the uneveness of the cut Rock: which contributes much to make this Fabrick make a shew. The three Entries are stately, there is nothing but Marble, and their large Gates are covered with Copper Plates exceedingly well wrought. Above the principal Gate, which is much statelier than the two others, there are many small Turrets of white Marble as well without as within; that in the middle is much bigger and higher than the two others. All the rest of the Mosquee, I mean from these three Domes unto the great Gate, is without covering, because of the heat of the Country; and the whole Pavement is of large squares of Marble. I grant willingly, that this structure is not according to the rules and orders of Architecture, which we esteem is indispensably to be followed; yet I observe nothing in it that offends the eye; but rather find all to be well contrived, and well proportioned: And I do even believe, that if in Paris we had a Church of this way of Architecture, it would not be disliked, if there were nothing else in it but that 'tis of an extraordinary and surprizing aspect, and because that, excepting the three great Domes and all the Turrets, which are of white Marble it appears all red, as if all were nothing else but great Tables of red Marble, though it be nothing else but a stone very easie to cut, and which even flaketh off in time. I shall add by the by, that if it be true what is said of the quarries of this stone, 'tis remarkable, that it grows again every year; whether it be by a petrescent water yearly filling it, or otherwise, I decide not.

This Mosque it is to which the King repaireth every Friday (which is the Sunday of the Mahumetans) to pay his devotion. Before he goes out of the Fortrefs, the Streets he is to pass, are constantly watered because of the heat and dust. Two or three hundred Musquetiers are to stand and make a lane about the Gate of the Fortrefs, and as many more on the sides of a great Street that ends at the Mosque. Their Musquets are small, but well wrought, and they have a kind of Scarlet-case with a little streamer upon them. Besides there must be five or six Cavaliers well mounted ready at the Gate, and ride at a good distance before the King, for fear of raising dust; and their office is to keep off the people. Things being thus prepared, the King is seen to come out of the Fortrefs seated upon an Elephant richly harnessed, under a Canopy with Pillars painted and gilded; or else on a Throne shining of Gold and Azure, upon two beams, covered with Scarlet or purpled Gold, carried by eight chosen and well accoutred men. The King is followed by a body of Omrahs, some of which are on horseback, some in a Palekey. Among these Omrahs there are many Mansheb-dars, and Mace-Bearers, such as I have before spoken of. And though this be not that splendid and magnificent Procession, or rather Mascarade of the Grand Seigneur, (I have no proper name for it) nor the warlike order of our Kings, it being altogether of another fashion, yet for all that there is something great and royal in it.

The other thing I had forgot to acquaint you with, is an Edifice in the City, called the Karvan-sarab of the Princess; the renowned Begum-Sabeh, eldest Daughter of Chah-Jehan, having caused it to be built at her charges, and willing to contribute something to the decoration of the Town, as all the Omrahs strove to do to please Chah-Jehan. This is another great Square, arched like our Palace-Royal, but still with this difference, that one Arch is separate from the other by a wall, and that in the bottom of every Arch there is a little Chamber; and besides that, above the Arches there is a Gallery which rangeth round about the building, to enter into as many high Chambers, as there are below. This Place is the Rendezvous of all the great Merchants, Persians, Usbecks, and other Strangers that ordinarily do there find empty Chambers convenient enough, to stay in for some time in great safety, the Gate being shut every night. If there were a score of such Structures in divers parts of Paris, Strangers newly arriving would not be in that trouble, as often they are to find safe Lodgings; for there they might be until they had seen their Acquaintance, and looked for good Accommodation: besides that they would serve for Magazines of all sorts of Commodities, and for the Rendezvous of all Merchants Strangers.

Before we leave Dehli, I shall add a few lines in reference to this question, which doubtless you'll make, viz. Whether in Dehli there be as much People and Gallantry as at Paris? Certainly when I consider those three or four Cities of Paris that are one above another, all those Chambers and other Rooms full from top to bottom; when I farther consider that incredible throng and confusion of Men and Women, of Horse-men and Passengers on foot, of Chariots, Sedans and Coaches, and that there are but few great Piazzas and Gardens in Paris; this City seems to me a Nursery of the World, and I can hardly believe, that there are as many People in Dehli. Yet notwithstanding when I reflect upon that multitude of Shops on one side of Dehli, and on the other, upon the vast extent of that City, and that there are never less in it then 35000 Cavaliers, not to speak of the Houses of the Omrahs; that of all these Cavaliers, there are very few but have Wives and Children, and a great number of Servants having their Houses apart as their Masters; and that all these Houses swarm with Women and Children: that in many places of Dehli, though the Streets be broad, and there be but few Chariots and no Coaches, yet at the hours when the heat suffers People to come abroad for their business, there is great confusion: When (I say) I consider all this on the other hand, I do not well know what to determine about the question, and I imagine, that if there be not altogether so much People in Dehli as in Paris, at least there wants not much of it.

Concerning the number of gallant People, it must be acknowledged, that there is this difference between those of Paris and Dehli, that of ten Persons met with upon the Streets of Paris, you shall see seven or eight well clothed and of some fashion, which

no Man will count rascally or beggerly People; whereas in Debli, fortwo or three Persons that are pretty well covered, you shall always find seven or eight poor and ragged People; the Army which is there drawing after it all that crew of Beggars and Rascals. Yet this is to be acknowledged for a truth, that in Debli, as well as in Paris, one meets with a very great quantity of Persons well made, gallant, well mounted, well dressed, and well attended: And indeed, to be upon the great Place before the Fortrefs at the hours when all those Omrahs, Rajas, and Mansheb-dars go to the Assembly and to the Guard, that hath something, great and splendid in it: when you shall see there every where arrive those Mansheb-dars well accoutred, shining with Gold, and well mounted, a couple of Men going before them to make place, and as many behind; when you shall also see many of those great Omrahs and Rajas riding upon proud Elephants, and some of them on Horse-back like the Mansheb-dars, and most of them sitting in their rich Palekys, carried upon the shoulders of six men, their back leaning against some thick Cushion of purfled Gold, chewing their Betele, to have a good breath and vermillion lips, with a Servant on the side carrying a Tooth-pick, and a Porcelain or silver Spitting-Vessel; and two more, fanning him and keeping off the flies and dust from him with Peacocks-tails; and three or four others marching before to put by the People; to which is to be added part of their Cavalry (I mean the bravest and best mounted of them) following after: When, I say, all this is seen together marching, as hath been said, with the crowd made there as well as at Paris, it will not be denied to be something great and very gallant.

As to the Country about Debli, it is considerable for its fertility; for it beareth Rice, Millet, and three or four other sorts of Legumes, (which is the ordinary food of the common People) Corn, Sugar, Indigo, and all that in abundance. At two leagues off the City on Agra's side, in a place by the Mahumetans called Koja Kornbeddine, there is a very antient Edifice which hath been a Temple of Idols, where are Inscriptions that must also be very antient, the Characters of them being such that no body knows what they are, and different from those of all the Languages of the Indies,

On another side, at two or three leagues distance from the Town, you see an House of pleasure of the Kings, which indeed is a stately and Royal House, but yet you must not think it approach to Fontain-bleau, or to St. Germain, or to Versaille. Neither must you imagine that in this Campagne of Debli there are any St. Cloux, Chantilly's, Mendons, Liancours, Vaux, Ruelles, and many such others; or that you see there any of those other inferior Houses of pleasure belonging to simple Gentlemen, Citizens and Merchants. The Maxime, That the Subjects of a Kingdom have no propriety in any thing, hinders all that.

Lastly, to make you pass quickly these fifty or sixty leagues, which are betwixt Debli and Agra, you are not to think, that upon this road you shall see any such large and rich burroughs as there upon our roads. Set aside Maturas, where you see still an antient and stately Temple of Idols, and excepting some Karavan-sarrabs, that are well enough, found on the high-way to serve for night-lodgings, I find nothing considerable there, but that Royal Alley of Trees planted by the command of Jehan-Guire, and continued by the same order for an hundred and fifty leagues, with little Pyramids or Turrets erected every half league, to mark the ways, and with frequent wells to afford drink to Passengers, and to water the young Trees.

Of A G R A.

TO pass to the description of Agra, you have the Idea of it, if you have well taken that of Debli; at least in respect of its situation, which is also upon the Gemma, and in regard of the Fortrefs, or Royal House, and of most of the Buildings. It is true, that Agra hath this advantage over Debli, that being a City where the Kings have already resided a long while, viz. since Akber, who caused it to be built, and called it after his name Akber-abad, it is of greater extent than Debli, and hath more of those fine Houses of the Omrahs and Rajas, and more of the fair Karvan-sarrabs, as also more of those pretty Houses of Stone and Brick belonging to particular Persons; besides that it hath two famous Tombs, of which I shall speak hereafter: But then it hath these disadvantages, that it wants Walls; that having been built altogether by one design, it hath not those fair and large Streets of uniform buildings as Debli; and that excepting four or five of those principal Streets of Merchants, which are very long and well enough enough built; all the rest for the most part, is nothing but a number of little Streets, streight without proportion, and nothing but windings and turnings; which causes strange confusions when the Court is there. I see no other difference between Agra and Dehli, then that I have been just now speaking of; except it be that Agra hath more of a Country Town then Dehli, especially when we look upon it from an higher place: But 'tis not such a Country-aspect as disgraceth it, but a very agreeable and diverting one; for, there being betwixt the Houses of Omrabs, Rajas and others, store of big green Trees mixt, every one having been curious to plant of them in his Garden and in his Court for shade; and besides, those high Houses of the Banians, or Heathen Merchants, appearing here and there between those Trees, as Reliques of old Castles of Forests; all that causeth within the Town very pleasing sights and perspectives, especially in a dry and hot Country, where Peoples eyes seem to desire nothing but verdure and shade.

Mean time you need not go out of Paris, to find the most pleasing and the most gallant sight in the World. Take onely a walk upon the Pontneuf, attentively beholding in the day-time all things surrounding you, together with that incredible and strange confusion of People; and at night the infinite number of lights in the windows, of those high buildings that are round about you; and the same confusion which continues till after mid-night; the good Citizen, and (which you shall not see in any part of Asia) the fair She-Citizen walking without fear of Robbers, and without the inconvenience of dirt: and then the long files of Stars that brave the wind, the rain and darkness. Take only, I say, such a walk upon that Bridge, observing all those things together, and then (upon my word) you may boldly maintain it, that you are upon the spot of the fairest, bravest and most magnificent artificial view of the Earth, unless it be some part of China or Japan, where I have not been. What will it be then when the Leure, that work which was once thought would never be seen but in design and upon paper, shall be finisht? I have purposely added the word Artificial, because speaking of the best Perspectives that are, we must always except Constantinople, when one is in a Boat in the midst of that great Channel, over against the point of the Seraglio: For there you shall find your self altogether surprized, as 'twere in the midst of some great and vast enchanted Amphitheater; but in this Perspective the Workmanship of Nature is most considerable, whereas in that of Paris, Art and Dexterity is most conspicuous, which doubtless renders it more eminent, forasmuch as thereby it looks more like the Seat of a great King, the Capital of a great Empire, and is really, without flattering our selves, and all those beauties of Dehli, Agra, and Constantinople, well considered and compared, the fairest, the richest, and the chiefeft City of the World.

In Agra the Reverend Fathers the Jesuits have a Church and a Colledge, where in private they teach the Children of some twenty five or thirty Christian families, that have (I know not how) gathered and settled themselves there by the charity of those Fathers the Christian Doctrine. It was Ekbar who (in the time of the great power of the Portuguezes in the Indies) called them, and gave them a pension for their subsistence, permitting them to build Churches in the capital Cities of Agra and Labor. And his Son Jehan-Guire favoured them yet more. But Chah-Jehan, Son of Jehan-Guire, and Father of Aureng-Zebe now reigning, took from them their pension, caused their Church at Labor to be pulled down, and the greatest part of that in Agra, overthrowing also the Steeple of the Church, wherein that Bell was that could be heard over all the Town.

These Fathers the Jesuits entertained great hopes of the progress of Christianity in the time of King Jehan-Guire, because of his contempt of the Mahumetan Law, and the esteem he professed to the Christian, even giving way to two of his Nephews to embrace the Christian Religion, and to a certain Mirza-Zul-Karmin (that had been bred in the Seraglio, and was circumcised) to turn Christian too, under the pretence that he born of Christian Parents, and Son of the Wife of a rich Armenian, which Jehan-Guire had caused to be brought to him into the Seraglio.

The same Fathers say, that this King, to begin in good earnest to countenance the Christian Religion, designed to put the whole Court into the habit of the Franqui, and that after he had prepared all things for it, and even dressed himself in that fashion, he called to him one of the chief Omrabs, asking his opinion of this dress; but that this Omrab altogether surprized at it, having answered him very seriously, that it was a very dangerous thing, he thought himself obliged to change his mind, and turned all These Fathers affirm further, that he being upon the point of death, commanded that they should be called to make him a Christian, but that then they were not made acquainted with it. Many say, that this is not so, and that he died as he had lived, without any Religion, and in the design he had, as well as his Father Ekbaz, to set himself up for a Prophet, and to become the Head of a particular Religion of his own compofure. However it be, there is another thing I have learned of a Mahumetan, that was Son to an Officer of Jehan-Guire, namely, that this King being one day in a debauch, called to him a certain Religious man of Florence, whom he called Father Ateeb, as being a little fiery man; and after he had commanded him to say all he could against the Law of Mahumet, and for the Law of Christ, in the presence of many knowing Mullahs, he would have made this terrible tryal of both those Laws, viz. That a great Pit should be made, and a good Fire in it, and that Father Ateeb with the Gospel under his arm, and one of those Mullahs with the Alcoran under his, should cast themselves both together into that fire, and that he would embrace the Law of him that should not burn. But that the sad countenance of the Mullahs, altogether astonished him from it. Whatever the truth be of this story, 'tis certain, that whilst Jehan-Guire lived, these Fathers were respected and honoured in this Court, and that they conceived great hopes of the advancement of Christianity in those parts; but that since that time they have had no great cause to hope much of it, except perhaps what they received by that familiarity, which our Father Buzé had with Dara. But I shall say no more of this matter of our Missions, intending to give you a particular long Letter of it another time.

Certainly I cannot but exceedingly approve of Missions, and the good Missionaries, especially our Capucins and Jesuits, and some others of our neighborhood, because they give meek instructions, without that indiscreet zeal and transport which is expressed by some others, and they charitably entertain the Christians of the Country in their Religion, whether they be Catholics, or Greeks, or Armenians, Nestorians, Jacobites, or others; and forasmuch also as they are the refuge and comfort of poor Strangers and Travellers, and by their knowledge, sober and exemplary life, they confound the ignorance and licentious life of the Infidels: which some others do not always practise; who therefore would do better to keep themselves close in their Convents, and not come hither and give us a masquerade of our Religion, and by doing so, and by their ignorance, jealousy, looseness, and the abuse of their authority and character, become a stumbling-block to the Law of Jesus Christ. But a particular thing infers no general; and notwithstanding those miscarriages, I very much applaud the Missions, and pious and learned Missionaries, they are absolutely necessary: it is the honour and prerogative of Christianity, to have every where thorow the World Substitutes of the Apostles. But after all that I have seen, and after all the converse and discourse I have so often had with those obstinate Infidels, I may take leave to say, that I almost despair to see struck such great strokes, as the Apostles did, who converted two or three thousand People in one Sermon: finding by experience, and knowing very well upon other accounts, after I have travelled through all the places of the Missions in the East, that all the Missionaries together, not only in the Indies, but in all the Mahumetan Dominions, do indeed by their Instructions, accompanied with Charity and Alms, make some progress among the Gentils, but do in ten years not make one Christian of a Mahumetan. Truly these Infidels have high thoughts of our Religion, they never speak of Jesus Christ but with great veneration; and they never pronounce the word Aysa, that is to say, Jesus, without adding that of Azeret, which is Majesty. They even agree with us, that he was miraculously born of a Virgin-Mother, and that he is the Kelum-Allah, and the Roub-Allah, the Word of God, and the Spirit of God: but 'tis not to be hoped, that they will approve the rest of our Religion, so as to abandon theirs in which they were born, and their false Prophet, to embrace ours, what reasons soever be given them. Our Christians of Europe ought to wish, and even to employ their Power, Care and Charity, that Missionaries may be sent over all, such as may be no charge to the People of the Country, and whom want may not induce to do mean things, as well for the reasons already alleged, as for this cause, that they may be ever ready to lay hold on all occasions, always to bear witness to the Truth, and to labour in the Vineyard when it shall please God to give them an overture. But for the rest we ought to be disabused, and not to suffer our selves to be so easily perswaded of so many stories, and not to believe the thing to be be so facil as some make it. The Sect is too much libertine, and too attractive to quit it; it is a pernicious Law, which hath been introduced by Arms and Force, and still gets ground by those means: and I hardly know any other way capable to shake and root it out. If therefore there intervene not some of those grand and extraordinary strokes of Heaven, and God by his powerful and particular Providence interpose not, (as we ought always to hope, according to the great appearance there have been in China, in Japan, and in the Person of King Jehan-Guire) considering the irreverence of the Christians in their Churches, so dissonant from our belief of the particular presence of God upon our Altars, and so different from that deep and astonishing respect which those Infidels bear to their Mosques, where they would not so much as turn their heads, or speak the least word to one another; there will always be great obstacles to their Conversion.

In Agra the Hollanders have also an House, where ordinarily they keep four or five persons. Formerly they had a good trade there in selling Scarlet, great and small Looking-glasses, plain Lace, and Gold and Silver Lace, and some small Wares; and in buying Indigo, which is gathered round about Agra, but especially at Bianes, but two leagues distant from it, and whither they go once a year, having an house there for that purpose; as also in buying those cloths of Jelopour and Laknau, at seven or eight days journey from Agra, where they also keep an house, and whither they send some Factors once a year. But now they say, that there is little profit for them in that trade, whether it be that the Armenians drive the same traffick, or that 'tis so far from Agra to Suratte, or that commonly some mischief or other befalls their Caravanes, which must pass by Amadavad over all the Countries of the Rajas to avoid the ill ways, and the mountains that are on the side of Genleor and Brampour, which is the nearer way. Yet notwithstanding these discouragements, they will never (I believe) abandon this Factory, as the English have done theirs in that place, if it were for nothing else but their Spices, which there they sell very well, and for having some of their People near the Court taking care of their concerns: since it cannot be otherwise, but that frequently some trouble will befall their Factories by the tyranny of the Governors and other Officers, now from the side of Bengala and Patna, another time from Suratte and Amadavad.

We will conclude this part with those two wonderful Musolees, or Tombs, that give to Agra so much advantage over Dehli. It was Jehan-Guire that caused the first to be erected to honour the memory of his Father Eckhar; and Chah-Jehan raised the other in honour of Taje-Mebale his Wife, that extraordinary and celebrated Beauty of the Indies, whom he loved so passionately, that 'tis said, he never enjoyed any other Woman but her whilst she lived, and that when she died, he was in danger to die himself.

I shall not stay to discourse of the Monument of Eckhar, because whatever beauty is there, is found in a far higher degree in that of Taje-Mebale, which I am now going to describe unto you. You may therefore represent to your self, that at the going out of the City of Agra East-ward, you enter into a long and broad paved street, which riseth gently, and hath on one side an high and long wall, making the side of a square Garden that is much bigger then our Palace-Royal; and on the other side a row of new houses arched, such as are those of the principal Streets of Dehli above spoken of. Having gone the length of half the Wall, you shall find on the right hand of the side of the Houses a great Gate well made, by which one enters into a Carvan-serah, and over against it on the walls side, a stately Gate of a great square Pavilion, by which you enter into the Garden between two Conservatories built up with Freestone. This Pavilion is longer then 'tis large, built of a Stone like red Marble, but not so hard. The Frontispiece seems to me very magnificent after their way, and as high as that of St. Louys in the Street of St. Antony. It is true, you do not there see Columns, Architraves, and Cornishes cut out after the proportion of those Five Orders of Architecture so religiously observed in our Palaces: it is a different and particular kind of structure, but such an one as wants no agreeableness even in the unusualness of its contrivance, and which in my opinion, would very well deserve a place in our Books of Architecture. 'Tis almost nothing but Arches upon Arches, and Galleries over Galleries, disposed and ordered an hundred different ways; and yet all appears stately, well enough contrived and managed. There is nothing that offends the eye; on the contrary all is pleasing, and a man cannot be weary in beholding it. The last time I saw it, I was there with one of our French Merchants, who also could not behold it enough. I durst not tell him my thoughts of it, apprehending I might have spoiled my gust, and framed it according to that of Indostan: but he being lately come from France, I was very glad to hear him say, he had never seen any thing so august and bold in Europe.

After you are somewhat entred into the Pavilion to pass into the Garden, you find your self under an high Vault made like a Cap, which hath Galleries above round about and below, on the right and left side, two Divans or Causeys, made up of earth of eight or ten foot high. Opposite to the Gate there is a great Arch quite open, by which you enter into an Alley, which cuts almost the whole Garden into two equal parts. This Alley is by way of terrasse so large, as that six Coaches can pass on it abreast, paved with great squares of hard Stone, raised some eight foot high above the Garden-plots, and divided in the middle by a Channel walled up with Free-stone, having jets of water at certain distances. After you have gone twenty five or thirty paces upon this Alley, turning your eye to behold the Entry, you see the other face of the Pavilion, which though it be not comparable to that which looks to the Street, yet wants not its stateliness, being high and of a structure approaching the other. And on both sides of the Pavilion, along the wall of the Garden, you see a long and profound gallery by way of terrasse, supported by many low columns near one another. And in this Gallery 'tis, that during the season of the rains, the Poor are permitted to enter, who come there thrice a week, receiving Alms from a foundation made there by Chah-Jehan for ever.

Advancing further in this Alley, you discover at a distance before you a great Dome, where is the Sepulchre, and below on the right and left hand you see divers Alleys of a Garden set with Trees, and several Parterres covered with Flowers. At the end of this Alley, besides the Dome before you, you discover on the right and left two great Pavilions, built of the same Stone, and consequently looking all red as the first. These are great and spacious square Edifices, made by way of Terrasse, opening by three Arches, and having at the bottom the wall of the Garden, so that you march under them as if they were high and large Galleries.

I shall not stay to describe unto you the Ornaments within these Pavilions, because in respect of their Walls, Ground-plot, and Pavement, they are not much unlike the Dome, which I am going to delineate unto you, after I shall have observed, that between the end of the Alley (which we have spoken of) and the Dome, there is a pretty large space of a floor, which I call a Water-Parterre, because that the diversly cut and figured Stones you march upon, are there instead of the Box-Wood of our Parterres. And 'tis from the midst of this Parterre, that you may conveniently see a part of this Edifice, where the Sepulchre is, which remains now to be considered.

It is a great and vast Dome of white Marble, which is near the height of that of our Val de Grace in Paris, surrounded with many Turrets of the same matter with Stairs in them. Four great Arches support the whole Fabrick, three of which are visible, the fourth is closed in by the wall of an Hall, accompanied with a Gallery, where certain Mullahs (entertained for that end) do continually read the Alcoran, with a profound respect to the honour of Taje-Meballe. The mould of the Arches is enriched with Tables of white Marble, wherein are seen engraven large Arabian Characters of black Marble, which is very agreeable to behold. The interior or concave part of this Dome, and the whole wall from top to bottom is covered with white Marble; and there is no place which is not wrought with Art, and hath not its peculiar Beauty. You see store of Agat, and such sorts of Stones, as are employed to enrich the Chappel of the great Duke of Florence; much Jasper, and many other kinds of rare and pretious Stones, set a hundred several ways, mixt and enchased in the Marble that covers the body of the Wall. The Quarries of white and black Marble, that make the floor, are likewise set out with all imaginable beauty and stateliness.

Under this Dome is a little Chamber inclosing the Sepulchre, which I have not seen within, it not being opened but once a year, and that with great Ceremony, not suffering any Christian to enter, for fear (as they say) of Prophaning the Sanctity of the place: but really by what I could learn, because it hath nothing rich or magnificent in it.

There remains nothing else, then to give you occasion to take notice of an Alley in the fashion of a Terrasse, twenty or twenty five ordinary paces large, and as many or more high; which is betwixt the Dome and the extremity of the Garden, whence you see below you, at the foot of it, the River of Gemna running along, a great campagne of Gardens, a part of the Town of Agra, the Fortrefs, and all those fair Houses of the *Omrah*s that are built along the water. There remains no more, I say, then to cause you to observe this Terrasse, which taketh up almost the whole length of one side of the Garden, and then to desire you to judge, whether I had reason to say, that the Mausoleum, or Tomb of Taje-Mebale, is something worthy to be admired. For my part, I do not yet well know, whether I am not somewhat infected still with Indianisme; but I must needs say, that I believe it ought to be reckoned amongst the wonders of the World, rather than those unshapen masses of the Ægyptian Pyramids, which I was weary to see after I had seen them twice, and in which I find nothing without, but pieces of great Stones ranged in the form of steps one upon another, and within nothing but very little Art and Invention.

A Letter written to Mr. Chapelain, sent from Chiras in Persia, Octob. 4. 1667. concerning the Superstitions, strange Fashions, and Doctrin of the Native Indies, or Gentiles of Indostan. Whence may be seen, that there are no Opinions so ridiculous, and so extravagant, which the spirit of Man is not capable of.

S I R,

IF I should live whole ages, I know not whether I could ever forget those two Eclipses of the Sun, of which I saw one in France in the Year 1654. and the other in the Indies at Dehli in the Year 1666. if I remember aright. The former seemed very remarkable to me upon the account of the childish credulity of our common people; and of that pannick terror which had so seized the heart, that some bought Drugs against the Eclipse; others kept themselves close in the dark in their Caves, and their well-closed Chambers; others cast themselves in great multitudes into the Churches: Those apprehending some malign and dangerous influence, and these believing that they were come to their last day, and that the Eclipse would shake the foundations of Nature, and overturn it, notwithstanding any thing that the Gassendi's, Robervals, and many other famous Philosophers could say or write against this perswasion, when they demonstrate, that this Eclipse was of the same nature with so many others that had preceded without any mischief, and that it was a known accident, foreseen and ordinary, which had nothing peculiar, but what some cheating Astrological Mountebanks might have devised.

That which I saw at Dehli seemed also very considerable to me, by reason of the ridiculous Errors and Superstitions of the Indians. At the time when the said Eclipse was to appear, I went up to the Terrasse of my house, which was scituate on the side of the River Gemna, thence I saw both sides of the River, for near a league in length, covered with the Heathen Idolaters, that stood in the water up to their girdle, demurely looking up into the sky, to the end that they might plunge and wash themselves at the moment when the Eclipse should begin. The little Boys and Girls were stark naked; the men were almost so too, but that they had a kind of scarf round about their thighs to cover their nakedness: and the married Women, together with the young Maids that were not above six or seven years old, were covered with a single cloth. Persons of condition, as the Rajas, or sovereign Princes of those Gentils, (who commonly are about the Person, and in the pay of the King) and the Serrahs or Exchangers, the Banckers, Jewellers, and other great Merchants, were most of them gone to the other side of the water with all their family, and had there put up their Tents, and fastned in the River certain Kanates, which are a kind of screens, to perform their Ceremonies, and conveniently to wash themselves with there Wives, so as not to be seen by others. These Idolaters no sooner saw the Eclipse begin, but they raised a great cry, and all at once plunged themselves wholly into the water, I know not how many times one after another; standing up afterwards in the water, and lifting up their eyes and hands to Heaven, muttering and praying with great devotion, and from time to time taking water with their hands, which they threw up towards the Sun, bowing down their heads very low, moving and turning their arms and hands sometimes one way, sometimes another, and thus continuing their plunging, praying and apishness unto the end of this Eclipse; at which time every one retired, casting some pieces of Silver a good way off into the water, and giving alms to the Brachmans or men of the Law, who failed not to be at that Ceremony. I took notice, that at their going out of the water, they all took new cloathes that were laid ready for them folded up on the sand, and that many of the devouter sort left there their old garments for the Brachmans. And in this manner did I see from my Terrasse this great solemnity of the Eclipse; which was celebrated after the same manner in the River Indus and Ganges, and in all the other Rivers, as also in the Receivers of water in the Indies, but especially in that of the Tanaiser, where were met together above an hundred and fifty thousand persons, come together from all parts of the Indies, because the water of it is on that day reputed more holy and efficacious than on any other.

The great Mogol, though he be a Mahumetan, suffers these Heathens to go on in these old superstitions, because he will not, or dareth not cross them in the exercise of their Religion, and besides it is not performed without presenting him, by the hands of the Brachmans Commissioners, a Lecque or an hundred thousand Roupies, which are worth above fifty thousand Crowns, for which he returns nothing but a few Vests and an old Elephant. Now you shall see those solid reasons (forsooth) which they alledge for this Feast, and for the Ceremonies by them observed in it.

We have (say they) our four Beths, that is, Books of the Law, Sacred and Divine Writings, given us by God through the hands of Brahma. These Books do teach us that a certain Denta, which is a kind of corporeal Divinity, very malign and mischievous, very black and very filthy (these are their own expressions in their language) seizeth on the Sun, blackens it as 'twere with ink, and so darkens it: That this Sun, which is also a Denta, but of the best and the most beneficent and perfect Divinities, is at that time in very great pains and terrible anguish, to see himself thus seized on and misused by that black villain: That 'tis a general duty to endeavour to deliver him from this miserable condition; which cannot be effected but by the force of prayers, washings and alms, and that these actions are of a very extraordinary merit to such a degree, that an alms given at that time is worth an hundred given at another. Who is there, say they, that would not give cent pour cent?

Sir, these are the two Eclipses I spoke of which I shall hardly ever forget, and which minister occasion to me to proceed to some other extravagancies of these Gentils, whence you may draw what consequences you shall please.

In the Town of Jagannat, which is seated upon the Gulf of Bengala, and where is that famous Temple of the Idol of the same name, there is yearly celebrated a certain Feast, which lasts eight or nine days, if I remember well. There is found an incredible number of people, as there was antiently in the Temple of Hammon, and as 'tis at this day at Mecca. This number, 'tis said, amounts sometimes to above an hundred and fifty thousand persons. They make a stately Engiri of wood, as I have seen of them in many other places of the Indies, with I know not how many extravagant figures, almost such as we are wont to paint Monsters with two heads or bodies, half man and half beast, or gigantick and terrible heads, Satyrs, Apes or Devils; which Engin is put upon fourteen or sixteen wheels, such as the Carriages of Cannons may be, which fifty or sixty persons more or less do draw, or thrust forwards: Upon the middle of it appears most conspicuously the Idol Jagannat, richly dressed and adorned, which is thus transported from one place to another.

The first day that they shew this Idol with Ceremony in the Temple, the crowd is usually so great to see it, that there is not a year, but some of those poor Pilgrims, that come afar off, tired, and harassed, are suffocated there; all the people blessing them for having been so happy, as to die on so holy an occasion. And when this Hellish Triumphant Chariot marcheth, there are found (which is no Fable) persons so foolishly credulous and superstitious as to throw themselves with their bellies under those large and heavy wheels, which bruise them to death, having suffered themselves to be persuaded, that there is no action so heroick nor so meritorious as that, and that Jagannat will at the same time receive them as his Children, and cause them to be born again in a state of felicity and glory.

The

The Brachmans for their particular advantage and interest, I mean that of Alms and Respect given to them as Persons devoted to these Mysteries, do entertain the People in these errors and superstitions, and they proceed even to such infamous cheats and Villanies, that I could never have believed them, if I had not fully informed my self of it. These Impostors take a young Maid, of the fairest they can meet with, to be the Bride (as they speak, and bear the besotted people in hand) of Jagannat, and they leave her all night in the Temple (whither they have carried her) with the Idol, making her believe that Jagannat himself will come and embrace her, and appointing her to ask him, Whether it will be a fruitful Year, what kind of Processions, Feasts, Prayers and Alms he demands to be made for it. In the mean time one of these lustful Priests enters at night by a little back-door into the Temple, deflowreth this young Maid, and maketh her believe any thing he pleaseth; and the next day, being transported from this Temple into another with the same magnificence, she was carried before upon the Chariot of Triumph on the side of Jagannat her Bridegroom; these Brachmans make her say aloud before all the people, whatsoever she had been taught of these Cheats, as if she had learnt it from the very mouth of Jagannat. But let us go on (if you please) to follies of another kind.

Before this Chariot, and often in the very Temples of the Idols, on Festival days, you shall see publick Women dance, making an hundred indecent and extravagant postures; and yet the Brachmans find a way to accord all that with their Religion. I have seen some Women, that are not only famous for their beauty, but also for great reservedness, which refused very considerable presents of certain Mahumetans and Christians, and even of Heathen strangers, as if they were only dedicated to the Ministry and the Ministers of Deura, or the Idol Temple to the Brachmans and these Fakires, which are there seated most of them upon ashes round about, altogether naked with their fearful hair of Megera, and in the posture I shall speak of hereafter. But let us stay no longer upon these follies.

There are so many Writers of voyages relating the custom of the Indian Women, burning themselves with their Husbands, that I think something will at last be believed of it. For my part, I am going to take my turn also, and to write to you of it like others; yet in the mean time observing withall, that 'tis not all true what is said of it, and that now they do not burn themselves in so great a number as formerly, because the Mahumetans, that bear sway at present in Indostan, are enemies to that barbarous custom, and hinder it as much as they can; not opposing it absolutely, because they are willing to leave their idolatrous people, who are far more numerous then themselves, in the free exercise of their Religion, for fear of some revolt: but by indirectly preventing it, in that they oblige the Women, ready to burn themselves, to go and ask permission of the respective Governors, who send for them, make converse with their own Women, remonstrate things to them with annexed promises, and never give them this permission, but after they have tryed all these gentle ways, and till they find them fixt in their sottish resolution. Which yet hinders not but that many burn themselves, especially of those that live upon the Lands of the Rajas, where no Mahumetan Governors are. I shall not stay to give you the history of all those, which I have seen burn themselves; that would too be long, and too tedious: I shall only relate unto you two or three Examples of them, whence you may judge of the rest; but first you shall have the relation of a Woman, which I was sent unto to divert her from such a mischievous design.

A friend of mine, called Bendidas, the first Clerk of my Agah Danechmend-kan, died of an HeCtick, having been treated by me above two years. His Wife immediately resolv'd to burn her self, together with the Body of her Husband; but her Parents, by the order of my Agah, whose servants they were, endeavour'd to dissuade her from it, representing to her, that though it were indeed a generous and laudable resolution, and would be a great honour and happiness in the Family, yet she ought to consider, that her Children were yet little, that she could not abandon them, and that she was to prefer their good, and the affection she had for them, to the love she had for her Husband, and to her own satisfaction. These Parents not having been able to prevail with her by all these representations, bethought themselves to desire me to go to her, as sent from my Agah, and as an antient friend to the Family. I went and when I came, I did, as soon as I came in, see a cluster of seven or eight fearful old Women, together with four or five infatuated and brain-sick Brachmans, who all cried by turns, beating their hands about the dead Corps, and the Widow in her loose hair, looking pale, yet with dry and sparkling Eyes, sitting and crying also aloud, and beating her Hands, as the rest with a kind of Cadency, upon the Feet of her Husband. The out-cry and noise being ended, I approach'd to this Company of people, and addressing my self to the Widow, I gave her softly to understand, that I came from Danechmend-kan; that he had appointed a monthly Pension of two Crowns, to each of her two Sons, but on condition that she should not burn her self, to the end, that she might take care of them, and breed them up as was fit; that else we knew ways enow to hinder her from burning her self, if she were obstinate for it, and to make those repent, that should allure and incite her to such an unreasonable resolution, especially since none of her Kindred was satisfied with it, and that she would not be counted infamous, as those are that want the resolution to burn themselves after the death of their Husbands, when they have no Children. I often inculcated to her all these considerations, without hearing a word of answer from her; though at last she said, looking fiercely upon me: Well, if I am hindred to burn my self, I am resolved to break my head against the Wall. Then said I by my self; What Diabolical fury doth possess thee? And to her I answer'd, full of indignation: Then take thy Children, thou unhappy Creature, and cut their Throats, and burn them with thee; for they will be starved, I being now ready to return to Danechmend-kan, and to annul their Pension. These words being spoken by me, with the loudest and most menacing tone I could, made impression upon the spirit of this Woman, and upon that of all the assistants: She presently, without any repartey, let her Head sink down upon her knees, and most of the old Women and Brachmans went away. Whereupon her Relations, that were come with me, entred and parlied with her. And I, thinking I had done enough, took Horse, and came away to my Lodgings, supposing they would do the rest well enough. In short, about evening; when I was going to give an account to my Agah of what I had done, I met with her Parents, who thank'd me, and said, that the dead Corps had been burnt, and the Widow perswaded to remain alive.

Concerning the Women that have actually burn'd themselves, I have so often been present at such dreadful spectacles, that at length I could endure no more to see it, and I retain still some horror when I think on't. Yet I shall represent to you some of them, but pretend not to express to the life, with what courage and resolution these poor Women atchieved such a direful Tragedy; for there is nothing but the Eye it self that can exhibit a right idea thereof.

When I was passing from Amadevad to Agra, over the Lands of the Rajas, that are in those parts, there came news to us in a Burrough, where the Caravane rested under the shade (staying for the cool of the evening, to march on in their journey) that a certain Woman was then upon the point of burning her self with the Body of her Husband. I presently rose and ran to the place where it was to be done, which was a great Pit, with a Pile of wood raised in it, whereon I saw laid a dead Corps, and a Woman, which at a distance seem'd to me pretty fair, sitting near it on the same Pile; besides four or five Brachmans, putting the Fire to it from all sides; five Women of a middle age, and well enough dressed, holding one another by the Hand, and dancing about the Pit, and a great Crowd of People, Men and Women, looking on. The Pile of Wood was presently all on fire, because store of Oyl and Butter had been thrown upon it; and I saw at the same time through the flames, that the Fire took hold of the Cloaths of the Woman, that were imbued with well-scented Oyls mingled with Powder of Santal and Saffron. All this I saw, but observed not, that the Woman was at all disturbed; yea, it was said, that she had been heard to pronounce with great force these two words, Five, Two, to signify, according to the Opinion of those that hold the Souls Transmigration, that this was the 5th. time she had burnt her self with the same Husband, and that there remain'd but two times for perfection; as if she had at that time this Remembrance, or some Prophetical Spirit. But here ended not this Infernal Tragedy: I thought it was only by way of ceremony, that these five Women sung and danced about the Pit; but I was altogether surpris'd, when I saw, that the flame having taken hold of the cloaths of one of them, she cast her self with her Head foremost into the Pit, and that, after her, another, being overcome by the flame and smoak did the like: And my astonishment redoubled afterwards, when I saw, that the remaining three took one another again by the Hand, continued their dance without any apparent fear, and that at length they precipitated themselves, one after another into the fire, as their companions had done. It troubled me sufficiently, that I knew not what that meant; meant ; but I learnt shortly after, that these had been five Slaves, who, having seen their Mistress extremely afflicted at the sickness of her Husband, and heard her promise him, that she would not survive him, but burn her self with him, were so touch'd with compassion and tenderness towards this their Mistress, that they engaged themselves in a promise to follow her in her resolution, and to burn themselves with her. Many persons, whom I then consulted about this custome of Women burning themselves with the Bodies of their Husbands, would perswade me, that what they did was from an excess of affection they had for them : But I understood afterwards, that it was only an effect of Opinion, prepossession and custome ; and that the Mothers, from their youth besotted with this superstition, as of a most vertuous and most laudable action, such as was unavoidable to a Woman of honour, did also infatuate the spirit of their Daughters from their very infancy : Although, at the bottom, it was nothing else but an Art of the Men, the more to enslave their Wives, thereby to make them have the more care of their health, and to prevent poisoning of them.

But let us proceed to another Tragedy, which I shall rather represent to you than many others, at which I have been present, because it hath something uncommon in it. 'Tis true, I was not there my self ; but you may do as I, who do not stand out against crediting these things, because I have seen so many of them which seem'd incredible to me. This action is grown so famous in the Indies, that no body doubts of it, and it may be, that even your self have already heard of it in Europe.

'Tis of a Woman, that was engaged in some Love-intrigues with a young Mahometan her Neighbour, that was a Tailor, and could play finely upon the Tabor. This Woman in the hopes she had of marrying this young man, poison'd her Husband, and presently came away to tell her Tailor, that it was time to be gone together as they had projected, or else that she should be obliged to burn her self. The young Man fearing, lest he might be entangled in a mischievous business, flatly refused her. The Woman, not at all surprized at it, went to her Relations, and advertised them of the sudden death of her Husband, and openly protested that she would not survive him, but burn her self with him. Her Kindred well satisfied with so generous a resolution, and the great honour she did to the whole Family, presently had a Pit made, and filled with Wood, exposing the Corps upon it, and kindling the Fire. All being prepar'd, the Woman goes to embrace and bid farewell to all her Kindred that were there about the Pit, among whom was also the Tailor, who had been invited to play upon the Tabor that day, with many others of that sort of Men, according to the custome of the Country. This fury of a Woman being also come to this young Man, made as if she would bid him farewell with the rest ; but in stead of gently embracing him, she taketh him with all her force about his Collar, pulls him to the Pit, and tumbleth him together with her self into the Ditch, where they both were soon dispatch'd.

She which I saw burn her self, when I parted from Suratte to travel into Persia, in the presence of Monsieur Chardin and Paris, and of many English and Dutch, was of a middle age and not unhandsome. To represent unto you the undaunted chearfulness, that appear'd in her countenance, the resolution with which she marched, wash'd her self, spoke to the people ; the confidence with which she look'd upon us, view'd her little Cabin, made up of very dry Millet-straw and small Wood, went into this Cabin, and sat down upon the Pile, and took her Husband's Head into her Lap, and a Torch into her own Hand, and kindled the Cabin, whilst I know not how many Brachmans were busie in kindling the fire round about : To represent unto you, I say, all this, as it ought, is not possible for me ; I can at present scarce believe it my self, though it be but a few days since I saw it.

'Tis true, that I have seen some of them, which at the sight of the Pile and Fire, appear'd to have some apprehension, and that perhaps would have gone back, but 'tis often too late : Those Demons, the Brachmans, that are there with their great Sticks, astonish them, and hearten them up, or even thrust them in ; as I have seen it done to a young Woman that retreated five or six paces from the Pile, and to another that was much disturbed when she saw the Fire take hold of her Cloaths, these Executioners thrusting her in with their long Poles. Yet I have often seen one, that is still a handsome Woman, and had saved her self out of their Hands, falling into the Hands of the Gadours, that sometimes meet there in great numbers, when they know that 'tis some fair and young Woman that is to be burnt, and that hath no great Kindred, nor much Company with her : For the Women that are afraid of the Pile, and fly away from it, knowing that they cannot be received again amongst the Gentiles, nor live with them, because they repute them infamous, after they have committed such a fault, and brought such a disgrace upon their Religion, such Women, I say, are ordinarily the prey of this kind of Men, who are also counted infamous in the Indies, and that have nothing to loose. A Mogolian durst not save, nor receive any, for fear of bringing himself into great trouble. Some Portugueses living in Sea-ports, where they were strongest, have sometimes carried away some of them. For my part, I have often been so enraged against those Brahmans, that if I durst, I had strangled them. I remember, among others, that at Labor, I saw a very handsome and a very young Woman burn'd: I believe she was not above twelve years of age. This poor unhappy Creature appear'd rather dead than alive, when she came near the Pile; she shook, and wept bitterly: Mean time three or four of these Executioners, the Brahmans, together with an old Hag, that held her under the Arm, thrust her on, and made her sit down upon the Wood, and lest she should run away, they tied her Legs and Hands, and so burn'd her alive. I had enough to do to contain my self for indignation; but I was forced to content my self with detesting this horrid Religion, and to say by my self, what the Poet once said of such another, upon the occasion, of Iphigenia, whom her own Father Agamemnon sacrificed to Diana, for the interest of the Grecians, amongst whom he was one of the principal Leaders.

—Tantum Religio potuit suadere malorum!

These are certainly very barbarous and very cruel Customs, but that which the Brahmans do in some other places of the Indies is yet more so. For instead of burning those Women that will dye upon the death of their Husbands, they bury them in the ground alive up to the very Throat, and then two or three of them fall at once upon them, and wring their Neck round, and so choak them, covering them quickly with some earth, and then marching over their Heads. But let us pass to some other Customs of those Countries.

Most of the Gentiles burn their dead; but some there are, that do no more than with some Straw broil them on a Rivers side, casting them thereupon from the height of a steep Bank into the Water: Which I have often seen upon the River Ganges.

Some of these Gentiles there are, who, when they perceive a sick person near death carry him to the side of a River (at which barbarous action I have been once present) and then first put his Feet into the Water, and afterwards let him slide down as far as to his Throat, and then when they think he is now expiring, they sink him quite under Water, and there leave him, after they have made a great clamour, and clapping with their Hands: And this, say they, to the end that the Soul leaving the body may be wash'd from all the impurities, she may have contracted in the Body. And this is not only a reason given by the Vulgar; for I have spoken with the most Learned of them, who deliver'd the same with great seriousness. But let us go on to other extravagancies.

Amongst that vast number and great variety of Fakires, Derviches, or Religious Heathens of the Indies, there is abundance of them that have Convents, in which there are Superiours, and wherein they make certain vows of Chastity, Poverty, and Obedience, leading so odd a life, that I doubt whether you can give credit to it. These are commonly called Janguis, as if you should say, United to God. You shall see many of them sit stark naked, or lie days and nights upon Ashes, and commonly enough, under some of those large trees, that are on the sides of the Talabs or Ponds, or else in those Galleries that are about their Deuras or Idol-temples. Some of them have their Hair hanging down to the middle of their Legs, and that wreathed into several parcels, as the large Main of our Barbes, or rather as the Hair of those that have the sickness of Poland called the Plica. Of these I have seen some in divers places, who held one Arm, and sometimes both, lifted up perpetually above their Heads, and that had at the end of their Fingers wreathed Nails, that were longer by measure than half my little finger. Their Arms were small and lean as of hectic persons, because they took not sufficient nourishment in that forced posture, and they could not let them down to take any thing with them, either meat or drink, because the Nerves were retired, and the Joints were filled and dried up: wherefore also they have young Novices, that serve them as Holy men with very great respect. There is no Megera in Hell so terrible to look on, as those Men are, all naked, with their black skin, long Hair, dried Arms, and in the posture mention'd, and with crooked Nails.

I have often met in the Field, especially upon the Lands of the Rajas, whole squadrons of these Faquires, altogether naked, dreadful to behold. Some held their Arms lifted up in the posture mention'd; others had their terrible Hair hanging about them, or else they had wreathed them about their Head; some had a kind of Hercules's Club in their Hand; others had dry and stiff Tiger-skins over their Shoulders. I saw them pass thus quite naked, without any shame, through the midst of a great Burrough, I admired how Men, Women, and Children could look upon them so indifferently, without being moved no more than if we should see pass some Eremit through our streets; and how the Women brought them almes with much devotion, taking them for very holy Men, much wiser and better than others.

I have seen for a long while a very famous one in Debli, called Sarmet, who went thus stark naked along the streets, and who at length would rather suffer his Neck to be cut off, than to put on any cloaths, what promises or menaces soever Aureng-Zebe might send to him.

I have seen many of them, who out of devotion went long Pilgrimages, not only altogether naked, but charged with Iron-chains, like those that are put about the Legs of Elephants. Others, who, out of a particular vow, stood for seven or eight days upright upon their Legs, which thereupon swell'd as big as their Thighs, without sitting or lying down, or without reposing themselves otherwise than by leaning some hours of the night upon a stretched Cord: Others, who stood for whole hours upon their Hands without wavering, the Head down, and the Feet upward: And so of many others sorts of postures so constrain'd, and so difficult, that we have no Tumbler able to imitate them; and all this it seems upon the account of Religion, of which yet their appears not the least shadow in it.

All these so extraordinary things did (to tell you the truth) exceedingly surprize me at first, I knew not what to say or think of it. Sometimes I look'd upon them as a remainder, or rather as the Authors of that antient and infamous Sect of the Cynicks, but only that I found nothing in them, but brutality and ignorance, and that they seem'd to me a kind of Trees, somewhat moving from one place to another, rather than rational Animals. Another time I consider'd them as Men altogether Enthusiastical; though as I lately said, I could not find any shadow of true Piety in all they did. Sometimes I thought, that this lazy, idle, and independent Life of Beggars might have something attractive in it. Sometimes I imagin'd that the vanity, which creeps in every where, and which is as often found under the patched Mantle of Diogenes, as under the comely Garment of Plato, there might lurk that Spring, which might set a going so many Engins; and then reflecting withal upon the miserable and austere life they led, I knew not what Judgment to make of them.

'Tis true, that many say, that they do not exercise these strange austerities but in the hopes they entertain of becoming Rajas in their renaissance, or of returning again in a more happy life. But, as I have often told them to their Faces, how is't possible for any Man to resolve upon such a miserable life from the hope of another, that is to be no longer, and hath also, in the upshot, but very little happiness in it, though one should return a Raja, and even a Jesseingue or a Jessomseingue, which are the two most puissant Rajas of the Indies? There must needs, said I, lie something else under it, which you have no mind to discover to us, or you must be arrant Fools.

Amongst those I have been speaking of, there are such that are believed to be true Saints, illuminated and perfect Janguis, entirely united to God. These are people that have altogether abandon'd the World, and sequester'd themselves into some very remote corner or Garden, like Eremites, without ever coming to Town. If you carry them any meat, they receive it; if they do not, 'tis believed that they can live without it, and subsist by the sole favour of God in perpetual fasting, prayer, and profound meditations: For they sink themselves so deep into these raptures, that they spend many hours together in being insensible, and beholding in that time, as they give out, God himself, like a very bright and ineffable Light, with an unexpressible joy and satisfaction, attended with an entire contempt and forsaking of the World: For thus much one of them, that pretended he could enter into this rapture when he pleased, and had been often in it, told me; and others that are about them, affirm the thing with so much seriousness, that they seem to believe in earnest, as if there were no impotence in it.

Go

God alone knows whether there be any truth in it, and whether in this solitude and fasting the imagination debilitated, may not suffer it self to be carried away into these illusions : Or whether they be not of that kind of natural Raptures, into which Cardan said he fell when he list'd ; and this the rather, because I see, there is used some Art in what they do, forasmuch as they prescribe to themselves certain Rules, by little and little to bind up their Senses : For they say, for Example, that after they have fasted many days, using nothing but Bread and Water, 'tis requisite first to keep themselves alone retired from all company, directing the Eyes steadily towards Heaven for a while, then gently casting them down again, and then fixing them both so as to look at one and the same time upon the tip of their Nose equally, and as much on one side as the other (which is troublesome enough) and remaining firm and intent in that posture, until such a Light do come. Whatever the matter be, I know, that these Raptures, and these ways of falling into them, make the great Mystery of the Cabala of Janguis, as the Soufys do also. I call it Mystery, because they keep it very secret amongst them ; and if it had not been for this Pendet or Indian Doctor, to whom Danechmend-kan gave a Pension, and who durst hide nothing from him ; and if also Danechmend-kan had not known the Mysteries of the Cabala of the Soufys, I should not have discover'd so much of it. I know besides, that as for the extremity of Poverty, of Fastings and Austerities, that also can do much to it. We must not think (or I am much deceived) that any of our Religious Fryars or Eremites go in this point beyond those Men, nor generally beyond all the Asiatick Monks ; witness the Life and Fastings of the Armenians, Coptibes, Greeks, Nestorians, Jacobites, and Maronites. We must rather avow, that we are but Novices, when compared with those Religious Men : But then we must also acknowledge, according to what I have experimented, in respect of those of the Indies, that they can much more easily bear hunger than we can in our colder Climates.

There are others very differing from those, but very strange Men likewise ; they are almost perpetually travelling up and down, they deride all, take care of nothing, Men that brag of secrets, and who, as the people say, know no less than to make Gold, and so admirably to prepare Mercury, that a grain or two of it taken every morning restoreth the body to perfect health, and so strengthens the Stomach, that it feeds greedily and digests with ease. This is not all : When two of these Janguis, that are eminent, do meet, and you stir them up in the point and power of their knowledge or Janguisine, you shall see them do such tricks out of spight to one another, that I know not whether Simon Magus could have out-done them. For they divine what one thinketh, make the Branch of a Tree blossome and bear fruit in less than an hour, hatch Eggs in their bosome in less than half a quarter of an hour, and bring forth such Birds as you demand, which they make fly about the Chamber, and many such other prodigies. I mean, if what is said of them be true ; for I remember, that one day my Agah sent for one of these famous Diviners, and when he was come, agreed with him to give him the next day 300 Roupies, which is about 150 Crowns, if he should tell him, as he said he would, his present thought, which he was to write before him upon a paper : As also, that I my self made a bargain with the same, to give him 25 Roupies, if he should divine mine ; but the Prophet failed us, as also did at another time one of those pretended producers of Birds, to whom I had also promised 20 Roupies. I am still to be understood, if it be true what is said of them. For, as for me, I am with all my curiosity none of those happy Men, that are present at, and see those great feats ; and if I should chance to see any of such things as are thought strange, I am always considering and seeking, whether the thing may not be done by some Juggle, Art, or Trick of Legerdemain : and I am sometimes even so unhappy, or, if you will, so fortunate, as to find out the cheat, as I did him, that made a Cup run, to discover who it was, that had stolen money from my Agah.

Lastly, there are some in many places, that are quite of another way than all those I have discours'd of. Their Life and their Devotion is more meek and more polish'd ; they go over the streets bare-foot and bare-headed, girt about with a Scarfe hanging down to their Knees, and having a white Sheet which passeth under their right Arm, and comes out over their left Shoulder like a Cloak, without other Cloaths under it. They are always very clean and neat in all things, and commonly go two and two together with great modesty, holding in their Hand a small Earthen Trevet with two handles, very neat. They do not go gossiping from Shop to Shop, as many of the other Fakires do. They go freely every where into the Houses of the Gentiles, where they are welcome, and much made of; they being esteem'd a Blessing to the House. They are by no means to be accused of any thing, though it be well enough known, what in such visits among the Women passeth. But 'tis the custom, they are in possession of being Saints for all that, and any House thinks it self honour'd with their visit. But it is not only there, so; many other places there be in the World, where things are not so strictly look'd to. But that which I find most ridiculous in those people is, That they are impertinent enough, to compare themselves with our Religious Men, they meet with in the Indies. I have often taken pleasure to catch them, using much ceremony with them, and giving them great respect; but I soon heard them say to one another, This Frangis knows who we are, he hath been a great while in the Indies, he knows that we are the Padrys of the Indians. A fine comparison, said I within my self, made by an impertinent and idolatrous rabble of Men!

But we stay too long upon these Heathen-Beggars: Let us go on to their Books of Law and Sciences: you may afterwards judge, whether most of what I am going to say of it, may be put, as I think it may, in the number of Extravagancies.

Do not wonder, if, though I know not the Hanscrit, the language of the Learn'd (of which somewhat may be said hereafter, and which is perhaps the same with that of the old Brahmans) do notwithstanding tell you many things taken out of Books written in that Tongue. For you must know, that my Agah Danechmend-kan, partly upon my solicitation, partly out of his own curiosity, took into his service one of the famousst Pendets that was in all the Indies, and that formerly had had a Pension of Dara, the Eldest Son of King Chah-jehan; and that this Pendet, besides that he drew to our House all the most Learned Pendets, was for three years constantly of my conversation. When I was weary of explaining to my Agah those late discoveries of Harvey and Pecquet in Anatomy, and of discoursing with him of the Philosophy of Gassendi and Des-cartes, which I translated to him into Persian (for that was my chief employment for five or six years) that Pendet was our refuge, and then he was obliged to discourse, and to relate unto us his stories, which he deliver'd seriously and without ever smiling. 'Tis true, that at last we were so much disgusted with his tales and uncouth reasonings, that we scarce had patience left to hear them.

They say then, that God, whom they call Achar, that is to say, Immoveable or Immutable, hath sent them four Books, which they call Bethi, a word signifying Science, because they pretend that in these Books all Sciences are comprehended. The first of these Books is call'd Athen-babed, the second Zager-bed, the third Rek-bed, the fourth Sama-bed. Conform to the doctrine of these Books, this people ought to be distinguish'd, as really they are, into four Tribes: The first is of Brachmans, Men of the Law; the second of Quetterys, Men of Arms; the third, Men of Besene or Trafick, commonly called Banians; and the fourth, Men of Seydra, that is, Handy-crafts Men and Labourers. And these are so discriminated, that those of one Tribe cannot marry into another, that is, a Brahman cannot marry with a Woman Quettery, and so of the rest.

They all agree in one Doctrine, which is that of Pythagoras concerning the Metempsychosis or Transmigration of Souls, and in this, that they must not kill or eat of any Animal. However there are some of the second Tribe that may eat of them, provided it be neither Cows nor Peacocks-flesh, they all having a great veneration for these two creatures, especially the Cow, because they fancy I know not what River lying between this Life and that to come, which they are to pass by holding themselves fast on a Cows-tail. Possibly their ancient Legislators had seen those Shepherds of Egypt, crossing the Nile, by holding with their left-hand the Tail of an Oxe, and in their right-hand a Stick to guide him with; or rather they have imprinted in them this respect for Cows, because they draw from them Milk and Butter, which is a great part of their subsistence; and because also they are so serviceable for the Plough, and consequently for the Life of Man; and that the rather because it is not so in the Indies as in our Parts, for maintaining so great a number of Cattle as we do: if but half as many of them should be killed in the Indies, as there are in England or France, the Country will quickly be destitute of them, and the Land remain Untilled. The heat is there so violent for eight months of the year, that all is dry, and that Oxen and Cows are often starved, or dye of eating trash in the Fields like Hogs. And 'tis upon the account of the scarcity of Cattle, that in the time of Jehan-Guire, the Brahmans obtain'd an Edict, that no Cattle should be kill'd for a certain number of years, and that of late they presented a Petition to Auteng-Zebe, and offer'd him a considerable sum, if he would make the like Prohibition.

hibition They remonstrated, that for 50 or 60 years past much Land had remained Unploughed, because the Oxen and Cows were become too scarce and too dear. It may be also, that these Law-givers considered, that Cows and Ox-flesh in the Indies is not very savoury, nor wholesome, unless it be for a little time in Winter, during the cooler season: Or lastly, that they would take the People off from mutual cruelty, (to which they were too much inclined) by obliging them, as by a Maxime of Religion, to exercise humanity to the very Beasts, and by making them believe, that killing or eating an Animal, it might happen that they did kill or eat one of their Grand-fires; which would be an horrid crime.

According to the Doctrine of these Beths, they are obliged to say their Prayers at least thrice every day, in the morning, at noon, and at night, with their face turned to the East. They are also bound to wash their whole body thrice, or at least before they eat; and they believe, that 'tis more meritorious to wash themselves in running water than in any other. And it may be, that the Legislators in this point also have had a respect to what is proper and convenient for this Countrey, where nothing is more desirable than washing and bathing. And they find it troublesome enough to observe this Law, when they are in cold Countries: I have seen some of them that were like to die, because they would there also observe their Law of washing their Body by plunging themselves into Rivers or Ponds, when they found any near; or by throwing whole buckets of water over their heads, when they were remote from them. When I told them upon occasion, that in cold Countries it would not be possible to observe that Law, of theirs in Winter (which was a sign of its being a meer human invention) they gave this pleasant answer: That they pretended not their Law was universal; that God had only made it for them, and it was therefore that they could not receive a Stranger into their Religion: that they thought not our Religion was therefore false, but that it might be it was good for us, and that God might have appointed several differing ways to go to Heaven; but they will not hear that our Religion should be the general Religion for the whole earth, and theirs a fable and pure device.

These same Books do teach them, that God having determined to create the World, would not execute it immediately, but made first three Perfect Beings: the first was Brahma, which signifieth Penetrating into all things; the second Beschen, that is Existing in all things; and the third Mehabden, that is, great Lord. That by the means of Brahma he created the World, by the means of Beschen he preserveth it, and by the means of Mehabden he will destroy it. That it is Brahma, who by the command of God did publish the four Beths, and that therefore he is in some of their Churches represented with four Heads.

As to those three Beings, I have seen some European Missionaries that were of opinion, that these Gentils had some Idea of the Mystery of the Trinity; and said, it was expressly contained in their Books that there are three Persons, and one only God. For my part, I have made the Pendets sufficiently discourse upon this point; but they declare themselves so poorly, that I could not clearly understand their sense. I have even heard some of them, who said, that these are three Creatures very perfect, which they called Deütas, yet without explaining well what they understood by this word Deütas; as our antient Idolaters never explained what they meant by these words Genius and Numina, which is (I think) the same with Deüta among the Indians. 'Tis true, that I have spoken with others of the most knowing amongst them, who said, that these three Beings were indeed nothing but one and the same God, considered three manner of way, viz. as he is the Producer, Conservator, and Destroyer of things; but they said nothing of three distinct Persons in one only Deity.

Moreover I have seen the Reverend Father Roa, a German Jesuit and Missionary at Agra, who being well versed in their Hanscrit, maintained that their Books did not only import, there was one God in three Persons, but that even the second Person of their Trinity was incarnated nine times. And that I may not be thought to ascribe to my self the writings of others, I shall relate unto you word for word, what a certain Carmelite of Chiras hath lighted upon, which he related when the above-mentioned Father Roa passed that way to come back to Rome. The Gentils (saith he) do hold, that the second Person of the Trinity was incarnated nine times, and that because of divers necessities of the World, from which he hath delivered it: But the eighth Incarnation is the most notable; for they hold, that the World being enslaved under the power of Giants, it was redeemed by the second Person, incarnated and born of a Virgin at midnight, midnight, the Angels singing in the Air, and the Heavens pouring down a shower of flowers all that night. This favours much of Christianity: But then there follows a Fable again, which is, That this God incarnate killed first of all a Giant that flew in the Air, and was so big as to obscure the Sun, and by his fall to make the Earth to shake, and that by his great weight he sunk as deep as Hell; that this God incarnate being wounded in the side, in the first conflict with this Giant, fell, but by his fall put his Enemies to flight; that after he had raised himself again, and redeemed the World, he ascended into Heaven; and that by reason of his wound, he is commonly called the Wounded in his Side. In the tenth Incarnation, which shall then be, when according to our supputation Antichrist shall come, the World shall be delivered from the slavery of the Mahumetans: But this is only a vulgar Tradition, which is not found in their Books.

They say also, that the Third Person of the Trinity hath manifested himself to the World; concerning which they relate, That the Daughter of a certain King, being fit to be married, and asked by her Father, whom she would marry, answered, that she would not be united but to a Divine Person; and that at the same time, the Third Person of the Trinity appeared to the King in the form of Fire; that that King forthwith gave notice of it to his Daughter, who presently consented to the Marriage; That this Person of the Trinity, though altogether in a fiery appearance, was called before the King's Council, and seeing that the Counsellors opposed this Marriage, took hold of their Beards and burned them, together with the whole Royal Palace, and then married the Daughter. Ridiculous!

They add, that the first Incarnation of the second Person, was in the nature of a Lion; the second, in that of a Swine; the third, in that of a Tortoise; the fourth, in that of a Serpent; the fifth in that of a Brahma She-Dwarf, onely a foot and a half high; the sixth, in that of a Monster, a Man-Lion; the seventh, in that of a Dragon; the eighth, as hath been said already; the ninth, in an Ape; the tenth, in that of a great Cavalier.

Concerning this I shall acquaint you, that I doubt not but that the Reverend Father Roa, hath taken all the faith of this matter out of the Books of the Gentiles, and that is the main ground of their Mythology. I had written many things of it at large in my Papers, and had also taken the Figures of their Gods or Idols, which I had seen in their Temples, having also got of them the Characters of their Language Hanscrit; but finding at my return all those things, or at least the best part of it Printed in the China Illustrata of Father Kircher, who had obtained it at Rome from the same Father Roa; I shall content my self to have named the Book to you. 'Tis true, that the word Incarnation, which the Reverend Father useth, was new to me, having never seen it so expressly used; I had only heard some Pendets thus explaining the thing, viz. That God had formerly appeared in those Figures when he did all those wonders they relate. Others explained it to me after this manner, to wit, That it was the Soul of certain Great Men, such as we might call Hero's, that had passed into these Bodies, and that these Hero's were thus become Deities, or to speak in the phrase of our old Idolaters, some powerful and considerable Divinities, Numens, Genio's, Demons, Spirits; for I see not that this word Deity can signify any other thing: But this second Explication of the Pendets, cometh in effect to the first, for as much as most of them believe, that our Souls are Portions of God.

Others there were that gave me a much sublimer Explication, saying, That all those Incarnations or Apparitions, which their Books speak of are not to be understood according to the Letter, but Mystically, forasmuch as thereby are explained the several Attributes of God. Some there were, and those of the most learned, acknowledging to me candidly, that there was nothing more fabulous then those Incarnations, and that they were only the Inventions of Legislators, to retain People in some Religion: And though this were so, if there were nothing else but this, (which is common to them all) that our Souls were Portions of the Deity, it were to be exploded in sound Philosophy, without making any Mysteries in Religion of it, seeing that in respect of our Souls we should be God, and that in effect it should be our selves that had imposed upon us a Religious Worship, Metempsychoses, Paradise and Hell, which would be ridiculous.

I shall here add a few words, to declare that I am not less obliged to Monsieur Henry Lor, and to Monsieur Abraham Roger, then to the Reverend Fathers Kircher and Roa. I had compil'd an hundred things relating to the Gentiles, which I found in the Books of those Gentlemen, and which would have been a great trouble to me to range them as they they have done. I shall therefore content my self to say something in General to you of their Studies and Sciences, not indeed in that good order which possibly you might expect, but just as I have learnt it, and as 'tis probably found in their Books; I mean by fragments, and without coherence.

The Town of Benares, which is seated upon the Ganges in a very fine and rich Country and place, is the General School, and as 'twere the Athens of the Gentry of the Indies; where the Brachmans and the Religious (those that addict themselves to study) come together. They have no Colledges nor Classes ordered as with us, me thinks, 'tis more after the way of the School of the Antients; the Masters being dispersed over the Town in their Houses, and especially in the Gardens of the Suburbs, where the great Merchants do suffer them. Of these Masters some have four Disciples; others six or seven; and the most famous, twelve or fifteen at most, who spend ten or a douzen years with them. All this study goeth on very coolly, because most Indians are of a slow and lazy humour, to which the heat and diet of the Country contributes much; and because they are not animated to industry as we, by that great emulation, and by the great hopes we have of coming thereby to great preferment. They study leisurely, and without much tormenting themselves; eating their Kichery or mixture of Legums, which the rich Merchants cause to be dressed for them.

Their first study is of the Hanscrit, which is a Language altogether different from the common Indian, and not known but by the Pendets. And this is that Tongue, of which Father Kircher hath publisht the Alphabet received from Father Roa. It is called Hanscrit, that is, a pure Language; and because they believe this is to be the Tongue, in which God, by the means of Brahma, gave them the four Beths, which they esteem Sacred Books, they call it an Holy and Divine Language. They pretend also, that it is as antient as Brahma, whose Age they do not reckon but by Lecques, or hundred thousands of years. But I would gladly have a warrant for such an extraordinary Antiquity. However, it cannot be denied that 'tis very old, in regard that the Books of their Religion, which certainly is very antient, are written in this Tongue, and besides that, it hath it's Authors in Philosophy and Physick in Verses, and some other Poems, and many other Books, of which I have seen a great Hall quite full in Benares.

After they have learned the Hanscrit (which is very difficult to them, because they have no Grammar worth any thing) they commonly apply themselves to read the Purane, which is as it were the interpretation and sum of the Beths, which are very large, at least if those be they which were shewed me at Benares: and besides they are so very rare, that my Agah could never find them to be sold, what industry soever he used in it. And they keep them very secret, for fear least the Mahumetans should lay their hands on them and burn them, as they have already done several times.

After the Purane some fall upon Philosophy, wherein certainly they go not far. I have already intimated, that they are of a slow and lazy temper, and are not excited by the hopes to obtain some good place by their study.

Among their Philosophers there have principally been six very famous, who make so many different Sects; which causeth also a difference and an emulation among the Pendets or Doctors: For they know, that such an one is of this Sect, another of another, and every one of them pretends his Doctrine to be better than that of others, and more conform to the Beths. There is indeed another, a seventh Sect, which is called Bauté whence do proceed twelve other different Sects; but this is not so common as the others, the Votaries of it being hated and despised as a company of irreligious and atheistical people, ~~and~~ do they live like the rest.

All these Books speak of the first principles of things, but very differently. Some say, that all is composed of little Bodies that are indivisible, not by reason of their solidity, hardness, and resistance, but smalness; adding divers things which approach to the opinions of Democritus and Epicurus, but with so much confusion that one knows not where to fasten, all seeming like a rope of sand: which yet may be as much or more the fault of the Pendets, which seem to me very ignorant, then of the Authors.

Others say, that all is made up of matter and form; but not one of them explains himself clearly about the matter, and less about the form. Yet so much I have found, that they understand them not at all as they are wont to be explained in our Schools, by educating the Form out of the power of the Matter: For they always alledge Examples of things Artificial, and among them that of a Vessel of soft Clay, which a Potter turns and shapes divers ways.

Others

Others hold, that all is composed of four Elements and a nothing; but they do not at all explain themselves concerning Mixtion and Transmutation. And as for their nothing, which comes near to our privation, they admit I know not how many sorts of them, which (I believe) they understand not at all, nor are able to make out to others.

There are also some, that maintain light and darkness to be the first Principles, and say a thousand impertinent and confused things upon it, making long-winded discourses, which favour nothing at all of Philosophy, but are like the talk of the vulgar.

Others there are that admit privation for the Principle, or rather privations, which they distinguish from nothing, and of which they make long enumerations, so useless and little philosophical, that I can scarce imagine them to be in their Books, or that their Authors could have entertained themselves with such uncouth things.

Lastly, some of them do pretend that all is composed of accidents; of which also they make odd, long, and tedious enumerations, and such as favour only some Pettifogger, that can amuse the common People.

Touching these Principles in general, they all agree that they are eternal; our production out of nothing not having come (it seems) into their thoughts, as it hath neither to many others of the antient Philosophers: Yet they say, that there is one of them that hath touched something of it.

As to Physick, they have many little Books that are rather collections of receipts than any thing else; the most antient and chief wherefore is in Verse. I shall here tell you, that their practice is sufficiently different from ours, and that they ground themselves upon these Principles: That one who is sick of a Fever, needs no great nourishment: That the main Remedy of sicknesses, is Abstinence: That nothing is worse for a sick Body than Flesh-broth, nor which corrupts sooner in the Stomach of a feverish Patient: That no Blood is to be let but in great and evident necessity, as when you apprehend some translation into the Brain, or finde some considerable part, as the Chest, Liver, Kidneys, enflamed.

Whether this Practice be better than ours, I leave to Physicians to decide; but I see that 'tis successful among them. The same practice is not peculiar to the Physicians of the Gentils, but the Mogolian and Mahumetan Doctors, that follow Avicen and Averroes, do also very strictly observe it, especially as to Meat-broths. 'Tis true that the Mogols are somewhat more prodigal of their Blood than the Gentils, for in those sicknesses wherein they fear those accidents lately specified, they commonly blood once or twice: but these are none of those petty venesections of the new invention of Goa and Paris, but they are of those plentiful ones used by the Antients, of 18. or 20. ounces of Blood, which often come to a swooning, and frequently choak the Disease in the very beginning, as Galen saith, and as I have often experimented.

Concerning Anatomy, I may safely say, that the Gentils understand nothing at all of it, and they can speak nothing as to that subject but what is impertinent. Nor is it a wonder they are so ignorant in it, since they never open any Body of Man or Beast: they do so much abhor it, that when I opened some living Kids and Sheep before my Agab, to make him understand the Circulation of the Blood, and to shew him the Pecquetian Vessels, through which the Chyle at last comes into one of the ventricles of the Heart, they trembled for fear and ran away. Yet notwithstanding they affirm, that there are five thousand Veins in Man, neither more nor less, as if they had well counted them all.

Touching Astronomy, they have their Tables, according to which they foresee the Eclipses; and though they do it not with that exactness as our European Astronomers, yet they come pretty near. Mean time they discourse of the Eclipse of the Moon, as they do upon that of the Sun, believing that it is the Rah, that black Villain, and mischievous Deuta, who at that time seizeth on the Moon and blackens her. They hold also, that the Moon is an hundred thousand kesses, that is, above fifty thousand Leagues above the Sun: that she is lucid of her self; and that 'tis she, from whom we receive a certain Vital Water, which gathereth and disposeth it self in the Brain, descending thence as from a source into all the members for their functions. Besides this, they are of opinion, that the Sun and Moon, and generally all Stars are Deutas; that 'tis night when the Sun is behind the Someine, that imaginary Mountain, which they place in the midst of the Earth, and make I know not how many thousand Leagues high, and to which they give the shape of an inverted Sugar-loaf; so that 'tis not day with them, but when the Sun gets out from behind this Mountain.

In Geography they have sped no better. They believe the Earth to be flat and triangular, and that it hath seven stories, all differing in beauty, perfection, and inhabitants; each of which is encompassed, they say, by its Sea; that of these Seas one is of Milk, another of Sugar, the third of Butter, the fourth of Wine, and so forth: so that after one Earth there comes a Sea, and after, Sea an Earth; and so on unto seven, beginning from Someire, which is in the midst of these stories: that the first story, which is at the foot of Someire, hath Deütas for its inhabitants, which are very perfect; that the second contains likewise Deütas, but less perfect; and so the rest, still lessening the perfection unto the seventh, which they say is ours, that is, of men far less perfect than all the Deütas; and lastly, that this whole Mass is sustained upon the heads of divers Elephants, which when they stir, cause an Earthquake.

All these strange impertinences, which I have had the patience to relate, have often made me think, that if they be those famous Sciences of the antient Brahmans of the Indies, very many have been deceived in the great opinion they entertained of them. For my part, I can hardly believe it, but that I find the Religion of the Indians to be from immemorial times; that 'tis written in the Language Hanscrit, which cannot be but very antient, since its beginning is unknown, and 'tis a dead Language, not understood but by the Learned; that all their Books are only written in that Tongue: All which are as many marks of a very great Antiquity. Let us now add a few words about the worship of their Idols.

When I descended along the River Ganges, and passed through Banares, that famous School of all the Indian Gentility, I went to see the chief of the Pendets, who hath there his ordinary residence. This is a Fakire, or Religious Monk, so renowned for his knowledge, that Chah-Jehan, partly for his Science, partly to please the Rajas, gave him a Pension of 2000 Roupies, that is, about 1000 Crowns. This was a big and proper Man, goodly to look on; who for all his Cloaths had nothing but a white silken Scarf, tied about his waste, and hanging down to his mid-leg, with another red Scarf about his shoulders like a little Cloak. I had often seen him at Dehli in this posture before the King, in the Assembly of all the Omrabs, and marching upon the Streets, sometimes on foot, sometimes in a Palekey. I had also frequently seen and many times conversed with him, when for a whole year together he constantly came to our conference before my Agah, whom he courted, that he might procure him again that Pension which Aureng-Zebe (being come to the Crown) had taken from him, that he might appear a great Musulman. In the visit I made him at Banares, he was exceedingly courteous to me, and even gave me a Collation in the Library of his University, attended with six of the most famous Pendets of the Town. When I found myself in so good Company, I prayed them all to tell me their sense about the Adoration of their Idols; intimating to them, that I was leaving the Indies, extremely scandalized upon that score; and reproaching them, that that worship was a thing against all reason, and altogether unworthy such Scholars and Philosophers as they were. Whereupon I received this Answer.

We have indeed (said they) in our Deüras or Temples, store of divers Statues, as those of Braham, Mehaden, Genich and Gavani, who are some of the chief and the most perfect Deütas: and we have also many others of less perfection, to whom we pay great honour, prostrating our selves before them, and presenting them Flowers, Rice, scented Oyls, Saffron and such other things with much Ceremony, but we do not believe these Statues to be Braham or Bechen, &c. themselves, but only their Images and Representations, and we do not give them that honour, but upon the account of what they represent. They are in our Temples, because 'tis necessary for praying well, to have something before our eyes that may fix the mind; and when we pray, it is not the Statue we pray to, but he that is represented by it. For the rest, we acknowledge that 'tis God that is absolute, and the only Omnipotent Lord and Master.

This is, without adding or subtracting any thing, the resolution they gave me. But, to tell you true, this seemed a little too much accommodated to our Christianity, in respect of what I had learned of it from several other Pendets.

After this, I put them upon their Chronology, where they pretended to shew me far higher Antiquities than all ours. They will not say, that the World is eternal; but they make it so old, that I almost know not which is best. Its determined duration, say they, is of four Dgugue. This Dgugue is a certain determined number of years, as amongst us we have a seculum (an Age) with this difference, that an Age of ours contains only an hundred Years, but their Dgugue is made up of an hundred Leagues, that is, an hundred times hundred thousand years. I do not precisely remember the number total of the years of each Dgugue; but this I know very well, that the first, called Sate-Dgugue, is of twenty five Lecques of years: that the second, which they call Trita, is of above twelve Lecques: the third, called Duaper, of eight Lecques and sixty four thousand years, if I remember well: and the fourth, called Kale-Dgugue, is of I know not how many Lecques. The three first, say they, and much of the fourth, are elapsed; so that the World shall not last so long as it hath done, because it is to perish at the end of the fourth, all things being then to return to their first Principles. I made them compute again and again, to have their age of the World aright; but finding that that perplexed them, and that they agreed not among themselves about the number of the Lecques, I contented my self to see that they make the World exceeding old. But being pressed a little to make out this Antiquity, they pay you with nothing but little stories, and at length come to this, that they find it so in their Beths, or the Books of their Law, given them by the hands of Brahma.

After this I urged them concerning the nature of the Deïtas, of which I desired to be particularly instructed; but I received nothing but what was very confused. They said, that there were three sorts of them, Good, Evil, and Indifferent ones, that were neither good nor bad; that some thought, they were made of Fire, others of Light; others that they were Biapek, of which word I could not get a clear explication; only they said, that God was Biapek, and our Soul was Biapek, and what is Biapek is incorruptible, and depends neither from Time nor Place: That others would have them to be nothing else but Portions of the Deity; and lastly, that some there were, that made them certain kinds of Divinities severed and dispensed over the World.

I remember, that I also put them upon the nature of the Lengue-cherire, which some of their Authors do admit: But I could obtain nothing else of it but what I had long since understood from our Pendets, which was, That the seeds of Plants and Animals are not formed anew, but were contrived in the first production of the World, and dispensed abroad every where and mixed in all things; and that they are (not only potentially but actually) the very and entire Plants and Animals, though so small, that their parts cannot be distinguished, but when being put into a convenient womb, and there nourished, they extend themselves and increase: So that the seeds of an Apple and Pear-Tree are a Lengue-cherire, that is, a little entire and perfect Apple and Pear-Tree, having all its essential parts: And so the seeds of an Horse, an Elephant, and a Man, &c. are a Lengue-cherire; a little Horse, a little Elephant, a little Man, in which there wants nothing but the Soul and Nourishment to make them appear what they are.

For a conclusion, I shall discover to you the mystery of a great Cabala, which in these last years hath made great noise in Indostan, because certain Pendets, or Heathenish Doctors, had possessed with it the minds of Dara and Sultan-Sujah, the two first Sons of Chah-Jehan.

You cannot but know the Doctrine of many of the Antient Philosophers, touching that great Soul of the World, which they will have our Souls and those of Animals to be portions of. If we did well penetrate into Plato and Aristotle, we might perhaps find that they were of this sentiment. It is in a manner the general Doctrine of the Heathen Pendets of the Indies, and 'tis the same which still maketh the Cabala of the Soufys, and of the greatest part of the learned Men in Persia, and which is found explained in Persian Verses, so sublime and emphatical in their Goulchen-raz or Parterre of Mysteries: which is also the very same of Dr. Flud's, whom our great Gassendus hath so learnedly refuted; and that wherein most Chymists lose themselves. But these Indian Cabalists or Tendets I speak of, drive this impertinence farther than all those Philosophers, and pretend, that God, or that Sovereign Being, which they call Achar, (immutable,) hath produced or drawn out of his own substance, not only Souls, but also whatever is material and corporeal in the Universe; and that this production was not merely made by way of an efficient cause, but by a way resembling a Spider that produceth a Webb, which it draws forth out of its own body, and takes in again when it will. Creation therefore, say these Doctors, is nothing else but an extraction and extension, which God maketh of his own Substance, of those webbs he draws from his own bowels; as Destruction is nothing else but a reprisal, or taking back again this Divine Substance, and these Divine webbs into himself: So that the last day of the World, which they call Maperlé or Pralca, when they believe that all shall be destroyed, shall be nothing else but but a general reprimand of all those webbs which God had drawn forth out of himself. There is therefore nothing (so they go on) that is real or effective in all we think, we see, hear, smell, taste or touch: all this World is nothing but a kind of Dream and a meer Illusion, in regard that all this multiplicity and diversity of things that appear to us, is nothing but one and the same thing, which is God himself; as all those several Numbers of 10, 20, 100, 1000, &c. are indeed nothing but one and the same unity many times repeated. But if you demand any reason for this phantasmie, or any explication of the manner, how this issuing from and reprimand into the substance of God, this extension, and this variety of things is made; or how it can be, that God, being not corporeal but Biapek and incorruptible, (as they acknowledge) should yet be divisible into so many portions of Bodies and Souls; they never make any other return, but of some pretty comparisons, as, That God is like an immense Ocean, in which if many Vials full of Water should be floating, they would, wherever they should move, be found always in the same Ocean, in the same Water; and that coming to break, their Water would at the same time be united with their whole, and with that great Ocean of which they were portions. Or they will tell you, that it is with God as with Light, which is the same through the whole Universe, and which yet appears an hundred different ways, according to the diversity of the Objects it falls upon, or according to the several colours and shapes of Glasses through which it shineth. They will pay you, I say, only with such kind of similitudes, that bear no proportion at all with God, and are good for nothing, but to cast dust into the eyes of the ignorant people: And you must not expect any solid Answer from them, if you should tell them, that those Vials would indeed be in a like Water, but not in the same; and that it is indeed a like light over all the World, but not the same: or if you should make any other objections against them, they return always to the same comparisons, pretty expressions, or as the Soufyr, to the fine Verses of their Goultchen-raz.

Now Sir, what think you? Had I not reason, from this great heap of extravagancies, I mean, from that panick and childish terror struck into those Indians by Eclipses; from that superstitious compassion for the Sun to deliver it from that black Demon, accompanied with those Apish Prayers, Washings, Plungings, and Alms cast into the River; from that mad and infernal obstinacy of the Women, burning themselves with the Corpses of their Husbands; from those several madnesses of the Fakires; and lastly, from all that fabulous stuff of the Berhs and other Indian Books: Had I not reason, I say, to premise in the title of this Letter; (which is but a poor advantage to me from so long travelling) That there are no opinions so ridiculous or extravagant, of which the mind of man is not capable.

To conclude, I have no more to add then to desire you, to do me the favour and deliver with your own hands the Letter to Monsieur Chapelle. It is he that first procured me that familiar acquaintance I had with Monsieur Gassendi, your intimate and Illustrious Friend, that hath been so advantageous to me; which maketh me acknowledge my great obligations to him, and exceedingly engageth me to love him, and to remember him in what part of the World soever I am: As I am no less bound to honour you as long as I live; as well for the peculiar affection you have always expressed to me, as for the good counsel you have assisted me with in your many letters during the whole course of my voyages, and for that favour of sending to me with so much generosity (without interest or money) unto the end of the World: whither my curiosity had carried me, a Chest of Books, when those, of whom I demanded them for money, ordered by me to be paid at Marseilles, and who should have honestly sent them me, abandoned me there, and laugh at all my Letters, looking upon me as a lost man, whom they should never see again.

A Relation of a Voyage made in the year 1664. when the Great Mogol Aureng-Zebe went with his Army from Debli, the Capital of Indostan, to Labor; from Labor to Bember, and from thence to the Kingdom of Kachemire, commonly call'd by the Mogols, The PARADISE of the Indies, &c. By way of several Letters, written by the Author to his Friends.

The first Letter to Monsieur de Merveilles, written at Debli, Decemb. 1664. Aureng-Zebe being ready to march.

CONTAINING

The Occasion and Cause of this Voyage of Aureng-Zebe; together with an account of the state and posture of his Army, and the Equipage and ordinary Provisions of the chief of his Cavalry; and some curious particulars observable in the Voyages of the Indies.

SIR,

Since that Aureng-Zebe began to find himself in better health, it hath been constantly reported, that he would make a Voyage to Labor, and go from thence to Kachemire, to change the Air, and to be out of the way of the approaching Summer heats, for fear of a relapse: That the more intelligent sort of men would hardly be perswaded, that as long as he kept his Father Chah-jean prisoner in the Fort of Agra, he would think it safe to be at such a distance. Yet notwithstanding we have found, that Reason of State hath given place to that of Health, or rather to the Intrigues of Rauchenara-Begum, who was wild to breath a more free Air than that of the Seraglio, and to have her turn in shewing her self to a gallant and magnificent Army, as her Sister Begum-sabeb had formerly done during the Reign of Chah-jean.

He departed then the 6th of December, about three a clock in the afternoon; a day and hour that must needs be fortunate for a great Voyage, if we may give credit to the Gentlemen Astrologers, who have so decreed it. And he arrived at Chach-limar, his House of Pleasure, distant about two Leagues from hence; where he spent six whole dayes, thereby to give to all sufficient time to make necessary preparations for a Voyage, that would take up a year and an half. We have this day news, that he is gone to encamp on the way of Labor, and that when he hath stay'd there two dayes, he intends to continue his march without any further expectation. He hath with him not only the Thirty five thousand Horse, or thereabout, and 10000 Foot, but also both his Artilleries, the great or heavy, and the small or lighter, which is call'd, The Artillery of the Stirrup, because it is inseparable from the person of the King, whereas the Heavy sometimes leaveth him to keep the high and well beaten Roads.

The Great Artillery is made up of seventy pieces of Cannon, most of them cast; of which some are so ponderous, that they need twenty yoke of Oxen to draw them; and some of them require Elephants to help all those Oxen, by thrusting and drawing the wheels of the Wagons with their Trunks and Heads when they stick in any deep way, or are to pass some steep mountain. That of the Stirrup is composed of fifty or sixty

sixty small Field-pieces, all of Brass, each carried upon a little pritty and painted Chariot (as hath been already said in another place) beautified with many little red Streamers, and drawn by two very handfom Horses, driven by the Gunner himself, together with a third Horse, which the Gunners Assissant leads for a relief. All these Chariots go alwaies a great pace, that they may be soon enough in order before the Tent of the King, and discharge all at once at the time of his entry, to give the Army notice.

All these great preparations give us cause to apprehend, that in stead of going to Kachemire, we be not led to besiege that important City of Kandahar, which is the Frontier to Persia, Indostan and Usbeck, and the Capital of an excellent Country, yielding a very great Rêvenue, and which for this very reason hath been ever the bone of contention between the Persians and Indians. Whatever it be, there is now a necessity to dispatch at Debli, any business whatsoever notwithstanding; and I should find myself much cast behind the Army, if I should tarry any longer: Besides I know, that my Navab, or Agah Danesh-mend-kan stays for me abroad with impatience: He can no more be without philosophizing in the afternoon upon the Books of Gassendi and Des-Cartes, upon the Globe and the Sphere, or upon Anatomy, than he can be without bestowing the whole morning upon the weighty matters of the Kingdom, in the quality of Secretary of State for forrain Affairs, and of Great Master of the Cavalry. I shall depart this night, after I have given the last order for all my businesses, and provided all necessaries for my Voyage, as all the principal persons of the Cavalry do; that is, two good Tartarian Horses, whereto I am obliged by reason of the one hundred and fifty Crowns of pay, which I have by the month; a Camel of Persia, and a Groom; a Cook, and another Servant, which must be had ordinarily to march in these Countries before the Horse, and to carry a Flagon with water in his hand. I also have provided the ordinary Utensils, such as are a Tent of a middle size, and a proportionate piece of foot-Tapistry; and a little Bed with girdles, made up with four strong and light Canes, and a Pillow for the head; two Coverlets, whereof one folded up fourfold serveth for a Matrasse; a round Table-cloth of Leather to eat upon; some Napkins of dyed Cloth, and three small Sacks for Plate, which are put up in a greater Sack, and this sack into a very great and strong Sack made of Girdles, in which are put all the provisions, together with the Linnen of the Master and Servants. I have also made provision of excellent Rice for five or six dayes, for fear I should not alwayes find so good; of some sweet Biscuit, with Sugar and Anis; of a linnen sleeve with its little iron-hook, to let, by the means thereof, run out and to keep curdled milk; and of store of Limons with Sugar, to make Limonade; such Milk and Limonade being the two great and soveraign refreshments of the Indies: All which, as I said, is put into the last named Sack, which is so large and heavy, that three or four men have pains enough to lift it up: though two men do first fold and turn one side upon the other when it is full, and though the Camel be made to stoop very nigh it, and there need no more than to turn one of the sides of that Sack upon the Camel. All this equipage and provision is absolutely necessary in such Voyages as these. We must not look for such good lodging and accommodations as we have in our Country. We must resolve to encamp and live after the Arabian and Tartarian mode, without expecting any other Inns than Tents: Nor must we think to plunder the Country-man; all the Lands of the Kingdom being in propriety to the King: We are well to consider, that we must be sober and prudent, and that to ruine the Country man, were to ruine the Demesne of the King. That which much comforts me in this march, is, that we go North-ward, and depart in the beginning of the Winter after the rains; which is the right season for travelling in the Indies, because it raineth not, and we are not so much incommoded by heat and dust. Besides that, I find myself out of danger of eating the bread of Bazar, or of the Market, which ordinarily is ill baked, full of sand and dust; nor obliged to drink of those naughty waters which being all turbid, and full of nastiness of so many people and beasts that fetch thence, and enter into them, do cause such fevers, which are very hard to cure, and which breed also certain very dangerous worms in the legs. They at first cause a great inflammation, accompanied with a fever, and ordinarily come forth a little after the Voyage, although there have been some, that have stay'd a whole year and more before they appear'd. They are commonly of the bigness and length of a small Vial-tiring, so that one would sooner take them for some nerve than for a worm; and they must be drawn out little by little, from day to day, gently winding them about a little twig of the bigness of a needle, for fear of breaking them. This, I say, comforteth me not a little, that I find my self exempt from these inconveniencies; my Naviab having vouchsafed me a very particular favour; which is, that he hath appointed to give me every day a new loaf of his house, and a Souray of the water of Ganges, with which he hath laden several Camels of his train, as the whole Court doth. Souray is that Tin-flagon full of water, which the Servant, that marcheth on foot before the Gentleman on horseback, carrieth in his hand, wrap't up in a sleeve of red cloth. Ordinarily it holdeth but one pint; but I had some of them expressly made, that hold two. We shall see, whether this cunning will succeed. The water cooleth very well in this Flagon, provided that care be had alwayes to keep the sleeve moist, and that the Servant that holds it in his hand, do march and stir the air, or else that it be held towards the wind; as is commonly done upon three pretty little sticks, crossing one another, that they may not touch the earth; For the moistness of the linnen, the agitation of the air, or the wind, are absolutely necessary to keep the water fresh; as if this moistness, or rather the water imbibed by the sleeve did keep out the little igneous bodies or spirits that are in the air, at the same time when it giveth entrance to the nitrous or other parts, which hinder the motion in the water, and cause coolness; in the same manner as Glass keeps out Water, and giveth passage to the Light, by reason of the particular texture and disposition of the parts of the Glass, and the diversity there must be between the particles of Light and those of Water. We do not use this Tin-flagon for keeping our water cool but in the field: When we are at home, we have Jars of a certain porous Earth, in which it is much better cooled, provided it be expos'd to the wind, and moisten'd with a Linnen-cloth, as the Flagon; or else, use is made of Salt-peter, as all persons of quality do, whether in Towns, or in the Army. They put water, or any other liquor, to be cooled, in a round and long necked Tin-flagon, such as are the English Bottles, and for the space of half a quarter of an hour this Flagon is stirr'd in water, into which hath been cast three or four handfuls of Salt-peter; this maketh the water very cold, neither is it unwholsome, as I did apprehend; but only that sometimes it causeth gripings at first when one is not accustomed to it.

But to what purpose, to play so much the Philosopher, when we should think to depart, and to endure the Sun, which at all seasons is incommodious in the Indies, and to swallow the dust, which is never wanting in the Army; to put up, to load, and to unload every day our Baggage, to help the Servants to fasten sticks, to draw Cords, to put up Tents, and to take them down again, to march in the day, and in the night, to devour cold and heat, and in a word, to turn Arabians for a year and an half, during which time we are to be in the Field. Adieu; I shall not fail to acquit my self of my promise, and from time to time to inform you of our Adventures; and besides, since the Army for this time will make but small Journeys in its march, and pass on with all that pomp and magnificence, which the Kings of Indostan do affect, I shall endeavour to observe the most considerable things, that I may impart them to you, as soon as we shall arrive at Labor.

THE SECOND LETTER;

CONTAINING

The Number and Magnificence, the Order and the Disposition of the Tents of the Great Mogol in the Field: The Number of Elephants, Camels, Mules, and Porters, necessary to carry them: The Disposition of the Bazars or Royal Markets: That of the particular Quarters of the Omrahs, or Lords, and of the rest of the Army: The extent of the whole Army, when encamped: The confusion there met with; and how it may be avoided: The Order of preventing Robberies: The different Manners of the March of the King, the Princesses, and the rest of the Seraglio: The danger there is in being too near the Women: The several ways of the Royal Hunting, and how the King hunts with his whole Army: The abundance of people there is in the Army, and the method of making them all subsist.

SIR,

THIS indeed is called marching with gravity, and as we speak here a la Mogole; it is no more but fifteen or sixteen dayes Journey from Debli to Labor, which make little more than sixscore Leagues; and yet we have spent almost two months on this way. 'Tis true, the King with the best part of the Army went somewhat aside from the high way, the better to enjoy the divertisements of Hunting, and for the conveniency of the water of Gemna, which we went to look for on the right hand, and which we leisurely followed long enough in our hunting, crossing fields of tall grass, full of all sorts of game, where the Horsemen could scarce be seen. At present, whilst we are at rest, I am going to make good what I have promised you in the Title of this Letter; hoping shortly to make you come to Kachemire, and to shew you one of the best Countries in the World.

When the King is in the field, he hath usually two Camps, I mean two Bodies, of Tents separated, to the end that when he breaketh up and leaveth one, the other may have passed before by a day, and be found ready when he arriveth at the place design'd to encamp it: And 'tis therefore, that they are called Peiche-kanes as if you should say, Houses going before: These two Peiche-kanes are almost alike, and there are requisite above three score Elephants, more then two hundred Camels, above an hundred Mules, and as many more Porters to carry one of them. The Elephants carry the most bulky things, such as are the great Tents, and their great Pillars, which being too long and too heavy, are taken down in three pieces. The Camels carry the lesser Tents: The Mules, the Baggage and Kitchens. And to the Porters are given all the little moveables, and such as are delicate and fine, that might easily be broken; as Porcelain, which the King usually employeth at Table: those painted and gilded Beds, and those rich Kargnais; which I shall speak of hereafter.

One of these two Peiche-kanes, or Bodies of Tents, is no sooner arrived at the place designed for encamping, but the Great Marshal that orders the Lodging, chuseth some fair place for the Kings Quarters; yet with a regard, as much as is possible, to the Symmetry and order that is to be observed for the whole Army; and he marketh out a Square, of which each side is above three hundred ordinary paces long. An hundred Pikemen presently clear and level this pace, making square planes to raise the Tents upon, and surrounding all this great Square with Kanates or Skreens seven or eight foot high, which they fasten with cords tyed to sticks, and with perches fix't in the ground, by couples, from ten to ten paces, one without, and the other within, inclining the one upon the other. These Kanates are made of a strong cloth lined with stained Linnen. In the middle of one of the sides of this Square is the Entry or Royal Gate, great and magnificent; and the Indian stuff which 'tis made of, as also those Stuffs, of which the whole side of the Square of the face is lined without, are far better and richer than the others.

The

The first and the greatest of the Tents, that is reared in this Inclosure, is called Am-kur, because it is the place where the King and all the Lords in the Army do assemble about nine a clock in the morning, when the Mokam, that is, the usual publick Meeting is held. For, the Kings of Indostan, although they are in a march, do not dispence but very rarely with this almost inviolable custom, which is pass'd into a kind of Duty and Law, viz. to appear twice a day in the Assembly, there to give order for State-Affairs, and to administer Justice.

The second, which is little less than the first, and a little further advanced into the Inclosure, is called, Gosh-kane, that is to say, a place to wash in: And here 'tis, where all the Lords every night meet, and where they come to salute and do obeisance to the King, as ordinarily they do when they are in the Metropolis. This Assembly in the evening is very inconvenient to the Omrahs; but it is a thing that looks great and stately, to see a far off, in an obscure night, in the midst of a Campagne, cross all the Tents of an Army, long files of Torches lighting these Omrahs to the Kings Quarters, and attending them back again to their Tents. 'Tis true, that these lights are not of wax as ours, but they last very long. They are only an Iron put about a stick, at the end of which are wound raggs of old Linnen from time to time, which is moistned with Oyl, held by the Link-men in their hands in a Brass, or Latton-flagon, with a long and streight neck.

The third Tent, which is not much less than the two first, and is yet further advanced into the Inclosure, is called Kalvet-kane, that is to say, a retired or the Privy Council-place, because none but the first Officers of the Kingdom enter into it; and 'tis there where the greatest and the most important Affairs are transacted.

Yet further into the Square are the particular Tents of the King, encompass'd with small Kanates or Skreens, of the height of a man, and lined with stained Indian Stuff, of that elegant workmanship of Maslipatam, which do represent an hundred sorts of different flowers: and some of them lined with flowred Sattin with large Silk fringes.

The Tents joyning to the Kings, are those of the Begum or Princesses, and the other great Ladies and She-Officers of the Seraglio, which are likewise encompass'd, as those of the King, with rich Kanates; and amidst all these Tents are placed those of the lower She-Officers, and other serving-Women, alwayes, upon the matter, in the same order, according to their Office.

The Am-kur, and the five or six principal Tents are raised high, that they may be seen at a good distance, and the better fence off the heat. Without it is nothing but a course and strong red cloth, yet beautified and striped with certain large stripes, cut variously and advantagiously to the eye: But within it is lined with those fine Indian flowred Stuffs, of the same work of Maslipatam; and this work is raised and enriched with silk, gold and silver Embroideries having great Fringes, or with some fine flowred Sattin. The Pillars supporting these Tents, are painted and guild; One marcheth on nothing but rich Tapestry, having matrasses of Cotton under them four or five inches thick, and round about these Tapestries there are great square Rails richly cover'd to lean upon.

In each of the two great Tents where the Assembly is kept, there is raised a Theater richly adorned, where the King giveth Audience under a great Canopy of Velvet, or purpled with gold. In the other Tents are found the like Canopies, and there you may see also set up certain Karguais, that is, fine Cabinets, whose little doors are shut with Silver-locks. To conceive what they are, you may represent to you two small Squares of our Skreens, set upon one another, and neatly round about fastned to one another with a Silken-string; yet so that the extremities of the sides of the uppermost come to incline upon one another, so as to make a kind of a little Tabernacle with this difference from our Skreens, that all the sides of these are of very thin and slight Firr-boards, painted and guild without, and enriched round about with gold and Silk-fringes, and lined within with Scarlet, or flowred Sattin, or purpled with Gold.

And this is very near what I can tell you of what is contained within the great Square.

What concerns the particulars that are without the Square; there are first two pretty Tents on both the two sides of the great Entry or Royal Gate, where are found two choice Horses saddled, and richly harness'd, and altogether ready to be mounted upon occasion, or rather for State and Magnificence.

On the two sides of the same Gate are placed in order those fifty or threescore small Field-

Field-pieces, that make up the Artillery of the Sirrup above mention'd, and which discharge all together to salute the King entring into his Tent, and to give notice thereof to the whole Army.

Before the Gate there is always left void, as much as may be, a great place, at the end of which there is a great Tent, called Nagar-kane, because that is the place of the Timbals and Trumpets.

Near this Tent there is another great one, which is called Tchanky-kane, because it is the place where the Omrabs keep guard, every one in his turn, once a week twenty four hours together; yet notwithstanding most of the Omrabs on the day of their guard, cause, close by, to be rear'd one of their own Tents, to be the more at liberty, and to have more elbow room.

Round about the three other sides of the great Square are set up all the Tents of the Officers, which are always found in the same order and disposition, unless it be that the place permit it not: They have all their peculiar names; but as they are hard to pronounce, and I pretend not to teach you the Language of the Country, it will be sufficient to tell you, that there is a particular one for the Arms of the King; another for the rich Harnesses of Horses; another for Vests pursled with Gold, which are the ordinary Presents bestow'd by the King. Besides, there are four more, near one another; the first of which is designed for keeping Fruit; the second for Comfits; the third for Ganges water, and the Salt-peter to cool it; and the fourth for the Betele, which is that Leaf, whereof I have spoken elsewhere, which is offered to friends, as Coffee is in Turkie, and chew'd to make ruddy lips, and a sweet breath. Next to these, there are fifteen or sixteen others that serve for Kitchens and what belongs to them. Amongst all these Tents are those of a great number of Officers and Eunuchs. Lastly, there are four or five long ones for led Horses, and some others for the best Elephants; and all those that are for hunting. For there must needs be a retreat for all that great number of Birds of prey, that are always carried for Game and Magnificence; and so there must be for those many Dogs, and those Leopards serving to take wild Goats; for those Nilgans, or gray Oxen, which I take for Elcks; for these Lions and Rhinoceros's, that are led for greatness; for those great Bufalo's of Bengale fighting with Lions; and lastly for those tamed wild Goats, they call Gazelles, that are made to sport before the King.

This vast number of Tents, now spoken of, together with those that are within the great Square, make up the King's Quarter, which is always in the middle, and as 'twere in the center of the Army, except the place do not allow it. It will easily be thence concluded, that this Quarter of the King must needs be something great and royal, and afford a very fine prospect, if one behold from some high place this great body of red Tents in the midst of the Army, encamped in a fair and even Campagne, where may be fully seen all that order and disposition that is to be observed in the whole.

After that the Great Marshal of the Camp hath chosen a place fit for the Kings's Quarter, and hath made the Am-kas to be set up highest of all the Tents, and by which he is to take his measure for the ordering and disposing the rest of the Army accordingly; He then marketh out the Royal Bazars or Markets, whence the whole Army is furnished with necessaries; drawing the first and the chief of all, like a great Street running straight, and a great free way traversing the whole Army, now on the right hand, and by and by on the left of the Am-kas and the King's Quarter, and always in the straightest line that may be towards the encamping of the next day. All the Royal Bazars, that are neither so long nor so broad, commonly cross this first, some on this, others on the other side of the King's Quarter; and all these Bazars are discern'd by very high Canes like great pearches, which are fixt in the ground from three hundred to three hundred paces or thereabout, with red Standards, and Cows-tails of the great Tibet fastned on the top of these Canes like Periwigs.

The same Marshal designs, next, the place of the Omrabs, so as they may always keep the same order, and be ever as near as may be the King's Quarter; some on the right, others on the left hand, some on this side of him, others beyond him; so that none of them may change the place that hath been once appointed for him, or that himself hath desired in the beginning of the Voyage.

The Quarters of the Omrabs and Rajas, as to their particular order and disposition, are to be imagined in a manner like that of the King: For commonly they have two Peiche-kans with a Square of Kanates, which incloseth their principal Tent and those of their Women; and round about these are put up the Tents of their Officers and Cavaliers, with a peculiar Bazar, which is a street of small Tents for the lower sort of people that follows the Army, and furnisheth the Camp with Forage, Grains, Rice, Butter, and the other things that are most necessary; whereby they are so accommodated, that they need not always go to the Royal Bazars, where generally all things are to be found as in the Capital City. Each Bazar is marked at the two ends by two Canes planted in the ground, which are as all as those of the Royal Bazars, that so at a good distance the particular Standards fastned to to them may be discovered, and the several quarters distinguish'd from one another.

The Great Omrabs and Rajas affect to have their Tents very high. But they must beware lest they be too high, because it may happen, that the King, passing by, might perceive it, and command them to be thrown down; of which we have seen an example in this last march. Neither must they be altogether red from without, since those of the King alone are to be so. Lastly, out of respect they must all look towards the Am-kas, or the Quarter of the King.

The residue of the space between the Kings Quarter, and those of the Omrabs and the Bazars, is taken up by the Tents of the Manseb-dars or little Omrabs, and of that infinite number of great and small Merchants that follow the Army; of all those that belong to the Law; and lastly, of all such as serve both the Artilleries: Which maketh indeed a prodigious number of Tents, and requireth a very great extent of ground. Yet it is not all true what is said of either of them. And I believe, that when the whole Army is in a fair and even Campagne, where it may encamp with ease, and that, following the ordinary plot, it comes at length to be lodged, as near as may be, in a round (as we have often seen it does, upon this road) the compass of it will not be above two Leagues, or two Leagues and an half; and with all this there will yet be left here and there several void places. But then the great Artillery, which taketh up a great tract of ground, very often a day or two go before.

Nor is all true, what is said of the strange confusion, which commonly strikes an astonishment into all new comers. For a little acquaintance with the method of the Army, and some heeding of the order observed in the Camp, will soon enable one to avoid all embarrassment, and to go to and fro about his business, and to find his quarter again; forasmuch as every one regulateth himself by the King's Quarter, and the particular Tents and Standards of the Omrabs, that may be seen afar off, and by the Standards and Perriwigs of the Royal Bazars, which may also be seen at a great distance.

Yet for all these marks it will sometimes fall out, that one shall be extremely perplexed, and even in the day time, but especially in the morning, when a world of people do arrive, and every one of those is busie and seeks to lodge himself: And that not only, because there is often raised so great a dust, that the King's Quarter, the Standards of the Bazars and the Omrabs (which might serve for guides) cannot be discover'd: But because a man finds himself between Tents that are putting up, and between cords, which the lesser Omrabs, that have no Peiche-kane, and the Manseb-dars stretch out to mark their lodgings, and to hinder, that no way may be made nigh them, or that no unknown person may come to lodge near their Tents, where often they have their Women: If in this case you mean to get by on one side, you will find the wayes obstructed by those stretched-out cords, which a troupe of mean Serving-men standing there with big cudgels, will not suffer to be lower'd, to suffer the Baggage to pass: If you will turn back, you'll find the wayes shut since you passed. And here it is, where you must cry out, storm, intreat, make as if you would strike, and yet well beware of doing so, leaving the men, as well as you can, to quarrel against one another, and afterwards to accord them for fear of some mischief; and in short, to put your self into all imaginable postures to get away thence, and to make your Camels pass: But the great trouble is, when a man is obliged to go in an evening to a place somewhat remote; because that those offensive smoaks of the fire of green Wood, of Cowshares, of Camel-dung, which the common people then make in their kitchens, do raise a mist (especially when there is no wind) so thick, that you can see nothing at all. I have been three or four times surprized with it, so as not to know what to do. Well might I ask the way; I knew not whither I went, and I did nothing but turn. Once, among other times, I was constrained to stay still this mist passed, and the Moon risen. And another time I was forced to get to the Aguacy-die, to lye down at the foot thereof, and there to pass all the night as well as I could, having my Servant and Horse by me. This Aguacy-die is like a tall Mast, but very slender, which can be taken down in three pie-pieces, and 'tis planted toward the King's Quarter, near that Tent which is called Nagar-kane. In the evening is drawn up to the top of it a Lanthorn with a light burning in it all night long; which is very commodious, as being seen a great way off; and thither it is that people gone astray do retire, from thence to get again to the Bazars, and to ask the way, or there to pass the rest of the night; for no body hinders one from doing so, and a man may be there in safety from Robbers. It is called Aguacydie, as if you should say, light of Heaven, in regard that from a far off it appears like a Star.

For the prevention of Robberies, each Omrab causeth a guard to be kept all the night long, in his particular Camp, of such men that perpetually go the round, and cry Kaber-dar, have a care. Besides, there are round about the Army set guards, at five hundred common paces from one another, that keep a fire, and cry also Kaber-dar. And over and above all these, the Cotonal, who is, as 'twere, the great Prevost, sends out Troups of Guards every way, that pass through all the Bazars, crying out and trumpetting all night long. Yet for all this, some robberies there are now and then committed; and 'tis necessary alwayes to be upon ones guard, to go to sleep by times, that so you may be awake the rest of the night, and not to trust your servants too much to keep guard for you.

But let us now see, how many different wayes the Great Mogol is carried in the Field.

Ordinarily he causeth himself to be carried on mens shoulders, in a kind of Sedan or Litter, upon which is a Taht-raven, that is, a Field-throne; on which he is seated: And this is like a magnificent Tabernacle with pillars, painted and gilded, which may be shut with glass, when 'tis ill weather; the four branches of the Litter are cover'd with Scarlet or purpled Gold, with great Gold and Silk-fringes; and at each branch there are two robust and well-clothed Porters, that change by turns with as many more that follow.

Sometimes also he goeth on Horse-back, especially when 'tis a fair day for hunting. At other times he rideth on an Elephant, in a Mik-dember, or Hauze; and this is the most splendid appearance: For, the Elephant is decked with a very rich and very magnificent Harnais; the Mik-dember, being a little square House or Turret of Wood, is alwayes painted and gilded; and the Hauze, which is an Oval seat, having a Canopy with Pillars over it, is so likewise.

In these different Marches he is alwayes accompanied with a great number of Omrabs and Rajas following him close and thick on horse-back without any great order: And all those that are in the Army are obliged to be at the Amkas at break of day, unless he do exempt them from it upon the account either of their peculiar Office, or their great Age. This march is very inconvenient to them, especially on hunting dayes; for they must endure the Sun and Dust as the simple Souldiers, and that sometimes until three of the clock in the afternoon; whereas, when they do not attend the King, they go at ease in their Palekys, close cover'd, if they please, free from the Sun and Dust; sleeping in them couched all along as in a bed, and so coming in good time to their Tent, which expects them with a ready dinner, their kitchen being gone the night before, after supper. About the Omrabs, and amongst them, there is alwayes a good number of Horse-men well mounted, call'd Gourze-berdars, because they carry a kind of Silver-Mace of Armes. There are also many of them about the right and left wings, that precede the person of the King, together with store of Foot men. These Gourze-berdars are Chice-men, of a good men and a fair stature, appointed to carry orders, and having all of them great sticks in their hands, whereby they put people aside at a good distance, and hinder that no body march before the King to incommode him.

After the Rajas marcheth a train mixed of a great number of Timbals and Trumpets. I have already said in another place, that this Train consists of nothing but of figures of Silver representing strange Animals, Hands, Scales, Fishes, and other mysterious things, that are carried at the end of great Silver-sticks.

At last a great troupe of Manseb-dars, or little Omrabs, well mounted, and furnish'd with Swords, Arrows and Quivers, follow after all the former: And this Body is much more numerous than that of the Omrabs, because, besides that all those that are of the Guard dare not fail to be at break of day, as the Omrabs, at the gate of the Kings Tent to accompany him: There are also many, that come amongst them, to make their Court, and to become known there.

The Princesses, and the great Ladies of the Seraglio are also carried in sundry fashions; some are carried, like the King, on mens shoulders, in a Tchandonle, which is a kind of Tadran, painted, gilded, and cover'd with great and costly Net-work of Silk of divers colours, enriched with Embroidery, Fringe, and thick pendant tufts. Others are carried in a very handsome Paleks closed, that are likewise painted and gilded, and covered with that rich silken net-work. Some are carried in large Litters by two strong Camels, or by two small Elephants, instead of Mules: and in this manner I have sometimes seen carried Rauchenara-Begum; when I also observed, that in the fore-part of her Litter, being open, there was a little She-slave, that with a peacocks-tail kept off from her the Flies and Dust. Lastly, others are carried upon Elephants richly harnessed, and cover'd with embroider'd deckings, and great Silver-bells, where these Ladies sit, raised, as 'twere, into the middle region of the Air, four and four in Mik-dembers latticed, which always are cover'd with silken Net-work, and are no less splendid and stately than the Tchandonles and Tadrans.

I cannot forbear relating here, that in this Voyage I took a particular pleasure in beholding and considering this pompous march of the Seraglio. And certainly nothing more stately can be imagined, than to see Rauchenara-Begum march first, mounted upon a lusty Elephant of Pegu in a Mik-dember, all shining of Gold and Azur, attended by five or six other Elephants with their Mik-dembers, almost as splendid as hers, filled with the principal She-Officers of her House; some of the most considerable Eunuchs, richly adorned, and advantageously mounted, riding on her side, each with a Cane in his hand; a Troup of Tartarian and Kachemirian Maids, of Honour about her, oddly and fantastically dressed, and riding on very pretty Hackney-horses; and lastly, many other Eunuchs on Horseback accompanied with store of Pages and Lackeys, with great sticks in their hands, to make way afar off. After this Rauchenara-Begum, I saw pass one of the principal Ladies of the Court, mounted and attended in proportion: And after this, a third in the same fashion; and then another, and so on to fifteen or sixteen all, (more or less) bravely mounted and accompanied according to their quality, pay, and office. Indeed this long file of Elephants to the number of fifty, or sixty, or more, thus gravely marching with paces, as 'twere, counted, and withal this gallant train and equipage, does represent something that is Great and Royal; and if I had not beheld this Pomp with a kind of philosophical indifference, I know not, whether I should not have suffered my self to be carried away to those extravagant sentiments of most of the Indian Poets, who will have it, that all these Elephants carry as many hidden Goddesses. 'Tis true, one can hardly see them, and they are almost inaccessible by men; it would be a great misfortune to any poor Cavalier whatsoever, to be found in the Field too near them in the march; all those Eunuchs, and all the crew of Servants are to the highest degree insolent, and desire nothing more than such a pretext and occasion to fall upon a man and give him some Bastinadoes. I remember, I was once thus unfortunately surprized, and certainly I had been very ill used, as well as many other Cavaliers, if at length I had not resolved to make my way out by my sword, rather than suffer my self to be thus maimed as they began to order the matter; and if by good luck I had not been provided with a good Horse, that carried me vigorously out of the press, when I put him on thorow a torrent of people, that was to be repass'd. And it is grown in a manner a common Proverb of these Armies, That, above all, one must beware of three things: First, Not to let one self to be engag'd amongst the troupes of the chosen led Horse, they never failing to strike: Secondly, not to come into the places of Hunting: Thirdly, not to approach too near the Women of the Seraglio. Yet notwithstanding by what I hear, it is much less dangerous here than in Persia; for there 'tis death to be found in the field in sight of the Eunuchs that attend them, though you were half a league distant from them. It is required, that as many men as there are in the Villages and Burroughs, where they pass, do all abandon them and retire afar off.

As to the Hunting of the King, I knew not first how to imagine what is commonly said, which is, that the Great Mogol goes to hunt with an hundred thousand men: But now I see, it may very well be said, that he goes to hunt with above two hundred thousand; nor is it a thing hard to comprehend. In the neighbouring places to Agra and Delhi, along the river Gemna as far as to the mountains, and even on both sides of the high way to Lahor, there is abundance of untill'd Lands, some of Copse-wood, and some of Grass above a mans height: In all these places there are great numbers of Guards, incessantly roving up and down, and hindering all other people from hunting except Partridges, Quails and Hares, which the Indians know to take with nets: So that every where in those places there is very great store of all kind of Game. This being so, the hunting guards, when they know that the King is in the field, and near their quarters, give notice, to the Great Hunting-master, of the quality of the Game, and of the place where most of it is: then the Guards do line all the avenues of that quarter, and that sometimes for above four or five Leagues of ground, that so the whole Army may pass by, either this or that way, and the King being in his march may at the same time enter into it with as many Omrabs, Hunters and other persons as he shall please, and there hunt at his ease, now in one manner and then in another, according to the difference of the Game. And now behold first, how he hunteth the Gazelles or wild Fawns with tamed Leopards.

I think, I have else where told you, that in the Indies there is store of Gazelles, that are in a manner shaped as our Hinds or Fawns; that these Gazelles commonly go in several troupes, and that every troupe, which never consists of above five or six, is alwaies follow'd by one only male, discernable by the colour. One of such troupes being discover'd, they endeavour to make the Leopard see them, who is held chain'd upon a little chariot. This crafty animal doth not presently and directly run after them, but goes winding and turning, stopping and hiding himself, so to approach them with more advantage; and to surprize them: And as he is capable to make five or six leaps with an almost incredible swiftness, when he finds he is within reach, he lanceth himself upon them, worrieth them, and glutts himself with their blood, heart and liver; If he faileth (which often happens) he stands still, and it would be in vain for him to attempt to take them by running after them, because they run much faster, and hold out longer than he. Then the Master comes gently about him, flattering him, and throwing him some pieces of flesh, and thus amuling him, puts something over his eyes to cover them, and so chains him, and puts him upon the chariot again. One of these Leopards gave us once in our march this divertisement, which frighted store of people. A troupe of Gazelles appear'd in the midst of the Army, as they will do every day; it chanced that they pass'd close to two Leopards that were carried, as they use to be, upon their little chariot. One of them not blinded, made such an effort that he burst his chain, and darted himself after them, but without catching any of them: Yet the Gazelles, not knowing which way to escape, being pursued, cried after, and hunted on every side, there was one of them that was forced to repass again near the Leopard, who, notwithstanding the Camels and Horses that pestred all the way, and contrary to what is commonly said of this Beast, that it never returns to its prey when it hath once failed of it, flew upon it and caught it.

The hunting of the Nilgaux or gray Oxen, which I said were a kind of Elcks, hath no great matter in it. They are inclosed in great Nets, that are by little and little drawn closer together, and when they are reduced to a small compass of enclosure, the King, the Omrabs, and the Hunters do enter and kill them at pleasure with Arrows, Halt-pikes, Sabres or Musquets; and sometimes in so great numbers, that the King sends quarters of them for presents to all the Omrabs.

The Game of the Cranes hath something of divertisement. 'Tis a pleasure to see them defend themselves in the Air against the Birds of prey; they sometimes kill some of them; but at length, not being nimble in turning, many strong Birds master them.

Of all the Games that of the Lion is the most Rôyal, because there is none but the King and the Princes that can exercise it (unless it be by a very particular leave;) but it is also the most dangerous. The manner of it is this. When the King is in the field, and the Hunting-guards have discover'd the place of the Lions retirement; they tye fast an As there about, which the Lion soon comes to devour, and without caring to look out for other prey, as Oxen, Cows, Mutton or Shepherds, he goes to seek for drink, and returns to his ordinary lodging place, where he lyes down and sleeps until next morning, when he finds another As in the self-same place, which the Hunters have fastened there as the day before; and when they have thus baited and amused him several dayes in the same place, and now know that the King is nigh, they at length tye fast another As, but whom they have made to swallow a quantity of opium, to the end that his flesh may the better lull asleep the Lion, and then all the Country-men of the circumjacent Villages spread large and strong nets made for that purpose, which they also by degrees reduce to a small compass, as is practised in the hunting of the Nilgaux. All things thus prepar'd, the King mounted on an Elephant trap'd with iron, iron, being attended by the great Hunting-master, some Omrabs riding also on Elephants, by abundance of Gourze-berdars on Horse-back, and by a numerous Hunting-guard on foot, arm'd with Half-pikes, approacheth to the Nets from without, and with a great Musquet shoots at the Lion; who when he finds himself wounded, comes directly to the Elephant, as his custom is; but he meets with those big Nets stopping him, and the King shoots so often at him, that at last he kills him. Yet in this last hunting there was a Lion that leapt over these Nets, fell upon an Horseman whose Horse he kill'd, and then ran away: But the Hunters met with him, and inclosed him again in the Net, which caused a great disturbance to the Army; we were three or four dayes padding in small torrents running down the mountains, betwixt underwood and such long grafs as that Camels hardly can be seen therein; and happy were these that had some provision of victuals; for all was in disorder: The Bazars could not range themselves, and the Villages were remote. The reason why we were to stop there so long, was, that as it is a good Omen with the Indians when the King kills a Lion, so it is a very ill one, when he faileth, and they think that the State would run great hazard if they should not master him. Hence 'tis also that they make many Ceremonies upon the account of this Hunting; for they bring the dead Lion before the King in the general Assembly of the Omrabs, and after he hath been well view'd and exactly measur'd, 'tis recorded in the Archives, that such a King, at such a time, slew a Lion of such a bigness, of such hair, of so long and large teeth and claws, not omitting the least circumstances.

I shall here only add a word in reference to what is commonly said of the Opium, that the *As*s is made to swallow, viz. That one of the chief Hunters assur'd me, that it was but a tale of the vulgar, and that the Lion slept sufficiently without it, when he had his belly full.

Now to return to our march; when the great Rivers, which in these quarters commonly have no Bridges, are to be pass'd, there are made two Boat-Bridges, about two or three hundred paces distant from one another; which they know well enough how to chain and fasten together. Upon them they cast earth and straw mingled together, which preventeth the sliding of the animals. The first passing upon, and the coming from it are only dangerous, because, that besides the great croud, which then commonly throngeth, and the great confusion and embarasment, it often happens that pits or holes are made when 'tis moving earth; and then you shall have Horses and burthen'd Oxen tumble upon one another, over whom people do pass with an incredible disorder; which would be yet greater, if all were to pass in one day: But ordinarily the King encampeth but half a League from the Bridge, where he stays a day or two, and he never almost encampeth farther than half a League from the River on the other side of the Bridge, that so the Army may have at least three days and three nights to pass more conveniently,

Lastly, as to the number of people that is found in the Army, it is not so easie a thing to determine it. It is so differently spoken of, that one knows not what to judge of it. What I can tell you of it in the general, that is most probable, is this: That in this march there were at least, as to Souldiers and others, an hundred thousand Horsemen, and above an hundred and fifty thousand Animals, as Horses, Mules or Elephants; that there were near fifty thousand Camels, and almost as many Oxen or Ases, that serve to carry the grain, and other provisions of these poor people of the Bazars, their wives and children: For they lugg all with them, as our Bobemians do. Upon this measure you may reckon pretty near the number of the serving people, supposing that nothing is there done but by the force of servants, and that I, who am but in the rank of a Cavalier of two Horses, can hardly do my business with less than three men: Some say, that in the whole Army, there is scarce less than between three or four hundred thousand persons. Others reckon more; others less. No body ever told them to determine the precise number. I can say nothing of certainty, but only that 'tis a prodigious and almost incredible number; but then you are to imagine, that 'tis all Dehli, the Capital City, that marcheth, because that all the Inhabitans of that Town, living upon the Court and the Army, are obliged to follow them, especially when the voyage is to be long, as this; or else they must starve.

The difficulty is to know, whence and how so great an Army can subsist in the Field, so vast a number of people and beasts. For that, we must only suppose (which is very true) that the Indians live very soberly, and observe a very simple diet, and that of all this great number of Cavaliers there is not the tenth, or not the twentieth man, that in his march eats flesh: provided they have their Kichery, that is, their mixture of Rice and of other legums, upon which they pour butter when they are boyled, they are content. We are also to know, that Camels endure labour, hunger and thirst extremely well, live upon a little, and eat almost any thing, and that as soon as the Army encampeth any where, the Camel-drivers let them go into the field to brouze, where they eat whatever they light upon. Besides, that the Merchants that entertain Bazars in Debli, are obliged to entertain them in the field: and that all the small Merchants, that keep shop in the Bazars of Debli, keep them also in the Army, either by force, or out of necessity; and lastly, that as to Forage, all these poor people go roving up and down every where in the Village, to buy what they can get, and to gain something by it; and their great and common refuge is, with a kind of Trowel to raspe or knock down whole fields, to beat and wash what they have there gotten, and so to carry it to sell to the Army, which they do sometimes very dear and sometimes very Cheap; I forgot to mention one thing that's remarkable, viz. that the King enters into the Camp, now on one side, then on another; and that to day he passeth near the Tents of certain Omrabs, and to morrow near those of others. Which he doth not without design; for the Omrabs, which he passeth by so near, are obliged to meet him, and to make him some small present or other; so that some will present him with twenty Roupies of Gold, which maketh thirty Pistols; others with fifty, and so others in proportion, according to their generosity, and the greatness of their pay.

For the rest, you will excuse me, that I do not observe to you the Towns and Burroughs that are between Debli and Labor; I have seen in a manner none of them, for I went almost always cross the fields, and in the night, because my Agah was not placed in the middle of the Army, where often is the high way, but very forward in the right Wing. We went as well as we could by Star-light cross the fields to gain the right Wing of the Camp, without seeking for the high way; though sometimes we found our selves much perplexed, and in lieu of three or four Leagues, which is the ordinary distance of one encampment from one another, we sometimes made five or six; but when the day comes on, we soon found our selves where we should be.

THE THIRD LETTER.

A Description of Lahor, the Capital of Penjeab, or, The Kingdom of the Five Waters.

SIR,

IT is not without reason, that this Kingdom, of which Labor is the Capital City, is called Penjeab, or the Country of the Five Waters, because there are actually Five considerable Rivers coming down from those Mountains, within which the Kingdom of Kachemire is lock'd up, and that run cross this tract of Land to fall into the River Indus, discharging themselves together into the Ocean at Scymdi, towards the entry of the Persian Gulph. Whether Labor be that ancient Bucephalos, I decide not. Mean time, Alexander is sufficiently known here under the name of Sekan-der Filifous, that is, Alexander Son of Philip; but as to his Horse, they know it not. The City of Labor is built upon one of these Five Rivers, which is not less than our River Loire, and for which there is great need of a like bank, because it maketh great devastation, and often changeth its bed, and hath but lately retired it self from Labor for a quarter of a League; which very much incommodeth the Inhabitants. The Houses of Labor have this peculiar above those of Debli and Agra, that they are very high, but most of them are ruinous, because 'tis now more then twenty years that the Court is alwayes at Debli or at Agra, and that in these later years the rains have been so excessive, that they have overthrown many of them, whereby also much people hath been killed. 'Tis true, there remain still five or six considerable Streets, of which there are two or three that are above a League long; but in them also are many buildings found that fall down. The Kings Palace is no longer upon the River side, as it was formerly, because cause that the River hath left it. It is very high, and magnificent; yet those of Agra and Debli do much surpass it. It is now above two months that we are here, expecting the melting of the Snow of the mountains of Kachemire, for a more convenient passage into that Kingdom. But at length we are to depart to-morrow. The King hath been gone these two dayes. I have got a little Kachemirian Tent, which I bought yesterday. I was advised to do like others, and to leave here my ordinary Tent, which is big and heavy enough, because, they say, that between the mountains of Kachemire, whither we are now marching, it will be difficult to find room enough, and that the Camels not having place enough to pass, we shall be obliged to get our Baggage carried by Porters, and that so my large Tent would cost me much to carry. Adieu.

THE FOURTH LETTER.

SIR,

I Believed, that after we had overcome the heats of Maok, near Babel-mandel, I could defie those of the rest of the Earth, but since these four dayes that the Army left Labor, I find I come very short of my reckoning, and I have experimented to the hazard of my life, that it is not without reason, that the Indians themselves did apprehend the eleven or twelve dayes march of the Army, from Labor to Bamber, the entry of the mountains of Kachemire. I protest unto you, without any exaggeration, that the heats have been so excessive, that sometimes they have reduced me to extremity, insomuch that I knew not in the morning whether I should live till night. The cause of this extraordinary heat is, that the high mountains of Kachemire being on the North of our road, keep from us all the cool wind that might come and refresh us from that Quarter, and do reflect the sun-beams upon us, and leave the field burnt up and choking. But to what purpose, to play the Philosopher, and to seek reasons for that, which perhaps will kill me to-morrow.

THE FIFTH LETTER.

SIR,

I Passed yesterday one of the greatest Rivers of the Indies, called the Tebenau. The Excellency of its water, of which the great Omrabs make provision in lieu of that of Ganges: (whereof they have drunk hitherto) keeps me from believing this to be some River to pass to Hell, rather than to Kachemire, where they would make us believe we shall find Snow and Ice: For I find it grow worse and worse every day, and that the more we advance, the more heat we feel. 'Tis true that I pass'd the Bridge at Noon-day; but I almost knew not, which was best, to march in the field, or to keep ones self stuff'd up under a Tent: At least, I have succeeded in my design, which was, to pass the Bridge with ease, whilst all men did repose themselves, expecting to leave the Camp towards evening when the Heat is not so violent; whereas if I had staid as the rest did, some mischief perhaps might have befallen me. For it hath been, I hear, the most terrible confusion, and the greatest disorder that ever was in any the like former passage from Debli; the entring upon the first Boat, and the going off from the last, having been made very difficult, because it was meer moving sand, which as people marched upon it, and stirr'd it, did slide away into the water, and left a pit; insomuch that a great number of Camels, Oxen and Horses were in the crowd overthrown and trampled under foot, and store of blows distributed besides: There are ordinarily, upon such occasions, some Officers and Cavaliers of the Omrabs, who to make way for their Masters and their Baggage, are not sparing of them. My Navab hath lost one of his Camels with the Iron Oven it carried; which maketh me apprehend, I shall be reduced to the bread of Bazar. Farewel.

THE

THE SIXTH LETTER.

SIR,

IT is too much curiosity, 'tis folly, or at least temerity in an European to expose himself to such heats and dangerous marches; It is putting ones self into manifest peril of life. Yet notwithstanding, misfortune is good for something. Whilst we staid at Lahor, I was seized on by a Flux, and by gripings, which did very much incommode me; caused by my constant lying upon a Terrasse, and taking the cool of the night, as was use to do at Dehli without danger. But since we have been marching these eight or nine dayes, the sweat hath dissipated all those humours. My body is become a right Sieve, very dry, and I have no looner taken into my stomach a pint of water (for less will not serve our turn) but I see it at the same time issue out of my limbs like a dew to the very ends of my fingers. I believe I have this day drunk above ten pints. And this is some comfort, that one may drink of it as much as one lists without danger, provided it be good water.

The SEVENTH LETTER, to the same.

Written from the Camp of the Army, marching from Lahor to Kachemire, the tenth of March in the morning.

SIR,

THE Sun is but just now rising, yet he is intolerable; there is not a Cloud in the Sky, not a breath of Wind; my horses are spent, they have not seen a green Herb since we came out of Lahor; my Indians for all their black, dry, and hard Skin, sink under it. My face, hands and feet are peeled off, and my body is covered all over with pimples, that prick me as so many needles. Yesterday one of our poor Cavaliers, that had no Tent, was found dead at the foot of a small Tree, he had seized on. I doubt, whether I shall outlive this days journey; all my hope is in a little dry curdled Milk, which I am going to dilute with Water and Sugar, and some Limons, I have left, to make Limonade. Farewel; the Ink dryeth at the end of my Pen, and the Pen falls out of my hand. Farewell.

The EIGHTH LETTER, to the same.

Written from Bember, the Entry of the Mountains of Kachemire, after having two days encamped there. What Bember is; the change of carriages for the Mountains; the incredible number of Porters, and the order observed in the Army.

SIR,

WE are at length arriv'd at Bember, the foot of a steep, black, and burn'd Mountain, and we are encamped in the channel of a large Torrent dried up, full of sand and stones burning hot; It is like an hot Oven: And if it were not for the shower of Rain, we had this morning, and for the curdled Milk, the Limons, and the Fowl brought to us from the mountains, I know not what would have become of me, and you would perhaps never have seen this Letter. But, God be thanked, I feel the Air a little cooler; my Stomach, Strength and Tongue are returned. So then take this account of our new kind of march and trouble.

Yesterday the King first of all, together with Rauchenara-Begum, and the other Women of the Seraglio, the Raja Ragnat that performs the Office of the Vizir, and Fasel-kan the High Steward, went away from this burning place, and last night the great Hunting-master departed with some of the greatest and most necessary Officers of the Royal Family, and many considerable Women. This night 'tis our turn; my Navab Danech-mend-kan will go away, and Mahmet-Emir-kan, the Son of that famous Emir-jemla, of whom I have spoken so much in another place, will be of our Company; and so will Dianet-kan, our good friend, with his two Sons, and many other Omrabs, Rajabs and Mansib-dars: And after us, all the other Lords, that are bound for Kachemire, will be gone all in their turns, to avoid in these difficult and narrow ways of the mountains, the trouble and confusion, during these five days of marching between this place and Kachemire. All the rest of the Court, as Fedaykan, the great Master of the Artillery, three or four great Rajas, and many Omrabs, are to stay hereabout for a guard, during three or four months, until the King do return after the great heats are over. Some shall go to dress their Tents on the one side of the River Tchenau, others in the neighbouring Towns and Burroughs, and others will be obliged to camp here in this Fire of Bember.

The King for fear of starving this small Kingdom of Kachemire, first carries with him the least number of Women he can, the greatest Ladies, the best friends of Rauchenara-Begum, and those that are most necessary for service. Nor doth he carry more of the Omrabs and Militia than he needs must: And the Omrabs that have leave to come with him cannot take with them all the Cavaliers, but only 25 of 100, yet without comprehending therein the particular Officers of their Family. And that is to be religiously observ'd, because there is an Omrab upon the Guard at the entry of the Mountains, that reckons all that pass, one by one, and hinders the passing of that great number of Mansebdars and other Cavaliers, that would fain go and enjoy the cool Air of Kachemire; as also all those small Merchants and little people of Bazar that seek to gain a livelyhood. The King, for the carriage of necessaries and the Women of the Seraglio, taketh with him some of the strongest and best Elephants: These Beasts, though gross and unwieldy, are very sure-footed, and in ill way they march very warily, assuring themselves first of one foot before they remove the other. He taketh also some Mules with him; but Camels, the most necessary, he cannot make use of in this passage; these Mountains being too steep and craggy for their long shanked and stiff leggs: Porters must supply their places; and what number you think must there be, if the King alone, as they say, hath above six thousand for his occasions, and I, a private man, though I have left at Labor my ordinary Tent and much of my baggage, as every one hath done, even the King himself and the Omrabs, find my self obliged to have three of them? 'Tis believed, there are already no less here than fifteen thousand, partly of those which the Governour of Kachemire and the Rajas here about have compelled to be here, partly of those that come hither of their own accord out of the neighbouring Villages to earn something; for a man is obliged, following the Kings order, to give them ten Crowns for an hundred pound weight. 'Tis said, that, in all, there are above thirty thousand of them, without reckoning that a month ago the King and the Omrabs sent away some baggage before, and the Merchants, all sorts of Commodities.

THE NINTH LETTER.

An exact description of the Kingdom of Kachemire, and the present State of the Neighbouring Mountains; together with an Answer to five considerable Questions of a Friend.

SIR,

THE Histories of the Ancient Kings of Kachemire tell us, that all that Countrey was formerly nothing but a great Lake; and that there was an old Holy man, call'd Kacheb, that gave an outlet to the Waters by a Miraculous Cut he made in the Mountain of Baramoule. This may be seen in the Abridgment of these Histories, which Jehan-Guire caused to be made, and which I am translating out of the Persian Tongue. For my part, I would not deny, all this Land to have once been cover'd with Water; the like is affirmed of Thessaly, and some other Countries; but 'tis hard to believe, that this opening is the work of one man, because the Mountain is very big and very high. I should rather think, that some great Earthquake (those parts being subject enough to them) had open'd some Cavern under ground, which the Mountain did sink into, after the same manner as the opening of Babel-Mandel is made (if it be true what the Arabians of that Countrey say of it) and as whole Towns and Mountains have been seen to be swallow'd up in great Lakes.

However it be, Kachemire is no Lake now, but a very fair Campagne, diversified by many little Hillocks, about 30 Leagues long, and 10, or 12 Leagues broad; situated in the extreame of Indostan, North of Labor, lock'd up within the Mountains of Caucasus, between those of the Kings of the great Tibet, the little Tibet, and the Raja Gamon, its next Neighbours.

The first Mountains surrounding it, I mean those that are next to the Plain, are of a middle height, all green with Trees or Pasture, full of all sorts of Cattel, as Cows, Sheep, Sheep, Goats, Horses; and of Game of divers kinds, as Partridges, Hares, Gazelles, and of some Animals yielding Musk. There are also abundance of Bees; and (which is rare in the Indies) there are found no Serpents, Tigers, Bears, Lions, but very seldom. So that it may be said, that these are not only very innocent Mountains, but flowing with Milk and Honey, as were those of the Land of Promise.

Beyond those middle-siz'd Mountains, there rise others, very high ones, the top of which are alwayes cover'd with Snow, and appear above the ordinary Clouds and Mists, alwayes calm and clear as well as Mount Olympus.

Out of all these Mountains do issue innumerable Sources and Rivulets on all sides, which the Inhabitants know how to convey to their Rice-fields, and even through raised Ground unto their little Hillocks; and which, after they have made a thousand other little Rivulets, and a thousand Cascata's every where, come at last to meet, and to make a very fair River, that carrieth Boats as big as our River of Seine, and after it hath gently turn'd about the Kingdom, and pass'd through the midst of the Capital City, finds its out-let at Baramoule between two steep Rocks, and having afterwards taken in many small Rivers that come down from the Mountains, falls about Atex into the River Indus.

All these Rivulets descending from the Mountains, make the Plain and all those Hillocks so fair and fruitful, that one would take this whole Kingdom for some great Ever-green Garden, intermixed with Villages and Burroughs, discovering themselves between Trees, and diversified by Meadows, Fields of Rice, Corn, and divers other Legumes, of Hemp, and Saffron; all interlaced with Ditches full of Water, with Channels, with small Lakes and Rivulets here and there. Up and down every where are also seen some of our European Plants, Flowers, and all sorts of our Trees, as Apples, Pears, Prunes, Apricots, Nuts, Vines. The particular Gardens are full of Melons, Water-melons, Skirrets, Beets, Radishes, all sorts of our Pot-herbs, and of some we have not.

'Tis true, there are not so many sorts of Fruit as with us, nor are they so excellent as ours; but I believe that that is not the fault of the Soil, but that, if they had as good Gardeners as we, knowing to cultivate and graft Trees, to chuse proper places and proper Stocks, and to send for Grafts from Forreign Countries, they would have as many and as good as we; because among that number of divers sorts, which I often caused to be brought to me, I have frequently met with very excellent ones.

The Capital City, which is of the same name with that of the Kingdom, is without walls; 'tis three quarters of a League long, and half a League broad; scituate in a Plain, about two Leagues distant from Mountains, which seem to make as 'twere a Semi-Circle; and standing upon a Lake of sweet Water of four or five miles in compass, which is made up of Live-Springs, and of Rivulets running down the Mountains, and disgorgeth it self by a Navigable Channel into the River which passeth through the midst of the Town. This River hath in the Town two wooden Bridges over it for communication. Most Houses are of Wood, but well built, and of two or three Stories high; not as if they had not very good Free Stone there (many old Idol-Temples ruined, and other Buildings made of it, being yet to be seen;) but the abundance of Wood, easily descending from the mountains by little Rivers, which it is cast into, maketh people find that way of Building turn to better account. The Houses that stand upon the River have almost all of them their little Garden, lying upon the Water; which maketh a very pleasant Perspective, especially in the Spring and Summer, when men walk on the River-side. The other Houses that stand not upon the River, have also almost all of them some Garden; and there are a good number of such, that have a Channel answering to the Lake, and a little Boat to go and divert themselves upon it.

In one end of the Town there appears an Hill, loose from all the rest, which maketh another very agreeable Perspective, because on its Declivity there stand very fine Houses with Gardens, and on the top a Mosquee and an Heremitage well built with a Garden, and store of fine green Trees: And 'tis upon the account of these Trees and Gardens, that in the Language of the Country 'tis called Haryperbet, as if you should say, the Mountain of Verdure.

Opposite to this Hill there is seen another, on which there is also a Mosquee, but a little one, together with a Garden, and a very ancient Building, which seems to have been a Temple of Idols, though they call it Taht Souliman, that is, the Throne of Solomon, because that Soloman, as the Mahumetans say, caused it to be built when he came to Kachemire; but how they will prove, that Solomon made this Voyage, I know not.

The Lake hath this peculiar, that 'tis full of little Isles, which are as many Gardens of Pleasure, that appear all green in the midst of the Water, by reason of those fruit-bearing Trees, and of the Walks, on both sides set with Arbors, and because they are surrounded with large-leaved Aspen-trees, standing at two foot distance from one another; the biggest whereof may be clasped about, but as tall as Masts of great Ships, having only a tuft of Branches at the top like Palm-trees.

Beyond the Lake, upon the side of the Hills, there is nothing but Houses and Gardens of pleasure, the place having been found wonderfully proper for it, as being in a very fine Air, in the view of the Lake, the Isles, and the Town, and full of Springs and Rivulets.

The most admirable of all these Gardens is that of the King, which is called Chab-limar. From the Lake, one enters into it by a great Canal, border'd with great green Turfs. This Canal is above five hundred common paces long, and runs 'twixt two large Allees of Poplars: It leadeth to a great Cabinet in the midst of the Garden, where begins another Canal far more magnificent, which runs with a little rising unto the end of the Garden. This Canal is paved with large Free-Stone; its sloping side cover'd with the same; and in the midst of it, there is a long Row of Jets of Water, from 15 to 15 foot. There are also, from space to space, great Rounds of Water serving for Store-houses, whence many Jets of Water, variously figured, do spring up: And this Canal ends at another great Cabinet, which is almost like the first.

These Cabinets, which are in a manner made like Domes, situate in the middle of the Canal, and encompassed with Water, and consequently between those two great Allees of Poplars, have a Gallery that reigneth round about, and four Gates opposite to one another; two of which do respect the Allees, with two Bridges to pass over, one on one side, and the other on the other; the other two look upon the opposite Canals. Each Cabinet consists of a great Chamber in the midst of four other lesser Chambers, which are in the four Corners: All is painted and gilded within, the great Chamber as well as the little ones, having Sentences with great Letters in the Persian Tongue written upon them. The four Gates are very rich; they are made of great Stones with two Columns, taken from those ancient Idol-Temples, ruin'd by Chah-Jehan. The price of these great Stones and Pillars is not well known, nor what kind of Stone they be; though it appears sufficiently, that 'tis a sort of precious Stone, finer than Marble or Porphyre.

From all that hath been said, one may easily conjecture, that I am somewhat charmed with Kachemire, and that I pretend, there is perhaps nothing in the world like it for so small a Kingdom. It deserves very well to reign over all those neighbouring Mountains as far as Tartary, and over all Indostan, as far as Ceylon, as once it did; And 'tis not without some cause, that the Mogols call it the Terrestrial Paradise of the Indies; that Eckbar took so much pains to make himself Master of it; and that his Son Jehan-Guire became so amorous thereof, that he could not leave it; and often said, he would rather lose all his Empire, than Kachemire. And from the time that we arrived there, all the Poets, both Kachemirians and Mogolians, strove to make Poems to the praise of this little Kingdom, to present them to Aureng-Zebe, who gladly received and rewarded them. I remember, that among others, there was one, that exaggerating the extraordinary height of the Mountains encompassing it, and rendring it almost inaccessible any where, said, that the top of these Mountains was the cause, that the Heavens did retire into the Figure of a Vault, as we see it; and that Kachemire being the Master-piece of Nature, and the King of the Kingdoms of the World, it was futable it should be hard of access, and so enjoy an undisturbed peace and tranquility, commanding all, and not being liable to be commanded by any. He added, that the reason why Nature had surrounded it with Mountains, of which some, namely the highest and most remote, were alwaies white and covered with Snow, the lowermost and the next to the Plain, all green and covered with Wood, was, because that the King of the Kingdoms of the World was to wear the most precious Crown, the top whereof was to be of Diamonds, and the bottom of Emeralds. If the Poet had added (said I to my Navab Danech-mend-kan; who was willing to make me admire all those Poems) that all those great Countries of Mountains that environ it, as the little Tibet, the State of the Raja Gamon, Kachguer, and Serenaguer, are to be comprehended under the Kingdom of Kachemire; since, according to the History of the Countrey, they once depended from it, and consequently that the River Ganges on the one side, that of Indus on the other, the Chenab on a third, and the Gemma on the fourth, do issue out of Kachemire; that these Rivers, with so many others that run thence, do countervail the Gihon, the Pison, and the two others; and if at last he had concluded, that this was certainly the true Terrestrial Paradise, rather than that in Armenia, this would have much enhanced the worth of all his Commendations. Gen. 2. 11, 12, 13, 14.

Sere-

The Kachemirians have the Reputation of being a very witty people, much more intelligent and dexterous than the Indians, and as fit for Poësie and Sciences as the Perfians. Besides, they are very industrious and willing to take pains; they make Palekys, Trunks, Bed-steds, Standishes, Boxes, Spoons, and many other pieces, and all of good and very handsome Workmanship, sent over all the Indies. They know how to give it a good Vernish, and so dexterously to counterfeit the Veins of a certain Wood that hath very fine ones, by applying Gold-strings upon it, that there is nothing finer. But what is peculiar and considerable in them, and which draws the Trade and Silver into their Countrey, is that prodigious quantity of Stuffs call'd Chales, which they work there, and employ their little Childeren in. These Chales are certain kinds of Stuff an Ell and a half long, and about an Ell broad, which are embrodered at each end with a kind of Embroidery about a Foot large. The Mogols and Indians, both Men and Women, wear of them in Winter upon their Heads, passing them over their left Shoulder like a Mantle. They make two sorts of them; one, of the wool of the Countrey, which is finer than that of Spain; the other, of a Wool, or rather of an Hair, they call Tonz, taken from the Breast of a wild Goat of the great Tibet. These latter are of a far greater price than the former; neither is there any Castor so soft and delicate. The mischief is, the worms get easily into it, unless you have a particular care often to unfold and air them. I have seen of these which the Omrahs purposely caused to be made, which cost an hundred and fifty Roupies: Of the others that are made of the Wool of the Countrey, I have seen none that costs above fifty.

'Tis observed of these Chales, that, work them never so carefully in Patna, Agra, and Labor, you shall never make the Stuff so soft and fine, as in Kachemire; which is commonly imputed to the particular Water of the Countrey: As at Maslipatan they make those fine stuffs, which become fairer by washing.

The Kachemirians are also famous for their good complexion. They look as well as our Europeans, and have nothing of a Tartarian flat-nos'd and little ey'd Face, as those of Kachguer, and most of the people of the great Tibet. The Women especially are very beautiful; and therefore all Strangers, that are new-comers to the Court of Mogol, are furnished from thence, that so they may have Children whiter than the Indians, and which by these means may pass for true Mogols. And certainly, if one may judge of the Beauty of the retired Women by that of the common People, met with in the Streets, and seen up and down in the Shops, we must believe, that there are very handsome ones. At Labor, where they have the repute of being proper and slender, and the handsomest of the Brown Lasses of the Indies (as really they are) I used an Art which is ordinary among the Mogols, which is, to follow some Elephants, especially those that are richly harnessed; for as soon as those Women hear the two Bells hanging on the sides of those Beasts, they all put their heads out of the Windows. The same Trick I used here; and I made also use of another, in which I succeeded very well; it was devised by an old and famous Master of a School, whom I had taken to help me to understand a Persian Poet. He made me buy store of Confits; and he being known and welcom every where, carried me into above 15 houses, telling them that I was his Kinsman, newly come out of Persia, that I was rich and to be married: As soon as we came into a house, he distributed Confits to the Children, and presently all came about us, Women and Children, great and small, to have their share, or to be seen. This curiosity alone cost me many a good Roupy; but it confirm'd me, that in Kachemire there are as fair Faces, as in any place of Europe.

There remains only to impart unto you what I observed most considerable between the Mountains, from Bember hither, (with which perhaps I should have begun;) and after having given you account of some other little Voyages I have been obliged to make in diver sparts of this Kingdom, you will learn all I could come to know of the rest of the circumjacent Mountains.

Con-

Concerning therefore first our Voyage from Bember hither, it seem'd to me surprising enough, to find my self from the first night that we parted from Bember, and entred into the Mountains, pass from a Torrid to a Temperate Zone: For, we had no sooner mounted this dreadful Wall of the World, I mean, this high, steep, black and bald Mountain, of Bember, but that in descending on the other side, we found an Air that was pretty tollerable, fresh, gentle and temperate. But that which surpris'd me more in these Mountains, was, to find my self, in a trice, transported out of the Indies into Europe. For, seeing the Earth covered with all our plants and shrubs, except Isop, Thyme, Marjoram and Rosemary, I imagin'd I was in some of our Mountains of Auvergne, in the midst of a Forest of all our kinds of Trees, Pines, Oaks, Elms, Plane-trees. And I was the more astonish'd because in all those burning Fields of Indostan, whence I came, I had seen almost nothing of all that.

Among other things relating to Plants, this surpris'd me, that one and a half days journey from Bember I found a Mountain, that was cover'd with them on both sides, but with this difference, that on the side of the Mountain that was Southerly, toward the Indies, there was a mixture of Indian and European Plants, and on that which was exposed to the North I observ'd none but European ones; as if the former had participated of the Air and temper of Europe and the Indies, and the other had been merely European.

As to the Trees, I admir'd this natural course of Generations and Corruptions: Below in these bottoms, where perhaps no man ever was, I saw hundreds that were falling, or fallen, one upon another, dead and half rotten of age; and other young and verdant ones growing out of the foot of those that were dead: Some of them also I saw burnt, whether it was from Lightning, or that in the heat of Summer they had taken fire by rubbing themselves against one another, when they were agitated by some hot and impetuous wind; or, as the Country-people say, that they take fire of themselves, when they are grown old and dry.

I admir'd also those natural Cascata's of water, which we found between those Rocks. We met, among others, one of them so wonderful, that doubtless, it cannot be parallel'd. One seeth a far off from the side of an high Mountain, running down a Torrent of water in a Channel cover'd with Trees, and precipitate it self in a trice to the bottom of a steep Rock of a stupendous height, with a noise that is able to strike one deaf, like a Cataract. There was erected near it, a Theatre, upon a Rock, which Jehan-Guire had caus'd purposely to be made plain, that the Court passing, might there repose themselves, and from thence with conveniency behold this admirable Work-man-ship of Nature; which as well as those old Trees, I was just now speaking of, seems to resemble something of great Antiquity, and of the first production of the World.

All these divertisements were blended with an odd accident. On the day, that the King went up the Mountain of Pire-penjalé, which is the highest of all, and whence one begins to discover a far off the Country of Kachemire; on that day, I say, that the King ascended this Mountain, being followed by a long row of Elephants, upon which sat the Women in Mikdembers, and Embarys; one of those Elephants was frighted by beholding, as the Indians would have it, such a long and steep ascent, and fell back upon him that was next, and he upon the next, and so on to the fifteenth, so that not one of them being able to turn in this way, which was extremely rude and steep, they all tumbled into the precipice. It was good fortune for those poor Women, that the precipice it self was not very steep, so that there were but three or four of them kill'd; but the fifteen Elephants remain'd upon the place. When these bulky Masses do once fall under those vast burthens they are loaden with, they never rise again, though the way be never so fair. We saw them two days after, in passing by, and I observ'd some of them yet stirring their Trunk. This accident put the whole Army, which had march'd four days along the Mountains in file, into great disorder, because to recover these Women and all that wreck, a stop was made for the remainder of that day and all the night, every one being necessitated to stop where he was, because it was in many places impossible to advance or go back, and none had near him those Porters that carried his Tent and Viſuals. As for my self, I was not in the worst condition, having found means to creep out of the way, and to take the conveniency of a small place to lye down in, for my self and my Horse. And, to my good luck, one of my servants that follow'd me, had a little bread, which we shared together. I remember, it was there where stirring some stones we found a great black Scorpion, which a young Mogol of my acquaintance took, and squeezed it in his own hand, and then in the hand of my servant, and at last in mine, without our being stung by him. This young Cavalier said, that he had charm'd him, as he had done many others before, by a passage of the Alcoran, which he would not teach me, because, he said, the power of charming would pass to me and leave himself, as it had passed to him by quitting his Teacher.

In traversing this same Mountain of Pire-penjale, where the Elephants tumbled down, there occurred, those things which call'd to my mind some of my former philosophical thoughts. The first was, that in less than an hour we felt Summer and Winter; for in ascending we did sweat gross drops, all men going on foot in a burning Sun; and when we came to the top of the Mountain, we yet found the Icy Snow, that had been cut to open the way; there was a Frost upon a misting Rain, and there blew a wind so cold, that all people shook and run away, especially the silly Indians, who never had seen Ice or Snow, nor felt such a cold.

The second was, that in less than two hundred paces I met with two quite contrary winds; one from the North, which blew in my face ascending, especially when I came near the top, and another from the South, which blew against my back in descending; as if this Hill had protruded exhalations out of its bowels from all sides, which coming forth had caused, a wind that had descended and taken its course in those two opposite dales.

The third was the meeting an old Hermit, that had lived on the top of this Mountain since the time of Jehan-Guire, and whose Religion was not known; though it was said, that he did miracles, caused strange thunders when he would, and raised storms of Hail, Snow, Rain and Wind. He look'd somewhat savage-like, having a long and large white Beard uncombed. He asked alms somewhat fiercely; suffer'd us to take up water in earthen cups, he had ranged upon a great stone; made signe with his hand, importing that we should speedily march away, and grumbled at those that made a noise, because, said he to me, (when I was come into his Cave, and had a little sweetned his looks with half a Roupay, which with much humility I put into his hand) a noise raiseth furious storms and tempests. Aureng-Zebe, said he further, did very well in following my counsel, and not permitting to make a noise: Chah-Jebani always took care of the same; but Jehan Guire once mocking at it, and causing Trumpets and Cymbals to sound, was like to have perished here.

In reference to the little Voyages I have made in divers parts of this Kingdom, behold the particulars I took notice of as I passed. We were no sooner arrived at Kachemire, but my Navah Danech-mend-kan sent me, together with one of his Horse-men for a Convoy, and a Country-man, to one of the extremities of this Kingdom, three small days journey from hence, upon the relation made him, that this was the very time to see the Wonders (for so they speak of them) of a Spring that is thereabout. These Wonders are, that in the month of May, the time when the Snow begins but to melt, this Fountain, for about the space of fifteen days, regularly flows and stops thrice a day, at break of day, at noon and at night: Its flowing ordinarily lasts three quarters of an hour, more or less, and that plentifully enough, to fill a square receptacle, having steps to go down to it, and being about ten or twelve foot broad, and as many foot deep. After the first fifteen days, its course begins to be less regular and less copious; and at length, after a month or thereabout, it quite stops and runs no more for the rest of the year, unless it be, that during some plentiful and long rains, it flows incessantly and without Rule, as other Fountains do. The Gentiles have on the side of the Receiver a little Temple of the Idol of Brare, which is one of their false Deities; and thence it is that they call this Fountain Send-Brary, as as if you should say, Water of Brare; and that thither they come from all parts in pilgrimage, to bathe and sanctifie themselves in this miraculous water. Upon the origin of this Water they make many fables, which I shall not recite to you, because I find not the least shadow of truth in them. During the five or six days of my stay there, I did what possible I could to find the reason of this Wonder. I did attentively consider the situation of the Mountain, at the foot of which this Spring is found: I went to the very top with great pains, searching and prying every where. I observed that it extends it self in length from North to South; that 'tis sever'd from other Mountains, which yet are very near to it; that it is in the form of an Asses back; that its top, which is very long, hath not much more than an hundred paces where it is largest; that one of the side of the Mountain, which is cover'd with nothing but green grass, is expos'd to the East, yet so that the Sun comes not to shine on't before eight a clock in the morning, because of the other opposite Mountains; and lastly, that the other side, which is expos'd to the West, is covered with Trees and Bushes. All this being considered, I did imagine, that the heat of the Sun, together with the particular situation and the internal disposition of the Mountain, might very well be the cause of this pretended Miracle; that the Morning Sun, coming briskly to strike on the side opposite thereto, heats it, and melts part of the frozen waters, which during the Winter, when all was covered with Snow, had insinuated themselves into the inner parts of the earth of this Mountain; that these waters penetrating, and by little and little running down unto certain beds of quick rock, which retain and convey them toward the Spring-head, cause the flowing of the Fountain at Noon; That the same Sun, raised to the South, and leaving that other side, now growing cold, for to strike with its beams as 'twere perpendicularly, the top, doth also melt other frozen waters, which likewise run down by little and little as the other, but by other turnings, unto those rocky beds, and cause the Flowing at Night: and that lastly, the Sun heating likewise this Western side, produceth the like effect, and causes the third flux in the Morning; which is slower than the two others, either because this Western side is remote from the Eastern where the Source is; or because that being covered with wood, it is not so soon heated; or by reason of the cold of the night. Now I found this my reasoning the more cogent, forasmuch as it seems to agree with what is affirmed, that in the first days the water comes in greater abundance than in the latter; and that at last it stops, and runs not at all; as if indeed in the beginning there were of those frozen waters greater plenty in the earth than at last. It seems also to agree with what is observed, that there are some days in the beginning, in which one flux is found more abounding than the other, and sometimes more at noon than in the evening or morning, or in the morning more than at noon; it commonly falling out so that some days there are hotter than others, or that some clouds arise which interrupt the equality of the heat, and consequently make the flux unequal.

Returning from Send-brary I turn'd a little aside from the road to go and lye at Achiavel, which is an House of pleasure of the ancient Kings of Kachemire, and at present of the Great Mogol. That which most adorns it, is a Fountain, the water where of diffuseth it self on all sides round about that Fabrick (which is not despicable) and into the Gardens by an hundred Canals. It breaks out of the Earth, as if by some violence it ascended up from the bottom of a Well, and that with such an abundance as might make it to be called a River rather than a Fountain. The water of it is admirably good, and so cold that one can hardly endure to hold ones hand in it. The Garden it self is very fine, there being curious Walks in it, and store of Fruit-bearing Trees, of Apples, Pears, Prunes, Apricocks and Cherries, and many jets of waters of various figures, and Ponds replenish'd with Fish, together with a very high Cascata of water, which by its fall maketh a great Nape of thirty or forty paces long, which hath an admirable effect, especially in the night, when under this Nape there is put a great number of little Lamps fitted in holes purposely made in the Wall; which maketh a curious shew.

From Achiavel I went yet a little more out of my way to pass through another Royal Garden, which is also very beautiful, and hath the same pleasantness with that of Achiavel, but this is peculiar in it, that in one of its Ponds there are Fishes that come when they are called, and when you cast bread to them; the biggest whereof have golden Rings in their Noses, with inscriptions about them, which they say that renowned Nour-Mahle, the Wife of Jehan-Guire, the Grandfather of Aurang-Zebe, caused to be fastened in them.

I was no sooner returned from Send-brary, but Danech-mend-kan, well satisfied with my Voyage, made me undertake one more, to see another sure Miracle, as he call'd it, which should be capable to make me soon change my Religion, and turn Musselman. Go, saith he, to Boramoulay, which is not further from hence than Send-brary; there you shall find a Mosque in which is the Tomb of one of our Pires or Saints, which still every day works Miracles in curing sick people, that flock thither from all parts: It may be, that you will believe nothing of all those miraculous Cures you shall see; but you will at least believe one Miracle, which is done every day, and you may see with your own eyes: And that is of a big round stone, which the strongest man is hardly hardly able to raise in the least from the ground, but yet eleven men, by praying to that Saint, lift up, as if it were a straw, with the end of their eleven fingers, without any trouble at all, and without being sensible of any weight. Hereupon I began this journey also, accompanied with my Horseman and the Countrey-fellow, and being arrived at Baramoulay, I found it a place pleasant enough. The Mosque is sufficiently well built, the Tomb of the pretended Saint well adorn'd, and round about it there was store of people of great devotion, who said they were sick. Near the Mosque there was a Kitchen with large Kettles full of Flesh and Rice, which, in my opinion, was the Magnet drawing the sick people thither, and the Miracle that cured them. On the other side was the Garden and the Chambers of the Mullahs, who with great conveniency, and delight spend their life there, under the shadow of the miraculous Sanctity of this Pire, which they are not wanting to celebrate: But as I am always very unhappy in such occasions, he did no Miracle that day upon any of the sick. As for the great Stone, which was the business I came for; there were Eleven Cheats of these Mullahs that crowded together in a round, and by their long Vests hindred me from seeing well in what manner they took and lifted it up, yet said all, that they held it only with the end of one of their fingers, and that it was as light as a feather. For my part, who had my eyes open, and look'd on narrowly, I perceived well enough, that they took great pains, and they seem'd to me, that they used also the thumb, which they held very firm upon the second finger bent and closed: But yet I was not wanting to cry out as well as the Mullahs and all the other assistants, Karamet, Karamet, Miracle, Miracle; giving at the same time a Roupy for the Mullahs, and with great shew of devotion praying them to favour me with suffering me once to be one of the Eleven lifters up of the Stone. They did hesitate long before they resolv'd to permit it; but having given them another Roupy, and made them believe I was perswaded of the truth of the Miracle, one of the Eleven gave me his place, they doubtless imagining, that Ten of them joyned together would be sufficient to do the business, though I should not add much to it, and that they would so range themselves and crowd together, that I should perceive nothing of their imposture. But they found themselves egregiously deceived, when they saw, that the Stone, which I would not support but only by the end of my finger, alwayes inclined and fell to my side, untill at length I found it necessary to put my thumb to it, and to hold it with my finger as they did; and then we lifted it up from the earth, yet not without much pain. Notwithstanding which, when I saw that they all looked upon me askint, not knowing what to make of me, I still went on crying like the rest, Karamet, Miracle, Miracle, and over and above casting to them another Roupy to secure my self from being ston'd; and stealing away from among the crowd, I presently took horse, without eating or drinking, and left the Saint and the Miracles to those that had faith enough to believe them: Observing, as I pass'd along, that famous opening, which is an outlet to all the waters of this Kingdom, of which I have already said something in the beginning of this Book.

I left my way again, to approach to a great Lake, which I saw a far off, thorough the middle whereof passeth the River that runs to Baramoulay. It is full of Fish, especially Eels, and covered with Ducks and wild Fowl, and many other River Fowl. 'Tis where the Governour comes in Winter, at which time 'tis covered with those creatures, to divert himself with fowling. In the midst of this Lake there is an Eremitage with its little Garden, which, as they say, doth miraculously float upon the water, and where the Eremite passeth his Life without ever going from it. Besides which, they make a thousand other ridiculous tales of it, which are not worth reciting, unless perhaps you will except what some have told me. That it was one of those ancient Kings of Kachemire, who out of curiosity caus'd this Eremitage to be built upon thick beams fastned to one another.

Thence I went to find out a Fountain, which hath something that's rare enough in it; bubbling up gently, and rising with some little impetuosity, and making small bubbles of air, and carrying with it, to the top, some small Sand that is very fine, which goeth away again as it came, the Water becoming still, a moment after it, without ebullition, and without bringing up Sand; and soon after beginning afresh as before; and so continuing its motion by intervals, which are not regular. But the Wonder, as they say, consists in this, that the least noise, made by speaking, or by knocking ones foot against the ground, moveth the water, and maketh it run and bubble as was said. Yet I found plainly, that speaking or knocking availeth nothing to produce that effect, and that it moveth as well when one saith nothing, as when one speaks or knocketh. But now, to give the true cause of it, that requireth more thinking than I have bestow'd upon it; unless one should say, that the Sand, by falling down again, obstructeth the narrow Channel of this small and weak Spring, until the water, being closed up and kept in, it make an effort to remove and raise again the Sand, and so to disengage it self; or rather, that some wind, pent in the Channel of the Spring, rises by turns, as it comes to pass in artificial Fountains.

After we had considered this Fountain, we entred into the Mountains to see a great Lake, which hath Ice in Summer, and looketh like a little icy Sea, having heaps of Ice, made and unmade by the Winds. Afterwards we passed through a certain place, call'd Seng-safed, that is, White stone; which is famous for being full all the Summer long of all sorts of Flowers like a Parterre, and for this observation, that when much people goes thither, making a great noise and much stirring the air, there presently falls a shower of rain. This is certain, that when, some years since, Chah-Jehan went thither, he was in danger of perishing by the great and extraordinary rain survening, though he had commanded, they should make the least noise they could. This agreed with what my Eremite of Pirepengale had told me.

And now I was going to a Grotta of odd congelations, which is two days journey from thence; but I received news, that after my so long absence my Navah was troubled about me.

As to the condition of the neighbouring Mountains round about, I have, since our being here, done what possibly I could to inform my self about them; but I have profited but little, for want of people that are intelligent and observe things; yet notwithstanding I will not omit to relate to you what I have learn'd of it.

The Merchants of Kachemire, that go every year from mountain to mountain, gathering fine Wool to make those Stuffs I have above been speaking of, do all agree, that between the mountains, which still depend from Kachemire, there are found very fine places of good land, and that amongst others there is one place, which pays it tribute in Leather and Wooll, sent for by the Governour every year; and where the Women are extream handsome, chaste and laborious; that there is also another farther off from Kachemire, which also pays its tribute in Leather and Wooll, and hath very pretty, though but small, fertile plains, and most pleasant vallies, abounding in Corn, Rice, Apples, Pears, excellent Apricocks and Melons; as also in Raisins yielding very good Wine; the Inhabitants whereof have sometimes refused to pay the tribute, relying upon the difficulty of access to their Country; but there hath alwayes been a way found to enter and to reduce them. The same Merchants agree also, that among the other Mountains, that are more distant and depend no more from Kachemire, there are likewise found very pleasant Countrys, peopled with very handsom Whites, but such as almost never come out from their homes; of which some have no Kings, nor, as far as could be perceived, any Religion; only that some of them do eat no Fish, counting them unclean.

I shall add here, what I was lately told by a good ancient man, that had married a Wife of the ancient Family of the Kings of Kachemire. He said, that when Jehan-Guire made a strict inquiry after all those that were of that Family, he was afraid to be taken, and thereupon fled with three Servants cross these mountains, not knowing in a manner whither he went; that thus wandring he came at last into a very fine small Canton, where when it came to be known who he was, the inhabitants came to visit him and brought him presents, and that, to make up their kindness, they brought to him in the evening one of the beautifullest of their young Maidens, praying him that he would bed with her, because they desired very much to have issue of his Blood: That passing from thence into another Canton, not much distant from the former, the people likewise came to see him, and to present him; but that the kindness of the evening was far different from the other, in that these inhabitants brought to him their own Wives, arguing that those of the other Canton were Beasts, because that his Blood would not remain in their house, since the Maidens would carry the Child with them into the house of him, to whom they should be married.

I may further add, that some years since, there being a dissention risen between the family of the King of the little Tibet, which borders upon Kachemire, one of the pretenders, to the Crown did secretly call for the assistance of the Governour of Kachemire, who who by order of Chah-Jehan gave him powerful succours, and put to death or flight all the other pretenders, and left this man in the possession of the Country, on condition of an annual Tribute to be paid in Crystal, Musk and Wool. This petty King could not forbear coming to see Aureng-Zebe, bringing with him a present of those things I just now named; but he had so pitiful a Train, That I should never have taken him for what he was. My Navab entertained him at dinner, that he might receive the better information concerning those Mountains. I heard him say, that his Country on the East side did confine with great Tibet; that it was about 30 or 40 leagues broad; that there was indeed some little Crystal, Musk, and Wool, but for the rest very poor; and that there were no Gold Mines as was said; that in some places there was very good fruit, especially Melons; that they had very hard Winters, and very troublesome, because of the deep Snows; and that the people, which formerly had been Heathen, was almost all become Mahumetan, as himself, namely, of that Sect called Cbia, which is that of all Persia. Besides, that seventeen or eighteen years ago Chah-Jehan had attempted to make himself Master of the Kingdom of the Great Tibet, as formerly also had done the Kings of Kachemire; that his Army after sixteen days difficult march, always among Mountains, did besiege a Castle which they took; that there remain'd no more for him to do, than to pass a River, which is famous and very rapid, and thereupon to march directly to the Capital Town, which he would have easily carried, the whole Kingdom being in a panick terrour; but that the season being far spent, the Governour of Kachemire, who was the General of that Army, did apprehend he should be surprized by the Snow, and so returned, leaving in that Castle a Garrison, which, whether it was from fear of the Enemy, or from want of sufficient provision, he could not say, soon abandon'd it; which broke the design the Governour had of returning thither the next Spring.

Now that the King of this Great Tibet knows, that Aureng-Zebe is at Kachemire, and threatens him with War, he hath sent to him an Ambassador, with Presents of the Countrey, as Chrystal, and those dear White Cow-tails, by way of ornament fasten'd to the ears of Elephants, as also Musk, and a Stone of Jachen of great price, because of an extraordinary bigness. This Jachen is a blewish Stone with white veins so hard that it is wrought with nothing else but the Powder of Diamond, highly esteemed in the Court of the Mogol. They make Cups of it and other vessels, of which I have some richly wrought with threads of Gold, of very curious Workmanship. The Train of this Ambassador did consist of three or four Cavaliers, and ten or twelve tall men, dry and lean, having three or four hairs in their beards like the Chinese, and plain red Bonnets upon their heads like our Seamen, the rest of their Garments suitable. I think there were four or five of them with Swords, but the rest marched behind the Ambassador without any rod or stick. He treated with Aureng-Zebe in his Masters name, promising that he would suffer a Mosque to be built in the Capital City, wherein Prayers should be made after the Mahumetan way; that the Money, henceforth to be coined, should on the one side have the Impress of Aureng-Zebe, and that he would pay him a certain annual Tribute. But 'tis believed, that as soon as this King shall know that Aureng-Zebe is gone from Kachemire, he will laugh at all this Treaty, as he did formerly at that, which he had made with Chah-Jehan.

This Ambassador had in his suit a Physician, which was said to be of the Kingdom of Lassa, and of the Tribe Lamy or Lama, which is that of the men of the Law in that Country, as the Brahmans are in the Indies; with this difference, that the Brahmans have no Caliph, or high-Priest, but the Lamians have one that is not only acknowledged for such by the Kingdom of Lassa, but also by all Tartary, and who is honoured and revered like a divine person. This Physician had a Book of Receipts, which he would never sell to me; the writing of it seem'd, at a distance, somewhat like ours. We made him begin to write the Alphabet, but he wrote so slowly, and his writing was so bad in respect of that in his Book, that we soon judged, this must needs be a poor Doctor. He was much wedded to the Metempsychosis or Transmigration of Souls, and was full of admirable stories of it; among the rest he related of his great Lama, that when he was old and ready to die, he assembled his Council, and declared to them, that now he was passing into the Body of a little Child, lately born, that this Child was bred up with great care, and when it was about six or seven years old, they brought to it store of household-stuff pel mel with his own, and that the Child was able to distinguish those, that were or had been his from that of others: Which was, said this Doctor, an authentic thentick proof of the Transmigration. For my part, I thought at first he rallied, but I found at last, that he spoke very seriously. I was once to see him at the Ambassadors with a Merchant of Kachemire, that knew the Language of Tibet, and was an Interpreter to me. I made as if I would buy some Stuffs he had brought to sell, which were some kind of Ratines of about a foot and an half broad; but it was really to learn something of that Countrey, yet it was no great matter I obtain'd from him. He only told me in general, that all the Kingdom of the great Tibet was, in comparison to his, a miserable Countrey, full of Snow for more than five months of the year; that his King made often War with the Tartars; but he could never distinguish to me, what kind of Tartars they were. At length, after I had made a good many Questions to him, without receiving any satisfaction upon them, I saw I lost only my time with him.

But there is another thing, which is so certain, that no body here doubts of it. 'Tis not yet twenty years, that there went Caravans every year from Kachemire, which cross'd all those Mountains of the great Tibet, entred into Tartary, and arrived in about three months at Cataja, notwithstanding the very ill ways, and the rapid Torrents; which latter are to be pass'd over Cords stretched from one Rock to another. These Caravans brought back Musk, China-wood, Rubarb, and Mamiron, which last is a small root exceeding good for ill Eyes. Repassing over the great Tibet they also loaded themselves with the Merchandise of that Countrey, viz. Musk, Cryстал and Jachen, but especially with store of very fine Wooll of two sorts, one of Sheep, and the other called Touz, which is rather, as I have said, a kind of hair approaching to our Castor, than a Wooll. But since the attempt, which Chah-Jehan made on that side, the King of the great Tibet hath altogether shut up the way, and suffers not any one from Kachemire to enter into his Countrey: And thence it is, that the Caravans at present go from Patna upon the Ganges, not passing through his Countrey at all, but leaving it on the left hand, and coming directly to the Kingdom of Lassa.

Concerning this Kingdom, here called Kacheguer, which doubtless is that which our Maps call Kascar, I shall relate to you what I was able to learn of it from the Merchants of the Countrey it self, who, knowing that Aureng-Zebe was to stay a while at Kachemire, were come thither with a good number of Slaves, of both Sexes, whom they had to sell. They say, that the Kingdom of Kacheguer lyeth East of Kachemire, drawing a little Northward; that the shortest way thither was to go directly to the great Tibet; but that passage being obstructed, they were forced to take their way through the little Tibet; that first they went to a small Town, call'd Gourtche, the last Town depending from Kachemire, and four days journey distant from the same; that from thence in eight days they came to Eskerdon, the Capital City of the King of the little Tibet, and thence in two days more to a small Town call'd Cheker, likewise belonging to the little Tibet, and situate upon a River very famous for being Medicinal; that in fifteen days they came to a great Forest upon the Confines of the little Tibet, and in fifteen days more to Kacheguer a small Town, once the Seat of the King of Kacheguer, which is now at Jourkend, lying somewhat more to the North, and ten days journey distant from Kacheguer. They added, that from the Town of Kacheguer to Katay 'tis no more but two months voyage; that every year there go Caravans, bringing back of all those Commodities I have named, and passing into Persia thorough Usbeck, as there are others that do pass to Patna in Indostan. They said moreover, that to go from Kacheguer to Katay, Travellers must get to a Town that is eight days journey from Coten, the last Town of the Kingdom of Kacheguer; that the ways from Kachemire to Kacheguer are very difficult; that among others there is a place, where, in what season soever it be, you must march for about a quarter of a League upon Ice. This is all, I could learn of those parts, which though indeed it be very much confus'd and very little, yet will it be found much, considering I had to do both with people so ignorant, that they almost knew not to give a reason of any thing; and with Interpreters, who, for the most part, know not how to make the Questions to be understood, nor intelligibly to deliver the Answers made thereto.

I thought once, I would have here concluded this Letter, or rather this Book, and taken my leave of you untill I came to Debli, whither we are now returning: But since I am in the vein of writing, and at some leisure, I shall endeavour to give you some satisfaction to those Five particulars, you demanded of me in your last Letter in the name of Monsieur Thevenot, that illustrious person, who daily giveth us more discoveries, without going out of his study, than we have learned of those that have gone round the World.

The

The first of his demands is, Whether it be true, that in the Kingdom of Kachemire there are Jews settled there from immemorial times; and if so, whether they have the Holy Scripture, and if their Old Testament be altogether conform to ours?

The Second is, That I would give you an account of what I have observed touching the Mounsons, or the Season of the ordinary Rains in the Indies.

The Third is, That I would give you my Observations, and declare to you my Thoughts concerning the wonderful regularity of the Current of the Sea, and the Winds in the Indies.

The Fourth is, Whether the Kingdom of Bengale is so fertile, so rich, and so beautiful, as 'tis said to be?

The Fifth is, That I would at length decide unto you the old Controversie touching the Causes of the Increase of the Nile.

Answer to the first Demand, concerning the Jews.

I Should indeed be very glad, as well as Monsieur The, venote that there were Jews to be found in the Valley of those Mountains, who might be such, as I believe he would have them; I mean, of those Ten Tribes transported by Salmanasser. But you may assure him, that if anciently there have been of them in this place (as there is some reason to believe there were,) there are none of them at present, and all the inhabitants of it are now either Gentiles or Mahumetans; and that perhaps 'tis China, where they may be found. For I have lately seen, in the hands of our Reverend Father, the Jesuit of Debli, some Letters of a German Jesuite written from Pekn, taking notice that he had there seen some of them, that had preserved the Jewish Religion and the Old Testament, that knew nothing of the Death of JESUS CHRIST, and that they would even have made this Jesuite their Kacan, if he would have forborn to eat Swines flesh.

Mean time here also are not wanting several marks of Judaism. The first is, that at the entring into this Kingdom, after having passed the Mountains of Pire-penjale, all the Inhabitants I saw in the first Villages seemed to me to be Jews, in their garbe and meen, and in something peculiar, which maketh us often discern Nations from one another. I am not the only person, that hath had this thought; our Father, the Jesuite, and many of our Europeans had the same before me. The second is, that I have observ'd, that among the meaner sort of the people of this Town, though they be Mahumetans, yet the name of Monsa, that is Moses, is much used. The third, that commonly they say, that Salomon came into their Country, and that it was he that cut the Mountain of Baramoule to give an outlet to the waters. The fourth, that they say, Moses died at Kachemire, and that his Tomb is one league distant from this Town. The fifth, that they pretend, that that little and very ancient Edifice, which appears from hence upon an high mountain, was built by Salomon, and that thence they call it to this very day the Throne of Salomon. So that I would not deny, but that some Jews may have penetrated hither; and that in length of time they may have lost the purity of their Law, turned Idolaters, at last Mahumetans. In short, we see store of the Jewish Nation that have passed into Persia to Lar, Ispahan, and also into Indostan on the side of Goa and Cochin: I have been informed, that there were of them in Aethiopia, even gallant and military men, and some of them so considerable and potent, that there was one of them, fifteen or sixteen years agoe, that had attempted to make himself King of a little Country of the Mountains of a very hard access; if it be true, what two Ambassadors of the King of Aethiopia, that were lately in this Court, related to me.

Answer to the Second Demand, about the stated Rains in the Indies.

The Sun is so strong and violent in the Indies all the year long, and principally for the space of eight months, that he would burn all, and render the Country barren and inhabitable, if Providence had not particularly provided and disposed things in so admirable a way, as that in the month of July, when the heats are most violent, Rains begin regularly to fall, which continuing for three months together, do temper the Earth, and render it very fruitful, and so qualifie the Air that it may be endured. Yet are not these Rains so regular, that they fall always just at the same time; of which I have made many observations in different places, and principally at Debli, where I lived a long while. The like is found in other Countries; and there is always some difdifference in the time from year to year: For sometimes they begin or end a fortnight or three weeks sooner, sometimes later; and there are also some years, in which they are not so plentiful as in others; insomuch that two years, together it did almost not rain at all; which caused much Sickness, and great Famine. Besides, there is also this difference in respect of Countries different and remote from one another, that these Rains ordinarily begin sooner, or are more plentiful in one than in the other. For example, in Bengale and along the Coast of Coromandel, as far as to the Isle of Ceilan, they begin and end a month sooner than towards the Coast of Malabar: And in Bengale these Rains are pouring down for four months, and sometimes continue for eight days and nights together without intermission; Whereas at Debli and Agra they are never so strong, nor so durable, there passing sometimes two or three whole days without any Rain; and ordinarily the whole morning from break of day until about nine or ten a clock it rains but very little or nothing. But the most considerable difference I have; observ'd, is, that the rains in divers places come from different quarters of the World, as about Debli they come from the East, where lies Bengale; whereas, on the contrary, in the parts of Bengale and upon the Coast of Coromandel they come from the South; and upon the Coast of Malabar they proceed almost always from the West.

I have also observed another particular about which they all agree in those parts, viz. That according as the Heat of the Summer comes sooner or later, is more or less violent, and lasts longer or a shorter time; the Rains also come sooner or later, are more or less plentiful, last longer or a shorter time.

These Observations have given me ground to believe, that the Heat of the Earth and the Rarefaction of the Air must be the principal causes of these Rains, and draw them; forasmuch as the Air of the Seas, which lie near round about the Lands, being colder, more condensed, and more grosse, filled with clouds which the great heats of the Summer raise from the waters, and which the winds drive and agitate, dischargeth it self easily upon the Land, where the Air is hotter, more rarified, in more motion and less resisting than upon the Seas, so as that this discharge is more or less tardy and abundant, according as the Heat comes sooner and is more violent.

Sutable to the same Observations I was perswaded that if the Rains begin sooner upon the Coast of Coromandel than upon that of Malabar, 'tis by reason that the Summer begins there sooner, it being possible that there it may do so for some particular reasons, which perhaps would not be hard to find, if the Country were well examin'd; For we know, that according to the different situation of a Land in respect of Seas or Mountains, and according as 'tis more Sandy, or Hilly, or Woody, the Summer comes there either sooner or later, and with more or less violence.

I am further perswaded, that it is no wonder, that the Rains come from different quarters; that upon the Coast of Coromandel, for example, they come from the South, and upon that of Malabar from the West; because that in all appearance it must be the nearest Seas that send them, and the Coast of Coromandel is nearer to the Sea, which lyeth Southerly in respect of it, and is more exposed to it, as the Coast of Malabar is to the West of it, lying towards Babelmandel, Arabia, and the Gulf of Persia.

Lastly, I have imagined, that if at Debli, for example, the Rains come from the East, it may yet be that the Seas which are Southerly to it, are the origin of them; but that they are forced by reason of some Mountains, or some other Lands where the Air is colder, more condensed and more resisting, to turn aside and discharge themselves another way, where the Air is more rarified, and where consequently they find less resistance.

I forgot to tell you, that I also observed at Debli, that there it never rains to purpose, till for many days there have passed store of Clouds Westward; as if it were necessary that those spaces of Air which are beyond Debli Westward, should be first filled with Clouds, and that these Clouds finding there some obstacle, as it may be some Air less hot and less rarified, and consequently more condensed and more able to resist, or some other contrary Clouds and Winds repelling them, should become so thick, so burthen-som and so heavy, that they must fall down in Rain, after the same manner as it often enough falls out, when the Wind driveth the Clouds against some high Mountain.

to the third Demand, which is concerning the Regularity of the Current of the Sea, and of the Winds in the Indies.

As soon as the Rains do cease (which ordinarily comes to pass towards the month of October,) it is observed, that the Sea taketh its course Southward, and that the cold Northern Winds arise. This Wind blows for four or five months without intermission and without storms, always keeping the same equality as to its strength and quarter, unless it change or cease a day or so by accident, but then it returns again unto its former place and temper. After that time, for two months or there about the other Winds do reign without any rule. These two months being past, which is called the Intermediate season, or, according to the Hollanders, the Wavering or Changing Season, the Sea returns back from South to North, and the South-wind riseth to reign also in his turn for four or five months, as the Current of the Sea doth: so that there pass two months of intermediate season; during which, Navigation is very difficult and dangerous, whereas during the two Seasons it is very easy, pleasant and without peril, except it be about the end of the season of the South-wind. Hence you may find cause not to wonder, if you hear that the Indians, though else very timorous and inexperienced in the art of Navigation, do notwithstanding make pretty long and considerable Voyages; as when they sail from Bengale to Tanassery, Achem, Malague, Sian and Makassar; or to Massipatan, Ceilan, the Maldives, Moka, and Bender-Abassy; because they take their time to go with one good Season, and to return with the other. 'Tis true, that oft enough they are surpris'd and cast away; but that is, when they cannot dispatch their affairs in good time, or fail of taking their measures. Our Europeans also do sometimes lose themselves, though they be far better Sea-men, bolder and more understanding, and their Ships better condition'd and equipped.

Of these two intermediate Seasons, that which maketh the South-wind is incomparably more dangerous than the other, and much more subject to tempests and storms: And even in the Season it self this wind is ordinarily much more impetuous and unequal than that of the North. And here I must not omit to give you a remark, which is, that about the end of the Season of the South-wind, during the time of the rain, although there be a great calm out at Sea, yet 'tis very tempestuous near the Coasts; to the distance of fifteen or twenty leagues: whence the Ships of Europe or others, when they will approach the Indian Coasts, for example, of Suratte, or Massipatan, must be very careful of taking their time to arrive just after the Rains; or else they run great hazard of being split and lost upon the Coast.

This is very near what I could observe of the Seasons in these parts; of which I much wish I could give you a good reason. I shall venture to tell you, that it came into my thoughts, first, that the Air, which environs the Globe of the Earth, ought to be esteem'd to have a share in it, as also the Water of the Sea and Rivers, forasmuch as both the one and the other gravitate upon this Globe, tend to the same Center of it, and so are in some manner united and fasten'd to it; so that from these three Bodies, the Air, the Water and the Earth, there results as 'twere one great Globe. Next, that the Globe of the Earth being suspended and balanced, as it is, in its place, in that free and unresisted space, where the Creator thought good to place it, would be capable to be easily mov'd, if some adventitious Body should come against it and hit it. Thirdly, that the Sun having past the Line to move towards one of the Poles, for example, the Arctique, coming to cast its rays that way, maketh there impression enough to depress a little the Arctique Pole, and to do that more and more according as it advanceth towards the Tropicque; letting it rise again by little and little, according as he returns towards the Line, untill by the force of his rayes he do the like on the side of the Antarctique Pole.

If these suppositions, joyn'd to that of the Diurnal Motion of the Earth, were true, it were not me-thinks, without reason what is commonly affirm'd in the Indies, viz. That the Sun conducts and carries with him the Sea and Wind. For if it be true, that having pass'd the Line to go towards one of the Poles, he causeth a change in the direction of the Axis of the Earth, and a depression in the Pole on that side, the other Pole must needs be rais'd, and that consequently the Sea and the Air, being two fluid and heavy Bodies, run down in this inclination: so that it would be true to say, that and Sun advancing towards one Pole, causeth on that side two great regular Currents, viz, that of the Sea, and that of the Air which maketh the Monsoon-wind, as he causeth two opposite ones, when he returns towards the other Pole.

Upon this ground, methinks, it might be said, that there are no other but two main opposite Fluxes of the Sea, one from the side of the Pole Arctique, the other from that of the Antartique; that if there were a Sea from one Pole to the other, that passed through our Europe, we should see, that these two Currents would there be regular every where, as they are in the Indies, and that that which hinders this regularity of the Flux from being general, is, that the Seas are intercepted by Lands, which impede, break, and vary their Course; in like manner as some say, that the Ordinary Flux and Reflux of the Sea is hinder'd in those Seas that lye in length, as the Mediterranean doth from East to West. And so likewise might it be said upon the same Foundation, that there are but two principal opposite Winds or Fluxes of the Air, and that they would be universally regular, if the Earth were perfectly smooth and equall, and one part like another every where,

An Answer to the Fourth Question, concerning the Fertility, Riches and Beauty of the Kingdom of Bengale.

ALL Ages have spoken of Egypt as of the best and fruitfullest part of the World; and Writers will not grant, there is any Country comparable to it: But as far as I can see by the two Voyages I have made in the Kingdom of Bengale, I am of opinion, that that advantage belongs rather to it, than to Egypt. It bears Rice in that abundance, that it not only furnishes its Neighbours, but many very remote parts. 'Tis carried up the River Ganges to Patna; and 'tis transported by Sea to Malipatan, and to many others Ports of the Coast of Coromandel. Besides, 'tis sent away into forrain Kingdoms, and principally into Ceilan and the Maldives. Further, it also abounds in Sugar, so that it furnishes with it the Kingdoms of Golkonda and Karnates, where there grows but very little. Arabia also and Mesopotamia are thence provided with it, by the way of Moka and Bassora; and Persia it self, by Bander-Abassy. Moreover, Bengale is also the Country of good Consirs, especially in those places where the Portugueses are, who are dextrous in making them, and drive a great trade with them. They ordinarily make store of those big Pome-Citrons, as we have in Europe; and a certain Root, which is longish like Sarsaperilla, and very delicate; and of that common Fruit of the Indies call'd Amba, and of Ananas, and the same Mirobolans, which are excellent; as also of Lemons and Ginger.

'Tis true, that the Country of Bengale yields not so much Corn as Egypt; but if that be a defect, it is to be imputed to its Inhabitants that eat very little Bread, and much more Rice than the Egyptians: Yet it alwayes bears what is sufficient for the Country, and to afford excellent Biscuits, very cheap, for the provision of our European Ships, English, Dutch, and Portuguese. You may there have almost for nothing those three or four kinds of Legumes, which together with Rice and Butter are the most usual food of the meaner people: And for a Roupy, which is about half a Crown, you may have twenty good Pullets and more; Geese and Ducks, in proportion. There are also kids and Sheep in abundance, and such store of Pork, that the Portugueses, settled there and accustomed to the Country, live almost on nothing else but that; and the English and Dutch victual their Ships with it. There is also plenty of many sorts of Fish, both fresh and salt: And, in a word, Bengale is a Country abounding in all things; and 'tis for this very reason, that so many Portugueses, Mesticks, and other Christians are fled thither from those quarters, which the Dutch have taken from them. For, the Jesuits and Augustinians, that have great Churches there, wherein they exercise their Religion with all freedom, did assure me, that in Ogouli alone there were no less than eight or nine thousand Souls of Christians; and (which I will easily believe) that in the rest of that Kingdom there were above twenty five thousands. And 'tis this affluence of all those things necessary for life, joyned to the Beauty and good Humour of the Women natives, that hath occasioned this Proverb amongst the Portugueses, English, and Hollanders, viz That there are an hundred open Gates to enter into the Kingdom of Bengale, and not one to come away again.

As to the Commodities of great value, and which draw the Commerce of Strangers thither, I know not, whether there be a Country in the World, that affords more and greater variety: For, besides the Sugar I have spoken of, which may be numbred amongst the the Commodities of value, there is such store of Cottons and Silks, that it may be said, that Bengale, is as 'twere the general Magazine thereof, not only for Indostan or the Empire of the great Mogol, but also for all the circumjacent Kingdoms, and for Europe it self. I have sometimes stood amazed at the vast quantity of Cotton-Cloth of all sorts, fine and others, tinged and white, which the Hollanders alone draw from thence and transport into many places, especially into Japan and Europe; not to mention what the English, Portingal and Indian Merchants carry away from those parts. The like may be said of the Silks and Silk-Stuffs of all sorts: One would not imagine the quantity, that is hence transported every year; for, this Country furnishes generally all this great Empire of Mogol as far as Labor and Caboul, and most of the other forrain parts, whither Cotton-Cloth is carried. 'Tis true, that these Silks are not so fine as those, of Persia, Syria, Sayd and Barnt; but then there is also a great difference in the price; and I know from good hands, that whosoever shall take care of choosing them well, and of getting them well wrought, may have very good Stuffs made of them. The Hollanders alone have sometimes seven hundred or eight hundred men of the Natives at work in their Factory of Kassem-Bazar; as the English and other Merchants have theirs in proportion.

It is also in Bengale, where that prodigious quantity of Salt-peter is found; which is so conveniently carried down the River Ganges from Patna, and where the English and Dutch load whole Ships full for many places of the Indies and for Europe.

Lastly, 'tis Bengale, whence the good Lacca, Opium, Wax, Civet, long Pepper do come; and even Butter is to be had there in so great plenty, that though it be a gross Commodity, yet notwithstanding 'tis thence transported into divers places.

It cannot be denied that the Air, in regard of Strangers, is not so healthy there, especially near the Sea: And when the English and Hollanders first came to settle there many of them dyed; and I have seen in Balasor two very fine English Ships, which having been obliged, by reason of the War of the Hollanders, to stay there above a year, were not able to go to Sea, because most of their Men were lost. Yet since the time that they have taken care and made orders, as well as the Hollanders, that their people shall not drink so much Bouleponges, nor go so often a shore to visit the Sellers of Arac and Tobacco, and the Indian Women; and since they have found, that a little Wine of Bourdeaux, Canary or Chiras is a marvellous Antidote against the ill Air; there is not so much sickness amongst them, nor do they now lose so many men. Bouleponge is a certain beverage made of Arac, that is, of strong water, black Sugar, with the Juice of Limon water, and a little Muscadine upon it; which is pleasant enough to the taste, but a plague to the Body and to Health.

As to the Beauty of the Country, you are to know, that all Bengale, taking it near an hundred leagues in length on both sides of Ganges, from Raje-mehale unto the Sea, is full of great Channels, formerly cut out of the River Ganges with vast labour, reaching far into the Country for the conveniency of transporting Commodities, and the Water it self, which by the Indians is counted the best in the world. These Channels are on both sides lined with well-peopled Villages and Burroughs of Gentiles, and the large Fields, lying near them, bear abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, Legumes, Mustard, Sezammum for Oil, small Mulberries of two or three foot high, to feed Silk-worms. But then the vast number of great and small Isles, that are in the midst of Ganges, and fill all that great space of six or seven days journey, (as there is in some places of this River from one side to the other;) this giveth an incomparable Beauty to the Country: For, they are very fertile, filled with fruit-bearing Trees, Ananas's, and all sorts of verdure, and interlaced with a thousand little Channels, which you cannot see the end of, as if they were so many Water-mails all covered with Trees. The worst of it is, that many of these Isles that are next the Sea, are now abandoned by reason of those Corfaires, the Frangnys of Rakan, elsewhere spoken of; and that they have at present no other Inhabitants but Tigers (which sometimes swim over from one Isle to the other) and Gazelles, and Hoggs, and Poultry grown wild. And 'tis upon the account of these Tigers, that for people travelling between these little Isles in small boats, as usually they do, 'tis dangerous in many places to land; besides, great care is to be had, that the boat, which in the night is fastened to Trees, be not too near the Bank; for there are now and then some men surpris'd; and I have heard it said, that Tigers have been so bold as to come into the boats, and to carry away men that were asleep, chusing the biggest and fattest of them, if one may believe the Water-men of the Country.

I remember, I made once a voyage of ten days, from Pipli to Ogouli, between those Isles and Channels; which I cannot forbear to relate to you, because there passed not a day without some extraordinary accident. My Chaloupe of seven Oars was no sooner got out of the River Pipli, and advanced 3 or 4 leagues into the Sea along the coast, to gain the Isles and the Channels, but we saw the Sea covered with Fishes like huge Carps, pursued by a Shole of Dolphins. I made my men row that way, and saw, that most of those Fishes lay along the Coast as if they were dead; that some advanced a little, others played and tumbled as if they were drunk. We all laboured to take some of them, and we caught 24 with our hands without any difficulty. Viewing them I observed, that out of all their mouths there came out a bladder (like those that are in Carps,) which was full of Air, and reddish at the end. I imagined easily, that this must be the bladder which kept them from sinking; but I could not conceive, why it should thus come out of their mouth, unless it were that they had been long and closely pursued by those Dolphins, and had made so great an effort to fly away as to make this bladder thus swell, and colour, and to hang out of their mouth. I afterwards told this thing to an hundred Sea-men, but they could not believe it, and I never found but one Dutch Pilot, who told me, that sailing once upon the Coast of China, he had met with the like, and that presently they put out their Boat to Sea, and took, as I did, with their hands abundance of Fishes.

The day after, about even, we came among those Isles, and after we had look'd for a place, where 'twas likely no Tigers would come, we landed, made fire, dressed a couple of Pullets, and our Fish, which was excellent. Presently after Supper I made my men row until night, and for fear of losing our way between those Channels in the dark, we retired out of the great Channel, and found a good shelter in some small Creek, where we fasten'd our boat to a thick branch of a Tree, far enough from the Land, for fear of Tigers. In the night, when I was watching, there fell out a Philosophical accident, of which kind two had happen'd to me afore in Debli. I saw a Rainbow of the Moon, which I shew'd to all my Company, and which very much surpris'd two Portuguese Pilots I had taken into my Boat at the desire of a friend, who had never seen nor heard of such a thing.

The third day we went asray between these Channels, and if we had not met with some Portuguese making Salt in one of the Isles, that directed us in our way, I know not what would have become of us. But behold another Philosophical accident. In the night, being got again under shelter in a little Channel, my Portuguese that still were concerned about the Rainbow of the last night, and whom that Observation had made more curious to behold the Heavens, awaken'd me, and shew'd me another, as fair and as well form'd as that was, which I had shewed them. Mean time I would not have you think, that I mistook an Iris or Rainbow for a Corona, or Crown. There is no month almost but at Debli these Lunar Rainbows are seen in the season of the Rains, when the Moon is high above the Horizon: And I found that it must be so; having seen of them three or four nights one after another, and sometimes double ones. They were not Circles about the Moon, but opposite to her, and in the like Position with Solar Rainbows: And as often as I have seen them, the Moon was Westward, and the Rainbow Eastward. The Moon was also near full; which in my opinion, is necessary; because at other times she would not have light enough to form any. Lastly, these Rainbows were not so white as the Crowns use to be, but much more coloured, insomuch that there might be discerned in them some distinction of Colours. And thus you see, how I have been more happy than the Ancients, who, according to Aristotle, had observed none such before him.

The fourth day about evening we retired out of the great Channel, as we used to do, into a very fair place of safety; but had one of the most extraordinary nights that ever I knew. There was not a breath of wind, and the Air was so hot and stuffing that we could scarce breath. The Bushes round us were so full of those little shining worms, that they seem'd to be on fire; and there arose fires here and there, which were like flames, and frighten'd my Sea-men, who said, they were Devils. Among the rest there arose two, that were very extraordinary; one was a great Globe of fire, which in falling and spinning lasted above the time of saying a Pater noster; and the other, which lasted about a quarter of an hour, was like a little Tree all in a flame.

The night of the fifth day was terrible and dangerous. There arose so great a storm, that though we were under the shelter of Trees, and that our small Boat was well fasten'd, fasten'd, yet notwithstanding all that, the Wind broke our Cable, and was casting us into the great Channel, where we had intallibly perish'd, if I had not, together with my two Portugueses, presently laid hold on the Branches of some Trees, where we held fast for above two hours, whilst the storme lasted: For there was no assistance to be expected from my Indian Oar-men, whom fright had made incapable to help us in this occasion. But, what was most troublesome and amazing, there fell a Rain as if it had been pour'd down with buckets, which filled our Boat, and was accompanied with such Lightning and Thunder-claps, very near our head, that every moment we thought we should sink.

The remainder of our Voyage unto the ninth day, when I arriv'd at Ogouli, we pass'd very well and with pleasure; for I could not be satisfi'd with beholding such beautiful Countries: Mean time my Trunk and all my Baggage was wet; my Pullets dead, my Fish spoiled, and all my biscuit drunk with water.

Answer to the Fifth Question, about the Increase of the Nile.

I do not know, whether I shall acquit my self, in respect of this Fifth Question, as it were to be wish'd: But I shall faithfully impart to you what I have set down of it, after I had twice observed the Nile's Increase, and carefully examined the same, and taken notice withal of some things in the Indies, which have afforded me greater aids for it, than that Learned Man could have, that hath so ingeniously written of it, though he never saw Egypt but in his Study.

I have already said in another place, that at the time when the two Ambassadors of Æthiopia were at Debli, my Agah Danechmend-kan, who is extraordinarily curious, sent often for them, to inform himself, in my presence, of the Condition and Government of their Country; and one day, amongst other things, we occasion'd them to discourse of the Source of the Nile, which they call Abbabile; whereof they spake to us as a thing so known that no body doubted of it; and where one of these Ambassadors, and a Mogolian, that was return'd with him out of Æthiopia, had been in person. They told us, that it taketh its Origin in the Country of the Agas, and issueth out of the Earth at two big bubbling Springs, near one another, which form a small Lake of about thirty or forty paces long; that at the coming out of this Lake it is then already a pretty River, and that from place to place it receiveth other Rivers which enlarge it. They added, that it runs bending, and forming a great Pen-insule, and that after several Cascade's from steep Rocks, it falls into a great Lake, which is not above four or five days journey from its Source, in the Country of Dumbia or Dembea, three little days journey from Gonder, the Metropolis of Æthiopia; that having traversed that Lake, it issueth thence swell'd with all the waters that fall there, passeth through Sonnar, the principal City of the King of Funges or Barbaris, tributary to the King of Æthiopia, running on and making the Cataracts, and so entring into the Plains of Messer, which is Egypt.

After we had learned these particularities of the Source and Course of the Nile, I asked him, (to judge whereabouts the Source of the Nile might be) towards which part of the World they believed the Countrey of Dumbia, wherein is Gonder, to be, in respect of Babel-mandel? But they knew not what to answer to this, but only, that they went alwayes Westward, and especially the Mahumetan Ambassador, (who was obliged to know better, and to take more Notice of the Position of the World, than the Christian, because the Turks are obliged in saying their Prayers to turn themselves towards Mecca) did assure me, that I was not at all to doubt thereof: Which did astonish me very much, because, according to their Description, the Source of the Nile should be much on this side of the Æquinoctial, whereas all our Maps with Ptolomie place it a good way beyond it.

We also asked them, at what time it did use to rain in Æthiopia, and whether there were regular Seasons of Rain as in the Indies? To which they answer'd, that it rain'd almost never upon that Coast of the Red-Sea, from Suaken-Arkiko, and the Isle of Masouva to Babel-mandel, no more than it doth at Moka, which is on the other side, in the Happy Arabia; but that in the Heart of the Country, in the Province of Agas, and in that of Dumbia and the circumjacent places it rained much for two of the hottest months of the Summer, and at the same time when it rain'd in the Indies; which was also, according to my computation, the very time of the Increase of the Nile in Egypt.

Egypt. They said further, that they knew very well, it was the Rain of Æthiopia which swelled the Nile, overflowed Egypt, and fertilized the ground of it by the slime it carried upon it; and that it was even therefore, that the Kings of Æthiopia pretended a Tribute to be due to them out of Egypt, and that, when the Mahumetans made themselves Masters of it, ill treating the Christians of the Country, they had a mind to turn the Course of the Nile another way, viz. into the Red-Sea, thereby to ruine Egypt and to render it infertile; but that this design miscarried by reason of the great difficulties in effecting the thing.

All these particulars, which I had already learned, when I passed over to Moka, from a dozen Merchants, that come there every year in the name of the King of Æthiopia to attend the Indian trading Vessels, are considerable to make us judg, that the Nile increaseth not but by the Rains which fall without Egypt towards the Source of that River: But the particular Observations, I have made upon two Increases of this River, make them yet more so; for, in reference to all those Stories, that are made of it, as, That 'tis on a determin'd day it begins to increase; that on the first day of its increase there falls a certain Dew, which maketh the Plague cease, so that no body dieth any more of it after that hath once fallen; and that there are peculiar and hidden causes of the overflowing of the Nile: In reference, I say, to these stories, I have found during the said two inundations, that they are but tales fancied and amplified by the people of Egypt, naturally inclin'd to superstition, and amazed to see a River swell in summer in a Country where it rains not: And I have found, that 'tis no otherwise with the Nile than 'tis with other Rivers, that swell and overflow by plentiful Rains, without any such fermentations of the nitrous soyl of Egypt, which some have suggested as the cause thereof.

I have seen it swelled above a foot, and very turbid, near a whole month before that pretended determined day of its Increase. I have observed during its increase, and before the Channels were open'd, that when it had grown for some days a foot or two, it afterwards decreased little by little, and then began to increase anew, and so went on to increase and decrease without any other measure but that of the Rains that fall nigh the Source, and, as is often seen in our River Loire, according to the fall of more or less Rain in the Mountains whence it flows, and the days or half days of fair weather there.

In my return from Jerusalem, going up from Damietta to Cairo, I chanced to be upon the Nile about a month before the pretended day of the Dew-fall, and in the morning we were all wet of the Dew fallen in the night.

I have been in Rosette at supper with Monsieur de Bermon, Vice-Consul of our Nation, eight or ten days after this day of the Dew-fall, when three persons were struck with the Plague, of whom their died two within eight days, and the third, which was M. de Bermon himself, had perhaps not escaped, if I had not pierc'd his Plague-fore; which presently infected my self like others; so that, if I had not forthwith taken some Butter of Antimony, I might have been as well as they, an Example of the little certainty there is in the Plague after the Dew; but this Emetic Medicine in the beginning of the Evil did wonders, and I kept but three or four days within doors; during which, I remember, my Bedouin that serv'd me made no scruple to drink, in my presence, the remainder of my broth, to encourage me, and from his principle of Predestination, to laugh at the fear we have of the Plague. Yet Experience shews, that after the day of the Dew the Plague is commonly not so dangerous as before, but the Dew contributes nothing to that; 'tis only in my opinion, that then there is a greater opening of the pores, which gives a vent to the malign and pestiferous spirits, that were shut up in the body.

Moreover, I have carefully enquired of some Masters of Boats, that had gone up as far as the end of the Plains of Egypt, that is, to the very Rocks and Cataracts; who assured me, that when the Nile did overflow in the Plains of Egypt, where that pretended fermenting Nitrous Earth is, 'tis at the same time much swelled between those Mountains of the Cataracts, where, in all appearance there is no such Nitrous Earth.

Besides, I have made diligent enquiry of those Negro's of Sonnars, that come to serve at Cairo, and whose Country, being tributary to the King of Æthiopia, as I have said, lyes upon the Nile between the Mountains above Egypt; and they have assured me, that at the same time when the Nile is high and overflowing in Egypt, 'tis so also with them

by

by reason of the Rains then falling in their Mountains, and higher up in the Country of Habache or Æthiopia.

The Observations I have made in the Indies, concerning the regular Rains that fell at the same time when the Nile swells in Egypt, are also very considerable in this matter, and may make you imagine, that the Indus, Ganges, and all the other Rivers of those parts are so many Niles, and the Land, that is near their fall into the Sea, so many *Egypt*s. This was my thought of it in Bengale, and what follows are the very words I set down about it.

That great number of Isles which are found in the Gulf of Bengala at the Mouth of the River Ganges, and which by lapse of time are join'd to one another, and at length with the Continent, put me in mind of the Mouths of the Nile, where I have observed almost the same thing; so that as 'tis said, after Aristotle, that Egypt is the Workmanship of the Nile, so it may be said, that Bengale is the Work of Ganges, only with this difference, that as the Ganges is incomparably bigger then the Nile, so he carrieth with him towards the Sea a far greater quantity of Earth; and so forms greater and more Islands than the Nile; and that the Islands of the Nile are destitute of Trees, whereas those of Ganges are all covered with them, because of those four months of constant and plentiful Rains that fall in the heart of the Summer, and render it needless to cut Channels in Bengale, to water and enrich the Earth, as they do in Egypt. It is just so with Ganges and the other Rivers of Indostan, as with the Nile; this and those increase in Summer by the means of Rain, which ordinarily fall at that time; except that then, and almost never, there are no Rains in Egypt, but a little toward the Sea, and that it rains not about the Source of the Nile; whereas in the Indies it rains in all the Countries, through which any Rivers pass; except the Kingdom of Scymid towards the Persian Gulf, where is the Mouth of the River Indus; it happening that in some years it doth not rain there at all, though for all that the Indus swells there, and the Fields are water'd by the means of cut Channels, just as in Egypt.

For the rest, concerning the desire of M. Thevenot, to impart to you my Adventures of the Red-Sea, of Suez, of Tor, of Mount Sinai, of Gidda (that pretended Holy Land of Mahomet, half a days Journey distant from Mecca;) as also of the Isle of Camarane and Loubaya, and of whatever I could learn at Moka of the Kingdom of Æthiopia, and of the most commodious way to enter into it; these particulars, I say, I shall in time draw fair out of my manuscripts, if God permit.

SOME

Some Particulars forgotten to be inserted in my first Book, to perfect the Map of Indostan, and to know the Revenue of the Great Mogol.

TO understand the better what follows, 'tis requisite to know the signification of these Terms, viz.

1. Soubah, that is, Government and Province.
2. Pragna, that is, the Principal Town, Burrough or Village that hath many others depending from it, where Rents are paid to the King, who is absolute Lord of all the Land of his Empire.

3. Serkar, that is, the Exchequer of the Kings Treasure.

4. Kazine, that is, Treasure.

5. Roupie, the Mony of the Country, equivalent to 29 or 30 pence.

6. Lecque, that is, an hundred thousand Roupies.

7. Courour, that is, an hundred Lecques.

1. Jehan-Abad, or Dehli, is the first Soubah; it hath sixteen Serkars in its dependence, and 230 Pragna's: It yields to the King nineteen Millions and five hundred and twenty five thousand Roupies.

2. Agra, otherwise called Akber-abad, is the second. It hath 14 Serkars, and 260 Pragna's; yielding to the King twenty five millions two hundred and twenty five thousand Roupies.

3. Labor hath 14 Serkars, and 314 Pragna's, bringing in to the King the Rent of twenty four millions six hundred ninety five thousand Roupies.

4. Hasmir, which belongs to a Raja, yields to the King a tribute of twenty one millions nine hundred and seventy thousand Roupies.

5. Gusarate, the Capital whereof is Amadavad, hath 9 Serkars, and 190 Pragnas; yielding to the King thirteen millions three hundred and ninety five thousand Roupies.

6. The Kingdom of Candahar belongs to the King of Persia; but the Pragna's that remain unit'd to the Crown of the Great Mogol, are 15 and yield in rent 1992500 Roupies.

7. Maloia hath 9 Serkars, and 190 Pragna's; bringing in 9162500 Roupies.

8. Patna, or Beara, hath 8 Serkars, and payeth the rent of 9580000 Roupies.

9. Elabas hath seventeen Serkars, and 260 Pragna's; rendering 9470000 Roupies.

10. Haoud hath 5 Serkars, and 149 Pragna's: It yields 6430000 Roupies.

11. Moultan hath 4 Serkars, and 96 Pragna's: Brings in 11840500 Roupies.

12. Jagannat, in which is comprehended Bengale, hath 11 Serkars; and 12 Pragna's: It yields 7270000 Roupies.

13. Kachemire hath 5 Serkars, and 45 Pragna's: Yields 350000 Roupies.

14. Caboul hath 35 Pragna's, and brings in 3272500 Roupies.

16. Aureng-abad, formerly Daulet-abad, hath 8 Serkars, and 79 Pragna's: Yields 17227500 Roupies.

17. Varada hath 20 Serkars and 191 Pragna's; yielding 15875000 Roupies.

18. Candays, whose principal Town is Brampour, hath 3 Serkars, and 103 Pragna's: It brings in 18550000 Roupies.

19. Talengand, which borders upon the Kingdom of Golkonda on the side of Maslipatan, hath 43 Pragna's, and payeth in rent 6885000 Roupies.

20. Baganala, on the Confines of the Lands of the Portugueses, and the Mountains of Seva-gi (that Raja which plundered Surat,) hath 2 Serkars, and 8 Pragna's; paying the rent of 500000 Roupies.

According to these Particulars, which I take not to be the most exact or the most true, the Great Mogol's yearly Revenue of his Lands alone would amount to above two Courours of Roupies.

A Letter sent from Chinas in Persia, June 10th 1668.
To Monsieur Chapelle;

Concerning his Design of repairing again to his Studies, about some Points relating to the Doctrine of Atoms, and to the Nature of the Mind of Man.

My dear Friend,

I Did always believe what Monsieur Luillier, said, That it would only be a Transport of Youth, and that you would quit this kind of Life, so much displeasing to your Friends, and at length return to your Studies with more vigour than ever. I have been informed from Indostan by the last Letters of my Friends, that you are now in good earnest; and are going to take a flight with Democritus and Epicurus, far beyond the flaming Walls of the world, into their infinite Spaces, to see and victoriously to report unto us what may, and what may not be done, to take a Review, and to fall upon a serious meditation of the nature of those Spaces, the general Place of things; upon those infinite Generations and Corruptions of their pretended worlds by their alledged fatal Concourse of Atoms; upon the Nature, Indivisibility, and other Proprieties of their Atoms; upon Liberty, Fortune and Destiny; upon the Existence, Unity, and Providence of God; upon the use of the Parts of Animals; upon the Soul, and all the other sublime matters they have treated of.

Et ultra processit longè flammantia, &c.

For my part, I cannot condemn this Design, the inclination we have to know, being natural; on the contrary I am bound to believe, that it belongs but to great Souls to elevate themselves to such high Enterprizes, in regard it is principally by this means, that a man can make appear what he is, and the advantage he hath above other Animals. But as the highest Undertakings are commonly also the most dangerous, this certainly is not without much danger. For though we seem to have a peculiar inclination and affection to Truth; yet it seems also, that we have another very strong one to Liberty and Independency, not to acknowledge a Master above us, and to say, to believe and to do all according to our Phantasie, without the fear of any, and without an obligation to render an account for any thing; so that if we be not upon our Guard, this latter Inclination will carry away the Bell; and if we stay upon the Reasons that carry us to this liberty, and content our selves with slightly considering those that might take us off from it, we shall soon find our selves engaged in a strange life, or at least be in suspense between both, and tossed up and down between a 'Tmay be that this is so, and 'Tmay be that it is not so; lukewarm, or cold, slow, and indifferent to what concerns the End and Rule of our life.

Moreover methinks, that most Philosophers suffer themselves easily to be carried away to this vanity of believing, that to entertain Opinions beyond the vulgar, is the way of being reputed Rare and Excellent Wits; they taking pleasure even to vent such Opinions as something Mysterious, belonging to none but men of great Knowledge, and grounded on deep and weighty Reasons; although they be not too much perswaded themselves of what they affirm. So that if such men do not take great care on that hand also, they shall not fail to be seized on by the aforementioned vanity; and whilst they go about to perswade others of what they are not perswaded themselves, they shall insensibly fall into that very Belief; like a Liar, who after having often related one and the same Untruth, or at last believes it to be a Truth; Or at least they shall in the end fall into those inquietnesses, may be's, and indifferencies, which I have mention'd instead of attaining that state of solid tranquillity and sublime knowledge, which they promised, and wherewith they flatter'd themselves.

Lastly, there is no doubt, that though we have this inclination to learn, yet we are withal very lazy; we desire indeed Knowledge and Truth, but we would have it very cheap, cheap, without much Labour and Watching, which are irksome things, and often disturbing our health, yet necessary evils if we will know thoroughly the least thing, and make our selves capable to give a solid Judgment thereof. And thence it comes, that if we be not constantly upon our Guard, and contend not perpetually with our slothfulness, we shall soon come to flatter our selves with this belief; That to know things, there needs not so much painful study; and so not being to resolve upon an uncessant Labour, we suffer our selves to be easily surprized with that Appearance of Truth, which shineth forth in the Reasons commonly produced by these Gentlemen, called les Esprits forts; instead of seriously examining them, that so they may not be made to appear to us beyond what they contain of strength, nor the force of those that make against them be hid and disguis'd; as often enough happens, either by ignorance or prevention, or else by the vanity and presumption of those persons, that make it their business to dogmatize; or lastly, by, I know not what, unhappy pleasure we generally take in suffering things to be exaggerated to us, or in evaggarating them our selves, tending to nothing else, than pleasantly to deceive one another.

Thus, my dear Friend, to tell you freely my thoughts of your Design; methinks, that in Philosophy, and especially in the study of those high matters which you undertake, there is no middle way: I mean, that either we must, without so much subliming our Wits, suffer our selves to be sweetly carried away by the Current, which so many men of good sense, and that are reputed honest persons and good Philosophers, do follow (which to me seems to be the best and surest, as well because of the great Labour, this study demands, as of the danger there is, that in Philosophizing but by halves, and not penetrating things to the bottom, we get nothing by the bargain but disquieting Doubts, making us unhappy the rest of our days, and leaving us often very vicious, and uneasie to Society;) Or else, if we will Philosophize, to do it to purpose, and that, without fearing the labour, and without suffering our selves to be surprized by the vanity of coveting to pass for extraordinary Wits, as also without suffering our selves to be carried away by that unhappy inclination of desiring to live without a Master and a Law; that, I say, without these, we fall resolutely upon the study, and from a pure love to Truth, we become obstinate in weighing and weighing again all that comes before us, in meditating, writing, conversing, debating; in a word, in forgetting nothing of what may contribute to improve our understanding, and to render it more intelligent.

As to what at present you demand of me by your last, viz. that I should impart to you what came into my thoughts when I was discoursing with our Danechmend-kan, the Learned Gentleman of Asia, about all those matters, you are now applying your Studies to: I shall tell you freely, and without flattering my self, that you might address your self to a more intelligent person than me, but to none, that hath studied them with more care, then I have done. For I have not only contented my self, exactly to weigh the reasons of all that ever I could come to see of both Ancient and Modern Authors, Arabians also, and Persians, and Indians; but I have farther conferr'd an hundred times with whatever great men I could any where meet with, so far as that I have often fain'd, when I was with those Esprits forts, as they will be call'd, that I was not averse from their Sentiments, to the end that they might conceal nothing from me. But that being a thing of great prolixity, it will be better, since you are now on the way to return into Europe, to refer that matter to our Meeting there, when we shall be able by word of mouth better and more conveniently to declare our thoughts to one another. Yet notwithstanding, that I may not seem to be careless of your desire, I shall in the mean time tell you thus much of the nature of our Understanding, That it seems to me very rational to believe, that there is something in us more perfect and excellent, than all that which we call Body or Matter.

You know, according to the Idea that Aristotle hath given us of the First Matter of things, that nothing can be imagin'd so imperfect, as it. For, in short, to be nothing but a certain Neque quantum, neque quale, is, methinks, to approach to a Nothing as near as may be. You know also, that all the perfections and proprieties, which Democritus and Epicurus attribute to their Primitive Bodies, or to the first and sole Matter of things, comes in a manner to this, that there are certain small and very solid Beings, without any vacuity in them, and indivisible, all having some particular and essential figure, so that there is an infinite number of round ones, (for example) an infinity of Pyramidal, an infinity of Square, and infinity of Cubick, Hooked, Pointed, Triangular gular ones; and so an innumerable number of other kinds of different Figures; all moveable of their own nature, and of an unimaginable Celerity; yet some of them more proper for the sensible motion of Concretions than others, that is to say, for disengaging and separating themselves, or for flying sooner and more easily away than others in the dissolution of Compounds, according as they are more or less small, or more or less round, or more or less polish'd and slippery: And lastly, that they are all eternal by their nature, and consequently all incorruptible and independent (as they pretend;) though they be without any sense, reason and judgment. You know, I say, that all the Proprieties of their little Bodies come, very near, to what I have now said; of which I desire you to be mindful, that so we may hereafter judge, whether they be capable of what is ascribed to them.

Yet, to take nothing from the force of their Principles, and to undeceive you; if you believe, I have cast off Atoms, I shall avow to you frankly, that the more I consider that Division to Infinity of any portion of Finite matter, the more absurd and unworthy of a Philosopher it seems to me: and I believe the Reasons, which are alledged to prove it, to be as captious as those, which Zeno, supposing this same divisibility, brought to prove, that there was no motion since Mathematical Points, Lines and Superficies, which have no being but by the Understanding, and are without profundity, ought not to be transferr'd and applied to Bodies Physical, which cannot be without all the dimensions, and are the workmanship of Nature: To which add, that a Philosopher ought to avoid, as much as is possible, to dive into Infinity, that being a deep and dark Abyss, which often serveth men for nothing else but to hide themselves, and in which the wit of man is at a perfect loss.

Moreover, I acknowledge, I am still of that opinion, not only, that Atoms are indivisible, because they are little portions of Matter, or little hard Bodies, resisting and impenetrable (proprieties as essential to Matter, as Extension) and because they are pure, matter continued, without any parts that are only contiguous, and of which each hath its particular and determinate Superfice; but also that the separation, disjunction or dissociation of parts meerly contiguous in a compound, is, in my judgment, the only division conceivable: so that 'tis not possible, not only to divide any Atom, that is, any portion of matter purely continuous, though we should suppose it as long as a Needle, since that to divide it with Scissers; for example, or otherwise, you must come to some penetration, which is inconceivable to us; and that it must needs be, that something of the Needle, some portion or some part (if it may be said, that there are parts in a whole, where there are no contiguous ones) do yield, and yet that 'tis inconceivable, how it were able to yield to the Scissers that should press it, or to make other, antierior ones, yield without penetration; and that the more, because the parts pressed, and the part of the Scissers that should press, are both of them of the same Nature and the same force, both hard, resisting and impenetrable. So that the Doctrine of Atoms hath this great advantage, that it doth not so much as suppose its Principles, by demanding to grant out of meer favour the Indivisibility of the Primitive Bodies; forasmuch as it even cannot be conceived that they are divisible; nor, how out of soft, yielding and divisible Principles there should result a Compound that's hard; nor, how two most subtil portions of Matter, coming to hit one against another, should not resist each other by their hardness, without reducing themselves into some dust of smaller Particles. Besides, this Doctrine demands not, to have it granted out of meer Grace, that there must be little void spaces betwixt the parts of Bodies compounded, how subtil soever you may devise a matter to fill them up; seeing it is likewise unconceivable, not only how a motion should be able to begin in pleno (where all is perfectly full) but how the parts themselves of this most subtil matter, that must have their particular figures defin'd and determin'd as well as the bigger, can be so perfectly disposed as that there should not still remain some of those little Spaces betwixt them.

I shall further acknowledge to you, that I think, it may, in the Atomical way of Philosophizing, be very well and very rationally conceived, that there is no compound of so admirable a figure, composition, order and texture of parts, taking in the Body of Man it self, but that it may be formed by the concurrence, order and particular disposition of their little Bodies, the Atoms, provided there intervenes a guiding and regulating cause, intelligent enough for that purpose.

I shall likewise confess, that from their Principles there might result a Compound so perfect, as to be capable of the most difficult Local Motions that could be imagin'd, such as are, To walk like a Living and Animal Substance; as also, perfectly to imitate the singing, weeping, and all the other local motions of the most perfect Animals; there being no contradiction at all in it, all Watches and so many other artificial Engines evincing it, and not suffering us to doubt of the possibility of the thing.

Lastly, I shall very willingly agree, that the Sect of Democritus and Epicurus, (it being suppos'd, that the Atoms are the workmanship of the Almighty and All-wise hand of God,) hath very great advantages above the rest, in that it can give a more probable reason of a great number of considerable effects of Nature, where others come short; and in my opinion, there are none but such as have not examined things thoroughly, and compar'd other Sects with it, that can doubt thereof. But to imagine and to persuade my self, that their Principles, with all those advantages, at length are capable, as they would have it, by a particular concurrence, order, union and disposition, how admirable soever, and even by an intelligent guidance intervening, to arrive to the forming of such an Animal as is Man in his operations; This is that, my dear Friend, which I could never think possible; it hath ever appeared to me contrary to Reason and good Sense, and will doubtless, appear so to you, provided you have the patience to recollect what you have heard an hundred times, and which I am now going to repeat to you after my own way.

It is not that I mean to preach to you, and to make you believe I am become a very good man after my return (a Traveller like my self, and brought up in the School of Atoms, might possibly do Miracles, which I know not whether men would believe any thing of;) Be persuaded, that if I take upon me to discourse to you, it is not out of any vanity or affectation, but from my inmost sense, and with all possible sincerity. Nor is it, that I pretend, with all this Asiatick Preamble, to have found any new Reasons in the Indies; expect no such thing, I pray: I do almost despair as well as Cicero, that men should ever find any thing more upon this Subject beyond what hath been already found. It would be no hard task for me to shew, that all what the Moderns have said concerning it, is either nothing, or nothing new; There would need no more, than to begin with taking up again, what Gassendi and Arnault have written about it against Des Cartes, to which I find not, that he hath made any Answer: And it were to be wished, that he had been able to answer them so demonstratively and magisterially, as it seems he would have men believe he did: I should embrace, and little less than adore the Author of a Demonstration upon this Argument; and to such an one the following Verses would be much more deservedly applicable, than to that ancient Atomist;

Præfixit Stellar, exortus uti Aethereus Sol.*

I shall therefore desire but one thing of you, which is, That you would please to make (which seems to me the only thing to be done here) a serious reflection upon what passeth within us, and upon the operations of our Understanding; and that thereupon you would tell me sincerely, Whether you think, that there is a proportion between the perfection of those operations, and the imperfection of what we call Body or Matter; supposing (what you will easily grant me) that how much soever you strain your mind, you shall never conceive any other thing in Atoms, and generally in all that's Body or Matter, than those proprieties already enumerated, Size, Shape, Hardness, Indivisibility, Motion; or, if you will (which matters not here) Softness and Divisibility.

I promise my self, that you will readily grant me this Request, which is, to go over again those ingenious and agreeable thoughts of yours, that have been drawn out of your Memories; and those many other Fragments of the same force of Wit, that have been left behind, and generally all those other Poetical Transports and Raptures of your Homer, Virgil, and Horace, which seem to have something of Divine in them: And you will not refuse in that serenity of mind and Philosophical temper, wherein sometimes you are in the Morning, to make some reflection upon four or five things, that seem to me to deserve very well the attention of a Philosopher. The first is, That our Senses are not only struck by Bodies so, as the Eyes of a Statue or an Automaton, but that we feel their impression, the titillation and pain, and that even we perceive that that we feel, when we say, I perceive that this or that pleaseth my taste much more or much less than ordinarily; that my pain is much less or much more than it was; and so of an hundred things else. The second, That often we stay not there, but deduce these particular Conclusions; We ought therefore to follow this; or we ought to shun that: And afterwards, these general ones; All what is good, is to be followed; and all what is evil, is to be avoided. The third, That we remember what is passed, and consider what is present, and fore-see what is to come. The fourth, That sometimes we endeavour to penetrate into our selves, into that which is inmost in us, as I now do, when I am searching what I am; what is this Reasoning power that is within me; what are these thoughts; these ratiocinations, and these reflections I make, reflecting thus upon my self and my Operations. The fifth, That being resolutely set to meditate upon a thing, we sometimes make new Discoveries, find new Reasons, or at least see those that have been found already, weighing them, and comparing one with another, and sometimes drawing thence such Consequences, as shall depend from a greater number of antecedent Propositions, which may be seen as 'twere in one view, and concur all to deduce such a Conclusion; as it comes to pass in all Sciences, especially the Mathematicks; wherein our Spirit shews I know not what force and admirable extent.

These few reflections might suffice for what I demand of you; and that the rather, because as I can say more comes almost to the same thing. But you must resolve for once to endure the Style of these Countreys of Asia, the Air of which I have breathed so long, and to have the patience further to cast your Eyes on a thing that seems to me very considerable, which is, That we know not only particular things that make impression upon our Senses, but that our Understanding, by I know not what admirable force and capacity, taketh occasion to know and to form to it self Idea's of a thousand things, that fall not immediately and wholly as they are under the Senses; for example, that Man is a Reasonable Animal; that the Sun is much bigger than the whole Earth; that 'tis impossible, one thing should be at the same time and not be; that two things, being equal to a third, are equal among themselves; that the absence of the Sun causeth the Night, that all what's generated is subject to corruption; that of nothing nothing can be naturally made; as not any thing that is, can naturally return to nothing; that of necessity there is something Eternal and Un-created in the Universe, God, or the first Matter of things, or both, or that God created this Matter, and that either from all Eternity or in Time: And an infinity more of other great and vast thoughts, and remote from Matter, of which we scarce know by what door they have entred into our Mind.

Now, all these actions, I have been speaking of, that argue so great a force and power, capacity and extent of the Mind of Man; all those intern Motions; that peculiar State which we cannot perfectly explain, but yet plainly feel and perceive in our selves, when we attentively reflect on what passeth within us, and consider our operations; All those Actions, I say, and interiour Motions, or whatever you will call them, can they indeed be ascribed to Spirits, to a Wind, to Fire, to Air, to Atoms, to Particles of a Subtil Matter, and, in a word, to any thing that hath no other Qualities or Proprieties than what can be comprized under this word, Body, how small and fine and nimble soever it may be, into what texture or disposition soever it may be cast, and of what motions soever it may be made capable? It cannot: we shall never be able to imagine that these things are meer Local Motions of some Engine barely Artificial, dead, insensible, without Judgment, without Reason: These can never be any of those inward actions I have mention'd, as, That I see or know that I know; that I see I reason; that I see those reasonings, and perceive that I see them.

Moreover, let us a little cast our Eyes upon some of the main Propositions of Euclid, (not to speak of those of Archimedes, Apollonius, and so many others;) For my part, when I think only on the 47th. of the 1st. of Euclid, I there find something so great and noble, that I avow to you, I can hardly believe that it was an Humane Invention: So that I should imagine, that it was therefore that Pythagoras, after he had been so happy as to find this incomparable Proposition, was so ravished and transported, that he made that famous Sacrifice to thank the Gods, and had a mind to declare thereby, that this Invention surpassed the reach of an Humane Understanding.

Yet I would not therefore say, that there is reason to believe, that in Man there is a particle of Divinity, or some such thing. This is an unreasonable Tenet of some Stoicks, and of the Cabalists of Persia, and of the Brachmans of India, who, to acknowledge, openly the Nobleness and Perfection of the Spirit of Man, chose rather to cast themselves into this extremity, than to believe it to be so base and imperfect, as to be all Body and Matter. I am far from entertaining such a Sentiment; you will see in the Letter to Mounſieur Chapelain, that I cannot believe this to be an opinion defensible by a Philosopher: But this I do, I observe in Man, as well as those Stoicks and others, something so perfect, so great and high, that their opinion seems to me an hundred times less absurd, than that, which holds that in Man, and even in the whole Universe, there is nothing but Body, but bodily and local Motions, but Atoms, but Matter.

Lord! When I think on't, who is that man, how little of good sense soever he may have, that can persuade himself, that when an Archimedes, a Pythagoras, and others of those great men, had those effects of the Mind, and were in their deep Meditations, there was then nothing in their Heads and Brains but what was Corporeal, nothing but Vital and Animal Spirits, nothing but a certain Natural Heat, nothing but Particles of a very subtil Matter, or nothing but Atoms, which, though they be Insensible, and without all Understanding and Reason, and do not so much, (according to the Doctrine of the Atomists,) as move but by a fatal and blind motion and hit, should yet come to move and concur so luckily and wonderfully, that, as once by such a concurrence they had formed the Head of those Great men, such as it is with those innumerable Organs so industriously order'd and dispos'd; so also they should then be so lucky as to form and produce those subtil thoughts, and profound meditations; or rather that they should come to move themselves in all those Organs in so wonderful a manner, as at last to fall into a certain Order and into a certain Disposition and State, so marvellous, that they themselves were that Conceiving, Seeing, Meditating, those admirable Propositions, and those Divine Inventions?

Add to this, when we find our selves, upon some Affront, or other Displeasure received, ready to fall into Choler and Rage, and yet stop our Passion; I pray, this internal Commander and Command, which we feel, this kind of Obedience, of moderation and retreat, that is made, for example, upon the account of some consideration of Honesty, of Honour and Virtue, and against that natural Inclination we have to be revenged; what is that interieur motion and state? Can it be rationally said, that 'tis nothing but some Rollings, Counter-motions, Reflections, and peculiar conjunctions and textures of Atoms or Spirits, or of little Masses or Particles of Matter, which are made within those Nerves, those fine Membranes, those very subtil Channels and Organs of the Brain, Heart, and other parts of the Body? These are pure Chimera's.

A word more concerning Liberty: When in the apprehension of taking an ill part for a good, we keep our selves in a poysse, seeking within our selves all the reasons that are for and against, and seriously pondering and examining them; this apprehension, this research, this ballancing, and the resolution we at last take to do or not to do the thing; all that, all those motions, all that inward state and way of Being (I speak in no other terms than they) shall it be nothing but a fortuitous and blind concurrence of little Bodies? Is't possible that you can imagine or persuade your self this? Lucrece himself, that sworn Partisan of the Epicurean Sect, could not do it, nor resolve to attribute to Atoms alone those free motions of the Will. For if the Will, saieth he, is drawn away from fatality, and raised above Destiny, Et satis avulsa voluntas, &c. How can he, with all his clinamen or deviation of Principles, have believed in good earnest and without scruple, that there is nothing but Body, and nothing done in us, more than elsewhere, but by a natural, eternal, independent, immutable and inevitable concurrence of Atoms? He was not ignorant, that that being so, neither the Will, nor any other thing whatsoever could be drawn and exempted from that concatenation and eternal and immutable Sequel of Motions and Causes, that would follow and succeed one another by eternal Orders absolutely necessary and unchangeable.

Besides all this, I could put you in mind of many Reasons that are wont to be alledged upon this Subject. You know that great man, who hath collected more of them than a score of very good ones. But that would be to abuse your Patience too much; and besides I see not, that there is much more of any importance to be considered hereupon, than what I have lately represented unto you.

I could also tell you, how I judge that all Objections, made upon this point, may be most rationally answer'd; but I know, that you are not a person, for whom Books are to be made, I shall only mention two things to that purpose.

The first is, That 'tis true what they say, That Eating, Drinking, Health; Natural Heat, Heat, the Spirits, and a good Disposition of Organs, (all which are natural things, and as they speak, depending from Atoms as Principles and the first Matter) are things necessary to all those Thoughts, Reasonings and Reflections; and, in a word, to all those Internal Operations I have mentioned. This is a thing that cannot be denied, and which every one doth too sensibly experiment not to aver it: But thence to conclude, that whatsoever intervenes and concurs to form those Operations, is only and meerly Body, Atoms, Spirits, Subtil Matter, is that which, after the least Reflection made upon their Excellency, and upon the imperfection of Bodies or Atoms, or upon the little resemblance there is in their Qualities to those Operations, can never with any good sense be granted: So that, methinks the most that might be allow'd, would be, that the Atoms, and Spirits, and all those other things alledged, are indeed necessary as conditions or dispositions, or the like, and not as the first and absolute Principles, and as the Total cause of the Operations; but that there is requisite some other thing than all that, something nobler, higher, and more perfect.

The second thing is, That 'tis true also, that we cannot form a right, or, as they speak, a next and positive Idea of what is above a Body or of any thing that is not Body: This, indeed, we cannot do, in my opinion, whilst we are in this mortal state so strictly united to the Body; the dependance of the Bodily Senses, that so much confine and obscure the light of our Understanding, hinders us from it: But I see not that thence it is to be concluded, that therefore there is really nothing above Body, or Atoms, or Matter. For, how many things are there, of which we have no such positive Idea, which yet Reason obligeth us to avow that they have a real Being? Or rather, how few things are there, of which we have any True Idea's? Have these Philosophers themselves any positive Idea of their Atoms? They acknowledge that their smallness is such, that it cannot be so much as imagin'd by hearing this word Atom pronounc'd or explain'd: so far are they from being capable to fall under our senses, and from imprinting in us a true and positive Idea; and yet notwithstanding they believe, and conclude from Reason, that they are. A Mathematician, hath he the positive Idea of the Magnitude of the Sun? It is so prodigious, and so far remote from the capacity of the Senses, that we are not able even so much as to imagine it such as it is; and yet for all this, there is none that is not fully perswaded and convinced thereof by the force of Demonstrations, and that knows not perfectly, that he exceeds by far the bigness of the Globe of the Earth. And besides, it is not true, that the nature of a thing may be known two manner of ways; either positively, as when it falls under some one or more of our Senses, or as when we give a positive Definition thereof; or negatively, by saying what it is not: Now I shall grant, that we are not capable to know the Principle of our Operations or Ratiocinations by the first way, to say what it is, and how those Operations are made and produced. Alas! we are not so happy; we should need other Senses far more perfect than all those we have. We are not born to dive and Philosophize so far:

Invida præclussit speciem natura videndi.

But we ought also to acknowledge, that at least we are capable to know it after the second way: So that, if we cannot say truly and positively what it is, we can at least say, and certainly know what it is not: I mean, that from the perfection of the Operations, which we do evidently see to be such as that they have no proportion with all those proprieties and perfections of Atoms, and do universally surpass the reach of what is meerly Body; we can deduce a certain Conclusion, that the Principle of such Operations, and those Operations themselves must needs be something above all that's Body or Corporeal. Which is here sufficient for me, who at the beginning engaged myself no further, and pretend not, that we can make a true and positive Idea of that Principle; but only that we can and ought to conclude by Ratiocination, that there must needs be something, as hath been said, that is far more perfect and far more noble than all that is in the rank of Bodies, whatever its being or Nature may be.

But shall I make an end, fully to discover unto you my thought? You well know, whether I am a person that taketh pleasure in vaunting, or in forging Untruths, or to speak things at random in a matter so important as this. It cannot be denied, that there is a very great difference between the Operations of Brutes, and those admirable Operations of Man, of which we now treat: I speak not only in respect of those of their outward ward senses, but also in reference to those of their inward ones, or their Imagination. All that is so much beneath the Reasoning of man, that we must avow, there is not any proportion, and that those of Man proceed from a very differing and infinitely more perfect Principle. Notwithstanding all that (and this is the thought I would declare to you) I should think that person an hundred times less absurd, that should go about to maintain, that in the Principle of those Operations of Brutes, whether it be of their internal or even their external Senses, there were somewhat more perfect than Corporeity and all that may be understood and comprehended under the name of Body, or Matter, or Spirits; than him, that should pretend the Principle of the Operations of Man were meerly Corporeal: So much do I take this Opinion to be out of all reason, and unworthy of a man of good Judgment. Certainly it can be no serious Philosophy; it can be nothing but an Excess of Vanity, that hath cast those Philosophers, we have spoken of, into such an irrational Extream. They doubtless saw, that their Sect had great Advantages above all the rest, in being able to explain with much Ease and Probability abundance of the most considerable Effects of Nature, only by Local Motion, and the Order and particular Disposition of their Matter, Corpuscles or Atoms: And thence they would make us believe, that by the same Principles they could give an account of all, and explicate whatever concerns the Spirit of Man, and the Operations thereof.

My Dear Friend, have not you and I concluded an hundred times, that how much soever we strain'd our Understanding, we could never conceive, how from Insensible Corpuscles there could ever result any thing Sensible without the intervention of any thing but what's insensible; and that with all their Atoms, how small and how nimble soever they make them, what motions and figures soever they give them, and in what order, mixture or disposition they range them, yea and whatever industrious hand they assign them for guidance, they would never be able (still supposing with them, that they have no other proprieties or perfections than those recited) to make us imagine, how thence could result a Compound, I say not, that should be Reasoning like Man, but that should be meerly Sensitive, such as may be the vilest and the most imperfect Worm on Earth. How then dare they pretend, that they will make it out, how thence can result a thing Imagining, a thing Reasoning, and such an one as shall be the Imaginations and Ratiocinations themselves?

For my part, if you'll believe me, let us lay aside all that presumption and vanity of those Esprits forts; let us not pretend to be able to explicate the nature of the Principle of our Reasonings in the same manner, as we might do the other things that fall under our Senses, and let us not play the Geometers upon it. We are not, as I have already said, happy enough for that; 'tis a thing which cannot be done in this mortal state, and in this great dependance from the corporeal senses in which we stand. Yet notwithstanding we ought to form a higher Idea of our selves, and not to make our Soul to be of such base alloy, as those Philosophers, too corporeal in this point, would have us do. We ought to believe for certain, that we are infinitely more noble and more perfect than they make us, and resolutely maintain, that though we cannot exactly know what we are, yet we know very well and very certainly, what we are not; which is, that we are not altogether of Mire and Dirt, as they pretend. Farewel.

PREFACE.

THE World being an ample Volum, in whose Extent and Varieties the Framers Wisdom and Attributes are manifestly read and set out, it seems that great Travellers are the best Scholars and Proficients in this Book; since on's Native Countrey is but as a single Leaf, where all the Singularities are not to be seen which are found in the other.

— Non omnis fert omnia Tellus.

And the truth of it is, those Ancient Philosophers, who have first laid the Foundations of Arts, Sciences, and Commonwealths in the World, were Travellers into these very Eastern Parts, (partly described by us here) whence they brought home all their Knowledge; it being here that Man and Knowledge it self had their first beginning. So that wise Travellers are not unlike

c

like those rich laden Vessels which through many dangers bring wholesom and profitable Cargo's, Drugs, and other Conveniences, to be dispers'd among the several Societies of their own Countrey: They are like those diligent Master-Bees, who run divers miles to extract out of many bitter Herbs that sweet Liquor, which they afterwards kindly refund to be enjoyed at home in common, in the hardest Seasons of the Year, by their Fellows. What costs them dear, others have it cheap: And there's scarce any Private Persons in the Commonwealth, to whom we owe greater Honour and Thanks, than to Worthy Travellers and Discoverers of Foreign Countries.

Yet it may be truly said, That Ancient Travellers and Geographers have but as course Limners and Coast-Drivers, drawn a very rough Draught in their Relations of those Countries they describ'd unto us, in comparison of some later Writers, who also sometimes do but copy their Predecessors Stories; and Merchants, with most other Travellers, are weather-driven by their private Occasions or Misfortunes, to take but a Cursory Survey of Places, and so give but an answerable account of the same to the World.

Bat among all the Ancient and Modern Travellers, none had such fair Opportunities and Advantages as the Illustrious Monsieur Tavernier had, to make a true, profitable, and exact Relation of the Singularities of those Remote Parts of Asia, where he past so many Years

P R E F A C E.

Tears in great Splendour, as shall appear by the ensuing Considerations and Qualifications of a good Traveller.

1. He from his Youth had a strong Inclination to Travel, which secret Instinct is certainly a Preordination of God for an Undertaking; and this unseen Impulsion carries such extraordinary Instruments chearfully and prosperously through all the Difficulties, others of a contrary disposition would never wade thorough, for whom it would be in vain to strive against the current of Nature.

2. This Travelling Genius made him begin early to fit himself for his design, and soon to go about it. He was therefore sufficiently imbued in his Intellectuals with all due knowledge of Sciences, Language, and Geography, and precedent Travellers Maps and Books, without all which common Travellers cannot conceive so soon and so orderly, nor reap so much benefit for themselves or others.

3. But Speculations without Experience are but unprofitable Notions; and the Experiments of this kind are not to be had without great Means and Expence, for want of which many a good Undertaking is Still-born.

Haud facile emergunt, quorum virtutibus obstat

Res angusta domi—

is an old and true Saying. But our noble Tavernier had an ample Estate, drove a great Trade, had Money in abundance, and a Prince's or Embassador-like Retinue, without which and great Presents none is scarce look'd upon in Luxurious Asia, fit for admittance into great and worthy Companies, where Knowledge may be attained; so that he thereby soon got into the Presence, Familiarity, and Closets of the Emperours, the Ministers of State, and the Philosophers of Persia, Mogol, &c. and got into the Acquaintance and Conversations of the leading and common Merchants, Traffickers, and People; and knew their Languages very well: for it is in vain to have Eyes, if one have not also a Tongue in such cases.

4. And whereas Learning and Riches do sometimes render narrow Souls of a more proud and unsociable temper, Monsieur Tavernier is by Nature and Education, an obliging, cheerful, and insinuating Traveller, and of a graceful Countenance. Comely Personages are beloved almost as soon as they are seen; and those that have but fair Souls, are not so till after they are known. Now Monsieur Tavernier having both these Advantages, had a free entrance into the Friendship and Notions the Indians (great or small) had concerning the Natural, Mechanical, Political, Religious, and Trading State of their own Countrey; which he made more his business to know, than to grow more rich.

And

P R E F A C E.

And at some times he would reckon Thousands of Pounds as nothing to attain his ends in this point of Knowledge and further Experience; as the perusal of this his own Work, and Persons now in London, that knew him in and after his Travels, can fully testifie.

5. Moreover, Mutual Help of Persons equally understanding and curious, is a great advantage in such Researches and Observations as these. Now John Baptista Tavernier, besides many other Heads and Hands, had herein the Assistance of a Brother, as complete a Traveller as himself in those furthest Parts of Asia, and had no less the foregoing Qualifications in Person and Estate than this his Brother John Baptista had, as the Reader may well perceive by this Volume of Travels.

6. And as for the Time; Six Voyages, and about Forty Years Abode in those Countries they do describe, did render these Brethrens Knowledge vast, their Experiments tried over and over, and this their Account more sure and exact (as I said) than that of any other Traveller heretofore.

7. And finally, to confirm the undoubted Credit that's to be given to this Nobleman and his Relation, (who is above all design of Flattering or Deceiving the Reader.) you may meet with several Worthy Persons in this City and the Court of England; and I my self, who was at Paris some few years ago at Monsiear Tavernier's Arrival, and who can witness the grand Esteem, the solemn Honours and Thanks, that were then given him by Persons of all Ranks and Degrees, the French East India Company's Admiration and Recommendation of him, that he had done his King and Countrey more Credit in those proud Eastern Courts than ever any did before him; the French King's imploying of him there; the Rarities he brought home to the Learned; the vast Riches and Memoirs he gained for himself, and the incomparable Jewels and Singularities he brought to the French King; the Titles of Lord and Baron conferred upon him extraordinarily, though he were a Merchant and a strict Protestant. These (I say) Public and Private Testimonials do shew what Credit other Nations and his own (which is Singular) had given to him. But in a word his own Observations herein gathered will prove it better.

But if any desire to have some Account of the Work it self, the Newness, Profit, and Satisfaction the very Subject must needs yield to all Persons and Professions cannot but be acceptable.

*The Naturalist shall have Plants, Minerals, Animals, and Phœnomena's never seen in our Climate. And about Physic, the Law, Music, and Poetry, more

Time and Tryals are required in those Countries than here; and you shall accordingly read of Cures done that draw near to natural Miracles.

The Divine will see things worth his Observation in their Religion and Morals, wherein they may confound the very Christians; whereof I le onely touch but thus much: That by the Light of Nature those Heathens own a Supreme Deity, and a Future State of Happiness and Torments; and do in view of the same most strictly keep the Civil and the Ten Moral Commandments, much answerable to ours, which their Prophets have left to them. So that they punish Murther and Adultery even in Princes and Princesses; terrible* ^{*Tunquin ch.7.p.18.} Examples whereof you may here read at large. And the Church and State Government are subservient in a Subordination, the one being a Prop to the other.

Even Statesmen may find Subject of weighty consideration, in the Antiquity, Model, and Exactness of their Government. As for instance: Though they have a special regard to Monarchy, so as to keep the Succession within the same Line; yet the Great Constable, and* ^{*Tunquin c.11.p.35.} the King's Council have Power left them to propose and chuse the fittest Person among the Royal Children, or Collateral Successors, who is nominated in the King's Life-time, to prevent after Disturbances. They have also

also on the other side very singular and unimitable ways to prevent the Insurrections, Divisions, and Rebellions of the Militia and the People.

But above all, the Traveller and Traffiquer into those Parts will be like to run into a thousand Inconveniences, and Losses of Health, Life, and Estate, without being guided by such Directions as he carefully gives herein, which others cannot possibly so soon and so well know.

It is in fine herein declared, by what means the French, Holland, and Portugal East India Companies were Settled, Improved, and Worsted in those Countries; also the Coinage, and the Reduction thereof to ours; the particular places where all sorts of East India Commodities are best and cheapest had; the Rates and Exchange Returns are here to be found; the manner how to know their Falsifications in Gold, Silver, Jewels, Drugs, Silks, Linen, and all the other Merchandizes which are brought from those Nations are here set down: It being otherwise hard or impossible to escape the Cheats of the Persians, Chineses, and Japoners, without such Instructions.

I'll say no more, but that in this Work was imployed the Help of another Worthy Gentleman, who labour'd
in

P R E F A C E.

in the first Volum of Tavernier's Translation; but it was brought to an end and perfection by me, who had the occasion to be more particularly acquainted with Monsieur Tavernier himself, his Native Tongue, and other Particularities abroad.

Of the Government of the Netherlands in 1648

The Government of the Netherlands in 1648 was a complex system of checks and balances. The States-General, the highest authority, consisted of representatives from the various provinces. They were responsible for foreign policy, the army, and the treasury. The provinces themselves had their own governments, which were responsible for local administration and justice. The system was designed to prevent any one province from becoming too powerful and to ensure that the interests of all were protected. The Government of the Netherlands in 1648 was a model of a federal system, and it has been studied and admired ever since.

AND

Of the Cause of the Persecution of the Christians in those ISLANDS.

THE Modern Geographers have made Descriptions of Japon, by means of such conjectures as they have drawn from the Relations of certain Merchants who have traded in those Countries. But in regard there are very few Merchants who are skilful in Geography, as being such who only mind the profit and advantage of their Voyages; those Descriptions have prov'd very uncertain. As to the knowledge of the Ancients; in reference to this part of the World, it is no less imperfect; and it is but only by conjecture to this day, that we believe the Abadie of Ptolomy to be that Island which is now call'd Nippon. That which I could learn of most certainty, was by the Relation of several persons who have Travell'd these parts; that the Empire of Japon is at present compos'd of several Islands, of which some perhaps may not be absolute Islands, but rather Peninsula's, and particularly those that make a part of the Land of Yesso, the Inhabitants whereof are Vassals and Tributaries to Japon. Nevertheless a Holland Pilot, who has been industrious to discover whether the whole Country it self were an Island, or a Continent adjoining to that vast Tract of Land call'd Corea, unknown to this day, in those parts where it extends it self behind China to the bottom of Tartarie Ninshan, saith, that it is separated from Japon by a narrow Sea, which at this day is call'd The Streights of Sanguar. Through all the Islands of Japon, where formerly were accounted to have been 66 Kingdoms, there are three remarkable for their largeness, of which that of largest extent is called Nippon, the next Ximo, and the third Xicock. The Japonners account it a Journey of twenty seven days from the Province of Quanto, to the Country of Yesso; and they say farther, that this Country of Yesso, in those parts which are remote from the Sea, is so full of inaccessible Mountains, that those Japonners who have attempted a discovery by Land, could never accomplish their design, being discourag'd by the length of the Journey, and the difficulties and badness of the ways.

Land

The Island of Nippon is four times as big as the other two; and there is also a Mountain therein that vomits up Flames of Fire, like Mount Etna in Sicily; formerly it was distinguish'd into thirty five Kingdoms, but at this day it is only divided into five parts, the names whereof are Jamasoit, Jetsen, Jetsesen, Quanto, and Ochio, lying all in order as you travel from West to East. These five parts are again divided into several Provinces. The Island of Ximo, or Saycock, is situated to the South-West of Nippon, being about 160 Leagues in circuit. The Island of Xicock is seated by the South of Nippon, being about 120 Leagues in compass. The other Islands that lye round about are not so considerable, for in those Seas lye several Islands scatter'd up and down, as in the Archipelago, between the Morea and the Coasts of Asia the less. As to the rest, I refer the Reader to the Map annexed, believing it to be very true, as having been made upon the places themselves.

The Emperour at present keeps his Court in the City of Yeddo, in regard the Air is there more temperate, and the Heats not so violent; but when he has a Son that is arriv'd to the Age of fifteen years, he sends him to Surunga, there to reside, till the death of his Father makes him way to the Throne.

Since Yeddo has been made choice of for the Seat of the Empire, it has so greatly enlarg'd it self from day to day, that it is at present three Leagues in length, and three in breadth, very populous, and the Houses standing very close together. When the Emperour rides through the City, or that there is any publick shew to be seen, it is impossible to get by the crowd of the people, though the Women are not permitted to be of the number. The Emperours Palace is cover'd with Plates of Gold, to which the Palaces of the Lords are every way correspondent in Magnificence; so that afar off the City affords the richest and most magnificent Prospect that was ever beheld: Though it be not so beautiful within, by reason that the ordinary Houses are built only of Wood. The Great Dairy keeps his residence at Meaco, which is also a very large City, containing above a hundred thousand Houses; it was formerly the capital Seat of the Empire, at what time the Dairy's were laid aside. So soon as he is Crown'd by the Bonzies, who are the Priests and Lawyers, he is then no more to expose himself to the light of the Moon, nor to shave his Head, or cut his Nails. The Natives report, that the Empire of Japon was formerly govern'd by a Prince call'd Dairy, who had acquir'd so high a reputation for Holiness, that his Subjects ador'd him as a God, and that to increase the awe and reverence of the people, he suffer'd his Hair and Nails to grow, affirming, that it it was a piece of Sacrilege to make use either of Razor or Sizzars. The Princes that succeeded him, though they had only the name of Kings, have still preserv'd the same custom, believing that it becomes not their Grandeur to appear in view of the Moon, as being Sons of the Sun. If he have a Daughter that is ripe for Marriage, the Emperour is oblig'd to Marry her, and she it is that bears the Title of Empress, though she should happen to have no Children, which is contrary to the Maxims of all the Eastern Monarchs, who give the Title of Queen and Sultaneſs only to her, among all the rest of their Wives, that is first brought to Bed of a Male Successor to the Crown.

At the end of every seven years, the Emperour sends one of the chief Princes of his Court to the Dairy with a Basket full of Earth, and to tell him, that all the Lands which the Emperour commands, are at the Dairy's Devotion, and indeed the Empire belongs to him by right of Succession, though at present he enjoys only the Title, and very large Revenues, which render him highly considerable in the Empire.

The Japonners are Idolaters, and adore the Sun, but though they have a great number of Temples and different Idols, yet they are not over obstinate in their Devotion, only the Emperour is very severe against all other Religions. They never stir out of their Native Country to travel, unless it be to China, and the Land of Yesso; and within these few years the Emperour has prohibited his people under extream penalties, from having any Commerce with Foreigners, the Chineses and Hollanders excepted. He had receiv'd Ambassadors at several times from several Princes, but never sent any of his own to them again. Nevertheless it is affirm'd, that several Lords of these Islands newly converted to the Faith, in the year 1585, sent their Children to Rome, to render their acknowledgments to Gregory the Thirteenth, and that being return'd back in the year 1587, to Goa, they were afterwards receiv'd, and welcom'd again into their own Country with great marks of joy. The little inclination which they have to Navigation and Traffick, proceeds in part from the great abundance of all things necessary for Human support, which their own Country produces, and then in the next place from the jealousies of the Emperour, who is afraid of the alterations which new Religions may make in his Government; for they are very fickle, and easily seduc'd after Novelties, which has been the occasion of many Revolts, and Civil Wars, till Quabacondon wrested the Empire out of the hands of the Dairy, and reunited all the Provinces. They are so fiery and revengeful, that upon the least affront given them, if they cannot have an opportunity of a present revenge, they will rip up their own Bellies, and kill themselves. I was told a Story to confirm this. Two young Lords that serv'd the Emperour met in the Palace, and jostl'd one the other by accident, the most furious of the two was immediately for drawing his Sword. The other told him, the place was not convenient, that he was going to wait, but that if he would stay for him in such a place, he would give him satisfaction. Accordingly the party that thought himself affronted went and stay'd, but his impatience was such, that after he had stay'd awhile, not finding the other to come, he ripp'd up his own Bowels for very vexation. Upon which the people crowding about him, ask'd him the reason of his killing himself; to which they could draw no other answer but this, A cowardly Raskal has affronted me. By and by the other comes, makes way through the throng, and surpriz'd with what he beheld; Poor Creature, said he, thou need'st not have doubted my being as good as my word, this Dagger shall assure thee of it: And so saying, he kill'd himself upon the place, and fell by the others side.

There is no Nation under Heaven that fears Death less than this, or that is more inclin'd to cruelty. If any Prince or great Lord makes a Feast for his Friends, at the end of the Feast he calls his principal Officers, and asks 'em, if there be any that has so much love for him as to kill himself before the Guests for his sake. Presently there arises a dispute among them who shall have the Honour; and who ever the Prince is pleas'd to name, rips up his Belly with a Cric, which is a kind of Dagger, the poynt whereof is Poyson'd. This custom is also practis'd upon the Death of their Masters, or when they lay the Foundations of any Palace, for they are so superstitious as to believe, that these Victims are necessary to render both the Owners of the Building, and the Habitation fortunate.

They punish all manner of Theft with Death. 'Tis also a capital Crime among them to play for Money. Adultery is only punish'd in the Women: But Coynage of false Money, setting Houses on Fire, Deflowring and Ravishing of Virgins, are not only punish'd in the persons of the Criminals, but also of those who are next of kin to them. The Women live retir'd, and are very faithful to their Husbands. The Emperour having put to Death one of the Lords of his Court, out of hopes to enjoy his Wife; she fearing violence, besought the Emperour to give her time to consider, which was granted for some few days. At the end whereof she shut her self up in a Room with her Children; and after she had deliver'd a Paper to one of her Servants to carry to the Emperour, she set the Chamber a Fire; and burnt both her self and her Children. The Emperour met with nothing else in the Paper but reproaches of his Tyranny, and attestations of joy from the Lady, that she had the opportunity to Sacrifice her self to the memory of her Husband. Several other stories I have heard, which make me believe, that this Nation is not uncapable of doing actions worthy a Roman Vertue.

The Portugals were the first people of Europe that discover'd the Islands of Japon. They were thrown upon the Coast by a violent Storm, in the year 1542, and understanding that there was great store of Gold and Silver in the Country, they return'd with a resolution to settle themselves. The first place where they thought to fix was neer Surunga, a City which stands about four Leagues from the Sea: But because there is but one Road, and that not very secure neither for Shipping; they remain'd there not above five years. At length they took possession of a little forsaken Island call'd Kisna, which they peopl'd afterward's; but since the last Persecution of the Christians, the Portugals were forc'd to abandon it, having no more Commerce with the Japonners. How the Hollanders came to erect their Factories there, I shall tell the Reader in another part of this Relation.

Seven years after the first coming of the Portugals to Japon, St. Francis Xavier made a Voyage thither to Preach the Gospel. The first place where he Landed was the Island of Nippon, where he stay'd two years and some Months, and travel'd several parts of these Islands; but his principal design being to go to China, he took shipping accordingly. The Vessel was no sooner out at Sea, but St. Francis fell sick, so that the Captain put him ashore again in the Island of Sechen, by others call'd Haynan, belonging to China, where in a few days after he dy'd, and never was in China, as some have reported and believ'd.

After his death the Christian Religion spread it self very much in China, the people being very docible, and apprehensive of the instructions which were given them; but the behaviour of the Portugals displeasing the Principal Governours, and those who had most Power at Court, they did them ill Offices to the Emperour, and the Bonzes misliking the new Religion, and jealous of the effects thereof, were the fomenters of continual persecutions against the new Converts, pretending they favour'd the designs of the Portugueses.

Nevertheless the Christian Religion daily got footing, and perhaps the whole Nation would have embrac'd it, if the covetousness and wickedness of the Christians themselves had not been the chief impediment of their conversion. The Hollanders did all they could to lay the fault upon the Portugals, but the truth will easily appear by the Letter written to one Leonard Campen, a Hollander, wherein it is said, that when the Hollanders were ask'd by the Natives what Religion they were of, they made this answer, We are no Christians, we are Hollanders. I do not go about to blemish a whole Nation for the fault of a few, but only to shew what a dangerous thing it is, to make an ill choice of Officers upon the setting of a new Commerce in Regions so remote.

The Holland East-India Company having set out a Vessel for Batavia, put aboard about a dozen young Boys, and as many Girls, taken out of the Hospitals in the Country. Among these Boys there was one who was design'd to serve in the Kitchen, but Fortune made him an Instrument of one of the greatest Misfortunes that ever befell our Age. During the Voyage, the Merchant having observ'd him to be a Boy of a ready wit, and for that reason believing that he might one day prove serviceable to the Holland Company, caus'd him to be taught to write and read; wherein he improv'd so well in a short time, that being come to Batavia, he was thought capable of a higher Employment. The Vessel being arriv'd, the General and his Council resolv'd to send the same Vessel to Japon, with some part of the Lading which was brought from Europe. Thereupon the Merchant was commanded upon this Voyage, and the under Accomptant happening in the mean time to dye, this Boy was by him advanc'd to the place, and by the Merchant carefully instructed in the knowledge of the East-India Trade.

The Vessel being arriv'd at Firando, the new under Accomptant believing no place more proper for him then that to raise his fortune; resolv'd to leave his Benefactor, and therefore when the Ship was to return, he hid himself out of the way, till he knew the Ship to be far enough onward on her Voyage, and by that means becoming a Member of the Factory, he grew so perfect in the Language of the Natives, and so useful to the Company; that at length he came to be President of the Factory; the Authority of which Employment so puff'd him up, that he was not only for continuing and upholding the Commerce of his own, but excluding all other Nations. Now, as I have already observ'd, the Portugals were the first Traders, and the first that propagated the Christian Religion in those parts; therefore it was that the Christian Japonners would not Trade with any but the Portugals, as having known them longer, and finding them more true to their words. This the President observ'd, and made it his business to render them obnoxious at Court, and by vertue of his Presents, engag'd the Governours of Provinces, and other great Lords, to favour his design.

However, the Portugals wanted neither friends nor confederates. And though they were not in a condition to be so liberal as the President, yet they made assise to defend themselves, and render his under-hand Dealings ineffectual. Thereupon finding that those Tricks would not take, he had recourse to the foulest of Calumnies; for he counterfeited a Letter written in the Portuguese Language, containing a discovery of a design of the Christian Japonners to have made a general Insurrection, and a particular Conspiracy against the person of the Emperour. This Letter he carry'd to a Lord of the Country, into whose favour and confidence he had wrought himself, who presently thought it to be his duty to give intelligence of so important a design to the Court.

The President inform'd him by what accident the Letter came to his hands, and gave an account of such circumstances, as made his Imposture look with a probable countenance, relating, how that the Hollanders had taken a Portugal Vessel returning from Japon to Goa, and that the Holland Captain having taken this Letter among other Papers, open'd it, and perceiving of what consequence it was, had sent an Express to the President to proceed as his prudence, and the affection of the Dutch Company toward the Emperour should guide him. That the Portugals, who were but Subjects to the Spaniards, had a pernicious Maxim, not to suffer any Religion but their own in any place where they had to do, and that for their own ends they never spar'd either the Life or Liberty of Man; that they thought it an acceptable Sacrifice to God, to cut the Throats of those whom they could not convert. And lastly, that the Hollanders were a people that accorded with all Nations and Religions, and minded nothing but their Trade.

The Lord believ'd all these fraudulent Calumnies, and sent a Copy of the Letter to the Emperour, the substance whereof was, That the Spaniards in the Philippine Islands, and the Portugals in Japon, being in confederacy with the Christians of the Country, had sent to the Governour of Goa to send by a time prefix'd eight or ten Vessels, with Men and Arms, but especially a good number of Officers to command the Revolters, for that then there would be a numerous Army ready, and that they should easily make themselves Masters of Japon.

The Portugals were then under the Dominion of the Spaniard, and though they would suffer no Spaniard in their Indian Acquisitions but the Viceroy, yet several of the Religious Orders did slip into Japon, carried thither by a true and real zeal; yet this zeal, when once indiscreet, does as much mischief as covetousness it self. The Father Paulists, for so they call the Jesuits in the Indies, by reason that their Church in Goa is dedicated to St. Paul; these Jesuits I say, had made a fair progress, and gain'd great credit among the people, notwithstanding their their continual persecutions, according as the Lords of the Country were well or ill affected towards them. Their number therefore encreas'd, and the new Converts had this advantage, that they enrich'd themselves by Trading with the Portugals, who had made a positive Agreement not to Trade with the Bonzes. This provok'd the Bonzes against them, and the multitude of the Christians so far augmented the Emperour's jealousies and fears, that in a short time they produc'd the effects of open rage and cruelty.

The Jesuits had converted to the Faith a great Lord of the Kingdom, who liv'd most commonly at Bugen, in the Island of Ximo, a person of great Interest and Power in the Island. He had four Sons, two of which liv'd with him, and following his Example, had embrac'd the Catholick Faith. The Father was Baptiz'd by the name of Ignatius; the eldest of the two was call'd Francis, and the youngest Charles; the two eldest Sons were at Court in great favour with the Emperour. The younger of the two that had embrac'd the Christian Religion, addict'd himself wholly to the study of the Scripture, and retir'd with the Jesuits to their Seminary. His Example had wrought with a great number of young Lords, and as he was eloquent besides, he was of great use to the Jesuits in preaching the Gospel, and reclaiming the people from the grossness of their Errors.

The Japonners are naturally endow'd with a noble mind, and great inclination to Learning; so that there is nothing wanting in that Nation but able Teachers. Not but that they have Doctors of their own: the Dairy's Court is full of them; where they preserve the Annals of their Country, and pretend that Printing and Artillery were in use among them before they were known in Europe. From this Court come all their Books, in regard the persons that attend upon this Prince apply themselves only to their Studies. It is reported, that they learnt all these things by their frequent Commerce with the Chineses; and that they are also originally descended from them. And in truth, the greatest Province of the Island of Nippon is call'd Quanto, according to the name of the Sea-Coast part of China, where lies the greatest Traffick between the Japonners and Chineses. Moreover, if there be any credit to be given to the Chinese Histories, they say it was but a small part of their vast Empire; which extended it self from North to South 56 Degrees of Latitude, from the Frozen Sea to the Equinoctial Line, being bounded to the West by the Caspian Sea; and extending Eastward over all the Southern America to New Spain.

Father Thomas Barr, a Portuguese, has often told me when I was at Agra, a capital City of the Great Mogal, where the Jesuits have a very fair House, that this and several other young Lords improv'd themselves so far in six or seven years, that they were as Learned as their Masters themselves, and that they were more zealous in converting those of their Nation. Now the Jesuits at that time had no House for the Instruction of Youth and Profelytes, and therefore they desir'd this young Lord to lend them one of his. Thereupon he having four very fair ones; with great Revenues belonging to them, gave that which was nearest to the City to his Converters. A while after, the youngest of his Sons fell sick; and was carried to this House for the Air's sake, where he recover'd by the care of the Fathers; and the Prayers of the Christians; but his Father did not long enjoy the pleasure of so great a Cure, which seem'd almost miraculous; for he dy'd at what time both his Sons and the Christians stood most in need of his protection.

The two eldest, who were with the Emperour, understanding the Death of their Father, came to take possession of their Inheritance, and demanded of the Jesuits the House which their Father had given them; for in Japon no Parent can alienate the Estate of his Children; nay, when they come to such an Age, he is oblig'd to put them in possession of their Estates, reserving only such a proportion to himself. The Jesuits, loth to part with so fair a convenience, would not quit their hold, though it were for their own quiet, and to engage the whole Family to stand by them in their time of trouble. This refusal provok'd the two Brethren, and this quarrel between them and the Jesuits happen'd at the same time that the Dutch President was labouring to bring about his designs. He had notice of this dispute, and as he was a great Impostor, he made it his business to enflame the two Brothers, not only against the Jesuits, but against the Portugals in general, giving them a Copy of the Letter which he had fram'd, as is before-mention'd.

These two Lords, who were Favourites of the Emperour, joyning Interest of State to their particular Interest, made their complaints at Court, with extraordinary aggravations, urging that there was no security for the Estates of particular Men, for the quiet of the Empire, nor the Life of the Prince, unless not only all the Portugals, but also all the Natives of Japon, who had suck'd their Errors, were exterminated out of the Island. To make good the reasons of their Exasperation they shew'd the Emperour a Copy of the Letter, and put him into such a fright, as well for his Person, as the Empire, that he would admit of no justification on the other side.

Some of his Lords, who were Friends to the Portugals, besought him to examin the truth of what was alledg'd, before he proceeded to utmost extremities against a whole Nation, and against his own Subjects. But he was inexorable, and presently gave private Orders to certain Commissioners, to go through all the Provinces of the Empire, and to banish not only the Portugals, but also all the Christian Natives. Now in regard they had their private confederates, as well in the Court, as in other places, they had intelligence, in all parts, of the cruel resolution tak'n against them, though none were more zealous and faithful to them than the two Lords of Ximo, Francis and Charles. Thereupon the Christians met together to consult for their own safety, and their common preservation, and seeing all attempts to justify themselves prove ineffectual, they resolv'd to stand upon their guards, and to dye in the defence of their Innocency and Religion. The two Lords put themselves at the head of the Christians Army, the elder of which had been a Souldier, and understood the Art of War; the younger kept up their Spirits and Courages by his continual Exhortations.

The Emperour's Commissioners understanding that the Christians were thus embody'd, gave him speedy notice thereof, but said nothing either of the number of their Forces, or of their designs. The Jesuits and Austin Fryars at Goa, told me, that the Army of the Christians consisted of above 40000 Men, besides those recruits that came up to them before and after the Battel was fought.

The

The Emperour not beleiving that the Army was so numerous, sent against them at first not above 25 or 30000 Men; under the Command of the youngest of the two Lords of Ximō, that liv'd at Court. But those Troops were no sooner upon their March, but he rais'd new Forces, and sent another Army after them, consisting of 40000 Men; commanded by the young Lord; to whom the Dutch President had shew'd the Letter first of all.

The Christians having intelligence of the approach of these two Armies, prepar'd to receive them, choosing an advantageous place to intrench themselves. The first Army soon appear'd in sight of the Christians, who lay so encamp'd, that the Imperialists could discover no more than one part of them. However, before the Engagement, the youngest of the Christian Brothers advis'd his other Brother to send to the General of the Emperour's Army, who was their Brother likewise, to desire Peace, and to beseech him to intercede for them to the Emperour, and to assure him, that they were ready to lay down their Arms, and throw themselves at his Feet, and to justify their Innocency. To this purpose a Letter was fram'd and sent to the General, but the Messenger that carry'd it was nail'd to a Cross in sight of the whole Army of the Christians, and at the same time the Enemy came on with great fury to assail them.

The Fight lasted almost three hours with equal advantage; the Captain of the Imperialists seeking every where for his Brothers, while they strove to avoid him. The Christians, who knew that all their safety consisted in their Victory, and that there was otherwise no hope of pardon, fought with so much valour, that the Imperialists were forc'd to give ground. Their General was slain upon the place; and at length the whole Army of the Idolaters was cut in pieces.

This Victory wrought the Conversion of several of the Idolaters; and the Christians, after they had given thanks to God three days together, prepar'd themselves for a second Combat, not doubting but the other Army would set upon them while they were weary, and weaken'd by the last Battell. But that General more prudent than the former, only posted himself where the Christians could not come at him; and writ to the Court the particulars of the Defeat of the first Army, upon which he expected the Emperour's Orders.

In the mean while, the Army of the Christians daily encreas'd, so that in a few days they were above fifty thousand strong. The Emperour, resolv'd to stifle this Revolt in the beginning, sent Orders through all his Empire to make new Levies; and all the while the Dutch President's Confederates ceas'd not to aggravate him against the Christians, not suffering the other Courtiers to open his Eyes, and prevent so unjust a prosecution. The defeat of his Army had put him into such a rage besides, that though the Captains of the Christians Army did all they could to clear themselves from the false accusations laid upon them, and to obtain their pardons, there was no possibility of being heard.

The Emperour call'd his Council, where the wisest were of opinion, that it would prove the best way to receive the submissions of the Christians, who offer'd to lay down their Arms upon a general pardon, and the free exercise of their Religion. But the President's Cabal carry'd it beyond this sober advice, and the Emperour, exasperated by his Impostures, took the wrong course. Thereupon the Council resolv'd with all speed to raise a vast Army; which was to joyn with the other, and so to ruin the Christians all at a blow. The Dairi also, who is consulted upon all important affairs, approv'd this Council. Thereupon the Lords who are oblig'd to furnish the Emperour with Men, strove who should bring their Troops and Companies first to the Randevouz appointed, which was neer the place where the second Army lay; so that when both Armies were joyn'd together, there was in the Field a Body of 150000 Men. The Brother of the General, who was slain in the first Battel, commanded under the Emperour, who resolv'd to go in person.

But first of all he caus'd a Proclamation to be made in his Camp, whereby he forbad any Quarter to be given to any Christian, unless it were the two Brothers, whom he intended to punish openly; and that they who left the Field before the Christians were banish'd, should be put, they and their Kindred, to the most cruel Deaths that could be imagin'd; but that they should be rewarded that brought the Head of a Christian to the Emperour. The Copies of this Proclamation were scatter'd in the Army of the Christians, though they did no harm but only encourag'd them against the Idolaters, seeing there was no hope of pardon.

Nevertheless the youngest of the two Brothers offer'd to go and throw himself at the Emperour's Feet, to implore his clemency in the name of the whole Army; saying withall, That he should accompt himself happy to suffer Martyrdom to shew his Innocency; but they would not suffer him to stir. All he could obtain from them, was to write a Letter full of respect, submission, and repentance for what had been already done, declaring that they were ready to lay down their Arms, if the Emperour would grant them pardon, and the free Exercise of their Religion, offering with the hazard of their Lives to make out the falsity of all those things wherewith they had been accus'd.

This was by an Idolater carry'd to a certain Lord who secretly favour'd the Christians; but the Emperour toar it without reading it, vowing at the same time, that he would never return to his Court till the Idolaters were all extirpated. The Christian Army understanding the Emperour's resolution, minded nothing more then their own defence. 'Tis true, the Ground where they lay was advantagious enough for the smallness of their Number, but the Idolaters were three to one; besides that the Idolaters of the Country, who favour'd the Christians before, now declar'd all against them so soon as they saw the Imperial Army. So that now both Armies lying so near together, several hot Skirmishes pass'd between 'em; and at length it came to a general Battel. At first the Christians overthrew the Idolaters, not able to stand before them: with so much vigour did the youngest of their Chieftains assail them. He was remarkable for his Habit that day, but more remarkable for his courage; so that the Field was cover'd with the Bodies of the slain, fear and dread possessing the yielding Enemy. But while the Victor forgot his Brother's advice, and pursu'd too far from the Body of the Army, he was encompass'd on every side, wounded, and being carried away by the press of his Enemies, was at length taken, and lead before the Emperour. His eldest Brother, more experienc'd in War, rally'd and recall'd those that had follow'd his Brother, and till Night maintain'd the advantages, which he had got over the Imperialists, who were still supply'd with fresh Succours, as necessity requir'd. The next day the Fight was renew'd again by break of day, and with a success as honourable, but more bloody to the Christians.

The third day the Emperour enrag'd at such a resistance, caus'd them to be set upon in several places at one time. The General of the Christians Army rode from Rank to Rank, encouraging the Souldiers both by his Exhortations, and his Example: but at length having receiv'd several wounds, he was overlaid by the multitude of his Enemies that crouded to his destruction. And now the General being lost, and the Christians having no person to command them, it ceas'd to be a Combat, and became a Massacre. However, resolving to dye with their Swords in their hands, they flung themselves into the thickest of their Enemies, and Sacrific'd themselves to their own Innocency. Their Camp was soon forc'd, and all the old Men, Women, and Children put to the Sword, except some few that escap'd and hid themselves in the Mountains, who afterwards made a relation of this bloody Story to them who rehears'd it to me.

This was the deplorable end of the Christians, and indeed of the Christianisme of Japon, which the President procur'd by his impostures and fallacies. And it has been made appear by three exact accompts, that there has perish'd, either in Battels or by Tortures, above 60000 Christians. The eldest of their Captains suffer'd a most cruel Martyrdom for seven days, neither could any offer, that the Emperour could make him for his Brothers and his own Valours sake, induce him to renounce the Christian Faith. After that, there was a kind of Inquisition set up thorough the whole Empire, which lasted for several years, whereby those that persever'd in the Faith, were condemn'd to most intolerable Torments, in so much that the Relation which Van Varen, a Hollander, whose credit it would be a vanity to question in this particular, cannot be read over without Horrour. In sixteen years, that is, from 1613 to 1629, the Christians were so multiply'd, that there were above 400000; but in the year 1649, the same Hollander relates, that those Japonners who were brought from thence by the Company's Ships to Amsterdam, affirm'd, that Christianity was utterly extirpated out of the Island.

Being at Ozli, a large Town upon the fairest Arm of the Ganges, I met a Holland Merchant, who had serv'd the Company in Japon a long time, and had made several Voyages. He came thither with two Ships laden with Bars of Silver and Copper, which he had exchang'd for Silks, which the Hollanders buy at Bengale. This Merchant knowing I was there, came to visit me, and I finding him to be a sincere honest Man, and well vers'd in the affairs of Japon, especially in reference to the last persecution of the Christians, grew covetous of his converse, and invited him often to my House. In our familiar discourses concerning the settlement of the Hollanders in the East-Indies, and of the extraordinary gain which they make by their Trade there, and passing thus from one thing to another, at length I ask'd him who was the Author and Contriver of a Massacre so horrid, as that was reported to be. Whereupon he related to me all the particulars of which I have here made a recital, and many more which I have forgot or omitted, as being either not pertinent to my subject, or else already related by others. He had his information from such of the Natives that had escap'd out of the Battel, and several of the Idolater

Merchants, in whose memories the fact was then fresh: and indeed he was so ingenious in his Story, that I could not find any motive to incite me to misdoubt the truth of it. For many times he could not forbear shedding tears, and to interrupt his discourse with his sighs, often imprecating Heav'n's Vengeance upon the President, and protesting he wonder'd the Company employ'd him so long. But God reserv'd his punishment to himself. For the deserts of his crimes always attending him, and provoking judgments and misfortunes upon whatever Enterprize he took in hand, he miserably perish'd in sight of Lisbon in fair weather. All the men in the Ship were sav'd; only he returning to recover a certain Cabinet of Jewels which he had there, the Ship split, and the Portugals had the satisfaction to see him swallow'd up in the Sea, who had been the occasion of the Ruin of so many of their Country-men in Japon; and immediately they rang their Bells in the City for joy of his Death.

In my last Voyage to the Indies I was at Bandar-Abassi, where the Hollanders have a Factory. Thither arriv'd two Vessels from Japon to take in Silks, which the Hollanders buy of the Persians to exchange in Japon. The Captain of one of the Ships told me, that during several trading Voyages which he had made to that Island, the Emperour had caus'd two Inquisitions to be made after the Christians; in the first of which the Inquisitors met with 247, who were all most exquisitely tormented to Death; in the latter they only found 63, among whom were seventeen Children, twelve Girls and five Boys, of which the eldest were not above thirteen years of Age.

Among all the persecutions which the Christians suffer'd, there was none comparable to this for extremity of Torments: For the Japonners are the most ingenious in cruelty of any people in the World, and the most constant in suffering. For there have been Children from ten to a dozen years old, who for 60 days together have endur'd to have their Bodies fasten'd to the Cross, half burnt, half torn in pieces, while their Executioners forc'd them to eat, on purpose to prolong their Lives in misery; and yet they would not renounce the Faith which they had embrac'd. Neither did this barbarous Inquisition extend only to the Christians, but to their Kindred and Relations, nay, to their very Neighbours. For if a Priest were taken in any House, all the people in that House, and the Houses adjoining, were hall'd to Execution, for not having made the discovery.

At the beginning of every year there is a new Inquisition, at which time all that can write are requir'd to subscribe, or else the chief of the Family subscribes for all the rest, that they neither are Christians, nor are acquainted with any Christians, and that they abominate Christianity as a Religion dangerous to the State.

Don John of Braganza, being advanc'd to the Crown, that sudden change which in one day, and without the least Tumult in Lisbon, wrested the Crown of Portugal from the King of Spain, wrought the same effect at Goa. All the Portugals at Goa at the same time acknowledg'd their new Sovereign; the Viceroy who was a Spaniard, was sent away to Spain by the first Vessels that were homeward bound; and Don Philip de Mascarennas, a Portugal, Governour of Ceylan, came to Goa, and took upon him the command of Viceroy.

So

So soon as he came to the Government, his first thoughts were how to Establish the Trade of the Portugals in Japon, which when they were expell'd, amounted to three Millions of Pardo's yearly, one Pardo being worth twenty seven Sous of French Money. The hopes therefore of regaining so great a loss, made him toward the end of the year 1642, take a resolution to send a solemn Embassy to the Emperour of Japon, furnish'd with magnificent Presents: For which reason he made choice of what was most rare, and most likely to be acceptable to the Emperour, and the Grandees of his Court. The most costly of these Presents was a piece of Lignum Aloes, otherwife call'd wood of Calambour, four Foot in length, and two Foot in Diameter; a larger piece than which the Indies had never seen, having cost 40000 Pardo's. To this he added a great quantity of fair Coral Beads of an extraordinary bigness. This is the most acceptable Present that can be sent to the Lords of Japon, which they fasten to the Strings wherewith they draw their Pouches together. With these he sent a great number of Carpets and Hangings of Cloth of Gold, Silver, and Silk, and several pieces of Tissue of Gold and Silver. 'Tis said the whole Present cost the City of Goa above eight hundred thousand Pardo's, which amounts to about 86666 l. 13 s. 4 d. of English Money. Besides all this, the two great Ships which were prepar'd for the Embassador, carry'd one of them 50 Peeces of Canon, and the other 35, both laden with all sorts of Commodities which are esteem'd and priz'd in Japon, amounting to about 83333 l. 6 s. 8 d. Sterling. The Equipage of the Embassador was no less sumptuous. And because the Viceroy would not be thought to give any occasion of offence to the Emperour, he would not suffer one Jesuit in the Train, but only four Augustins for the Admiral, and four Jacobins for the other, Men of discretion and conduct. While I was at Goa, in the year 1648, I met with some of these Fathers, who gave an exact accompt of the Embassy.

They made a prosperous Voyage, and arriv'd happily at their intended Port. But you must understand, that when any Ship arrives at Japon, no persons are permitted to come ashore, 'till the Governour of the place have an accompt who they are, that they may give notice thereof to the Emperour, and know his pleasure, whether they shall be received or no. In the mean time the Ships rode in a very dangerous place, at the entry of the Haven, into which there was no steering, without the assistance of the Native Pilots.

The Governour of Nangasacki surpriz'd to understand that they were Portugueses, wrote in all haste to the Emperour. The Dutch President being inform'd of the news, play'd all the pranks he could, us'd all the contrivances imaginable to frustrate the success of the Embassy, and to ruine the Vessels that brought the Embassador and his Presents. To which purpose he found a way to bribe the Courier, who was sent with the Emperours Orders, so that instead of twenty days, which were sufficient for his journey, he made it above two Months before he deliver'd his dispatches. During which time the two Ships had suffer'd very bad weather upon the Coasts, and endur'd many a severe Storm. At length the Orders came that none should be permitted to Land but the Embassador, the two Captains, and the two Pilots, to give an accompt of the subject and cause of their coming. The Embassador being Landed, acquainted the Governour that he came to compliment the the Emperour in the behalf of the King his Master, and to assure him that they were no longer under the Power of the King of Spain. That about a year since, a lawful Heir of Portugal had recover'd the Diadem of his Ancestors which the Spaniards had usurp'd. That this new King was so just and generous a Prince, that understanding that some of his Subjects had deserted the Island of Japon, without paying their Debts, he had now sent to make a general satisfaction; but chiefly out of that respect which obliges all Sovereigns newly come to the Crown, to give notice thereof to those Princes, whose friendship they desire.

The Governour inform'd the Emperour of all these things; but the President having as good intelligence by means of his Friends at Court, alledg'd to the Emperour that they were Rebels; who came from the utmost parts of the West, to bring the News and Example of their Revolt to Japon: That the natural restlessness of this Nation caus'd frequent disturbances and revolutions among them. That they were never long at rest themselves; nor would suffer others to be at quiet. That considering the experience he had had, he could not be either too cautious for the security of his person, or the tranquillity of his Empire. Lastly, that the Emperour and the Empire would be ruin'd past recovery, if those people were ever admitted to set footing therein.

This Counsel well seconded by the rest of the Cabal, easily made an impression in the Heart of the Prince naturally Barbarous, and an Enemy to the Christians. Thereupon he sent an Order to the Governour to invite all the whites aboard, and to treat them for eight days in the best manner he could. At the end of eight days they were order'd to repair aboard again, and at the same time he made a Present to the Embassadour, and chief of his Train, consisting of six great Cabinets, and six Coffers lacker'd with black, with Figures in Relief, intermix'd with spangles of Gold, all the Embellishments being of Massie Gold. With them were six Cabinets, and six Coffers, lacker'd with Red, Embellish'd after the same manner with Silver. I saw some of them when I was at Goa, and I must confess I never beheld any so rare and beautiful in that kind, which made me admire the ingenious Industry of the Artists of Japon; Our European imitations of their workmanship being no way comparable to them.

The Embassadour having receiv'd his Present, had Order to remove all the Goods in the second Vessel into the Admiral. He would have made great Presents to the Governour, who refus'd them, telling the Embassadour withall, that he had express command to refuse them, and to declare to the Embassadour, that if he did not make hast away, he would sink his Ship. That the Emperour his Master had made a new prohibition, forbidding all Portugals and Spaniards to venture near his Dominions upon any pretence whatsoever; nay, though it were upon pretence of an Embassy, upon pain of being crucifi'd upon the place, without liberty to speak for themselves. As for the Debts of the Portugals, he had undertaken to discharge them himself; only he had sent that Present to the King his Master to thank him for that Embassy. The Embassadour had no sooner remov'd the Goods out of the second Vessel into the Admiral, but they sank her before his face. And not contented with that affront, the Governour sent for all the Blacks that were in the Admiral, and cut off their Heads, pretending they were Indians, and that, as such, they could not be ignorant of the Rigorous prohibitions which the Emperour had put forth, forbidding all Strangers, except the Hollanders, to set footing in Japon.

After the Portugal Embassadour was thus barbarously frustrated and dismiss'd, he sent News thereof to the General at Batavia, urging him to execute the design which the Hollanders had upon Macao; telling him also, That though there were a probability of a League between the Hollander and the Portugal against the Spaniards, yet that it could be no harm to seize Macao beforehand, as they had made themselves Masters of several places, while the Portugals were under the King of Spain. The General taking the President's advice, was ready to set Sail upon this enterprize, when a Messenger from Portugal brought him the News of the Treaty concluded between Portugal and Holland; as also of the Navy which the Hollanders had sent to Lisbon to aid the Portugals. At first he made as if it had been a false Rumour, and put the Messenger in Prison; nevertheless while he delay'd the departure of the Fleet, he receiv'd express Orders from his Superiours to Treat the Portugals as Friends and Allies. So that he was constrain'd to turn all his Forces against the Molucca Islands, then in the possession of the Spaniards.

The President was very sorry for the last News, by reason that the General and he had great designs upon the Conquest of that place, and had promis'd the Company by that means to make them absolute Masters of the Trade of China, and of all the East. True it is, that Macao is very advantageously seated for those that design to be Masters of those Seas, especially upon the Coasts of Quantungo and Fockien, which are the Provinces, whither are brought down all the Merchandizes of this Empire. It lies at the Mouth of the Gulph of Canton, in a small Peninsula adjoining to a larger Island, and built upon a kind of a Promontory, on three sides environ'd with the Sea, which no Ship can come neer by reason of the Flats, unless it be on that side next the Port, which is defended by a strong Fortress. This City drew from the only Fair of Quanchin 1300 Chests of Silks of all sorts, every Chest containing 150 pieces, and 2500 Lingots of Gold, not reckoning the raw Silks, the Gold Wire, and other Merchandizes: whence it may be easily judg'd what advantage the Portugueses made of it; and wherefore the President desir'd so much to expell them from thence.

But his Designs were disappointed, not only by the revolution in Portugal, but also by the loss which the Hollanders sustain'd of the Island of Formosa, which the Chineses took from them, following the advice of a French Souldier, whom the Governour of Tayovan had refus'd to dismiss after his time was out. For the better understanding this accident, you must know that the Hollanders being sett'd in Japon, and having excluded all other Nations from thence, except the Chineses, whom the Emperour permitted to return, after that the Massacre committed by the Japonners in a City of China, of which they had a desire to make themselves Masters, had caus'd a Cessation of the Commerce between the two Kingdoms, and constrain'd the Emperour of China to set a price upon the Heads of the Japonners. Nevertheless the Hollanders did all they could to make a new Rupture between the people, or else themselves to seize upon some place that lay proper to ruin the Trade of the Chineses to Japon.

To this purpose, not daring to attempt upon the Portugueses, they over-ran the Seas which environ'd the neighbouring Islands, and took the the Vessels of the Chineses which were bound for Macao, exercising strange Cruelties upon the people that had escap'd into those Islands, after the irruption of the Tartars into China. Coxinga, the Son of Chinchilunge, that famous Pirate, who sav'd the remainders of that ruin'd Empire, then commanded those people, and was become formidable to the Tartars themselves. Who to revenge himself upon the Dutch Pirates, undertook the Siege of Tayovan, where they usually retir'd, and by gaining that place drove them wholly out of Formosa.

This is a large Island plac'd at the poynt of the Philippines, stretching out in length from North to South, and to the West lying opposite to the Provinces of Fockien, and Quantung. The Chineses call it Talukien. Since which time, 'tis very probable that the Spaniards gave it the name of Formosa, from its beauty and fertility. They being the first people of Europe that discover'd it, and inhabited it; and upon one of its Promontories to the North built the Fort of Kiling. The natural Inhabitants live almost all in the Woods and Mountains, where they maintain themselves by hunting the Hart, and wild Boar, whose dry'd Flesh, Skins, and Horns they sell to the Sangleys, who in exchange bring them other necessaries. The little Island of Tayovan lent its Name to the little Fort which the English built, over against the great Island; it was very convenient for the Hollanders, who made great advantage of the Cattel, Hides, and Horns, both of Harts and Bufalo's, which they carry'd from thence, and sold to the Chineses and Japonners, who make great use thereof in several of their Trades and Manufactures. But the chiefest advantage which the Hollanders made of this Island consisted in this, that it lay in the middle way between Batavia and Japon, and serv'd as a place of security for their Ships in bad Seasons, and to take in refreshments. There also they laded off several of the Goods of the Chineses, which they took by way of Piracy from the Chineses, or which were brought them by the Sangleys, who are the Original Merchants of the Chineses, settled at the Philippines, but who drive the greatest Trade of that Country, independent from the Spaniards.

Coxinga, though an Idolater and a Pirate, banish'd out of his Country, and provok'd by the Hollanders, had so much humanity as to send to the General at Batavia to send away Vessels to fetch away his Men, and deliver'd them all without suffering them to receive the least injury. He had his Friends and Favourers in the Emperour of Japon's Court, as being a declar'd Enemy to the Tartars, whose neer Neighbourhood the Japonners cannot endure. For so quick a Conquest of so many Lands and Provinces in seven years, as it were only upon sight of the Enemy, had very much alarm'd them. He by his Friends acquainted the Emperour of the acts of Hostility, committed by the Hollanders against the Chinese Merchants: Adding moreover, that they had made private propositions to league themselves with the common Enemy, and that it was one of the Nations of the North, born for the desolation of other Countries, and to invade the Peace of Empires. That they had settled themselves in the Islands of the East only by treachery and violence. That for some years since, they had made it their business to cruise the Seas between China and Japon, on purpose to make themselves absolute Masters of the Trade, and that if he did not take a speedy course, they would do the same mischief in his Dominions which the Tartars had done in China.

The

The President had much ado to divert the Storm, for the most potent Lords at Court, although his Pensioners and Friends, began to open their Eyes, and in some measure took Coxinga's part, saying, That the Chineses were unfortunate enough, in being laid waft by the Tartars, without being persecuted and afflicted by the Hollanders. That seeing that after they had been expell'd their Country, they had nothing left but their Boats, and some few Rocks for their places of refuge, it was a piece of inhumanity to disturb them in their last Sanctuaries, and to deprive them of their liberty of the Sea, and their Commerce with Japon, from whence those miserable Exiles had their chiefest support. The Bonzes, the Merchants, the vulgar People, all took the Chineses part. Thereupon the Emperour sent for the Dutch President, and told him, I understand, said he, that thy Company abuses my Protection, and that their Vessels, instead of being contented with the Trade which I have permitted them, presume to play the Pyrates upon the Chineses, and to trouble the Seas adjoining to my Empire. If I hear any more of these complaints, I will cause thee and all thy Nation to be Crucifi'd. I know not how the President appeas'd the Emperour's fury; this I know in general, that the Hollanders made a secret alliance with the Tartars against Coxinga. Him the Inhabitants of Fockien call'd to their assistance, having rais'd an Army of 200000 Men; whereupon he went to aid them with a very powerful Navy. After several Skirmishes, the Tartars and Chineses came to a pitch'd Field, where the Captain of the Tartars having plac'd the best part of his Cavalry in Ambush, order'd his Men to retreat by degrees, till they had drawn the Chineses into the Ambuscade; at what time the Tartars encompassing them on every side, kill'd 80000 upon the place; Coxinga with his Navy not being able to relieve them.

During this War, the Hollanders took their opportunity, and made themselves Masters of the Island of Fishers, between Formosa and the Coast of Fockien. In a short while after Coxinga dy'd, and Savia his Uncle, the richest Merchant of China, who out of his own revenue had disburs'd the expences of the last War, grew weary of the charge, and was desirous to make Peace with the Tartars. Of which one of the Sons of Coxinga being advertiz'd, seiz'd upon his Uncles person, and shut him up in a close Prison, where he kill'd himself for madness. The Hollanders overjoy'd at the Death of Savia, who had always hinder'd them from the Trade of the Province of Fockien, sent a Navy against his Nephew in favour of the Tartars, who made War against him all along the Sea-Coast. Several Combats happen'd between the Juncks of the Islanders and the Holland Vessels in view of the Tartars, who satisfi'd themselves with being only Spectators. But all the benefit which the Hollanders reap'd from the advantages which they obtain'd over the Islanders, was only to put into the Hands of the Tartars the Cities of Bemos and Quesnoy, and all the places thereabouts, which Coxinga's Party possess'd before. For notwithstanding all their kindness, the Tartars would not assist them to retake Tayovan; so that they only were content to build certain small Forts in the small Islands adjoining to Formosa: and since my return from the Indies, I never could inform my self of the truth of the issue of that Enterprize.

But the Hollanders were not content with their settlement at Firmando, which was an Island both desert and barren, seated upon a Streight, which separates the Point of the Land of Corea from Japon, a place no way commodious for their Designs of Engrossing the Trade of China, as being too remote from Nangisauqui: Besides, that the North and South Winds are so violent at their Seasons in this Streight, between the two Coasts, that it is impossible to come near the shoar when they blow. The President therefore having such good luck in the Expulsion of the Portugals out of Japon, doubted not but that he might obtain the small Island of Kisma, an Island that had been wholly deserted ever since the Habitations of the people had been destroy'd. At first he only desir'd leave to build a small Tenement for the conveniency of the Factors. Now between this Island and Nangisauqui, there is only a narrow Frith, not above a Musquet Shot over. Here the President desir'd the Governour that he might make a Bridge of Boats for a more easie intercourse between the City and the Port. The Governour gain'd by Presents, gave him leave to build the Bridge, but seeing that the Hollanders made an ill use of it, and that they came too frequently and numerously into the City, he built two Forts at both ends of the Bridge, and furnish'd them with Souldiers, who were to take notice who pass'd to and fro. He also publish'd an Order, That such Hollanders as came by day into the Town, should return to their Lodgings before night, upon pain of Death. This Order, and the little conveniency which they had for Lodging in their own Quarters, very much troubl'd them; so that the President made new Applications at Court, and obtain'd leave to build a Factory, and Warehouses for their Goods.

The Governour thereupon sent a Surveyor to the Hollanders, to mark out the Ground which the Emperour had given them to build upon. This person being largely rewarded, made them good measure, and yet they were not contented; so that in the Night-time they had enlarg'd their Quarters, by removing the first marks. The Governour, being advertiz'd thereof, began to be very angry; but they found means to appease him with their Presents: so that he easily condescended to the slight reasons which they gave him for what they had done. Thus in a short time they finish'd their work, which was without encompass'd with a Wall, much like a Garden Wall, but within contain'd a real Fort, flank'd and lin'd according to all the Rules of Art, and which, the outward Wall being beaten down, not only defended their Bridge, but commanded the entry into the Haven of Nangisauqui.

They took great care not to admit any but Hollanders, for fear their Design should be discover'd. So that when the whole was finish'd, the President gave advice to the General at Batavia what he had done, desiring him to send him eight Brass Guns, so broken, as to be easily put together in the places where they were broken. He adviz'd him also to put them up in Hogsheads, pack'd up like other Goods; and instead of Mariners, to send a good number of Souldiers, habited like Mariners, for the security of the Factory. But this Stratagem had not that success which he expected; for about that time the Emperour had sent a new Governour to Nangisauqui: So that when the Ships arriv'd at Batavia, the new chang'd Officers, being more vigilant than the former, coming to weigh the Bales as they were put ashore, and finding certain Hogsheads at the bottom of the hold, which they could not remove by reason of their weight, they presently brake them up, and perceiving there the broken pieces of Canons, carry'd some of them to the Governour, who immediately sent intelligence thereof to Teddo, of which the President had as suddain notice by his Pensioners. He having his invention at command, repairs forthwith to the Emperour's Court, and there tells the Emperour, That he had receiv'd Orders from his Superiours to present him with certain Peeces of Canon, made according to the newest Invention of his Country, the use whereof was so convenient, that they were with little difficulty and trouble to be drawn up, and made use of, where others could not possibly be brought to play: and that he thought no Present could be more acceptable or serviceable to him, to render him Victorious over his Enemies. Upon this the Emperour was very well satisfi'd, and sent to the Governour of Nangisagui to send him those Guns, and withall, not to molest the Hollanders, either in their Factory, or in vending their Wares.

Having so fortunately disengag'd himself out of these Briers, he lays another design, and sends to the General at Batavia, a person of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit like himself, to set out two Vessels, to make a discovery of all the Coasts of Japon, and particularly of those Coasts which were next the Gold Mines, and to see if they could find any safe Harbour for Ships to ride in, in those tempestuous Seas, or any places proper to fortifie, that they might no longer depend upon the uncertain humour of the Court of Japon, which was as inconstant as their Seas. The General provided two Ships, and furnish'd them with excellent Pilots, good Souldiers, expert Mariners, and Provisions for two years, with all other Necessaries and Instruments, as well for delving as building. One of the seven of the General's Council was chos'n Supervisor of the Enterprize. 'Tis said, that those two Vessels skirted all along the Coast of Japon, from the East to the South, and from the South to the North, fetching a compass about the Islands to the 47 deg. of Northern Latitude, and that they discover'd one Island which they call'd The States Island, and afterwards touch'd upon another Land which they nam'd The Company's Land, inhabited by White people, with long Hair, habited after the Japon fashion, which they found to be a Continent adjoyning to Niulhan, and Corea; and that after they had wander'd a long time upon the Sea, without any other design then to make new Discoveries, they pass'd through the Straights of Sanguar, which separates the Land of Jesso from Japon, and kept along those Coasts of Japon to the East, to observe the Bays of Aizu, and Xendai, where are the Gold Mines. In that part a furious Tempest took them, in sight of the Mountains, where the Gold Mines lye, which lasted four days together. The second of these Vessels run full against a Rock, and split her self, with the total loss of every Mothers Son in the Vessel. The Admiral held out a longer time, but coasting the Land where the Mountains of Sataque appear, the Tempest grew so violent, that she also brake against the Rocks. In this second Shipwreck only the Admiral, and thirteen persons more escap'd, partly by the help of the Planks, and partly by Swimming. The Japonners upon the Coast presently ran to view them, and wonder'd to see people in those parts, whose Language they did not understand. Nevertheless, they entertain'd them civilly enough; but in regard they were Strangers, and that there was a strict prohibition not to receive any Strangers among them upon any pretence whatsoever, they were at a great loss what to do with 'em. One, wiser then the rest, advis'd his Brethren to carry them to the Emperour, whose counsel was follow'd; and so they took their journey toward Reddo, which was above a hundred Leagues off.

The Emperour, being inform'd of their arrival, order'd that they should be civilly us'd; and at the end of eight days sent for them, and caus'd them to be ask'd, of what Country they were; and what Design brought them into his Seas? The Admiral, who was a person of a ready ingenuity, answer'd, That he was a Hollander, who all his life time had serv'd his Country as a Souldier, where he had the command of a thousand Horse, and two thousand Foot; at what time Fortune, or rather the care of preserving his Honour, forc'd him from his Native Soyl. I was, said he, one of the chief Commanders in the Army, and though I say it, my Service had gain'd me a fair reputation. The Prince, who commanded us, had a great confidence in me, which made one of his near Relations jealous of me; so that he was not only content to do me all ill Offices with the General, but sought all occasions to pick a quarrel with me. I dare be bold to say, that had he not been so nearly related to the Prince, I should not have taken his affronts so long patiently. But at length he provok'd that patience to such a degree, and so deeply and openly affronted me, that I was constrain'd to meet him with my Sword in my hand. His misfortune and mine so order'd it, that I kill'd him at the first push. My Friends assist'd me to make my escape, and kept me hid for some days, thinking to have appeas'd the Princes anger; but it continu'd so violent, that they advis'd me to absent my self for some years. Therefore to render my Exile less tedious, and that I might be still doing something for the Service of my Country, I desir'd my Friends to furnish me with two Ships, with a resolution to seek out and destroy all those Pirates that infested the Indian Seas. I have been in chace of them for a whole year together; and sometimes we met with Tempests so violent, that drove us we know not whither our selves, my Pilots not being experienc'd in the Eastern Seas. Soon after meeting with another Tempest no less rude and boystrous, we were forc'd to let our Ships drive as the Winds themselves were pleas'd to force them, which at length drove us upon the Coasts of this Empire, where we have suffer'd Shipwrack, not having sav'd above fourteen of four hundred; which I brought along with me. Happy in such a misfortune, to be cast upon the Territories of a Prince so potent and generous; that, no question, will have compassion upon our miseries.

When the Interpreter had repeated this Relation to the Emperour, the Prince, and all the Lords of the Court were very much concern'd, and admir'd both the Courage and Aspect of the Stranger. The Emperour sent him very rich Presents, and to all those of his Company; and gave Order, that he should be conducted to Kisma, to the Holland Factory, and that he should be well treated upon the way, during the whole journey, which was five and twenty or thirty days Travel. There this famous Champion stay'd four Months, in expectation of the Ships that come every year from Batavia to Japon; so that he had time enough to make a full Relation of the Lands which he had observ'd, and of all the particulars of the Shipwrack. One day as he was telling how he had cajoll'd the Emperour, and that the President was applauding the quickness of his wit for inventing such an imaginary piece of Knight-

Errantry,

Errantry, a Japoneſe Boy that ſerv'd the Preſident, heard all the diſcourſe, without being obſerv'd by his Maſter. Some Months after, the Preſident had beaten this Boy, which he, as all the Japoneſes are of a fiery and vindictive Nature, reſolving to revenge, went to the Governour of Nangifaqui, and repeated to him the whole Diſcourſe between his Maſter and the Admiral. The Governour, finding it to be a buſineſs of importance, ſends advice thereof to the Court. The Emperour was ſo enrag'd at the injury and affront put upon him, that he commanded the Governour to ſtop the Admiral and his Train, and to ſend him with a good Guard to Tedda, and not to let any Ship enter the Harbour, till he had had a full Examination of the matter.

This Order was not ſo ſecret, but that the Preſident's Friends had notice thereof, who preſently gave him intelligence of it ſo ſeaſonably, that the Admiral was ſent away before the Order came to the Governour. Eight days after, three Holland Vellels arriv'd at Kiſma, to whom the Governour ſent expreſs command to keep out at Sea, and not to come aſhore. The Preſident feigning to be ſurpriz'd at this Prohibition, went to the Governour to know the reaſon, who gave him this Answer, The Emperour, ſaid he, is acquainted with your tricks; you ſhall have no more kindneſs from me; I have ſent to Court to give notice of the arrival of your three Ships, and I ſhall follow my Orders when they come. Upon this the Preſident made no doubt but the Admiral's ſtory was diſcover'd; and recollecting with himſelf that he had beaten his Japoneſe Boy, and that he was run away from him, he ſoon conjectur'd at the Author of all the miſchief. In ſhort, the Governour receives his Orders, the Tenour whereof was, That he ſhould ſend away the three Vellels, without permitting them to land either Men or Goods; and that he ſhould tell the Preſident, That the Emperour was ſatiſfi'd that the Admiral was a Cheat and a Spy, whom he intended to puniſh ſeverely; and therefore, if he did not ſend for him to Japon by the firſt opportunity of the Winds; he would put to Death all thoſe of his Nation; and ſling their Goods into the Sea.

Upon the return of three Ships to Batavia, there was no ſmall hurly burly in the Iſland, for by them they underſtood the danger that their Country-men were in, if they did not ſend back the Admiral. Thereupon an extraordinary Council was call'd, to deliberate upon an affair of ſo great importance; who were all of one mind, that the Admiral was to be ſent back, and that it was better for one to ſuffer, than a whole Nation.

The Admiral being advertiz'd of this their reſolution, publicly proteſted againſt the violence and injuſtice they were about to do him; telling them, that he was born a Subject of the Republick of Holland, who had only the Power of his life and death; that in their Service, he would expoſe his life to a thouſand hazards, but that he was not oblig'd to ſacrifice himſelf for the particular Interests of a private Trade. The Miniſters took his part, and made it a caſe in Religion. The common people mutiny'd againſt the General, and the Tumult grew to that heat, that the Sea-men were ſent for from aboard their Ships to diſperſe the multitude. At length, by the interpoſition of a Miniſter, the buſineſs was brought to a concluſion; who perſwaded the Admiral by his ſmooth Language, to appeaſe the diſorder of the people, by ſubmitting to the Reſult of the Council. Thereupon he promis'd promis'd to return to Japon, provided they would allow him what he demanded, not only for his reward, but also that which should bear him out in that same new part which he had in his head to act.

First he demanded two Ships magnificently trim'd, a Train of fifty chosen Men, every one of which was to have three changes of Habit, of the richest Stuffs that could be had: Moreover 50000 Crowns for his Voyage, a Cupboard of Gold and Silver Plate, with all Equipage proportionable, and that those that accompany'd him should respect him, as a person of great Quality.

All this was allow'd him, and the Admiral departed from Batavia, and arriv'd well at Nangisau. The Governour surpriz'd at the beauty of the Vessels, could not believe them to be Merchants, and therefore sent to know who they were, but he was more surpriz'd when he knew that it was the Admiral. Forthwith he dispatch'd a Courier to the Emperour, to give him notice, and to inform him with what magnificence the Admiral was return'd. The President also sent, that he might have a favourable reception, and to desire his Friends to let the Emperour know, that this was a Person of great Quality, whom an Honourable Action had driven from his Country, and that he no sooner understood the accusation that lay against him, but that he was return'd with that Equipage that became him, to justifie himself.

Till the Order came, the Governour, according to custom, caus'd all the Sails and Rudders of the Ships to be brought to him, not permitting any person to come ashore. At length the Order came, that the Admiral and his Attendants should be receiv'd into the City, together with all things necessary for their persons, and that they should be convoy'd to Reddo, and that in all places where they came, they should be nobly treated. The President accompany'd the Admiral to assist him, as well with his Councils, as with the favour of his Friends. Their Entry was very magnificent, and the richness of their Habits brought the people from all parts, as being mainly greedy after Novelty, so that the noise thereof was spread all over the Court: Yet the Emperour would not admit them to their Audience upon the day which they desir'd.

Two Months were elaps'd, during which time the Admiral kept open Table, and display'd his dastling Riches to the Eyes of the Japoneses, and being of a quick and apprehensive wit, he caus'd himself to be instructed in the Language of the Island, and in a short time he began to understand many Words. When the Emperour sent for him, he clad himself and his Train in a richer Habit than that which they had on when he made his Entry. At first the Emperour seem'd to be angry; I understand, said he, that thou art an Impostor and a Traytor, that thy Birth is obscure, and that thou art come as a spy into my Kingdom, and therefore I am resolv'd to punish thee according to thy merits.

When the Interpreter had explain'd the Emperour's words, the Admiral with an undaunted countenance, Sir, said he, a Prince so great as you are, should rather be a comfort and support to the unfortunate, than add to their affliction. Fortune, that persecutes me, has in nothing been more cruel to me, than in raising those Calumnies, with which she has endeavour'd to blemish my reputation with your Majesty. She might expell me my Country, and cast me upon unknown Coasts at the other end of the World, but she can never inspire into me thoughts unworthy of my Birth. This is the second time I have been within your Dominions, the first by occasion of Shipwrack, the second to obey your Majesties commands. The first accuses none but the Winds. And had I been guilty of what I am accus'd, I should never have ventur'd my self into your hands so far off from your Power. But, Sir, my Accusers have one advantage which I have not; they speak your Language, I understand it not, nor how to make you apprehend the truth of my justification. Allow me eight Months to learn the Speech of your Country, and then, if you will be so gracious as to hear me, I make no doubt but to confound my Accusers, and to satisfie your Majesty in all things.

The Emperour was surpriz'd, and mov'd with his Answer, but more especially at his request of eight Months to learn the Japonick Language. I grant it thee, said the Emperour, for it is but just that a person accus'd should have both the Liberty and means to do it. And in the mean time I will take care that thou be honourably entertain'd in all places where thou hast a desire to reside.

The Admiral us'd this Liberty with so much prudence, and got so much the love of the Courtiers by his carriage and his liberality, that by their converse, he not only learnt the Language, but by vertue of their good Character, the Emperour would often send for him, and ask him several Questions concerning our Europe, in reference to the Qualities of the Countries, the Manners of the People, the several Forms of Government, the Extent of the several Kingdoms, their Riches, Strength, and War-like Discipline; of all which, the Admiral gave him so handsome an Accompt, that the Prince took great delight in his Discourse. And at length he had gain'd so much the favour and confidence of the Emperour, that he utterly laid aside all the ill thoughts which he had of him, and condemn'd to Death, as a false Witness, and a Traducer, the Japonesse that had accus'd him.

After so fortunate an escape, the Admiral thought it but common prudence to make a fair retreat in the Grandeur of his Reputation, and thereupon he took leave of the Emperour, who loaded him with Honours and Presents. The Courtiers were also sorry for his departure, so that some of them accompany'd him back, and took order for his entertainment, which was very magnificent all the way to Nangisaki, where he took Shipping a few days after, and return'd to Batavia.

All the People throng'd to the Port to see him when he Landed. He told them in few words the success of his Voyage. Some applauded his ingenuity and courage; others extoll'd the Service which he had done the Company and Nation. The Council receiv'd him also with thanks and praises, and gave him all the Gold and Plate which he had brought back. A while after he departed for Amsterdam, where he was no sooner arriv'd, but he presented a Petition to the States General against the East-India Company, for sending him back to Japon, and for reparation of the violence and injury done him. The business was long in debate, but at last the Company was condemn'd to pay him great damages, and Interest for the same.

But to return to the President: He began now to be weary of being confin'd to one Factory, though he made up his Pack well enough where he was. But his Ambition carry'd him farther, and he thought he had done Service enough to be advanc'd to a higher Dignity. Neither was his prefence fo neceffary at Japon, where he had fettl'd the Dutch Trade in as good a condition as it could well be. And in truth, the Hollanders had then almoft the whole Trade of the East-Indies. They had taken from the Engliſh, Formoſa, Amboyna, and Pooleſon, and by that means engroſs'd all the Trade of Cloves, Mace, and Nutmegs. They had taken Baton by ſurprize. The Inhabitants of the Celebes, Ternate, and Tidor, were become their Vaffals; and the King of Macassar having made an Alliance with them, had expell'd the Portugueſes out of his Dominions. By means of their Factories in Sumatra, they had got all the Pepper Trade of the Western Coaſt of that Iſland into their hands, beſides ſeveral other advantages which they had in ſeveral other places, where they had encroach'd upon the Portugals, Spaniards, and the Engliſh themſelves. The East-India Company at that time entertain'd 140 Ships, part Men of War, and part Merchant-men, provided with great Guns, Ammunition, and Proviſion of all ſorts, and in theſe Ships above 6000 Men, part Souldiers, part Mariners. Batavia was the Soul of their Conqueſts, made upon the Ruins of the Portugueſes, which had they lain all together, would have made a large Empire, and by which they might have grown infinitely rich, had not the expences of their Navies and Souldiers eaten out the gains of their vaſt Trade. One of their wiſeſt Generals told me frequently, we have, ſaid he, but too many Fortreſſes, we need no more then the Cape of Good Hope, and Batavia, Factories well fettl'd, good Ships, and honeſt Men to ſerve us. For in ſhort, their Officers pillage unmercifully, and cauſe the Commerce and Dominion of their Country-men to be deteſted by the Indians, through their Covetouſneſs and Cruelty.

I know my ſelf, that in the year 1664, the Expences of the Hollanders in the East-Indies amounted, communibus annis, to twelve Millions a year, not to reckon Shipwracks, decay of Ships, and waſt of Goods, and yet their Cargo's for Aſia and Europe have not amounted to above ten Millions; and ſometimes the Cargo's are ſo mean, that the Receits do not answer the Expences. Nevertheleſs their perfeverance and courage were worthy of admiration. For what could be more to be admir'd, then to ſee that a ſmall number of Merchants, aſſembled at firſt upon the ſingle ſcore of Trade, ſhould afterwards preſume to make War in Regions ſo far diſtant, aſſail ſo many Princes and Nations, plant ſo many Colonies, beſiege ſo many Cities and Forts, and laſtly, ſet forth ſo many Navies at ſuch prodigious Expences, that it would put many potent Sovereigns to a plunge to do as they did?

This was the Eſtate of the Holland East-India Company, at what time the Preſident, the principal Subject of this Relation, was recall'd from Japon to Batavia, there to take upon him the Office of Chief Director. He carry'd thither great ſtore of Wealth, and built ſeveral magnificent Houſes in the City. His Authority alſo was very large; but he exercis'd it according to his uſual cuſtom, and was hated by all the Officers of the Company, and the Citizens themſelves. He thought himſelf ſecure of the Employment of General, but he was deceiv'd in his hopes; upon which he took pet, and return'd for Amſterdam, where he liv'd quietly for ſome years. At length his turbulent and ambitious Spirit put him upon new Deſigns, to revenge the injury which he thought he had receiv'd. To which purpoſe he return'd to the Indies. His undertaking was not ſo prosperous for thoſe that employ'd him, and who merited to have have been better serv'd. He pillag'd, couzen'd, and caus'd several disorders in their affairs, and at length returning home again, perish'd in the River of Lisbon with his Money and Jewels, as hath been already related.

The End of the First Part.

What pass'd in the Negotiation of the DEPUTIES

Which were sent to

PERSIA and the INDIES,

As well on the behalf of the KING, as of the FRENCH COMPANY, for the settling of Trade.

IN the Relation which I have undertaken, I shall make a faithful Report of things in such manner as I saw them transacted by the Deputies sent to Persia, and the Indies, as well on the behalf of the King, as of the French Company, for the settlement of Trade.

The Thirteenth of July, 1665. the Sieur Lalin, Gentleman in Extraordinary to the King, and the Sieur de la Boulaye, a Gentleman of Anjou, with the Sieurs Beber, Mariage, and du Pont, Deputies of the new French Company, for the settling of Trade in Persia and the Indies, arriv'd at Ispahan, and took up their Lodgings at Zulpha, being the Suburbs of the same City, where also at that time liv'd the Sieur L'Estoile, a French Merchant. Lalin and Boulaye, without saying any thing to the Deputies, deliver'd to L'Estoile the Letters which Monsieur de Lyonne had written to him; the Inscription whereof was thus. To Mr. L'Estoile, first Valet du Chambre to the King of Persia, or in his absence, to Mr. Logis, his Son in Law. Which was not a little to be admir'd at by the Franks, who had sojourn'd any time in that Country, to find that Monsieur Boulaye, who had been before in Persia, and should have better understood the Custom of the Court, should be no better able to instruct a Secretary of State, then to let him give L'Estoile the Title of Valet du Chambre to the King of Persia, who who has none to serve him in his Chamber but Eunuchs, and never suffers a Christian to touch his Habits, for fear of being defil'd.

The purport of the Letters, was to admonish L'Estoile to support, assist, and protect the Deputies in the Business upon which the Company had sent them; and in case of losses by the way, to furnish them with such necessaries as they should want.

The King of Persia was then three days journey from Ispahan; for which reason a Messenger was dispatch'd with a Letter to the Nazar, or Grand Master of the House, and another to the Mirzateker, or his Lieutenant, to know whether his Majesty would command them to wait on him there, or whether they should expect his return to Ispahan.

In the mean while the Deputies could not agree amongst themselves: For the three Merchants Beber, Mariage, and du Pont affirm'd, that the two Gentlemen were only interest'd by the by in this Negotiation; and that having no right to take cognizance of the Affairs of the Company, they ought not to trouble themselves any farther, then the King's Letters directed them, in the affairs of the Company. That the Effect of the King's Letters was no more, then that two Gentlemen, desirous to see the Court of Persia, were joyn'd with the Deputies of the Company; and therefore it belong'd to them only to treat with the Ministers of the King of Persia. That the Gentlemen had no more to do then to deliver the King of France's Letter to the Persian King, and to desire a nomination of Commissioners to treat with the Deputies. This contest, which all the Franks in vain endeavour'd to compose, came at length to the Nazar's Ears; who was strangely surpriz'd at it, having then a design to procure an Order from the King to remove out of Ispahan and the Suburbs, all the Christians of what opinion soever, and place them over against Zulpha.

However, the Deputies rais'd new objections and difficulties every day; which Father Raphael of Mans, Superiour of the Order of Capuchins in Persia, employ'd all his credit and industry to accommodate. He wrote them out several forms of a Letter, which they were to send to the Nazar; but those that pleas'd the one Party, did not like the other. At length Father Raphael, weary of scribbling and altering, amending and correcting, and all to no purpose; told them seriously, they did ill to act in such a manner, and to insist upon idle formalities; that the Persian Style, wherein they ought to write to the Nazar, ought to be concise and plain, without superfluities, or impertinencies; and lastly, that all their contentions did but redound to the disadvantage of the Company, whose Interests they pretended to manage. After several contests, Father Raphael, at last, finish'd the Letter to the content of both Parties, which was transcrib'd into the Persian Language; with another to the Mirzateker, and both were dispatch'd away. The Nazar having read it, presently inform'd the King of the French Companies design, and of the arrival of the Deputies. His Majesty commanded him to let them know that they were welcome, and that in a short time, he would return to Ispahan, and give them Audience.

Some few dayes after, the Court return'd to Ispahan, and while the King stopp'd at one of his Houses near the Gates of the City, the Nazar sent for Father Raphael, to know of him who the French Deputies were, and who had sent them into Persia, to which the Father gave him the best satisfaction he could. For the Nazar wonder'd that they were come into the Kingdom, and sent, as they said, from such a potent Prince, and yet that the Governours of Erivan and Tauris should know nothing of their passage through those Cities. The Athemadoulet also was in the same Astonishment; and it gave them reason to suspect both the Quality of their Persons, and the Reality of their Commission. For either they were ignorant of the custom of the Country, or else they did ill to travel incognito, like ordinary Tradefmen, and Persons of mean condition. But Father Raphael having assur'd them, that they were sent by the King of France to settle a Company of Trade, and that he had Letters of Advice thereof out of Europe, the Nazar bid Father Raphael tell the Deputies they should be in a readiness, for that the King would give them Audience in a few days.

But the former misunderstanding, still continuing between the Gentlemen and Deputies, Father Raphael fearing some mischievous consequence of it in the presence of the King, or that they should make some dispute for priority, the Father represented to the Nazar, that whereas the Deputies were of two Orders, the one of Gentlemen, and the other of Merchants; therefore to take away all suspicion of jealousy, it would do well, that His Majesty would be pleas'd when he admitted them to their Audience, to permit the Gentlemen their seats on the one side, and the Merchants on the other. Which the Nazar approv'd, and the King allow'd of the same day.

The 27th of September, the King being at his Palace of Scader-Abbas, upon the bank of the River, between the Bridge of Zulpha, and the Bridge of Schiras, caus'd a preparation of Artificial Fire-works to be made, which came to above 2000 l. and early in the Morning caus'd notice to be given, that he intended that day to give audience to the King of France's Deputies. Father Raphael also had Order to be ready with the Deputies, to the end, the Mehemender, or Master of the Ceremonies, might not be oblig'd to wait. Accordingly that very day the Mehemender came to L'Estoile's House, and from thence conducted the Deputies, with all their Train, and the rest of the Franks then resident in those parts all mounted on Horse-back, with a march so slow and grave, and for the advantage of the sight so far about, that it was almost Night before they arriv'd at Scader-Abbas; at what time the Mehemender enter'd the Palace alone, leaving the Merchants at the Door. In the mean while, the Merchants believing that Father Raphael did not favour them so much as the Gentlemen, cry'd out aloud, that they would have an Interpreter also for themselves, or else would go no farther. Father Raphael, who acted only by the Nazar's Order, and for the advantage of the French Nation, told them, that whither they went any farther or no it was all one to him: that for his part he was not there as an Interpreter, either for the one or the other, but only in obedience to the King's commands.

In the mid'st of this debate the Mehemender return'd to carry the Deputies to their Audience; five hundred Musketeers being rank'd in order upon the bank of the River, to give them a Volley as they pass'd along. The Mehemender's march at first was slow and grave, but approaching the place where the King was, and from whence he had a view of the Deputies, he caus'd them to double their pace to the foot of the Steps, where the Lackeys took off their Shooes; and from thence they proceeded into the Hall of Audience, where the Kans, and other great Lords were sitting.

sitting. Upon each side stood the Youth of Quality, sumptuously clad in Tissue of Gold and Silver, their Cloaks and Mantles being lin'd with Martins, Sables, and other rich Furs. The Deputies being come into the King's presence, the Mehemender caus'd them to kneel, and bow their Heads to the Ground three times: That done, he caus'd them to rise, and lead up Lalin by the hand alone, as being the person who had in charge the presenting of the Letter to the King. After him follow'd Boulaye, and the rest of the Deputies, and thus they mounted up to the place where sat the Athemadoullet, and the Nazar. The King was seated upon a Scaffold somewhat higher than the rest, encompass'd with 150 young Gentlemen magnificently clad, to whom the Sieur Lalin, at the head of the Deputies, made his compliments in French, and then humbly presented the Kings Letter, seal'd with a flat Seal upon a flying Label, enclos'd in an Embroider'd Box, with the Arms of France and Navar, in relief, upon the Lid. Father Raphael explain'd to the King the effect of Lalin's Speech. After which the King gave a little bow with his Head, and at the same time gave a sign to the Master of the Ceremonies to carry them back to their places. Being come to the bottom of the Hall, where the Officers had Order to separate the Gentlemen from the Merchants, the Officers by mistake put Boulaye with two of the Merchants, and Mariage one of the Merchants with Lalin, which made Boulaye cry out aloud in the Turkish Language Menbeg-Zaddè, I am a Gentleman; but the thing being done, and the King being present, there was no help. Then the Persian Musick began to play for a quarter of an Hour; which having given over, the Master of the Ceremonies came again, and carried up Father Raphael, and the two Gentlemen, as he suppos'd, of which Mariage by the forementioned mistake happen'd to be one, again to the King: at what time Lalin with a comely grace made his Harangue, and set forth the occasion of his Deputation to His Majesty, of which His Majesty testifi'd his good liking by a nod of his Head. For Lalin had a handsom presence, and spake with an acceptable Tone, and his magnificent Habit very much added to the comely Air of his Person. The Speech was expounded by Father Raphael; which when he had done, the King ask'd the Deputies several Questions, and then with his hand made them a sign to retire to their places, beck'ning at the same time to Father Raphael to stay, and causing him to come near him, more particularly inform'd himself of the Power of the King of France, the Extent of his Dominions, his Military Discipline, and his Councils: of all which the Father gave him the best account he could, and then with the King's leave, retir'd to his place. This Scene being over, a Flagon of Gold, and a Glass were sent to the Deputies, attended with a short Banquet of Fruits, and other sorts of Food; the Instrumental and Vocal Musick playing all the while. Which being over, the King again sent for Lalin, Mariage, and Father Raphael, and after a short Discourse, having dismiss'd all but Father Raphael, he fell into a dispute with him touching the Unity of the Divine Nature, the necessity of one Prophet, and how Mahomet was the Seal and Crown of all Prophets. He seem'd to admire that the Franks, who had the Reputation of being People of Wit and Discretion, could think Jesus Christ to be a God: to all which particulars, the Father endeavour'd to give the King the best satisfaction he could. But then, Father Raphael being desirous that the three Deputies should should partake of the King's favour as the other two had done. Whereupon the King sent for the other three Deputies, and having discours'd a while with Boulaye, while Father Raphael interpreted between them, in a short while he dismiss'd them all again, but Father Raphael, with whom he enter'd into a more jocular Discourse than the former, of the Colours, Black and White, and of the Beauty of the French Women, the King confessing that naturally he did not love Brown Women, the White complexion being more agreeable to him, as being that complexion which alone compos'd the Beauty of Women. The Father modestly made his answer, that Beauty consisted only in fancy; for that the Persians lov'd thick and full Eyebrows, which were not at all esteem'd in France. Then the King casting his Eyes upon the Box wherein the King of France's Letter lay, he took out the Letter, and observing it to be a small piece of Parchment, and not such a one as he had receiv'd from several Princes and Potentates of Europe, nor indeed like those which the Jesuits had brought him formerly from the King of France himself, in a fair piece of Parchment, with a large Seal deep cut, he gave evident Demonstrations of his contempt of it, and was about to have thrown it away. Father Raphael perceiv'd him to be out of humour, to whom the King in pursuance of his dislike, said, Raphael, I never receive open Letters without a Seal, take it, and let me see it no more, for I do not believe it comes from so great a King as the King of France, and at the same time made him a sign to retire. He durst do no otherwise then take the Letter, and so returning to his place, he told both Lalin and Mariage what had pass'd in his Discourse between him and the King. Two hours, after that, were spent in beholding the Mummings of their common Dancers, a pastime very usual in Persia. Which being over, the King sent again for Lalin, Mariage, and the Father, and after some few Questions, to which they gave the best Answers they could, he again dismiss'd both the Deputies, retaining only Father Raphael with him. The Father, then taking his opportunity, told the King, that he had always observ'd it to be the custom of the Athemadoulet to cause the Letters, which the European Princes sent His Majesty, to be interpreted in his presence. And therefore, added the Father, I beseech Your Majesty to permit me to give the King of France's Letter to the Athemadoulet, to the end, it may be truly interpreted to him according to usual custom. Thereupon the King made a sign to the Father to give it him, and glad he was to be so rid of it. The Father observing the King in a good humour, spoke to him in behalf of the other three Deputies, that he would be pleas'd to admit them to be sent for a second time, in regard the others had been sent for three times. But the King told him, it was enough for him to speak to the Gentlemen, let his Ministers talk with the Merchants. The Father being then dismiss'd, he sent for Lalin alone, for whom he shew'd himself to have a very great kindness and affection; and at the same time commanded the Nazar to bring him the next day, together with Father Raphael, and Lagis the Genevese, who was retain'd in his Service, to Court, for that he intended to be merry with them. Then he went on, and told Lalin, that so soon as the French Ships were arriv'd, he would send an Embassadour to the King of France, and make a strict Alliance with him. Lalin reply'd, that His Majesty of France desir'd nothing more. Why then, reply'd the King, is not my Alliance sufficient, but that you must go seek the Alliance of the Blacks, from whom you will not draw those advantages, with which you flatter your selves? For you must know, that the Deputies kept their affairs so secret, that no body knew of them but all the World, the Servants as well as the Masters. Not considering, that the Persians are good Politicians, and that that Court is never without Spies. Therefore the King knew, that as soon as the Deputies had dispatch'd at his Court, they were to depart for the Indies, with which Nation he keeps no good Correspondence. And for that reason, he was not a little offended with them, though they endeavour'd to persuade him, that their Errand to the Indies was only for Linnen and Spices.

The Deputies presented to the King a very fair Fuzee, together with the Kings Picture, in little, drawn to the Life, which was so much the more esteem'd, because at the same time several large Cuts had been brought to Ispahan, and presented to the King, which perfectly agreed with the Picture in Oyl, by which the whole Court was convinc'd that it was the real Portraiture of the King. When these Presents were laid before the King, he ask'd the Deputies, for which of the Eastern Nations the French had most affection, to whom M. Lalin made answer, that certainly for the Persian, thereupon the King return'd, that certainly they had reason; for that the Persians were white, like the French, and that it was impossible for them to have any affection for the Indians who were black.

At length the King, to shew the Deputies his highest favour, would have them drink the HEZARD PICHE, in a golden Cup, which holds about a Pint of Paris. He order'd the Wine to be the same which he drank himself, which was in a Bottle of Chrystal Glass, studded with Diamonds. Lalin drank couragiously, and so did Mariage; but Father Raphael made a fair excuse, and got off. After midnight the Zerhaftes, or Table-Cloaths of Cloth of Gold were spread upon the Floor, and several roasted Viands very hot of the Spice, and Dishes of Salt Fish, purchas'd from the Caspian Sea, were brought and set upon the Cloaths; together with several Pastrie Meats, dry'd Raisins, Comfits, Almonds, and Pistaches, and other provocatives to drink. The repast being ended, several Buffons were brought in, who Sung and Danc'd after the Turkish fashion, and made a hundred wry Mouths and ugly Faces. Among the rest of the Divertisements, there were two Men introduc'd, that play'd one against another with each a Battoon in his hand, with a piece of Linnen dipt in Naphta, ty'd to the end of the Stick, which cast forth a very clear brightness in the dark; at the same time four artificial Whirle-Winds were made to rise one after another, which were all hovering in the Air at once, and in a continual Agitation.

Three Hours after Midnight the Masters of the Ceremonies came to raise the Deputies to take leave of the King; and so leading them to the lower end of the Hall, after a profound reverence, they retir'd, not one person beside stirring out of his place, to the end they might have time to take their Shoes without confusion. When they were gone, the King dismiss'd the Court, and then it is that the croud is so great, that not one in twenty but loses their own, and gets whose-ever Shoes he can lay his hands on.

The Deputies and Father Raphael being upon their return home, by that time they got half way, met an Officer belonging to the Athemadoulet, who who told Father Raphael that his Master expected the French Begzades at his House by Ten a Clock next Morning, to treat them, by his Majesties Order.

Father Raphael, Lalin, and Boulaye, were punctual to their time, and no sooner did the Athemadoulet know of their arrival, but he came down into his Hall of Audience, to receive them, where he had also order'd a very fair Banquet to be ready for their entertainment. There Father Raphael left them, while he went with the Athemadoulet's Secretary, to Translate the King of France's Letter into the Persian Language; which being finish'd, and he come again into the Hall, after several Civilities past on both sides, the Father and the Deputies return'd to Zulpha.

The Merchant Deputies offended at the Honour which the Gentlemen had receiv'd, would have gone in their Turn; but Father Raphael told them, that it was not the Custom in Persia to visit the Prime Minister, without being sent for. In the Evening, Father Raphael, and the Begzades received new Orders to attend the King, but the King stirr'd not out that Evening, so that their Journey was in vain.

The Merchants still perceiving the Honours which were done the Gentlemen, and believing Father Raphael to be the cause of all, they began to rail at him, and give him foul Language, and threaten'd to write into France to give an accompt of his behaviour. Father Raphael nettled at the Language of the Deputies, told them, that he had done what in him lay to procure them the same Honours, which the others had receiv'd, though they were so little sensible of it. That he would continue his endeavours for the Advancement of their Affairs, though not for their own sakes, yet for the sake of the Company, that had sent them. Which answer, though it were sharp enough, and shew'd that the Father was angry, yet he did not forget, that they were his Countrymen; so that he ventur'd to carry them twice to the Prime Minister of his own accord, contrary to the Custom. The first time he was not to be spoken with. The second time, he made an Errant to him with the three Deputies; to present him a Copy of the Letter from the Directors of the Company, in the Persian Language; at which time he shew'd them the Deputies, acquainting him withal that those were the Persons with whom he was to treat in point of Trade. To which the Athemadoulet reply'd, that he had no Commission from the King to meddle with those Deputies, but only, to entertain the Begzade that brought the King's Letter, which he had already done. Thereupon the Father desir'd him he would be pleas'd to speak to the King to nominate Commissioners to treat with them, which the Athemadoulet promis'd to do. That day in the evening, a Messenger was sent to Father Raphael, to acquaint him, that the King had appointed the Nazar to treat with the Deputies the next day, and to know their demands. Of which the Father gave the Deputies quick intelligence.

The next day, being the First of September, Father Raphael fail'd not to be with the Deputies very early in the Morning, to bring them to the Nazar; but he was very much surpriz'd to see, that they would not go altogether, but still look with an evil Eye one upon another, and continued their former differences. To the end therefore that he might set things to rights, he went to the Nazar, and told him, that he thought it would be the best way for the Merchant Deputies to come first, first, because that they were the Persons with whom he was chiefly to Treat. The Nazar answer'd, that the King understood that they were all five in the same Commission joyn'tly. To which, when the Father answer'd the second time, that it would be the best way to do as he had propos'd; The Nazar with a Surly Countenance, why, What's the matter now? said he to the Father; Are not you French-men asham'd to be thus at odds one with another, and to give all the World, nay the very Foot-boys occasion to discourse of your Divisions? What would they have us think of them and their Commission? Are they so little afraid of offending the King? Or, is their King more indulgent then the King of Persia, who would never pardon such faults in his Subjects? To this rebuke the Father made no reply. Only he desir'd the Nazar, that he might have two Horse-men to attend the Deputies at Zulpha, telling the Nazar not a word of his design to bring the Merchants an Hour sooner then the Gentlemen. This fell out to the Fathers desire; For the Father sent one of the Horse-men to Zulpha, to the Gentlemen, with order to drink with them, and not to be over hasty, but to bring them fair and softly along with him; with the other he made hast to the Merchant Deputies, and causing them to double their pace, they got betimes to the Nazar's House, where they were civilly receiv'd. Dupont presented the Nazar with the Deputies Commission, translated into the Persian Language; after which they fell into a discourse, which lasted above three quartes of an Hour, concerning the Customs, Tolls, and Quality of the Merchants, and the justness of the French in their Dealing. They had just finish'd their Discourse of Trade, when the Nazar was advertiz'd, that the three Gentlemen were arriv'd; who thereupon desir'd Father Raphael to go and receive them. The Father went and waited upon them in, neatly chiding them for having stay'd so long; and making the Nazar wait. Well said he, now you are together, go into that Cabinet, and write down your demands, and the Articles of your Commission. The Merchant Deputies, which had now discours'd with the Nazar what they had to say, were well enough content to enter into a General Conference with the Gentlemen. Then calling for Pen, Ink and Paper, they made a draught of their Demands, the chief of which were, three Years Immunity from Customs and Tolls, to begin from the time of the arrival of our Ships; and that after that, they should enjoy all the Priviledges and Favours granted to other Nations. They also desir'd precedence above all other Nations, when they should be call'd to Court, as they suggested, that they had at the Court of the Grand Signior. And lastly, they requir'd a House for those that belong'd to the Company, to live in the City.

These demands were dictat'd word for word by Father Raphael, to the Nazars Secretary, in the Name of all the five Gentlemen; and because the Nazar's Secretary knew not how to pronounce them, the Father undertook to write them in the Persian Character; which being done, and the writing read in the hearing of the Deputies, the Nazar took the Paper to present to the King.

Thus after a fair Banquet, accompany'd with Music, both Vocal and Instrumental, the Deputies were dismiss'd by the Nazar, who bid them rely upon his care; for that he would do them all the Favour that lay in his pow'r, and give them his Majesties Answer in a short time. The Deputies very well satisfy'd with the Nazar's reception, sent him afterwards a Present, which was a Shame both to the Nation and the Company, that pretended to such great and high things, and endeavour'd to fix an opinion of their Wealth and Grandeur among Strangers. For they sent him only a Tin Cup Enamel'd, and eight little Cases of Perspectives, or Looking-Glasses, the whole not amounting to above 40 Crowns. They also made much such another Present, but meaner, to the Mirzateker, consisting of about a Dozen Pair of Gilt Scissars for Women. We must speak the Truth: For they were not a little laught at for their ridiculous Presents, which were the Scorn and Contempt of those that receiv'd them, when the Deputies were gone.

To Father Raphael they presented a Purse, with 40 Tomans, or Six Hundred Crowns in it, believing that he would never accept of it; and indeed he refus'd it with scorn; not a little angry with them, that they should have such mean thoughts of him, as to believe him Mercenary.

Two days after, the Nazar gave notice to the Father, that the King had granted the French their Demands; and had order'd every one of them a Calaat, or a Vest-Royal, and in respect of Superiority, a Horse for Monsieur Lalin. That the Kings Answer and the Grant were both ready for the Directors of the Company, according to their desire.

The King was then onward upon a journey to Mazandran, three days Travel from Ispahan, at one of his Palaces, call'd Tajabat. A Pleasant Situation, in the mid'st of a great Valley, shaded with Trees, and full of Villages.

The Ninth of October, came a Letter from the Nazar, to Father Raphael, signifying the King's Pleasure, that both he and the Deputies should repair to Tajabat with all speed. Thereupon the Father and they made such hast, that in less than three days they got to Tajabat, where the Nazar order'd them to lye in the House of an Armenian Renegado. The King sent them immediately eight or ten bottles of Wine, with four Gold Dishes, full of lovely Fruits, and Tapistries for their Dining Room. But these Presents occasion'd new Quarrels; For there being two Factions, and both living apart, there was a great dispute who should have this present. Father Raphael, having done all that possible he could to reconcile the business, and not being able to persuade them, in a just Passion, bid them take their Swords and Pistols, and go and decide the Quarrel in the Field. Till now, said he, I have done all I could to conceal your detestable divisions from the Court, which nevertheless, is but too well acquainted therewith: Is it your design to publish your own Ignominy, and to make not only your selves, but the whole Nation of the French ridiculous to the Persians? At length they were so far reconcil'd, that one Room serv'd them to Feed, and consequently the same Furniture. For the Father's reproofs had put them a little out of Countenance.

The Seventeenth of October, the Mehemander came to the Deputies Lodgings, and brought five Royal Vests; The Richest, which was of Tissue of Gold, was for Monsieur Lalin; the next, not altogether so rich, for Monsieur Boulaye; and the other three of a lower price, for the Merchants; The value of the whole might amount to 600 Crowns, for which the French Deputies most generously gave the Officers that brought them 25 or 30 Crowns, as a Gratuity. The Officers of the Stable also brought two Horses for the Gentlemen, for which they receiv'd six Crowns in Gold, as a reward. I confess, I should have been asham'd of such a poorness of Spirit, at such a time as that.

Stable

At length also the Ragan or Patent for the Company was deliver'd into the Hands of the Deputies, faithfully Translated by Father Raphael to this Effect.

" That whereas the Merchants of the Kingdom of France, who are " favour'd by the Favour extreemly Royal, and the Justice excessively " Royal, being made constant in the hope and participation in the " time, have presented their Petition, which is arriv'd at the Ear
 " of the Ministers Commissioners for the Court of Grandeur and high " Fortune; Their Intentions and Demands have found the Visage of " Acceptation, and we have strictly commanded, that the Conservatours
 " of Rights, Tolls and Priviledges, acknowledge them for exempt
 " and priviledg'd, during the space of Three Years; and that there be " nothing demanded upon their Goods and Factories, conformable to
 " the request of the Deputies, &c.

The nex day, the Mehemander Bachi, came early in the Morning to attend the Deputies, and bring them with all speed to the Court: Where being admitted into the Garden, they met the King a Horseback, and all the Court a Foot. The Athemadoulet held the King's Answer to the King of France, in a Bag of Cloth of Gold, Seal'd with the Kings Seal upon red Spanish Wax. The Sieur Lalin then, and the rest of the Deputies were order'd to go neer and Kiss the Kings Boot, who kept his Grandeur, without speaking a word. When they had so done, the Athemadoulet calling them to him, there, said he, there is the Answer for the Grand Cha, that is, for the King of the Kings of France. The Deputies having made their Obeysances to the King, the whole Court took Horse; and the King took the Road of Cachan; and within an Hour, that Campaign, which look'd like a thick peopl'd City, became as Desert as the most part of Persia.

The Deputies, having read over the Patent, began to find many defects, and Mariage would fain have follow'd the Court for amendments, and would have persuaded Lalin and Father Raphael to have gone along with him. But Father Raphael over-persuaded them to return first to their Lodgings at Zelpha, and there to hear the Patent distinctly read over and to consider better of it. When they came to Zulpha, and that they had debated upon the meer Letter of the Patent, then they were worse mad then they were before. Then there were so many Cavils, so many Disputes, so many Exceptions, and so many Expositions put upon the Words Conformably and Reasonably, that they must get a Horse back immediately. Boulaye stopp'd this fury for a while; So that after many Disputes and Consultations, it was agreed, that Mariage, as chief of the Negotiation, and Lalin, should follow the Court, and that Boulaye, Breber, and Dupont, should proceed forward to the Indies. The Sieur Lestoile, and all the rest of the Franks, were of opinion, that Lalin should forthwith depart for France, with the King's Letter. But their Counsel was not follow'd, and so the Deputies divided themselves: Lalin and Mariage to follow the Court, which was then remov'd as far as Mazandran: And the other three to pursue their Journey to the East Indies. The two former fain would have had Father Raphael have accompany'd them to the Court; but he fairly excus'd himself.

Neither would L'Estoile permit his Son, to whom he allow'd 20 Tomans a Year, to return to the Court, choosing rather to send him to Bander with the other three. Whereupon, the Seventeenth of November, they set forward upon their Journey.

Du Pont, without doubt, was the most solid and judicious of all the Merchants, but he took it so to heart, to see the dis-union among them, that he fell into a languishing Disease at Ispahan, and dy'd not far from Schiras.

As for Lalin and Mariage, they left Ispahan the Fifteenth of December, and arriv'd at Court soon after, where they lay a long time neglected, their Divisions still continuing, which made them contemptible to the Persians, and ruin'd the Affairs of the Company. One Evening, the Nazar sent them a Flow'r, advising them, that as that Flow'r never chang'd, so it became them not to vary in their Resolutions. After a long and tedious stay, Mariage obtain'd some few impertinent Alterations in his Patent; and permission to make Wine at Schiras, as the English, Hollanders, and Portugueses had.

With these Alterations they both leave the Court; and Mariage would certainly have accompany'd Lalin, who had an intention to see Ardevil, Tauris, and Kom, had he not been sollicit'd to return to Zulpha, by a Young Dalilah, that had smitten his heart. For by the means of an old Woman, the Mother of one of his Lacqueys, he had debauch'd a young Armenian Virgin, whom he kept privately to himself; yet not so privately, but the noise thereof was quickly spread all over Zulpha. All the Armenians were scandaliz'd at it, and sent to seize the Baud, to punish her, by their Laws, as she deserv'd. Mariage advertiz'd thereof, flew out of his Lodging to her assistance, and to protect her from Justice. But seeing the People in an uproar, and finding the Stones to fly too thick about his Ears, he was forc'd to mind his own safety, and to seek for shelter in the next House where he could be admitted. But the Business was not so put up, for the Armenians, wondering to see that a Deputy of an Illustrious Company, who was come to the Court of Persia upon so serious an Affair, should do so much wrong to his Nation, by publickly appearing in so shameful an Action, and so unworthy of a Person in public Employment, that they resolv'd to prosecute him all manner of ways. They were resolv'd, to that end, to have sent into France an Express, to have Complain'd to the King of his ill Management and bad Behaviour. But Mariage at length restor'd the Armenian Girl which he had kept close lock'd up; after which time the Armenians never look'd upon him but with scorn and contempt.

Lalin being return'd to Ispahan, departed thence the 22th of November, 1666. for Bander, with a Resolution, to Travel into the Indies. But he fell sick at Bander, and thinking to return to Schiras; for the Air's sake, he dy'd by the way at a Village call'd Bend-Ali. A Gentleman endow'd with noble Qualities, and whose Gentile and Generous behaviour was an honour to his Nation.

The Thirtieth of the same November, Mariage also left Ispahan, and departed for Bander, with one Father Mercier, a Jesuite, whom he took along with him as his Almoner, and Lewis L'Estoile, his Kalmachi, or Interpreter: There he stay'd four Months for the arrival of the Ships, but none coming, and the heats encreasing, he resolv'd to spend the rest of the Year at Schiras. As for the Jesuit, and young L'Estoile, because because there was no Converse but with the people of the Country, they return'd back to Ispahan.

Boulaye and Beber arriv'd at Suratte the first of April, 1666. Being come to the Bar, they sent to Father Ambroise, chief of the Mission of the Capuchins, who presently attended them with a Sloop, which he had obtain'd of the Governour, and brought them home to the Capuchin's House, where they stay'd till they departed for Agra. Sometime before was arriv'd there a Merchant of Aleppo, who had run himself out at heels, and of a Maronite Christian was become a Roman Catholick, in hopes to patch up his broken Fortune, being in truth a meer Counterfeit, and a Hypocrite: For these Levantine Christians seldom change their Religion, but upon some motive of Interest; and when they have got a good Sum together, they presently whip back again into their own Country, and for a small piece of Money obtain absolution of their Patriarch. Thus several of the Religious Franks that travel out of Europe into Asia are often deceiv'd, making a great noise of their Conversion of the Levantines, when the Conversion, at the bottom, is only an outward Conversion, and a meer piece of Gullery. Among many others that I could relate, I will only mention one, of a Franciscan, call'd Paul Stella, who coming with 400 Crowns, or thereabouts, in his Pocket, for his subsistence, a Maronite smelt him out, and under the pretence of giving him the Honour of his Conversion to the Catholick Religion, never left him till he had suck'd him dry, and turn'd the Channel of his Money. This Maronite Merchant before mention'd, whose Name was Chelebi, shew'd himself very zealous for the Capuchins, and he had reason enough; for the Capuchins of Aleppo had been very serviceable to him, and had help'd him in his Affairs when they were at the lowest ebb. They were overjoy'd at his arrival at Surat, and gave it out immediately that it was he that had given them Money for the building their House and Church. But when I came to look over my Accompts, I found that the Money that had pay'd for the Ground and a good share of the building, came out of my Purse; Father Ambroise having promis'd that I should be reimburs'd upon my return to Paris. But I never heard more of my Money, nor indeed did I ever look after it.

The reason why the Capuchins were willing that the Aleppo Merchant, who never had disburs'd a Penny, should own the Expences of their House and Church, is this; because no Frangui Christian is permitted in the Indies to enjoy the propriety of Houses, or to make any reparations of those which they hire, without the leave of the Governour of the place. Both the English and Holland Companies are only Lessees to the Indians; the Great Mogul having suffer'd from the Christians in several places, where under pretence of repairing or adorning certain Houses, which they possess'd by way of propriety, they have so well fortifi'd them, that when the Governours have come to require any Duties from them, they have made them good so long, till they have forc'd the Governours to yield to their demands.

So soon as the Deputies were landed at Surat, they presently spread abroad a report, that there were seven or eight Ships belonging to the French Company that would suddainly follow them. The Aleppo Merchant was overjoy'd to hear the News, and was in great hopes, that by the favour of the Capuchins, and the advantage which he had of speaking several of the Asiatick Languages, that the greatest part of the French Merchandize would pass through his hands. Upon these hopes he made great Treats, and presented large Presents to the Deputies, and and maintain'd their Servants at his own Charges. He found the Deputies to be sufficiently covetous, but he was still in great expectations, that his civil Entertainments, and the Presents which they receiv'd from him, would oblige them to acknowledge his kindness, and that one day he should find himself repay'd by the management of their business; but he was foully mistaken. For it cost him above 1500 Rupies, part which he spent upon them himself at Surat, and partly what his Nephew furnish'd them withall at Agra for their present occasions.

Three or four days after their arrival at Surat, the English President sent to visit them by some of his Council, and would have waited on them himself, but that he lay then ill of the Gout. The Holland Commander did the same with his Council, shewing all the civilities and kindnesses that lay in his power, and a few days after invited them solemnly to a great Feast, with as many as they could bring along with them. In the midst of their Jollity the King's Health was sent about, and after that, the Prosperity of the French Company; which oblig'd Boulaye to begin another Health to the happy Progress of the Holland Company. But when it came to Mr. Beber's turn to drink it, notwithstanding all that Boulaye, and the rest of the Company could say to him, they could not oblige him to pledge it. Nay, he did worse then this, for he threw the Glass, Wine, and all at his Feet; and when he had so done, he rose in a heat from the Table, and after a pitiful manner left the Company, and went home to his Lodging, though without any attendance. The Hollanders were so discreet as to take little notice of his folly, but remain'd very merry at the Table with Mr. Boulaye till Midnight. But they could not forbear telling their Friends, that they wonder'd, in regard there were so many discreet and ingenious Men in France, that the Company should make choice of such a Fool for the management of such an important Affair as he was sent about; and that they foresaw he would do the Company no small injury.

While the Deputies stay'd at Surat, the Governour of the place, at the request of Father Ambroise, entertain'd them, and shew'd them all the respect that could be shew'd to Strangers. One day that they were in Discourse together, he told them, that if they would follow his Counsel, he advis'd them not to go to Court till their Ships were arriv'd. But seeing that they were resolv'd to the contrary, he offer'd them Money, Horses, and Souldiers, to attend them, with Letters of Recommendation to some of the *Grande*es of the Court. The Chabander, or Provost of Merchants, made them the same offers that the Governour had done; all which they refus'd very obstinately. More then this, they behav'd themselves very ill, in reference to the Presents which the Governour and the Cha-Bander sent them, for they gave their Servants that carry'd them not a Doight, which is look'd upon as a very dirty action in the Indies. For the Indians never give their Servants any other Wages, then what they get by carrying Presents from their Masters. And the more they have given them, the more Honour it is, both for him that receives, and him that sends the Present.

The Deputies then being resolv'd for Agra, hir'd their Waynes, and their Oxen to carry their Luggage, and five and twenty Souldiers for their their Convoy. They likewise made a great noise, of their being honour'd from so Great a King, and so Noble a Company. Upon which score, they ought to have had five or six Wains for their Baggage, every one their Pallaquin and a Led-horse; and every one a Flag with their Arms or their Cyphers, which is the gentile way of Travelling in India; and as I was always wont to travel. But they took but five and twenty Souldiers, whereas they ought to have hir'd an hundred and fifty at the rate they talk'd.

But instead of so doing, three Days Journey from Surat, Beber began to quarrel with Boulaye, that they had too great a Train at their heels, for which he blam'd the Advice of Father Ambroise and the Merchant of Aleppo: That for his part he would pay for no more than four Souldiers; and that if he would not send the rest back, he should pay them himself. Upon which, they agreed to send back the six Souldiers which the Governour had order'd to attend them as far as Brampour; upon their dismissal, not giving them so much as the Worth of a Pipe of Tobacco.

When they came to Agra, the Nephew of Chelebi, the Aleppo Merchant, fail'd not to wait upon them; and to offer them his service. There was at that time a French Chirurgeon, whose Name was James, he spake good Indian, and was married in the Country to the Daughter of a Portugal: The Nahab, the King's Uncle and Grand Vizier, had a great kindness for this Chirurgeon; and by his procurement it was, that the Deputies had Audience of Giafer-Kan, for so was the Nahab call'd. They requested of him, that by his favour they might present a Letter from their King to the Great Mogul, as also that they might be admitted to treat concerning the Settlement of a French Trade in the Countrey. The Nahab told them, that he would speak to the King, and take care that they should be admitted to their Audience in a little time. With that he order'd them to be conducted to the Lodgings appointed for them, which they found ready furnish'd with all necessary provision for the Belly; but their Lacqueys and Servants were to cook it themselves; for it is not here as it is in Persia; where the Meat is sent ready drest out of the King's Kitchen to the Embassadors Table.

The Nahab, who understood that they had brought no Presents, neither for him, nor any of the Grandees of the Court, nor for the King himself, was not over hasty to admit them to their Audience. So that it was above a Month before the Deputies could set Eyes upon the Nahab again, though the Chirurgeon, and other Franquis, us'd all their Interest in their behalf. Being very weary of this Delay, they gave it out, that they could stay no longer at Agra, in regard they were to be at Surat upon the Arrival of the French Vessels. Upon which false Report, the Nahab sent to them for the King their Master's Letter, that he might present it to the Great Mogul himself. Upon this Demand of their Letter, they were quite blank, not being acquainted with the manner how the Kings of India receive those Letters which are brought them by Embassadors: For they never receive any with their own hands, but such as come from the Grand Signior: All other Letters, according to the Grandeur of the Kings that send them, are put into the hands of the Grand Officers of the Court, who present them to the King: And the more potent the King is, from whom the Letter comes, through the fewer hands it passes before it is presented to the Great Mogul. For the present State of Europe and Asia is very well known in the Court of the Great Mogul, and the Difference between the Sovereigns of both, in reference to their Grandeur and Puissance. Neither is there a Stranger that enters into the Kingdom; of whom the Governour of the Frontier Province does not give advice to the Nahab; and if he appear to be a person of Ingenuity; there's no help for't, but he must go to Court, where he is caress'd, on purpose to get information of the Country from whence he comes.

But to return to the Deputies, they obstinately refus'd to send the Letter to the Nahab: At which he was not a little troubl'd; fearing lest upon the Arrival of the French Vessels, it might be the occasion of a Rupture, and hinder the conclusion of the Treaty of Commerce. Moreover he was not a little jealous, lest they should seize upon the Great Mogul's Vessels in their Voyage to Mecca, as Hugh Lambert the Holland Pyrat did, who took all the Baggage belonging to the Queen of Visapour, when she was going to Mecca and Medina. The Nahab having made these Reflexions to himself, so wrought with the King, that he consented that the Deputies, contrary to custom, should be admitted into his presence, there to give the Letter into the Hands of the Prime Minister, to be by him presented to the King. This, as I said before, was an unusual favour; and yet the Deputies were so obstinate, as to reject this Proposition, saying, that they would rather return home, and carry back their Letters, then not present them to the King themselves. This obstinacy of theirs, to maintain their own conceited humour against the Custom of the Countrey, was very much blam'd by all people, that admir'd at the patience of the Nahab, who at length sent them word, they might take their own course, since they refus'd the Honours which he would have done them. After that, the Deputies staid ten or twelve days in the City, flattering themselves, that the Nahab would comply with their Folly; but they were deceiv'd. For the Nahab offended at their idle carriage, took such order, that not one person living, either Merchant or other, went to visit them all the while. So that they resolv'd to return to Surat, in expectation of their Ships.

When they left Agra, they went and lay two Leagues off from the City in the Field, setting up one Tent apiece, (and those pitiful ones Heaven knows) to serve for them and their Servants, whereas they might have lodg'd with more security in a fair Inn that stood not far off. Now it is the Custom at the Great Mogul's Court, that every Night some Prince or great Lord keeps Guard in his turn for a Week together, having under him five or six thousand Horse, that beat the Road for three or four Leagues round the place where the King quarters. A Party of these Horsemen scouting by the Deputies Tents, and enquiring whose they were, one of the Servants reply'd, that they were the Tents of the French Deputies: of which the Horsemen gave immediate notice to their Captain, at that time the Grand Provost of the Empire. A Person handsom, well endow'd, and a great Lover of Strangers, who had rais'd himself by his Valour, as being an Abyssin by Nation. So soon as he understood that they were the French Deputies, he sent one of his principal Officers, with fifty Horse, to desire them to give them leave to guard them that Night, because they were in no security, and for that if they came to any mischief the Head of their Captain must answer for it. But they very ill receiv'd the kind proffer of the Provost, proudly answering, that they were strong enough to guard themselves, and the first that came near them should know whether the French had Courage or no, adding withal, that if their Captain were afraid, they would guard him, with a deal of other scurrilous rissraff which very much surpriz'd the Officers.

Captain

The next day they set up their Tents about a quarter of a League farther, because they expected something to be brought them from Agra. The Conteval or Grand Provost admiring they made such slow journeys, and that they had now pitch'd in a more dangerous place than before, sent the same Horsemen with the same proffer, or else that they would be pleas'd to lye in an Inn where they might be safe. Boulaye was of the mind that so kind an offer should not be refus'd: but Beber gave them nothing but bad language; reviling their Captain; that he was afraid they should go and lye with his wives, offering if he pleas'd to go and guard them. He spoke half Portuguese, half Italian, which being a kind of Lingua Franca, some of the Horsemen made a shift to understand him, and having made a report to the Grand Provost of his Insolent Answer, the Lord was not a little nettl'd at it, and therefore resolv'd to be reveng'd. About midnight fourscore or a hundred Horse came and cut all the Cords of Beber's Tent, thinking to have let it fall about his ears. But he found a way to quit himself by the assistance of his Servant; and endeavour'd to elcape to the House of a Dervich on the other side of a small Rivolet, nere the place where the Tents were set up. But the Moon shining as bright as day, he could not hide himself from the pursuit of the Horsemen, who shot at him, and with their Arrows wounded him in three places, once in the thigh and twice in the buttocks. Boulaye hearing the noise which the Horsemen made, peep'd out of his Tent, and seeing so many Horsemen in pursuit of Beber, was not a little daunted. He was afraid of running the same risco; but not having long to consider, he took his purse of Duckets, and fled till he got about half a league off, where he lay all night under a great Tree. But by the consequence he found that the Horsemen had nothing to say to him; being satisfi'd when they saw Beber fall, as believing him dead. For had they not thought him so, they would never have left him, till they had quite done his business. But to colour the business, that it might not seem a point of revenge they broke open all Beber's Chests; that it might seem as if he had bin robb'd; but they found very little or nothing to enrich themselves.

So soon as Beber's boy saw that the Horsemen were gone, he ran to the Town for a Pallanquin to carry his Master thither. Being brought to the Town they laid him in the Jesuits house; where Boulaye also arriv'd not long after and took up his Quarters, to the great consolation of the Jesuits, whose Revenues are but small in those parts, where there are no devout people to leave them Legacies. Their Ordinary was very sparing; but it was such as the Deputies must be glad of. Though it were a feast for Boulaye, who was not wont to make better chear. For a Sheeps head, of his own purchase, usually serv'd him two meals. Which made him ridiculous to the Franks, who liv'd after a more splendid rate. At Smyrna and Aleppo, when he was not invited by the Franguis, he had recourse to his Sheeps tongues, or a cold piece of double Tripe, which he carri'd to the poor Cabarets of the Greeks, taking his Chopin of Wine to wash it down : and such was his good husbandry that what was left was order'd to be set up for his supper. One day he had drank a little more than he had bled, and the Franguis found him a sleep in the street, about a hundred paces from the Cabaret. They had so much charity for him as to remove him to his lodging, lest other Nations should laugh at the choice which they had made of an Envoy to settle the Trade of such a considerable Company. As for Beber, who lov'd good Chear when it cost him nothing, as being a true exemplar of covetousness, he complain'd of the Jesuits entertainment, though they out-run the Constable to treat him like a Deputy. His man who had more wit than he, and plainly saw what a trouble he was to his Hosts, made them a merry relation of the Noble Table which his Master kept for him, how he had made provision of a Barrel of Herrings, which when Invitations fail'd, he warily fed upon, rubbing his bread with the tail to give it a haut goût. For my part, said the Boy, I am but a poor Servant, yet I have made a shift to spend an hundred and fifty Crowns which I had got in the service of the Consul of Smyrna. It was my misfortune to be inveigld out of his service, for I was with a Noble Master where I got Money, but in this man's service I have eaten all that I had got before. Two days after I arriv'd at Agra, and heard of Beber's being wounded and where he lay, and went to give him a visit. And as I never went unprovided in my travels with all things necessary, I had some Oyntments and Plasters, which were very serviceable to him.

It was an easie thing to observe that Boulaye was glad of the opportunity of Beber's being wounded, that he might have the sole honour of giving the Letter to the King. For he pretended to be the true Envoy from the King of France, and that Beber was only sent to bear him company. Le Boulaye therefore believing that the business would take effect, persuaded the Chyrurgion already mention'd to solicit the Nahab who had a kindness for him, so close, that thereby the Nahab permitted him to bring the Letter. But Boulaye who thought he should give it himself to the King, was much surpriz'd when he saw that the Nahab, who had got the Letter into his own power, gave it to one of the meanest Officers of his Court, who by the Prime Minister's order, gave it to another, and he to a third, who brought it back to the Nahab, who at length presented it to the King, but not in the presence of Boulaye.

And thus you see the Effect of the ridiculous pride of the Deputies, Boulaye was forc'd to stay in an outer Court, having two more to pass thorough before he came into the King's Quarter. Where, while he remain'd big with expectation, word was brought him, that the King would return an Answer to the King his Master, so soon as the Ships should be arriv'd, and so he was forc'd to go back to his Lodging with the melancholy dissatisfaction of a frustrate hope.

The wounded Gentleman being new cur'd, but still very lame, desir'd Audience of the Nahab, that he might have justice for the mischief done him by an Assassination and a Robbery. The Nahab readily admitted him, limping when he came into his presence worse then when he first left his bed. The first Compliment he made was of the Wounds he had receiv'd, and then he demanded satisfaction for the loss of his Blood, and the Goods which had bin stolen from him. The Nahab promis'd him to inform the King of the business, assuring him that he should have no wrong done him upon the high-way within the Territories where he had to do. Four or five days after, the Nahab sent to Beber to know how much the Loss which he pretended to have receiv'd amounted to. Beber brought in an account of four and twenty thousand Roupies, or 12000 Crowns; and for the loss of his Blood, he left it to the Kings Generosity.

His Accompt he made out thus:

Imprimis, A Note for the value of six thousand Roupies which he had lent a Merchant when he departed for Marseilles, which Note was among the Papers he had lost. As to that, the Nahab ask'd him whether the Notaries in France did not make an Entry of such publick Acts as were sign'd before them? Beber made answer, that he should never be paid, if he could not produce the same Paper that had bin taken from him, and that he could not demand his Money without it. The Nahab replying, that that was contrary to the Custom of all Nations, and that he knew it could not be as he said, added withal, that he should take no care for his satisfaction in that particular. After that he read on.

Item, Five thousand Roupies in Gold and Silver Money.

Item, Four thousand Roupies in Gold Lace and Galoon to trim his Clothes.

Item, Two Diamond Rings at two thousand one hundred Roupies.

Item, Two other Rings, a Topaz, and another of sea-green water, which cost three hundred Roupies.

Item, His Clothes, his Linnen, and for a Chest of Medicaments, which might be worth 4000 Roupies; of which he had procur'd his Chirurgion to give in a Bill.

Item, A Chain of Gold valu'd at 500 Roupies. In all amounting to 24000 Roupies, as I said before.

Two or three days after, the King caus'd an Order to be deliver'd to him for the payment of his Money at the Treasury-Chamber. Upon which Order, he agreed with a Merchant to be paid at Surat. And when he was ready to depart, the King commanded 12000 Roupies to be paid him for the loss of his Blood. But that sum he never receiv'd. For being in haste to be gone to Surat, and failing to present the Treasurer, he drill'd him out so long, that his patience was quite tir'd, and so he was forc'd to go without it.

I could never understand the Policy of the Great Mogul to pay Beber the sum which he said had bin taken from him, when the Nahab knew to a thread what he had lost, and had given in an accompt thereof to the King, the whole not amounting to 2000 Roupies. And as for the Frangis, so soon as they understood that he had demanded 4000 Roupies for his Chirurgions Chest, they all cry'd out that it was a meer cheat. For a few days before Beber arriv'd at Agra, the Chirurgion had receiv'd 200 Roupies by the Charity of the Franks to return to Surat, and he fell sick the next day that this Bill was presented to the Nahab.

After the Mogul had read the King of France's Letter, the Nahab by order of his Master, order'd a Lodging to be provided for the Deputies, which overjoy'd the Jesuits, who were by that means rid of two very troublesome Guests. As for Bodlaya, in regard the King had signifi'd his pleasure, that he would not return any answer to the King's Letter till the arrival of the Ships, he never troubled himself any farther, but staid till the waters were fallen, that he might go to Bengale, and from thence to Golconda to settle a Trade in those parts. But Beber moil'd like a horse, and did nothing but run to and fro, to know the King's pleasure touching the settlement of Trade. But the Nahab either laugh'd at him, or took little notice of what he said. For indeed by Beber's outward appearance, and deportment, no man could make any other judgment of him, but that he was a poor spirited fellow, and one that knew not what it was to live. For all the Europeans that travel into Persia and the Indies are always richly habited, nor would any of them keep Beber company, who by his Habit look'd rather like a Footman, than a Deputy of a Royal Company of Trade. At length a whim took him to make himself a suit of painted Calicut, after the French Fashion, the like whereof had never been seen in the Country; the whole Suit not standing him in above 13 Livres and 13 Sous. For the trimming of his new Suit he took off the Ribbands of his old Cloaths, which he was two days lathering, and smoothing with a Taylers Goofe. When he had got this rare Habit upon his back, he went to visit the Nahab, who was then attended by the Principal Lords of the Court. Who when they saw him enter, fell all a gazing upon him, and ask'd one another whether that Frangui were turn'd Faquir, or a Dervich of Hossen Mamout, which they usually call the ragged Saint. For you must know, that all the Faquirs or Derviches that are of this Order, never apparel themselves but with such rags as they pick up in the streets, and if they meet with any pieces better than other, they make of them a kind of Galoon to trim the rest. They also carry half Pikes, with a great company of Tatters fasten'd to the end of them, to make a shew of their beggery. Beber's Habit very much surpriz'd the Nahab, and all others that beheld him so ridiculously accouter'd. As he pass'd one morning by my window, I bid him good morrow, telling him withal, that he look'd more spruce and gay than he us'd to do. He reply'd, that he had reason so to do, for that he had receiv'd Letters from Surat, by which he had advice, that the Country people upon the Coast of Cape St. John had decry'd four Vessels out at Sea, which they could not make to be either English, or Hollanders, from whence he concluded that they were the Companies ships; and that he was going to the Nahab with the News. But I prevented him at that time, telling him that I had often observ'd that rascally sort of people to come both to the English and Hollanders, with such kind of Intelligence, on purpose to get Money; when indeed they had never seen any such sight, and admonishing him not to believe Reports upon such slight foundations. I ask'd him what date his Letters bore? he told me, thirty days ago. Then, said I, if the discovery had bin true, the Nahab would have had notice of it in fourteen; and then he would certainly have told you of it, or my self; for it is but two days since I took my leave of him. Thereupon he took my counsel and resolv'd for Surat in a few days.

Three days after that the Chirurgeon had given in his Bill for the Chest of Medicaments that he had lost among Beber's Baggage, he was so touch'd in Conscience, that he fell sick, and dy'd in two days. Upon his death-bed he ask'd pardon of God for the Cheat which he had consented to, to ask 4000 Roupies for that which was really worth but four hundred; 200 of which he had receiv'd from the Charity of the Franguis, the rest upon the sale of a Horse.

For my part, finding that Beber was resolv'd for Surat, I made what hast I could out of Agra, to be quit of his company. But the second day day after my departure, having set up my tent by a Rivers side, just as I was going to dinner I spy'd Beber coming, nor could I get rid of him afterwards till I came to Surat. So that we were forc'd to travel together, though he committed a thousand Impertinencies by the way. Among the rest, he put one trick upon the Chief of the Cheraffs or Bankers at Brampour, not to be pass'd over in silence.

In regard the ways were bad, and that he had but one pitiful weak Chariot, and four weak Boys, which with the help of Oxen, were hardly strong enough to help him out when he stuck in the mire, he seldom came to his journeys end till two or three hours after me. Now upon the report that ran of the French ships being seen out at Sea, and the general belief that Beber would be one of the Principal Trustees of the Company, several, as I said before, courted him, and sought to engage his Friendship. Being arriv'd at Brampour, the Chief of the Cheraffs, attended by a dozen of his servants came to visit us. Upon the first acquaintance Beber told him that he wanted a Pallaquin to go to Surat, whereupon the Cheraff civilly offered him his, and caus'd it to be trimm'd up for his better accommodation. Beber thought that trimming would have bin finish'd in one day, when indeed it requir'd three or four. The next day I order'd my Coach to be got ready, and order'd my Pallaquin to be carri'd away. Beber, who verily believ'd that the Company's ships were already in the Road of Surat, began to curse and bann the Cheraff, who presently came to him and endeavour'd to appease him with good words. He told him, it could be no prejudice to him to stay a day or two, for by that time the Roads would be better, and he might travel the faster. But Beber, being transported with passion, was so far from taking the Cheraffs reasons for satisfaction, that snatching a Cudgel out of his Waggoners hands that stood next to him, he gave the Cheraff three or four good Licks cross the shoulders. The Merchants and other people that were in the Inn, were strangely surpriz'd at such a piece of rudeness, and ran out presently, some with Stones, and others with Cudgels, making a hideous noise, and crying out, that they had never seen the like. They took it for a most enormous Crime, to strike the Chief of the Cheraffs, above fourscore years old, whose very age ought to have bin protection enough from such an Affront. Good luck it was for Beber, after such a rash action committed, that I was well known at Brampour, having been there ten or twelve times, and in some of my Travels having dealt for above 200000 Roupies. There were none of the Cheraffs with whom I had not dealt by Letters of Exchange, and very few Merchants or Brokers who had not had some business or other upon my account. They cry'd out, speaking of me; See there the Monsieur Franqui, with whom we have dealt so often, yet never heard him give us an ill word. Another good chance he had to meet there the Coutervall's Lieutenant, and three Merchants of Surat; and thus between us, having disingag'd Beber out of the Brabble wherein he had so fillily bemir'd himself, we made him get into my Coach, and so packt him out of the City. I follow'd him two hours after: for had he staid longer in Brampour, I believe the Faquirs and Derviches would have beat out his brains. For he was no sooner gone, but a great number of that sort of rabble came to the Inn, crying out, Where was that Dog of a Caser that had beaten the Cheraff. Thereupon, seeing the Multitude encrease, I stole out of the Town, without saying a word, and rid on till till I got three leagues from Brampour, to an old Town call'd Badelpoura, where I overtook Beber, who had hir'd a Coach made after the fashion of the Country. It was but reason, that I should have my own Coach to sleep in in the night: For though in all places where you come to lye in the night, the Indians will offer you a little bed to lye on, yet in regard the rains were but just over, the bedsteads were so full of Punies, that there was no resting. These Punies are ingender'd by the moisture which the rains, that fall for four months together, cause in those Countries. Which being over, and the Sun recovering its wonted heat, the women carry forth their beds every morning, and beating them well with good big sticks, never leave till the Punies fall to the ground, and there turning up their bellies presently dye. These beds consist of four feet and four round staves, as broad and as long as you please. To the staves are fasten'd girths about four fingers broad, which are much more commodious than the bottoms of our beds that are plank'd with Deal or other wood. Over the girths they only lay a single Coverlet or Sheet, which is a manner of lying easie enough, considering the heat of the Country.

The fourth day after our departure from Brampour, being near a great Town call'd semqueles, in a flat Country, we perceiv'd all the Plain cover'd with Tents. It appear'd to be the Camp of one of the chief Kans, or Lords, whom the Great Mogull had sent with 50000 men against the Rebel Raja Sewagi. This Lord, understanding who we were, very civilly sent us Melons, and Mango's, and bid his Officers tell us withal, that we were out of all danger, and might safely pursue our journey. Whatever I could say to Beber, to perswade him that it was but an act of civility and good manners, to wait upon the Prince, I could by no means engage him. I seeing his impertinency, shifted my habit, and sent one of my servants to the Camp, to learn whether the Kan drank Wine; and understanding that he did, I took a bottle of Spanish, and another of Schirus Wine, and a small pocket Pistol delicately embellish'd with silver; and with this small Present away I went to wait upon the General. Being come into his Presence, I excus'd Beber, as not being well, and immediately presented him the little Pistol, which he took, and bid me charge, being desirous to try it. After he had shot it off, said he to his Lords that stood by, Now must we confess these Franqui's to be ingenious. This man sees that I am going to the Wars, and presents me wherewithal to defend my life. Then casting his eyes upon the little Hamper, where the Bottles were, he ask'd what it was? They told him in his Ear. Oh, said he, looking at the same time upon two or three Mim Bachis, or Colonels that were present, This Franqui Gentleman has given me a bottle of Wine, well we must drink it; for I find I shall please him in so doing. When the Mollah's heard him talk of Wine, they slunk away; which made the Kan laugh heartily. These are Agi's, quoth he; they have bin Pilgrims to Mecca, and never drink Wine after they come home again. Having taken my leave, he sent me a Pomere, which is a kind of Scarf that may also serve for a Girdle. It was made of white Sattin with flow'rs of Gold, and might be worth about a hundred Roupies. He that brought it, told me, I should do the Kan a great kindness, to send him another bottle of Wine: thereupon I sent him two of three, which was all my store. He sent me six Horsemen to conduct us three days journey, till we had pass'd a great great River that flows from the Mountains of the South, which washing the City of Baroche, from whence it takes its Name, falls into the Bay of Cambay.

When we came to our last stage, which is a great Town, call'd Bar-noli, from whence it is but 14 Leagues to Surat, Beber sent one of his Hirelings to give notice thereof to Father Ambrose. When the News came, the Father went with the Aleppo Merchant, often already mention'd, to borrow the English President's Coaches: and there were about 15 or 16 more Coaches all in a train, with several Horsemen and Merchant Banians that made hast to meet the Deputy. This happen'd upon the first of November, 1666. They carri'd with them Provision enough to make merry, and every Banian had his Present ready. For my part, I as soon as I had saluted the Father Capuchin, I went directly to my Lodging, where I had left two Servants to take care of a Sum of Money which I had receiv'd of the King of Persia, unwilling to hazard it upon the Road. For in whatever part of the Indies I came, I had credit enough to buy without Money. I only gave my Bills for payment at Agra, Visapour, Golconda, or Surat, where I generally left my Money, as having receiv'd it there for the most part of the Lords or Kings of the Country.

As for Beber, he was no Changeling, the follies that he committed are too numerous to be related: but how he began the year 1667, is not to be omitted.

M. Thevenot, upon his return from Madrassatan and Golconda, lodg'd in the Capuchins house. Beber going to visit him, told him, that the Capuchins were the Hollanders Spies, and that he had often advis'd Father Ambrose to break with them, and not to go any more to their House. That while he frequented their Society, the French Company would be sure to find some obstacle in their Trade when the Ships should arrive, and that if the Hollanders had not been at Agra, they might have done what they pleas'd with the King. That the hundred thousand Roupies which they had presented to the King and Grandees of the Court, had hinder'd them from obtaining what they design'd. By which it appear'd, he understood not the humour of the Hollanders, for they are not so liberal: nor would all their tricks, or presents have any thing avail'd them, the Great Mogul being desirous that all Nations should be welcome to his Dominions, especially Merchants, as well they that import little, as they that bring in much. M. Thevenot told him, that he had never observ'd so much of the Hollanders in all his travels, for if it were true, that they had such a desire to hinder the Trade of other Nations, they would not afford them passage in their Ships, or to put their Goods aboard, as they often did. Moreover, they send away many times one or two Ships according to the quantity, laden all with strangers Goods, from Maslipatan or Surat, in which Ships, there is not oftentimes so much as one Bale belonging to the Company. And this, added he, is farther observable, That they afford their Freight cheaper than the English, or any other Nation, who have Ships in these parts. Thus Monsieur Thevenot endeavour'd to convince M. Beber, who would have had Father Ambrose have fallen out with the Hollanders. But he knew better things than to disoblige persons to whom he was so much behold-ing as he was every day. For every week they allow'd the house a certain quantity of Bread and Meat, and upon Fast-days sent them Fish, Eggs,

Eggs, Brandy, and Wine, which were no such unkindnesses to be quarrell'd with. Monsieur Thevenot at the same time told Beber, that he should do well to repay Father Ambrose the Money which he had borrow'd to pay for the Coach which he had broken to serve him; as also that which he had given the Seamen, for trying if they could discover the Companies Vessels upon the Coast. But he turn'd his deaf ear to that discourse, and would never be persuaded to reimburse the Money which Father Ambrose laid out for him. Monsieur Thevenot perceiving his unwillingness, and pressing him to do things handsomly, put him into such a chafe, that he fell a swearing after such a violent rate, in a Parlour, that was parted only by a thin board from the place where the Mass was said, that one of the Fryers, just ready to go to the Altar, came forth to desire him to leave his blaspheming. But Beber's insolence took his admonition so ill, that he very rudely beat the Fryer in Mr. Thevenot's presence; swearing, That had it not been out of respect to him, he would have knockt him o' the head. The Capuchin being so injuriously us'd, came to Me, being hardly able to stir his neck, by reason of one of the blows that Beber had given him. I chaf't his neck with Oyl of Coco's, and wrapt it up warm: but we durst not speak a word of Beber's idle action, for fear of exposing our selves to the laughter of the English and Hollanders, who would have made good sport with it. Besides these Enormities, he put away his Servant that had sav'd his Life, and kept his Wages. After that he went to lye at an Apothecaries house, whose Name was Mouillon, who came from Goa, with a good quantity of Portugal Wine, and kept a Tavern at Surat. While he lay there he had a great Contest with the Merchant, who receiv'd the 24000 Roupies, which the King had given him for the loss which he alleadg'd that he and his Chyrurgeon had sustain'd. For the Merchant would acknowledge the receipt of no more then 23900 Roupies, the other Hundred being deducted for Fees of the Treasury. He also maintain'd, That the Merchant had receiv'd the 12000 Roupies which the King had allow'd him for the loss of his Blood: but it was known that the Grand Treasurer would never pay that Money. Thus when he saw that his Cheats were discover'd to all the World, he began to bethink himself how to get away: and we observ'd, that he would fain have quitted Surat without noise. But there is such good Order taken both by Land and Sea, that no person can go away without the knowledge and leave of the Governour. For as the Countrymen that come from the other side of the water cannot return unless they shew a mark in their hands made with red Earth at the Custom-house; neither Horse nor Coach can stir without a Note from the Chabander, and another for the Raddars, who lye sometimes two or three Leagues from the Town. Beber nevertheless had some assurance from his Vintner, that he might get into a Boat, by bidding the Boatmen carry him to Reynel, a large Town on the other side of the water. The Master of the Boat ask'd him for his Ticket, but Beber answer'd him with his Cudgel, forcing him forward, and telling him, he was not to demand Billets of such a person as he was. As he was got half way the River a great number of Souldiers hollow'd after the Boatmen, to row the Strangers back ashore. But Beber laid his hand upon his Sword, and compell'd the Boatmen to go forward. That evening, Beber being return'd, the poor Boatmen were apprehended, and bastinado'd till they were almost maim'd. The people people cri'd out, that it was the Frangui that ought to be so serv'd, and not the poor Watermen, who had done nothing but by constraint.

Thus did this Envoy behave himself both in Persia and India, to the great hindrance of the French Nation. Now let us see what became of both Boulaye and Beber after all their Extravagancies.

The Sieur de la Boulaye, according to the accompt given by the Hollanders that were at Agra, left the Town five or six days after my departure. Knowing I went to Surat, he had plaid his game so well with me, that he got a Hamper of twelve large bottles of Wine for 138 Roupies, though they cost me more, for which he gave me a Note of his hand, that I have still in my custody, to be paid at Surat, upon the arrival of the French Companies ships. From thence he travell'd to Patna, where he staid nine or ten days, partly with the English, partly with the Hollanders: from whence he departed for Daca, the Residence of the Governour of the Province. The Governour of the Province of Bengale was then the Great Mogul's Uncle, whose name was Cha-Est-Kan, a potent Prince, who has always under his Command thirty or forty thousand men.

At Patna, Boulaye had a project, that from thence he might easily pass into China, and to that purpose he there embark'd with some Persian Souldiers, who were going to lift themselves under Cha-Est-Kan. But after that, to this hour, it never could be certainly known what became of him: but by all probable conjectures, it is verily believ'd, that the Persian Souldiers murder'd him and his little Slave, in hopes of some good booty. Of the truth whereof, the Observation that follows was no small evidence. About a quarter of a mile from Daca lies a Town, where live several mungrel Portugal Officers, belonging to the Governour of Bengale, as Canoneers and Carpenters, and some of the same Nation that serve in the Cavalry of Cha-Est-Kan. There they have also a small Church very well built, where an Austin Fryar officiates, to whom, about three months after Boulaye's departure from Patna, a certain Persian in the Habit of a Souldier, with two more companions, brought two large Books, the one in Folio, and the other in Quarto to sell. The Fryar, who was a mungrel also, understood no Latin; but finding them not to be in the Portugal Language, would have stopp'd the Books as stoln from the Hollanders, had not the Souldier been too strong for him. These Books were thought to have been Boulaye's, who, to my knowledge, had two Chefts full, well bound, in reading whereof he spent the greatest part of his time. His Avarice was his Ruine; for had he taken a Bark by himself, as I did when I went from Patna, and had oblig'd the Watermen to give him good security, he could have run no hazard. For my part I took one with four and twenty men; and every one, knowing I never spar'd for cost, gave me excellent security. These Barks are little Galliot, which will undertake to carry you to your journey's end, and name your own day. If you will lye ashoar every evening, they will set up your Tents, and stop at any Town or City to take in Provisions. I never made so pleasant a Voyage in my life, nor with less trouble. For in these Barks, there is a Room where the Sun cannot come in, where you may repose in the day time, and sit in the cool Air on that side from whence the Breez comes. There is another place cover'd for your Kitchen, and another little Garderobe for the private deeds of Nature. By the way I kill'd great store of large Geese, Cranes, and Crocodiles, which I gave the Watermen, who were very glad of them; for they sold them in the Towns as they row'd along. The people in those quarters are very good natur'd and officious. Dyet is little worth, as being the place where you may buy a hundred Pullets for a Crown: and for three or four Pence, you may buy a Fish of a prodigious length and bigness.

Beber's end was no less sad. For when the French Companies Ships were arriv'd, M. Caron, who commanded them, and M. Rambos, with an Armenian, who had the management of the chiefest part of the business, had been acquainted with what had pass'd at Surat; between Beber and the Capuchins. Presently Affections and Interests parted. Caron and Rambos took Beber's part; the Armenian held for the Capuchins, which was at length the ruin of Beber and Rambos. The Holland Commander going aboard to visit the Sieur Caron, upon his return would not permit the Captain to stir out of his Cabin; so that Rambos and the Armenian took upon them to wait upon the Commander. Upon this Occasion the Armenian took upon him to precede Rambos, and briskly threw himself before the French-man; who being provok'd at the Affront, gave the Armenian a swinging cuff of the Ear before all the company. To be short, the Sieur Caron, Rambos, and Beber holding all together, the Armenian found himself too weak to resist: and in regard he had the Management of the Cash, he was accus'd of Misbehaviour, and was condemn'd to be hang'd. But because they could not execute the Sentence which they had given at Surat, they sent him away to the Council Royal of the Island of Madagascar, of which M. Mondevergue was chief; who was so far from confirming the Sentence given at Surat, that he admitted the Armenian to justify himself; and finding that he was not only innocent, but that he might be very useful to the Company, he sent him back to Surat with more power then he had before. This put Beber and Rambos into a fit of Despair, to see the person whom they thought to have ruin'd, now above them. Thereupon they found a way to get 12000 Roupies a piece for their Wages, which they pretended to be due from the Company: and with that and 24000 Roupies which Beber had of his own they Embatqu'd both together for Goa. Where, being arriv'd, Beber dy'd soon after: But as for Rambos, he return'd home again through Isphahan.

UPON THE
OF THE
E A S T - I N D I E S.

That Nation which has a design to settle a Trade in the East-Indies, must be sure in the first place, to possess themselves of a convenient place in that Country, to carine their Ships, and shelter themselves during the tempestuous Seasons. This want of a good Haven is the reason that the English have not made those advantages which otherwise they might have done; because it is impossible that any Vessel should remain in those Seas without being carin'd, or else eaten by the worms.

Therefore, because it is a long way from Europe to the East-Indies, it would be requisite to have a retreating place at the Cape of good Hope, to take in fresh Water and Provisions, whether going or coming; but especially in their return, in regard that the Ships being then laden, cannot take in Water for any long time.

The Road of the Island of St. Helen's, where the English have built a Fort, is a very commodious place: and if the Water be not so good upon the North-side, yet the Plain is an excellent spot of Ground to sow, with convenience of all things necessary for human support.

This advantage the English and Dutch have depriv'd all other Nations of, by their Forts upon the Cape of good Hope, and St. Helen's. And therefore some River's mouth, near the Cape of good Hope, ought to be sought for, for the same purpose, which would be far more convenient than the Dauphin Island, where there is no Trade but that of buying Cattel for their Hides; which being a Trade of so little consequence, would ruin a Company to follow it.

The reason why I make this Proposal is, because that in the year 1648, two Portugal Vessels being bound from Lisbon to the East-Indies, and resolving to touch at the Cape, to take in fresh Water, mistook their just Depths, so that the Sea running high, they fell into a Bay, 18 or 20 Leagues from the Cape, upon the Coast that looks to the West. In that Bay they found a River, whose Water was very good; and the Blacks of the Country brought them Refreshments of all sorts of Fowl, Fish, and Bullock's flesh. There they staid above 15 days, and before they set sail, they took two of the Negro's, which they carri'd along with them to Goa, to teach them the Portuguese Language; on purpose to try if they could discover by them any knowledge of the Trade of the Country. The Dutch Commander at Surat desir'd me, to inform my self, when I went to Goa, what the Portugals had learnt from those two Negro's. But one St. Amand, a French Ingeneer, who was Supervisor of the Fortifications of Goa, told me, That he could not make them learn one word of the Language; and that he could only guess by their signs, that they had some knowledge of Ambergreece and Elephants Teeth. The Portugals however made no question but to meet with Gold, if they could find a way to trade higher up i' the Country. The Revolutions of Portugal, and their Wars with Spain have hinder'd them from making any more particular discovery of the Coast. Which it were to be wish'd the French would undertake, provided they gave no cause of jealousy to the Hollanders, of what they were going about.

There is also a necessity of possessing, or at least having the liberty of some place near Surat, to ride safe in, and to wash and tallow in, in case they should be staid by the Rain-Seasons. The reason is, because that during that ill season, at what time it is impossible to keep the Seas, the Mogul jealous of his Fortrefs of Surat suffers no Foreign Vessel in the River, where nevertheless, the Ships being unladen, may ride securely from the terrible Tempests that last for five Months.

The only secure place for the Companies Vessels would be the Town of Dia, belonging to the Portugals.

The advantage of the situation is considerable for several reasons. The circuit of the City contains almost 400 Houses, and might be capable to receive a greater number of people, where the Ships would find all conveniencies during their stay. It is seated upon the Coast of Guzerat, upon a point of the Gulph of Cambaye, looking toward the South-east. The form of it is almost round; and above half the Circle environ'd by the Sea. It is not commanded by any Hill; and the Portugals have begun those Fortifications, which might be easily finish'd. It contains several Wells of very good Water, and a River which falls into the Sea near the City, whose Water is better then that of Surat, or Sonali, and the Harbour is very commodious for Shipping.

The Portugals, when they had first settl'd themselves in the Indies, kept there a Fleet compos'd of Galleys, Brigantines, and other light Vessels; whereby they made themselves Masters, for a long time, of all the Trade of the Places we have treated of. So that no Ship could trade, without the Governour of Dia's Passport, who made it in the Name of the Viceroy that liv'd at Goa. The Imposition, which the Ships paid, was sufficient to maintain the Fleet and Garrison, and to enrich the Governour besides.

When the Rain-Seasons are over, that the wind sits at North and North-east, you may sail from Dia to Surat in three or four Tides with light Vessels; but great Ships that are laden must fetch a compass about the Bank.

The City has no Land belonging to it, but what it stands upon, yet it would be no difficult thing to agree with the Raja, or Governour of the the Province, and to obtain as much as should be sufficient for the Inhabitants.

Neither is the Land about it very fertile, and besides, the people are the poorest in the whole Empire of the Mogul. Nevertheless the Country is so well stor'd with Cattel, that an Ox or a Bufalo will not cost above two Piafters.

The English and Hollanders make use of these Cattel to feed their People, and to spare the Provisions of their Ships, while they stay at Souali.

But it is observable that the Bufalo's flesh in those parts causes frequent Dysenteries, which the Bullocks flesh or Beef never does.

The Raja that commands the Country has only the Title of Governour for life. Which is common to most of the Raja's in the Mogul's Empire, whose Ancestours were Lords of Provinces, where now their Descendants only enjoy the Titles of Governours.

Having thus got possession of a good Post, the next thing of Importance is to choole out two men considerable for their Honesty, Prudence, and Skill in Trade, who are to be allow'd the full of their Expences.

These two persons are to serve the Company; the one in the nature of a President, with a Council, consisting of a certain number of persons, to assist him. The other in the quality of a Broaker, who must be an Idolater of the Country, and not a Mahumetan, in regard all the Workmen he has to deal with are Idolaters.

Civility and Faith of Promise are altogether requisit to gain Credit among strangers. And these particular qualities are requir'd in the particular Broakers, who are under the Broaker-General in the Provinces where the Factories are settl'd.

Good Intelligence is necessary for these two persons, to understand the alteration of Manufactures.

This alteration happens either through the craft and subtilty of the Workmen and the Merchants themselves, or by the correspondence of the Broakers and Workmen.

Which alteration may cause so much damage to the Company, that the Broakers shall gain ten and twelve i^t the hundred by it.

If the President and Broaker-General combine with the particular Broakers and Merchants, it will be a difficult thing for the Company to avoid being deceiv'd; but if these two persons are but faithful and honest, the fraud may be easily remedi'd by changing the particular Broakers.

The Officers of a Company may be unfaithful to their Trust in this respect:

When a Vessel arrives in Port, the President for the Nation receives the Company's Letters, and the Bills of Lading; upon which he calls his Council, sends for the Broaker, and gives him a Copy of the said Bills.

The Broaker shews them to three or four of the principal Merchants of the Country, who are wont to buy by whole sale. If the President and the Broaker hold together for their own profit, the Broaker instead of facilitating the sale as he ought to do, advises the Merchants to be shie, and to offer only such a price: Then the President sends for the Broaker and these two or three Merchants, and in the presence of the Council he asks the Merchants what they will give for the Goods in the Bills of Lading mention'd. If the Merchants are resolute to give no more then so much; The President puts off the sale 15 days longer, more or less, as he pretends himself press'd to sell. In the mean time he sends for the Merchants several times for a shew, and at length, to avoid suspicion, and to discharge himself, he asks the advice of the Council, and as they approve, orders the delivery of the Goods to the Merchant.

But though the Temptations be very great, to which these two Officers are subject, by reason of their pow'r, their frequent opportunities, and their distance from their Superiours, the Company, besides their being wary in their Election, may remedy these disorders by depriving them of that pretence, which the Dutch Commanders and Broakers have, of being constrain'd to sell off presently to the Merchants in gross, to avoid the expences of delay.

The Errour which the Hollanders commit in this respect is, That their Officers bespeak every year upon Credit all the Goods which they have occasion for in the Empire of the Mogul, according to the Orders which they receive from Batavia.

The credit of this Advance costs them sometimes twelve, sometimes fifteen per Cent; so that so soon as their laden Vessels are arriv'd in the Port where they are to be sold, they are oblig'd to sell them presently off at the Merchants rate first offer'd to their Broakers, to make up a present stock to pay off their credit for the Goods bespoke for their Ships to carry back again, and to get more credit for the next year. This is that which cherishes that confederacy between the President, the Broaker and the Merchant, who makes advantage enough of this necessity of selling.

Whereas the better way were, for them that carry the same Commodities which the Hollanders do, to carry Money also to pay the Workmen for the Goods bespoke for the next year.

The Company making this advantage shall not be put to pay that great Interest of 12 and 15 per Cent.. and besides, they shall have better Goods, and better cheap. The Ships loading shall be ready before they arrive in Port; and being quick laden they may return before the bad Season. Neither shall the Company be put to sell their Goods at a low price; because their Broakers will have time to stay for the coming of Merchants from other parts; or else because they have time enough to send them to other places, where they are sure of a quicker sale.

Observe also, That it is far more profitable to carry to the Indies Gold and Silver in Ingots, rather then ready coin'd; for being coin'd the Money is valu'd only according to their Alloys; and there is always a defalcation made for the charge of Coinage.

The Broaker also, if he be dishonest, may combine with the Master of the Mogul's Mint, which is settl'd in several parts of the Empire, and put a lower value upon the Gold and Silver then it deserves, by telling the President and Council, that upon the touch it appears to be no more worth.

But it is an easie thing to avoid this deceit, provided the President be a person of credit and prudence, by sending for one of the Refiners of Gold and Silver, that live in the Country, who perfectly understand the Touch of Metals, and to let him Essay the Gold and Silver before the Broaker's face.

This is that which the Sieur Walkenton did for the Holland Company in in their Factory at Casambazar, where he bought every year six or seven thousand Bales of Silk. For by this Essay he found, that his Broaker being in confederacy with the Master of the Mint, had cheated the Company of one and a half and two per Cent. in the value of the Gold and Silver which was brought him from Japan, as well coin'd as in barr, to a very considerable sum of Money.

The Broaker also may confederate with the Master of the Mint to couzen the Merchant in weghing his Gold or Silver, by making use of false Weights or Scales unduly pois'd.

But that fraud is easily avoided, if the President and his Council will be but so patient as to see their Metal weigh'd themselves, and take care that the Weights be right, and the Scales true.

One of the most important Observations in reference to the Trade of the Company, and discipline of their Factories is this:

To prevent the Merchants or under-Merchants, Accomptants and under-Accomptants, who officiate under the Commanders and Broakers, from driving any particular Trade by themselves, for they having a familiarity with the men of Manufacture, and finding by the Letters of Advice what Goods are likely to be most vendible next year, buy them up upon their own accompts, and find a way to lade them off in the Company's Vessels, to the great damage of the whole, though to the great gain of particular people.

And this the President permits them to do, either for his own Interest, or by connivance under the pretence of their small Wages. The Captain of the Vessel also winks at what they do, because he has a spell for loading and unloading. And because these people having no great Stocks, are desirous to put off their Goods with the first opportunities, they give order to their Correspondents to under-sell the Company ten or twelve in the Hundred, which is the absolute ruin of a Trade.

To remedy this disorder there ought to be a Fiscal, or King's Proctor, in every of the chief Factories belonging to the Company, to act in the King's Name, and by his Authority.

He is to be independent from the President and the Broaker, in the Exercise of his Office; so that he may have an eye, as well upon their behaviour, as upon the demeanour of the under Officers.

He ought to be a person of good Credit, resolute and vigilant; and he must have a strength of men correspondent to his Employment, and a Deputy to act under him.

He is to have good Information of the departure of all Ships when they are once laden, and when they are ready to set sail for the Port whither they are bound. When he hears of the Arrival of any Ship, he ought to go himself, or send his Deputy with a sufficient Guard, to take an Account of the Ship's Lading.

If it be a place near to which there are any small Islands, or by-Nooks, it behoves him to take care that no Goods be privately convey'd ashore in those private corners, where there are receivers a now ready: and whatever he finds thus privately unladen he shall have power to confiscate.

He shall also confiscate whatever he finds not Mark'd with the Company's Mark.

He may also discharge any inferiour Officers to whom any such Bales shall shall belong ; and for the superiour Officers, he shall complain of them to the Company.

He shall have pow'r to open all private Letters , to inform himself of Prohibited Goods, and Private Correspondencies.

This Prohibition of Private Trading cannot be too severely impos'd, and it is observ'd with so much exactness in Holland, that when one of the Company's Ships is ready to set sail from Amsterdam, a Burgomaster gives the Captain and all the rest of the Seamen their Oaths, that they shall be contented with their Wages, and meddle with nothing of Trade.

All the Officers of the Factory should be advanc'd by degrees, so that a sub-Accomptant may have hopes to be a President ; that the hopes of Advancement may oblige them to live with more credit, and cause them to study to make themselves more capable of all the Intrigues and Subtilties of the Trade of the Country.

It is of great importance not to shew any favour in this particular of preferment, unless he have pass'd through all particular Degrees and Offices beforehand. And thus much concerning the Discipline of the Factories.

OF THE COMMODITIES

WHICH ARE

Brought as well out of the Dominions of the GREAT MOGUL, as out of the Kingdoms of Golconda and Visapour, and other neighbouring Territories; And also of the Weights and Prices of the said Commodities.

Of their Silk.

Kasembasar, a Village in the Kingdom of Bengala, sends abroad every year two and twenty-thousand Bales of Silk; every Bale weighing a hunder'd pound. The two and twenty Bales make two millions and two-hunder'd-thousand pound, at sixteen ounces to the pound. The Hollanders usually carry away six or seven-thousand Bales, and would carry away more, did not the Merchants of Tartary, and the Mogul's Empire oppose them: for they buy up as much as the Hollander; the rest the Natives keep to make their Stuffs. This Silk is also brought into the Kingdom of Guzerat, the greatest part whereof comes to Amadabat, and to Surat, where it is wrought up.

In the first place they make Carpets of Silk and Gold; others of Silk and Silver, others all of Silk: for the Worsted Carpets are made at Vettapour, some twelve leagues from Agra.

In the second place they make Satins with streaks of Gold and Silver;
others plain: with Taffata's after the same fashion.

In the third place they make Patoles, which are a sort of Silk-stuff very thin, but painted with all sorts of Flowers; the manufacture whereof is at Amadabat. They cost from eight Roupies to forty the piece.
This is a Commodity wherein the Dutch will not suffer any one of the Hollanders to trade in particular: for they transport it to the Philippine-Islands, to the Islands of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, and other neighbouring Islands.

The raw-Silk of Kasembasar is yellowish, as are all the raw-Silks that come from Persia and Sicily; but the Natives of Kasembasar have a way to whiten it, with a Lye made of the ashes of a Tree which they call Adam's Fig-tree; which makes it as white as the Palestine-Silk. The Hollanders send away all their Merchandize which they fetch out of Ben- gala,

gala, by water, through a great Canal that runs from Kasembasar into Ganges, for fifteen leagues together; from whence it is as far by water down the Ganges to Ouguely, where they lade their Ships.

Of the Calicuts: and first of the painted Calicuts, call'd Chites.

CHites or Painted Calicuts, which they call Calmendar, that is to say, done with a Pencil, are made in the Kingdom of Golconda; and particularly about Massipatan. But there is made so little, that though a man should employ all the Workmen that understand the Art of weaving Calicuts, he would hardly find enough to make three Bales.

The Chites which are made in the Empire of the Great Mogul are all printed; and nothing so beautiful, neither for the figures nor the fineness of the Linnen. Those which are made at Lahor, are the coarsest, and consequently the cheapest of all. They are sold by Corges, every Corge consisting of twenty pieces, which cost from 16 to 30 Roupies.

The Chites which are made at Seronge, are sold from 20 to 50 Roupies the Corge, or thereabouts.

These Chites serve for Coverlets for Beds, for Sofra's or Table-cloaths after the Country-fashion, Pillowbears, Handkerchiefs, but more especially for Waistcoats as well for the men as women in Persia.

The fine Calicut-Chites are made at Brampour; and are us'd for Handkerchiefs by those that snuff Tobacco.

The women also, over all Asia, make Veils of these Calicuts, to wear over their heads, and about their shoulders, which Veils are call'd Ormis.

The Basta's or Calicuts painted red, blue, and black, are carri'd white to Agra, and Amadabat; in regard those Cities are nearest to the places where the Indigo is made that is us'd in colouring. They cost from two Roupies to 30 or 40 a-piece, according to the fineness and the quantity of Gold at the ends, and sometimes upon the sides. The Indians have a way to dip some of these Calicuts in a certain water that makes them look like Water'd-Chamlets, which adds also to the price.

That sort which is sold for two Roupies, and so onward till ye come to twelve, is transported to the Coast of Melinda, and it is the greatest Trade the Governour of Mosambique drives, who sells them to the Cafres, that vend them again among the Abyssins, and into the Kingdom of Saba: for those people not understanding the use of Soap, need no more but only to wash these Calicuts in water. That sort which is valu'd from 12 Roupies upward, is transported to the Philippine-Islands, the Islands of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, and other adjacent places. Where the women wear no other clothes, then a single piece of this Calicut. One part whereof, without cutting it, serves for a Petticoat; the other they wind about their stomachs and their heads.

White Calicuts.

VWhite Calicuts come partly from Agra, and about Lahor, part from Bengala: some from Brouda, Baroche, Renonsari, and other places. They are brought out of the Loom to Renonsari, and Baroche, where they are whiten'd by reason of the convenience of their Meadows, and the great store of Limons that grow thereabouts. For the Calicuts are never so white as they should be, till they are dipt in Limon-water.

The

The Calicuts that come from Agra, Lahor, and Bengala, are sold by the Corge, and they are of several prices, from seventeen Roupies to three or four-hunder'd, as the Merchant will have them wov'n.

The Calicuts that come from Renonsari, and Baroche, are one and twenty cubits long, new out of the Loom, but in the whitening they shrink to twenty cubits.

Those of Brouda twenty cubits from the Loom, and shrink in the whitening to nineteen and a half.

All the Calicuts, or Basta's that come from these three Cities, are of two sorts: for some are broad, some are narrow. The narrow are those I have already mention'd, the prices whereof are various, from two Mamondi's to six.

The broad Basta's are a cubit, and one third part wide, the whole piece twenty cubits long. The usual price of them is from five Mamondi's to twelve: but a Merchant being upon the place, may cause them to be made much more large and fine, till they are worth five hundred Mamondi's a-piece. I saw two pieces sold for a thousand Mamondi's.

The English bought one, and the Hollanders another, each Piece containing eight and twenty cubits.

Mahamed Alibeg returning into Persia out of India, where he had been Embassador, presented Cha-Sef the second with a Coco-nut, about the bigness of an Austrich-egg, all beset with Pearls: and when 'twas open'd there was taken out of it a Turbant that had sixty cubits of Calicut in length to make it, the Cloath being so fine, that you could hardly feel it in your hand: For they will spin their thread so fine, that the eye can hardly discern it, or at least it seems to be but a Cob-web.

Twisted-Cotton.

Cotton twisted and untwisted comes from the Provinces of Brampour and Guzerat. Untwisted Cotton is never transported into Europe, being too cumbersome, and of little value; only they send it to Ormuz, Balsara, and sometimes to the Philippine-Islands, and the Islands of Sinde. As for the twisted Cottons, the English and Hollanders transport a good quantity, not of the finest, but of that sort which is pric'd from fifteen to fifty Mamondi's: It serves for wicks for Candles, for Packfaddles, and for the ground of Silk-stuffs.

Indigo.

Indigo comes from several parts of the Great Mogul's Empire; and according to the diversity of the places it differs in quality, and consequently in price.

In the first place, it comes from the Territories of Biana, Indoua, and Corfa, a day or two's journey from Agra: which is esteem'd the best of all. It is made also eight days journey from Surat, in a Village called Sarques, two leagues distance from Amadabat. Here the flat Indigo is made. There is also Indigo little inferior in goodness and price, which comes from the King of Golconda's Territories. The Mein of Surat, which contains 42 serre's, or 34 and a half of our pounds, is valu'd from 15 to 20 Roupies. They make as good as this at Baroche. That which is made up about Agra is made up in half Balls, and is the most sought for in all India.

It is sold by the Mein, which in those places contains 60 Serres, or 31 and three quarters of our pounds. The usual price is from 36 to 40 Roupies. There grows also Indigo some 36 leagues from Brampour, about a great Village call'd Raout, and round about the neighbouring Towns in the road to Sarat: Of which the Natives usually make above a hunder'd thousand Roupies.

There comes Indigo also from Bengala, which the Holland-Company transports for Maslipatan. But they buy this Indigo, and that of Brampour and Amadabat, cheaper by 24 in the hunder'd, then that of Agra.

Indigo is made of an Herb which they sow every year after the rains are over: which when it is grown up, is very like our Hemp. They cut it three times a year; first when it is about two or three foot high; and they cut it within half a foot of the ground; the first cutting far exceeds the two latter. The second cutting is worse then the first by ten or twelve in the hunder'd. And the third worse then the second by 12 in the hunder'd. The difference is found by breaking a piece of the Paste; and observing the colour. The colour of that Indigo which is made of the first cutting, is a Violet-blue, but more brisk and lively than the two others: and that which is made of the second is more lively then the third.

When they have cut the Herb, they throw it into Pits which they make with Lime, which becomes so hard, that you would judg it to be one intire piece of Marble. They are generally fourscore or a hunderd paces in circuit; and being half full of water, they fill them quite up with the Herb. Then they bruise and jumble it in the water till the leaf, for the stalk is worth nothing, becomes like a kind of thick mud. This being done, they let it settle for some days; and when the settling is all at the bottom, and the water clear above, they let out all the water. When the water is all drain'd out, they fill several baskets with this slime, and in a plain Field you shall see several men at work, every one at his own basket, making up little pieces of Indigo flat at the bottom, at the top sharp like an egg. Though at Amadabat they make their pieces quite flat like a small cake. Here you are to take particular notice, that the Merchants, because they would not pay custom for an-unnecessary weight, before they transport their Indigo out of Asia into Europe, are very careful to cause it to be sifted; to separate the dust from it; which they sell afterwards to the Natives of the Countrey to dye their Calicuts. They that sift this Indigo must be careful to keep a Linnen-cloath before their faces, and that their nostrils be well-stopt, leaving only two little holes for their eyes. Besides, they must every half hour be sure to drink milk, which is a great preservative against the piercing quality of the dust. Yet notwithstanding all this caution, they that have sifted Indigo for nine or ten days, shall spit nothing but blew for a good while together. Once I laid an Egg in the morning among the sifters, and when I came to break it in the evening it was all blew within.

As they take the Paste out of the Baskets with their Fingers dipt in Oil, and make it into Lumps, or Cakes, they lay them in the Sun to dry. Which is the reason that when the Merchants buy Indigo, they burn some pieces of it, to try whether there be any dust among it. For the Natives who take the Paste out of the Baskets to make it into Lumps, lay it in the Sand, which mixes with the Paste, and fouls it. But when the Merchants burn it, the indigo turns to Ashes, and the Sand remains. The Governours do what they can to make the Natives leave their

Knavery; but notwithstanding all their care, there will be some deceit.

Salt-Peter.

Great store of Salt-Peter comes from Agra and Patna; but the refin'd costs three times more than that which is not. The Hollanders have set up a Ware-House fourteen Leagues above Patna, and when their Salt-Peter is refin'd, they transport it by water by Ogueli. A Mein of refin'd Salt-Peter is worth seven Mamoudi's.

Spice.

Cardamom, Ginger, Pepper, Nutmegs, Nutmeg-Flowers, Cloves and Cinnamon, are all the different sorts of Spices known to us. I put Cardamom and Ginger in the first place, because that Cardamom grows in the Territories of Visapour, and Ginger in the Dominions of the Great Mogul. And as for other Spices, they are brought from other Foreign parts to Surat, which is the grand Mart.

Cardamom is the most excellent of all other Spices, but it is very scarce; and in regard there is no great store in the place where it grows, it is only made use of in Asia, at the Tables of great Princes. Five hundred pound of Cardamoms, are pric'd from a hundred to a hundred and ten Rials.

Ginger is brought in great quantities from Amadabat, where there grows more than in any other part of Asia; and it is hardly to be imagin'd how much there is transported candited into Foreign parts.

Pepper is of two sorts. There is a sort which is very small; another sort much bigger; both which sorts are distinguish'd into small and great Pepper. The larger sort comes from the Coast of Malavare; and Tuticorin and Calicut are the Cities where it is brought up. Some of this Pepper comes from the Territories of the King of Visapour, being vended at Rejapour, a little City in that Kingdom. The Hollanders that purchase it of the Malavares, do not give Money for it, but several sorts of Commodities in Exchange; as Cotten, Opium, Vermilion, and Quicksilver; and this is the Pepper which is brought into Europe. As for the little Pepper that comes from Bantam, Afchen, and some other parts toward the East, there is none of it carried out of Asia, where it is spent in vast quantities, especially among the Mahumetans. For there are double the Grains of small Pepper in one pound, to what there are of the great Pepper; besides that the great Pepper is hotter in the mouth.

The little Pepper that comes to Surat, has been sold some years for thirteen or fourteen Mamoudi's the Mein; and so much I have seen the English give for it, to transport it to Ormuz, Balsara, and the Red Sea. As for the great Pepper, which the Hollanders fetch from the Coast of Malavare, five hundred pound in truck brings them in not above thirty-eight Rials; but by the Commodities which they give in Barter, they gain Cent. per Cent.

The Nutmeg, the Nutmeg-Flow'r, the Clove, and Cinnamon, are the only Spices which the Hollanders have in their own hands. The three first come from the Molucca Islands; the fourth, which is Cinnamon, from the Island of Ceylan.

'Tis

'Tis observable of the Nutmeg, that the Tree which bears it is never planted, which has been confirm'd to me by several persons that have liv'd several years in the Country. They related to me, that the Nutmeg being ripe, several Birds come from the Islands toward the South, and devour it whole, but are forc'd to throw it up again before it be digested. The Nutmeg then besmear'd with a viscous matter, falling to the ground takes root, and produces a Tree, which would never thrive were it planted. This puts me in mind of making one observation upon the Birds of Paradise. These Birds being very greedy after Nutmegs, come in flights to gorge themselves with the pleasing Spice, at the season, like Felfares in Vintage time; but the strength of the Nutmeg so intoxicates them, that they fall dead drunk to the Earth, where the Emets in a short time eat off their Legs. Hence it comes, that the Birds of Paradise are said to have no Feet, which is not true however, for I have seen three or four that had Feet; and a French Merchant sent one from Aleppo as a Present to Lewis the Thirteenth that had Feet; of which the King made great account, as being a very lovely Fowl.

But notwithstanding all the Hollanders Projects, you may buy Cloves at Macassar without purchasing them of the Hollander; in regard the Islanders buy them of the Dutch Captains and Soldiers, which the Hollanders have in those places where the Cloves grow, giving them in exchange Rice, and other necessaries for the support of life, without which they would starve, being very sadly provided for.

When the Natives of Macassar are thus furnish'd of Cloves, they barter them in Exchange for such Commodities as are brought them; sometimes they give Tortoise-Shells in exchange, and Gold Dust, by which the Merchant gains six or seven in the hundred, being better than the Money of the Island, though it be Gold, by reason the King oft-times enhances the value of it. The places where Cloves grow, are Amboyna, Ellias, Seram, and Bouro.

The Islands of Banda also, in number six, viz. Nero, Lontour, Poulcay, Roseguin, and Grenapuis, bear Nutmegs in great abundance. The Island of Grenapuis is about six Leagues in compals, and ends in a sharp point, where there is a continual fire burning out of the earth. The Island Damme, where there grows great store of Nutmegs, and very big, was discover'd in the year 1647, by Abel Tasman, a Dutch Commander.

The Price of Cloves and Nutmegs, as I have known them sold to the Hollanders at Surat, was as follows.

The Mein of Surat contains forty Serres, which make thirty-four of our Pounds, at sixteen Ounces to the Pound.

A Mein of Cloves was sold for a hundred and three Mamoudi's and a half.

A Mein of Mace was sold for a hundred and fifty-seven Mamoudi's and a half.

Nutmegs for fifty-six Mamoudi's and a half.

Cinnamon comes at present from the Island of Ceylan. The Tree that bears it is very much like the Willow, and has three Barks. They never take off but the first and second, which is accounted the best. They never meddle with the third, for should the Knife enter that, the Tree would dye. So that it is an art to take off the Cinnamon, which they learn from their youth. The Cinnamon Spice is much dearer to the Hollanders then people think; for the King of Ceylan, otherwise call'd

King

King of Candy, from the name of his principal City, being a sworn Enemy to the Hollanders, sends his Forces with an intention to surprize them; when they gather their Cinnamon, so that they are forc'd to bring seven or eight hundred men together to defend as many more that are at work. Which great expence of theirs very much enhances the price of the Cinnamon. There grows upon the Cinnamon Tree a certain fruit like an Olive, though not to be eaten. This the Portugals were wont to put into a Caldron of Water, together with the tops of the Branches, and boil'd it till the Water was all consum'd. When it was cold, the upper part became a Paste like white Wax, of which they made Tapers to set up in their Churches, for no sooner were the Tapers lighted, but all the Church was perfum'd. Formerly the Portugals brought Cinnamon out of other Countries, belonging to the Raja's about Cochin. But the Hollanders have destroy'd all those places, so that the Cinnamon is now in their hands. When the Portugals had that Coast, the English bought their Cinnamon of them, and usually paid for it by the Mein fifty Mamoudi's.

Drugs that are brought to Surat, and brought from other Countries, with the price of every one by the Mein.

Salt Armoniack, according to the usual price, costs by the Mein twenty Mamoudi's.

Borax, comes unrefin'd from Amadabat, as does Salt Armoniack, and costs by the Mein thirty-five Mamoudi's.

Gum-Lack, seven Mamoudi's and a half.

Gum-Lack wash'd, ten Mamoudi's.

Gum-Lack in sticks of Wax, forty Mamoudi's.

There are some of these Sticks that cost fifty or sixty Mamoudi's the Mein, and more when they mix Musk in the Gum.

Saffron of Surat, which is good for nothing but for colouring, four Mamoudi's and a half.

Cumin White, eight Mamoudi's.

Cumin Black, three Mamoudi's.

Asfet small, three Mamoudi's.

Frankincense, that comes from the Coast of Arabia, three Mamoudi's.

Myrrh, that which is good, call'd Mirra Gilet, thirty Mamoudi's.

Myrrh Bolti, which comes from Arabia, fifteen Mamoudi's.

Cassia, two Mamoudi's.

Sugar Candy, eighteen Mamoudi's.

Alutinat, a sort of Grain, very hot, one Mamoudi.

Annise-feed gross, three Mamoudi's and a half.

Annise-feed small and hot, one Mamoudi and a half.

Oupelote, a Root, fourteen Mamoudi's.

Cointre, five Mamoudi's.

Auzerout, from Persia, a hundred and twenty Mamoudi's.

Alloes Succotrine, from Arabia, twenty eight Mamoudi's.

Licorice, four Mamoudi's.

Lignum Aloes, in great pieces, two hundred Mamoudi's.

Lignum Aloes, in small pieces, four hundred Mamoudi's.

Vez-Cabouli, a certain Root, twelve Mamoudi's.

There is a sort of Lignum Aloes very Gummy, which comes to, by the Mein, four thousand Mamoudi's.

Gum-

Gum-Lake for the most part comes from Pegu; yet there is some also brought from Bengala; where it is very dear, by reason the Natives fetch that lively Scarlet colour out of it, with which they paint their Calicuts. Nevertheless, the Hollanders buy it, and carry it into Persia for the same use of painting. That which remains after the colour is drawn off, is only fit to make sealing Wax. That which comes from Pegu is not so dear, though as good for other Countries. The difference is only this, that it is not so clean in Pegu, where the Pismires foul it, as in Bengala, where it grows in a heathy place, full of Shrubs; where those Animals cannot so well come at it. The Inhabitants of Pegu never make any use of it in painting, being a dull sort of people, that are in nothing at all industrious.

The Women of Surat get their livings by cleansing the Lake after the Scarlet colour is drawn from it. After that they give it what colour they please, and make it up into Sticks for sealing Wax. The English and Holland Company carry away every year a hundred and fifty Chelts. The price is about ten Pence the pound.

Powder'd Sugar is brought in great quantities out of the Kingdom of Bengala; it causes also a very great Trade at Ougeli, Patna, Daca, and other places. I have been told it for a very great certainty, by several ancient people in Bengala, that Sugar being kept thirty years becomes absolute poison, and that there is no Venom more dangerous, or that sooner works its effect. Loaf-Sugar is also made at Amadabat, where they are perfectly skill'd in refining it, for which reason it is call'd Sugar Royal. These Sugar Loaves usually weigh from eight to ten pound.

Opium is brought from Brampour, a Town of good Trade between Agra and Surat. The Hollanders buy great quantities, which they truck for their Pepper.

Tobacco also grows in abundance round about Brampour; sometimes there has been so much that the Natives have let vast quantities rot upon the ground, for want of gathering.

Coffee grows neither in Persia nor in India, where it is in no request; but the Hollanders drive a great Trade in it, transporting it from Ormuz into Persia, as far as Great Tartary, from Balsara into Chaldea, Arabia, Mesopotamia, and the other Provinces of Turky. It was first found out by a Hermite, whose name was Sheck-Siadeli, about twenty years ago, before which time it was never heard of in any Author either ancient or modern.

Deceits in Silk Wares.

PLAIN Silk Wares may be alter'd in length, breadth, and quality. The quality shews it self when they are of an even thread, when the weight is equal, and when there is no Cotton thread in the Weft.

The Indians not having the art of gilding silver, put into their strip'd Wares threads of pure Gold, so that you must count the quantity of Gold threads to see whether the Silk have its due number. And this also you must observe in your Silks wov'n with Silver. As for Taffata's, you are only to mind whether the pieces be all of a fineness, and to see by unfolding some of them, that there be nothing within to augment the weight, and then weighing all the pieces by themselves, to see that they all agree.

The

The colours of those Carpets which are made in India, do not last so long as the colour of those which are made in Persia; but for the workmanship it is very lovely. The eye of the Broaker is to judge of the largeness, beauty, and fineness of those Carpets which are wrought with Gold and Silver, and whether they be fine and rich. But whether they be Carpets, or other Stuffs mix'd with Gold and Silver, it behoves the Buyer to pull out some of the Gold and Silver Threads, to see whether they be of the right value or no.

Deceits in the White Calicuts.

THe deceits usually put upon Calicuts, are in fineness, length, and breadth. Every Bale may contain two hundred pieces, among which they will juggle in five or six or ten, less fine, or less white, shorter or narrower than according to the scantling of the Bale, which cannot be found out but by examining them piece by piece. The fineness is discern'd by the eye, the length and breadth by the measure. But the Indians practise a more cunning way, which is to count the number of threads which ought to be in the breadth, according to the fineness of the scantling. When the number fails, it is either more transparent, more narrow, or more coarse. The difference is sometimes so difficult to be perceiv'd, that there is no way to find it out but by counting the threads. And yet this difference in a great quantity comes to a great deal. For it is nothing to coulen a Crown or two Crowns in a piece that comes but to fifteen or twenty Crowns. Those that whiten these Calicuts, to save charges of a few Limons, will knock the Calicuts excessively upon a Stone, which does fine Calicuts a great injury, and lowers the price.

As for their Calicuts dy'd blew or black, you must take care that the Workmen do not knock them after they are folded, to make them look sleek; for many times when they come to be unfolded, you shall find holes in the creases.

As for your painted and printed Calicuts, which are painted and printed as they come out of the Loom, the Merchant must take care that what he bespeaks be finish'd before the end of the Rains, for the thicker the Water is where they are wash'd, the more lively will the printed and painted colours appear. It is easie to distinguish between the printed and the painted Calicuts, and between the neatness of the work: but for the fineness and other qualities, they are not so easily discern'd; and therefore the Broaker must be more careful.

Cheats in Cotton.

THe cheat in the weight is twofold. The first, by laying them in a moist place; and thrusting in the middle of every Skain something to add to the weight. The second, in not giving good weight when the Broaker receives it from the Workman, or Merchant that delivers it.

There is but one cheat in the quality, that is by putting three or four Skains, of a coarser Commodity then that which is uppermost, into one Mein. Which in a great quantity mounts high; for there are some Cottons that are worth an hunder'd Crowns the Mein. These two cheats being often us'd by the Holland-Company, there is no way but to weigh your Commodity in the presence of the Dutch-Commander, and his Council; and to examin every Mein Skain by Skain. When this is done, they who are order'd to be at his examination, are oblig'd to fix to every Bale a ticket of the weight and quality: for if there be a faileur, they who fix the ticket are engag'd to make good what is wanting.

Deceits in Indigo.

I Have told you, that when the Work-men have made up the Indigo-Paste into lumps, with their fingers dipt in Oil, they lay them in the Sun a drying. Now those that have a design to cheat the Merchants, dry them in the sand, to the end that the sand sticking to the Indigo, should encrease the weight. Sometimes they lay up their Paste in moist places, which makes it give, and consequently renders it more heavy. But if the Governour of the place discovers the cheat, he makes them severely pay for it: and the best way of discovery is to burn some pieces of Indigo, for the sand will remain.

Indian Broakers.

THE Broakers are as it were the Masters of the Indian Families; for they have all Goods at their disposal. The Work-men choose the most aged and most experienc'd, who are to endeavour equal advantages for the whole Tribe they undertake for. Every evening that they return from their business, and that, according to the custom of the Indians, who make no Suppers, they have eaten some little piece of sweet-meat, and drank a glass of water, the eldest of the Tribe meet at the Broaker's House, who gives them an account of what he has done that day, and then they consult what he is to do next. Above all things, they caution him to look to his hits, and to cheat, rather than be cheated.

A New and Particular

RELATION Of the KINGDOM of TUNQUIN:

With a MAP of the COUNTRY and several FIGURES.

CHAP. I.

A Discourse in general concerning the City of Tunquin, and of the Manner how the Author came to have knowledge thereof.

THE Kingdom of Tunquin has been long unknown to the People of Europe; neither have they, who have given us Relations thereof, well understood the Country, as having trusted too much to defective and fabulous Descriptions and Observations. Not that I am willing to be over severe in censuring; but submissively I am bold to affirm, That this which I here make Public was extracted out of my Brother's Writings, of which I had the overlooking in my second Voyage that I made to the Indies ; and of which I was the more confident , for that the Author had been one who had made Eleven or Twelve Voyages from Batavia, Bantam, and Achem, to Tunquin. Other Observations I collected from the Tunquinesi themselves, with whom I have had several Discourses, during the time that I was at Batavia and Bantam , where they principally trade. And that which gave me the more light was this , That those Merchants several times bring along with them some of their Bonze's or Priests , as also some of their Learned Men to teach their Children to Write and Read. For these Merchants when they make a Voyage by Sea , carry all their Families along with them. And from these Bonze's and other Learned Men I had several Observations and Memoirs in Writing, as being desirous to be inform'd by me of the Government and Situation of our France. And as I was never without an Atlas and some other particular Maps, they were ravish'd with admiration , when I shew'd them the Structure and Composure of the whole World, and the Situation of its several Kingdoms and Estates.

Therefore may the Reader with the more pleasure and delight peruse these Relations , when he has so much reason to be persuaded that they are cordially done , and that they are made public by a person whose sincerity has no design to abuse him. My Brother , who was a person both cunning and courageous , and one that lov'd to Travel as well as my self , having heard much talk in the Indies of the Grandeur of the Kingdom of Tunquin, resolv'd to go thither, and as he had a particular gift to learn a Language in a little time, he soon grew familiar with the Malaye, which is the Language of the Learned in those quarters of Asia, as Latin is among Us in Europe. He understood that Silk, Musk, and other Commodities of the like nature, were much cheaper there than in other places adjoining , and that the People dealt with more fairness and honesty. Upon the encouragement of which Information he prepar'd a Ship , and made his Voyages with good success.

He always carri'd with him a good Sum of Money ; and more than that, he stor'd himself with a considerable number of small Curiosities , to present the King and his Nobility , according to the general Custom of all the Eastern Countries :

Thus

Thus he came to be well receiv'd the first time that he set foot in the Country; so that the Customer being by him oblig'd with a small Clock, a pair of small Pistols, and two Pictures, which were the Pictures of two Curtesans, immediately gave notice to the King of his arrival. Thereupon having order to attend the Court, and coming to kiss the King's hands, the whole Assembly was surpris'd to hear a Stranger, born in a Country so far distant, speak the Malaye Language so fluently. The King gave him a favourable reception, and kindly receiv'd the Present which he brought along with him. It was a very noble Sword, of which the Handle and Hilt were all over enchac'd with Rubies and Emraulds, with a Backsword Blade. To this he added a pair of Pistols, adorn'd and inlaid with Silver, a Persian Saddle and Bridle, embroider'd with Gold and Silver, a Bow and Quiver full of Arrows, and six Pictures, like those which he had given the Customer. These things highly pleas'd the King, who presently drew forth the Sword out of the Scabbard, the better to look upon and consider it. At length one of his Sons took it up, to try whether it would fit his hand as well as those of his own Country, and offer'd to make a blow. My Brother, seeing the young Prince handle the Weapon gracefully enough, after the manner of the Country, told the King, that if he pleas'd, he would shew the King how they handled that Weapon in France, of which the King readily consented to be a Spectatour.

This was my Brother's first Reception at Court; for he made several Voyages to Tunquin, and every time that he return'd, they still the more and more obligingly entertain'd him. But that which fix'd him more in the good opinion and favour of the King and Lords of the Court, was his frolic and gentile behaviour in playing with them for several large Sums, insomuch that being one that ventur'd deep, he lost above 20000 Crowns in one Voyage. However the King, who was a generous Prince, would not suffer him to be a loser, but gave him those considerable Presents that suppli'd his losses. By means of my Brother's thus long sojourning in Tunquin, and the familiar acquaintance which he had at Court, together with the Trade which he drove in the Kingdom, as he was diligent to inform himself of all the Curiousities of the Country, it was easie for me upon the same foundation to lay the Structure of these Memoirs. Though I may safely say, I was no less laborious in my own particular, and by the frequent Discourses which I had with a great number of the Tunquineses, with whom I met both at Bantam and Batavia that came thither to Trade, and whom I often treated at my own Expences, to inform my self of the particular Ceremonies and Customs of their Country.

Thus you see the Grounds and Foundations of this Relation, which is both faithful and exact, and by which that noble Country, of which the Descriptions hitherto have been so obscure and uncertain, shall be truly discover'd and set forth, such as it is; declaring withal, that no other Consideration or Interest, then that of speaking truth, has incited me to undertake this Description.

For the better observation of a right Method in pursuance of this Relation, and to conduct the Reader gradatim to the more perfect knowledge of this Kingdom, I will speak first of its Situation, its Extent, and its Climate. Next I shall come to discourse of its Qualities, its Riches, and its Trade, which are the three Springs and Sources of the Strength and Force of a Nation. Next I shall give an Account of the Customs and Manners of the People as well in their particular OEconomy and Civil Society, as in relation to their Marriages, their Visits and Festivals. Next to this we shall give a brief Account of the Learning, and learned Men, and among them of their Physicians, and the Subject of their Art, that is to say, of the Diseases particular to the Country. We shall also give a Relation of the Original of the Government and Policy of the Kingdom of Tunquin, of the Condition of the Court, of the Inauguration and Funerals of their Kings, and in the last place of the Original of the Inhabitants.

And I dare engage, that the Map of the Country, and the Cuts which were drawn upon the place, will no less contribute to the Divertisement of the Reader, then to the Explanation of the Matter which they contain.

C H A P. II.

Of the Situation and Extent of the Kingdom of Tunquin.

WE shall have the less reason to admire wherefore our Predecessors had so little knowledge of this Kingdom, when we consider that having formerly been a considerable part of China, the Inhabitants in the same manner as the Chineses did, kept themselves close within their own bounds, never minding to have any Commerce with other People, whom they contemn'd and lookt upon as Barbarians come from the other part of the World. But now that they find that Strangers come to find them out in their own Territories, they begin to see that other People have as good Government as themselves; which has bred in them a desire to Converse and Trade with Foreigners; so that now they associate themselves in friendly manner with all other People, as I have observ'd them to do both at Batavia and Bantam. Most people believe this Country to lye in a very hot Climate; nevertheless it is now known to be very temperate, by reason of the great number of Rivers that water it; which, together with the Rains that fall in their Seasons, cause a brisk freshness of the Air; which indeed happ'ns most usually over all the Torrid-zone, as I have observ'd in my Indian Travels. From whence we may also have reason to believe the Country to be very fruitful and thick inhabited.

To the East this Kingdom lies upon the Province of Canton, one of the best of China.

To the West it is bounded by the Kingdom of Brama.

To the North it borders upon two other Provinces of China, Junnan and Quansi.

To the South it lies upon Cochinchina, and the great Gulph of the same name.

To return to the Climate, the Air is so mild and temperate, that all the year long seems to be but one continual Spring; Frost and Snow are never there to be seen; and besides, besides, the Pestilence, the Gout, the Stone, and other Diseases so frequent in Europe, there are never known. There are but two Winds, which divide the whole Year between them; the one blowing from the North, the other from the South, and both continuing the same for six months together. The first refreshes the Earth in that manner, that there is nothing so delightful as the Country of Tunquin. The other begins to blow from the end of January to the end of July; and the two last months are their months of rain. The greatest inconvenience is, that there arise once in seven years, as well in this Country as in other parts of the Indies, those hideous and terrible Tempests, that blow down Houses, tear up Trees by the roots, and make strange Desolations. They seldom last above four and twenty hours, nor are their sad Effects to be felt but only upon the Seas of China, Japon, Cochinchina, Tunquin, and the Manilles, being rarely known in any other Seas.

The Astrologers of those parts believe that these terrible Tempests proceed from the Exhalations that rise out of the Mines of Japon. It comes with that suddain force that when it surprizes a Vessel out at Sea, the Pilots have no other remedy then to cut down all the Masts, that the storm may have the less force upon the Ship.

In this fair extent of Land, almost equal to that of France, are several Provinces, whose limmits are not well known; the Tunquineses being no great Geographers, nor having bin over curious to write the Annals of the Nation. But the most understanding and knowing among them assur'd me at Batavia, that the whole Kingdom contain'd above twenty thousand Cities and Towns. They also affirm'd that there might be many more, but after the manner of their Neighbours the Cochinchineses, many of the People choose rather to upon the Water then upon the Land; so that you shall see live the greatest part of their Rivers coverd with Boates, which serve them instead of Houses; and which are very neat, though they also keep their Cattel in them.

CHAP. III.

Of the Quality of the Kingdom of Tunquin.

THis Country for the most part is a level Extent, which rises up and down into pleasant Hillocks; the greatest Hills which it has lying to the North. It is water'd by several Rivers which inter-cut and glide through the Country: some of which carry Gallies of good burthen, and large Shallops, very commodious for trade. Yet in all the Country there grows neither Corn nor Wine, by reason of the want of rain, which never falls but in the Months of June and July. But it bears an infinite quantity of Rice, which is the chief sustenance of the People. Of this Rice also they make their Drink, besides which they have good Aqua Vita or Strong-water. Their Fruits are excellent, but much different from ours, as are also the Trees that bear them. The chiefest of these Trees are the Palm-tree, which bears a Fruit bigger then in any part of Asia. The Nut is about the bigness of a Man's Head, in shape like a Coco-nut; the Shell is very hard, and being open'd, the Pulp within is as white as Snow, having a tast like our Almonds, and every one of the Fruits contains about two glassfuls of Liquor, very refreshing and pleasing to the Palate. The Gogavier, very much resembles our Lawrel, of which there are two sorts; the one bears a Plum, green without and red within: but the Fruit of the other Tree, which is in much more esteem, is yellowish without and white within, the top of the Fruit being like a small Noddy: the Pulp is full of small Kernels, less then those of a Pomegranate; and if they be eaten before they are ripe they bind the belly, whereas being eaten when they are come to full maturity they work a contrary effect. Formerly this Fruit was not known in the Kingdom of Tunquin, but after the Portugals seated themselves at Macao, they carri'd several Plants thither, so that now the Fruit is grown very common. The Papager bears a Fruit which very much resembles a small Melon, the tast whereof is very delicious. The Arager grows upright and streight, like the Mast of a Ship, Ship, bearing no Branches but at the top, which makes it appear like a Crown. The Fruit which it produces is like a Nutmeg, but a little more round. The People break this Nut, and bruising it together with Betle leaves, mix both with a little Chalk, and make use of the Powder to keep their Teeth clean, to dye their Lips of a Vermilion colour, and to keep their Breath sweet.

They have but two sorts of Figs, the one like ours, and the other like those which are call'd Adam's Figs, as long as a Man's finger.

There is also another Tree, very like our Willow, which they call the Powder Tree, because that of the Wood they make Charcoal, and of the Coal a Powder which they make use of in their Wars.

The Jambager is another Tree, that grows very high, which bears a Fruit about the bigness of a Citrul-Cucumber, the Pulp whereof is full of Kernels like a Granate, very cooling and pleasant, and very frequently eaten in the Season of heat.

The High-ways are also planted with Trees on both sides for the convenience of Travellers: And there are some of these Trees so big that two or three thousand men may stand under them, like that at Orinus, or Bandar Abassi, by me describ'd in my Relations of Persia, and of which many other Travellers have made mention. When the Branches of these Trees are about ten or twelve foot long, there issue forth other little Branches which turn downward, and by little and little descending to the ground, take root and afterwards become as it were so many Pillars to support the Master-Branches. There are some of the Master-Branches three hundred Paces long, which are supported by these outgrowing Branches at the distance of every ten or twelve foot. The Fruit is of the bigness of one of our great Nuts, the Shell whereof is red, containing within nothing but a Kernel like a grain of Millet. The Rere Mice feed upon 'em, and also make their Nests in the trees. These Rere-mice are as big as a good Pullet, insomuch that their Wings are above a foot and a half long. They never light upon the tree like other Birds, but you shall see them all the day long hanging at the branches of the trees, fasten'd by their Claws to the tree with their heads downward. Upon every Wing they they have seven as it were little Hooks or Claws, so that being shot, they never fall to the ground, but remain fixed to the branches, that at a distance you would take them to be some great Pears that hung upon the tree. They are accounted a great dainty among the Portugals, who leave their Pullets to eat them. 'Tis true that their Flesh is very white, and when they are young they are a delicate sort of Diet. I happen'd to eat of them two or three times with the Portugals, who thought they had oblig'd me with a great dainty; and had I not known what they were, I should have taken them for Pullets. And now I am talking of the Delicacies of the Country, I will tell you of one sort of Dyet which is very singular. This Food is the Nest of a certain Bird which is no where to be found, but in the four Islands that lie upon the Coast of Cochinchina, and of which you have the Figures in the Table A, B, C, D. These Birds are about the bigness of a Swallow, and build their Nests in such a manner, that they are neither too close compacted, nor altogether transparent; they are like an Onion compos'd of several rings and envelopings; that compose a Nest of a certain sort of Gunim, which is steep'd in warm water, and mix'd with all the Sawces which are made both for Fish and Flesh. It is transported all over India and into Holland for Curiosity's sake. You would believe in eating those Meats which are season'd therewith, that those Nests were compos'd of all the Spices in the Orient. I have not only brought this Diet into France, and presented of it to several Persons of Quality, but I have also my Vouchers for the truth of what I relate, several of my Friends who have brought it from Holland, among the rest M. de Villermont, whose Name is famous for his Travels into the East-Indies. He and all those that have eat thereof agree with me, that all the Spices of the East put together, do not give that effectual relish and savour as these Nests do, to the Meats and Dishes wherein they are us'd.

Near to these four Islands, where these Birds' Nests are found, are five others mark'd in the Map 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. In these five Islands are such infinite number of Tortoises, and such excellent Food, that the Tunquineses and Cochinchineses do not believe they have entertain'd their Friends at a Banquet as they ought to do, till the Tortoises are brought in. Those two Nations pickle up great quantities of them, and send them abroad, which is a vast trade among them; and indeed the chiefest occasion of the Wars between them is, because the Cochinchineses do all they can to hinder the Tunquineses to fish for them, alledging that those Seas and Islands belong to them. Neither is the Meat but the Shell also of great esteem, and one of the greatest Commodities for Trade in Asia.

Tunquin also affords great store of Anana's and Orange trees, of which there are of two sorts: the one that bears a Fruit no bigger then an Abricot; the other bigger then those of Portugal: both alike in tast, and being to be gather'd from the tree for six months together. They have also two sorts of Citrons, the one yellow, the other green; but both the one and the other so tart and sow'r, that they cannot be eaten without offence to the Stomach. Nevertheless, the Juyce is made use of as we do here of Aqua fortis, to cleanse Copper, Tin, and Iron, before we gild those Metals, as also for Tinctures, especially those of Silk. They are also made use of for Lyes to whiten Linnen, and to take out Spots. Through all the Territories of the Great Mogul they make use of this Juyce of Citrons to whiten their Calicuts; whereby they make them sometimes so white that they dazle the sight.

They make great quantities of Silk in the Kingdom of Tunquin, of which both rich and poor make themselves Garments. The Hollanders, who thrust themselves in every where, where there is any hope of gain, carry off such a quantity every year, that it is now become the chiefest part of that Commodity which they carry to Japon; whereas before they fetch'd their Commodities from Persia, Bengala, or China.

As for sweet smelling Flow'rs, the Tunquineses have but one sort, which they call the Flow'r of Bague. It grows like a large Nofegay, and the Branches of the Shrub that bear it, spread themselves crawlingly upon the ground. As they have great store of Sugar, so they eat very much, while it is yet in the Cane, not having the true Art to refine it: and that which they do grossly refine, they make into little Loaves weighing about half a pound. They eat very much, making use of it always after Meals to help digestion.

Through

Through the whole Kingdom are neither Lions, Affes, nor Sheep; but the Forests are full of Tigers, Harts, and Apes, and the Fields are full of Beeves, Cows, and Hogs. As for Hens, Ducks, and Turtles, they are not to be number'd, which is the general Provision for their Festivals. Their Horses are very well shap'd; of which there are always five or six hunder'd in the King's Stables; He also keeps the same number of Elephants, of which some are for the Service of his House, the rest bred for the Wars. These Elephants are of a prodigious bigness, neither are there any so tall nor so nimble in any part of Asia; for they will bow themselves, and stoop so low, that you may get upon their backs without help. They have no Cats, but they have Dogs that serve for the same purpose, and will watch all night to kill the Rats and Mice, which are very large and very troublesome. Very few Birds are to be seen in the Air, which toward the evening grows duskish, by reason of those vast number of Gnats that get into the Houses in the night time and hinder people from sleeping, not only by the noise which they make, but with their continual stinging; which is one of the greatest inconveniencies of the Country. For remedy whereof in some measure, an hour before they go to sleep they take the Husk or Chaff of the Rice, which flies from the Rice when it is beaten, and strew it upon a small Fire in a Fire-shovel, and so let it smok, and by that means they kill or drive those Flies away. Besides this, they cover the Bed with a Pavilion or Tent that trails upon the ground, made like a Net with very small holes to let in the Air. But notwithstanding all the prevention can be us'd, they will be about a man when he rises in the morning. But there is yet a far greater inconvenience in this Country, which proceeds from the infinite numbers of white Emmets, which though they are but little, have teeth so sharp, that they will ear down a wooden Post in a short time. And if great care be not taken in the places where you lock up your Bales of Silk, in four and twenty hours they will eat through a Bale, as if it had been saw'd in two in the middle. Several of them have fallen from the Ceiling into my Neck, where they rais'd Blisters upon the Skin, which presently fall again being wash'd with cold Water.

I have told you that Hens and Ducks are infinitely numerous in Tunquin; I will now tell you how they preserve the Eggs of these Creatures, which they will keep for two or three years together without being spoil'd. They salt them, and to make them take salt, they fill a Vessel full of Water, and throw a good quantity of Salt into it. If the Egg sink to the bottom, the Pickle is not good; then they throw in more Salt, till they find that the Eggs swim. The Pickle being thus made, they take Ashes, and make them up into a Past with this Pickle: and in this Past they enclose every Egg by it self, and then wrap it up in a leaf of an Herb, not unlike one of our Pear-tree leaves, but much larger, and then put the Eggs into Earthen Pots close cover'd: after which manner they keep their Eggs for two or three years together.

In other parts of the Indies where there is great store of Oyl, as in the Dominions of the Great Mogul, the Kingdoms of Pegu, and Arochan, they put their Eggs into great Earthen Pots well varnish'd, and then fill the Vessel with an Oyl which is made of a small Seed like Rape-feed. For as for Sallad Oyl, after you are once pass'd Aleppo, you see no more Olive-trees over all Asia, but only in one place of Persia near Casbin, where between the Mountains lies a little Valley, about a League long and half a League broad, full of Olive-trees, but they make but very little Oyl, preserving the Olives only to eat. But to return to the Eggs, they are the chief Provision which they eat a Ship-board. But the Eggs which are preserv'd in Salt are preferr'd much before those that are kept in Oyl; because that in using the first, there is no need of carrying Salt to Sea, or of boiling Salt with their Rice. When they eat them, they boil them till they are hard, and with every mouthful of Rice they eat a Pea's bigness of Egg, which is as good and better then Salt with their Rice. As to what remains, there are neither Mines of Gold nor Silver in the Kingdom of Tunquin, neither do they

Com any Money.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Riches, Trade, and Money of the Kingdom of Tunquin.

THE chief Riches of the Country of Tunquin consist in the great quantity of Silks which they sell to the Hollanders, and other Foreigners, and in their Lignum Aloes. Of which there is some worth a thousand Crowns the Pound, according to its goodness and oyliness. There is some that is not worth above three Crowns, but it is dry and good for nothing but to make Cabinets, or Beads to hang about Womens Necks. All the Mahumetans, especially such as let their Beards grow, make great account of this Wood; and when they give a Visit, they presently bring a little Chafing-dish, and cast a small piece of this Wood upon the Coals, which yields a smoak and pleasing mist; with which they perfume their Beards, at the same time lifting up their hands to Heaven, and crying, Elhemed Allah, or God be thanked. If the Wood be oily, the bigness of a Pea will serve to throw upon the fire, which being a little moisten'd in Water, will yield as much smoak as a dry piece as big as a Man's fist. Which is the reason, that if it be oily and good it wants no price. One of the chief Presents, as I have observ'd in another part of this Book, which the Portugals of Goa sent to the Emperor of Japon, was a piece of Lignum Aloes, six foot long, and two round. It cost 40000 Pardo's or 54000 Livres.

It is so much the more pleasure and profit to trade with the People of Tunquin, by how much the more faithful and frank they are in their dealing, then the Chineses, who will deceive you if they can; so that it is a hard thing to be too cunning for them, as I have often found by experience. When you have sold them any Commodity, and they find that their Bargain is not very advantageous, their general way of getting off is this: As they have generally three sorts of Reals, one sort that is full weight, others which are light, four, others eight per Cent. if they have no mind to stand to their bargain, they offer to pay you for your Goods in light Reals, which they have clipt themselves, and so you are deceiv'd. There are no such People for Trade in the World: they refuse to deal in nothing, even in old Shoes, and if you will sell them but one of them too, they'll buy it, without ever enquiring why you will not sell the other. But for those of Tunquin they are more blunt and plain in their dealing, so that it is a pleasure to have to deal with them. I have told you, there are neither Mines of Gold or Silver in Tunquin, neither do they Coin Money there. So that in Trade they make use of certain Lingots of Gold, as they are brought out of China, some of which amount to 300 Livres of our Money, others to six hundred. They also make use of Bars of Silver as they are brought from Japon. As for small Payments they either cut the large Bars into small pieces, to which purpose they have their Scales, like our Stelleers, or else they pay in Foreign Coin, which are the Reals of Spain generally. This Gold and Silver is brought from China, and Japon, in lieu of those vast quantities of Silk which are exported out of the Country, which with Musk and Lignum Aloes are the chief Riches of the Kingdom.

CH A P. V.

Of the Strength of the Kingdom of Tunquin by Sea and Land.

THEY who have written before me concerning the Kingdom of Tunquin, have spoken largely of its Forces both by Sea and Land, and allow it a prodigious number both of Souldiers and Galleys. They write that the Forces which were usually wont to meet at the Rendevouz were 12000 Horse, 2000 Elephants, as well to carry the King's and the Nobilities Tents and Baggage, as for the Service of the War, 300000 Foot, and 300 Galleys. And in regard the Kingdom is well stor'd with Provision and Ammunition, that in time of War the whole Army exceeds 500000 Men. But the number which my Brother saw

The King of Tunquin's Setting out for the War.

1. The King going out of his Palace is carried in his Palanquin or Chair by the Chief Officers of his Household.

2. The Order of the King's March when he goes to the War.

3. The Musicians and Trumpeters who follow his Chair.

4. An Officer who carries a Bason full of Water, on which doth float a Brass Boul with a hole in the bottom of it; so that exactly in an hour this Boul becomes full of Water, and suddenly sinks to the bottom.

5. Then presently two other Officers do strike the Hour upon two great Brass Platters, N. 5. of about a Yard Diameter, and much after the Form of our Burning Glasses, yet of the Metall that Bells are made of, which causes that they are heard a very far off.

Afterwards he that carries the Bason of Water takes up the Cup from the bottom, and sets it again a swimming atop of the Water, just as it was before. When it is full and sinks, they after the same manner strike on the said Platters. And this is their way of reckoning the Hour and Times in Tunquin, as well as in the Indies, and almost throughout the Eastern Parts betwixt the Tropicks; for that the Clocks which are made in Europe become useles in those Countries during the Rainy Season, the Air being there so heavy and damp, that all Iron and Steel, nay the very Knives and Watches in peoples Pockets do grow rusty, though you wrap them up never so well in Cotton or Leather, and take all the care imaginable to keep them dry; yet it will be impossible otherwise to preserve them from Rust, than by letting them lie in Oyl while that Weather lasts.

This Foggy Dampness of the Air is predominant as soon as you are past Persia, in all the Mogol's Countrey, from the Fifteenth of June to the end of September. The further one goes on toward the East, the later these Rains do begin and are met withall.

It's

It's good likewise to observe, that in the Empire of the Great Mogul, in Tunquin, and in other Easterly Parts between the Tropicks, they do as we divide the Day and Night into 24 Hours, making the Day of 12, and the Night to be of as much; so to proportion equally the Times of Working and of Rest. But they do subdivide both the Day and the Night into 4 equal parts, and this Division is made known by the Strokes given upon those Platters. As for Example: The first Hour of the first Watch of the Night is mark'd by one Blow, the second by another, and the third likewise by another. In the second Watch of the Night the first Hour is made known by two Blows one after another, and so of the rest untill the third Watch; then at the first Hour of that they give three Strokes. And this Order is observed till the last Hour of the fourth Watch, which is mark'd by four Knocks. In this manner they continue to mark the first Hour of the day with the same Regularity.

All Persons of Quality do keep Eight Officers on purpose for this Impley; who likewise are to have a care of keeping the Palace Gates. This Engine for the marking of the Hours is ordinarily hung up at the Entry of great Palaces near the Porter's Lodge.

The Order of the March of the Queens of Tunquin, when they go abroad out of the Palace.

A. Six Elephants go in the Front, drawing a kind of a Sedan close shut up, with Grate-like Windows.

B. Fifteen Captains or Officers walk next, Armed with Firelocks.

C. The Sedan wherein the Queen is.

D. Six of the Queens Gentlemen do carry Parasols, for to guard the Queens Chair from the Scorching of the Sun.

F. Six Ladies of Honour of the Queens go next. The first hath the Command of the Queens Eunuchs: these Eunuchs, though thoroughly Spaded, yet are never admitted into the Queens Apartment; the Kings of Tunquin being in that particular more jealous than other Kings and Mahometan Princes, who allow this sort of Eunuchs to serve their Queens within the Palace. The next in Office of these Ladies presents the Queen with Sweet Meats when she is about to drink; for they usually eat some before they drink, they alleaging that this keeps them from having the Cholic, to which they are very subject in Tunquin. The third in rank carries a Box of Perfumes and Betel. The others usher the Queen when she gets into the Sedan, or alights.

G. Here is a Chariot drawn by Eight Maids of Quality, when she gets out of the Sedan; but before she appears, all the Men and Eunuchs do withdraw into such places, whence they cannot have the sight of her, it being a Crime to look upon her: then the Ladies help her out of the Sedan, and the Maids draw her along to whatever place she has a mind to go in unto.

saw in the year 1649, when the King was preparing to make War against the King of Cochinchina, for certain Ships which the Cochinchineses had taken from the Tunquineses: though the Quarrel was taken up by certain Embassadors which the King of Cochinchina sent to the King of Tunquin, to whom the former made satisfaction.

The Army that was then prepar'd to march upon this Expedition was compos'd of 8000 Horse, 94 thousand Foot, and 722 Elephants, 130 for the War, and the rest to carry the Tents and Baggage of the King and the Nobility; and 318 Galleys and Barks, very long and narrow, with Oars and Sails; and this was that which my Brother saw. The Condition of the Souldiery is very toilsom and laborious, and of little advantage in the Kingdom of Tunquin. For they are all their life time so t'd and engag'd to the Service of the Wars, that though they are capable of other Labours for the support of their Families, they are not permitted to undertake it. Those days that they are not upon the Guard, they are oblig'd to attend their Captains where-ever they go, and two days in a week they are compell'd to Exercise with their Bows and Arrows in their presence. Their Companies consist of a hundred or a hundred and thirty Men; and they of each Company that have made the best shot, have one of them two Months Wages, the other one, which is paid them in Rice. He that makes the worst shot, next time he mounts the Guard, is oblig'd to stand Centinel double his time. All the Captains look upon it as a great piece of glory to have their Souldiers Arms and Weapons neat and bright. If they find any rust upon them, they sconce them eight days Wages for the first fault, and for the second they are very severely chastis'd. As for those that serve in the Galleys, they are entertain'd and list'd proportionably. And sometimes the Captains send their Souldiers aboard for some days, that they may learn to row. For it is one of the chiefest Pastimes of the Kings of Tunquin to see the Mock-fights of the Galleys. When he has a mind to delight himself with this Divertisement, the King, with some part of his Court, removes to one of his fair Palaces, that stands upon one of the largest Rivers in his Country, and it is a great Honour for any of the Captains whose Souldiers carry the Victory. Now as the Victory is only got by the force of the Oars, it happens sometimes that there are some Souldiers who strain themselves so hard, that they fall down dead with the Oar in their hands: for the King is the only Judge of the Combat. Wherein the pleasure that he takes is such, that he sends an Elephant to the Captain that obtains the Victory, and gives him three Months Wages besides. If any Souldier chance to die in this Exercise, his Widow or his Heirs have two years Pay. But notwithstanding all their pain and labour, their Wages are so small, that they are not able to maintain their Wives and Children. But in regard they Marry very young in this Country, the Wives as well of the Souldiers as of all the meaner sort of people, take care to learn some Trade besides, that they may be able to maintain their Families. The Captains also have their work prepar'd for them. For they are oblig'd to look after the King's Elephants, and to manage them for the Wars, and so to breed them, that they may not be afraid of Wild-fire, or any other Artificial Fires: as also to build places all along the Rivers, for the Gallies to ride shelter'd in, when they can no longer live out at Sea. All these Officers and Captains, and Lords of the Court, which are generally call'd Mandarins, have but four days in a Month to divert themselves, two at the first change of the Moon, and two at the full.

C H A P. VI.

Of the Manners and Customs of the People of the Kingdom of Tunquin.

THe People of Tunquin are naturally mild and peaceful, submitting easily to reason, and condemning the Transports of Choler. They esteem the Manufactures of strange Countries far beyond those of their own; though they are not very curious of seeing any other Countries but those where they were born; and where, as they say, they always desire to live, to honour the Memory of their Ancestors. They have a tone in speaking, naturally rally soft and pleasing ; happy memories, and in their Language, which is very florid, they use several apposite Comparisons. They have good Poets among them, and People that love Learning ; in which respect they are no way inferior to the Chineses, their Neighbours.

The Tunquineses, as well Men as Women, are for the most part well proportion'd, of an Olive Complexion ; very much admiring the whiteness of the Europeans. Their Noses and Faces are not so flat as those of the Chineses, as being generally better made. Their Hair is very black ; which they usually wear as long as it will grow, being very careful in combing it. The Common People plait it in tresses, and tie it like a great Roll upon the top of their Heads. But the Nobility, Men of Law, and Souldiers ; tie their Locks about their Necks, that they may not flutter in their Faces. They do not believe their Teeth to be handsom, till they have made them as black as jet ; and they suffer their Nails to grow ; the longest being accounted the fairest.

Their Habit is grave and modest, being a long Robe that reaches down to their heels, much like that of the Japomneses, without any distinction of Sex. This Habit is bound about at the waist with a Girdle of Silk, interwoven with Gold and Silver, the Workmanship whereof is alike on both sides. As for the Souldiers, their upper Garments reach no farther then their Knees ; only their Breeches reach down to the mid Leg, without either Hose or Shoes.

The vulgar sort of People are altogether slaves for one part of the year. For unless they be the Citizens of the Capital City, where the King keeps his Court, all the other Handicrafts of what Trade soever, as Joyners, Carpenters, Locksmiths, Masons, and the like, are oblig'd every year to work three Months at the King's Palace ; and two Months, or Moons more (For the Tunquineses reckon their Months by the Moon) for the Mandarins, or great Lords. The rest of the year is for themselves ; all which time they have liberty to work for the support of their own Family. This Service in their Language is call'd Viecquan, or the Condition of a Slave. But they are liable to other drudgeries worse then those before mention'd ; as to lop Trees, with which they chiefly feed their Elephants. This is a severe days work, to which they were condemn'd by the great Grandfather of the King that now reigns, after he had put an end to the Civil Wars that turmoil'd his Kingdom, and that he had brought his rebellious Subjects to submit themselves. They had occasion'd him a great deal of trouble, and in regard he could not subdue them without a great hazard of his Army, his Council advis'd him to famish them; but he rather chose to give them their Lives, and to condemn them and their Posterity to this laborious Service, of which he might in time reap the benefit.

I have told you elsewhere that the Tunquineses take great delight to live upon the Rivers, which are there free from Crocodiles and all other dangerous Animals, which haunt the Waters of Nile and Ganges. Where we are to observe, that these Rivers overflow their Banks every year, after the Rains are fall'n, with that terrible violence, that many times they carry away whole Towns and Villages, at what time a good part of the Kingdom looks like a Sea, resembling the lower Egypt under Water upon the Inundation of Nile.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Marriages of the Tunquineses, and their severity toward Adulteresses.

THE Tunquineses cannot Marry without the consent of the Father and Mother, or if they be dead, without the allowance of their nearest Kindred. They must also have the permission of the Judge or Governour of the place where the Marriage is to be made, for the obtaining of which they must give him some Present. But in regard they were wont to exact upon the poor people more than they were able to give them, so that many Marriages were disappointed, to the great damage of the Public; the King, who reign'd in the year 1639, being inform'd of these Extortions, and their ill Consequences, set forth a Law to regulate those Abuses, and to curb the Authority of the Governours. He order'd that the young Man who was desirous to Marry, should pay no more than such a Sum, according to the proportion of his Estate, amounting to one or two fourths per Cent. and that they that were not worth above a hundred Crowns should pay nothing. Now in regard the Common People, both Men and Women, are naturally laborious, all that the Maids can get they preserve for their Portions, and to buy them two or three handsome Garments, with a Neck-lace of Coral or yellow Amber, and a certain number of Beads, to garnish their Locks; which they suffer to hang down upon their Backs, accounting the beauty of their Hair to consist in the length.

There is no Wedding kept without a great Feast; and they must be very poor when the Feast lasts not above three days; for sometimes they junket for nine days together. The next day after the Wedding the Bridgroom calls the Bride his Sister, and she calls the Bridegroom Brother. The Law of the Land permits the Man to divorce his wife when he pleases, which they do many times for very slight causes. But the Woman has not the same Privilege: or at least, if she desire a separation, it is much more difficult to obtain; and the occasion must be very notorious. The Tunquineses say that this Law was made to keep the Women in subjection, and to oblige them to be respectful to their Husbands: When the Husband desires this separation, the Ceremony is this. You must know that many of the Eastern People never touch their Victuals with their hands, but make use of two little sticks about six inches long, gilt and varnish'd, which serve them instead of Forks. The Husband then, when he goes about to repudiate his Wife, takes one of his own sticks, and one of his Wife's, and having broken them, they take each one half, and sow it up in a piece of Silk, in which they keep it. Then the Man is bound to restore the Woman what she brought with her, and to keep the Children which they had between them. But these Divorces are not half so frequent as formerly.

The Laws are also very rigorous against Adulteresses. So that if a woman accus'd of this crime be convicted thereof, she is cast to an Elephant bred up to this purpose, who presently throws her up into the Air with his Trunk, and when she comes to the ground, tramples her under his feet, till he can perceive no life in her.

While my Brother was at the Court at Tunquin, he was a witness of the severe Punishment, to which a Princess was condemn'd, for being taken in the Act with a certain Prince. It is the Custom in the East, when a Prince dies, to shut up in the most private and retir'd part of all his Palace all the women which he made use of in his life time. There they are allow'd two Maids to attend them, they eat alone, and see no person living any more to the very day of their deaths. I cannot tell by what means one of the Princes of the blood had got a view of one of the deceased King his Uncle's wives; but being desirous to see her again, and to overcome all difficulties that oppos'd him, and to deceive the Guards that watch'd the Doors, he made use of a slight not easily discover'd. For you must know, that in the Kingdom Tunquin, as in all the Kingdoms of Asia, in the Houses of the Kings and other great Lords, the Kitchen is usually separated from the House, and that the Garden is between them; so that for the better carrying the Meat from one place to another, the Servants make use of a kind of Flasket, or rather Iron Chest. And to keep the Meat warm, the Dishes are supported by little sticks laid athwart, about an inch distant one from another, under which is an Iron Plate with holes pierc'd quite through, about half a foot above another, which makes the bottom of the Chest; between which Plates they put lighted Coals, to keep the Meat warm. These Chests being to be carri'd by two men, the Tunquinese Prince plaid his game so well, that he was put into one of these Chests wherein the Princesses Meat was wont to be carri'd up into her Apartment. But he was not there many days before the thing was discover'd. He was presently brought before the King, who caus'd him to have several weighty Chains to be put about his Neck and Waist, and upon his Hands and Leggs; and thus chain'd and manacled, he order'd him to be led about for five Months together, to be seen by the People. After that he was shut up in a close Prison, where he remain'd seven years, till the death of the King, whose Son coming to the Throne, set him at liberty, upon condition he should serve as a private Souldier upon the Frontiers of the Kingdom. As for the Princess she was shut up in a little Chamber upon the top of a Tow'r, where she remain'd twelve days without having any thing given her to eat or drink; after that the Chamber was all uncover'd at the top, that the sun might come at her, and scorch her to death, and so she di'd in three days: The two Maids that serv'd her had a little more favour, for they were thrown to the Elephants, who presently trod them to death. The two Porters of the Chest, or Flasket, were t'ld to four small Galleys, by the two Hands, and two Leggs, and as they Row'd several ways were presently dismembred. Being at Daca, in the Kingdom of Bengala, I saw the same Justice done to a Bramerè, who would have betray'd Cha-Est-Can to the King of Arachan.

was

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Visits, Feasts, and Pastimes of the Tunquineses.

AMong all the Eastern People the Tunquineses are the most sociable, and most frequently visit one another. Generally they make their Visits about Noon, in the hottest time of the day, and then every one walks with a Train suitable to his Condition. The Princes and Mandarines ride upon their Elephants, or else they are carri'd in a kind of Litter, where they may either sit or lie. Six Men carry it, and behind them follow six more to ease them by times. Their Train consists generally of fifty or sixty Persons; neither are they permitted to exceed that number. As for the ordinary Gentry, and Officers of the Court, they ride a Horse-back, not being allow'd above seven or eight Servants to attend them. They chew Betlè continually, as all the other Asiaticks do in such places where it is to be had. And when any one comes to visit another, it would be taken for a great affront, if at his taking leave, he should not be presented with a Box of Betlè, to take what he pleas'd.

The richer that Box is, the more Honour is given to the Person to whom the Betlè is presented: Insomuch that when a Prince is about to be marry'd, he usually sends three of these Boxes to his Spouse, of which I have seen some at the Apartments of some of the Princes that came to the Court of the Great Mogul, which were worth above 4 or 500000 Livres: One shall be cover'd with Diamonds, another with Rubies and Pearls, another with Emraulds and Pearls, or else with other Jewels.

The Tunquineses take it for a great dishonour to have their Heads bare, which is only for Criminals, whom they cause to be shav'd so soon as they are taken. So that it is a difficult thing for a Criminal to escape the hands of Justice, for wherever they go, when they find that a man has no Hair, he is taken and carri'd to the Governour, who causes him to be nail'd to a Cross immediately.

They sit cross legg'd, after the manner of the Asiatic People. At great mens Houses, in the Halls, where they receive their Visits, there is as it were an Alcove, with a kind of a Bedsted rais'd about a foot from the ground. It is cover'd with a very fine Mat, made of little Reeds bound together, as it were with fine thread. For it is not the Custom to spread Carpets upon the Floors, as in other Countries of Asia. Not that the deerness hinders them from making use of them, for these Mats cost them more then a fine Persian or Indian Carpet would do, but because they are cooler to sit upon, and because the Punies do not get so easily into them. Being at Bantam I bought one of these Mats of a Tunquinese, which was admir'd for its fineness. It was nine Ells square, and as even and as soft as Velvet. With these Mats they cover the Beds or Couches, upon which the Mandarins, or Princes, and the Nobilty which accompany them, seat themselves round the Chamber, every one having one Cushion under him, and another at his Back.

As for their Diet the Tunquineses are not very curious. The Common People are contented with Rice boil'd in water, and dri'd Fish, or salted Eggs. For as for Flesh they eat none but at their Festivals. The great Lords are serv'd every day with Flesh and Fish, but their Cooks know not what belongs to bak'd Meats. Otherwise they are more neat in their Kitchens and Chambers then we, only they make no use either of Napkins or Table-cloaths. Whatever is set before them to eat, is serv'd in little Plates, not so big as our Trenchers, being made of wood lacker'd with all sorts of Flow'rs, like the Cabinets which are brought from Japan.

47. Representation of a Theatre where they Act their Comedies for the Diversissement of y King of Tunquin and his Court. The Theatre for the Actors & the Machines and decoration.

All these Plates are brought up, rang'd in order, in a large Voyder, lacker'd like the Plates. Usually the Voyder holds ten or twelve Plates, and the Meat is cut in little pieces, about the bigness of a Hazle Nut. They make use neither of Spoons, nor Knives, nor Forks, but only of those little Sticks, of which I have made mention in the foregoing Chapter, never touching their Meat with their fingers.

When there are several sitting at the Table, either at their ordinary Meals, or upon some Festival, they account it a great piece of Manners to be silent; or if they have a desire to Discourse, they alway allow the Eldest the honour of beginning, bearing a great respect to them that are aged. But the Youngest, at the Table, is never permitted to begin the Discourse. They wash their Hands, their Mouths, and Faces before they sit down, but never after Meals. And when they desire to know whether every one has had his fill, they ask him whether he have eaten his Rice, according to the Custom of the Ancient Fathers in Scripture, who, by Bread, meant the whole Repast. Neither is it a Custom among them to ask one another how they do? but how many Measures of Rice he eat for his Dinner, and whether he eat with an Appetite. This is a general Custom among all the Idolatrous Indians, unless in the Dominions of the Great Mogul, where they eat not Rice only, but Bread, and there they ask in civility how much Rice they boil'd, and how much Meal they bak'd for Bread; for the more he eats, the better in health they think a man is.

Among all the Pastimes of the Tunquineses there are none wherein they take so much delight as in Comedies, which are only Acted in the Night-time; but those which are presented the day that they first behold the new Moon are the best. They last from Sun-setting to Sun-rising, and they are set out with beautiful Decorations and Machines, very pleasing to behold. They are excellently well skill'd in representing the Sea and Rivers, and making a shew of Sea-fights, and Combats between Galleys and Barks, though they have seldom more than eight Actors, Men and Women. The places appointed for these sights, are great Halls, the third part whereof the Theater takes up, the rest being fill'd with Benches for the Spectators. Upon each side of the Theater is a Box very sumptuously set out, reserv'd for the King, King when he pleases to come. The Actors and Actresses are very magnificently clad. The dress for the Womens heads being a kind of Miter or Diadem, which exceedingly becomes them, from the hinder part whereof two Ribonds, three fingers broad, hang down below their waists. Both the one and the other Act their parts very perfectly, and, according to their manner, observe an exact time in their Dancing.

At one of the corners of the Hall sit the two Judges of the Comedy, one of whom beats time upon a Brass Drum. Their other ordinary Pastimes, especially for the Lords and Mandarins, are Fishing and Hunting, though they take more pleasure in the former, by reason of the plenty of Fish which their Rivers afford them. But, as I said before, they follow these sports only upon the days that are permitted them, as being better husbands of their time than we, not sparing any part of it from business. So that they who at the beginning of that little knowledge which we had of these People, wrote that their Manners and Customs were wild and barbarous, were misinform'd. For as there is no reason to doubt of the truth of what I affirm, and what others have confirm'd by other Relations, we may well conclude from what I have said, That all the Duties of Civil Society and Politeness are not confin'd within our Europe; but that the Kingdom of Tunquin, anciently a part of China, still retains the good Government and Civility of the Chineses themselves.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Learned Men in the Kingdom of Tunquin.

Certain it is, that the Tunquineses have a very great Inclination for Learning, and that they apply themselves to their Studies with diligence and success: for that they cannot be advanc'd without it to the Offices and Dignities in the Kingdom. I do not here, by Learning, mean the understanding of the Languages of our Learned Men

Men of Europe, which are altogether unknown to the Eastern People, and much less the Philosophy of Aristotle, of which they never so much as heard. But we mean the knowledge of the Laws of their Country, by means whereof they obtain the charges of Judicature; the Mathematicks, and particularly Astronomy, to which all the Orientals have a great inclination, as being great observers of the Stars, by whose assistance they flatter themselves to be able to foretel things to come. The Tunquineses are also passionate lovers of Music and Poetry, as being great admirers of Comedy and Tragedy, of which those two Sciences are the main Composition; so that the Musicians and Actors of Tunquin are accounted the best in the whole Eastern part of the World.

That you may acquire Nobility by Learning, in your Youth, you must pass through three degrees, of the Synde, the Doucan, and the Tansi, from which degree you may ascend to that of the Nobility.

To attain the first degree, it behoves the Youth of Tunquin to apply themselves for eight years together to their Studies, and that very close, to enable themselves for the Office of a Notary, Proctor, and Advocate, to which there is nothing more conducing then to speak Eloquently in public. At the end of eight years, they are examin'd concerning the duty of those Employments; and if any one fail to give an Answer to the Questions propounded, he is sent back again as incapable to obtain any Employment for the future, or to study any longer. For those that acquit themselves well of their Examination, which is very rigorous, their Names are set down in a Register, and presented to the King, who first grants them the liberty to take upon them the Title of Synde, and then if it be their aim to enjoy the Quality of Doucan, they are commanded by the Tansi's to study Music, Astrology, and Poesie, not only to be able to be judge of it, but also to perform themselves upon occasion. For to be good judges of Comedy, which is a great Honour among them, it behoves them to be both good Comedians and Musicians. Nor indeed is there any Pastime more frequent then that of the Theater in this Country; for there is never any solemn Festival among them, which is not accompany'd and set forth with Artificial Fire-works, in making whereof these People are exquisite; after which they have their Comedies, with Machines, and change of Scenes in every Act. Besides this, their Actors have a prodigious memory, so that let the part be never so long, they never make use of Prompters to assist them, as we do in Europe.

They that will learn the Mathematicks, must make their own Instruments themselves, and spend five years in this study. They are examin'd every year, and if they fail to answer such Questions as are ask'd them, for the first four they are pardon'd; but at the end of the five years, if upon the grand Examination, they fail to answer the Questions demanded them by the Tanfis, they are utterly degraded; whereas if they satisfy their Examinors, they are permitted the Name and Dignity of Doucan. After thirteen years thus spent, before they can arrive to the degree of a Tansi, they must spend four years more in learning to write and read the Chinese Character to such a certain number of Words. For the life of a Man would not suffice to learn to write and read the Chinese quite through. The reason is, because that as to this particular, it is not in China as in other Nations, where one Word is compos'd of several Letters. The Chineses for every Word have a different Figure, all which Figures are very numerous, as you may easily conjecture. By the by let me tell you, that these Figures are made with small Pencils, and that the Chineses make use of a certain Ink, which is made up into a Paste, and so moisten'd in Water as you make use of it. They have also another sort of Colour for certain Words. But they cannot make use of Pens, as our Europeans, which are made of Quills, nor of those of other Eastern People, which are made of small redish brown Reeds, the best of which grow in certain Marshes in the Kingdom of Pegu and Arachan.

But to return to the Students of Tunquin, they are also oblig'd to understand the Laws and Customs of the Chineses, as well as their own; and the last four years being at an end, the last and great Examination is made in the great place, within the Enclosure of the Palace of Tunquin, which is a stately Marble structure. There the King is present, with the Princes and great Lords of the Court, the Manderins rins for Learning, and all the Tanfis; and many also come on purpose from distant Provinces to the Solemnity. Some Relations of Tunquin have been a little too ridiculous in this particular, asserting extravagantly, that sometimes there are above 30 or 40000 Students present at these Examinations; but by what I could learn from my Brother, or gather by that discourse which I have had with the Natives, the number of Students never exceeds three thousand. There are in the place nine Scaffolds set up; of which the one is for the King and Princes, the other for the Examiners, and those that are to be Examined: And for the better hearing what is said, the Scaffolds are built like an Amphitheater. But whereas there are eight days spent in this Examination, the King and the Mandarins are never there but only the two first days. The last day all the Names of them who have been Examined, as well they who have answered well, as of them that have faltered, are left in the Hands of the sixteen chief Manderins, who are as it were sixteen Counsellors of State, and then it is at the King's pleasure to favour whom he thinks fit, of those who have not given full satisfaction to the Questions propounded to them. As for those who were found very ignorant, they are degraded with shame, and there is no more said of them. All those Names are usually written upon large Tables, set up at the Gate of the King's Palace for eight days together, to the end, that all the People may know who are received into the Rank of Nobility, and who not.

The eight days being pass'd, they are all to appear again upon the same Scaffolds, where in the view of all the World, they who have had the misfortune to have faltered in their Examinations, are dismiss'd as unworthy of any Employment: while they who have behaved themselves worthy of approbation, are honour'd with a Vest of Violet Satin, which they presently put on, and then take upon them the Name of Tanfis. Then they have given them a List of the Towns and Villages, where they are to receive the Rents which the King allows them; wherein however they have not an equal share, some being allow'd more, some less, according to their merit, or the favour of the Prince. Presently they send notice to the places assign'd them of the time, at which they intend to be there : and then all the Inhabitants come forth to meet them, in Honour of their Dignity, with all sorts of Music, and a Gilded Branquar, carried by eight Men. There they are permitted to stay three Months to divertize themselves, and for their own recreation. After that they return to Court, to instruct themselves in the affairs of the Kingdom, and the King's House, and to perfect themselves in the knowledge of those things, which is the way to obtain the Dignity of a Mandarin. All Embassadors who are sent to the Princes adjoining, especially to the Chineses, are chosen out of these Tanfi's, among whom they always make choice of the ablest, and not of the richest, the King allowing them sufficient to maintain their Port, and defray the expences of the Embassy.

CHAP. X.

Of their Physicians, and the Diseases of the Tunquinefes.

THe Physicians belonging to the Kingdom of Tunquin do not make it their business much to study Books; spending their Youth in searching after the nature and qualities of the Roots and Simples, and how to apply them according to the nature of the Distemper. But more particularly they apply themselves to the beating of the Pulse, and its diversity of Measure, by which they chiefly pretend to understand the cause of the Disease, and what Remedy to make use of for cure. And therefore when they go to feel a Pulse, they feel it in several parts of the Body; and according to the diversity of the part, and the beating, they judge of the quality of the Distemper. Therefore upon their first coming, they feel the Patient in three places, first upon their right sides, and secondly upon their left. By the Pulse which they feel upon the wrist of the right hand, they guess of the condition of the Lungs; by that which they feel upon the Vein of the Arms, where gene-

generally People are let Blood, they guess at the Distempers of the Stomach, and the Region of the Kidneys. The Pulse of the left Wrist discovers to them the condition of the Heart: By that in the Veins of the left Arm, where usually they let Blood, they are inform'd of the estate of the Liver. By the Pulses of the Temples, both right and left, they give a more exquisite judgment of the Kidneys. They are very careful to count how many times a Pulse of a sick Person beats in the time of one Respiration; and according to these several Pulses, they tell you which part of the Body is particularly distemper'd, whether the Heart, the Liver, or the Lungs; or whether the Distemper proceed from any outward cause, as from Cold, Sadness, or any other disorderly Passion.

They never make use of any other Remedies but of Herbs and Roots, which they choose themselves; there being no distinction among them of Apothecary and Physician. These Herbs they mingle sometimes with a little Ginger, which they boyl in Water, and give the Decoction, being strain'd, to the Patient. They have very good Receipts for the Purples, Epilepsie, and several other Diseases which are accounted incurable in Europe. They make use of China Ink to stop a Dysentery, and for the cure of Wounds. When the Sea Ebbs from the shoar upon these Coasts, they find upon the Sand a little small kind of Crabs, which dye immediately, and by the heat of the Sun, which is there extraordinary, become as hard as a Stone in a short time; these the Tunquinese Physicians beat to Powder, and give to their Patients in Dysenteries, and Feavers, sometimes in Aqua Vita, sometimes in plain Water. They mightily admire the Herb Tea, which comes from China and Japan; which latter Country produces the best. It is brought to them in Tin Pots close stop'd, to keep out the Air. When they would use it, they boyl a quantity of Water, according to the proportion they intend to use, and when the Water seeths, throw a small quantity into it, allowing as much as they can nip between their Thumb and fore-Finger to a Glass. This they prescribe to be drank as hot as they can endure it, as being an excellent Remedy against the Headach, for the Gravel, and for those that are subject to the Gripping of the Guts; but then they order a little Ginger to

to be put into the Water when it boyls. At Goa, Batavia, and in all the Indian Factories, there are none of the Euro-peans who do not spend above four or five Leaves a day; and they are careful to preserve the boyl'd Leaf for an Evening Sallad, with Sugar, Vinegar, and Oyl. That is accounted the best Tea which colours the Water greenest; but that which makes the Water look Red, is little accounted of. In Japan. The King and great Lords, who drink Tea, drink only the Flower, which is much more wholsom, and of a tast much more pleasing. But the Price is much different, for one of our ordinary Beer Glasses is there worth a French Crown.

The most dangerouſ Distempers that befall the Tunqui-neſes, moſt uſually happen when the bad Air ſurprizes the People; for of a ſudden it deprives them of their Speech, and then Death ſuddenly follows without a ſpeedy Remedy. The beſt Remedy for this ſudden Diſtemper is to mix ſome Counterpoiſon with Aqua Vita inſtead of Wine, and to let the Patient drink it as hot as he can. The Patient alſo muſt at the ſame time be rub'd with a Cloth dip'd in Aqua Vita, where Ginger has been boyl'd. This takes away the pains cauſ'd by cold Winds, and unwholſom Airs. Though ſome for the more ſpeedy cure of theſe pains, lay the Patient upon a Bed made only of Girts, four Fingers diſtant one from the other; and then ſetting a Chafing-diſh underneath, cauſe the ſick Perſon to ſweat in a Cloud of Frankincenſe, till the pain is gone, repeating the ſame thing Morning and Evening.

As for Blood-letting, it is by no means uſ'd in that Coun-try. They make uſe of Fire, eſpecially for the Purple-Feaver, a Diſeaſe ſo dangerous in France. For the cure of this, the Phyſicians of Tunquin take the Pith of a Reed, which they dry very well; dip it in Oyl, and ſet it on Fire: and then apply to every Purple Spot one of theſe lighted Wicks. The Spot will give a whiſ like a ſmall Squib, and that's an infallible ſign that the Venom is gone out of the body. This Remedy is ſeldom apply'd but in the night time, becauſe the Spot does not appear ſo well in the day time. And the Phyſician muſt be very careful, that when this Venom flies out of the Patient's Body, it does not find a way into his own; for then there is no Remedy but but Death. There are some Physicians that will prick the Purple Spot with a Needle, and let out the Pestilential Blood; after which they burn the part so prick'd, and then rub it with Ginger, not permitting their Patient to take the Air in 20 days after they are cur'd. While they are under cure, they drink nothing but Water, with Citron-peel boyl'd in it, and abstain from Flesh and Butter. They give them to eat Rice boyl'd in Water, and salt Fish; but the more they abstain from eating and drinking, the sooner they are cur'd. And indeed it is a wonderful thing to see the excellent effects of their Remedies in so short a time; for they have no lingring Distempers to hold them years together, as they do among us.

C H A P. XI.

Of the Original, Government, and Policy, of the Kingdom of Tunquin.

IT is not above six hundred years since Tunquin was first govern'd by particular Kings, in regard it was anciently a part of the Dominion of the Chineses. What is reported of the first Tunquineses, That they were without Governours, and without Kings, is altogether fabulous, like to that which is related of a certain Infant of three years of Age, who appearing before a great Assembly of the People, exhorted them to free themselves from the power of the Chineses, who were their Oppressors. Upon which a lovely Horse miraculously appearing to the said Infant, he mounted the Horse, and immediately setting forward with those that were gather'd after him, as also others that appear'd as wonderfully to assist him, he set upon the Chineses, and defeated them in such manner, that they never durst venture after that to return any more to reconquer what they had lost. But the most certain truth of Tunquin History assures us, That for these six Centuries last past, it has been govern'd by six various Families. The first that assum'd the Title of King was a famous Robber, whose Name

Name was Din, who having gather'd together a great Number of Malecontents, and Vagabonds, became so powerful and formidable through his own Valour, that after several bloody Battels gain'd, it was no difficult thing for him to seize upon the Throne. But he did not reign long in peace, for the most part of the People rebell'd against him; and in the first Battel that he fought, he lost his Life. However his own Party won the day; and having left two Sons, his eldest reigned three years; after whose death, the younger Brother rul'd in his stead, but dy'd soon after, neither of the Brothers leaving any issue behind them. After that the Kingdom was miserably distracted by several Civil Wars, till the weaker Party calling in the Chineses to their Assistance, became the most puissant. Then it was that a certain Mandarin, of the Family of Lelequel, was advanc'd to the Throne, who being a valiant and prudent Prince, restor'd tranquillity to the whole Kingdom. Who, when he saw himself Establish'd in peace, built that large Palace, which they, who have seen it, admire, as well for it's Circuit, as for its magnificent Structure, being all of Marble of divers Colours, both within and without. This King had but one Daughter, who soon after her Father's death, the better to secure herself, marry'd one of the most powerful Mandarins in the Country, of the House of Tran. But soon after, one of her Subjects rebelling against her, gave her battel, took her Prisoner, and put her to death. Having thus got the Power into his hands, the Rebel usurp'd the Throne; but nine years after, he was also slain in Battel by his own Subjects, who had call'd the Chineses to their Assistance. They being thus Masters of the Kingdom, held it for twenty years, and set Governours over every Province. But at length the Mandarins grew weary of their Oppression, because of the heavy Tributes which they laid upon the Tunquineses; so that a valiant Captain of the House of Le, having assembled a numerous Power together, gave the Chineses three Battels, and in every one overcame them. The Chineses thus expell'd out of Tunquin, the Conquerour seiz'd the Crown, and in his Family the Regal Government continu'd for above fourscore years. After which time, a great Lord, of the Family of Marr, which had formerly enjoy'd the Scepter, to Revenge himself of an affront which the King had put upon him at Court, found a way to escape his hands, and being assisted by a great Number of discontented Persons, of which the best regulated Kingdoms are always full, and the Chineses, who always sought an opportunity to regain what they had lost, after a bloody Battel, he possess'd himself of the Kingdom, it being never known what became of his Predecessor. But this new King enjoy'd the Fruits of his Victory but a small while. For two years afterwards, a Mandarin, of the House of Trin, having espous'd the Daughter of another great Lord, openly declar'd War against his Sovereign, with a design utterly to extirpate the House of Marr. Unhappily for him, death put a stop to his designs, though he left two Sons behind him, able enough to have pursu'd his undertakings. But the eldest, naturally timorous, and fearing to engage himself in a dangerous War, voluntarily submitted himself to the King, who gave him the Government of a Province, and marry'd him to one of his Sister's Daughters. The younger Brother being a valiant Prince, and having his deceased Father's Army at his Devotion, though the King propos'd him great advantages, would give ear to nothing, but out of his ambition to Reign himself continu'd and successfully accomplish'd what his Father had begun. In the second Battel which he gave the King, who was there in person, he took him Prisoner, together with his Brother, who had submitted to him, and some few days after he put them both publicly to death at the head of his Army; the one as an unjust usurper of the Throne; the other as a desertor, who had abandon'd his Father's Army, and so ill follow'd his intentions.

Now though as Victor he might easily have ascended the Throne, and tak'n upon him the Name and Title of King, yet he would not accept of any higher Title then that of General of the Army; and the better to Establish himself in his Authority, and to gain the affection of the People, he caus'd Proclamation to be made through all the Provinces of the Kingdom, that if there were any Prince of the House of Le yet remaining alive, he should shew himself, with full assurance that upon his appearing, he should be put into possession of the Kingdom. There was but one to be found, who had been so closely pursu'd by the House of Marr, while it rul'd, that to save his Life he was forc'd to abscond himself in the Frontiers of the Kingdom, under the Habit of a private Soldier. The General was overjoy'd to find that there was yet a lawful Heir of the House of Le to be found, that he might place him upon the Throne. So that so soon as he was known to be of the Legitimate Race, all the Equipage and Attendance of a King was sent to him, with Order to all the Provinces as he pass'd along, to receive him as if he were already crown'd. The whole Army march'd two days march to meet the King, and brought him to Checo, the capital City of the Kingdom, where he was plac'd in the Throne of his Father, and with great Pomp proclaim'd King of Tunquin. But General Trim, who car'd not so much for the Royal Title, as the Royal Power, so order'd his business, that leaving to Le all the outward show and Pomp of Royal Authority, he reserv'd to himself the whole command of the Army, and the greatest part of the Revenues of the Kingdom absolutely to dispose of at his own pleasure. So that from that time to this hour, we may affirm that there has been, and still are, two Kings of Tunquin, of which the first has only the Name and Title of King, and is call'd Boïa, and the second Choïa, who has all the Authority, disposing of all things at his pleasure, while the other remains shut up in his Palace like a Slave, not permitted to stir abroad but upon certain days: and then he is carry'd through the Streets of Checo, like an Image, though with a magnificent Train and Royal Equipage. He has generally 2000 Soldiers for his Guard; and sometimes 20000 which are quarter'd upon the Frontiers, chiefly toward Cochinchina. He also has ready upon the Frontiers 50 Elephants for War. And upon the Rivers of the Kingdom where the Enemy can come to damage him, he usually keeps 100 great Gallies, with a vast company of small Gallies, to which the Soldiers and Rowers that belong, have more pay then the others at Land. And these, that they may row with more strength, row standing, with their Faces toward the Prow, quite contrary to our Rowers, who turn their backs.

The King gives public Audience almost every day; but he makes no Edict, or public Decree, that is of any effect, if

if it be not also Sign'd by the Choua. At these Audiences he has with him thirty two Councillors of State, and besides these, a hundred others to judge of all Appeals of the Kingdom. The Eunuchs have a very great Power at Court, as in all other Courts of Asia, and the King, as to his most important affairs, confides more in them than in his own Children. The eldest Children do not always succeed their Father, for the Choua, or General, with all the Councillors, which are generally his Creatures, thought it convenient, that when the King should have more Sons than one, he should make choice of whom he pleas'd to succeed him. So that so soon as he has nam'd him, the Choua, attended by the principal Officers of the Army, Councillors of State, and Eunuchs, come to congratulate him, and to give him their Oaths to set him upon the Throne after the death of his Father; and for the other Brothers they are always shut up in the Palace, as in a Prison, without meddling with any affairs of State. They never stir out of the Palace but four times a year, and they never stay abroad above six days at a time, the Officers that attend them being put upon them by the Choua, who is as it were Lord high Constable of the Kingdom. The first of these six days of liberty they go to visit the Temples, and the Priests, to whom they give large Alms; the two next days they take their pleasure in hunting; and the three last days they spend their time upon the Rivers, in Gallies sumptuously trimm'd and adorn'd.

The Kingdom of Tunquin is divided into eight large Provinces, every one of which has its Governour, and its Magistrates, from whose sentence there lies an Appeal to the Court. We should wrong this Country to say that there were no Nobility therein; as indeed there are none in most Kingdoms of Asia. But they must all attain to this degree their merit; some by the Warrs, and some by their Learning. They who attain their Nobility by Arms, have wherewithall to live handsomly at home; and they begin to learn their Exercises betimes, at farthest by eleven or twelve years of Age. The first thing they are to understand, is how to handle their Swords; the Blades of which are straight, long, and broad, like those of the Switzers, having but one Edge. They are also taught to aim with their Bows, and to fire a Musket with Matches, (for they know not the use of Fire-Locks) to ride the great Horle, to shoot running, and to manage their Zagay's, which are a sort of Staves, cheek'd with Iron, like a Half-Pike. When they are ready in all these Exercises, then they learn to make all sorts of Artificial Fire-works; as also how to invent new ones, to make use of them against the Elephants. By the way I must needs tell you, there are some of these Elephants as I have seen several times, that are so accustom'd to these Artificial Fires, that they regard them not at all, neither are any way disturb'd at the Squibs that are thrown, and go off under their very Noses and Bellies. Nevertheless of 200 of these Creatures which the Eastern Kings carry to their Wars at a time, you shall have hardly fifteen that are so hardy and valiant. So that unless their Governours take not great care, instead of running upon the Enemy, they turn upon their Friends, and put the whole Army into a most dismal confusion; as you shall hear by the following Story. For Aurence-Zebe, the present Great Mogul, being then a young Prince, obtain'd of Cha-gehan, his Father, to let him have the command of an Army of threescore thousand Men, and fourscore Elephants; and with this force, out of his Antipathy to the Christians, he laid Siege to Daman, a Town belonging to the Portugals, fourteen Leagues from Surat. The Governour was a person of great Valour, and had also two Sons with him, who, together with himself, had both serv'd the King of France. He had also in the Town eight hundred Gentlemen, who voluntarily put themselves into the Garrison for its defence, from all parts of India where the Portugueses had to do, and were all excellently well mounted. For the Portugals at that time made use of none but Arabian Horses, the worst of which cost a thousand Crowns at least. The Governour finding that the Indian Prince began to press hard upon him, having already made two Assaults, resolv'd with all his Cavalry and Infantry to make a Salley upon Sunday Morning, causing them to fix at the ends of their Spears and Lances certain Artificial Fire-works, to which they were order'd suddenly to give fire, as soon as they should gain the Elephants Quarter. This design was so successful, that when it came to be executed, the Elephants were so suddenly terrifi'd, that running impetuously through the Indian Army, they trod to the ground, and cut in pieces with the Swords and Scithes which were fasten'd to their Trunks, what ever stood in their way. The Portugals taking advantage of this confusion, made no less havock among the amazed Multitude, whom they had surpriz'd securely and profoundly asleep. For they had an opinion, that the Portugals would never attack them upon the Sabbath day, believing they had the same veneration for that day which the Jews had. But they were utterly deceiv'd, in so much that the Portugals, by virtue of this Stratagem so closely pursu'd, obtain'd a notable Victory, to the utter destruction of 20000 of Aurenge-Zebe's Army, the spoils whereof are reported to have amounted to above twelve Millions.

But to return to the Kingdom of Tunquin, I must tell you, that the Tunquineses have often wag'd War against the Chineses, because the first would not pay the latter the Tribute which was accorded them by a Treaty made by one of their Kings, of the House of Le. But in the year 1667, the Chineses, seeing that the Tartars had made themselves Masters of their Country, made a Peace with the Tunquineses, wherein it was agreed, that the said Tribute should be no longer paid; but that they should every year send an Embassador only to Pequin, to do homage to the Emperour of China.

As for their Justice and Policy, they observe a very exact Order and Regulation over all the Kingdom of Tunquin, as well in their Cities, as in the Country. So that few of the best regulated Kingdoms exceed them. More especially they have a great care, for the public good, to repair the Bridges and High-ways; and every quarter of a League there is such Provision made, that any Traveller may there meet not only with Water, but Fire also to light his Pipe, being generally great smoakers of Tobacco.

As for Murder, they are very exact in punishing that crime. For they carry the Person apprehended before the Judge; and then he must hold to his Mouth a little wisp of Grats, to shew, that by his disorderly life he had made himself a Beast. Not much unlike this is the custom in Persia, where the King and his Council condemn or pardon all but such as have murder'd a Man that has any Kindred. For then all the favour that the King can shew him is, to deliver deliver him into the hands of the next of kin to the Person kill'd, who has power to agree with the Criminal for a Sum of Money, which is rarely done, as being accounted an Act both infamous and ignominious. So that if there be no agreement made, then it behoves the next of kin to be the Executioner himself, and put the Criminal to that death to which he is before condemn'd.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Court of the Kings of Tunquin.

ALthough the King, as I have already said, have not much Authority in his Kingdom, which is govern'd altogether by the General, who has the whole Militia at his Devotion, yet he is highly honour'd by his Subjects, and he keeps a very Splendid Court. The first and fifteenth day of every Month, all the Mandarins who are the Grandees of the Kingdom, are bound to come in their Chinese Habits to kiss the King's hands. The Constable, or General, was formerly wont to perform the same Office, but by degrees he has obtain'd a dispensation, and only sends another Prince in his stead. As for all the other Mandarins, Governours of Provinces, Justiciaries, and Military Officers, every year they go to kiss the Choua's hands, and to congratulate him upon the first day of the year, which is the fifteenth of the fifth Month; as also when he has obtain'd any great Victory over his Enemies. So that the General has more Honour done him than the King himself. 'Tis also the custom of the Tunquineses, among the Men, that when they meet any Person higher in condition than themselves, they make four profound obeysances to the very Earth. But for the Women, whatever their condition be among themselves, they never make but one. They who are desirous to be admitted into the Palace to see the King, are oblig'd to put on Violet Robes, and their Servants must be clad in the same colour. They that approach the King's presence to obtain any favour, must carry

carry a Present along with him. For though the Constable be the person that disposes of all Offices and Commands over all the Court and Kingdom, yet every year upon the fifteenth day of the seventh Month, the King distributes several considerable Gifts and Largesses to his Courtiers; as also to the Children of such Fathers who have perform'd any important Service for the good of his Kingdom. He gives them Pains of Gold, every one worth six hundred Livres; and Bars of Silver, amounting each to forty six Livres. The same day, he also releases all Prisoners, both Criminal and Debtors, provided the crime do not deserve death; and that the debt do not exceed two Bars of Silver. Also every year, the three last days of the last Month, the 40 Mandarins, who are the chief Councillors of State, take the Oaths of all the Lords and Officers of the Court, and of their Wives; causing them to swear to be faithful to the King, and if they know of any thing that concerns the King's person, or his Kingdom, to discover it. All Governours of Provinces give the same Oaths to the Lords and Gentlemen under their Jurisdictions; and the Governours of Cities to the Citizens, and other Inhabitants. They that discover any Treason never fail of any reward; only with this distinction, in reference to the quality of the Persons that reveal it. For as for the Mandarins and Gentlemen, the King rewards them according to his own pleasure: But as for the meaner sort, whether Men or Women, they are ennobl'd, and gratifi'd with a reward of 50 Pains of Gold, and 500 Bars of Silver, which in all amounts to 53000 Livres. But they esteem their Nobility far beyond their Money.

At certain times of the year, there is a Muster of the Youth of the several Provinces; and all those who are found not to be either of the Nobility, or not to have learnt any Trade, are presently enroll'd for the Service of the King, who every five years make choice of such as he intends for his Guard, and sends them to the Frontier Garrisons. There are some who endeavour to get off by Money; but if they be discover'd, both the Officers and the Soldier are punish'd without redemption. For they hang a little Bell about his Neck, Fetter his Arms, and in that posture send him to the Constable, who presently orders his Head to be struck off. But in regard the Tunquineses are very averſe from ſeeing any Blood ſhed, the Kindred or Friends of the condemn'd Perſon, intercede that he may be hang'd, believing that death to be moſt honourable which is not defil'd with Blood-ſhed; wherein they ſeem to be of the Opinion of the Turks.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Ceremonies obſerv'd when the Kings of Tunquin are advanc'd to the Throne.

BEfore we ſpeak of the Enthroning the Kings of Tunquin, and of the Ceremonies that attend it, it behoves us to relate the manner of their ſetting out of the Palace, when they go at any time to take their pleaſure. The King is ſeated upon a moſt magnificent Palanquin, carry'd by eight Men, where he may be beheld by all the People; the Lords and Officers of the Court attending him on foot, provided he do not go out of the City: for when he goes into the Country he rides upon an Elephant, and the Lords follow him on Horſe-back. When the Queen Mother, or his firſt Wife go abroad, they are likewiſe carry'd upon a cloſe Palanquin, with Lattice-Windows, to the end, they may ſee and not be ſeen; and behind the Palanquin follow the Maids of Honour on foot.

The Mandarins, and great Princes, ſolemnize their Birth-days every year, with great Feaſting, Paſtimes, Comedies, and Fire-works, and all their Friends and Kindred fail not to attend them to honour the Solemnities. In the year 1645, the eldeſt Son of the King, who was by his Father appointed for his Succeſſor, upon one of his Birth-days ſhew'd the Court all the divertizements he could imagin, and the King who had a great affection for him, ſent him a thouſand Pains of Gold, and five hundred Bars of Silver, to the value of 120000 Livres. At which time, large Alms are diſtributed, eſpecially to poor Widows and Priſoners.

When

When the King dies, and leaves several Sons, they set up him whom (when alive) he chose for his Successor. The third day after the Decease of the King, the Constable with all the Military Mandarins, the Lords of the Council, and all the Governours of Provinces, repair to the Prince's Apartment, where they present him with a Chinese Habit, after which having mounted him upon an Elephant, they bring him into one of the great Courts of his Palace, which is all covered with Cloth of Gold and Silver as with a Tent. There it is, that being placed upon a Throne magnificently enrich'd, all the Mandarins prostrate themselves upon the Earth with their Heads downward; in which posture having lain for some time, they rise, and closing their Hands together, with their Arms and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, they swear to the new King to be faithful to him till death. This first Ceremony being over, the new King, to shew himself liberal upon his first coming to the Crown, causes four Panes of Gold, and six Bars of Silver, to be given to every one. But to distinguish the Constable from the rest, he gives him twenty Panes of Gold, and forty Bars of Silver: and to the President of the Council or Chancellor ten of Gold and twenty of Silver. These Presents being thus made, several Pieces of Artillery are fired round the Palace, accompanied with several Volleys of small Shot, there being then in Arms above 30000 Horse and Foot; and then the King is set upon a magnificent Palanquin, and the Constable and chief of the Council ride before upon lovely Horses. Sixteen of the principal Officers of the Court carry the King, viz. eight Military Mandarins, and eight of the Council. And in this manner they set forward to the Apartment of the deceased King, from whence all the Lords retire for two hours, except the Eunuchs; and then it is, that the Princesses, Ladies of the Court, and chief Wives of the Mandarins, come to kiss the King's Hand, and congratulate his Advancement to the Throne. Which done, all the Lords return again to a noble Feast after the manner of the Countrey ready prepar'd. Their Viands are not so delicate, nor so deliciously dress'd as ours, neither have they so much variety. 'Tis true, they have those Birds-nests, already mention'd, which they mix in the most part of their Dishes, which gives the Meat a tast of almost all sorts of Spices. Of all the Meats which they eat Colts Flesh is in most esteem, and Dogs Flesh, neither of which agree with our Palates. The Festival is concluded with Comedies and Fireworks, which last all the night. The next day the 30000 Men that gave their Volleys of small Shot the day before, are drawn up in good order in a Field next, and all the principal Officers of War, Colonels, Captains, and Lieutenants, leave the Frontiers to be at the same place. Then the King mounted upon his Palanquin, and carried by sixteen of his principal Officers, the Constable and grand Squire riding before, and attended by several other Commanders on foot, with several Mummers that play and dance before the Palanquin, goes forth of his Palace, the Drums, Trumpets, Cornets, and other Warlike Instruments, filling the Air with their Martial Sounds. In this Pomp, and with this Equipage, the King being come to the Camp, quits his Palanquin, and mounts one of his great Elephants of War, which are us'd to the noise of the Guns and sight of the Fireworks. Being thus mounted, he rides into the middle of all his Troops, in which place all the Officers swear Fidelity to him; after which he bestows his Gifts upon them, to every Colonel two Panes of Gold, and forty Bars of Silver; to every Captain the half of what he gives a Colonel, and to every Lieutenant the half of what he gives a Captain: and as for the Souldiers, they have every one a Moneths Pay. These Presents being made, the whole Army discharges three Volleys, and then every Company retreats into a large Hutt, where they have Meat and Drink prepar'd for them, enough to serve them a whole day and a night. In the same Field is also set up a fair wooden Palace, sumptuously enriched within with Paintings and several pieces of Workmanship in Gold. There the King spends all the night, some part in Feasting, some part in Plays and seeing the Mummers dance, and the rest in beholding the Fireworks. The next day the King leaves his wooden Palace, which is afterwards fir'd by the Souldiers, as well as their own Hutt, and so returns to the City. Being arrived at his Palace with the same pomp that he went forth, he seats himself upon his Throne, and there shews his Liberality to those that made the Fireworks, to the Comedians and Dancers, and all the rest that were any way contributory, tributory to the setting forth the Pomp of the Ceremony. Then he gives Access to all the People; and two Commissioners, one for the Merchants, and the other for the Handicrafts, make a Speech to the King, the substance whereof is, that all the Burgesses and Inhabitants of the good City of Checo do acknowledge him for their King, and that they will be faithful to him till death. The Speech being ended, the King presents the Body of the Merchants with 50 Panes of Gold, and 300 Bars of Silver; and the Body of the Tradesmen with 20 Panes of Gold, and 100 Bars of Silver. The People gone home, every one strives who shall spend most in Feasting and Comedies, adding of their own to the Kings Bounty; so that every Quarter of the City is full of Jollity and Rejoycing for a week together. Some days after come the Commissioners for the Commonalty, from all parts of the Kingdom, who in the behalf of their Cities and Towns make known to His Majesty the universal Joy of the People for their lawful Prince, assuring him of their Fidelity, and of their Service against the Chineses. They name particularly the Chineses, because the Tunquineses have no greater Enemies than they, and for that the Hatred between them is irreconcilable. The King observing the good will of his People, testifies his Acknowledgment in this manner: All that have not time out of mind been Rebels to their lawful Sovereigns, but have constantly taken up Arms for their Defence, are discharged for a year from all Taxes and Impositions; and for the rest, who have at any time formerly assisted the Enemy, they are onely exempted for six moneths. All Prisoners for Debt partake also of the King's Bounty, so that after the President of the Council has made a Composition with the Creditors for half the Summe, the King pays the rest.

It is a thing almost incredible, what a vast number of Sacrifices the King sends to the Temples of his false Gods, to be there offer'd to the Idols.

The number of Beasts is said to exceed an hundred thousand, besides the value of a million in Panes of Gold, Tissues, and silks, to adorn the Idols, and Orange-coloured Calicuts for the Bonzes, and those that attend the Service of the Pagods. Among the rest of these Presents he sends a vast number of Pieces of blue Calicuts for the poor people that are kept in the Pagods, as our Poor are kept in Hospitals. The Idolatrous Princes also consume incredible Summes to adorn the Pagods and Images of their false Gods. There are some of them three foot high, all of massy Gold; others of Silver bigger than the Life.

The new King after all these Ceremonies are over, takes his time to go and give thanks to his false Deities for his coming to the Crown when the Moon first changes, shutting himself up for the first week with the Bonzes, and living in common with them with a great deal of Frugality.

During this time he visits the principal Hospitals, to see how the poor people are us'd, especially the old Folks, whom they have in great Veneration, to whom he distributes new Alms; for naturally the Tunquineses are very charitable. To conclude, he makes choice of some fair Situation, where he orders the building of a new Pagod, which he devotes to some of his Idols. Thus his Devotion being ended, upon the first day of the second Quarter, he mounts one of his Elephants of War, attended by all the Officers of his Court on Horse-back, and ten or twelve thousand men on foot, chosen out of the whole Army to attend him. All the second Quarter the whole Court stays in a certain Plain, where are three Houses set up, one for the King, one for the Constable, and one for the President of the Council, with a world of Huts for the rest. There are also several small Cabins set up, which are not covered and closed but upon one side, which they turn as the Wind blows; and these are the places where they dress their Victuals. For at that time the King allows two meals a day to all his Attendants.

Through this Plain runs the River of ——— which is very broad in that place. Upon this River are several Gallies richly gilded and painted, but especially the Admiral, which exceeds all the rest in Magnificence. The Prow, the Poop, the Ropes, the Oars, but onely that part which goes into the water, glitter all with Gold; the Benches very ingeniously painted, the Rowers well clad. For there the Rowers are all Souldiers and Freemen, contrary to the Custom in Europe. The Souldiers in their youth are taught to handle their Oars, and have somewhat better Pay than the Land-Souldiers. The Gallies are not so big as ours, ours, but they are longer, and cut the water better. While the King stays in this place, he diverts himself with seeing these Gallies row one against another. In the Evening the Rowers come ashore with their Captains to kiss the King's Hand, and they that have behav'd themselves most stoutly and nimbly, carry off the Marks of his Bounty. The seven days being past, the King calls before him all the Souldiers of the Gallies with their Officers, and gives them two moneths Wages extraordinary, as he does to his Land-Souldiers. 'Tis a wonderful thing to behold the vast number of Fireworks which they throw about, as well upon the Land as upon the Water. For my Brother, who has been present at all these Shews, has told me, that for these seven days together you would think the Air and Water all on fire. Being at Bantam I once saw one of these artificial Firework-Shews which the Tunquineses that were there plaid off before the King, and I must confess it was quite another thing from what we make in Europe.

The seven days being past, the King returns to the City in the same order, and with the same pomp, as he went forth; and being come to his Palace, he goes directly to the Apartment of his Princesses, where none but his Eunuchs accompany him, where he stays all the rest of the month. Every Evening he diverts himself with new Fireworks, which are plaid off before the Womens Lodgings; where also the Eunuchs, together with the Comedians and Mimmers, contribute to divertise the Ladies.

Of the Funeral Pomp of the Kings of Tunquin, and of their manner of Burying their Dead.

WHen the King of Tunquin dies; he is presently Embalm'd and laid in a Bed of State, where for sixty five days the People have liberty to come and see him. All that time he is serv'd as he was when he was alive; and when the Meat is taken from before the Body, one half is given to the Bonzes, and the other half to the Poor. So soon as the King hath breath'd his last gasp, the Constable gives notice thereof to the Governours of Provinces; and orders them how long they shall Mourn.

All the Military Mandarins and Judges wear Mourning generally three years, the King's Household nine moneths, the Nobility six, and the meaner sort three moneths. During these three years there is a Cessation from all Diversifements, except those that attend the Ceremony of the King's Advance or Elevation to the Throne. All the Vizards which are serv'd up to the King are vernish'd with Black. The King cuts his Hair, and covers his Head with a Bonnet of Straw, as do likewise all the Princes and Counsellors of State; neither do they leave off that Habit till the King's Body be in the Galley which is to carry him to his Enterment. Three Bells which hang in one of the Towers of the Palace, never leave tolling from the King's expiring till the Corps be put into the Galley. The third day after his Decease all the Mandarins repair to Court, to testify their sorrow which they have for the Death of the deceased King, and ten days after that the People are allowed to see the Body lie in State, till it be put into the Galley.

During the sixty five days that the Body is thus expos'd, the Constable is busie in preparing for the Funeral Pomp. From the Palace to the place where the Gallies wait for the Body, it is about two days Journey, and all the way spread

The Order observ'd in the March of the Funeral Pomp at the Interment of the Kings of Tunquin.

1. Two Messengers of the Chamber proclaim the deceased King's Name, each of them bears a Mace, the Head whereof is full of combustibile stuff for Artificial Fire or Fuses.

2. Next proceed Twelve Elephants; on each of the four foremost is one bearing the King's Standard. Then follow four other Elephants, with Wooden Turrets on their Backs, and in every one of these are Six Men, some being armed with Musquets, others with Fire Lances. The four last Elephants do severally carry a kind of Cage; some of which are on all sides shut up with Glass Windows, the other with a sort of Grates; the first being of a Square, the other having six sides and facing.

3. Then rides the Master of the Horse, attended with two Pages on Horse-back.

4. Twelve Horses are led by the Bridle two and two, by as many Captains of the Guard. The Harness of the first Six Horses is very rich, the Bit, and all the Furniture of the Bridle and Saddle are of pure Gold, the Saddles are embroydered likewise with Gold: But the Six other Horses Harness is all cover'd over with Gold Plates.

5. The Chariot which bears the Mausolee, wherein is the King's Corps, is dragged by Eight Stags trained to this Service. Each of these Stags is led by a Captain of the Life Guard.

6. Then follows the new King afoot clad in White Satten, with a Straw Cap on his Head. If he hath any Brothers, they attend on him in the like Attire; and they are surrounded with Musicians and Players on the Hoboys, and other Instruments.

7. There proceeds afterwards Six Princesses in White Satten, who carry Meat and Drink for the deceased King. These are attended tended by two Ladies of Honour in Purple Garments; and about these Ladies are several Musicians.

8. Eight Princes of the Royal Bloud go in Purple Garments with Straw Hats.

9. Four Governours of the four chief Provinces of the Kingdom, each bearing a Stick on his Shoulder, on which hangs a Bag full of Gold and several Perfumes; and these Bags contain the Presents which the several Provinces make unto the deceased King, for to be buried with his Corps, that he may make use of the same in the other World.

10. Two Chariots go next, each drawn by Eight Horses, and every Couple being led by Two Men. In each Chariot is a Coffe or Trunk full of Bars of Gold and other Riches, for the deceased King's use in the Life to come.

11. A great Crowd of the King's Officers, and of the Nobility, do follow this Funeral Pomp, some afoot and some on horse-back, according to their Offices and Qualities.

A Continuation of the Order observed at the Funeral Pomp of the Kings of Tunquin, setting out from the City of Bodlego.

The King's Body is put into a Galley, which is drawn up the River. This River is increased by several Brooks that come down from the Mountains, and it runs through barren and Desert Countries. In some of these places they are wont to bury the Corps very privately; for six onely of the chief Eunuchs of the Court are to know where the King hath been buried. An Oath is tendered to them never to reveal the place. And this is done perhaps on some Religious Motive, and likewise through Fear, that the Treasures which are buried by him should be digged up. These Riches are ordinarily some Massy Bars of Gold and Silver, as likewise some Pieces of Cloth of Gold and Silver, and such kinds of other rich Furnitures, which he is to make use of (as they say) when he hath need of them in the other World. Many Lords and Ladies of the Court will needs be buried Alive with him, for to serve him in the places where he is to go. I have observed in passing through the Estates of the Raja or Prince of Velouche, which border on the Easterly parts of the Kingdom of Visapour, that the Wives suffer themselves to be buried Alive near their deceased Husbands, instead of being burned, as they practise in other Provinces of the Indies.

spread with Violet-colour'd Calicut; which is the King's Colour. But in regard the King and all the Court march afoot both going and coming, they make it seventeen days Journey. At every quarter of a Leagues end are set up Huts, where is ready prepar'd Water to drink, and Fire to light their Tobacco. After the Pomp is over, and that the King is returned home, the Cloth is taken up and given to the Bonzes.

As to the order of their March it is thus :

The two men that go formost of all, are the two Ushers of the Door of the King's Chamber, who go repeating aloud the Name of the deceased King, carrying each of them a Mace of Arms, the bole whereof is full of artificial Fireworks. The twelve that follow, are the twelve chief Officers of the Galley, which draw the Tomb whereon the King's Name is written. Then follows the grand Squire on Horseback, attended by two others. Next appear twelve led Horses, which are led two by two, six of which have their Bridles enrich'd with thin Plates of Gold, and their Saddles embroydered. The other six with Bridles of Gold, and Houffes embroidered, and fring'd about with a Gold and Silver Fringe; every Horse being led by two men. Next to them follow twelve Elephants, four which carry each of them a man carrying a Standard; four others which carry each of them a Tower with six men apiece, some with Miquets, others with Fire Lances; the four last carry each of them a kind of a Cage, of which one is made with Glass Windows before and upon each side; the other like a kind of a Lattice, and the other with four kinds of Ruffs: and these are the King's Elephants which he rode upon when he went to the Wars. Behind them follow eight Horses, every one of them led by a Captain of the Guard, who draw the Herse. The new King, and his Brothers if he have any, or the Princes of the Bloud, follow the Herse, clad in Robes of White Satten, which is their Mourning Colour. Lastly follow two Chariots, each one drawn by eight Horses, and carrying two Coffers, wherein are the Panes of Gold, Bars of Silver, rich Tissues and Habits, which are to be buried with the Body of the deceased King.

The Funerals of the Tunquineses.

AS for the ordinary Funerals of the Tunquineses, they are more or less pompous, according to the Quality of the Persons.

At their Enterments they use great store of artificial Fireworks, which are the Companions as well of their Sorrow as their Joy. They set upon the Tomb of the deceased good store of Victuals and Comfitures, out of a belief that the dead are the better for them. For their Priests keep them in that blind Error for their own advantage, and so well order their business, that there is nothing left by morning. The same thing is practised by the Chineses at Batavia, where they have a place without the Town to bury their dead, which puts me in mind of this Story: Every evening the Guard is relieved as well in the City as in the Fortrefs. At the same time also they put forth eight Souldiers and a Corporal at each Gate of the City, who go the Rounds about the Walls of the City, and as far as within Cannon-shot of the Walls, being fearful of being surpris'd by the King of Mataran, or Bontam, their Capital Enemies. Now because the Chineses burying place lay in the Walk of these Souldiers, when they saw the Provant upon one of the Tombs, took it away to their Guard, and there feasted themselves. The Chinese Priests, that usually came about midnight to take away the Victuals, finding themselves several times bereaved of their Expectations, and suspecting the Souldiers belonging to the Holland Garrison, first complain'd to the General and Council; but that not taking effect, they resolv'd to poison both the Meat and the Drink, to prevent the like Fraud for the future. This took so good effect, that afterwards many of the Dutch Souldiers being poisoned, deterr'd the rest from any more such Licorish Attempts.

C H A P. XV.

Of the Religion and Superstition of the Tunquineses

THe Tunquineses as to matters of Religion are divided into three Sects: The first takes its original from an ancient Philosopher called Confutius, whose Memory is very famous over all China, and the neighbouring Countries. Their Doctrine asserts that Man is compos'd of two parts, the one fine and subtil, the other material and gross; and that when Man dies, the subtiler part goes into the Air, and the grosser part stays in the Earth. This Sect maintains the use of Sacrifices, and adores the seven Planets. But among all their Gods and Idols they have four in particular veneration; the Names of these Gods are Rauma, Be-tolo, Ramonu, and Brama. They have a Goddess also, whose Name is Satisbana, which is she whom the Women adore; but for the King and the Mandarins, especially the more studious sort, they adore the Heavens. The second Sect had for its Founder a certain Hermite called Chacabout, and is followed by the most part of the meaner people. He has taught them the Transmigration of Souls, and has enjoin'd his Followers to observe 10 Commandments.

The first is, That they shall not kill. 2. That they shall not steal. 3. That they shall not defile their Bodies. 4. That they shall not lye. 5. That they shall not be unfaithful in their words. 6. That they shall restrain their inordinate Desires. 7. That they shall do injury to no man. 8. That they shall not be great Talkers. 9. That they shall not give way to their Anger. 10. That they shall labour to their utmost to get Knowledge.

As for them that design to live a Religious Life, they must renounce the Delights of this Life, be charitable to the poor, overcome their Passions, and give themselves up to Meditation. He taught moreover, that after this Life there were ten distinct places of Joy and Torment: and that the Condemners of this Law should feel Torments proportionable to their Offences, without any end of their Torments. That they that endeavour'd to fulfill his Law, and had fail'd in any point, they should wander in divers Bodies for 3000 years before they entered into happiness. But that they who had perfectly obeyed his Law, should be rewarded without suffering any change of Body. And that he himself had been born ten times, before he enjoyed the Bliss which he possessed, not having in his first Youth been illuminated with that Knowledge which he afterwards attained. This Chacabout was one of the greatest Impostors that ever was in Asia, having spread his Opinions over all the Kingdom of Siam, over a great part of the Provinces of Japon, and from thence into Tunquin, where he died.

The third Sect is that of Lanthu, to whose Fables the Japponeses and Chineses give great credence, but the Tunquineses more. He was a Chinese by Nation, and one of the greatest Magicians in the East. He made a great many Disciples, who to authorize this black Impostor, and the more to impose upon the people, made them believe that the Birth of Lanthu was miraculous, and that his Mother carried him in her Womb, without losing her Virginity, seventy years. He taught much of Chacabout's Doctrine; but that which won the Hearts of the people was, that he still exhorted the Grandees to build Hospitals in all Cities where there had been none before. Insomuch that several of the Nobility betook themselves to those places to look after the Sick, as did also a great number of the Bonzes for the same reason. While my Brother was there, the Choua, a great Enemy to these Vagabonds, sent for a great number of Bonzes and Says, or idle Fellows, and picking out the strongest and best proportion'd, sent them away to the Frontiers for Soldiers.

'Tis the Custom of the Tunquineses to adore three things in their Houses: The first is the Hearth of their Chimney made of three Stones. The second is an Idol which they call Tienfa, which is the Patroness of Handicrafts, as Sculpture, Painting, Goldsmith's work, &c. So that when they put forth a Child to learn any of those Trades, before they let him work they set up an Altar, and sacrifice to this Idol, to the end he may infuse into the Lad wit and aptness to learn. The third is the Idol Buabin, which they implore when when they design to build an House. For then they erect an Altar, and send for the Bonzes and Says to sacrifice to this Idol. To this purpose they make great preparation of all sorts of Viands, and then present him with several gilt Papers; wherein are written several Magic words, endeavouring by that means that he may not suffer any misfortune to befall the House they are going to build.

There are some Tunquineses that adore the Heaven, others the Moon, and others the Stars. There are also some that adore five parts of the Earth, making a fifth part in the middle of that which is known to us, and to them also, but confusedly. When they worship them, they have for each of the parts a particular Colour. When they adore the Northern part, they clothe themselves in black; and the Dishes and Table whereon they lay their Sacrifices are likewise black. When they worship the South their Habit is red; when the East, green; when the West, white; and when they adore the middle of the World, they wear Yellow.

They offer Offerings likewise to Trees, Elephants, Horses, Cows, and almost to all other sorts of Animals. They that study the Chinese Characters are accustomed every fifth moneth of the year, to sacrifice for the Souls of the dead who were never buried. They believe that by so doing their Understandings shall be more enlightned for the apprehending of all things.

Every year, at the beginning of the year, they have a great Solemnity, to honour after their death those who in their life-time have done any noble action, and were renowned for their Valour; reckoning in that number those that have been so hardy as to rebel against their Princes, as being men of Courage. Three days before this great Solemnity, which is perform'd in a large Field, they set up several Altars, some for the Sacrifices, others for the Names of the Illustrious Men whom they design to honour. The Eve before above 40000 Souldiers spend the night in this Plain, where all the Princes and Mandarins are ordered to meet with their Elephants and led Horses, and the King himself goes thither in person. After they have finished all their Sacrifices, and burnt good store of Incense to the Honour of the dead, the King and all the Mandarins make three profound Reverences where the Altars are ; then the King shoots with his Bow and Arrows five times against the Altars, where lie the Names of those that were so rash as to rebel against their Sovereigns. After that the great Guns go off, and the Souldiers give three Volleys of small Shot, to put all the Souls to flight. Then they burn all the Altars, and a great number of gilt Papers, which were made use of at the Sacrifices ; concluding all with a most hideous shout of all the Souldiery. Which done, the Bonzes, Says, and such like people, come and devour the Meat that was made use of for the Sacrifices.

The first and fifteenth days of the Moneth 'tis a wonderful thing to hear the Chiming Din of their great Bells. For those are the more especial Holydays set apart for the Worship of their Gods, and all the Bonzes and Says give them more than ordinary Worship upon those days, redoubling their Prayers, and repeating upon those days every one of them a strange kind of Charm six times over. At these times several people bring Meat and Drink to the Sepulchres of their Kindred, to sacrifice for the good of their Souls to eat. The Bonzes fail not to be there, and when the others have paid their Devoirs the Bonzes fall to, and what they cannot eat they give to the poor. But for all the austere Lives of these Bonzes and Says, neither the King nor the Mandarins make any account of them, so that they are in credit onely with the common people.

In the Kingdom of Tunquin, where the great Cities have several Pagods, there is hardly a Town or Village that has not one, and for every Pagod at least two Bonzes and two Says. But there are some Pagods that maintain forty Bonzes and as many Says, who live in common under a Superiour, they keep to the Doctrine of Chacabout, and a Goat is the Idol which they adore. They wear about their Necks a kind of Necklace, consisting of 100 Beads, very big and made of Wood. In their Hands they carry a Staff, which is headed with a Bird of varnish'd Wood. They beg for their living, and are not like the Bonzes in other Kingdoms, who beg Alms as it were their due ; these on the contrary use all the modesty and humility that may be, never taking more than is needful for them : and if they have any thing to spare, they give it to the poor Widows or Orphans that cannot get their their living. Their Orders permit them to marry, provided they leave their Monastery. They assist at the Funerals of great men, where they say a kind of Orison, sounding their Trumpets and Cornets, while the Bells in their Pagods go at the same time.

The Tunquineses also have a great veneration for two Magicians, and one Magicianess. The first of their Magicians, whom they call Tay-bou, makes them believe that he knows the Events of things to come; so that when they have any occasion to marry their Children, build a House, buy Land, or undertake any business of Consequence, they consult this Oracle to know what shall happen to them. The Magician courteously receives them, and with a counterfeit modesty demands of them (for Example) the Age of the person concerned. Then taking into his hands a great Book about three fingers thick, wherein are the Figures of Men, half Men, and several sorts of Land and Water Animals, of Circles, Triangles, and Squares, he goes to work, and at the same time puts into a Goblet three Pieces of Copper, whereon are engraven several Characters onely upon one side. After he has shaken the Pieces in the Cup, he throws them upon the ground as at Cross and Pile; if all the Characters lie undermost he looks no further in his Book, but looks upon it as an unfortunate sign; but if one or two Characters come up, he looks in his Book, and makes the person believe what he pleases. But if all the Characters happen to turn uppermost, then the Magician cries out, that the Party is the most fortunate in the world.

The second Magician is called Thay-Phou-Thouy, to whom they have recourse in all their Sicknesses. When any sick person comes to him, he takes a Book full of Figures like the former; onely the Form of the Book is different, for this is not above an inch thick, and about four fingers long, with eight Panes full of Cyphers. If after several Apish tricks which he acts before the sick person to amuse him, he affirms that the Distemper comes from the Devil, he himself, together with the sick party and they that brought him, do Homage to the evil spirit: this Homage consists of several Sacrifices, and the Friends of the sick party present to the Devil, or rather to the Magician, a Table furnish'd with Rice and other Viands. But if after all these Offerings the sick sick party do not recover his health, all the Friends and Kindred of the sick party, with as many Souldiers as they can get, surround the sick persons House, and shoot off their Mulquets three times, to drive away the Devil. Sometimes the Magician makes the sick party and his Friends believe, that the God of the Waters is the cause of the Distemper, especially if the sick person belongs to the Water, as being a Mariner, Boatman, or Fisherman. And to the end he may be cur'd, and that the appeas'd God may return to his warry Habitation, he orders that all the way from the sick parties House to the next River may be spread with all the Pieces of Stuff which all the Kindred have, and that they set up Huts at such and such distances, and keep in every one a several Table furnish'd with all sorts of Viands for 3 days. And all this to oblige the Deity to retire, and to entertain him till he gets home. But the better to know the rise of the Disease, Thay-Phou-Thouy makes them believe, that they must go and consult Thay-Bou, who is the chief Magician, and if he answer that the Souls of the dead have caused the Distemper, the Magician employs all his tricks and devices to draw to him those mischievous Souls; and when he has got into his Clutches, as he pretends, the Soul that is the Author of the Disease, he shuts him up in a Bottle full of Water till the party be cured; and then breaking the Bottle he sets the Soul at liberty to go about his business. When the party recovers, he makes him and his Friends believe, that if the Bottle had not been well stopp'd to keep in the Soul, their Kinsman would have died infallibly.

The Magicianess, which the Tunquineses also consult, is called Bacoti, and she keeps a great Correspondence with the Devil, to whom, if she has a Daughter, she offers her as soon as she is born, the more to oblige him. If any Mother bewail the death of her Child, and be desirous to know in what condition the Soul of the Child is in, in the other world, she goes to Bacoti, who to satisfy the Mother presently falls a beating her Drum, to summon the Soul to come to her, who presently appears, as she pretends, and tells her its Condition whether good or bad. But most commonly she makes the silly Mothers believe that the Soul is happy, and bids them be of good cheer.

The

The Superstitions of these people are very numerous, but the most remarkable are these:

The studious sort of people are very diligent to learn, how by looking in a Mirrour to foretell things to come.

There are some that present Aqua Vitæ to the dead, and sprinkle their Ashes with it; but this onely upon the Ashes of their Ancestors, from whom at the same time they beg for Health, Honour, and Riches.

Others there are, that upon the first day of their year take a piece of Chalk, and make severall Figures round, square, and triangular, upon the Threshold and Steps of their Doors. They say those Figures fright away the evil spirits. Some there are that make great Observations upon the Feet of their Hens, and draw strange Conclusions of bad or ill fortune from thence. Others travelling into the Countrey, if they sneeze but once by the way, return to the place from whence they parted in the morning, saying, That had they gone on, some mischief would have certainly befallen them: but if they sneeze twice, they pursue their Journey, never fearing any danger for that day.

There are some so superstitious, that going out of their Houses, if they meet a Woman, they return home again for two or three hours; but if they meet a Man, 'tis a good Omen.

The first Fruit which they gather at the beginning of the year, is that which the Araguer bears, spoken of in the third Chapter. And this is the first which they eat with great Ceremony, during the first Quarter of their second Moneth. To which purpose they are so possess'd with the Devil, that they poyson one of these Fruits, and give it to a Child to eat, believing that by taking away the life of the poor innocent Child, they shall thrive the better all the year after.

When the Moon is eclipsed, they say there is a certain Dragon that assails her, and endeavours with all his might to overcome her, with an intention to devour her. Then to assist the Moon, and to put the Dragon to flight, they discharge their Musquets, ring their Bells, beat up their Drums, and make a hideous noise till the Eclipse be over: and then they believe that they have rescued the Moon, for which they make as great a rejoycing, as if they had obtain'd some eminent Victory over their Enemies.

They

They are also very superstitious in reference to the hours of the day. They divide the natural day into twelve hours, and to every one they give the name of some Beast, as of a Tiger, a Lion, a Bear, a Horse, a Dragon, an Ape, &c. The Moneths also and Days have their particular Names : and when a Child is born, presently the Father and Kindred go to see the name of the Beast by which the Hour was call'd wherein the Child was born; believing that Animal will prove fatal to it. At the time that my Brother was at the Court at Tunquin, the King then reigning being born in the hour of the Horse, would never give Audience, nor ever stir out of his Palace at that hour, for fear some mischief should befall him at that time. That Prince was so superstitious, that one of his Children dying in the fifth moneth, which bears the name of the Horse, he would never permit him to be interr'd, but caus'd him to be burnt, and scatter'd his ashes in the Air.

This is that which I could gather of most remarkable and most considerable matters concerning the State of the Kingdom of Tunquin, either out of the Manuscripts which my Brother (who died in the Indies) left me, or from the Discourse which I have had with the Tunquineses themselves both at Bantam and Batavia.

ISLAND

CHAP. I.

How the Hollanders possessed themselves of it, and how it was taken from them by the Chineses.

THE Island of Formosa is about Eighty Leagues in compass; so that the Hollanders were never in possession of the whole Island, but were onely Masters of four Fortresses, and two and fifty Villages, wherein they could number about fourteen or fifteen thousand Inhabitants. As for that part which is under the Indians, the best discovery that we can give, is onely such as was made by a young Hollander upon this occasion.

I

There

There was in the chief Fort belonging to the Hollanders a young man, imployed there as an under-Factor, who being wild and extravagant, was put out of his place and made a Souldier. He not able to undergo that miserable course of life, resolved with himself rather to die, than live in that mean condition. Thereupon having at several opportunities made a shift to make up a little Pack of what he thought was most fit for the Mountainiers of the Island, he watch'd his time and stole out of the Fort, and took his way directly toward the Mountains. With these Highlanders he liv'd four years, in which time having learnt the Trade and Language of the Countrey, he ventur'd to return to the Hollanders again, who received him kindly, as being willing to understand the Government of the People, and by what means they might traffick with them. Whereupon the young man made them this Relation.

As for the Government of the People he said, that over every six Villages there was an Overseer with four Counsellors, who administer Justice, and punish the smallest Theft with Death. The Men are crucified; the Women are laid along upon a thick Beam of Wood, and then with a Scimitar their Bodies are divided into three parts. The Men are so punish'd for Theft or Murder, and the Women for Theft or Adultery. If it be a Pety Larceny, not above the value of a Shilling, they give them an hundred Lashes with a Whip, and burn them in the Cheek. They that believe themselves to be unjustly dealt with, whether in Civil or Criminal Causes, enter their Appeal to go to the North East part of the Island, in which division of the Island there stands a City by the Sea-side, where he that commands all the Highlanders resides. At the end of our Moneth of March several of these Highlanders resort to this City, especially the Merchants, who carry along with them all their whole Stock that they had hoarded together the year before in Horns of Oxen, Harts, Bufulo's, and Raw Hides; and then return again at the end of April, bringing back in return of their Commodities Japon and China Stuffs, Clothes, and Linen of the same Countrey, and Gold and Silver Japonesse Money, of various Coyns and Value. He told them also, that he believed that in the Mountains near the Sea, there are certain Mines of Gold and Silver, or some River where they they find it in Powder, and that the Japoneses fetch it in their Vessels. He did all he could to discover the truth, but after he had travelled two or three days Journey, the People would let him go no further. For at the end of every three or four hours travel there are Guards set, who examine all Travellers whither they go; neither will they let their own Countrymen pass, but such as go about their Law or to trade. Moreover he told them, that if they would give him Goods to trade withall, as Amber, Coral, Looking Glasses; but chiefly some Skins of the Sea Fish, which is rougher than Seal-skin, he would endeavour to get to the very City it self where the Ships ride. These Skins are greatly esteemed by the Natives to adorn the Scabbards of their Cutlasses and Swords. For usually upon the back of this Fish you shall find nine little Stones, which make a kind of a Rose, eight in a Circle and one in the middle, as you see these nine disposed in their exact order. When the Portuguezes traded onely to Japon, it is incredible how dear they sold these Skins. For if Nature had well set these Stones at an equal distance, and even in bigness, one of these Skins would yield above ten thousand Piasters, and more. This Fish is caught in the Persian Gulph, where I have seen of them, but I saw but very few so perfect as that which I have describ'd, which would in those Countries yield ten thousand Crowns.

But to return to the Story; the Governour gave the young man what he desired, and sent him going: but the Chineses soon after expelling the Hollanders out of the Island, it was never known what became of the young man.

It may be wondered why Formosa was taken so soon: but here were two Reasons, first the faint-heartedness of the Governour, and secondly his breach of word to a French Souldier of Rouen, call'd Abraham du Puys; for he having served out his time of seven years, desir'd leave to be gone, but the Governour, after he had promis'd him fair at first, at length absolutely refused him. Soon after the Chineses came to besiege the place. The Souldier thus disappointed, and seeing himself coop'd up who might have been free, had the Governour so pleased, studied a fatal revenge upon all his Countrymen; for being by this means grown desperate, watch'd his opportunity, and flinging himself from the Fort into the Sea, swam directly to the Enemy. The Governour offered 200 Pieces of Eight to any person that would venture after him, and bring him back dead or alive. A Serjeant accepted his offer, but it was to get loose as the other had done; and so they got both safe into the Enemies Quarters. The Chineses presently carried them to the General Coxima; and he being a person of Valour and Discretion; made very much of them, whereupon they readily and willingly inform'd him of the strength and condition of the Fortress. They also advised him to remove his Batteries to the weakest part of the Town, whereas he was then assailing it where it was most strongly fortified: which if he would do, they assur'd him he should be soon Master of the Fort. The General was thinking a little before they came to have rais'd his Siege, but upon their encouragement he fell on again according to their direction; and as he was preparing for a general Assault, the Holland Commander, fearful of losing his Life and his Estate, beat a Parley, and surrender'd the place upon Articles.

During the Siege the Hollanders made a Salley, but were beaten in again, and fourteen of their men were taken Prisoners. The Chineses finding those fourteen men in their power, and remembering how cruel the Hollanders had been to their Nation when they took any of them at Sea, brought the fourteen men all together, put out one eye of each, cut off their Noses, Ears, and one hand, and so sent them back to the Fort, with order to tell the Commander, that the Dutch had taught them that kind of Mercy.

C H A P. II.

Of Maurice Island, where they cut Ebony.

THE Island call'd Maurice Island lies almost in 84 degrees of Longitude, and 21 degrees of Southern Latitude, being but 2 degrees and 30 minutes from the Tropick of Capricorn, right over against the middle of the great Island of Madagascar, which it has upon the West, from whence it lies 140 Leagues, and is in compass about 60 Leagues. It bears great quantities of Ebony; and here it was that the Hollanders did formerly send their Slaves, their banish'd and condemn'd Persons, to cut that sort of Wood, which is Labour much more severe and cruel than that of Rowing in the Gallies. The whole Island is subject to those violent and outrageous Tempests call'd Ouragans, which nothing can withstand, so that the People are forc'd to dig themselves Holes in the ground, not being able to keep their Huts standing. Neither had the poor Creatures any other Food than a little boil'd Rice, and about a Farthings worth of Salt-fish among four for a whole day. Since that the Price of Ebony being brought very low, the Dutch have forsaken the Island, the Profit not bearing the sorry Expences which those poor Creatures put them to.

So soon as this Tree is cut down it must be sawed into Planks, and then buried seven or eight foot deep in the Earth, which ought to be somewhat moist. There those Planks must lie two years, and sometimes three, if the Wood be very thick. After that the Wood is fit to be wrought upon, neither will it splinter or split, and will the sooner admit of a glittering Polishment.

This Maurice Island puts me in mind of a Story, that the Sieur Loocker told me, concerning what befell him in his Voyage from Holland to Batavia in the Year 1643: Châ Abbas the second of that Name, King of Persia, having a great desire to learn to paint, signified to the Hollanders at Hispahan, that he desired them to send into Holland for some per-person who was excellent both in Designing and Painting. Thereupon the Chief of the Factory wrote into Holland, and upon his Letters the Company sent away Loocher, to oblige the King; and to do him the greater honour, gave him the charge of Merchant of the Vessel, who is equal with the Captain, during the Voyage; to whom the Wind and Season was very favourable till they came to the Cape of Good Hope; but after they had doubled the Point, the Pilots bare too much to the North, whereas they should have steered directly East; so that when they had made the Height of the Island of Madagascar, they met with nothing but contrary Winds. For it is observable, that all the year long there blows but one Wind toward Maurice Island; so that a Ship may go thither in eight or nine days, but cannot return in thirty or forty. For you must steer Westward to 30 degrees, and from thence Eastward to 14 or 15 degrees, and then you light upon Maurice Island. Five days together the Ship was but rudely handled by the storm; which at length grew so violent, and the Sea so boisterous, that all the great Cabin was broken to pieces, the Beak of the Ship carried away, and the Foremast made unserviceable. Thirteen days together they remained in this miserable condition, toss'd up and down by the Sea and Wind, all which time they never saw the Sun, unable to take any height or observation where they were. The fourteenth day it cleared up, and the Sun appeared, and then taking the Height they observed themselves to be not far from the Maurice Island, which was very true; for the next day by break of day they found themselves not above two Leagues from the Island; and they found themselves upon the North side of the Island, whereas the Hollanders liv'd upon the South. And therefore perceiving that if the Wind did not change, it would be a long time, and that with great difficulty too, before they could fetch a compass about the Island to come to the Fort where the Hollanders were, they call'd a Council, where it was resolv'd that Loocher with ten Souldiers should be put on shoar, and that he should endeavour to get to the Fort by Land, there to make provision of Water and Refreshments for the rest of the Company, against they could come about. Maurice Island has this advantage, to be furnished with excellent Water, and great store of Goats, Oranges, Ci-

Citrons, and other Fruits: but when the Ouragans happen there is not one to be seen upon the Trees, unless onely upon those which are shelter'd by the Ebony Boughs, which are thick and strong, and the Trees deeply rooted in the Earth. Loocker thereupon with ten Souldiers was put on shoar in a Shallop, with Provisions for six days. Nor was the Island in that part above eight or ten Leagues broad, which they thought to travel in few days: but the Woods were so thick, that had they not been well provided of Carpenters Hatchets and Axes, they could never have made their way. The first day they travell'd not above a League, and the next day not above as much more, being still forced to hack their way along with great travel and pains. So that being now weary and spent, they laid themselves upon the ground to repose themselves, and get a little sleep. When they wak'd they heard the voices of several people, which much rejoiced them, believing them to be the Slaves and poor Creatures that were cutting Ebony not far off. Thereupon they fell to work to get as near them as they could: but the Woods proved so thick, that they despair'd of doing any good. Nevertheless the further they advanced, the clearer they could hear the voices of the people, some speaking Dutch, others Portuguese. Whereupon Loocker caus'd one of the Souldiers in his company that had a strong voice, to call out in the Portuguese Language, to the people to come and help them. But instead of that they all betook themselves to their heels, and fled to the Commander's Lodge, telling him that there were Devils in the Woods; and that they had call'd to them in the Portugal Language. The Commander seeing both the Souldiers and the Slaves in such a dismal amaze and terror, knew not at first what to think; however he endeavour'd to resettle their distraction, and to revive a sort of people that were half dead with fear. The next day he perswaded them to return to their Work, perswading them to lay aside their vain Fears, which proceeded onely from idle Apprehensions: but they flatly denied him, telling him that they would rather die, than return to be torn in pieces by the Devil. However, others that had not been present at the accident, and therefore gave not so much credit to the report, preferred to see the utmost of this business, provided any one that had heard the voice would bring them to the place. Away upon this went a good number of them together, and coming to the place fell to work. Now because Loocher and his Companions having labour'd all the night before, were fallen asleep; for a good while the Workmen heard no voice at all, nor so much as any thing stirring, so that they began to laugh at those that had brought them thither, who still obstinately maintained the truth of what they had heard. This Dispute at length began to grow so hot and so loud, that at length they wak'd Loocher and his Fellows, who being now got nearer to them by means of their last nights labour, heard distinctly every word they said, and notwithstanding their distress could not chuse but laugh. Soon after Loocher and the Souldiers call'd out again, Work toward us, they cried, we are Hollanders, come and help us out of the Wood, and we will put an end to the dispute. But the Workmen no sooner heard them, but away they ran for their Lives, and when they came to the Lodge, they were so har'd, so scar'd, and quite out of breath, that the Governour in vain endeavour'd to get the least tittle of a word from them. At length being come to themselves, they assur'd him that it was too true that the Devils were in the Wood, and that the more to deceive and wheedle them, to day they had not onely spoken Portuguese, but Dutch too. This put the Governour and all into a deep Consternation, insomuch that they were all at their Wits end. But the next morning Loocher and his Gang having made their way through, the Centinel spied them first from the Fort, and by the discharge of his Musquet gave notice of the approach of the Devils. And then it was that the poor affrighted Mortals, laying aside their fears, and going forth to meet their own Shapes, found them to be a company of their Countrymen in distress, whom they then received into their kindness, to give an account of their Misfortunes. Three days after the Ship came into Harbour, though in a miserable condition.

CHAP. III.

Of the Grandeur of the General at Batavia, and what befell his Wife and his Niece.

THe Company to maintain their Authority and Commerce in the Indies, believe it to be to their advantage, that the General whom they send to Batavia, and who commands in all the places in Asia where the Dutch traffic, should keep up the Port of a Prince. There is no Cavalry in Europe so well clad or mounted as his; the Horsemen all upon Persian or Arabian Steeds. Nor is his Foot Guard less sumptuous: His Halberdiers wear their yellow Satten Doublets, Scarlet Breeches lac'd with Silver Lace, and their Silk Stockings. But this onely for the General's Guards; for those which they send abroad to their Forts and Garrisons, it is a great pity to see how poorly they are attir'd, and how meanly fed. When the Dutch Fleet arrives at Batavia, the Souldiers which they bring are drawn up in the Parade of the Fortrefs by the Major, who chuses out the handsomest to remain at Batavia, the rest are sent and distributed into other places. When the General and his Wife go abroad, they always ride in their Coach and six Horses, with six Halberdiers attending at each Boot, and a Troop of Horse and two Companies of Foot for their Guard. The Authority of the General is very great, though he may be sometimes commanded by his Wife: neither is it safe for them that depend upon them, to do or say any thing that may offend them. But for others, who have their Employments immediately from the Company, they never oblige themselves to be so circumspect. For truth whereof I will relate the following pleasant Story.

The Wife of General Matsker having one day undertaken to play upon a Captain of a Ship call'd the Lucifer, and to laugh at him, for having lost a Bale of Goods which had been seized by the Company, in regard no particular person is permitted to trade. The Captain nettled at her Discourse, resolved to be revenged. Nor was it long before he found the means ; for being commanded away for Maslipatan in the Kingdom of Goleonda, where being arriv'd, laden, and ready to set Sail to return to Batavia, the chief of the Factory desired him to take in four Bales of Goods for the General's Wife, as belonging to her, and to deliver them privately to her. This was Nuts to the Captain : so that being return'd to Batavia, he went he went immediately to visit the General, and deliver him the Letters which concerned the Car-go. Immediately according to custom the General invited him to dinner, at which time it is usual for the General to inform himself of the Condition of the Factory. Among the rest of the questions the General asked the Captain whether he had any Counterband Goods aboard, or any that were not upon the Company's sole account. To which the Captain answered, that all the Goods belonged to the Company, except four Bales, which the chief Factor at Maslipatan had particularly recommended to his care, as belonging to Madam General. This being publicly spoken in the presence of a great many that were at Table, the Lady that was not aware of such a blow, was not a little surpriz'd, and the General himself was not a little in wrath, sternly ask'd her how she durst undertake to trade without his knowledge. Presently she denied the whole matter, and averred that the Captain was mistaken, and took her for some other person. But the General sent for the Fiscal, and order'd him to go forthwith with the Captain, and fetch the four Bales ashoar ; which being done, he order'd further that the Goods should be carried into the public Hall of the Town House, with a Writing fix'd upon them, that whoever own'd those Goods should come and claim them ; but no body came. So that the Captain had the pleasure to see the Lady in a delicate raging passion, and the Goods dispos'd of to the Fiscal, and the Poor of the Hospital.

The same General and his Wife having no Children, they began to consider to whom they should leave their Estates. At length the General bethought himself of a Niece he had at Amsterdam, and therefore wrote to the Directors of the Company to send her to him. This Niece of his cried Pot-herbs and Onions about the street to get her living ; in which Calling she was at last found out, and brought to the Directors, who presently changed her Habit, and of a Crier of Cab-

Cabbage made her a little Lady ; who though she were of such a low condition, was not without a good proportion of natural Beauty.

The Fleet being ready to depart, there was a Cabin built on purpose for this Niece, and the Company having presented her with several pieces of Tissue and Silks, recommended her to C. Rosse, the Viceadmiral's care. This Captain had been several times at the Indies before, and was both rich and a Batchelour : so that when the Ship was out at Sea, he fail'd not to shew all the respects imaginable to this Niece. Now this young Virgin not being accustomed to the Sea, upon the least gust of Wind she was half dead ; and all that time the Captain would not stir from her Bed-side, for fear any Accident should befall her. And as he was thus diligent not to stir from her Bed-side in fowl, 'tis verily believ'd he was seldom far from it in fair weather ; and that instead of sitting by her Bed-side, he sometimes got fairly into it. But whether he were within or without, most certain it is, that before Madam Niece arrived at Batavia, she found her self to be with child, though she so discreetly concealed it, that none in the Vessel perceived it.

The Vessel had no sooner passed the Strait that lies toward Bantam, but Madam General with a great number of her Friends in several little Barques came out to meet Madam Niece, and were not a little surprized to find her to be a person so well clad and handsom withall, without any appearance of what she had been before.

A Coach and six Horses, and six Halberdiers, a Troop of Horse, and a Company of Foot, waited upon the shoar for Madam General. And thus was Madam Niece conducted to the Fort with great pomp, and as kindly received by Monsieur General. Some few days after several of the Gallants of Batavia came picquering to the House to see Madam Niece ; and so it was, that all being smitten, every one desired her in Marriage : but both Uncle and Aunt were deaf to all their Suits, as having design'd her to a young rich Merchant, who was then out of the way. C. Rosse laugh'd in his sleeve at the bustle that was made, and still continued his former respects and double Diligences, which were the more willingly permitted him in regard of the great care of their Niece, for which the Uncle and the Aunt thought themselves oblig'd to him during their Voyage. But at length seeing such a swarm of Sweethearts about her, he thought it but charity to undeceive so many poor Gulls, and without further ceremony to go to her Aunt, and to demand her Niece for his Wife. The She General who look'd upon herself to be a kind of a Queen at Batavia, look'd upon it as a high offence and indignity for a Tarpaulin Captain of a Ship to dare to make her such a Proposal, having already refus'd such Matches, persons that might come to be Privy Counsellors of all the Indies. Nevertheless within a day or two after the Captain renewed his Charge, but then in a Majestic Fury she utterly forbid him the Fort. He taking little notice of her rage, goes to the General, and after some Discourse makes the same Proposal, and receives the same Answer. But then the Captain gave the Husband such a Bone to pick, that he would not give the Wife; Sir, said he, twice already have I demanded your Niece in Marriage, this is now the third time that I make the same demand; if you refuse me, you shall ask me four times before I accept of her: and so saying briskly left him. The General reflecting upon the Captain's words, went to his Wife and told her the Story, who guessing at the effects of a long Voyage Familiarity, call'd Madam Niece into examination: She not being us'd to Dissimulation confess'd the whole matter, and without any more to do was married to the Captain, to the great wonder of the whole City, till the birth of a Boy at the end of six moneths unfolded the Riddle. But this lying in was her ruin; for about five or six days after, the Mother and the Nurse being ill, the chief Chirurgeon of the Fort order'd them to take a little Cremor Tartar; and to that purpose sent a young man to the Master Chirurgeon of the Town, to send him two quantities of Cremor Tartar in two Papers. He being drinking with his Friends, sends a young Barber newly come from Holland, to put up the two quantities according to direction. But the Barber mistook the Glass, and put up Sublimate instead of Cremor Tartar. So the two Women taking their Doses, dissolved in two Silver Cups of fair Water, died in 24 hours after.

CHAP. IV.

Of General Vanderbroug, and of the Original of the City of Batavia

General Vanderbroug was of Anverse, and having studied in the Jesuits College, retained some tincture of Learning, which he endeavoured to improve as much as his business would give him leave. While he was General he caus'd the Alcoran to be translated out of Arabic into Dutch. He was also a man of courage, and several times expos'd himself to great hazards for the Service of the Company, as you shall see by the following Relation.

After the Hollanders had taken several Prizes from the Portuguezes by Sea, they wanted a place of Retreat, where they might repair their endamaged Ships, and repose after the toils of the Sea. At first they cast their eyes upon the Island of Java, in that place where the English had built a small Convenience for their Trade. There is a Road in that part, where Vessels ride securely all the year, into which a River discharges it self that will receive Shallops of good burthen, for above a thousand Paces. The Water of this River is most excellent; for being carried never so far to Sea, it never stinks, nor engenders Worms; which can only be said of the Thames and Ganges besides.

The Hollanders therefore came and lay upon the point of a River, over against the place where the English had their small House. They had with them then the greatest part of the Ships which they had in the Indies, laden with those great Bales of Cloth which come from Bengale and the Coast of Surat, so big that a dozen men can hardly manage them. These Bales they landed, and of them made a kind of Fortification, planting a good number of great Guns between them. For they never wanted great Guns ever since they traded alone to Japon, the onely Kingdom of the World abounding in Copper; from whence they brought prodigious quantities to Macao and Goa, where they cast their Artillery.

Thus

Thus the Hollanders thought that by Sea no body could endamage their small Fortification, made of Bales of cloth, which was defended by their Vessels which they had in the Road: But by Land they were afraid that the King of the Island, viz. either of Materan or Bantam, might disturb them. Observing therefore the Situation of the Island, which on that side was all covered with Woods, which reached on that side within a League of the Sea; and that where they ended, to the Shoar there was no other way but a Bank, which separated the Marsh from the River: So that the Hollanders the better to secure themselves against the two Kings, resolved to raise a Tower upon the Bank. In this Tower they planted several Culverins and small Pieces, cramm'd with artificial Wildfire, and every evening relieved their Guards. The King of Materan perceiving this, and believing that the Hollanders would not stop here, advanced a powerful Army to pull down the Tower. To which purpose he brought with him great Chains of Iron, and Cables made of the Coco Flax; believing that by the favour of the Night, having got his Chains and Ropes about the Tower, by the strength of his Men and Elephants he might easily pull it down. But having fail'd in his Enterprize, and for that the Hollanders Artillery kill'd him abundance of Men, he retreated with his Army. But it was not long before he return'd again with a more powerful Force by Land, and also a great Fleet of small Vessels to assist him by Sea. With these Forces he gave a furious Onset a second time, which the Hollanders with no less vigour sustained, and beat him off. But nothing discouraged with his loss, he resolved to give a third Onset, onely he staid some few days in expectation of more Forces.

In the mean while one of the most considerable Captains of his Army was accus'd to the King not to have done his Duty: though seasonably advertiz'd that the King was resolv'd to seize upon his person, and cut him to pieces. For you must know, that among the Javans when any person has merited Death, they tie the Offender all along upon a great piece of Timber, and the next Lord or great person that has a mind to try the goodness of his Scimitar, comes and cuts the Body into four pieces, the first stroak being made upon the Brest, the second upon the Pit of the Stomach, the third

third upon the lower part of the Belly. The four pieces if they be Men, are burnt; if Women, thrown to the Dogs, which they keep for that purpose. For the Javans never burn any person.

This Javaneſe Lord therefore knowing what he was to truſt to, made his eſcape to the Hollanders, and was kindly received by Vanderbroug. To ingratiate himſelf, he told the Dutch General all the King's Deſigns in reference to the carrying the place; where he would make his Onſet, and what number of men he had. This however did not ſufficiently cheer up the General, who knew his own weakneſs. So that the Javaneſe perceiving him ſtill penſive, I find (ſaid he) that thou art afraid of the King's ſtrength, and reaſon thou haſt, but be rul'd by me: Thou art not ignorant that the Javanners are rigid Obſervers of the Law of Mahomet, and that if any Uncleanneſs from a Chriſtian hand falls upon their Clothes, they ſling them away, and ſpend ſix whole days in waſhing themſelves, before they believe themſelves clean. Hear then, ſaid he; let all the Ordure and Dung of the People that are with thee be heaped in a place together, and made fluid in Pots for that purpoſe; and when they mount their Ladders, ſpare not for Showres of that Liquor, and I warrant ye they will retreat faſter than they came on. Farther continued he; I know that the points of their Arrows and Cric's are poiſon'd, and that this poiſon is ſo ſtrong, that whoever are wounded therewith die ſuddenly, unleſs they have recourſe to this onely Remedy; which is to preſerve their own Excrement, and to dry it to powder; and when they find themſelves wounded, to take a little of the powder, and drink it off in a ſmall Beer-glaſs of Water. The General obſerving what the Javan Lord had ſaid, when the Enemy mounted their Ladders, luſtily beſmear'd them with the Liquor, which he cauſ'd to be prepar'd againſt their coming; ſo that inſtead of gaining the tops of their Ladders, they made all the haſte they could down again; but being hindred by thoſe that follow'd them, they threw themſelves headlong to the ground; by which means ſeveral of them were maimed, and ſeveral kill'd outright. Thus the Army diſbanded in a moment, and the Emperour was the firſt that took his flight. Vanderbroug obſerving the diſorderly Retreat of the Enemy, took a ſmall Party with him, and pur-

su'd the flying Enemy, who being enclosed by those in the Fort, that sally'd out upon them, were miserably cut in pieces. But the General having left the greatest part of his men, and returning onely with a small and very inconsiderable Company, the Javanners who had hid themselves in the Marshes for fear, resum'd courage, and suddenly fell upon him in his return, and so encompass'd him on every side, that it was impossible for him to escape. However they defended themselves stoutly for a while, but being wounded with the Arrows and Cric's of the Indians, and not being provided of the forementioned Antidote, they died immediately. The General was taken alive, not so much as wounded; for as he told me afterwards himself, he found they had no desire to kill him. So soon as he was taken they carried him to the Emperour, who as soon as he saw him bid him not fear any thing, but told him withall, that it was his pleasure, that he should command his Men to quit the Fort and Tower, and be gone; otherwise that he would make both him, and all those that should fall into his Hands, perpetual Slaves. At the same time the Emperour with his principal Officers, and the General with a good Guard, came to the Foot of the Wall of the Tower, where the General in the Malay Language, laying before them his own misfortune, and the improbability of their holding out long, commanded them to quit the Fort, after they had imbarqued whatever they saw fitting, but onely 6 Pieces of small Canon, 200 Bullets, and 500 Quintals of Powder. The Emperour was overjoy'd to hear what the General said, and thought himself sure of the Fort and Tower. But then the General turning to the Emperour, told him, that none of his men understood Malay, and that therefore it would be convenient for him to repeat the same in Flemish. Which being granted, he spoke to the Souldiers in Flemish, and ordered them quite the contrary; that is to say, that they should not be Traitors to their Countrey, but hold out the place till death, not minding what became of him; and to that end, that they should bid the Infidels forthwith retire, or else they would immediately fire all their Guns upon them. The Emperour astonish'd at their Resolution retreats, and carries the General with him. Being thus retir'd, the General made him believe that he would find a means means to write to the Company, to give them an account of what had pass'd, and that he was confident they would give such order for an Accommodation, as should satisfy His Majesty, which satisfy'd the Emperour for that time. In the mean while the General found an opportunity to get into a small Barque, and to get to the Fort, where he was joyfully receiv'd. This Recital I had from his own mouth.

The General having done this and several other eminent Services for the Company, and acquitted himself with Reputation and a fair Estate, was desirous to return home, where the Prince of Orange, and several of the States had no less a desire to see him. Streight he took up his Habitation at the Hague, and for a good while liv'd splendidly, gave great Presents and Entertainments to the Prince, and several other Grandees of Holland, by which means he ran himself into so great an Expence, that he was forc'd to desire of the Company, that he might return into their Service.

One day the Prince of Orange asking him what Rarities he had brought out of the Indies, he call'd for five Silver Plates, and setting them upon the Table, drew out five little Bags out of his Pocket, and emptied a several Bag upon a several Plate; which surpriz'd not onely the Prince, but several others of the States then present, to see such a number of Diamonds and other Jewels of a vast value.

It was not without some difficulty that he was again entertain'd by the Company; but at length they sent him Admiral of two Ships to Batavia, where being arriv'd, the General and Consuls made him Admiral of the Fleet that was just bound for the Coast of Coromandel, Surat, and Persia.

Being return'd to Batavia, General Vandyme and the Council sent him to Malaca, which the Hollanders then besieg'd, and where they found a stouter resistance than they imagin'd. There in an assault upon the Town he received a slight Wound, of which he was quickly cur'd; but soon after he fell sick, and died before the Town was surrendered.

Of the Country about Cochin, and how the Holland General crown'd one of the Indian Princes.

ALL the Countrey about Cochin is planted for the most part with that sort of Tree which they call Cocos, the Fruit whereof produces that sort of Wine which the Inhabitants call Tary, whereof they make their Strong Water. They mingle this Wine with coarse black Sugar unrefin'd, together with the Bark of a Tree which bears nothing but Thorns. This Bark causes the Tary and Sugar to boil and ferment like new Wine. When the Tary and the Sugar have fermented for above seven or eight hours, they distill them in an Alembic, and make Strong Water, which is stronger or smaller, by how much the more often or seldomer it is distill'd.

Besides the Coverture of these Trees the whole Country is full of Cows; for they are all Idolaters in this Country, that onely worship their Cows for their Gods, feed upon their Milk, and eat nothing that has Life.

When you leave the Countries of these Princes, which they call Rajas, travelling toward the North East you enter into the Territories of the Raja of Kelouche, which are of a large extent. He and all his Subjects being Idolaters, unless it be about nine or ten thousand poor People call'd Christians of S. John, as being baptiz'd after the same manner that S. John baptiz'd the People in the Wilderness.

After the taking of Cochin, of which we have given a full Relation in our Indian Travels, General Vangous, who commanded at the Siege, became so haughty that he despis'd all the other Officers, as well Military as those that belonged to the Government and Justice of the City. However to recompence one of the Raja's by whose means he had taken the City, he perswaded him to quit the Name of Raja, and to assume the Title of King, that he might have the Honour to set the Crown upon his Head. To this end he made great inquiry through his whole Army for a Goldsmith, smith, and having found out one that undertook it, and caus'd him to make a Crown of massie Gold, that weigh'd near ten Marks, which I believe the Raja found more inconvenient and weighty upon his Head, than an old Muckender with three corners bound about his Head, which is the mark of the Raja's Sovereignty.

While they were making this Crown there were great preparations for the Ceremony : It was performed in a Garden near the Town, where was set a large Tent spread all over with painted Calicut. Within was a Throne erected with a Canopy of China Damask, and all the Steps to the Throne were cover'd with Persian Tapistry.

The day being come, the greatest part of the Army, Officers and Souldiers, went to fetch the Raja, who lay in his Hut a quarter of a League off; where they mounted him upon one of two Elephants which the General sent him, being attended likewise with two led Horses, and two Palanquins for more State. Being come to the place, he was clad in a Scarlet Robe with great Hanging Sleeves, and so brought in where Vangous was sitting upon his Throne, with a Sword and a Crown by him. The Raja being come to the Foot of the Throne, the Major of the Army took the Sword, deliver'd him by the General, and girt the Raja, who then ascending the Steps of the Throne, prostrated himself before the Holland General while he put the Crown upon his Head. Then the new King riseth up, and lays his Hand upon the Head of a Cow that stood near the Throne. Which done, kneeling with his Hands clasp'd, and lifted toward the Head of the same Cow, he took his Oath to be true and faithful to the Company, and to embrace their Interests. On the other side the General promis'd him on the behalf of the Company, that they should assist him when he should have occasion against his Enemies. Which Solemnities being very gravely perform'd, the Musquetiers gave three Volleys, and the new King was conducted back to his Hut with the same Pomp that he was brought. Thus you see the Pride of a Pepper Merchant, to make Kings and domineer over Crowns.

One other famous Act of Vangous must not be forgotten. You must know, that at the taking of Cochin the Jesuits had in that City one of the fairest Libraries in all Asia, as well for the great quantity of Books sent them out of Europe, as for several rare Manuscripts in the Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabic, Persian, Indian, Chinese, and other Oriental Languages. For in all the Conquests of the Portugals, their first care was to summon all the Learned People of the several Nations, and to get all their Books into their hands. During that little time which the Jesuits staid in Æthiopia they had copied out all the good Books that came to their knowledge, and sent all those Books to Cochin. They had staid longer in Æthiopia, had it not been for the Jealousie of the Patriarchs, and their Bishops, which are very numerous; so that if there be two men in one Village that belong to one Church, the chiefest calls himself Bishop. At their Ceremonies of Baptism when they name the Holy Ghost, they apply a hot Iron to the neck of the Infant, saying that the Holy Ghost descended upon the Apostles in the shape of Fiery Tongues. The Patriarchs and Bishops were jealous of the Jesuits, finding that they had insinuated themselves into the favour of the King and Grandees of the Court. Which so enraged the Æthiopi-ans, that they caus'd the People to mutiny, preaching that the King was about to alter the Religion of the Country, and to draw along with him several of the Lords. And the Fury of the People grew to that height, that whatever the King could do or say, he could not appease their Fury: So that they put him in prison, and elected his Brother in his place. The cause of this disorder was laid upon the Jesuits, and was the reason that they were expell'd the Kingdom; neither had they scap'd so, but that they were afraid of the Governour of Mozambique, and the Portugals that inhabit all along the Coast of Africa. But to tell ye what became of this Library, General Vangous made no conscience to expose it to the ignorance of his Souldiers, so that I have seen the Souldiers and Seamen tear several of those beautiful Volumes to light their Tobacco.

*Of the Sieur Hollebrand Glins, President of the

WHen the Ships come to Ormuz, it is a great prejudice for the Goods to lie out of doors. For such is the extremity of the Heat in that part, that if the Spices, especially the Cloves, be not carried to the Water-side every foot, and there laid to steep in the Water for four and twenty hours, they would turn to a mere powder.

Sugar is brought thither in great Wooden Chests, but if there be the least Cleft for a Fly or an Emmet to get in, in a small time the Chest will be half emptied.

As for Camphire, which is brought from Borneo in Pipes, if it lie a little too long in that warm Air, it will exhale above half away.

To remedy these Inconveniences Sieur Hollebrand resolved to build a bigger Warehouse. Among the rest of the Workmen that were employed in this Building was a Gunsmith, who came in the interim in a Ship from Batavia. This poor Fellow was employed to make Locks for the Warehouse; for in those Parts they have no other Keys, or Locks either, than what are made of Wood: So that it was a Crime for him to be found idle at any time. And therefore the President finding him one Sunday in the Afternoon drinking with two of his Companions that came from the Ship to see him, gave the Fellow half a dozen good Licks with his Cane, and would have given him more, but that the Smith being a sturdy Fellow, and feeling the Blows smart, wrested the Stick out of the President's Hands, and flung it out of the Window. For which the President, upon pretence that the Fellow had struck him four Blows, which was untrue, as I my self being there could witness, sent him laden with Chains to the Ship, where he would have tried him for his Life, in a full Court of the Merchants of the Factory: but they refusing him, for very madness he took two

two Notaries, that he had a power over, went to the Ship alone, made the Officers of the Ship, and condemn'd the Fellow to be hang'd. And he had certainly been executed but for me and some other of my Countrymen, (for the Fellow was of Geneva) that threatned the President out of his design. Yet he caus'd him to be drubb'd Naked at the Main Mast after that inhuman manner, that he lost the use of one of his Arms. This the Genevese could never forget, and therefore sought all opportunities to kill him; to which purpose he put himself in the same Ship with Hollebrand when he returned for Holland. But coming to the Cape of Good Hope, and being sent ashoar in the Shallop for Provisions, the Shallop was overset in a stormy Sea, and Hollebrand's Life thereby secur'd.

But before we leave Ormus, where Hollebrand was building his Warehouse that caus'd all this mischief, let us take notice of this by the way, that there is no abiding at Ormus till April, lest you pay for your stay with some Malignant Fever, that may hold a man as long as he lives; or if he be cur'd by chance, yet will the White of his Eyes be more yellow than Saffron. This same sort of Fever seizes our Europeans in the Port of Alexandretta in Syria, and in the Islands where the Hollanders lade their Cloves, Nutmegs, and Mace.

By the way observe, that there is a particular sort of Nutmeg which the Hollanders call Maneque, and we the Male Nutmeg, as long again and a little bigger than the ordinary Nutmeg; and this sort they never carry into Europe, because they sell it to better profit in Persia and the Indies. This I shall also further add, that the ordinary Nutmeg condited, fuddles more than the strongest Wine, eating but onely one either at the beginning or ending of the Meal.

IC H A. P. A VII.

Touching the Islands of the Prince.

THE Fort of Batavia has four fair Bastions, and is well built but upon an ill Foundation; those Bastions being plainly observ'd to sink, and requiring Reparation from time to time. For the perfecting of which Work the Hollanders wanted Slaves: whereupon a Consultation was had where to get Slaves. To which Answer was made, that there was no better place than the Prince's Islands. Which being concluded, the General of Batavia dispatch'd away three the biggest Ships belonging to Batavia. These Ships visited every one of these Islands, feigning that they came from Holland and wanted Refreshment. So soon as the Inhabitants discover'd the Vessels, they flock'd to the Shoar Men, Women, and Children, as they wont to do, bringing along with them the best of their Provision, as Coca Wine, Nuts, and other Fruits of the growth of the Islands. Happy were they that could first get aboard, for they always get more by the Mariners and Souldiers, than by those that go ashoar to trade. Now so soon as they were ashoar, they gave them Strong Water to drink till they were drunk, and when the Masters of the Ships saw them in that condition, they immediately sent a good number of their men well armed ashoar, who bound them that were upon the Sand to truck for their goods, and carried them away to their Ships, killing all those that made any resistance. But they did them little service; for finding themselves so inhumanly us'd as the Hollanders use their Slaves, they took a resolution to eat nothing, and to starve themselves to death, rather than to be forc'd to labour and be beaten every day.

C H A P. VIII.

How the Hollanders sent to declare War against the Persians, and of the ill Success of their Fleet.

Much about the same time Charles Constant was sent by the Company with a Fleet of seven great Ships, to declare War against the Persians, in case they would not comply with the Dutch in reference to their Silk Trade and their Customs. Being arriv'd at Ormus he left the Fleet there, and hasten'd to Ispahan, and from thence to Cashin, where then the King was. But his Embassie had not that effect as he expected: For he thought that the King would have been frighted at the noise of a Fleet of seven great Ships that lay at Ormus, but he was mistaken. For the Persian knew he need not send any Force against the said Fleet, in regard it would be ruin'd without: It being impossible for our Europeans to stay at Ormus in the heat of Summer, as well by reason of the Heat, as for want of Water; for there is no good Water at Ormus, nor upon any part of the Coast of Persia, but what is kept in Cisterns, and that full of Worms. 'Tis true, that upon the Coast of Arabia there are Wells of good Water, but when the Arabians discover any Ships upon the Coast, they come down all in Arms to defend their Wells; for it is their profit to sell their Water, and that at a very dear rate, to those that are in necessity.

Now the King and Council not being ignorant, that the longer the Fleet lay at Ormus, the worse would be its condition, would not give the Commander his first Audience in two moneths. During which time there died above half the Men; for from six a clock in the morning till four in the afternoon, if any of the Seamen went to take a little Air upon the Deck, he presently fell down dead. The Admiral was to blame not to make provision of Water being bound for such a place as Ormus.

The Commander Constant did not take the right course to effect his business, by publishing what he intended to present the Ministers of State withall. For the Lords of Persia never take any Presents themselves, for fear it should come to the King's Ear. But there is a private Bill sent to the Party for whom it is intended, and he sends whom he thinks fit to receive it. Had he so done, and doubled his Sum of 5000 Venetian Ducats, perhaps the Athemadoulet might have us'd him more kindly, especially for so long time as that King had. For whatever a Predecessor does, a Successor changes many things. So that if the deceased King have given any House or Land to any person, it must be confirmed by the succeeding King in his first Year, or else the Gift returns to the King. It is the same thing if any person builds a House upon the King's Demesns: which has been a great inconvenience to the Austin Friars and bare-foot Carmelites, because their Houses are built upon the Lands which Cha Abbas gave them of the Royal Demesns. So that every time a new King ascends the Throne, they are forc'd to make the Athemadoulet new Presents, sometimes to the Value of the Land: for it is a rare thing to find a prime Minister that is a Friend to the Christians. But the Jesuits and Capuchins, who came after them, provided better for themselves, each of those Orders having bought the Ground upon which their Houses are built.

The Commander seeing that he could not compass his Design, and that the Athemadoulet would abate nothing of the forty four Tomans which he demanded, went to the Divanbegai and told him, that buying the same Goods of particular persons, they might be had for thirty two, or at most for thirty three Tomans. To which the Divanbegai answered him, That all those particular persons paid the King Custom, and Convoy upon the Road, the Custom alone amounting to Eighteen per cent. which the Hollanders did not pay: and that there was not a Year wherein they did not bring in Goods to the Value of 30000 Tomans; and that if account should be taken of the Silks which they carried away, and of the Goods which they brought in, the Athemadoulet ought to make them pay near 50000 Tomans for Duties. The Commander ill satisfied with this Answer went to his Lodging, and without asking the Advice of the Merchants that were with him, or of his Frenchman, who better understood the Practice of the Court, or without taking his leave of the King, return'd privately to Ispahan, intending for Bander where the Fleet lay. The Athemadoulet being advertiz'd of his sudden departure, was very much offend- ed; so much the more because at the Commanders first Ar- rival he had done him great Civilities, even to the furnish- ing his Lodgings after the European manner, with a Bed, Stools, and Tables. Thereupon he gave notice thereof to the King, who when he heard of it utter'd these words, Has any one given him any distaste, or is he turn'd Fool? He shall be glad to come back again.

Being come to Ispahan, to the great wonder of the Franks, who heard nothing of his taking leave of the King, he be- gan to make up his Pack, intending for Gomrom, in case the King did not send for him again; which he did, 'tis true, but not with those Compliments which he expected; for he flatter'd himself that the King would have petition'd him to return. The King sent for him indeed, but his Compliment was not very pleasing; for the person that brought the Message told him, That it was the King's pleasure he should speedily return, and if he would not go willingly he had order to carry him by force. But notwithstanding the King's Command and the Counsel of his Friends, he set out from Ispahan for Bander, according to his first intent. We accom- panied him some part of his way, and being just ready to take our leaves, we saw a Persian Gentile and well mount- ed, (he was a Captain of an hundred men) who calling the Interpreter to him, Go (said he) and tell thy President, that he must return to his Lodging, and to morrow make haste to the King, according to the Order he has already recei- ved: and with that he rode away full speed. The Inter- preter told the Commander what the Captain said; but not- withstanding all this the Commander being a person of a hot and obstinate humour, continued his way. Neither the Merchants of Zulpha, nor any of the Persian or Armenian Servants would follow him, fearing the Bastinado, and be- lieving he was secure enough; as it happen'd: for he had not rode far, before three Captains with their Bows and Ar- rows in their hands bolted out upon him, one of which ri- ding up directly to the Commander, Art thou (said he) the onely person that ever set foot in this Empire, that refusest to obey the Companion of the Sun, whom so great a part of the World obeys? At the same time came up fifty stout Horsemen, and one of them who commanded them made at Mr. Constant with his Mace. Then the Admiral was forc'd to lower his Sails and return back, forc'd to receive an Affront which he might have avoided. When he was come to his Lodging, the Persian Officer without alighting call'd the Interpreter, and bid him go forwarn the Commander in the Name of the King, that neither he nor any of the Hollanders presumed to stir out of their Houses till further order; for that if any of them were seen abroad, they should be taught to obey the King's Commands. Thus the Hollanders having been coop'd up nine days, word was brought the Commander he might return to Cusbin, where he found that all his Rodomontado's signified nothing, but that he must comply with the Athemadoulet.

C H A P. IX.

Of the Severity of the Holland Commanders in the Indies.

General Speck, before he came to his Imployment, had a Daughter by a Woman which he kept onely as his Mistress, not as his Wife. After his time was out he returned into Holland, and not being willing to carry his Daughter along with him, knowing that she would go off better at Batavia than in Holland, left her to the care of General Com, who succeeded him in his charge. The Girl was fair and left rich, so that her Father was no sooner gone, but she had many Suitors that courted her, without any consideration of her Birth, among all which there was none that she fancied, like one that was a Superior Merchant of the Fort, for whom she had a particular esteem. Neither did she believe but that General Com would have given his consent upon the first request, knowing the young man to be of a good Family. Nevertheless they were both deceiv'd; for being ask'd, he utterly denied to yield to any such matter. However, the young Man and the Maid continued their Fidelity to each other, and that with such a close respect, that at length the Virgin's Belly began to swell. Whereupon she made one of the Ladies of the City acquainted how the case stood, as also of her Council, believing that the General upon notice how Affairs went, would marry her to keep all things private. But so soon as the Lady had revealed the Myſtery, he was so far from answering their expectation, that he threw the young Man laden with Fetters into prison, and shut up the young Woman close Prisoner in her Chamber. Next day he call'd a Council, declar'd to them the Matter of Fact, and gave his Opinion, that the young man deserv'd to lose his Head, and that the Maid should be whipp'd. The Council were of a contrary Judgment, and advis'd him to reconcile the Mischance by a Marriage. But notwithstanding all their persuasions the General resolv'd to have his own humour, the next day privately sent for the Executioner, and causing the young Man and the Maid to be brought into his Hall, commanded the Man's Head to be forthwith struck off, and the Virgin to be whipp'd though big with Child.

The Sieur Goyre commanded the Holland Fleet that was sent to the Manilles, he landed all his Souldiers, and most of his Mariners. When they began to march, he commanded that not a man should stir out of his Rank upon pain of death. It happen'd that a young Souldier, who was troubled with the Bloody Flux, stept a little aside to ease Nature, which the said Commander perceiving, caus'd him to be apprehended and bound, and calling a Council of War would have had him hang'd; and when the Officers refus'd to give Sentence against one that had committed no offence, he caused seven or eight Blacks of the Low Countries to hang him up upon a Tree. But the Sieur Dirk Hogel, Lieutenant General, marching by in the nick of time, and seeing the poor Fellow in that condition, presently order'd him to be cut down, and so sav'd the poor Fellow's Life; who returning into Holland, and making his Complaint to the Company, the Directors wrote smartly to the General and Council at Batavia about the business; who upon Examination of the matter, in regard the Lad was sent by the Directors of the Orphans House at Amsterdam, condemned the Sieur Goyre to pay four thousand Crowns to the Orphans House, and three hundred Crowns yearly to the poor Souldier.

C H A P. X.

Touching the Women.

Ofttimes when Women think that their Amours are most secret, they are by some strange and unexpected accident odly discover'd. While I was at Batavia, the Secretary of the Hospital, as handsom a person as any was in the City, had a Wife that pass'd for a Batavian Beauty, neither indeed was she despicable. This Couple had been seven years married without any Children; so that the Woman despairing of her Husband's Abilities, and to know where the fault lay, resolved to bestow her Favours upon one of her Slaves, who was well shap'd but very black; chusing rather a private Familiarity with him, than with any young Hollander, whose frequent Visits might breed suspicion. It seems the fault did not lie in her, for her Sable Gallant had so improv'd his Talent, that in a short time she found the effects of Change. In short, the Womans Belly swell'd, and her Husband thinking his time had been come, began to boast of his Manhood, and great Joy there was among the Friends of the Woman upon the hopes of Issue. Great Provisions were made against the Lying in, and the General himself made choice of for Godfather. But when the good hour was come, and the Woman delivered, their Joy was turned into Mourning, for the Child prov'd one of the sooty Off-spring of the Sun-burnt race, a perfect Black. The Husband and Mother of the Woman blush'd as red for shame as the Child was black, and the Gossips hung down their heads like Bulrushes: nay the Husband was so transported with fury, that he could not hide his resolution to murder his Wife, for bringing such a piece of live Charcole into the world. But he was prevented, and secur'd in the Fort by the General, till by the intermission of Friends, who wisely laid before him the original cause of his Wifes

Trans

Transgression, they were at length made Friends, and the Slave for having shew'd himself a Man, was condemn'd to tug at the Oars in the Galleys that go to fetch Stone for the use of the City.

Now as a White Woman may bring forth a Black, so sometimes a Black may be deliver'd of a White Child. For at Bacaim a Cafer's Wife, as black as himself, was deliver'd of a white Child. The Cafer seeing his Child white, would have immediately fallen upon his Wife and strangled her, had not the good women that assisted at her Labour prevented him, and one of those Gossips was so cunning as to run to the Jesuits House, who are well respected by those Blacks, to desire Father Thomas de Bare, who had a long time been Rector at Agra, to come to the Cafer's House. Presently the Father came with another of the Fraternity, and finding the Cafer stamping and staring almost out of his wits, and in open hostility without all reason, to appease his fury ask'd him whether he kept any Hens, and whether he had any that were black. The Cafer answer'd that he did keep Hens, and that he had likewise black Hens. Presently the Father order'd one to be brought him; and then holding it in both his hands before the good Women, Does this Hen (said he to the Cafer) lay thee any Eggs? Yes, replied the Cafer. Of what colour are they, said the Father? White, answer'd the Cafer. Well then, said the Father, thou art worse than thy silly Creature, and hast far less reason; for if this Hen which is black lay thee white Eggs, why may not thy Wife which is black bring thee a white Child? This Comparison so wrought upon the Cafer, who was no Disputant, that he embrac'd his Wife, kiss'd his Child, and all was well again. Though for all the Jesuit's Comparison it was believ'd that some Portugal Souldier had quarter'd with his Wife, which was the reason of that more than usual Production.

To conclude, there was a certain woman, the wife of one of the Counsellors of Batavia, who had both kindness and affection for a Merchant of the Fort, who was both young and handsom. And it is the Custom in that Country to be not onely kind but free, she had for several years so well supplied his wants, that he was Company for the best. It happen'd that this Counsellor was sent abroad upon on some Negotiation, and staid longer than he thought he should have done. For this reason Money grew short with the Lady; so that her Gallant coming for a Supply, and she not having ready money to answer his Expectations, she gave him a Gold Chain worth 400 Crowns to pawn for his present Necessities till she could redeem it. But this Fatal Chain was the dissolution of all their former Love: For the young Gentleman being streighten'd for Money, and finding no person that would lend him so much Money as he wanted upon it, very fairly goes and offers it to a Goldsmith to sell. While this unfortunate Lover was driving his Bargain in the Shop, who in the name of ill luck should come by but one of his Mistresses Slaves, and spying the Chain in his hand, runs and tells her Patroness how she had seen her Gallant imploy'd. Who surpriz'd that her Gallant should go about to sell the Chain, when he had onely promis'd to pawn it in private and sure hands; now (quoth she) all will out, there will be the Devil upon Dun when my Husband comes home; and I forsooth that have liv'd credibly thus long, must be the sport of my Neighbours and the talk of the Town. This produc'd a Duel between Love and Interest, wherein Interest getting the victory, away she immediately sends to all the Goldsmiths, to give them notice that she had been robb'd of a Gold Chain, desiring them to apprehend the Party that brought it. She also gave the same notice to the chief of the Chineses, and desir'd the Advocate Fiscal to make a public Search. Well, by these means the Chain was quickly found, and the Merchant whatever he could say for himself was apprehended and put in prison; soon after he was condemned for a Thief, and sentenced to row all his life in the Stone Galley, which is the Galley that fetches Stones for the use of Batavia. But happy for him, General Vanderlin's Lady falling into a hard Labour before the time of Execution, and desiring his Pardon at such a solemn Juncture, easily obtain'd it, seasonably recovering him from the Misfortunes of Folly and Necessity.

Author's Design.

I Question not but that several Relations of the Grand Seigneur's Seraglio have been publish'd ; but I am to acknowledge withal that I have not had the leisure to read any one of them. I have travell'd six several times, by Land, into the East, and by different Roads, during the space of Forty Years ; and most persons know, that my Employments were such, as would not allow me much time for the reading of Books. But when my Affairs afforded me any remission, I wholly employ'd those spare hours, in the collection of things the most worthy to be remark'd, whether the Scene lay in Turkey, or in Persia, or in the Indies, on this, or the other side of the River Ganges, or in the Diamond-Mines, which are in the Territories of divers Princes. While I am busied in putting into order those Memories, which I conceive my self oblig'd to gratify the Publick withal, I make it a Present of this Relation of the Seraglio, attended with some Observations sufficiently remarkable, which, haply, will not be unpleasant.

The Ottoman Court, which makes so much noise in the World, has not, to my thinking, been yet sufficiently well known, if I may judge of it, by what I have seen thereof myself, and have heard from several Persons. I do here communicate a faithful and ample description thereof : which I have extracted, as well out of what I had observ'd myself, in the several Voyages I made to Constantinople, as out of the informations I receiv'd from two intelligent Persons, who had spent many years in the Seraglio, in very considerable Employments. One of whom was a Sicilian, advanc'd to the Charge of Chas-nadar-bachi, or chief Officer belonging to the Treasury ; and after Five and Fifty years Service in the Seraglio, was, for some slight miscarriage committed by him, banish'd to a place near Bursa, in Natalia, from whence he made his escape into the Indies. The other, a Parisian-born, named De Vienne, had been one of the Pages of the Treasury. In his Return from the Jubilee at Rome, in the Year M.DC.L. being aboard a Brigantine bound from Civita Vecchia to Marseilles, he was taken by the Pyrates of Tripoli, and the Bassa finding that young Lad well shap'd, and looking like one that promis'd much, sent him, as a Present, to the Grand Seigneur. He was also pack'd away out of the Seraglio, after Fifteen Years Service, only upon this score, that there was some discovery made, of his holding a secret correspondence with the disgrac'd Sicilian, who had heretofore shewn him much kindness, and indeed it was by his credit that the Parisian was first advanc'd to the Chamber of the Treasury.

From those two men, who were in a fair capacity to make exact Observations of things, have I extracted the better part of this Relation. Though they had been forc'd to embrace the erroneous perswasion of Mahomet, yet were there some Relicks of the good sentiments of Christianity: And whereas there was not the least hope of recovering the honours, wherein they pride themselves who are exalted to Charges in the Seraglio, it is not to be imagin'd, that they could have any design to disguise things to me. They themselves thought it a certain pleasure to descend to a greater familiarity of Discourse, and to specify even the least circumstances: but I am to discover withal, that having had their education amongst the Turks, and learnt of them, to love Money, it must have been so much the greater charge to me, to give them content. I have kept them for a considerable space of time, at my own charge, and that in several places, one at Ispahan in Persia, and the other in the Indies, where they had made their residences, and the Memoires which they supply'd me withal were perfectly concordant.

To the Instructions, which I made a shift to get from those two men, and to what discoveries I may have made my self, of the present state of the Grand Seigneur's Palace, I shall add some necessary Observations of the Manners and Customes of several Provinces of the Ottoman Empire, slightly passing over those things, which, in all probability, are generally known. But that the Reader may with greater ease comprehend the matters I treat of, and that the discourse may not be interrupted, by the necessary explication of the several names of Charges and Dignities, I have thought it fit, in the first place, to give a short List of them, after which shall follow another, of the different Species of Money, which are current all over the Turkish Empire.

The Origine of the Grandees of the Port.

They who are advanc'd to Charges, whether it be in the Seraglio, or in the Empire (excepting only the Eunuchs, of whom I shall give an account anon) are generally rais'd out of the Children taken in War, or sent by way of Presents, by the Bassa's, or out of the Tributary Children, who, about nine or ten years of Age, are taken out of their Mothers arms, through all the Provinces subdu'd by the Ottoman Princes. They are all to be of Christian Parents; and counting only the Slaves taken from the Enemy, we find the Registers of the Custom-house of Constantinople alone, that, of both Sexes, there are brought thither every year near twenty thousand. The Inhabitants of the lesser Tartary, who make continual Incurfions into all the Countries, that are in hostility against the Ottoman Empire, send up vast numbers of them, and the Grand Signor having the choice of all those young Children, the best shap'd, and such as have the most promising looks, are distributed into several Seraglio's, to be there instructed in the Law of Mahomet, and all sorts of Exercises. And afterwards, out of the choice or cullings of these last is the Seraglio of Constantinople replenish'd; and they are to be distinguish'd into two Orders. The first and the most eminent is that of the Ichoglans, design'd for the great Charges and Dignities of the Empire: The second, that of the Azamoglans, employ'd in such Offices as require only strength of body. The Ichoglans are those, in whom, besides the accomplishments of the Body, they discover also a noble Genius, fit for a high Education, and such as may render them capable of serving their Prince, some time or other.

The severe Discipline of the Seraglio.

These are accordingly instructed with great care, and educated with the observance of a most severe Discipline. They pass through four several Chambers, called Oda's, which are as it were four Forms, where they learn, in order, whatever is convenient for young persons, who are to be continually about a great Prince, and as it were his Pages or Gentlemen. If they commit the least fault, they are severely chastis'd, and there is a great stock of patience requisite, for any one to be advanc'd to the fourth Oda, which when they have attain'd, they begin to take a little breath. But the hopes of being exalted to the greatest Honours, and the most eminent Dignities, makes them endure the barbarous treatments of the Eunuchs, who are appointed to be their Masters, and are very liberal of the Bastinado to them. I shall give an account elsewhere of the manner of their Education, and of those four Oda's, or Chambers, where they learn those things, whereby they are qualify'd for the Charges, for which the Grand Signor designs them. Though it be appointed by the received Custom of the Empire, that those Children should be all descended from Christian Parents, of the best extraction, and the best shap'd that can be found; yet the Capt-Aga, or Grand Master of the Seraglio, the Principal of the white Eunuchs, who hath the chief Command over the Ichoglans, sticks not to admit into their number some natural Turks, such as may be recommendable, upon the score of their good qualities and endowments: But that happens very seldom, and that not without the particular permission of the Prince, who would rather have all those Children to be Renegado-Christians.

And

And this is the Origine of the Great Persons belonging to the Grand Seignor, and the Port. They are all Slaves, and not having any knowledge of their Parents, or Relations, they wholly apply their Affections to the Service of their Prince, who has been pleas'd to advance them to such high Fortunes.

The Bassa's therefore are taken out of the Order of the Ichoglans, and the name of Bassa, or Basha, is only a Title of Honour and Dignity, common to all the Grandees of the Port, who are distinguishable, according to the difference of their Charges. The four Principal are these. The Vizir-Azem, or Grand Vizir, the Caimacan, the Bassa of the Sea, and the Aga of the Janizaries. The Authority of these four Bassa's is so great, that sometimes they deprive their Sovereign of the Crown, and bestow it on whom they please; as it has happen'd, in our Age, to two Emperours immediately succeeding one the other, Mustapha and Osman, of whom the later dy'd in Prison, by the infamous hand of a common Executioner. But on the other side, if these Bassa's know not how to take their measures rightly, they lose their heads upon the least miscarriage, the Grand Seignor seizing to himself all their Estates at their death, and taking their Children into the Seraglio. Nay, these last are so far from succeeding their Fathers, either as to wealth or employments, even though it were the Son of a Grand Vizir, or of a Sister of the Emperour himself, that the highest advancement they are admitted to, is to be made Captains of Gallies; the policy of the Turks not permitting, that in any one House there should be a transference of power from Father to Son, that so they may be prevented from taking any occasions to disturb the State. It may be seen by this account of them, that the fortune of the Bassa's, which for a time seems so splendid, is but a tottering fortune, upon which neither the Son, nor the Father himself, what repute soever he may be in, can make any sure reliance.

The Authority of the four Principal Bassa's, of dangerous consequence to the Grand Seignor, and how he can take it off.

The Bassa's, who have the denomination of Vizirs, carry three Banners or Standards, at the top of which there is a Horse-tayl fasten'd, put into what colour they please themselves, green only excepted, though they are permitted to paint the Staff, to which the Standard is fasten'd, with that colour. The Origine of this Custom was thus, according to the Story which the Turks relate of it. Having one day given Battel to the Christians, their Standard was taken in the heat of the Engagement, and the General of the Turks perceiving that the loss of the Standard was a discouragement to the Souldiers, who were beginning to take their flight, he with a Cymitar cut off a Horse's tayl, and fasten'd it to the top of a Half Pike, and advanc'd it on high, crying out, Here is the Grand Standard, let him who loves me follow me. Immediately the Turks re-assum'd Courage, and having rally'd, renew'd the Charge, and gain'd the Victory. The Officers who are about the Persons of the Bassa's, have also their Standards, but they are not allow'd to add thereto one of those tayls, and it is to be observ'd, that the Bassa's, who are not Vizirs, can carry but two of them; as the Bey's, who are inferiour to the Bassa's, and Governours of lesser Provinces, carry but one of them. When the Grand Seignor goes into the Country, there are seven Standards carry'd, in regard that according to the Turks, the world is divided into seven parts, or seven Climats whereof the Grand Seignor is Master, if taken according to its breadth, and 'tis for that reason that in their Language, they give him the Title of Master of all Kings. This is grounded upon what Mahomet said, That he, who after his death, should be Master of those Territories, where his Sepulchre were found, should assume the Title of Master or Chief of all the Kings upon Earth. They add, that there are but three Empires, which are, those of Constantinople, Babylon and Trebizond. And 'tis for that reason, that the Grand Seignor wears three plumes of black Heron-tops in his Turbant. Take Notice by the way, that they are only the Herons of Candia which have their tops perfectly black, the Herons of all other Countries having them, either white, or of a mixt Colour. And because there must be a considerable quantity of them to make up a plume, it must accordingly be of a very great value, which possibly has occasion'd its being cut of use in Europe: For as to all the Princes of Asia, they have still a great esteem for the Heron-tops; but they must not have the least defect, and if the points of them be ever so little broken, there is no account made of them, as being things of very little value. By those three Heron-tops upon the Grand Seignor's Turbant, it is known that the Grand Vizier is in the Army; inasmuch as at that time, he wears but two of them, and the thing is worthy our Observation. When the Army is to march, the Grand Seigneur gives Order for the drawing up those Troops which are at Constantinople, and the parts adjacent, and having the Grand Vizir near him, he presents him to them for their General. The Souldiers, at that time, say not a word, nor do they make the ordinary salute, till after the Grand Seigneur has caus'd one plume of the Heron-tops to be taken out of his Turbant, and to be put upon that of the Grand Vizir; and upon that Ceremony, the whole Army salutes him, and acknowledge him for their General, and from that very time are to receive their Pay from him.

Observations upon the Standards.

Having spoken of the Bassas in general, it is requisite I should give some Idea of those who are advanc'd to the principal Charges of the Empire, and I shall bring into that List, the Grand Vizir, accompany'd by six others, who have the quality of Vizirs, the Caimacan, the Bassa of the Sea, and the Aga of the Janizaries; after whom I shall come down to the Beglerbeys, and to the Sangiacbeys, and to the Bossangi-bachi, who has one of the most eminent Charges of the Port.

The Honours and Disadvantages attending the Charge of Grand Vizir.

The Vizir-Azem, or Grand Vizir, is the Lieutenant-General of the Empire, and of the Armies, the principal Person of the Council, and he who, under the Grand Seigneur's Orders, has the absolute disposal of all Affairs, relating to the State, or to the War, having in his custody the Imperial Seal. He is attended by, and has assistant to him, in the Divan, six other Vizirs, whom they call Vizirs of the bench, and who are properly Counsellors of State, but yet such as have not any deliberative voice, and come not into the Divan, but only to be consulted upon some point of Law, wherein they are well skill'd, without intermeddling with the government of the State; or concerning themselves in any Affair, unless their advice be requir'd. There are also five Beglerbeys, on whom the Grand Seigneur bestows the qualification of Vizirs, and are possess'd of the greatest and wealthiest Governments of the Empire, to wit, the Bassas of Babylon, Cairo, Buda, Natolia and Romania. The three former, who are the three principal, had heretofore the privilege (exclusively to all the other Bassas) of having carried before them (in the same manner as the Grand Vizir had) the three Horse-tails, of which I have related the Story. But at the present, that privilege extends to the two other Bassas of Natolia and Romania, and they are all five equal, as to that point.

I am now to return to the Grand Vizir, who has a magnificent Court, answerable to the greatness of the Master, whom he serves, and there are in his house above two thousand Domesticks. Though he lyes expos'd, as well as the other Bassas, to the indignation of the Prince, and forc'd to send him his Head, when he requires it; yet does the Grand Seigneur, in the Affairs of greatest importance, and such as concern the State, comply much with the Sentiments of his Grand Vizir, and his Propositions in Council are as so many definitive Sentences. 'Tis that which renders his Power so absolute, that in all the Empires and Kingdoms of the World, there is not any chief Minister of State whose Authority can be parallel'd to that of the Grand Vizir. Whoever comes to make him a Visit, he rises not out of his Chair, either to give him a reception, or to conduct him out again, unless it be the Musli, who is the principal Person relating to the Law (of Mahomet) upon whose access, the Grand Seigneur himself rises from his Throne. But this particularly worth our observation, That as it belongs only to the Grand Vizir, to propose all Affairs of importance, so does it concern him to be very careful, not to advance any thing that may be displeasing to the Grand Seigneur; for if it should so happen, he gives immediate Order for the strangling of him, without making him any answer at all, upon this Maxime of the Ottoman Court, that there must not be any thing propos'd to the Prince, which may give him any cause of dissatisfaction.

A Priviledge
particular to
the Caimacan.

The Caimacan is the Captain, and Governour of the City of Constantinople, Lieutenant to the Grand Vizir, yet so as not to have any Authority, but only in his absence; And then he performs all the functions of that important Charge; he has the absolute Command and gives Audience to Ambassadors. He is not subject, as the other Bassas are, to that rigorous necessity of resigning his Head; upon this account, that if he does any thing, which may be displeasing to the Grand Seigneur, he lays the blame thereof upon the Grand Vizir, from whom he receives his Orders.

The Bassa of the Sea is the Admiral, and Captain-General of the Naval Forces. The Beys, Governours of the Maritime Provinces, and such as are oblig'd to maintain the Grand Seigneur's Gallies in good order, are to obey the Commands they receive from him, and to go to Sea upon the first advertisement they receive to that purpose. The

The Janizary-Aga, whom the Turks call Yengeri-Agasi, is the Colonel-General of the Janizaries. The Charge is very considerable, inasmuch as the Turkish Infantry, at this time, does for the most part pass under the name of Janizaries, though such as are really Janizaries, who derive their Institution from Ottoman the First, and their great Privileges from Anurath the Third, do not at this day amount to a Body of above five and twenty thousand Men. They have excellent Regulations amongst themselves, and are distributed into several Chambers, in the spacious Lodgings, whereof they are possess'd; whether it be at Constantinople, or in other places. The order observ'd there is to excellent in all things, and so exactly maintain'd, that they live more like Religious Persons, than Souldiers; and though they are not forbidden to marry, yet it is very seldom that they do it. The great Privileges which they enjoy all over the Empire, wherein they are so highly respected, induce abundance of Persons, meerly in order to their exemption from the paying of Taxes, and their being discharg'd from publick Duties, to prevail with the Officers, by Money, to protect them, and make them pass for Janizaries. But they receive no Pay from the Prince, and all their advantage is restrain'd to the enjoyment of those Privileges, which indeed are great enough. It is by this intermixture of the real Janizaries, with those who are admitted by corruption, that the number of them amounts at this day to above a hundred thousand; and yet not accounting any but such as are effectively Janizaries, their Body has sometimes been so dreadful, as that they have unthron'd the Ottoman Monarchs, and chang'd the whole face of the Empire of a sudden.

The number of the real Janizaries.

The Power of their Aga is very great, and there is not any Person can approach the Prince, as he is permitted to do. For he may come into the Grand Seigneur's presence, with his arms at absolute liberty, and with a confident deportment, whereas all the other Grandeers of the Port, without any exception, even to the Grand Vizir himself, dare not appear before him, otherwise than with their arms cross their bodies, and the hands one upon the other, on the breast, as a mark of a profound submission.

The great Privilege of the Aga.

The Beglerbeys are, in dignity, next the four first Bassa's, and are as 'twere so many Sovereigns, in the general Governments of the Empire, whereof the Grand Seigneur bestows the Command on them. But in regard it is not my design to speak of the Government of Turkey, any further than is requisite for the Subject whereof I treat, there is not any necessity that I should inform the Reader of the number of those Beglerbeys, and it is enough that I have nam'd the five principal ones, of whom I shall have occasion to speak elsewhere. I shall only add here, That those great Bassa's have under them a certain number of Sangiac-Bey's, who are Governours of Sangiacs, or particular Provinces, as the Sangiacbey of Salonica, or of Morea.

And whereas there will also be frequently mention'd some others, under the Denominations of Spahis, Zaims and Chiaoux, we must give a short account of those three sorts of Persons.

The Spahis, who make up a Body of about fifteen thousand Men, are a kind of Knights, who would pass for the Gentry or Nobility of the Country, and stand very much upon their Gallantry. They are maintain'd out of the Revenue of the Timars, that is to say, out of the Mannors, or Commanderies, which the Grand Seigneur bestows on them, according to the recompence he would make them for their services. Those Timars cannot be taken away from them, unless they be negligent in their duty, which is, that they should be in the Army, when the Grand Vizir is there in person. These are the happiest persons in all the Ottoman Empire, and as it were petty Sovereigns, in the places where they command.

The Zaims differ not much from the Spahis, and, as the other, have the Command and Revenues of certain Lands, or Fiefs, which the Grand Seigneur bestows on them. There is a very great number of them over all the Empire, and they look on themselves, as the Lords and Barons of the Country. The Turkish Cavalry consists of the Zaims and the Spahis, and they know what number of Horse they are to bring into Field, according to the Revenue of their Timars.

The Chiaoux, or Chiaoux-Bachi, is the Chief of all the Chiaoux of the Empire, whose employment it is to carry the Prince's Commands, to any part either within his Territories, or without, and to be sent upon Embassies, though indeed they are but as so many Messengers, or Expresses. 'Tis ordinarily into their custody that Prisoners of Quality are committed, and they suffer them not to be out of their sight.

And thus you have an account of the principal charges and Dignities of the Empire, all possess'd by Persons taken out of the rank of the Icboglans. I now come to the Officers of the Seraglio, and in regard they are Eunuchs, on whom the Grand Signor bestows the most eminent Charges, and who, besides, have the Government of the Icboglans, I shall follow the order of the things, in my placing of them here, before I say ought of the second order or rank of tributary Children, or such as are taken in War, who are the Azamoglans.

The prodigious number of Eu-nuchs all over the East.

Observations upon this Subject.

Of the Eunuchs there are also two ranks. There are some white, who have endur'd only a simple castration; and there are black ones, who have all cut off, even with the belly. Both sorts of them are severe, humorous and morose, and their Treatments are almost insupportable to all those who are under their Charge. There is a prodigious number of them, as well in Constantinople, as all over the Empire, and generally all over the Eastern parts of the World, where there is hardly a private Person, having any thing of abilities, but keeps an Eunuch or two, as Sentinels over his Women. And 'tis this that causes so great a commerce of Eunuchs in several parts of Asia and Africk, and in the single Kingdom of Colconda, where I chanc'd to be in the year 1659. there were put off of the n in that very year about two and twenty thousand. It comes into my mind, that the Grand Mogor's Ambassador, in whose Country that Barbarism is not suffer'd, but the Eunuchs he makes use of are brought out of other places, took me one day aside, to tell me that he car'd not how soon he return'd into his own Country, out of the fear he was in, lest that Kingdom of Colconda might sink into the ground, after such cruelties. Most of the Fathers and Mothers, who are extremely poor, and have no love for their Children, and whom they are also afraid that they cannot maintain, have no other shift, upon the first dearth of Provisions, than to sell them to certain Merchants, who afterwards have them gelt, and sometimes make clear work, and cut of all. Some of those who have not any thing left, when they would urine, are forc'd to make use of a little Cane or Pipe, and to put it to the bottom of the belly. And whereas few escape after so dangerous an operation, such are accordingly much dearer than the others, and they are sold in Persia and Turkey at the rate of six hundred Crowns; when a hundred, or a hundred and fifty, is the price of the ordinary Eunuchs. For the supply therefore of all Turkey, all Persia, all the Indies, and all the Provinces of Africa, it may be easily judg'd that there must come millions of them from several places. The Kingdom of Colconda, in the Peninsula on this side Ganges, and the Kingdoms of Assan, Boutan, Arachan, and Pegu, on the other side of it, afford a prodigious number of them. All these Eunuchs are either white, or of dusky colour. The black Eunuchs, who are brought out of Africa, much inferiour in point of number, are, as I said, much the dearer. The most deformed yield the greatest price, their extreme ugliness being look'd on as beauty in their kind. A flat Nose, a frightful Aspect, a large Mouth, thick Lips, the Teeth black, and standing at a distance one from another (for ordinarily the Moors have fair Teeth) are so many advantages to the Merchants who sell them. The Seraglio at Constantinople is full of these two sorts of Eunuchs: The black are design'd for the custody of the Apartment where the Women are, and sent to Court by the Bassa's of Grand-Cairo. The white, who are somewhat less savage, and have been educated with some care, are for the Grand Signor's own Apartment.

The principal
Charges of the Seraglio.

The four principal Eunuchs, who approach the Prince's Person, are the Hazodabachi, the Chasnadarbachi, the Kilargibachi, and the Sarai-Agasi, who have for their Superior the Capi-Aga, who has the superintendency of all the Chambers of the Icboglans. They ordinarily succeed one the other, that is to say, the Sarai-Agasi succeeds the Kilargibachi; the Kilargibachi succeeds the Chasnadarbachi; and the last named succeeds the Hazodabachi; and in fine, the Hazodabachi succeeds the Capi-Aga, who is always of the longest standing in service of the white Eunuchs.

The noble Advantages of the Aga.

The Capi-Aga, or Capou-Agasi, is as it were the Grand Master of the Seraglio, he is the principal in dignity and repute of all the white Eunuchs, and he is always near the Grand Signor's Person, where-ever he is. He is the Person who introduces Ambassadors to Audience, and all great Affairs passing through his hands, ere they come into those of the Prince, his Charge renders him necessary to all others, and procures him many rich Presents. All those persons also who are to make any Present to the Grand Signor, must address themselves to the Capi-Aga, in order to their being presented

seated to his Highness, of which he makes great Advantages. No Man can enter into the Emperour's Apartment, nor get out of it, without his Order; and when the Grand Vizir would speak to him, 'tis the Capi-Aga's place, to take and present him to his Highness. Whether it be by night or by day, if there happen some pressing Affair, whereof the Vizir would give the Grand Signor immediate notice in writing, the Capi-Aga receives it from him and brings him the answer thereto. He wears his Turbant in the Seraglio, and rides up and down on Horse-back, by a Priviledge particularly annex'd to his Charge. He accompanies the Grand Signor even into the Apartment of the Sultaneses, but he stays at the door, as having no Command in that place. When he leaves the Seraglio, upon his being dismiss'd from his Charge, which very seldom happens, he cannot be a Bassa. As to his Table, all is at the Prince's Charge, and he has over and above ten Sultanines a day, which amount to sixty Livers, French Money. There have been some Capi-Aga's who have dy'd worth two millions, all which return'd into the Grand Signor's Coffers. The chief of the white Eunuchs, is attended by four others, who next to him have the principal Charges of the Grand Signor's Quarter.

The Hazodabachi, is, as it were, the Lord High-Chamberlain, having under his Charge the forty Pages of the Chamber, who ordinarily approach the Grand Signor's Person.

The Serai-Agasi has the general Superintendency of all the Chambers of the Grand Signor's Quarter, as to what relates to Embellishment, and the necessary Reparations. He has a particular inspection over the Seferli Odasi, which is the Chamber of the Pages, who are to look after the Grand Signor's Linnen, and attend him in his Progresses. 'Tis incumbent also upon him to give Order for their Cloaths, and whatever else they stand in need of: And his Charge does somewhat resemble that of Captain of the Lower-Castle, in France, since it is his work generally to make provision for whatever may contribute to the decency and well-ordering of that great Palace. He has for his Assistant, or Lieutenant, the Seraike-Odasi, who is also an Eunuch, whose imployment it is to have the Tapistry and Carpets which are spread upon the Floors, in the Halls and Lodgings of the Seraglio, chang'd every six months.

The Haznadar, or Chaznadar-Bachi, is the chief Intendant of the Treasury, and has the inspection of the conduct and deportment of the Pages of that Camber. Which is not to be understood of the Treasury, design'd for the exigencies of the State, and the ordinary Pay of the Souldiery, and whereof the Grand Vizir, and the three Tesferdars, or Treasurers-General have the Keys, and Intendency. But I here speak of, is the place where they keep the Jewels of the Crown, and all the other Rarities, and the wealth gather'd together, from Father to Son, by the Ottoman Princes; which I shall endeavour to lay down distinctly, before the Reader's prospect, in my Relation, when I come to open to him both the Treasuries. However it is to be observ'd, that the Chaznadar-bachi has only the honorary title of chief of the Treasury, nay, that he cannot so much as enter into it, since that in the Reign of Sultan Amurat, the Pages of the Treasury having complain'd to the Grand Signor of the ill conduct of that Eunuch, he, upon their Petition, order'd that the Chaznadar-bachi should no longer have any Command there, and that the Chaznaket-odasi should for the future exercise his Charge, without depriving him of the title thereof. But in regard the Chaznadar-bachi is the better known, and the more pronounceable Name, I shall always make use of it, instead of the other; and we must not omit giving you this remark, That when the Chief, or Overseer of the Treasury, is remov'd from his Charge, he is made a Bassa. Upon this counterchanging of these two Officers of the Seraglio, it is to be observ'd, That, amongst all the Mahumetan Princes, Turks, Persians, Indians, and of what Sect soever they may be of, what has been order'd and establish'd in the Reign of one Prince, is never revok'd by his Successor: And under the same Sultan Amurat, the Capou-Agasi having committed some little impertinence, whereat the Grand Signor took offence, he excluded thence forwards all the Capou-Agasi's, who should be remov'd out of the Seraglio, from the priviledge of coming into a capacity to be made Bassa's. I shall not think it much to alledge upon this particular, another example of that Maxime, of which I was an eye-witness my self, in the King of Persia's Court. 'Twas in the Reign of Scach Abbas, against whom some Grandees of the Court had enter'd into a Conspiracy, and attempted attempted to take away the King's Life, yet with a design to have put his Son into the Throne. About Two or Three in the afternoon, when every one in Persia is retir'd to the Haram, which is the Appartment of the Women, the Conspirators sent to the Palaces twenty Men well arm'd; with Order, first, to put to the Sword all they should find at the Gates, which ordinarily are guarded only by two or three Men, armed with a massy Club, and afterwards to go and murder the King himself in the Haram, which would be but poorly defended by black and white Eunuchs, who are poor Souldiers. But the intended blow of the Conspirators was prevented, and the chief Porter, a Person accounted one of the most valiant of his time, being in his Station, with two of his Servants, Georgians by Country, that is to say, valiant, as all those People are, fell upon the Traitors with his Cuttelas, and beat them back so smartly, that they thought it the best way to run for't. The King having been inform'd of that action, order'd him to be brought into his Presence, and after he had commended him, made this establishment, That the Charge of chief Porter, should ever continue in his Family, from Father to Son. He also commanded the Keeper of the Archives, or Records, to insert that action into the History, and wish'd that his own Name might be dash'd out of it, and all that had been done during his Reign, if any of his Successors attempted to change any thing of his Will, and deprive the House of that Faithful Georgian of that Charge.

The Kilargi-bachi is the chief Governour of the Pages of the Kilar, which is the place where they keep all the exquisite Drinks for the Grand Seigneur's own drinking. It is a kind of Cup-bearers Office, and the Kilargi-bachi, a kind of Cup-bearer; and he is also made a Bassa, upon his removal from the Charge of Kilargi-bachi. He is more-over the Chief or all the Akegis, who are the Cooks and Confectioners, since no Body can have any entrance into those Offices, but by his Order; and he has under his custody all the Plate, which is for the peculiar service of the Grand Seigneur. This Officer has for his Substitute the Kilarketodasi. Now having told you, that, upon the resignation of his Charge, he is made a Bassa, it were not amiss to advertise you further, That they who are remov'd out of the Seraglio, in order to their being Bassa's, ought to have been of the number of the forty Pages of the Chamber, and to have pass'd through one of these six Charges, of Chafnaketodasi, and of Kilarketodasi, of whom I have spoken already, of Dogangibachi, of the Chokadar, of the Seligdar, and of the Rikabdar, of whom I shall discourse anon. Otherwise, they can only be Beys, or Zaims, or Spahis, or at most, but Capigibachis, by the Grand Seigneur's singular favour. The case is the same with the Cugombachi, who is the second Person of the Office of the Treasury, as also with the Anakdar-Agasi, who is the third. If these People remove out of the Seraglio, before they are admitted into the number of the Forty Pages of the Chamber, they have only a certain Pay, more or less, the highest whereof amounts not to above two hundred Aspers. I proceed to the other Officers of the Seraglio, of whom there will be some mention made in my Relation.

The Dogangi-bachi is the Grand Falconer, and his Charge makes him a considerable Person about the Prince.

The Chokadar is he who carries the Royal Robe, called the Ciamberluc, the same Officer which the French call Portemanteau.

The Rikabdar is he who holds the Stirrup, when the Grand Seigneur gets on Horse-back.

The Seligdar is the first of the Pages of the Chamber; he carries the Grand Seigneur's Sword upon days of Ceremony, and they ordinarily advance to that Charge one of the handsomest Pages.

The Hammangibachi is the chief Overseer of the Bath. When he leaves the Seraglio, as also when the Kamachirbachi, who is the chiefest of the Pages of Sefali, does so; their Pay is an hundred Aspers a day; and if they are in favour, it may amount to an hundred an fifty. It is to be observ'd in the general, that when any one of the Forty Pages of the Chamber is remov'd, the vacancy is supply'd sometimes out of the Treasury, sometimes out of the Kilar, and sometimes out of the Seferti, and in that they take their turns. They always take out the most ancient; and they who were next to them come into their places. How that is done, we shall take occasion to explicate more plainly in the Chapter of the Treasury.

The Chiamcibachi is the grand Laundry-man, or the Principal of those, who wash and order the Grand Seignor's Linnen.

The Ciritbey is the chief Director of those who are exercis'd in shooting with the Bowe, and casting the Dart. These two Exercises are much practis'd every Friday, in a place of the Seraglio, appointed for that Divertisement. Thus have you, in few words, an account of whatever relates to the principal Charges of the Seraglio; possess'd by those who have pass'd through the Chambers of the Ichoglans.

The Black, or Negro-Eunuchs, of whom I have but a word more to say, additionally to what I have intimated before, are appointed to guard the Appartment of the Women, and they make choice for that Office, of the most deform'd and the most Æsopical, that can be found. They are all cut even with the belly, ever since the time of Solyman the Second, who being one day in the fields, and seeing a Gelding offering to leap a Mare, inferr'd thence, that the Eunuchs, who Kept his Wives, might likewise endeavour to satistie their passions; for which he bethought himself of a present remedy, by ordering them to have all cut off; and his Successors have since observ'd that Rule. There is a great number of those Negro-Eunuchs, and they have their variety of Chambers, and their Regulations, as the white ones have. I say nothing here of their different Employments, and the Reader will find, in the Chapter concerning the Appartment of the Women, all can be known, that's certain upon that Subject.

The Kisslar-Agasi, or, as others name him, the Kuezer-Agasi which is as much, in our Language, as to say, the Guardian of the Virgins, is the chiefeft of all the Negro-Eunuchs, and is of equal authority and credit with the Capi-Aga, who is the Supreme of the white Eunuchs. The former is the Overseer of the Appartment of the Women, has the Keys of the Doors in his custody, and has access to the Emperor when he pleases himself. The charge he is possess'd of brings him in Presents from all parts; and there are not any such made to the Sultanneffes, by the Bassa's, and other Persons, who stand in need of their favour, in reference to the Sultan, but there comes along with it one to himself, which makes him one of the richest and most considerable Officers, belonging to the Seraglio.

The credit and wealth of the Kisslar-Agasi, who keeps the Appartment of the Women.

I come now to the Azamoglans, who make the second Order of young Lads, wherewith the Seraglio is replenish'd, and out of whose number they take such as are design'd for mean Officers, of whom I shall give you the List.

The Azamoglans as well as the Ichoglans, are, as I said before, Tributary Children; taken away from the Christians or made Captives, by Sea, or Land. They make choice of the handsomest, the best shap'd, and most robust, for the Seraglio, and they have neither wages nor allowances of any profit, unless they be advanc'd to some small Employments. Nor can they attain those, till after many years Services, and what is then allow'd them does not amount to above four Aspers and a half per diem. As for those who are brought up in other places, under the simple denomination of Azamoglans, and are not receiv'd into the Seraglio at Constantinople, their fortune can amount no higher, than to become Zanizaries.

When these young Boys are brought up to Constantinople, the first distribution which is made of them is into the Seraglio's, or Royal Houses of the Grand Seignor: there are some of them left in the City, to be put to Trades, and others are sent to Sea, to serve for seamen, and so gain experience in Navigation, by which means they capacitate themselves for some Employments. But to confine our discourse to the Azamoglans receiv'd into the great Seraglio, they are employ'd in several Offices; and some of them are made Bostangis, some Capigis, some Atagis, some Haldagis, and some, Baltagis; which terms I shall explicate to the Reader in as few words as I can.

The Bostangis are they who are employ'd in the Gardens of the Seraglio, out of whose number they take out those who are to row in the Grand Seignor's Brigantines, when he has a mind to divert himself in fishing, or take the air upon the Canal. They who thus serve in the Brigantines, and row on the right hand, may be advanc'd to the charge of Bostangi-Bachi, which is one of the most considerable places of the Seraglio: But they who row on the left hand, are capable only of the mean Employments, which are bestow'd in the Gardens. If it happen that any one of them break his Oar, by strength of rowing in the Grand Seignor's presence, his Higness immediately orders him a gratuity of fifty Crowns; and and there is also a certain distribution made of some Money to the others, as the Grand Seigneur takes his diversion in the Brigantine. Their greatest Pay, after they have served some years, is seven Aspers and a half per diem, besides clothing and diet, which they all equally have.

Bostangi-bachi
one of the noblest Charges of the Port.

The Bostangi-Bachi has the general Intendancy or Over-sight of all the Grand Seigneur's Gardens, as well those of Constantinople as those of the neighbouring Villages, and commands above ten thousand Bostangis, who are employ'd in the culture of them. Though he be taken out of the meanest rank of the Azamoglans, yet his power is very great, and his employment one of the noblest and most considerable about the Court. That gives him access to the prince's Person, to whom he may speak familiarly when he carries him by Sea; for he has his Seat at the Helm of the Brigantine, wherein the Grand Seigneur is, who most commonly makes use of him, to carry his Orders to some Bassa, when he would have his Head. All the Grandeess of the Port stand in Awe of him, and endeavour to gain his Affection by their Presents, because it lies in his power, to do them either good or bad Offices about the Prince, whom he can dispose as he pleases, when he has him abroad upon the Water. For being as 'twere at his Elbow, and having the whip of the Rudder in his hand, with the privilege of sitting in his Presence, that he may the more easily Govern it, he has then the opportunity to entertain him with Affairs of State, and the Conduct of the Bassa's, and answerable to his Passion or Interest, clearly to Acquaint him how things pass, or turn and disguise them as he pleases. In fine, if he be highly in Favour, he may obtain one of the great Governments, and become Bassa of Buda, Babylon, or Cairo, nay haply Grand Vizier, which is the most eminent Charge of the Empire.

The Capigis are the Porters or Keepers of the Gates of the Seraglio, that is to say, of the first and second Courts; for the third Gate, which gives entrance into the inner Seraglio, is kept by Eunuchs. The Chief of the Capigis is call'd Capigi-bachi, who has under him other Officers, bearing the same Name; and whom the Grand Seigneur makes use of, to carry his Orders. The Capi-Aga is above all.

The Attagis are the Cooks of the Seraglio, over whom as well as over the Halvagis, the Kilargi-bachi has full Power. Every Kitchen has its Attagi-bachi, that is to say, its chief Director, or Master-Cook. And the Moutbak-Emin is the Intendant or Overseer, who supplies the Kitchens with all that is necessary, taking care also for the Tables of the Ambassadors, according to the Orders he has receiv'd from the Grand Vizir.

The Halvagis are the Confectioners, of whom I shall have occasion to speak more at large elsewhere. They give also the same Name to those who serve the Grandeess of the Seraglio, and are permitted to go out of it and into it, when they please.

The Baltagis are a robust sort of People, employ'd in the carrying of Burthens, as Porters, and Cleavers of Wood are amongst us. Baltagi implies properly a Labouring Man, who makes use of the Wedge.

The Hasteler-Agasi is the Overseer of the Infirmary, who observes what comes in, and what goes out, and especially that there be no Wine brought in.

I shall have occasion also, in my Relation, to speak of two others, to wit, the Em'rabour-bachi, and the Ekmeggi-bachi, who are two Officers belonging to the Sultan, but have their Habitations out of the Seraglio.

The Emirabour-bachi is the great Gentelman-Usher, who goes before the Grand Seigneur, when he appears in publick, and in all Ceremonies.

The Ekmeggi-bachi is the Master-Baker, who has the over-sight, and gives direction for the Baking of all the Bread that is Eaten in the Seraglio. These two Employments are not bestow'd on any of those who have their Abode within the Seraglio, but to Persons who live out of it, but have the Liberty of ingress into it, egress out of it, at any time.

To be short, I shall have occasion to speak of the Caragi-bachi, and of the Cham of the Lesser Tartary, and I have some curious Observations to make upon both of them.

The Caragi-Bachi is the Chief of those who collect the Tributes, and it is of the Economy the Partizans him, as also of the Gemmerou-bachi, or Grand Farmer of the Customs, and of the Collectors of the Bazarcas-bachi, or Chief amongst the Merchants, that the Grand Seigneur makes use of to make Advancements when he wants Money, and that there is not any in the publick Treasury, he being unwilling that they should meddle with the Secret Treasury. They must of necessity find it out, and it is no hard matter for them to do, in regard that of all the Tributes, Customs, and other Impositions due to the Grand Signor, there is not any thing pay'd till the end of the Year, and these Officers oblige Men to the payment thereof, at the beginning of it.

All sorts of Persons, what Religion soever they are of, except the Mahumetan, are oblig'd to pay the Tribute without any exception, from the time of their settling in the Empire, and having attain'd the sixteenth year of their Age. And this Tribute, or Poll-Money, amounts to five hundred and fifty old Aspers, which neither rise nor fall, but always keep at the same rate of eighty, to a Piastro, which, in the French Mony, and consequently with little difference in ours, amounts to five Crowns and $\frac{1}{2}$. All other Christians who come into the Empire, upon the score of Trade, or Business, though twere but for one day, are forc'd to pay, at the first City where they arrive. The forreign Greeks, such as they from Muscovy or other places, pay three hundred and fifty Aspers; but the Armenians, who come from Persia, Georgia, Mingrelia, and other Countreys, are tax'd but at three hundred. As to the Christians, whom they call Frangis, they pay nothing; and that has given much trouble to the Ambassadors of Europe, especially to the French Ambassador, there being more French that are Inhabitants in Turkey, than there are of any other Nation. And yet though the Turks make their Year to consist but of twelve Moons, ours being near twelve and a half, they make the Tributaries pay but for twelve Moons; yet in requital, and that nothing may be lost, they make them pay that Tribute double, every three and thirtieth year, and are very frugal Husbands for the benefit and advantage of their Master.

There are but two Princes in the World that are known by the Name of Cham, The policy of the Port, to keep the Cham of the lesser Tartary quiet. to wit, the Emperour of great Tartary, and the King of the little Tartary, a Vassal to the Ottoman Monarchs. I conceive my self oblig'd, to give the Reader some information of the present condition of the latter. When the Cham of the lesser Tartary enters upon the Government, he comes to take his Oath of Fidelity to the Grand Signor, and the Turks look upon him no otherwise than as a Governour of a Province; or at most, but as a Vassal-Prince. But those of his own Countrey, the Muscovites, the Poles, the Georgians, the Mingrelians, and the other Nations bordering upon him, treat him as a King, when they write to him. The Grand Signor uses much Policy towards the Cham, lest he should revolt from him, and render himself more powerful than he is, by Alliances with the neighbouring Princes. For it is to be observ'd, That the lesser Tartary, whereof the City Cassa, near the Cimerian Streight, is the metropolis, is not a Countrey subdu'd by the Arms of the Ottomans. The ancient Kings of it did only put themselves under the Grand Signor's protection who receiv'd them into it, upon condition, that when the Father dy'd, his Son, or the next of kin, his successor, was not to enter upon the Government, till he had receiv'd the Investiture from the Port, and taken the Oath of Fidelity to the Grand Signor, obliging himself to come to him upon the first Orders to that purpose. The Grand Signor promis'd in requital, that he would not establish any other than what were of their Race, to command in the Lesser Tartary. And whereas there are two Branches of that Family, he keeps one of them always banish'd in the Island of Rhodes, while the other Governs. But if, after Fifteen or Twenty Years, there should be any suspicion of this latter Family's having a design, to render it self absolute, he sends for the Cham and his Children, when he has any, and sending them to Rhodes, brings thence him who was there exile, and orders him to reign in his turn, for some years. The form of his Oath you will find in the sixth Chapter of my Relation, where I speak of the Hall for Audience, and the manner, in which that Prince is there received.

I have only now somewhat to say of the Moufti, the Cadilesquer, and the Cadis The principal Dignities of those who study the Law. and the others relating to the Law, which I shall do in few words. Only let it be here observ'd in the general; That, according to the perswasion of the Turks, the Civil Laws are part of their Religion, and that having been given them by their Prophet, they are deriv'd from God, and require an implicate obedience. 'Tis by this course, that they are kept within their duty, and that they obey the Laws, as much out of a principle of Religion and Conscience, as out of the fear of chastisement; and in that they do not much recede from our Christian Maxims.

The Mouftis, and the Cadis pass therefore indifferently under the Name of Persons well skill'd in the Law, as if we should reduce our Divines and our Civil Lawyers into the same Class, and in civil and criminal Causes the Moufti is often consulted.

The Moufti is the honorary Chief of the Law all over the Empire, and accounted to be the Interpreter of the Alchoran. I speak of the Grand Moufti of Constantinople, who is the most esteem'd, and the principal of all. For there are several others of them in Turkey, over whom he has no more jurisdiction, than he has over the Imans, or Priests; every one of them submitting themselves only to the Magistrate, and there being no Ecclesiastical Superiority amongst them. That hinders not but that the Grand Moufti is honour'd by all the rest, and in great veneration among the Turks. The Grand Seigneur never bestows that Dignity, but upon a Person of great abilities, and great integrity; he often consults him in the Affairs of greatest importance; he always follows his Directions, and he is the only Person in the World, at whose approach he rises up to receive him.

The Cadilesquers follow the Moufti, and are Judges-Advocates of the Militia, the Souldiers having this Privilege, That they are judg'd only by them; whence they also call them, Judges of the Armies. There are but two of them all over the Empire, the Cadilesquers of Romania, and the Cadilesquers of Natolia, who are in highest esteem next to the Moufti, and have their Seats in the Divan, immediately next to the Grand Vizir.

The Mollah, or Moula-Cadis, are the Judges of great Cities, who receive their Commissions from the Cadilesquers, to whom there may be an Appeal made from their Sentence, in Civil Concerns only; for as to the Criminal part, the Cause is soon decided, and the least Judge condemns to death without any Appeal.

The Cadis are under the Mollah, and ought to be well vers'd in the Laws and Customs of the Countrey. They have also under them the Naips, who administer Justice in the Villages, and that is done with much expedition, without the help of Proctors, or Advocates.

The Imans, or Emaums, are the priests of the Turks, and as 'twere the Parsons of their Mosqueys, where they take care that all things be done in order, and at the times appointed.

The Hogias are the Doctors of the Law, and as it were the Regents, and Instructors of Youth.

The Sheiks are to them, instead of Preachers, and they make publick Exhortations.

The Muezims are they, who cry upon the Towers of the Mosquey, to call the People together at the hour of Prayer; the Turks, not using any Bells, nor the Christians, in the Levant.

The Dervis are Religious Men, among the Turks, who live poorly, and indeed the very word signifies poor. They are for the most part ridiculously cloath'd, and all, generally, great Hypocrites.

O F

The Different Species of Gold and Silver-Coins, and the small Money now current in

TURKEY:

TOGETHER WITH THE HISTORY OF THE TRADE

In Five Sols Pieces (French Money) and the Abolition of it.

THere are but two Species of Gold-Coins current all over the Turkish Empire; What Money the one is the proper Countrey Money, the other comes out of Foreign current in Tur-Parts. The former is the Scherif, otherwise called Sequin, or Sultanine; key. and that kind of Gold is worth at the present six Franks, French Money, though heretofore it yielded but five Franks, nay came so low as four.
the Scheriffs come from Egypt, and Cairo is the only City of the Empire, where The Gold Gold is coin'd. That Gold is brought out of the Kingdom of the Abyssines, and brought to Caithis is the manner how it is brought to Cairo. The quantity is not the same every ro and coin'd year, and when the passages are shut up, whether by War, or by extraordinary there.
Rains, whereby the Fields are overflown, there comes but little Gold into Egypt, during that time. As soon as those obstructions are taken away, and that there is a freedom of Commerce, you shall see arriving at Cairo, nay at Alexandria too, several Abyssines who bring in, one man, two pounds, another four, every one more or less, according to his abilities. Those poor People run a thousand risques in their Travels, and 'tis almost a miracle, how they bring them to a period. Some of them are of that Country, whence the Queen of Sheba came, and which is now call'd the Kingdom of Sabour. Others come from places at a greater distance, and they have sometimes fifteen days journeys to make, and cannot meet with any waters to drink, but what are corrupt, and destructive to health: which I found but too true my self, when I cross'd the Desarts of Arabia. If by chance they come to some Cottage or Hut, where they have kill'd an Elephant, it is a place for them to feast in. This consider'd, we need not wonder at the short lives of those miserable People, whose Bodies are destroy'd in those Voyages, and who for the most part do not exceed forty years of Age. The case is the same with those, who trade with the Portu-gueses, on the Coasts of Melinda and Mozambico, the corrupt waters they are forc'd to drink in their way make them hydropical at five and twenty years of Age, and generally, all the several peoples of the Kingdom of Sabour, have the right Leg swell'd and twice as big as the left, and seldom exceed five and thirty years.

'Tis a miraculous thing to see the fidelity wherewith those poor Abyssines de- The sincerity of mean themselves in trading, as well those of the Southern parts, who are Christians, as those of the North, who border upon Egypt, and are Mahumetans. For after they have taken the Commodities they like for the Gold they have brought, if the Merchant they deal with will supply them with any thing further, to be paid at their return, and upon their own words, he is sure enough of it, and need not break his sleep for it. For if it happen that one of those Abyssines, who is a Debtor, should die by the way, some of his Relations or, Friends, whom he acquaints with his affairs, brings the Gold at the next return, for the Commodity which had been taken up; and it could never hitherto be found, that any Merchant could complain, that ever he had lost ought by any one of them. All that is to be fear'd, is, that they should fall into the hands of their Enemies, who rob, and kill them, and particularly on the South-side, there being less danger, towards the North.

The forein Coins of Gold in Turkey are the Ducates of Germany, Holland, Hungary, and Venice. They are very much sought after, and they are chang'd at six Livers and a half, and sometimes at six Livers and fifteen Sols; and that is done in order to the sending of them to the Indies, where they drive a great Trade with them, as I shall make it appear in my Relations of the Levant. Sometime since, there has been some abatement made in the Ducates of Venice, upon a discovery of their not being of so good an alloy, as those of Germany.

There will be often mention made of Purses, in that Relation of the Seraglio. A Purse implies as much as the sum of five hundred Crowns, and it is of those Purses that the Grand Seignor makes his ordinary Presents. But a Purse of Gold, wherewith he regales his Sultaneesses, and his peculiar Favourites, amounts to fifteen thousand Sequins, or thirty thousand Crowns. A Kize is also a bag of fifteen thousand Ducates.

In all the Ottoman Empire, there is not any Money of Copper to be seen, and the Spieces current there must be either of Silver or Gold. True it is, that there are some pieces of Silver taken there, of a very base alloy, especially the Roup, which are quarter-Ryals, coin'd in Poland; and with the assistance of the Jews, the Bassas in their several Governments, counterfeit certain forein Coins, which are all much different from those which they are intended to imitate.

The case is the same as to Silver-Coins in Turkey, as it is with those of Gold. There are some coin'd in the Countrey, as the Asher, and the Parafi, which are the least of all. And there are some forreign Moneys, as the Spanish Ryal, and the Rix-dollar of Germany and Holland.

An Asher is the least of all the Moneys, which heretofore was worth eight Deniers, French Money, that is about two thirds of the English Penny, as being of good Silver, and the value set upon them was after the rate of 80, for the Crown-piece. But in the more remote Provinces, the Bassas and the Jews cause such an abundance of counterfeit ones to be made, that at present, a Crown-piece will yield one hundred and twenty Ashers.

A Parafi is another kind of small Money, which is worth four Ashers, and coin'd at Cario.

Groche is the Crown, or Spanish Ryal, otherwise called the Piece of eight.

Kara Groche is the Rix-dollar of Germany.

Ashani is the Rix-dollar, mark'd with the Lyon of Holland. After which follow the Pieces of four Ryals, of two Ryals, and of one Ryal; and heretofore the Pieces of five Sols, French Money, wherewith there was a great Trade driven in Turkey. 'Tis a thing not well known to all, and therefore the History thereof will haply not be unpleasant to the Reader.

The Trade driven in the five Sols-pieces.

A certain Merchant of Marseilles, without any fore-thought design, sent as many Pieces of five Sols, newly come out of the Mint, as amounted to the sum of two, or three hundred Crowns amongst some other Pieces of Silver-Coins, to buy Silks. The Turks found those little Pieces so pretty and so beautiful, and were at the first so taken therewith, that they thought them to be the eighth part of a Ryal, and were content to allow a Crown for every eight of them. The Factor, perceiving it, writ to Marseilles, whence he receiv'd a very great sum in that Money, and gain'd very much thereby. If the French could have contented themselves with that honest profit, the commerce of those Pieces, which was quash'd by the excessive frauds committed in the managment of it, might have continued still, and would have been very advantageous to them. The Turks were unwilling to trade in any other kind of Money, and in the payment of the Armies, to give the Souldiers content, there was a necessity of dispersing them among them. One day, returnig out of Persia into Turkey, I was persecuted by several Women, who would needs have me give them some Temins, (so they call that kind of Money) and I could not have any thing to eat, for any other Money.

Our French Merchants were gainers at the first, after the rate of fifty, per cent. allowing in Turkey but eight of those Pieces for a Crown whereas they had twelve of them.

them in France for the same Piece. But the other European Nations, the English, the Dutch, and the Italians, envying their happiness, came to give a check to their design, and making their complaints to the Grand Vizir, that minister order'd, That, for the future they should allow twelve of those Pieces for the Crown, or that they should not be current any longer, and that whatever sums thereof were found in the Ships, should be confiscated.

The French were not at all satisfy'd with that; and whereas there was a necessity of submitting to the Grand Vizir's Decree, they bethought themselves of having some of those Pieces coin'd, which should not have above four Sols of good Silver, which was a considerable advantage, of twenty five upon the hundred. They pass'd well enough for some time, before the Turks had discover'd the fraud; they being satisfy'd, that the Stamp was fair, and that the Pieces look'd very white: And the Women and Maidens, of the meaner sort of People, made them contribute to the ornament of their Head-tires, about which they fasten'd those pretty little Pieces, and they came down flaping about their Foreheads, as the wealthier sort fasten'd Pieces of Gold to theirs.

But the better to compass their design, the French Merchants were oblig'd to find out other Countreys, where it might be lawful for them to traffick in those Pieces. Their first recourse was to those of Dombes, Orange, and Avignon, and passing into Italy, they found work for some time for those of Monaco, and Massa. But having observ'd, that the Turks were more taken with the Pieces which had the impression of a Woman's Head, and those Princes being unwilling to suffer them to coin among them any Money of so base an alloy, or to give it the Stamp of Ja, the Prince of Dombes, they cast their eyes upon some Castles situate within the Territories of the Genueses, yet subject to the jurisdiction of the Empire, where they obtain'd what they desir'd, upon conditions not disadvantageous to the Lords of those places. The Pieces they got coin'd at Orange, where also sought after, and pleas'd the Turks, in regard the Stamp was beautiful, and very clear, but those of the Legat of Avignon were not so current, the Effigies thereof not being well done, and the Cross, hanging at the Neck, displeasing to the Turks. Had they contented themselves, in that Trade, with twenty five upon the hundred, it might have continu'd and the profit would have been considerable: but by little and little, the thing came to so great an excess, till, at last, there was not one penny-worth of good Silver in every piece.

The French, to make them pass the better, gave eighteen, and sometimes twenty for a Crown, of which abuse the great Merchants of Constantinople, Aleppo, Smyrna, and other Cities of Trade, made a good hand, they giving but twelve or thirteen for the worth of a Crown, in the payments they made to the petty Merchants of the Provinces of the Empire, for the Merchandizes they brought out of Turkey, there was none of that counterfeit Money dispers'd, and the Armenians were far enough from burthening themselves with it, in regard that all the Money, which is carried into Persia, is presently convey'd to the Mints, upon the Frontiers, to be melted down, and afterwards coin'd into Abassis, whereof they give the Merchant an account, answerably to the Standard of his Money, after it has been examin'd; and by that means there can be no fraud committed. The same course is taken over all the Great Mogol's Empire; and of all the Princes in the World, he causes all the Species of Gold and Silver of the best Standard to be coin'd without admitting the least alloy.

The Genuese Merchants perceiving that the French had, at the beginning been fortunate in their Commerce, would needs imitate them in other sorts of Money, and got two or three hundred thousand Ducats coin'd which they carried into Turkey. But they had not the success they expected, the Gold was so counterfeit, that the cheat was immediately discover'd, the Consul, and the Captain of the Vessel, were in some trouble about it, and the persons concern'd therein, sav'd what they could of that disaster.

The *German*s also would needs come in for a share, taking another course all along the Danow, quite to the mouth of it, from whence they got to Constantinople through the Black Sea. With other their Merchandizes, most whereof consisted in the counterfeit Copper-wares of the City of Nuremberg, things fit enough those Nations, which border upon the Euxine Sea, they carried a quantity of Roups or quarter-Ryals, of the Coinage of Poland, which are pleasant to the Eye, and might have been commodious enough for the Merchants, if the adulteration had been moderate. But the Italians need not be much asham'd, that the Germans should be more successful than they upon that occasion, since that both Nations came short in point of subtilty, to deceive the Turks.

But to return to the French, the first concern'd in this History, to which it is time to put a period. In the heat of their Commerce, and while all things were very well with them, they thought it not enough, to carry away the richest Merchandizes, but they also bought up all sorts of good Money they could meet withal, and brought it into France, to carry on and continue the coinage of their counterfeit pieces. This Trade was carry'd on so far, thro' the whole extent of that vast Empire, and there was so prodigious a quantity of that counterfeit Money spread abroad, that it was found by the Register-Books of the Farmers of the Customs, that the sum of what had been dispers'd of it amounted to an hundred and fourscore millions of Livers, not accounting what had never come to their knowledge, and what Seamen, and other private Persons might have conceal'd.

The other Merchants and Traders of Europe, who brought none but good Money, having exclaim'd against that disorder, and renew'd their complaints to the Grand Vizir; the Turks at last open'd their eyes, and that principal Minister, having comprehended, that if the thing continu'd, in a short time, instead of Silver, there would be nothing but Copper in the Empire, prohibited the bringing in of any more of those pieces of five Sols, upon pain of confiscation, and great penalties to be inflicted on those, who durst do any thing contrary thereto.

Yet could not that crying of them down, and the Grand Vizier's prohibition make the Souldiers who serv'd in Candia, out of love with those little pieces, the beauty whereof they were so much taken withal. Notwithstanding all the Remonstrances that could be made to them, they would not be paid in any other kind of Money; and some discontented Persons and Mutineers beginning to shew their Teeth, they were forced immediately to send Gallies to Smyrna, and some other Cities of great Commerce, to bring away all that could be found of that sort of money. The incredible quantity of those counterfeit pieces, dispers'd in all the Provinces of the Ottoman Empire, is at last vanish'd, they are grown red, and no longer current.

A mischievous
punished.

At the First crying down of that counterfeit money, before the news of it could have been brought to foreign Countries, a certain Person named Goulin, engag'd all he had in the world, to make up to the sum of five and twenty thousand Crowns in those Pieces of five Sols, so extremely falsifyd, that there was hardly so much Silver as was requisite to whiten them. He came to Smyrna, where I then was, and where he soon found, that there was no way to put off his counterfeit Merchandize. Whereupon he imagin'd, that he might get it off, if he could make a speedy Voyage to Constantinople, where, as he had been assur'd, some Persons took them, even after they had been cry'd down. Being unwilling to hazard all by Sea, he sent away, by Land, four or five thousand Crowns, which were taken away by Thieves, near Bursa, and carry'd the much greater part to Constantinople in a Dutch Vessel, of which he had also sufficient cause to repent him. After he had expos'd it at the Custom-house, for the payment of the Duties, the Chief Officer of the Customs told him, that he might return within two or three days, to take back what belong'd to him; and as soon as the other was gone, he caus'd all to be melted down in his presence. The separation being made, upon twenty thousand Crowns, which was the sum he had brought thither, there was not the full fourth part of Silver, and the Merchant coming again to the Customer, fell down all along, out of pure fear lest a severe punishment might follow the fraud whereof he was visibly convicted, seeing so much scum of brass on the one side, and so little silver on the other. But the Turks are not so rigorous, as some persons imagine, all was restor'd to him, nay there was no penalty inflicted upon him, and they only order'd him to be gone.

The ancient sincerity of the Turks corrupted by the commerce of the Europeans.

Certain it is, that the Europeans, more addicted to subtilty and circumvention, than the *Levantine*s, and for the most part not endeavouring to be sincere in Commerce, have taught the Turks several Cheats, which they were either ignorant of, or did not practise, especially since the Inhabitants of Granada, being driven out of Spain, dispers'd themselves into several Provinces of the Levant. Before that time, time, a man might have rely'd on their integrity and fair dealing. But now, when you treat with them, you must stand upon your guard; so prevalent is the Example of Evil to corrupt mens minds. Nor are we to be astonish'd at that ancient undisguiz'd humor of the Turks in their Commerce, since we find, that the poor Abyssines, who come from the lower parts of Ethiopia to Traffick at Cairo, and the Idolaters themselves in the Indies amongst themselves and with Strangers, with a strict observance of an inviolable fidelity.

CHAP. I.

Of the extent, and external parts of the Seraglio.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Origine of the word Serrail, or Séraglio, common to all the Royal Houses, as well in Turkey as Persia. The admirable Situatton of the Grand Seraglio at Constantinople. Its extent, figure, and externals. The Artillery not kept in good order, and the Gunners not well skill'd. A delightful place of it self; but restraint makes it otherwise.

THE Grand Seignor's Seraglio, whereof I undertake to give a Description, is the Palace where the Ottomon Princes ordinarily keep their Court. All the Royal Houses, as well in Turkey, as Persia, have the same Name, which derives its Origine from the word Serrai, which signifies a great Noble House, in the Persian Language. The Grand Seignor has many Seraglio's in the Provinces of his Empire, and the principal of them are those of Bursa, and Adrianople, two Residences which that Monarch does ordinarily make use of, according to the conjuncture of his Affairs.

But to confine our selves to Constantinople, we find there three Seraglio's, which have all their different Beauties. The old Seraglio is the Palace appointed for the retirement of those Women who have serv'd the Predecessors of the Prince Regent, and whence they never get out, unless it be in order to Marriage. The Grand Seignor goes thither but very seldome, and that when he is out of humor, to pass away some days there in solitude. The Seraglio of the Hippodrome, so called from the Exercises done there on Horse-back, which was built by Ibrahim Bassa, Son-in-Law, and Favourite to the Emperour Solyman the Second, serves now for an Amphitheatre for publick Festivals, Exercises, Combats, Carousels, and particularly for the Circumcision of the Ottomon Princes, which is their greatest Solemnity. The third is the Grand Seraglio, whereof I make the Relation, and to which that Name is principally attributed, so as that there needs not any thing else to be added thereto, to distinguish it from the others. I shall have but little to say concerning the Structures of it, wherein there is not any thing extraordinary to be observ'd, but shall rather insist upon what is privately done, in each Apartment of that great Palace.

The admirable situation of the Seraglio of Constantinople. The Grand Seraglio is a vast place inclos'd, which reaches to that point of Land where the ancient Byzantium was built, upon the Bosphorus of Thrace, and the joyning together of the Aegean Sea and the Euxine, which contribute so much to the Beauty and Wealth of Constantinople. This great City, let the Wind sit where it will, does every hour receive some refreshments or other, from one of those Seas; and the Seraglio advancing it self into the Channel, which makes a communication between them, receives the first Advantages that may be derived thence.

Its extent, figure, and externals. That great Inclosure makes a Triangle, one side whereof is to the Land-side, and reaches to the City, and the two others lye open to the Sea and a River which falls into it. This Triangle is unequal, and if it be divided into eight parts, that side towards the Land takes up three of them, and the five others are for the two sides abutting on the Sea. Its compass is about three Italian Miles, or one of our common Leagues. And this Palace is surrounded all about with high and strong Walls, flank'd on the Sea-side with square Towers, at a considerable distance one from another; and towards the City, with round Towers, which are at a nearer distance one from another, from the great Gate of the Seraglio, which is towards St. Sophia, as far as the Sea where you Embark for Galata. In those Towers, in the Night-time, there are Guards of the Azamoglan; to see that no body approaches the Seraglio by Sea or Land; and if occasion require, they may fire some Pieces of Artillery, which stand always loaden upon a Quay of five fathom breadth, which is carried quite about the Seraglio.

Upon one of those Towers, about a hundred paces from the great Gate of the Seraglio, as you go down, in order to your passage over to Galata, they have wrought a Closet, into which the Grand Seignor goes sometimes to divert himself, and to see People passing to and fro, without being seen himself. Somewhat lower, and upon the Sea-side, there is a spacious place cover'd over, under which, as if it were in a little Haven, they keep the Caicks or Brigantines, wherein the Prince takes his divertisement by Water, when he is pleas'd to do it.

Not far thence, within the inclosure of the Seraglio, are the Habitations of the Bostangis, who are entrusted with the conduct of the Brigantines; and at a little farther distance, in your way to the point of the Seraglio, which is towards Scudaret, stands the Quarter of the Bostanchi-bachi, Overseer of the Gardens of the Seraglio, and of all the other Gardens belonging to the Grand Seignor.

The Artillery out of order, and the Gunners not well skill'd.

Upon the Quay, which as I told you, does surround the Walls of the Seraglio, there are forty or fifty pieces of Cannon of different bigness, and there are some of so great a bore, that a man might get into them. Opposite thereto, and in the middle of the Channel, there is a Tower built upon a Rock, which the Turks call Quisler boulesi, or the Tower of the Virgins. It is kept by Bostangis, and has its Guns levell'd with the Water, which better defend the Streight, than those at the point of the Seraglio, which for the most part are without Carriages, and unserviceable. Besides, they want good Gunners; and if all that Artillery were well mounted, and manag'd by skilful Persons, it would better keep in awe, whatever comes out of the Mediterranian, and the Black Sea.

A pleasant abode, but restraint makes it otherwise.

We have spoken sufficiently of the external parts, 'tis time we now enter into the Seraglio, and rather consider what passes in every Apartment of it, than the Structures thereof, wherein, as I said, there is not any thing of Magnificence, whatever some Persons might invent; who in my presence, have made noble Draughts of it, grounded on their own pure Imaginations. I have seen as much of the Seraglio, as a Stranger could do, and I have seen it several times, in several Voyages, having had time enough to consider the two first Courts, the Divan, and the Hall of Audience, but cannot celebrate them much for any great Beauty I could find in them. There is, I must confess, abundance of Marble and Porphyry in all the Apartments; but on the other side, all those Apartments are confusedly shuffled together; there is no regularity at all; most of the Rooms have but little light, and all the Ornament of them consists in Rich Tapistry

Tapist'ry lay'd all over the Floors thereof, and some Cushions of Gold and Silver Brokado, some whereof are embroider'd with Pearls. But taking things generally, if the Walls and the Towers, which inclose the Seraglio, look more like a frightful Prison, than a Royal Palace, the Apartments whereof it consists, have not also that Wealth or Pleasure, for which the Palaces of France and Italy are so highly celebrated, and they offer not any thing which may long entertain the sight of a curious Person. All that can make the Seraglio a pleasant place of Abode, is the advantage of its situation, and indeed a Nobler cannot be imagin'd. For it looks towards the East, and takes up the upper part, and the descent of a sloping Hillock, from St. Sophia, quite to the Channel. The Buildings are upon the most eminent places, and have a Prospect into the Gardens, which run along the descent, as also into the two Seas which meet at the point of the Seraglio, whence the Grand Seignor may at the same time see Europe and Asia, in both which parts of the World, his Territories are very great. But never was any Prison thought a pleasant place, and there are few in the Seraglio, who rather would live in a Hut, and have their Liberty, than be continually confin'd in a Palace under such severe Discipline.

CHAP. II.

Of the first Court of the Seraglio, and particularly,
of the Infirmary.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Regulations of the Infirmary of the Seraglio. The difficulties of getting Wine into it. The subtilty of some People to be receiv'd into it, tho' they are not Sick. An abominable vice common all over the East. The fruitless endeavours us'd to check the course of it. The sacrilegious action of two Ichoglans. The Wood-piles of the Seraglio. The great advantages of those who have the Charge thereof. The exercise of the Girit. The Grand Seignor's Liberalities. The counterfeit Modesty of the Grandees of the Port.

OF the many Gates which give a Man entrance into the Seraglio, as well on the Sea-side, as on the Land-side, that towards S. Sophia is the greatest. That is always open, the others not being so, but according to the Grand Seignor's pleasure. You first come to a great Portal, which has not any thing of magnificence, and where you only find certain golden Letters, and about them Feuillages and Compartiments, according to the Arabian way of Painting. That Gate is kept by Fifty Capigis, who have for their Arms, the Firelock, the Dart, and the Cymitar, and gives you entrance into the first Court of the Seraglio, which is four hundred Paces in length, and a hundred in breadth, without any Paving.

The Regulations of the Infirmary of the Seraglio.

On the right hand of that first Court, there runs all along a spacious structure, containing several Appartments or Chambers, and serving for an Infirmary to the whole Seraglio. The Gate of it is kept by an Eunuch, who has under him a great many People, employ'd in attending on, and ministering to the sick, whom, answerably to their quality, they dispose into convenient quarters in that house, where they may be better assisted, than in those which their indisposition had oblig'd them to quit. The two principal Physicians, and the two principal Chirurgeons, whom they call Hecunz-bachi, and Gerab-bachi, make their visits there every day, at certain hours. A man cannot imagin a place better order'd and regulated than that is: and the Grand Seigneur himself sometimes comes thither in person to take an exact account of the Sick and their condition, as also to enquire whether they are well treated, whether the Physicians visit them often, and whether every Officer of the Infirmary perform the duty incumbent on him. There is seldom any place void in that House, for as soon as one is gone out, another comes in: and though it be design'd only for such as are sick, yet several persons, who are well, are brought thither, under pretence of indisposition, or to enjoy themselves a while, or to weather out some trouble or discontent. They continue there for the space of ten or twelve daies, and are diverted, according to their mode, with a wretched kind of vocal and instrumental Musick, which begins betimes in the morning, and holds on till night. The permission they have there to drink wine, which they never have elsewhere, is a greater inducement for their coming in thither than the musick. But that permission, which, they would as 'twere conceale, and which the superstition of the Turks dares not publicly own, is accompany'd by a thousand difficulties. They are not permitted to bring in any wine in the sight of the Eunuch, who stands at the entrance of the place: and if any one should be surpriz'd in the doing of it, his punishment would be to receive three hundred bastinadoes, and a penalty of three hundred Aspers, to be paid to those from whom he had receiv'd them. But if he can cunningly get in with the Wine not having been stopp'd at the Gate, as soon as he is got in, he runs no risque at all, and may drink of it without fear of any chastisement, though 'twere in the presence of the Grand Seigneur.

The difficulty of getting wine into the Infirmary.

The small quantity of Wine which can be got in by this way, would signifie but little among so many People, if there were not some other less difficult contrivances to supply them therewith. And this is one of them. The Infirmary adjoins to one side of the Gardens, from which it is separated only by a wall which is not very high; so that the Bostangis, who find that wine goes off at a good rate, and that they who are within the Seraglio know not how to spend their money, do, in the night time, by ropes convey over the wall, so many Borrachoes or Bags of Buck-Skins, full of wine, containing forty or fifty quarts, which some other persons of the Infirmary stand ready to receive. This way brings in abundance of wine, but not without fear of being surpriz'd by the Bostangi-bachi, who goes the rounds every night.

The subtilty of some persons to be receiv'd in, though not sick.

Nor is the drinking of Wine the main inducement which makes those counterfeit sick persons to seek out pretences, to go and pass away some daies in the Infirmary; insonmuch that some have the lewd artifice to put themselves into a slight Feaver, which is presently remov'd. A detestable passion, and which is in a manner naturall to them, though it be against nature, makes them study all the imaginable waies to satisfy it. This proves a hard matter for the Ichoglans to do, while they are in their Chambers observ'd and watch'd night and day by severe Overseers, who never pardon them the least misdemeanour.

For though the Grand Seigneur be himself subject to the same passion, the very name whereof causes a horror, yet he orders cruel punishments to be inflicted on those who shall presume to imitate him. He does what he can to prevent the mischief, which he would not have countenanc'd by his example, and imposes the prevention of it as a task upon the Eunuchs, a vigilant sort of animals, whose Eyes are alwayes open. But in the Infirmary, all these precautions prove fruitless; the Eunuchs belonging to that place being corrupted partly by presents, partly by treats, or being made drunk with wine, or some other liquors, they bring in thither some young lads, of whom there is great store in the City of Constantinople. The better to over-reach the Eunuchs, they put those young lads into the habits of the Halvags, and so the cheat succeeds; in regard they are the Attendants on the Officers of the Seraglio, and all the Errands they have to do in the City. Of

Of these Halvages, there is ordinarily to the number of six hundred; and they have only their cloathing and sustenance allow'd them, without any wages, till such time as they have serv'd thirteen or fourteen years. Their wages begin at the rate of two Aspers per diem and in time may rise to seven Aspers and a half: but they have other contingent Profits, and they know well enough, how to make their advantage of the Employments they are upon. For whereas they only are the Persons who have the freedom of going and coming in and out of the Seraglio, they set double the price on every thing they buy. But their most considerable gain proceeds from the infamous commerce of those young Lads whom they bring in to their Masters, and whom they cunningly slip into the Infirmary, after they had put them into Habits like their own. They wear a white Cap, which rises up from the Crown of the Head, to a pretty height somewhat to the resemblance of a Sugar-loaf.

The Hasteler-Agasi, or chief Overseer of Infirmary, is inded continually at the Gate with five or six other Eunuchs, and carefully observes whatever goes in, or comes out. But all that vigilance will not do the work; nay though he had a hundred eyes, yet were it impossible for him to discern those young Lads, amidst the great number of those Halvages and that the rather, for these reasons, that they are frequently chang'd, that some of them are made Janizaries, and that new ones are taken in upon the advancement of the old ones to some other Employments. But if it should happen that the said Superintendent Eunuchs should have any secret information of what's design'd, and seems as if he would make some noise about it, he is presently appeas'd with a silk Vest, or some other Present, and 'tis thence that he derives his greatest advantages. In fine, that brutish Passion is so ordinary amongst the Turks and generally over all the Eastern parts, that notwithstanding all the endeavours that has been us'd to prevent the effects of it, they will hardly ever be able to do it. There happen'd a memorable Example of this in my time. Two Pages of the Chamber, who could not have the convenience of executing their wicked design in the Seraglio, would needs aggravate their crime, by going into the Mosquey to satiate their brutality. After Prayers where ended, they suffer'd all the people to go out, and having so well hid themselves that he who shut the doors could not perceive them, they fell to the doing of an action, whereof the very Idea causes horror.

The fruitless endeavours us'd to check its course.

Abominable excesses over all the East.

The sacrilegious action of two Pages.

On the left hand of this first Court, there is a spacious Lodgement, answerable to that of the Infirmary; and that's the habitation of the Azamoghans, persons design'd for the meanest Employments of the Seraglio. Within that Structure there is a spacious Court, where you shall find dispos'd in order, all about, and in the middle so many Wood-piles, which are renew'd every year, and there are brought in thither above forty thousand Cart-loads of wood, every Cart-load being as much as two Oxen can draw. Some part of this wood comes in by the Black Sea, and the rest out of the Mediterranean: and whereas there is a great quantity of it left every year, especially when the Grand Seignor does not winter at Constantinople, that remainder, which must be very considerable, is dispos'd of to the advantage of the principal persons among the Azamoghans. They are cunning enough to take their opportunity, when it is unloaden upon the Port, and computing, as well as they can, how much may go to make up the Piles, they proportionably send; what they think may be spar'd, to the City, and lodge it in the houses, where they are acquainted. Which they may do with so much the more security, in regard that no body minds what they do, and that they perform their duty, when the Piles are compleated in the season during which they are wont to make their Provisions. The wood they thus convert to their own use they are paid for, and the sum rais'd thereby is considerable for Persons of so mean a Quality.

The Wood Pile of the Seraglio.

The great profit of such as have the Charge thereof.

On the same side as the Infirmary, and a little lower, (for the Seraglio is a rising ground for a certain space, and then there is an insensible descent on both sides, quite down to the point, whereby it is terminated) you discover the great Portal of the Gardens, which they call Bagge-Karponsi. From that Gate, which overlooks the foresaid descent, and where you are as it were upon an Eminency, you descend into a very noble Place, which the Grand Seignor causes to be always kept neat and even, where the Great Persons of the Court come to do the

The Exercise of the Girit.

*The Grand
Seignors liberalities.*

Exercises of the Girt, or the Dart, which is perform'd most commonly on Fridays, immediately after their coming out of the Mosquey. There are about two hundred paces from the Portal to that place, and in the Court there may ordinarily be upon those days above fifteen hundred Persons, yet so as that not any person whatsoever is permitted to go any further, unless he be call'd by the Order of the Girt-Bey, who is the chief Overseer, and Director of that Exercise. They who enter into the Lists, do many times amount to the number of a thousand Persons. If the Grand Seigneur himself, who is present at those Exercises, the end whereof proves many times Tragical to those, by whom they are perform'd, has found any particular divertisement therein, especially when there are Limbs lost or broken, he orders every one to receive a Purse, which, as I told you, amount to five hundred Crowns. The distribution of those Presents is greater or lesser, according to his being in a good or bad humor, and sometimes there are distributed at his departure thence, to the number of ten Purse. The Treasurer, who is always attending on him, and has ordinarily brought along with him fifteen or twenty thousand Ryals in Gold or Silver, stands ready, upon a beck to obey his Orders.

The counterfeit modesty of the Grandeess of the Port.

But this is worth our observation, That when the Prince is ready to bestow his Liberalities, on those who had behav'd themselves valiantly in that exercise, the Grandeess of his Court, who had appear'd therein as well as others, purposely shift themselves out of the way, and leave him to make his Presents to other less considerable Persons, as being such as stand more in need of them than they do. This is their custom ordinarily, whether it proceed from Generosity, or from a counterfeit and personated Modesty, it matters not. And after the Grand Seigneur is withdrawn, it is lawful for those who are left in the foresaid Court, and are skil'd in the handling of the Dart, to spend the remainder of the day in that exercise. But those, how great soever their performance may be, and what wounds soever they may receive, are not to expect any Presents; There's no Prince to be a spectator of their Gallantry, nor Treasurer, to distribute his Liberalities. They only lay some wagers amongst themselves, and he who gives the fairest blow, wins, and the fairest blow is in the head or face. There is ever and anon an Eye struck out, or a Cheek carried off, and that Solemnity proves very fatal in the end to some of them.

And this is an account of all that is observable in the said first Court, Let us now make our entrance into the second, and observe what is most remarkable in all its Apartments.

CHAP. III

Of the second Court, wherein are the little Stables, the Kitchens, and the Divan.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

A square and spacious Court, and its Embellishments. The Janizaries extremely sprighful, active, and well order'd. The number of the Kitchens. The ordinary dishes of meat that are serv'd up in the Seraglio. The way of ordering the Pilau. A particular way of roasting in the Levant. The Turks cannot endure the Hare. Conserves of all sorts. Several Compositions of Sherbet. Receptracles for all the Waters of the Seraglio. The little Stables. The Quarters of the Eunuchs.

OUT of the first Court, into which the Bassas and Grandeess of the Port, may come on Horse-back, and where they are oblig'd to alight, if they intend to go any further, there is an entrance into another, through a second Gate, kept, as the former, by fifty Capigis. The second Court, much more noble, and more delightful, then that whereof we gave you the precedent description, is near three hundred paces square, and only the walks, leading to the several Appartments, are pav'd, the rest being in Grass-plots, planted about with Cypress, and water'd by Fountains, with rails all about, to hinder people from going upon the grass. Over the Gate of that Court, may be seen these words, written in great golden Characters.

La Illahe Illa Alla,
Muhammed Resoul Alla.

That is to say,

There is no other God than God,

Mahomet is sent by God.

Resoul signifies Sent, which is the greatest Title given by the Turks to their Prophet.

*The Janizaries
well order'd.*

On both sides of that Court there runs a very noble Gallery, the Pillars whereof are of Marble, all along which the Companies of the Janizaries are drawn up, and disciplin'd when the Grand Seigneur orders them to shew their Activity, and to appear well Arm'd, at the Arrival of some Ambassador, who is to have Audience.

On the right hand, behind the Gallery where the Janizaries are drawn up, on the Divan-days (that is to say, upon Council-days) are the Kitchens, and the Offices of the Seraglio, distinct one from the other, and every one serv'd by its peculiar Officers. Heretofore there were Nine of them, but now that Number is reduc'd to Seven. Every Office or Kitchen, has its chief Director, or Master-Cook, and there is a Superintendent above them all, named the Akegi-Bachi, who has the Command over four hundred Cooks.

The chiefest of these Kitchens, which is for the Grand Seigneur himself, is called Hafimontbak.

The number of the Kitchens;

The Second is called Valede-Sultanum-Montbaki, and is design'd for the Sultanesse, as for instance, the Mother, the Wife, or to say better, the Princess, for whom the Grand Seigneur has the greatest kindness, and who had the Happiness to bring into the World a Successor to the Empire, as also for his Sisters and Daughters.

The third Kitchen, which they call Kisler-Agazinum-Montbaki, is appointed for the Overseer of the Apartment of the Women, and the other Negro-Eunuchs who are employ'd about the guarding of them.

The fourth is for the Capon-Agasi, or Grand-Master of the Seraglio, who has the greatest access to the Grand Seigneur's Person, and whose Charge (as I said elsewhere) generally extends over whatever enters into the Palace. And this Kitchen serves also for the Officers of the Divan.

The fifth is for the Chasnadar-bachi, or the chief Person concern'd about the Treasury, and for those who are under his Jurisdiction, and obey his Orders.

The sixth is for the Kilargi-bache, or principal Cup-bearer, and those who have their dependance upon him.

The seventh and last, is that of the Sarai-Agassi, and of all the Officers, who are under his Charge.

Lastly, as for the Bostangis, whose work lies in the Gardens, they dress their Meat themselves, and appoint some among them to execute that Office, and they provide the Commons for all the rest. There are also some of these Bostangis employ'd in the Offices design'd for the Grand Seigneur.

The ordinary meats serv'd up in the Serag-lio.

There enters no Beef into the Kitchens of the Seraglio: but the ordinary consumption of every day, including all, as well those who eat within, as without, may amount to five hundred Sheep, in which number must be comprehended Lambs and Kids; and the greatest part of those Sheep are brought from the Frontiers of Persia; which Country excels all others, as to that Creature. According to this proportion of Mutton

Mutton, may be computed the quantity of Pullets, Chickens, and young Pidgeons, the number whereof is limited, according to the Seasons; as also what may be consum'd in Rice and Butter, for the Pilau, which is accounted the best dish in Turkey, and all over the East. Those Nations who are lovers of Temperance, and do not much study the satisfaction of the Palate, seldome have any other dish: and that not being contemptible, some haply will give me thanks for communicating the ordering of it.

The Turks, and generally all the Inhabitants of the Eastern Parts, make the Pilau after this manner. According to the quality of the persons who are to be entertain'd, and the quantity which is to be made of it, you take either a piece of Mutton alone, or together with that some Pullets or Pidgeons, which are to be boyld in a Pot, till they are half done, or somewhat more. When you think them so far boyld then pour out both Meat and Broath into a Basin, and the Pot being wash'd, put it on the Fire again with Butter in it, which they suffer to melt, till such time as it is very hot. Then they chop the meat which had been but half-boyld, into little pieces, the Pullets into quarters, and the Pidgeons into halves, and so they cast it into the Butter, they fricass it till it be of a very brown colour. The Rice being well wash'd they put some into the Pot over the meat, as much as they think fitting, and the Broath which had been pour'd into the Basin, they also put it into the Pot Ladle-ful after Ladle-ful, over the Rice, till such time as it stands two fingers breadth above it. Then is the Pot immediately cover'd, there is a clear Fire made under it, and they ever and anon take out some grains of the Rice, to see if it be softned, as also whether it be not requisite to put in some more of the Broath to compleat the stewing of it. For it is not like the Rice brought into our parts, which presently breaks asunder, but their Rice is of such a kind, that it must be fully boyld and yet the Grain entire, as well as the whole Pepper wherewith they season it. As soon as it is come to that condition, they cover the Pot with a Cloth three or four times doubled, and set the Pot-lid upon that, and sometime after they make another melting of Butter, till it be very red; to be cast into the holes, which are made in the Rice with the handle of the Ladle, after which they cover it again of a sudden, and so let it stand soaking a while, and then serve it up. It is put into large Dishes with the Meat, handsomly dispos'd upon it, and some part will be white, that is, continu'd in its natural colour, some part yellow, occasion'd by a little mixture of Saffron, and a third part of a Carnation-colour, done by the tincture of the juyce of Pomegranate. Nay, though the meat be as fat as is requisite for the ordering of this Dish, yet to make the Pilau more delicate and palatable to them, they bestow three pound of Butter on six pound of Rice, which makes it so extraordinary fat, that it disgusts, and is nauseous to those who are not accusom'd thereto, and accordingly would rather have the Rice it self simply boyld with Water and Salt. There are always two or three Dishes serv'd up after that manner, to the Grandees of the Port, who for the most part, keep open Table, and instead of Flesh they cover them with a great Aumelet or Omelet, made with good Herbs, and about three fingers thick, or with some poach'd Eggs, which are neatly dispos'd about it. A man is never incommodated by this kind of Rice, but the other, which is too fat, is not fit for those who drink Wine, and will not excite in them a desire to Eat of it often.

Since I have given you an account how they order the Pilau, I cannot forbear making you a further discovery of the Turks management of the Kitchen, and telling you how they roast their meat. The greater sort of meat, as Sheep and Lambs are roasted whole in Ovens made in the Floor, wherein they hang them by the heads, and they are taken out thence as it were brown-bak'd and Cook'd well enough, so as to excite Appetite. At the bottom of the Oven there is ordinarily a Basin plac'd, having in it some Rice and fair Water, which receives the drippings of the Beast, the very Tayl it self, which sometimes weighs fifteen or twenty pound, yelding a good quantity thereof, as being in a manner all fat. The Tayls of the Lambs, having not so much fat, are excellent meat, and in a manner as delicate as the Sweet-breads of Veal. These Lambs being thus roasted, are always serv'd up with Rice under them, and for the greater greater Tables, they serve up two of them in a Dish. So that there is no use of Spits in the Turkish Kitchens but what is for Poultry or Fowl, which they order so untowardly, that when they are brought up to the Table they appear so mangled and disorder'd, that it is no easie matter to distinguish the head from the feet. But it is to be observ'd, that the Pilan, and all sorts of Flesh-meat, are not serv'd up, but only at Supper, about five of the Clock in the Evening; and that in the Morning those of better Quality Eat only Sallets, Herbs, Fruits, and Conserve; the meaner sort of People contenting themselves with meats made of Milk, Melons and Cucumbers, according to the Season.

The way of ordering the Pilau.

A particular way of roasting in the Levant.

The Turks have an aversion for the Hare.

As for Fish, the Turks care not much for it, and though the Seas and Rivers are well replenish'd therewith, yet they seldom Eat of them. It seldom happens also, that any Venison or Wild-Fowl comes into their houses, as being a kind of meat they do not any way relish. But above all meats they have an aversion for the Hare; which Observation I made also in the Armenians, who are of a persuasion, that the Female of that Creature has its Monthly Courses regularly, as the Woman hath. It is easily perceivable, by what account I have given; that there is no great variety or delicacy in the Turkish Entertainments, and that the French and other Europeans, would not think themselves well treated thereat. But however, their Kitchens are kept very neat, they have all the accommodations requisite for their way of dressing, and whether you consider the Dishes and other Vessels they use, or the meat it self, there is as much cleanliness as can be expected.

Conserve.

The Offices where the Conserve and Sweet-meats are made (there being six or seven of them) are above the Kitchens, and serv'd by four hundred Halvagi, who were Establish'd by Sultan Solyman, a magnificent Prince, who also regulated all the Offices and Officers of the Seraglio. They are perpetually at Work in those seven Offices, and there they prepare all sorts of Conserve, dry and liquid, and several sorts of Syrups, as also several kinds of Turchi, which are Fruits preserv'd in Vinegar and Salt, into which they put a quantity of fragrant Herbs, such as Rosemary, Marjoram and Sage.

Several Compositions of Sherbet.

In the same Offices they also prepare the ordinary drink of the Turks, which they call Sherbet, and it is made several ways. That which is most common in Turkey comes somewhat near our Lemonade, but there is very little water in it; 'tis in a manner all juyce of Lemmon, or Citron, having an intermixture of Sugar, Amber, and Musk. They make another sort of it, which is highly in esteem, and that is made with the water destill'd from the flower of a Plant, which grows in Pools and Rivers, and has the figure of a Horse-shoe. These flowers are yellow, and called Nuloufer. But the Sherbet which they most esteem, and which is drunk by the Grand Signor himself, as also by the Bassa's and other Grande'es of the Port, is made of Violets and Sugar, and there is but little juyce of Citron put into it. They make also another sort of drink, which they call Magion, compos'd of several Drugs, whereby it is made hot: and there is another sort purposely prepar'd for the Grand Signor himself called Muscavi, of which he takes a Dose, when he intends to visit the Sultanesse's. The principal Persons about the Court send for it secretly to the Halvagi-bachi, who does not deny them, as being a great advantage to him, because he is well paid for it. Nor do they want Snow and Ice to cool all those Liquors, and the Turks are much more humerous and delicate in their Drinks, than they are in their Meat.

Receptacles for the Waters of the Seraglio.

At a place ten or twelve Paces distant, and opposite to these Offices is the Receptacle, or Reservatory, which distributes all the Waters of the Seraglio, and they are thence directed to every Quarter, into the places where there is a necessity of them. One of the Baltagi's has his station there all the day long, to give Water as he is directed. And when the Grand Signor passes from one Quarter to another, the Fountain of that where he is in Person, plays continually during his abode there, by a Signal which is given to the Baltagi.

The little Stables.

On the left hand in the same Court, and opposite to the Kitchens, may be seen the Grand Signor's little Stables, which do not hold above twenty five or thirty choice Horses, design'd for his Exercises with his Favourites, and above the Stables, in great Rooms, they keep the Saddles, Bridles, Housles, Trappings, Foot-Cloaths, and Stirrops, which are of inestimable value by reason of the abundance dance of precious Stones whereby they are enrich'd. There are some Harnesses which amount to a million of Livers, French Money. The great Stables stand all along the Canal, which beats against the Walls of the Seraglio. They are always well replenish'd, and in good order, and they take care that there be not so much as one vacant place therein. In those Stables does the Grand Seigneur keep a great number of Horses of value, to be reserv'd for the War, or to be us'd in some Magnificent Solemnity, that Strangers may see the Splendor of his Court.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Hall of the Divan, and the exact Justice which the Grand Seigneur causes to be admitted there.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Divan-Hall not very magnificent. The Council-days. Causes quickly decided. The causes of that expedition of Justice in Turkey. The subtle Policy of the Ottoman Family. The care which is taken to prevent the revolt of the Janizaries. How the Grand Seigneur assists at the Divan, or Council. The bold action of a Timar-Spahi, who kills a Grand Vizir, and is pardon'd. The noble Genius of Sultan Amurat, and by what Artifices he discovered a great breach of Trust. A kind of Beads us'd by the Turks at their Prayers. A noble Example of a severe Act of Justice. At what times, and how, the Grand Seigneur rids those out of the way whom he suspects. The days on which Ambassadors come to the Divan.

THE Hall of the Divan, which belongs to this Second Court, is on the left hand next to the little Stables, as you go towards the Grand Seigneur's Quarter. 'Tis a great low Hall, cover'd with Lead, and wainscotted and gilt in some places within, from which it derives a little Ornament. The Floor of it is cover'd with a great Carpet, and there are some Benches for the Officers, of whom that Council consists, which the Turks call Divan. There are, as I told you, Galleries of all the sides of that Court, which makes it look as it were like a Cloister; and 'tis under that Gallery which is on the right hand, that the Janizaries have their Station, while the Divan is sitting.

The Divan-Hall not very magnificent.

Council-days- The Council sits, ordinarily, four days in the week, which days are answerable to the Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tuesday of the Christians.

Causes soon decided. Justice is there exactly administred to any one that desires it, and for what cause soever it be, so, as that the differing Parties have no need either of Proctors or Advocates, Names not known in Turkey, and the Persons concern'd are to lay open their Cases themselves. There is no talk of delays, or putting off from one time to another; People shall not languish in Expectation, but the business is decided immediately, what nature soever it may be of.

The Reason of that Expedition of justice. Though this Custom be very commendable, yet can it not be so well practis'd amongst Christians, because they stand upon the property of what they have, and that is deriv'd by inheritance from some to others, and the litigious partitions of them do many times engage the Proprietors thereof in long Suits of Law. 'Tis quite otherwise amongst the Great Officers of the Port, who are all Slaves, either taken in War, or sent up, as Presents, by the Bassa's, and Governours of Provinces. All their Estates, when they die, return to the Grand Seignor, from whom they had receiv'd them, so that it is a perpetual Circulation, and their Children, as I told you in the beginning of this discourse, are brought up to the Seraglio, to be educated there, and that without any hope of ever succeeding their Parents, either in their Estates, or Employments. The Ottoman Monarchy has always observ'd this subtle Policy, not to permit that any Family should aggrandize it self, and be powerful from Father to Son: but they bring it down, as soon as they have rais'd it up, and timely enough deprive them of the means whereby they might create Factions, to the disturbance of the State. Thence it comes, that, besides the Royal Family of the Ottomans, they know not what Gentility, and antiquity of Extraction means; there's no emulation upon that score, Charges and Dignities are bestow'd answerable to the Merit of the Person, without any consideration of his Extraction. Nay, it sometimes happens, that the Principal Ministers of the Empire are the Sons of Cow-keepers, as was one Rustan, a Grand Vizir, who made so much noise under the Reign of Solyman. And so, being not any way oblig'd to their Birth, they acknowledge their Fortunes to be the reward of their Education.

But to return to the administration of Justice amongst the Turks. Those who make the Law their profession, and are look'd upon as the Clergy of Mahomet, leave no place for suits at Law; every one knows his priviledges, and what belongs to the function of his Charge, and there arise no differences among them, because all things are perfectly well regulated.

In like manner, the people are ignorant what pleading signifies. There's no occasion for publick Notaries, in order to Matrimonial Contracts; There's no great sums given with a daughter, and the jewels and cloaths which she can get out of her Fathers house, are all the portion she brings to her Husband. And this, in few words, is the reason that the Turks can put an expeditious end to all their affairs, without giving any toleration to that pettifogging, which, among Christians, proves the ruine of so many People.

The Officers, who sit in the Divan are, first, the Grand Vizir, the Lieutenant-General of the whole Empire, who is President of it, and represents the Grand Seignor's Person; Then the six other Vizirs; Then the Cadilesquers of Romania and Natolia, who are the Judges and Intendants of the Armies; Then the three Tesferdars, or Treasurers-General; Then the Nissangibacha, the Lord Chancellour; And the Netangi, who is as 'twere the Secretary of State, with some Clerks, or Notaries. All these Officers come into the Divan-Hall, at four in the Morning, and continue there till Noon, to administer Justice. The Chiaoux-bachi has his station at the Gate, with a troop of those that are under his charge, to execute the Grand Vizir's Orders, and has a silver-rod in his hand, as a badge of his Authority.

The care taken to prevent the revolt of the Janizaries. On those days that the Divan sits, the Officers are entertain'd at dinner in the same Hall, which is done with much Sobriety, and little Ceremony. All is over and taken away, in half an hours time. The Grand Vizir eats alone, unless he call a Bassa or two, to keep him company. There are carried also messes of Chourba which is a kind of pottage made with Rice, for the dinners of the Janizaries, who are in their stations, under the Galleries. But if it happen that they are in a mutinous humour, and incens'd against a Vizir, or against the Grand Seignor himself, not one of them will put his hand to the Chourba; but they they scornfully thrust back the dishes, and by that action discover their discontent.

The Grand Seigneur is presently advertis'd of it, and sends to them the Capou-Agasi, Grand Master of the Seraglio, to know what their pleasure is, and what they desire. Then they depute one of their own Body to go, and speak on the behalf of them all, and that person whispering the Capou-Agasi in the Ear, declares to him the occasion of their discontent. That Eunuch presently carries it to the Grand Seigneur; And if they have a peek against a Vizir or a Cadilesquer, or sometimes against their Aga, or Colonel, it often happens that to appease those mutineers, the Grand Seigneur orders them to be strangled, and sends them their heads.

Sunday and Tuesday are the principal days of the Divan, and then it is properly a Council of State, and of publick affairs. The Grand Seigneur most commonly afflicts at it, but is not seen; and that keeps in awe as well the Grand Vizir, as the other Officers. He can come thither from his own Apartment, through a close Gallery, and seat himself at a window, which looks into the Divan-Hall, and has always a velvet Curtain before it, which he draws when he pleases, and especially when he perceives that they have not done Justice. I shall produce here, an example, famous enough as to that particulat, which happen'd in the Reign of Sultan Achmet, the Father of Amurath and one of the justest Princes, that ever the Ottoman Empire had.

How the Grand Seigneur is present at the Divan.

The Reader is to call to mind, what I said at the beginning concerning the Timar-Spahi, on whom they bestow, during their lives, the Government and revenue of some Town, according as they have deserv'd by their Services. The Spahi, whose story I am going to relate, had a Timar, between Aleppo and Damas, which might bring him in a revenue of fifteen hundred Crowns. The Grand Vizir, either out of some aversion to the Spahi, or upon some false reports which had been made of him, and which he had been too forward to believe, without taking an exact information of things, took away from him the Timar, whereof he was possess'd, and bestow'd it on one of his own Creatures.

The bold action of a Timar-Spahi, who kills a Grand Vizir, and is pardon'd.

The Spahi, finding himself so unjustly dispossest, comes to Constantinople, enters into the Divan, and presents a Petition to the Grand Vizir, wherein he remonstrates to him his long Services, and how he never was chargeable with any negligence of his duty. The Grand Vizir having read it, tears it in his presence, which was to signifie as much, as that he would not answer it, and that there was nothing for the Spahi to hope for. The Petitioner withdrew, without saying any thing: but some days afterwards, he returns to the Divan, and presents a second Petition, which the Grand Vizir likewise tears, as he had done the former, without making any answer thereto. Upon this second injury, the Spahi, full of fury, and justly exasperated, draws his Poniard, falls upon the Vizir, and kills him.

The Grand Seigneur, who was then at the Window, having observed that action, draws the Curtain, and with a loud voice commanded that no hurt should be offer'd to the person who had done it. He thereupon orders the Spahi to approach, and ask'd him the Reason of his having demean'd himself with so much violence. The other much astonish'd, humbly makes answer, but with resolution enough, That he could not forbear doing what he had done, upon the sight of so great a piece of injustice: and thereupon presenting to him the Petition, which had been torn to pieces, the Grand Seigneur caus'd it to be read, and patiently hearkend to the just complaints which it contain'd. Having fully examin'd the Affair, his Highness commended the Spahi for the Action he had done, using the word Aferim, which is as much as to say, 'Tis well done, and which is ordinary in that Language, when they approve a thing; and thereupon, there was an additional Liberality made by the Grand Seigneur to the Command which he gave, that he should be re-established in his Timar. He thereupon took occasion to speak to the other Vizirs, and to tell them, That that Example should teach them to do just things, and not to suffer themselves to be so blinded by favour, as not to observe Equity. The violent action of the Spahi is certainly not to be approv'd, though the injustice of the Vizir was manifest, but the procedure of the Grand Seigneur, cannot be look'd on otherwise then as most commendable; and a great Model of perfect Equity.

I shall not think it much, to produce here a second Example of the exact Justice which the Grand Seignor would have administred to the People: and in this Example there is something that is signally remarkeable. A great Stone-Morter, which may be seen at the Gate of the Divan, serves for a Monumental confirmation of this Story; and whereas it is accompany'd by many circumstances worthy our observation, I think my self oblig'd not to conceal them from the Reader.

How Sultan
Amurate discover'd a secret breach of trust.

In the Reign of Sultan Amurat, a certain private Person finding himself without Wife or Children, resolv'd to undertake the Pilgrimage of Mecha. Before his departure, he conceiv'd, that he could not better dispose what he left behind him that was most valuable, then by putting it into the hands of a Hoggia, a Doctor of the Law. He thereupon left in his custody certain Jewels, in a little bag, intreating him to keep them till he return'd, and declaring him his Heir, in case he dy'd in his Pilgrimage. It was the Pilgrim's fortune to return safely from Mecha, and making no question but to get what he had entrusted the Hoggia withal, calls for what he had deposited in his hands. The other makes him a very cold answer, telling him, That he knew not what he meant, leaving him very much surpriz'd at so unexpected an account of his concerns. The Pilgrim, smothering his discontent, and reflecting, that the thing had been done without witnesses, did nothing for some days; but afterwards, he presents a Petition to the Grand Vizir, and acquaints him how all things had pass'd between him and the Doctor. The Grand Vizir perceiving there was a great nicety in that affair, and that the Doctor might easily deny a thing which had been transacted without witnesses, bid the Pilgrim have patience a while, and that he would give the Grand Seignor an account of it; which he accordingly did.

The Grand Seignor Commands the Vizir to be very circumspect in the management of that Affair, as being very desirous to sift out the truth of it, and orders him to send for the Doctor, to make protestations of friendship to him, and to put him in hopes of being employ'd of things in great importance. Some days pass on, while the Grand Vizir minds what Game he had to play. At length, he sends for the Doctor, he commends his ingenuity, and his Conduct; and so putting him into very fair hopes, he promises him to prevail so far with the Grand Seignor, as that he should have the honour to kiss his hands, since it was not just, that so transcendent a Wit as he should be any longer unknown to his Highness. The Doctor overjoy'd at that discourse, thought himself the happiest man in the World, especially when he saw, that the Grand Vizir had made him his Hoggia, which is as much as to say, his Almoner. The Vizir proceeds, and according to the secret Orders he had received from the Grand Seignor, gives the Doctor another Employment, which was, that he should bring him in Report of all the Criminal Affairs which could be presented. The Grand Seignor, upon the Report of the Hoggia, ask'd him his advice, and what punishment the guilty Person deserv'd for the Crime whereof he was convinc'd, the execution being to be done according to the judgment which the Doctor had pass'd, whom he made his ordinary Reader, and would have near his Person.

Five or six months pass on in this manner, ere there could be any discovery made of the falsify'd Trust. And it is to be observ'd, That the Pilgrim had given the Grand Seignor an exact Inventory of all the several things, which he had put into the little Bag. Among other things, there was particular mention made of a Tesbuch of fine Coral. This Tesbuch is a kind of Chapplet, or String of Beads, consisting of ninety and nine beads, upon each of which, the Turks repeat certain words taken out of some Sentences of the Alcoran. That Chapplet is divided into three parts, from thirty three, to thirty three beads, by a little string, which separates them; and at the end there hang'd a long piece of Coral, next to which there was another round bead, of the same material, of an extraordinary bigness.

The more Puritanical sort of Turks have their Beads in their hands when they are upon visits, and especially when they approach great Persons, and that very thing made the first discovery of the Hoggia's theft, and breach of trust. One day, coming into the Seraglio with his Coral beads in his hand, the Grand Seignor, before whom he presented himself, casting his eyes upon them, and pensively imagining, that it might well be the Pilgrim's Tesbuch, according to the description he had

had given it in the Catalogue of what things were left in the little Bag, told the Doctor, that he had a great rarity there. The other immediately approaches him, and intreats his Highness with all submission to accept of it. The Grand Seigneur takes it, and making some discoveries how acceptable that Present was to him, does by that prudent dissimulation, cause a joy in him, whose Chastisement he was then contriving.

But that single indicium the Grand Seigneur does not think enough, but he will have other discoveries; and knowing that among other things that were in the Bag, there was a Ring, the Work of an Excellent and Ancient Master, famous for that sort of Rings which the Turks wear on the Thumb, when they shoot with the Long bowe, he expects a second occasion, in order to a fuller discovery of the Cheat, and the more absolute conviction of the Doctor.

Twas not many days ere that happen'd, by the contrivance of the Emperour himself, who calling for one of his Pages, one well skill'd in Archery, went to the place of the Girt, where he also call'd for a Bowe, there being not any Person in the whole Empire but was inferior to him, as to strength and dexterity in the Exercises of the Bowe and the Dart. When he came to bend the Bowe, he complain'd that the Ring hurt his Thumb, presuming that the Doctor, who stood near him, and had already presented him with the Coral-Beads, would also make him a proffer of the Ring, which he had of the Pilgrims. Is it possible says the Grand Seigneur, that there is not at this time any Master living, who can make a Ring any thing like such a one, whom he nam'd? The Doctor whose apprehension was not so good, as to see that this Trap was laid for his destruction, and thinking to insinuate himself more and more into the Grand Seigneur's Favour, told him, That by good Fortune he had a Ring of that very Master's Work, which he had kept a long time, and that if his Highness would be pleas'd to Accept of it, he would bring it thither, which he presently did.

As soon as the Grand Seigneur was return'd to his own Quarter, he sent for the Grand Vizier, and the Pilgrim, who came into his presence, and he had in his hand the Chaplet of Coral, which he made as if he were repeating, to try whether the Pilgrim would know it again. The other having well observ'd it, address'd himself to the Emperour, saying, If it shall please your Highness to permit me to open my mouth, I dare affirm, that the Chaplet, you have in your hands, is very like that which I have in my little Bag of Jewels, and possibly I shall not be mistaken, if I say it is the very same. Whereupon the Grand Seigneur commands him to come nearer, and putting the Chaplet, and the Ring into his hands, the Pilgrim affirms, upon his Life, that they are the very same things, which he had left in the custody of the Doctor. He coming the next Morning, according to his custom to make a Report of some Criminal Cause, to the Grand Seigneur, that Prince, who was a person of great Ingenuity and Apprehension, proposes to him a Case somewhat of the same nature with that between him and the Pilgrim, and ask'd him what Punishment such a Crime deserv'd. The unfortunate man, blinded by a good fortune wherein he thought himself well establish'd, and what was past being clearly got out of his remembrance, pronounc'd Sentence against himself, and answers the Grand Seigneur, That such a Person, deserv'd to be pounded alive in a Mortar.

Upon that Sentence, the Emperour caus'd him to be immediately secur'd, and having order'd all his Chests to be brought into the Seraglio, by the Baltagis, whom he sent to his Lodgings, pulls out of his Pocket the Chaplet of Coral and the Ring, which a Pilgrim of Mecha had entrusted him with the custody of. He afterwards shews him the Note or Schedule of all the other Pieces; and commanding him to open his Chests, the Jewels were there found, which that unhappy man, convinc'd of his Guilt, and trembling for Fear, deliver'd up into the hands of the Grand Seigneur. The Pilgrim was call'd, who presently knew his Bag and his Jewels; and the Doctor by an open Confession, acknowledg'd his Crime, and Pertioussness.

The next day, the Emperour order'd the Divan to be Assembled, at which he command'd that all the Grandees about Constantinople should be present, to render the Judgement the more solemn. He first commanded, that whatever belong'd to the Pilgrim should be restor'd to him, together with some additional recompence:

pence: and his next command was, That the Doctor should be punish'd, according to his own Sentence. To that end, order was given, that a Stone should be made hollow, after the form of a Mortar, into which he was thrown stark naked, and pounded alive by the common Executioners. And that is the same Stone-Mortar which I have often seen near the Gate of the Divan, and is left there for a Memorial of so admirable and so solemn a Judgment. And this was the period of a History, whereof all the circumstances are remarkable, and which is not one of the least Monuments of the Wisdom of the Emperour Amurat. That Prince, instead of using his absolute power at the first overture of such an Affair, thought it fitter, by a perspicacity of mind and prudence, patiently to expect remote occasions, that he might thence deduce evident proofs of a conceal'd Crime: and his intention was to raise the Doctor to great dignities, if he had found him innocent; and to punish him severely, as he did, upon the discovery of his guilt.

At What time, how, the Grand Seignor rides out of the way, those, whom he suspects. I told you at the beginning of this Chapter, that of the four days of the Week; appointed for the sitting of the Divan, those which are answerable to our Sunday and Tuesday, are the principal, as being those on which the Affairs of greatest importance are debated. They call those two days Arzghiuuz, in regard, that after the Grand Visir, the six other Visirs, and the two Cadilesquers, who assist at the Divan, have administr'd Justice, they go all together to kiss the Grand Seignor's hands. If any one of those Nine Judges have ought to say to him, he is permitted on those days, to speak to him freely: and it is ordinarily upon those days also, that the Grand Seignor takes his time, if he has a mind to take off any one. He then orders the Bostangi-Bachi to be ready, with some of those who attend him, to execute his will; and having declar'd to him who they are, whom he would have strangled, the order is no sooner given, but that either at their arrival, or at their departure, it is punctually obey'd. True it is, that he does not demean himself so, but when he is afraid of some popular sedition, in case he should send to punish them in their own Houses, where they might make some resistance. But within the Seraglio, and in sight of the Janizaries, who are in their stations near the Divan, the unfortunate Person, whom they would have to be strangled, has no more to do than to bow down his Head, and to stretch out his Neck, without thinking of any resistance, which would be to no purpose. In the Eleventh Chapter I shall give an Account at large, how they proceed to that Execution.

The days on which Ambassadors come to the Divan.

A little beyond the Hall of the Divan, you come to another Hall, rais'd up after the manner of a Balcony, where the Ambassadors are seated; when they assist at the Divan, and that they do, once in three months, and upon the days that the Janizaries receive their Pay. There is Notice sent them to be there, out of a vain ostentation, that they may see, what abundance of money goes out of the Treasury. Between these two Halls there is a Gate, which leads to the Quarter of the Baltagin. Those are a sort of strong and robust People, employ'd, as I told you, in carrying of Wood all about the Seraglio, and other mean and painful Offices. As to the wood, which is burnt in the Apartments of the Women, they disburthen themselves of it at the Door, where the Negro-Eunuchs take it up, and carry it into the Baths and other Rooms, into which they only are permitted to go. And this is all that is considerable in that second Court. Let us now enter further into the Seraglio, and see how things are manag'd there.

C H A P. V.

Of the inner part of the Seraglio in general, and particularly, of the Quarter of the Eunuchs, and the Ichoglans:

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Ichoglans Educated under a severe Discipline. The great Officers of the Port taken out of the same School. The miserable condition of the Children of the Bassa's. The great Authority of the Capi-Aga. The Classes, through which the young Lads of the Seraglio are to pass. The Quarters of the four principal Eunuchs.

THE inner Seraglio is that part of the great Palace of the Ottoman Emperours, which, from the Second Court, whereof we have given a description, extends to the point, at which place the Gardens are terminated, and which comprehends in general, the Grand Seignors Quarter, and the Quarter of the Sultanelles. But in regard the former is distinguish'd into several Apartments, appointed for the Habitations of the Officers, who ordinarily approach the Grand Seigneur's Person, and are his most necessary attendants, I will conduct the Reader from one to another, and give a distinct relation of every one of them. In this Chapter, I shall treat only of those Apartments which are taken up by the Eunuchs, and the Ichoglans, who are under their Discipline.

At the begining of this discourse, I made mention of the four principal Eunuchs, who have others substitute to them, to observe the actions of those young Lads, who are committed to their charge, and to instruct them, as well in the Mahumetan Religion, as in the Exercises of the Body, and particularly, as to what relates to the Grand Seigneur's Service. The Quarter as well of the Eunuchs, as the Ichoglans stands next to the Divan-Hall, and begins to make part of the third Court, all along which it reaches on the left hand. It is divided into several Apartments, and among others, there are four, which they call Oda's, that is to say, Chambers, into which are distributed six hundred Ichoglans, according to the orders of the Capi-Aga; who, with the other principal Eunuchs, judges of every ones capacity. 'Tis the Capi-Aga also, who orders their passing out of one Oda into another, as we remove our Scholars from a sixth form to a fifth; and the case is the same in their Oda's as in our Forms, or Classes, this first of the four Oda's, the severities whereof they must weather out as well as they can, being the last in point of dignity. When he makes his general Visitation, upon which follows the foresaid promotion, he turns out of the Seraglio, all those whom he thinks incapable of doing their Prince good Service, and that such as betray their disgust of so austere a life; and then they are put out of all hopes of ever entring into the Seraglio any more, and cannot pretend to any other Fortune, then that of Spahis, with a small pay. The advantages of capacitating themselves for the most eminent Charges of the Court and the Empire, makes those who remain behind to take the greater courage, and accordingly they patiently suffer, for the space of many years, the harsh and unmerciful treatments of the Eunuchs, whom, upon all occasions, they always find very liberal of the Bastinado:

They

The wretched condition of the Bassa's Children.

They are those Ichoglans, whom we may also call the Grand Signor's Pages who are advanc'd to the dignity of Bassa's, Beys, Capigi-bachis, Haznadar-bachis, and the other great Officers of the Port. But they are particularly cull'd out of the number of the Tributary Children, who are taken away from the Christians, or taken in War, by Sea or Land. For, as to the Beizades, or Children of Bassa's, whom they bring up in the Seraglio, you are to remember what I have already said, that they can never ascend higher, than to the Charges of Beys, or Captains of Gallies.

When any one of these Ichoglans is desirous to remove out of the Seraglio, or if any one of the white Eunuchs has the same desire, he presents a Petition to the Capi-Aga, who carries it to the Grand Signor, he receives his dismissal, and is allow'd certain Pay, proportionable to the continuance and quality of his Services. But there are others, whom the same Capi-Aga turns out of the Seraglio against their wills, and that after they had weather'd out the first years, which are the most insupportable. And that is done sometimes upon this score, that the Capi-Aga having had some contest with any one of those Ichoglans, while they were Camarades in the time of their youth, and fearing least he should come one day to traverse his designs, he employs all his credit and interest, to remove him out of the Seraglio, but withal procuring him a Recompence and Salary, according to the number of years he has serv'd.

The Classes through which the Lads brought into the Seraglio are to pass.

The first of the four Chambers, into which the Ichoglans are distributed, has the greatest number of them, because they are yet very young, and as it were Novices, under the first Perula and it is called the Couchouk-Oda, that is to say, the little Chamber, though it be the largest of them all, in regard it is the lowest in point of Dignity. There they are taught to read and write, and are initiated in the first grounds of the Mahumetan Law. And after they have spent six years in that Chamber, they are remov'd into the second, which they call Quilar-Oda, wherein being grown more robust, they are instructed in the Exercises of the Body, in shooting with the Bowe, using the Lance and other divertisements of that kind. They are more perfected in the speaking of the Turkish Language, whereto they also add the Arabian, and the Persian, which they shall have occasion to use, in the Governments whereto they may be sent.

There are four years spent in this second Chamber, out of which they are again removed into the third, which they call Chasnadar-Oda, or the Chamber of the Treasury. In this Chamber they begin to do the Grand Signor some Service, and to be employ'd in the Wardrobe, and the Baths, and there they are also taught to Ride, and to perfect themselves in the Exercises suitable to that Station, wherein they ordinarily spend four years. Each of these three forementioned Chambers has a white Eunuch for its Chief Overseer. The Serai-Agasi has the Direction of the first; the Quilargi-bachi Commands in the second; and the Chasnadar-bachi is the Governour of the third.

I shall have occasion to speak more at large of the two last, when I come to the Chapters of the Cup-bearers Office, and the Treasury; and therefore I shall only add here, concerning all the three in general, that the Ichoglans, who are instructed therein, have not any Commerce with those of the fourth Chamber, of whom I shall give an account by and by, nor with any other Person out of the Seraglio, or in the other Courts, but with the particular permission of the Capi-Aga, and in the presence of an Eunuch, who hears all that is said: That they cannot converse amongst themselves but at certain regulated hours; and that conversation must be manag'd with a great observance of Modesty, as there is an exact Obedience remarkable in all their deportments: And lastly, that they are all clad in ordinary Cloth, even to the Beizades, that is, the Sons of Viziers and Bassa's who are dead, while those of the fourth Chamber wear Cloth of Gold and Silver, because they come into the Grand Signor's presence, and often approach his Person. I shall give you an account anon of their Dormitories, that is, the places where they take their repose, as also of the Functions of the Oda-bachi and the Deflergi-Aga, who act according to the Orders they receive from the four Eunuchs.

The fourth Chamber, which is the Prince's Chamber, is called Haz-Oda, and I shall speak of it when I come to treat of the Cup-bearers Office, and the Grand

Grand Seignor's secker Apartment. Here, the Ichoglans, who have endur'd hardship so many years in the three first Chambers, begin to take breath, and to be allow'd more Liberty. They are permitted to converse with all Persons within the Seraglio; and they have the advantage of frequent approaches to the Prince's Person, to whom they make themselves known, and from whom they ever and anon receive favours.

Under the Gate of the third Court, where a certain number of Eunuchs are upon the Guard Night and Day, there is a passage on the left hand which leads into a little Gallery, out of which there is an entrance into the Apartment of the Capou Agasi; and when the Gate is open, it hides that passage, into which a man cannot enter but with some difficulty. The Quarters of the Four principal Eunuchs.

A little further, and on the right hand of the Hall of Audience, stands the Apartment of the Serai Agasi, who is to take care for the keeping of the Seraglio clean and in good order; and a little further yet, near a little Mosque, where the Ichoglans of the three first Chambers go to their Devotions, lies the Quarter of the Seferlis, who are an hundred and fifty of the Ichoglans, or thereabouts, particularly appointed for the washing of the Grand Seignor's Linnen. When he goes into the Countrey, the most Antient among them are of his Retinue; and there must be comprehended in that Number, such as play on Timbrels, and the other Instrumental Musicians, who have the same appointments with the rest.

Let us now enter into the Hall of Audience, which is a Quarter as 'twere independent from others, and where the Grand Seignor receives Foreign Ambassadors.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Hall wherein the Grand Seignor gives Audience to Forein Ambassadors, and the manner how they are receiv'd.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The description of the Hall of Audience. The Grand Seignor's Throne. The manner how Ambassadors are receiv'd. Remarks upon the number of Vestments which the Grand Seignor orders to be bestow'd on the Ambassadors of Christian Princes. The form of the Oath of Allegiance, which the Cham of the Lesser Tartary comes to take at the same place.

THE third Court of the Seraglio, wherein we now are, is far from being so regular, as the precedent, and the Structures within sufficiently discover, that the Persons by whom it was built, minded not the observance of any Order in the doing of it. The Hall of Audience described. When you are at the Gate of this Court, you have just opposite to you a little Apartment, not adjoyning to the others, at the entrance of which you find, on both sides, a Fountain issuing out of a Wall, the Water whereof is receiv'd into two Basins or Cisterns: And 'tis in this Appartment that the Hall of Audience stands: 'Tis an arched Structure noble enough in its kind, sustain'd by Marble Pillars, and there is yet to be seen in the midst of it, a small spout of Water, which falls into a Basin. This Hall is open of all sides, and at the lower end, opposite to the Gate, they place the Grand Seignor's Throne.

The Grand
Seignor's
Throne.

This Throne, which is rich enough is in the manner of an Altar, and it is brought into that Hall only upon those days, whereon the Grand Seignor is willing to give Audience to Ambassadors, and when the new Cham of the Lesser Tartary, whom he has chosen to govern there, comes to receive the Investiture of his Kingdom, and to take the accustomed Oath. The back-side of the Throne, is set against a partition erected for that purpose, which is not above half a foot higher than it, and 'tis that keeps in the cushions which are behind the Grand Seignor.

There are in the Treasury-Chamber eight several very sumptuous Coverings purposely made to cover the aforesaid Throne: and they are so large, that they reach down to the ground on three sides of it, that is to say, before, on the right hand, and on the left: for as to the back-part, it is, as I told you, fastn'd to the partition. The most Magnificent of all those Coverings is of a black Velvet, with an Embroidry of great Pearls, whereof some are long, and others round, and in the form of Buttons. There is another of white Velvet, set out with an Embroidry of Rubies and Emeralds, most whereof are set in Beazils, or Collers, the better to keep them in. There is a third, of a Violet-colour'd Velvet, embroyder'd with Turqueses and Pearls. The three others, which are next in esteem to these, are also of Velvets of different Colours, with a rich Embroidry of Gold. And the two last are of a Gold-Brokado, which have also their particular Beauty and sumptuousness. The Throne is adorn'd with one of these coverings, according to the Grand Seignor's respect to the Sovereign, whose Embassy he receives; and he levels his own Magnificence to that of the Prince whom he would honour.

receiving the Ambassadors,

And this is the manner how the Ambassadors are received into the Hall. For as to the Order, and Ceremonies of their march from the Hôtel, or great House of Perra, to the Port of Constantinople, and from the Port, to the Seraglio, no question but there have been Relations enough made already. After the Ambassador has din'd in the Hall of the Divan, with the Grand Visir, who there expected him, while his Retinue are entertain'd under the Gallery, upon some old Carpets of Leather, which they spread upon the ground, and upon which there are a few Dishes of Meat set, he receives the Vells or Garments, which the Grand Seignor sends him, as well for his own Person, as for those who Accompany him, and they put them on immediately, over all the Cloaths they have about them, as they would do a Morning-Gown.

In this Equipage the Ambassador is conducted to the Hall of Audience, by the Capi-Aga, the Grand Master of the Ceremonies, who is assisted by several Eunuchs: and when he is at the Door, two Visirs stand ready to receive him, and they go on each side of him, till he comes to the place, where he is to bowe, and to kiss the Grand Seignor's Garment. From the very Gate of the Court, kept by the Eunuchs, quite to that of the Hall, they walk all along upon Carpets of Silk; and the Floor of the Hall, though all paved with Marble, is also covered with another Carpet of Gold, the Workmanship whereof somewhat resembles that of our ordinary Straw-Mats, and much about the same thickness.

The Grand Seignor demeans himself with a great deal of gravity, while he is in his Throne; and behind the little Wall or Partition, against which it is set, you see, standing in order, the Kisler-Agasi, who is a Negro-Eunuch, and chief Overseer of the Appartment of the Women; the Seligidar-Aga, who carries the Grand Seignor's Sword; the Chokadar-Aga, who carries the Royal Robe, an Officer whom in France they call Porte-Manteau; the Riquabdar, who holds the Stirrup, when the Prince gets on Horse-back; and the Hazadabachi, chief of the Chamber, which Office would be equivalent in France, to that of the Grand Master of the Wardrobe.

All these fore-mentioned Officers do all deport themselves with a great appearance of modesty, having their Arms cross their Breasts: And as to the Capi-Aga, the Introducer to the Ambassadors, and Grand Master of the Seraglio, he stands in the midst of the Hall, and in the same posture of humility. On the left side of the Throne, there is a kind of a low Seat, cover'd with red Velvet, with a Gold-fringe, on which the Ambassadors go and sit down, after they have kiss'd the Grand Signor's Robe; till such time as those of their Retinue, who have had Vests, the number whereof is limited, have perform'd the same Ceremony. In the mean time, all the Bassas are standing, in the presence of their Prince; nay, the Cham of the Lesser Tartary is not excepted out of that Law, when he comes to do homage. All this action is perform'd in great silence, and the Grand Signor making no answer at all at that time, leaves it to the Grand Vizir, to make some short Complement, in order to the dismissal of the Ambassador, who withdraws with a profound reverence, without uncovering his head, or turning his back, till he be out of the Hall.

The Ministers of Christian Princes and States who ordinarily reside at the Port, are the Ambassadors of England, France, and Venice, and the Resident of the States General, who have all their respective Habitations in Pera. When there comes thither any Ambassador or Resident, from the Emperor, or from Poland, or Muscovy, they oblige them to take up their abodes at Constantinople, that they may be the more assur'd of their persons.

The Grand Signor distinguishes the Quality of those Princes and States, and the esteem he has for them, by the number of Vests which he orders to be bestow'd on their Ambassadors when they come to Audience. The Ambassador of France has four and twenty allow'd him; the Ambassador of England, sixteen; the Ambassador or Agent of Venice receives twelve, and the Dutch Ambassador, as many.

Remarks on the number of Vests, which the Grand Signor orders to be given the Ambassadors of Christian Princes

When Monsieur de Marcheville was Ambassador in Turkey, from his most Christian Majesty of France, I had the honour to be one of those who accompanied him to the Seraglio, where after Dinner with the Vizirs, in the Divan-Hall, while his Retinue were treated under the Gallery, the Vests were brought according to the custome. The Ambassador coming to distribute them to those whom he had a mind to favour, and take along with him to the Audience, he was much surpriz'd, to find that he had got but sixteen. He immediately sent word to the Grand Vizir, that he wanted eight Vests, and that he would not go to his Audience, till he had the full number, which they had wont to present to the Ambassadors of France. There was some contest about it, which retarded the Audience near an hours time; but at last Monsieur de Marcheville persisting in his resolution, the Grand Vizir complied, and sent him eight other Vests.

What remains of this Chapter must represent the manner, how the Cham of the Lesser Tartary comes into this Hall of Audience to take the Oath of Allegiance to the Grand Signor. The Reader will be pleas'd to remember, what Observation I made at the beginning of this Work concerning the Family of that Tributary Prince, whom the Ottoman Emperors keep under the Yoke. The Cham who is to Reign in his turn, and according to what disposal the Grand Signor has made of the Government, presents himself before him in the Hall of Audience, and after he has kiss'd his Robe, retires some paces back, and stands. Then they bring in the Alcoran, upon a great green Velvet Cushion, without any Embroidery, at the four Corners whereof there are four Tassels of Gold and Silk, and they place it on the Grand Signors right hand. Now whereas he sits on a Carpet cross-legg'd, there must be great care taken, that the Cushion be not so high as his knees; for the Turks would account that a great sin; and they bear so great a respect to the Book of the Alcoran, that they cannot touch it till they have first wash'd themselves. Before they open it, they kiss it, and put it upon their heads, and after they have read something in it, they kiss the writing of it, and then they rub their faces with it, before they shut it. The Prince, who is to take his Oath, is standing all this time, as I told you, with his hands stretch'd out one against the other, and lifted up as high as his shoulders, to receive the Book of the Alcoran out of those of the Capi-Aga, who had been to take it off the Cushion, having kiss'd it and touch'd his head with it.

The Form of the Oath of Allegiance made by the Cham of the Lesser Tartary to the Grand Signor.

The Oath which the Cham takes is in these Words :

Bon quittab hak juchun seadetlu, padichaim, tare fin den her ne Emir, ve ferman bana keleurse itaat ideym.

That is to say,

By the Truth of this Book I will cause to be executed all the Orders and Commands which shall be brought unto me from my Lord.

And now that I have given you the Oath of Allegiance made by the Vassal to his Lord, I shall also add the Form of that, which the Ottoman Emperour requires of all the Christian Princes, who are subject to his Jurisdiction, such as are the Princes of Moldavia and Walachia. It runs in these words:

Hi isa hac juchum, seadetlu padichaim tare fin den her ne Emir, ve ferman bana keleurse itaat Ideym.

That is to say,

By the Truth of Jesus Christ, I will cause to be executed all the Orders and Commands, which shall be brought unto me from the Emperour my Lord:

The Grand Seigneur requires also an Oath of Allegiance of all the Bassa's, whom he sends to the Frontiers of the Empire; as the Bassa's of Grand Cairo, Babylon, and Buda, which is more than he exacts of the other Governours of Provinces, which are not upon the Confines of his Territories, and of whom he has no ground to be afraid.

Let us now make our Entrance into the Quarter of the Eunuchs and the Icho-glans, whereof the Baths make a great part.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Baths of the Seraglio.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The prodigious strength of Body of a certain Ichoglan. The Mosque belonging to the Apartment of the Eunuchs. The Employments of the Dwarfs, and the Mutes. The Superstition of the Turks in the manner of paring their Nails. The Colours forbidden the Christians in whatever they wear about their heads. The Description of the Baths. Certain Abuses reform'd. Why the Inhabitants of the Eastern Parts do not make use of Paper upon an undecent account. The Persians more scrupulous than the Turks. They are great Lovers of cleanliness. Certain Chambers very commodious and divertive. The strict prohibition of Mahomet for any one to suffer himself to be seen stark naked. A certain Earth which takes off the Hair, and its dangerous effects.

THE Baths design'd for the Grand Seigneur's own Person, and his principal Officers, take up a great space of the Quarter of the Eunuchs. The little Ovens, whereby they are heated, called Kulkans, are adjoyning to the Apartment of the Serai-bondashi, and fifteen Ichoglans, the most robust that can be found, are employ'd in keeping the Fire going. They have the denomination of Kulkangis; and five and twenty others, who are named Dellaks, are employ'd in the Baths, to shave and rub the Body, as also in applying Cupping-Glasses to those who stand in need thereof. Among the Kulkangis, he who is the most antient in that employment, has a pre-eminence and superiority over the rest, whom he many times commands to exercise themselves in wrestling, and lifting a heavy Iron Bar with one hand. There are three such Bars fasten'd upon great Cramp-Irons over the door that goes into the Baths, and the middlemost of the three, as it is commonly reported, weighs a hundred Okkas, which amount to Three hundred and fifty pounds Paris weight; an Okka weighing three pounds and a half, or thereabouts. There was heretofore one of those Ichoglans, of so prodigious strength, that the Grand Seigneur himself would have the satisfaction of seeing a tryal whether he could with one hand lift up and turn about that Iron-bar; which he did to the great astonishment of the Prince, and presently after he entertain'd him with another demonstration of the strength of his Arm. Over these three Iron-bars, there hung two Head-pieces of Iron, whereof one was an inch in thickness, and the other about the eighth part of an inch. The same Ichoglan did, in the Grand Seigneur's presence, at one blow of a Battle-Axe, Axe, cut through the head-piece of an inch thick, and, at one blow with a Sabre, cleft the other to the middle of it.

The Mosque belonging to the Appartment of the Eunuchs.

Opposite to those Ovens are the Cocks, whereby the waters are distributed into the several Rooms of the Baths; and I forgot to tell you, That before you enter into that place, you find a little Mosque, adjoining to the Appartment of the Saraiket-boudasi, where all the Iehoglans go to their devotions twice a day. If they fail the doing of it, the Oda-bachi, who, in every Chamber, takes notice of their demeanours, calls them to an account, and they are sure of the bastinado, as they are also for any other fault they commit, and sometimes they receive the said punishment on the soles of their feet, and, upon some occasions to such a number of blowes, that the nails of their toes come off; and that is the punishment which is properly call'd Drubbing.

The Employment of the Dwarfs and Mutes.

Out of that Mosque you pass into a Gallery, adjoining to the Baths, and there the Distis and the Geuges; that is to say, the Mutes and the Dwarfs are employ'd in some work or other all day long. Some spend the time in learning to make up Turbants, wherein there is more work and difficulty than is imagin'd, especially in making up the Grand Seignor's own Turbant, when he goes to the Divan. For then he takes an extraordinary large one, as do also all the Officers of the same Divan when they go to Council: and I cannot make a better representation of that kind of Turbant, then by the form of our largest sort of Citrals, if they be made hollow in the middle, so as that the head might enter into that hole.

Others are employ'd in shaving, paring the nails, and other things of that kind. They do not make use of any Scizars for the nails, in Turkey nor in any part of Asia; it being a thing forbidden by Mahomet in his Law, and accordingly they account the doing of it a great sin. But they make use of a little Steel Instrument, somewhat like a Pen-knife, and the only cutting part is the end of it, and they are dextrous enough in the performance of that Office. It is the Custom all over the East, that the Barber who trims you, should also make up your Turbant, which is many times discompos'd, pair the Nails of your Hands and Toes, and take away the filth out of your Ears: for the Turks and all the Inhabitants of Asia, are great lovers of cleanliness, and cannot endure the least nastiness, either on themselves, or those who come near them, as I shall give you an account anon.

Colours forbidden the Christians in their Coiffure.

And having spoken so much of the Turbant, it will not be unreasonable for me to communicate this Remark to you here, That in the Ottoman Empire, and all over Arabia, none but Mahumetans are permitted to make use of White for the covering of their Heads; whereas in Persia, and all over the Great Mogul's Empire, men may take what Colours they please themselves.

The description of the Baths.

I come now to the great Bath, which is adjoining to the Chamber of the Hamangi-bachi, who is the chief Overseer of it, and which makes part of the Appartment of the Seferlis, or the Grand Seignor's Laundry-men. The place where they put off their Cloaths, is a spacious Louver or Banqueting-House of Free-stone, high enough, and in one of the most eminent parts of the Seraglio. The Floor is paved with a very delightful kind of Marble laid in square pieces; and it has two large Windows jutting out upon the Gardens, somewhat like Balconies, from which you have a Prospect of the two Seas. In the midst of that Domo or Louver, you find a Fountain, the Water whereof is received into two Basins or Cisterns. The former, which is the highest, and withal the least, is of one piece of White Marble, having in it a little intermixture of Red and Black Veins, and pierced through at six several places, for the reception of so many small Pipes of Copper through which the Water falls down into the other Basin, which is also of Marble, of several Pieces, and several Colours.

Abuses re-
form'd

Within the Domo, there is a great number of Poles, which are disposed all about it, and supported by certain pieces of Iron coming out of the Wall. Upon those Poles they dry the Linnen which they had used in the Bath; and of that Linnen there are several sorts. Heretofore, the Pages were allowed only a long Piece of Linnen Cloth, which came only twice about their waists: but upon observation made, that they abused them, and that handsome young Lads playing together, snatched that piece of Linnen one from the other, purposely to discover the their nakedness, they use in the Baths only such Garments of Linnen as are sowed close above, and reach from the waste down to the Feet, much after the manner of a Womans Petti-coat. At their coming out of the Bath, they have two other sorts of Linnen to dry themselves withal, of the largeness of ordinary Table-Cloths, whereof the one is Red, with a border of Silk of three fingers breadth, which covers them, as soon as they are out of the water, from the waste downwards to the ham; and the other is White, wherewith they rub themselves. For these two sorts of Towels they have but one Name, to wit, Peehetamal.

On one side of the Fountain, which is in the midst of the Domo, there is an entrance into the Bath, and near that is the Hall where they uncloath themselves in the Winter-time. A little Gallery which lies on the left hand, leads to the places design'd for the easing of nature, and every seat has a little Cock, which supplies them with water to wash themselves, after they have done. It is accounted an heinous Sin among them, to make use of Paper for that purpose; and the reason they give for it is this, That, possibly, the Name of God might be written upon it, or might contain some Text of the Law, which would be a profanation of it, and consequently ought to be avoided. Besides, they have another opinion, That Paper is not so proper so well to make clean that part, which the necessity of the Body does ordinarily so much defile, but that there may be something of ordure left; and that being obliged to present themselves before God with an absolute Purity of Body and Mind, their Prayers could not be heard, if they should not be wholly clean.

Why the Levantines do not use Paper un- decently.

The Persians are yet more scrupulous than the Turks upon this account. For though they both agree in this, That their Devotions are ineffectual, nay indeed that they are not in a condition to perform them without crime, if they be not pure, as to Body and Mind; Yet the former are of a persuasion, That the least ordure which, through Negligence or Inadvertency, might remain upon their Persons or their Garments, would render their Prayers fruitless and criminal, which the Turks, somewhat less superstitious as to that particular, will not acknowledge.

The Persians more scrupulous than the Turks.

Certain it is also, That in Persia they are extraordinary Lovers of Cleanliness, insomuch that I have observed, That at Ispahan, the Metropolis of that Country, where the Streets are not paved, when there falls a little Snow or Rain, which must occasion some dirt, few People will come out of their Houses, unless they be forced thereto by some Concern of great importance. And when they do go abroad at such a time, at the House-door into which they are to enter, they put off their Shooes, their Upper-garment, the Cap which covers their Turbants; and if they have the least dirt or filth about them, they think themselves impure, and that it would be a disrespect to the Person whom they are to Visit. Nay, a Persian shall be very scrupulous, and make a great difficulty to receive a Man into his House in Foul Weather; and if any one presents himself into that pleasure, he makes a sign to him with his hand to keep at a certain distance from him, in the place wherein he is to enter into Discourse with him. For if by chance as he comes out of the Street, where there is some dirt, and where Horses pass to and fro, and may cast some of it upon him, he has the least spot of any daggling about him, and afterwards touch the Person whom he comes to Visit, this latter would be Nagis, that is to say, Unclean, and thereupon be obliged immediately to change his Cloaths; so great is the Superstition of the Persians, as to that particular.

They are great lovers of cleanliness.

At the end of the Gallery, there is a door which gives you passage into three Chambers, which are so many Baths for the use of the Grand Signor's Quarter. There is adjoining to the last of those Chambers a spacious place pav'd Chequer-wise with Marble of different colours, and there the Ieboglans are trimm'd. This place has a little eminency in the midst of it, from which there is a gentle descent of all sides, that the Water wherewith the Barbars wash their Heads and Beards may the more easily be carried off, and the place be always kept clean. On both sides of the Wall, whereby it is enclos'd, there is a great double Cock, with two Keys belonging to it, which, at the same mouth, supplies them alternately with either hot water, or cold, and that falls into a Basin or Receptacle of White Marble.

Chambers very divertive and Commodious.

Marble, wherein three or four men may bathe themselves without any inconvenience, or trouble one to the other. There is also at one of the ends a little Room of Black and White Marble, and there the Barbers, who have no knowledge of any other Profession, put up all their necessary Utensils and Instruments, as Razors, Hones, Balls, and those Irons wherewith they pare their Nails: for as for Linnen, they do not use any; and those who are to be shav'd come in stark naked from the Waste upwards, and are cover'd from thence downwards, only with a Cloath, which reaches to the Ankle. 'Tis a great Rarity to meet with any one among those Barbers that knowes how to let blood, and their Lancets, are much like the Fleams, wherewith our Farriers bleed Horses.

Opposite to the Chamber of the Barbers, there are three other Rooms arch'd with Marble, the largest whereof much surpasses in Beauty those that are adjoining to it. The Floor of it is of white and black Marble, and the Walls are done about with square pieces, that are white and blew, and in every one of them you find a Flower in embols'd Work, done to the Life, and which a man would take for enamell. Little Lamines or Plates of Gold cover the junctures of those square pieces, and there cannot any thing be imagin'd more pleasant and divertive than that Chamber is. In the Roof of it, there are several round holes, of about half a foot diameter, over which there are little Glasses made in the fashion of Bells, order'd as the Venice Looking-Glasses are, lest any one should have the curiosity, to get up to the Roof, and laying himself upon his belly think to see what is done in the Bath. The place has no light but what it receives by the means of those holes, and while some body is in the Bath: But especially when they go out of it, the door is shut, the better to keep in the heat, and to prevent their being seen; which might be if instead of those forementioned holes in the Roof, there were Windows below, according to our Mode. All the other Baths have their Structures after the same manner, and having no light but what comes at little glaz'd holes, there is not any passage into it but that of the door, to the end that being presently shut, the heat might the better be kept within the Bath, and to prevent their being seen who are in it.

The Second Chamber is another Bath, but as to Beauty, it is much inferiour to the other; And as for the third, there is something in it which is singularly remarkable. The Floor of it is lay'd as with a sort of small stones, so as that the foot cannot slip, though it be wetted at their departure out of the Bath: And the whole Room is done all about with square pieces, having in them flowers of embols'd work, done to the Life and covered with Gold and Azure. This is the place into which the Grand Seignor enters, when he comes out of the Bath; and he always goes into it alone, when he intends to shave himself in those parts, which are not to be nam'd without immodesty.

*Mahomet's

Mahomet pronounces a Curse upon those persons who suffer themselves to be seen, and upon all those who look on them: And the strict observance, of his Law requires, That both Men and Women ought to shave themselves, without using the assistance of any other hand.

An Earth that takes off hair, and its dangerous effects.

But most of the Inhabitants of the EASTERN Parts, the Arabians, Tartars, and the Indians, make use of a more easie expedient than the Razor, to get off hair. It is a certain Earth, which they mix with some Orpiment, or Arlenick, and which becomes soft as butter. When they are in the Bath, and begin to sweat, they take of that Earth and therewith rub the parts, from which they would have the hair to fall, and presently after they must be very carefull to see, whether it begins to fall, as one would observe a Fowl, whose feathers he would take off, after it had been cast into scalding water. For if that Earth be left too long upon the parts whereto it had been apply'd, it burns and makes holes in the flesh, the marks whereof will remain, somewhat resembling those, which the Small Pox sometimes leaves behind it. Besides the skin of those parts, whereto this application is made, becomes in time as hard and rough as Leather; and those ungrateful inconveniencies have diverted the Turks and Persians from using that Expedient. Nor do the Christians of the Levantine Countries make use of it, though they imitate the Mahometans in the Custom of frequenting the

Baths:

Baths: But above all, in Persia, none make use of that remedy, but the poorer sort of people. The Ladies, not regarding the prohibition of Mahomet, employ their Female Slaves for the performance of that Office; and with a small kind of Pincers and twitchers, such as those, wherewith we take of the hair of the mustachoes, they do, with a little more trouble, but less hazard, what that Earth does in less time, but with more danger. Our Sultaneſſes are yet too delicate to imitate the Ladies of Persia; nay the Men themselves, in Turkey, are not very forward to have that twitch'd off with pain; which the Razour can take off without any trouble.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Grand Seignor's Treasury.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

Noble Relicks of Antiquity. The Turks cannot endure Figures representing either Man or Beast. The Chambers of the Treasury, and their Wealth. The Blood of the Bassa's is one of the Rivers which enter into that Sea of the Treasury. The use of Aloes Wood in Turkey. A sort of Basins of a more commodious form than ours, for the washing of the hands. Tapers or Candles of a kind of wax of great value. Coffers full of all sorts of precious stones. The Precautions and Ceremonies which are observ'd at the opening of the Treasury. A magnificent Piece of Tapistry, wherein the Emperour Charles the Fifth, is represented, in emboss'd Work. A particular Relation of a Bassa named Rustan. The heroick sentiment of a Turk. The principal sources of the Wealth of the Empire. How the Revenues of Egypt are employ'd.

THE Treasury of the Seraglio and the Ottoman Empire, the vast Wealth therein contain'd, and the excellent order wherewith it is govern'd, requir'd my being a little more large upon that subject. I shall discover all the Rivets which fall into that Sea, and may have some resemblance to those that enter into the Caspian Sea, and are never seen to come out of it again.

Out of the Chamber, where the Grand Seignor shaves himself, you pass into a Gallery, which is Thirty Paces in length, and between Nine and Ten in breadth. There are on the one side of it, Six great Marble-Pillars, of Fifteen Foot in height, and of different colours, among which there is one of a very delightful Green, and that colour makes the Turks have a great esteem for it. You have under your feet in this Gallery a Walk of large square Pieces of Marble, and the high-rais'd Fret-work thereof is a Relick of Antiquity; and there are in it excellent Pieces of Painting after the Mosaick way, representing divers Persons.

and

and which some conceive to have been made for the reception and entertainment of some great Prince, in the time of the Greek Emperours.

The Turks have an aversion for Figures representing Man or Beast.

The Turks, who have not among them either Gravers or Painters, in order to the making of any representation of Man or Beast, for which they have an aversion, have thought it much to endure those Figures, and not being able to refrain from disfiguring the heads, there is nothing left but the bodies; which is much to be regretted. It may easily be conjectur'd, that the Gallery was open on both sides, as being so still to the Court-side, and 'tis in the midst of the Wall, whereby it is enclos'd on the other side, that the Door of the Treasury stands.

The Chambers of the Treasury, and their Wealth.

The first Treasury consists in Four Chambers full of Riches and Rarities: The first contains a vast quantity of Long-Bows, Arrows, Crois-bows, Muskets, Fire-locks, Sabres, Cymitars, and other Arms of that kind, which are all so many Master-Pieces, that have been presented, from time to time, to the Turkish Emperours. All these Arms are either hung up at the Ceiling, or fasten'd against the Wall; but in a pitiful condition, all over-run with rust, and cover'd with dust; and the Grand Seigneur suffers them to be so neglected, because there come in daily Presents of Arms excellently wrought, the novelty whereof makes him forget the old ones; as also for that it is the humour of the Turks, not to make any great account of Curiosities, but at the very time they are presented with them.

The Second Chamber is a very spacious Arched Structure, of the same height and Architecture as that of the Bath, of which I gave you an account in the precedent Chapter; where they go and undcloth themselves in the Summer time: And there is no difference between them, save only that this last has no overtures in the Roof. That place contains Six great Chests, or Coffers, each of them of Twelve Foot in length, Six in breadth, and Six in depth; and if the Covers were not broken to pieces, two men would find it a hard matter to lift them, they are so weighty. These Coffers, which are called Ambars, are full of all sorts of Cloaths for the Grand Seigneur's use, as Vests, rich Furs, Magnificent Turbants, and Cushions embroider'd with Pearls.

Besides the Six Coffers before mentioned, there are Eight others, which are but Eight Foot in length, and four in breadth; and these are fill'd with Pieces of Scarlet, English and Dutch Cloaths, of the finest sorts, Pieces of Velvet, Gold and Silver Brokadoes, Embroider'd Coverlets and Counterpanes for Beds, and other rich Commodities of that Nature. As for the Bridles and Saddles cover'd with precious Stones, they are dispos'd upon supporters of Wood or Iron, coming out of the Wall: and all this Chamber is generally very well kept, and all things are neat, and in good order.

The Third Chamber is very spacious, and is more like a great Hall. The first thing that entertains your Eye, is a great Coffer, the inside whereof is divided into three parts, and makes as it were Three other Coffers, one upon the other: but they are open'd all on the out-side, so as that if there be any thing look'd for in the undermost, there is no necessity of stirring the uppermost. The lowermost Coffer contains those sumptuous Coverings for the Grand Seigneur's Throne, of which I have spoken in the Description of the Hall of Audience. In the middlemost are dispos'd the Housses and Trappings, enrich'd with Embroidery, and some of them with Pearls and precious Stones, which are used in great Solemnities. In the uppermost Coffer, are kept the Bridles, Breast-Pieces, Cruppers, and Stirrups, which are recommendable upon the score of the Diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, and other Precious Stones, whereby they are enrich'd: but the greatest part of them is cover'd with Turkish Stones, which they have the art of setting excellently well.

The Blood of the Bassa's one of the Rivers that fall into the Sea of the Treasury.

It is a most astonishing sight, to behold the quantity of those precious Harnesses: but it is such only to those, who are ignorant, how the Grand Seigneur replenishes his Treasury with so much Wealth. It happens thus, That there being a frequent mortality amongst the Bassa's and others, who are Governours, of Provinces, whether it be by a natural death, or a violent, and all they have in the World falling to the Grand Seigneur, as I told you elsewhere, and being brought into the Seraglio, there are ordinarily found, amongst their rich Harnesses, some Bridles cover'd with precious Stones, and those Bridles are brought into the Treasury.

The

The Case is the same with the Gold and Silver ready coyn'd, and all the Jewels, and whatever else those Basha's were possess'd of. But as to their Saddles, which ordinarily are cover'd with Plates of Gold of the thickness of a Ducat, they are put into the hands of the Imbrohor-bachi, who is the Master of the Horse, and come not within the Seraglio.

There are besides, in the very same Chamber, several other Coffers of different Bunks, wherein there is contain'd abundance of most precious things. Some of them are full of rich Swords, adorn'd with precious Stones, as also of Sabres which have the same Ornaments. For the Turks when they are on Horse-back, make use of both Sabres and Swords, of a good length, and somewhat broader than ours. They wear the Sabre on one side, and fasten the Sword all along the Saddle, as they also do the Battle-Axe, yet so as that this last passes under their Thighs, which cannot incommode them much, because when they are mounted, they ride with very short Stirrups. The Sides, and the Handles of the Battle-Axes which they carry in Triumph, are also covered with precious Stones; and in all their Accoutrements the Turks are Magnificent, and do not spare for Money. When the Grand Signor designs to honour a Bassa, he sends him one of those Swords, or one of those Sabres, with a Vest of Gold-Brockado, lin'd with some rich Fur. But these sumptuous Pieces do but pass to and fro, in as much as that upon the Death of the Bassa's, whose Estates fall to the Grand Signor, and consequently are brought into the Seraglio, they are still found again in the Treasury, as in their Center.

There are yet other Coffers fill'd with Amber-geeece, Musk, the precious Wood call'd Lignum Aloes, and Sandal-wood. There is a certain sort of this Lignum-Aloes, which is worth a thousand Crowns the Pound, according as it is Fat, or Oily, the most Oily being always the best, and the Turks are very expensive in this Aloes Wood. When some Persons come to visit them, and as soon as they are set down, it is their custom to present them with a Pipe of Tobacco, with some Lignum Aloes in it, which is done after this manner. They take of that Wood, according to the Oyliness of it, and consequently its making a greater fumigation, the quantity of a Pea, or a small Bean, and after they have moisten'd it a little they put it over a few Coals in a Chafing-dish, in a kind of Perfuming-Pot, which they present one after another, to all the Company. There comes out a thick Steam or Exhalation, wherewith every one Perfumes his Head and his Beard, and sometimes the in-side of his Turbant, after which he lifts up his hands on high, crying Elmendela, that is to say, Thanks be to God. But before they present them with the Perfuming-pot, there is some Rose-water brought in a Vessel of Gold, or Silver, according to the Quality of those who make the Visit. This Vessel is commonly a foot in height, the lower part of it being about the bigness of a mans fist, and from thence growing gradually smaller and smaller to the top of it, which is about the bigness of ones little finger. At the top of it there is a little hole, out of which comes the Rose-water, wherewith they wash their hands and faces, and then hold them over the suffumigation of the Lignum Aloes, which not only dries up the water, but also sticks so much the closer to the hair of the Head and Beard.

There are also in those Coffers abundance of Aromatical Simples, and precious Drugs, Bezoar-Stones, and store of Mastick, wherewith the Sultaneesses, and the young Maids of the Seraglio pass away their time. They have of it perpetually in their Mouths, and this Mastick sweetens the Breath, and cleanses the Teeth, upon which score they are the better belov'd.

There may be seen also in the same Chamber, and in other Coffers, abundance of Plate, both Gold and Silver, which is never us'd, the Grand Signor having other pieces, for his ordinary use, in the Kilar, whatever is serv'd up to his own Table being altogether in Pourcelain.

There are, amongst other Pieces, several Basins and Ewers, whereof some are enrich'd with several sorts of precious Stones. Those Basins are of a fashion more commodious than that of ours; and it is an evident Mark of the cleanliness of the Levantine's. They are round, and about half a foot in depth, and cover'd as it were with a Plate or Server, full of little holes, which makes the concavity of it of equal height with the sides, and so hides the dirtiness of the water which lies at the bottom of it. They do not rise after their refection, in Turkey, till they have wash'd their Mouths and their Hands, to do which they bring you Soap and warm Water; and amongst Persons of Quality, they present Rose-water or some other sweet Water, into which you put the corner of your Handkercher.

Tapers of a kind of Wax of great value.

They have also in those Coffers great Tapers, or Wax-Candles of above two foot in length, made of a certain very dear composition, of a greyish colour, which has some resemblance to Wax, and is brought out of Ethiopia, every Taper amounting to near a hundred Crowns. They are not us'd but only when the Grand Seignor goes to visit the Sultanesse, and then there are two of those Tapers lighted, and set in great golden Candlesticks, enrich'd with precious Stones. When they are a little above half burnt out, the Negro-Eunuchs, who serve in the Haram, light others, and, out of civility, make a Present of the fore-mentioned remainders to the principal Women attending on the Sultanesse.

There is moreover in one of those Coffers, abundance of Clocks and Watches, German work, as also of Knives and Ink horns, after the Turkish Mode, all those pieces being the choice Productions and Master-pieces of great Artists, and adorn'd with precious Stones. There is to be seen, in fine, all along the Walls, but cover'd with a Scarlet Stuff, several Arms, after the Turkish Mode, neatly kept in order, as Bowes, Arrows, Targets, Battle-Axes, excellently well wrought, and most of these Pieces are of a considerable value.

An inestimable Coffer of all sorts of precious Stones.

But what is most precious in that Chamber and transcends all the rest is a strong Coffer all of Iron-work, which contains another of about a foot and a half square, wherein there is a vast Treasure. When this Coffer is open'd, you see a kind of Gold-Smiths Jewel Box, wherein are ranked all sorts of Jewels of highest value, as Diamonds, Rubies, Emeralds, a huge number of excellent Topazes, and four of those Gems call'd Cats-eyes, which are so beautiful, that they are not to be valu'd. Having satisfy'd your curiosity with the former, you come next to certain little Drawers full of several Jewels, great Roses of Diamonds, Pendants, other Roses of Rubies and Emeralds, Strings and Chains of Pearls and Bracelets. There stands aside by it self a Cabinet, where are the Sorgonges, or the thing wherein are fastn'd the Heron-tops, which the Grand Seignor wears in his Turbant. They are as it were little handles, made in the fashion of Tulips, cover'd over with the most precious Stones of the Seraglio, and 'tis into this that the Heron-top enters, that rich Plume of Feathers, whereof I have elsewhere given the description. Of these Handles, some are higher and more precious than others; and my Overseer of the Treasury assur'd me, That, of all sorts of them, great and small, there are above a hundred and fifty. The lesser ones serve only for the Campagne, and the great ones, which are the richest are reserv'd for the Pumps and Magnificence of the Court, and when the Grand Seignor marches in Ceremony to Constantinople. If he has a desire to satisfy his sight with the lustre of his precious Jewels, he Orders the Coffer to be brought into his own Chamber; but if he call for some particular Piece of the Treasury, he gives order to the Chasnader-bachi, to fetch it, and that Chief Officer of the Treasury cannot enter into it, without abundance of mysterious precautions.

*Precautions and Ceremonies
observ'd at the opening of the Treasury.*

There are alwayes Sixty Pages, more or less, belonging to the Chambers of the Treasury. The number of them is not fixt, but the Credit of the Capi-Aga, and the Chasnader-Bachi, may augment or diminish it, according to their inclinations and interests. Unless they fall into disgrace, as he had done from whom I have some part of these Instructions, they never go out of the Seraglio, but upon their advancement to some considerable Government, or the settlement of a handsome Pension for their maintenance; and so, provided they do nothing amiss, they are well enough accommodated for their lives. The Chief Officer of the Treasury having receiv'd Orders from the Grand Seignor to bring the Piece he would have, assembles all the Pages in their Chamber; and sends for the Anakdar-Agasi, who has the Custody of the Keyes. This last having given three stroaks with his hand upon the Drawer, wherein they are clos'd, takes them out of it, and following the Chasnader-Bachi, attended by the Sixty Pages, they all make their appearance together at the door of the Treasury.

The

The first thing that is done is the untwisting of a Chain, which they had put there for the better securing of the Seal, which the Chief Officer of the Treasury had set over the hole, and having found it entire, he orders it to be broken by the keeper of the Keyes, and commands him to open. As soon as they are got into the Chamber into which the Chasnadar-bachi knows they are to go, he sets himself down upon a low Bench, and declares what Piece it is that the Grand Signor requires. They thereupon open the Coffe, wherein it ought to be, then they present it to the Chasnadar-bachi, and, if he be desirous of that honour, he has the privilege to be himself the Bearer of it to the Grand Signor. Then has he a fair Opportunity to secure something that is precious to himself, if he has the dexterity to do it without any discovery. When he is in the Treasury, he needs only say, That the Grand Signor desires also the Piece, which he has a mind to convert to his own use, and causing all to be immediately carried to his own Chamber, he there leaves what he would keep, and presents to the Prince only that which he had commanded to be brought him. Not but that whatever is receiv'd into the Treasury and whatever goes out of it, is exactly set down and enroll'd by the Haznaquatib, or Clerk, who keeps the Registers; and the Cheat might be easily discover'd, when at the quitting of his Charge the Chasnadar-bachi gives an account of all things to his successor. But it ordinarily happens, that they are friends, and that the Chasnadar-bachi, who does not leave his Charge, but upon his advancement to that of the place of the Capi-Agà, in case he should dye, or be exalted to a higher Dignity, or upon his being made a Bassa and Governour of a Province, proposes him, among the Pages, for whom he has the greatest affection, and who is his Confident, as a Person qualify'd for the Charge of principal Officers of the Treasury. Accordingly being his Benefactor, he gives in his Accompts as he pleases himself, and delivering unto him an Inventory of what is in the Treasury, he withal produces a Memorandum of the Pieces, which had been taken out thence, during his Surintendency, by the Grand Signor's Orders. The Clark of the Treasury, might, notwithstanding their intelligence and combination, discover the intrigue; but being one of the eldest Pages of the Chamber, and in a capacity of advancement to the Charge of Chasnadar-bachi, he shuts his eyes, and so avoids the creation of Enemies, thinking it more prudence, to be pleas'd, by the Presents he receives as well from him who enters into the Charge, as from him who quits it. But these Thieveries are not very often committed, and if there were but the least discovery made thereof, a severe punishment would soon be inflicted both on the Author and his Complices.

As to the little Chest or Coffe, wherein the most precious Jewels are kept, it is impossible to get any thing out thence: for when the Grand Signor would have any Piece taken out of it, he orders the Coffe it self to be brought into his Presence, by the principal Officer of the Treasury, accompany'd by the Keeper of the Keyes, and all the Pages; and before he opens it, he takes notice whether the Seal be entire. After he has taken what he desir'd, the Coffe is lock'd up in his Presence the Seal is set upon it, and it is carry'd back into the Treasury with the same Ceremony. Then do the Sixty Pages receive, ordinarily some demonstrations of the Grand Signor's Liberality, which may amount to ten or twelve Pariser, to be divided amongst them.

We are not yet got out of the third Chamber of the Treasury, which may pass for one Spacious Hall, the middle part whereof is taken up by a Scaffold, of nine or ten foot square, the height, the length, and the breadth being equal. This Scaffold is cover'd and surrounded with a piece of Tapestry of Gold and Silk, and in the upper part of it, there is, in emboss'd Work, the Effigies of the Emperour Charles the Fifth, seated on a Throne having in one hand, a Globe, and in the other, a Sword, surrounded by all the Grandees of the Empire, doing him homage. At the bottom of the said Piece of Tapestry, there may be read certain Verses in Gothic characters: And the upper part of the Scaffold is full of Books in the Latin, French, Italian, high German, English, and other European Languages. There are also some Treatises upon the subject of Navigation, together with two Globes, the Celestial, and the Terrestrial, and some Geographical Maps drawn upon Vellum: whence it may be conjectur'd, that they were all taken at Sea, by some Turkish Pirate, and sent as a Present to the Grand Signor. But not being carefully look'd after, the dust has quite spoyl'd both the Tapestry, and the Books.

A remarkable Story of the Bassa Rustan.

The Fourth Chamber of the Treasury is very dark, and has no other light than what it receives from a little Garret-Window, which looks into the Court; and has three strong Iron-bars, one over the other. Over the Door, there are these words Engrav'd in the Turkish-Language; Money acquired by the Diligence of Rustan. Take here an account of what occasions this Monument, which they were pleas'd to Erect, to perpetuate the memory of a Grand Vizir, as I have been told it, by several Persons in Constantinople. He was the Son of a Cow-keeper, and had followed the same Employment himself: but he had a Genius that might become a Person of the highest Extraction, and which rais'd him to the Charge of Grand Vizir, and the Honour of being Son-in-law to Solyman. He had many traverses of Fortune, and was for some time out of Favour: but in fine, Solyman, who had great Affairs to manage, and was engaged in a War with Persia, coming to a little indigency of Money, sent for Rustan, and bestow'd on him the Superintendency of his Revenues. He knew him to be a Man of great Abilities, and capable of putting them, in a short time, into a good posture; and accordingly his pains and diligence in the management thereof proved so successful, that he presently fill'd Solyman's Coffers, and re-establish'd the Affairs of the Empire.

The Heroick
Sentiment of a Turk.

Upon which occasion I shall here set down a thing which is still fresh in the remembrance of many Turks, who receiv'd it from their Fathers. The Turks have so great a zeal for the welfare of the State. that one of the Grandees of the Port, an Enemy of Rustans, and one, who, upon other occasions, would gladly have ruin'd him, protested to one of his Confidants, That, though it were in his power to do him an ill turn, yet he would not do it then, because he had, by his Industrey and Labours, upheld the State, which he retri'd from the Precipice of destruction, and was in a fair way to make a considerable augmentation of its Revenues. This generous and heriok Sentiment in the Soul of a Turk, who at his first rise was but a simple Slave, would meet with but few Examples amongst Christians.

But, to reassume our discourse concerning the Fourth Chamber of the Treasury. It is full of Chests of two foot in length, and a breadth and depth proportionable thereto, fortify'd with plates of Iron, and made fast, each of 'em, with two Chains. The number of them is not always the same, because the Money is coming in, and going out of that Chamber, and the Coffers are transported thence according to the occurrent exigencies, for the payment of the Janizaries, and the maintenance of the Armies.

The principal
Sources of the Wealth of the Empire.

All the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Treasury rises out of the Revenues of the Empire, and out of the Sale of what Goods the Bassa's leave at their departure out of this World. As to what is rais'd out of the Empire, which dilates it self so far into the three parts of our great Continent, and comprehends so many Kingdoms, it may be easily imagin'd, that it must supply the Treasury with vast Sums; but it is not easie so to ascertain them. Its revenues consist principally in the collection of the Tributes, and in the Customs: and the three Testerdars, or Treasurers-General, give an account to the Grand Vizir of the Receipts of the Provinces. That Principal Minister has the custody of one Key of that fourth Chamber of the Treasury, and the first Testerdar has that of another, and besides that, it is always seal'd with the Grand Seignors Seal. It is ordinarily open'd, but upon those days, on which the Divan sits, that is, on Council-days, either for the reception of Money into it, or for the taking of any out, to defray the Charges of the Empire.

What is so receiv'd into it is for the most part in Silver; and as to the Species of Gold Coins that are brought into that Chamber, they come from four Sources, two whereof are upon a Foreign account, and the other two upon that of the Country. One of the two former consists in the Commerce of the French, English, Dutch, Italians, Moscovites, and Polanders, who bring in Ducats out of those Provinces. The other is the annual Tribute, which the Chan of the Lesser Tartary, the Princes of Transylvania, Moldavia, and Walachia, the Republick of Ragusa, and part of Mingrelia and Russia, are to pay the Grand Seignor in Gold, which amounts to very great Sums. One of the two Sources of the Country proceeds from what is found upon the the removal of the Bassa's, whereof the very coined Gold makes the best part; the other from the Revenue of Egypt, where there is an annual coinage of a certain number of Sequins, according to the quantity of Gold, which is brought thither out of Ethiopia, and being coin'd into Sequins, is all convey'd thence into the Treasury.

The Revenue of Egypt may amount yearly to twelve millions of Livers, (that is, about one million and two hundred thousand Pounds Sterling) which must be divided into three parts. Five millions of the twelve, are brought into the Grand Signor's Treasury. Four millions of the foresaid Sum, are employ'd in the maintenance of the Officers and Souldiers of that Kingdom: And the other three are design'd for the rich Present, which the Grand Signor sends every year to Mecha, for the Expences which relates to Religious Worship, and to fill the Cisterns of Arabia, which are supply'd with Water, brought by Land, many days Journeys.

The Revenues of Egypt how employ'd.

Of the five Millions Which are brought into the Seraglio, the greatest part is in Sequins, according to the quantity of Gold, which the Abyssines bring into Egypt, and the rest in Dutch Rix-Dollars. All is brought together into the Coffers of the fourth Chamber of the Publick Treasury. But as to the Sequins they are carried into the Secret Treasury, which it is time for us now to open, and give the Reader an account of according to the description which has been made to me thereof, by two men whom their Employments oblig'd to enter into it often.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Secret Treasury.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

A Vault under ground, into which few Persons have access. The great frugality of the Emperour Amurat. Ibrahim his Successor, charg'd with evil Conduct. The Grand Signor's precautions for the security of his Treasure. His Liberalities to the Grandees of the Port.

Within the fourth Chamber of the Treasury, you find a door laid all about with good store of Iron-bars which opens the first passage, to the place that contains the Grand Signor's Secret Treasure. It is never open'd, but when he himself has a mind to enter into it; and he do's not enter into it but when the Grand Vizir advertises him, that it is time for him to do so, and that there is a considerable Sum to be carried in. In the first place, by the light of Torches they go down a Stair-Case of ten or twelve steps, at the bottom of which, after an advancement of seven or eight paces further, they find a second Door, fortify'd with Iron-work as the former, but much less, so that a man is oblig'd to stoop ere he go into it. When it is open'd, and that they have made their entrance through it, as if they had pass'd through a Wicket, they are under a great Vault, where they find a great many Coffers, of the same largeness, as those of the Chamber we came last out of.

A Vault under ground, into which few have access.

In

The great frugality of the Emperour Amurat.

In those Coffers they have, for these many years, laid up all that was not expended upon the Publick account, of the great Revenues of the Ottoman-Monarchs, and so it may be call'd his Private Exchequer, into which there is nothing but Gold has entrance, all the Silver being carried into the other Treasury, to be thence taken out again and dispos'd of, as occasion requir'd. After the death of Amurat, Ibrahim, his Successor in the Throne, found in that Treasury four thousand Bags, which they call Kizes, and every bag contains fifteen thousand Ducats of Gold, which amount to thirty thousand Crowns, and those reduc'd to our Pounds, come to thirty Millions Sterling. 'Twas the same Amurat (a prudent and valiant Prince, a man of great Parsimony, and as great conduct in Military Affairs, of whom I have often had occasion to make mention) who enter'd into a War against the King of Persia, and besieg'd Bagdet, or Babylon, which he took on the Twenty Second of December, 1638. I remember, that I was then but Five Days Journey from that place, in the Deserts of Arabia, as having left Aleppo, in order to my going to Balsara, and that of the Threescore and five daves, which the Caravan spent in that Journey, for nine of them, we were destitute of Water, which must needs press very hard, both on the Men and the Camels.

Ibrahim charg'd with ill management of the Treasury.

Ibrahim, therefore, at his coming to the Crown, found, in the secret Treasury, that prodigious quantity of Gold, whereto he could not make any augmentations; nay some, on the contrary, are of opinion, That he was forc'd to use some part of it, through his ill Conduct of the Warr of Candia. True it is, That the long continuance of that Warre made a great hole in the Revenues of the Empire; but there are Two great Reasons, which divert me from giving absolute credit, to such as affirm, That those Exigencies reach'd the Secret Treasury, For, in short, it is as 'twere a fundamental Law among them, That, before any thing is taking out thence, it is requisite, the Empire should be in imminent danger of ruine; And it is manifest, That though the Turks could not reduce Candia under their Jurisdiction, yet their Empire was so far from being near its decadence, that it still continu'd powerful. Besides, it is to be observ'd, That when the Grand Seigneur loses a Battel, it is a disadvantage to his provinces, upon the score of their being thereby depopulated, and so much the less cultivated; but that it is an advantage to his Coffers, in regard there's so much the less comes out of them. The reason of it is evident, because he pays the Veteranes, or Souldiers of long standing, seven of eight Aspers a day, and that those of the new-raisd Forces do not stand him in above one and a half, or two at the most; their pay augmenting with the time, answerably to their services, and the Prince's good Pleasure. Whereto it is to be added, That when an Emperour dies, his Successor augments the pay of the Janizaries, by an Asper, or two, per diem.

It must be acknowledg'd indeed, That there died a great number of Turks in the Warr of Candia: but it is certain also, That if we consider the great number of Kingdoms and Provinces, whereof the Empire consists, among which there are some very fertile, and very well peopled, it is an easie matter to raise numerous Armies, and to recruit them, when they have been weakned, by a Defeat, or by some Sickness, which often happens among them. Upon these two grounds, I cannot be induced to believe, that Ibrahim was oblig'd to make any diminution of the Secret Treasury: but I am very apt to believe, that he made not any great additions thereto, because he had not either the good Conduct, or good Fortune of Amurat, and ordinarily, the one avails not much without the other.

what did N

The Grand Seigneur's Precautions for the security of his Treasury.

All the Gold that lies interr'd under that Vault is in Leather-bags, every Bag containing Fifteen thousand Ducats, that is Seven thousand five hundred pounds Sterling: and 'tis with his own hand that the Grand Seigneur puts his Seal to them, which is the same that his Predecessors had us'd before him, save only the name, which must be that of the Prince then reigning. Amurat's Seal had these words graven upon it. Nasrüm min allahi abdihil mekil Mourath. Which signifies, The Assistance of God is upon his Servant the Emperour Amurath.

And this is the manner how the Bags of Gold is brought into the Secret Treasury. All the Gold and Silver which come into the Seraglio, is first carried into the the Chamber of the Treasury, and each of them is dispos'd into the Coffers design'd for them. When there is as much Gold as will amount to two hundred Kizes, the Grand Vizir gives notice of it to the Grand Seignor, who appoints a day, for the disposal of it into the Secret Treasury. The day being come, the Grand Seignor, led under the Arm by the Chasnadar-bachi, who is on the left hand; which is accounted the more honourable amongst the Turks, and by the Seligidar-Aga who is on the right, comes into the Chamber of the Treasury, where the Sixty Pages expect him, ranked in order on both sides, with their hands cross their Breasts. The Grand Seignor, having pass'd through the Chamber, and order'd the first Door of the Secret Treasury to be open'd, enters into it, by the light of several Torches of white Wax, and is followed by the Pages, two by two, till they are within the Vault, into which the Bags are brought, ty'd with a Silk-string. Upon the string they put a piece of red soft Wax, whereto the Grand Seignor sets his Seal himself, which is upon a Gold-Ring, wherein are engraven the words before mentioned, with the name of the Prince then reigning, after which they put the Bags into the Coffers which are all double chain'd.

Before they come out of the Vault, the chief Officer of the Treasury, does ordinarily make this Complement to the Grand Seignor; Seadetlu padichaim eumijl dur quibon bendelerignus euzre ibsan cherifignus izbar idefis: That is to say, My Emperour, we hope, that you will make a discovery of your Liberalities to your Slaves. According to the humour the Grand Seignor is then in, he orders, That there should be a distribution of Twenty or Thirty Purfes amongst all those who have accompany'd him, every Purfe, as I told you before amounting to Five hundred Crowns: The Grand Vizir and the other Grandees of the Port, are permitted to enter into the Chambers of the Treasury, where the sumptuous Harnesies, and the Precious Stones are kept, when the Grand Seignor comes thither himself, but they are not to go as far as the Secret Treasury. They stay for him in the Fourth Chamber, when he is to come out of the Vault and then he orders the Coffer of his Jewels to be opened, to shew them the most precious things there are in it. And whereas there are always some Favourites attending there, as also divers other persons, whom the Prince looks upon kindly upon the score of their merit, it seldom happens, but that they all receive some Present or other from him, and he makes not any, but what is of very considerable value. The Treasury being shut up, the Grand Seignor returns to his own Quarter, and all the Grandees accompany him to the Gate of it.

His Liberalities to the Grandees of the Port.

C H A P. X.

Of the Means which the Grand Signor makes use of, to augment his Treasures, besides what is done by the ordinary Revenues of the Empire.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Presents made by the Bassa's to the Grand Signor, when they enter into their Charges. The Trade driven by the Jews very hazardous to them. The extraordinary Wealth of the Bassa's. The great Advantages of the Chaznadar-Bachi, and the Pages of the Treasury. The prohibition of lending Money upon Interest. The Persians but poor Casuists. Formalities observed in Turkey about Schedules.

BESIDES what may be left every Year in the Treasury, or Exchequer, out of the ordinary Revenues of the Empire, after all charges deducted, the Grand Signor has Two other Expedients very Conducive to the augmentation of both the Treasuries, to wit, the entrance of the Bassa's upon their Governments, and their removal out of them, whether it be by some disgrace, or by their natural, or violent deaths.

The Bassa's Presents to the Grand Signor, upon their advancements.

All the Bassa's, on whom the Grand Signor bestowes Governments, and generally all those, who are remov'd out of the Seraglio, upon their advancement into Charges, are oblig'd, before they take possession of them, to make him Presents, every one, answerable to the benefit he has receiv'd from the Prince. For example, the Bassa of Cairo, as soon as ever he is nominated to that Government, knows, that two Millions of Livers, that is reduc'd to the English account, two hundred thousand pounds sterling, will hardly make good the Presents, which are expected from him at the Port, that is, those due to the Grand Signor himself, and to the principal Sultaneßes, as also to the Mufti, the Grand Vizir, the Caimacan, and other Persons of Credit in the Court to whom he is engag'd for his advancement to that Charge, and of whom he may stand in need for the future. The Present he makes the Grand Signor himself, amounts to Five hundred thousand Crowns, and the rest will come to Two hundred thousand. Add again to that, Five hundred thousand Crowns, which will be expended in the Bassa's equipage, and so before he sets his foot in Cairo, his own Purse, or those of his Friends, will be drain'd of Three Millions and six hundred thousand Livers.

The hazardous Trade of the Jews.

When he comes out of the Seraglio, if he want much of the aforesaid Summe, there is a necessity of borrowing; and if the purse of his Friends cannot do it, those of the Jews are readily open'd for his supply. They run a great hazard, upon hopes of the great profit of making Cent. per Cent. interest which the Bassa does promise them. And to be the sooner reimburs'd of the Money they have to hazarded, least his Government be but a short one, they teach him a thousand

leud wayes, to suck out the Peoples blood, and particulary to haras the poor Christians. If the Bassa's can but quietly enjoy their Governments, for one year, nay for six Months, the Jews make a good hand of it, and recover the Summs they had advanc'd. But, on the other side, they run a great hazard in regard that it happens, many times, the Grand Signor sends for the head of a Bassa, before he has had time enough to settle himself in his new Government, and then, they who have lent him Money are not to hope ever to recover any part of it.

From what has been said, it may easily be concluded, That the greatest part of the Money of the whole Ottoman Empire is in the Grand Signor's hands, and among the Jews; I mean the Jews of Constantinople. For as to those who live in the Provinces, the world goes but ill with them, and they are in a much more wretched condition, than the Christians; in regard they do not follow any thing of Husbandry: and their inclinations being altogether bent for Traffick, and the management of the publick Taxes or the Customs, 'tis impossible there should be employment for them all.

The Grand Signor therefore receives very considerable Summs from the Bassa's, and other persons, on whom he bestows Charges, even before they have taken possession of them. But that amounts to little or nothing in comparison of the advantages which he makes, upon their removal out of them, and especially when they have had a fair time to gather Treasures, by their insupportable exactions from the people. Some of these Bassa's have come to that excessive Wealth and Power, that their Revenues were equal to those of many great Princes. Such was the fortune of one Machmut, Beglierbeg of Europe, under the Reign of Mahomet the Second; and that, of the Grand Vizir Nussuf, under Achmet the First. At the death of the latter, there were extraordinary Riches found in his House, in Silver, Gold, and Jewels, and all was brought to the Seraglio, along with his head.

The extraordinary Wealth of the Bassa's.

It may easily be conjectur'd, by the number of the greater and lesser Governments, whereof the Empire consists, that there is a considerable mortality amongst those, who derive their Charges and Fortunes from the pure Munificence of the Grand Signor, and whose acquisitions thereupon falling to him, must of necessity make vast additions to the Seraglio. But besides those who are gently convey'd out of this World, by a natural death, there hardly passes a year but, violent death comes and acts its part, and upon the least jealousy, or any fantastick apprehension the Grand Signor may have, a Bassa receives a peremptory Order to stretch out his Neck, and he is immediately strangled. In the next Chapter, I shall give the Reader an Account, of the formality and ceremony, which is observ'd upon that occasion, where he will find somewhat worth his remarking; and I think I may confidently affirm, That they who know it is the custome, to strangle those, whose Lives the Grand Signor would take away, know not all the Particulars observable in that Action.

As soon as a Bassa, or other Grandee of the Port is dead, howe'er it came to pass, and an Inventory of his Goods taken, of which by the Laws of the Country the Prince is the only Heir, all is carried away into the Seraglio, and the Baltags bring it in Coffers to the Door of the Treasury. The Chasnadar-bachi, having dispos'd them into one of the Chambers, Commands the Locks to be broke open, and the Coffers to be emptied in his presence; And 'tis then, that as well he himself, as the Pages of the Treasury endeavour to make their advantages of that Rich Booty. For there being ordinarily, amongst the other things, Jewels of great value, such as that wherein the Heron-tops are fasten'd in their Turbants, or a Ponyard enrich'd with precious Stones, or some Carcanet of Pearls, if one or other of those Pages can make a dexterous and clean conveyance of some Piece, 'tis his own and he puts it to what else he has in stock, reflecting on what he has to do, at his departure out of the Seraglio, in order to his establishment in some Charge, and the great Expences he must be at upon that account. The Chasnadar-bachi, who does his work first of all, and with more liberty, does sometimes connive at what he sees done by the others, remembering that he has been as they are, and was then glad, that he was not reprov'd for so doing. Yet if he perceives that any one of them has secur'd to himself a piece of great value, as soon as he is got to his Chamber, he secretly sends for him, and makes him restore it, paying him one half of its worth, and so keeps it himself.

The Bassa's Goods brought into the Seraglio.

The great advantages of the Chafnadar-bachi, and the Pages of the Treasury.

There are yet other great advantages accruing to the Chief Officer, and the Pages, from those things which are brought into the Seraglio, upon the death of the Batta's. When the Chafnadar-bachi has advertis'd the Grand Seigneur, that, in the Coffers, which had been brought in, there were many things not fit for the Service of his Highness, and that it were better to put them off, before they were injur'd by the moisture or the dust; the Prince gives his permission for the sale thereof, and therupon they take out of the Treasury what they do not account worthy of a place there. Immediately, they send for the Bazarcan-bachi, or Chief of the Merchants, who is the best skill'd in those things, and who, in the presence of the Chafnadar-bachi, and the Pages of the Treasury, sets a value on every piece, to their satisfaction; for he does not prize it at above half the worth. All the Jewels that will bear a good price, and all the precious stones are dispos'd into the Treasury, and they expose to sale only things of less value, yet such as are worth much: as Trappings for Horses, Ponyards, Sabres, garnish'd with Gold, Garments, rich Furses, Satchels, Turbants, and other things of that nature; all the pieces being valued, the Chafnadar-bachi sets aside the best of them, to be sent, together with the value set upon them, to the principal persons of the Seraglio, with whom he is glad to hold a fair correspondence, and they pay for them the more willingly, because they have them at an easie rate. The rest is distributed among the Pages, according to the valuation, and having made choice of such things as they will keep themselves, send away what they do not like, to be sold in Constantinople, by the Halvagi, wherein they also make a vast advantage, considering the apprisement; not accounting what the same Halvagi may hedge in for themselves, as a compensation for their trouble.

When there is such a sale made, the Jews are always waiting about the great Gate of the Seraglio, not daring to come too near, for fear of a chastisement of the Bastinado from the Kapigi, which they are very free to give them. They stand in expectation of these Halvagi, with their bags full of Ducats and Ryals, and make the best bargains they can with them. These sales are seldome made above once in two years, and the least of them does ordinarily exceed five hundred thousand Crowns; nay some have amounted to eight hundred Thousand. The Grand Seigneur is soon advertis'd, what money has been rais'd by the sale, and giving orders for the disposal of it into the Treasury, he at the same time bestows ten or twenty Purles on the principal Officer, and the Pages of the Treasury. He does not make them that Present out of any other design, then to shew his Grandeur, as being not ignorant of the advantages they have made by the Sale; but he tolerates that custome, and knows well enough, that sooner or later, all those profits will come again into the Treasury.

The prohibition to lend at Interest.

The Persians ill casuists.

'Tis upon the same consideration, that the Grand Seigneur permits a manifest breach of the Law of Mahomet, which prohibits the taking of any interest for money lent; for he suffers the Pages, and others to lend considerable sums to the Jews, at the rate of fifteen upon the hundred, interest. And the Persians have found out a very pleasant evasion, to stave off the reproach which might be made to them, of their transgressing against the same prohibition.

The evasion is this. When they lend out money to any one, they have a Bill or Schedule made of the sum that's lent. Then they compute what the interest will amount to, which is commonly after the rate of twelve in the Hundred. That done; they take a handkerchief, or some old Satche, and giving it to the Person whom they lend the money to, they make him write a second Note, upon the score of the interest, wherein it is express'd, that the debt is for commodities bought, and duly receiv'd. And thus do they think to elude the reproaches of their own Consciencies, and imagine, that they do not offend against the prohibition of Mahomet. The promise which the Debtor makes in writing, is not sign'd by him, it being not the custom of the Countrey, but he puts his seal to it. And yet that too is not sufficient, and it is further requisite, that they go before the Cadi, or the Judge of the Law, who consummates the work, by putting his own Seal to the writing.

I have made appear, in this Chapter, the Means and Expedients, which the Grand Seigneur makes use of, to augment his Revenues; we shall see in the next, the ways he has to exercise his Liberalities, without any charge at all to himself.

CHAP. XI.

A Subtle Expedient, whereby the Grand Signor exercises great Liberalities, and meddles not at all with his Revenues.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Commendable Policy of the Turks. The Ceremonies attending the Presents sent by the Grand Signor, to those whom he would honour. The particular way us'd by Mahomet the Fourth, to shew himself liberal, without any charge to himself. Formalities observ'd at the Death of the Bassa's, who are strangled by the Prince's Orders. When, and how they strike off the Head in Turkey. A prohibition against shedding the blood of the Mahumetans, who are condemn'd to Death. The Inventories of the Goods of Bassa's deceas'd, not faithfully taken. The Causes inducing the Turks to desire Death with so much constancy. How difficult it is to get out of Turkey. Presents made to the Sultaneesses.

THE Two expedients which the Grand Signor makes use of to augment his Treasury, besides what comes in by the ordinary revenues of the Empire, are much of the same nature, with those he uses, to bestow great largesses, without disbursing any thing himself. He makes his advantages of all; the Bassa's are as so many sponges, and he squeezes them, as well while they are living, as when they are dead, and at their cost assigns recompence to those, who have done him some acceptable service. Let us take things in order, one after another, and shew in the first place, how he manages his subtle design, while the Bassa's are living, in getting out of them wherewithall to make ample gratifications, without any diminution of his Revenues.

Amongst the Political maxims of the Ottoman Monarchs, this is one of the most remarkable. They would have the Bassa's to be respected in their several Governments, by the People, as much as if they were there themselves in Person: and to make a greater, and a more lively impression of that veneration in their minds, they think it fitting, to honour them, from time to time, with some Present, which is carried to them with much Ceremony. This Present, which is a certain demonstration of the Esteem, which the Prince has for the Person to whom he sends it, is commonly some Rich Garment; and when he is willing to make it compleat, he adds the Sabre, and the Ponyard, garnish'd and adorn'd with precious stones. The Grand Signor, upon the consideration before-mentioned, finding himself as it were oblig'd to make a Present to that Bassa, knows well enough, that he will be sure, on the other side, to send him one which shall be worth ten times as much, and to make another to his Envoy, which he must look on as a recompence of his Services.

But

But it is not always the Grand Seignor's design, by such Presents, to honour the Bassa, and keep the People the more in subjection to him. It happens many times, that when he intends to ruine him, he makes him a Present, that he may thence take occasion, in case he does not receive another from him, such as he desires, to send another Messenger for his Head. The Present, upon that occasion, is not a Vest, or a Garment, but, a Sword, or a Battle-Axe, which are very Ominous Presents, and Advertisements to the Bassa, that the Grand Seignor has little kindness for him. To divert the Storm, which he sees likely to fall upon him, he doubles the Present he should have made, in case he had sent him but a Vest, which is a pledge of his Affection. And if that Bassa be one of those, who Commands in the greater Governments, the Present which he sends to the Grand Seignor, ought not to amount to less than Two hundred Purles, that is to say, a Hundred thousand Crowns, not comprehending what is particularly given to the person who is sent by the Emperour.

The Ceremonies are in the Presents sent by the Grand Seignor to those whom he would honour.

The Persons charg'd with this Commission are, for the most part, such as the Grand Seignor is willing to be Munificent to. So that, all things consider'd, the Present is not so much design'd for him who receives it, as for him who sends it, and the Person who carries it. And in this consists the artifice of exercising great Liberalities without disbursing any thing. The Ceremony perform'd at the delivery of this Present of the Grand Seignor, is this: He who carries it being come to the place where the Bassa lives, to whom it is sent, and having advertis'd him of it, this latter, with the noise of Drums, Trumpets, and Hawboys, assembles the People together, some of whom mount themselves on Horse-back, to do him the greater honour. The Bassa himself marches in the Head of all, and they who are not mounted, follow afoot, together with the Curtezans, or common Strumpets of the place, who are obliged to assist at this Ceremony, dancing after a Tabour, and putting themselves into a thousand lascivious postures, according to the Custome of the Country.

The Messenger who brings the Present makes a halt, in expectation of this Cavalcade, in some Garden near the City, or in the Fields under a Tent, which he had got set up for that purpose. After mutual Salutations, he casts the Vest over the Bassa's shoulders, putting the Sabre by his Side, and thrusts the Ponyard into his Sash before his Breast, telling him, That the Emperour their Master, honours him with that Present, upon the good report which had been made to him, that he has demean'd himself well, that he does not tyrannize over his People, and that there is no Complaint made, of his being defective in the Administration of Justice.

This Complement past, the Bassa, in the same order, and amidst the Joyful Acclamations of the People, takes his way, and the Grand Seignor's Envoy along with him, towards his House, where he entertains him at a great Treat, and, after all is done, with a Present, which amounts to Ten thousand Crowns, at the least. For, as I told you before, if the Present be carried to one of the Bassa's who are in the greater Governments, as the Bassa's of Buda, Cairo, or Babylon, they shall not escape under Thirty or Forty thousand Crowns, and the Present which is sent to the Sultan, ought to amount to a hundred thousand. Nay it many times happens, that the Grand Seignor appoints what he would have their Present to his Envoy to amount to, and that especially, when he sends such as he has a particular kindness for, and would amply gratifie.

way us'd by Mahomet IV. to shew himself liberal, without any Charge.*

The Emperour Mahomet the Fourth, who now sits on the Throne, has a particular inclination to exercise Liberality, and to bestow Rewards on those who serve him; but he does it so, as that it costs him nothing, and consequently, there is no occasion of taking ought out of the Treasury. When there is not an opportunity to send the Person whom he has a desire to gratifie, into the Country with some Present, he has another Expedient, which will do the work. His Darling-Divertisement is Hunting, and he takes but little pleasure in any other Exercise. He thereupon orders the Person whom he would recompence, to be one at the Sport, and having kill'd a Stag, or some other Beast, he orders him to go, and present it, from him, to one of the Grandees of the Port, whose abode is either at Constantinople, or some place near it.

This

This Present is receiv'd with great demonstrations of joy, real, or apparent; the person, to whom it is brought, is immediately to take order for the sending back of another; much exceeding it in value; to the Grand Seignor. And that consists ordinarily in excellent Horses, good pieces of Gold-Brocado, or rich Furrs. But his work is yet not half over; there must be much more done for him, through whose hands he has receiv'd the Present; and he escapes very well, when; not accounting what he sends to the Grand Seignor; the carriage of it costs him but Ten thousand Crowns. Nay many times, he is forc'd to double the Sum, when he has not been so liberal, as the Prince expected he should have been; for he presently dispatches away an Officer, to reproach him with the slender account he has made of his Present; and the small recompence he had receiv'd, whom he had employ'd to bring it him. To these reproaches he sends him an express Order, to make an additional Reward of Twenty or thirty Purfes, which is immediately put in execution; and as to the Present which the Grand Seignor has receiv'd, he commonly makes a distribution of it, amongst those, who are then about him.

And these are the Advantages which the Grand Seignor screws out of the Bassas, and other Grandeas of the Port, whilst they are alive. Let us now consider those which accrew to him by their death, in order to the recompensing of those, whom he favours, without being oblig'd to take any thing out of his Coffers. When the death of a Bassa is resolv'd upon, the Grand Seignor delivers the Commission to him, whom he has design'd to be kind to; and he finds it much more advantageous, to bring him the Sentence of his death, than to bring him a Present from the Prince.

If the Execution is to be done in Constantinople the ordinary Executioner is the Bostangi bachi, who is alwaies about the Grand Seignor's Person, and he himself does the Work. But if there be a necessity of going into some remote Province, 'tis commonly either a Capigi-bachi, or one of the principal Bostangis, whom the Prince has a mind to shew his kindness to, who is sent to perform the Execution. He who carries the Order, accompany'd by five or six Capigis, sometimes manages his Affairs so, as to arrive at the place, while the Council is sitting. But if that cannot be so order'd, he goes to the Bassa, and commands him in the Grand Seignor's name, to call one immediately. That Council consists of the Bassa's Lieutenant, the Musti, the Cadi, the chief Commander of the Janizaries belonging to that place, and some other persons concern'd in the administration of Justice, who are of the most considerable of the Province.

The Council being assembled, the Capigi-bachi enters, attended by his people, and presents the Bassa with the Grand Seignor's Letter. He receives it with great respect, and having put it three several times to his forehead, he opens it, reads it and finds that the Prince demands his head. He makes no other answer to that Order, then what he does in these few words; Let the Will, says he of my Emperour be done: onely give me leave to say my Prayers which is granted him. His Prayers being ended, the Capigis seize him by the Arms and the chief of them presently takes off his Girdle or Sasche, and cast it about his Neck. That Girdle consists of several small strings of Silk, with knots at both ends, which two of the company immediately catch hold of, one drawing one way, and the other, t'other-way they dispatch him in an instant.

If they are unwilling to make use of their Girdle they take a handkerchief, and with the Ring which they use, in the bending of their Bowes, and which they ordinarily wear on the right-hand Thumb, they thrust the hand between the handkerchief, which is ty'd very close, and the Throat, and so break the very Throat-Bone. Thus they make a shift to strangle a man in an instant, suffering him not to languish in pain, that he may dye a faithful Mahumetan, and not have the time to enter into despair; the Turks thinking our way of hanging Criminals; who are so long in torment upon the Gibbet a strange kind of Execution.

Though I have often us'd this expression, That the Grand Seignor sends to demand the Head of any person, whom he would rid out of the way; yet they never cut it off, but when he expressly declares his desire to see it, and then it is brought to him. If it be from some place at a great distance, they take out the Brains, and fill the empty place with Hay; and it was my fortune to see two

Heads

Formalities observed at the death of the Bassa's, who are strangled by the Prince's Orders,

When and how they strike off the Head in Turkey.

Heads so order'd at the same time, which they carried in a Bag. They were the Heads of the Bassa's of Kars, and Erzerom.

It is further to be observ'd, That when the Sentence of Death is pass'd by the Prince against any one, what quality soever he may be of, the Turks make no further Account of him; and when they speak of him, treat him no otherwise than they would do a Dog. The Bostangi, who had been commissionated to bring those two Heads to the Grand Seigneur, finding himself weary, and indispos'd at a Village in Armenia, where it was my chance to be at that time, and having understood that there was a French-man in the Inn, asked one of my Servants whether I had any wine, and would be content to let him have any, to cheer up his Spirits. I immediately sent him some in a large Flaggon; whereupon having intreated me to come and take a Glas with him, which I thought it not fit to deny, he would needs shew me, whether I would or no, the Heads of those two Bassa's; a sight I had no great curiosity to see.

A Prohibition against shedding the blood of the Mahu-metans who are condemn'd to death.

When there is no order given for the bringing of the Head, they bury the Body about Mid-night, without any ceremony, and the memory of the Bassa, who had made so much noise before, is soon extinguish'd and laid in the dust. But it is moreover to be noted, That it is the Custome in Turkey, not to cut off the Head of any one, till after they have strangled him, and that the blood is quite cold; it being against their Law, That the blood of a Mussulman (that is, one of the Faithful) should be spilt, upon any occasion, but in Warr.

The Inventories of the Goods of Bassa's de-ceas'd, not faithfully taken.

The execution being over, he who brought the Order for it, makes an immediate Seizure of all that belong'd to the deceas'd Bassa; and after he has set aside what he liked best for his own use, whether in Gold or Jewels, he brings the same persons, who had been at the precedent Council, to proceed to the Inventory of his Goods, which are afterwards, as I have said elsewhere, transmitted to the Chambers of the Treasury. They who assist at the taking of that Inventory, know well enough, that many things, which belong'd to the deceas'd, are embezill'd but they are so far from repining or murmuring at it, that they sign and attest, that there was not any more found. They are afraid, if they demean'd themselves otherwise, least that Officer of the Seraglio, whom the Grand Seigneur has sent, and who possibly is in favour, should do them ill offices at the Court, and spread some false report of them; whence, according to the Example they have then before their eyes, might happen, in like manner, the loss of their Charges, and Lives.

They therefore think it prudence, to connive at what ever is done by that Envoy, as being otherwise perswaded, that he will not be disown'd by the Grand Seigneur, who is not ignorant of what's done upon those occasions. Nay on the contrary, and whatever he may have dextrously secured to himself of the Bassa's Goods, they make him some additional Presents of their own, at his own departure from them, engaging him thereby, to speak well of them to the Grand Seigneur, and to the Grand Vizir, at his return to the Port. And then also, not accounting what he had taken before-hand, and what Custom tolerates, he receives new marks of the Liberality of his Prince, who is satisfy'd that he has so faithfully executed his Orders and so he participates of what is set down in the Inventory, when the Bassa's Goods are brought into the Seraglio.

The Causes inducing the Turks to despise Death with so much Constancy.

Some possibly, will be apt to imagine, that this Sentence of Death pass'd in the Grand Seigneur's Letter, should raise some disturbance and astonishment in the Soul of him who reads it, and who reading therein his own Condemnation, knows that it must be immediately executed. Yet is it not apparent in his Countenance, that he is much startled at it, he is not surpriz'd therewith, he sees that few of his Companions escape the same fate, and he has dispos'd himself for such an end, as soon as he first took possession of his Charge. Besides, the Turks have a strong perswasion, That the Decrees of Predestination are irrevocable, and that it is impossible to avoid them; which makes them look Death in the face, with such a degree of constancy and intrepidity, as render them in a manner insensible. To which reflection we may adde this, That that ready and implicate obedience and submission of the Turks, to the Orders of their Sovereign, is rather a principle of Religion, than of State; which has been instill'd into them, by a most subtle piece of Politicks; and they believe, That, if they dye by the Command of their Prince, they go straight into Paradise.

As

As for the opportunity of making an escape out of Turkey, by any one who might have some presentiment of his destruction, it is to no purpose to think of it. All the Officers and the Slaves, whom the Baila's have in their Retinue, are so many Spies, and observers of their Actions; and it is impossible for them, to conceal what they doe from them. 'Twere dangerous for a man to entrust a Secret with any one of them; they are mean Souls, and incapable of any gallant Action, besides that the Ports and Passages are equally shut up against both. If there be the least discovery made thereof, the Governour of the Frontier places would immediately have Orders from the Port, to take the Field; nay if there were not any such, they are but over-diligent, in enquiring after, and informing themselves of all those, who pass through the extent of their Jurisdiction.

The Difficulties of making an Escape out of Turkey.

Besides, though there were some likelihood of compassing it, and that, travelling only in the Night time a man might get into some Neighbouring State; yet Turkey being in a manner quite surrounded by Nations who abhor the Domination of the Ottomans; 'twere as much as to leap out of the Frying-pan into the Fire, and to go and pass for a Spy, amongst a sort of people, who would give no quarter. Whence it might be imagin'd, that there were less difficulty in attempting an escape by Sea, than to hazard it by Land: but the former is the much more difficult, and the severe prohibitions made to the Christians, upon pain of death, not to take any Turk or Slave, into their Ships, which are exactly search'd, before they weigh Anchor, shut up all the Ports of Turkey, against those of the Country, who might be desirous to get out of it.

True it is, however, that few years pass, but that a considerable number of Slaves are convey'd away, by the charity and contrivances of the Christian Consuls, and Merchants. They are secretly kept at the Houses of some Christian Inhabitants of the Country, whose Secrecy and silence are bought with Money; and the same receipt stops the mouths of those, who have the over-sight of the Ports, and are warmly entertain'd with drinking, while they cunningly get the Slaves aboard the Vessel, which has been visited, and is then ready to set sail. They would be loath to run themselves into that danger for natural Turks: there would be some ground to fear, that it might be some Plot on their side, to surprize and try the Christians; and it seldom happens that they have a thought of making any escape. They know well enough, that, whether it be by Sea, or Land, (excepting only the Kingdom of Persia, where they are hated upon the account of the difference of Sects) they cannot make their escape any where but into Christendom, where they would not be permitted the exercise of their Mahumetan Religion, which they would not renounce for a thousand lives.

E're we close up the Discourse concerning the Liberality of the Ottoman Monarchs, it is to be observ'd, that sometimes they make very considerable Presents, which they take out of the Grand Treasury, and which are paid in Silver only, if they are order'd for the Grande'es of the Port, whether in the Seraglio, or out of it. Those Presents consists ordinarily of a Purse of Gold, which amounts to Fifteen thousand Ducats, or Thirty thousand Crowns; and when there are any such made to the Sultanes, they receive all in Gold. To do that, there's no occasion of going to the Secret Treasury, there is gold enough in the Fourth Chamber, into which they at first bring in all the Gold and Silver of all the Revenues of the Empire; and that Summe, which makes no great hole in the great heap, returns again into the same place, by several waies.

Presents made to the Sultanes.

C H A P. XII.

Of the Present, which the Grand Signor sends every Year to Mecha.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The third part of the Revenue of Egypt, how employ'd. The great Wealth of the Sheck of Mecha. Ceremonies observ'd at Mahomet's Tomb. The Caravan of Cairo. The Present sent from Mecha to the Great Mogul. The Opinion of the Mahumetans, concerning Mecha and Medina.

THAT I make here a particular Chapter of the Present, which the Grand Signor sends every Year to Mecha, is occasion'd by this third part of the Revenue of Egypt, which is peculiarly design'd for it; and upon this Consideration withall, That I have singular Remarks to make upon that subject.

The third part of the Revenue of Egypt, how employ'd.

Three Millions of Livers, of Twelve, of annual Revenue, which the Kingdom of Egypt pays the Grand Signor, are partly expended in the Rich Carpet, and the Sumptuous Tent, which he lends to the Sheck, every year, in honour to Mahomet's Tomb. Another part goes to the payment of those who serve in the Mosqueys; As for instance, the Imans, who are Priests; the Cheuchs, who are their Preachers; the Muezims, who, by their noise on the Towers of the Mosqueys, call the people to their Devotions; and the Kaijms of Mecha and Medina, who look to, and keep clean the Mosqueys, and light the Lamps. We must also put into the Account of these Three Millions, the Sustainance of all the Pilgrims for the space of Seventeen dayes, the Grand Signor sending, for that end, a sufficient Summe to the Sheck. This Sheck, who is, as 'twere the Supream Person upon the score of the Law, and the high Priest of all the Mahumetans, what Country and Sect soever they be of, makes the poor ignorant people believe, that there come every year to Mecha, Seventy thousand Pilgrims, Men and Women; and if that number were not compleat, the Angels would come in humane forms, to make it up.

The great Wealth of the Sheck of Mecha.

This Prince, whom we call the Sheck, for whom all the Mahumetans have a great Veneration, is very Rich, and very powerful, and that may be easily conjectur'd, by the Presents, which he receives every year from the Grand Signor, and the other Mahumetan Princes. The Presents are all his own, to be dispos'd of as he pleases, at the end of the Year, when new ones are sent to him. He makes his advantage also of all the presents that are made by the Pilgrims, and of the Summes of Money, which those very Princes send him, to be distributed in Alms, which he also disposes of as he pleases; and all these Presents put together, make him such a Revenue as is hardly imaginable. For Mahumetisme spreads very much into Europe, Asia, and Africa, and that much more then is commonly believ'd as I shall more distinctly make it appear, at the end of my Relation, in a particular Chapter, which I design for the handling of that matter.

From

From several Parts of the World, there come Caravans to Mecha; and when the Devotion is to begin, the High Priest, assisted by all the people belonging to the Law, spends night and day, in saying of Prayers, and performing the necessary Ceremonies. On the Seventh day, all the Pilgrims are assembled together before the Sheck's Tent, who appears at the entrance of it, and standing upon a low Stool, that he may be seen by those who are at the greatest distance from him, Prayes, and gives his Benediction to all the people, putting a period to the Devotion, with these words, That God would enable them to return in Peace, as they came thither.

Ceremonies observed at Mahomet's Tomb.

From that minute, every one must bethink himself, that he is to be at his own charge; the Sheck gives no more, and 'tis then that he begins to make great advantage to himself. For whatever is sold for the Sustenance of the Pilgrims, comes from him; and besides, he holds a correspondence with the Masters of the Caravans, of whom the Pilgrims are forced to buy conveniences for their riding back again, at more than three times the rate they are worth, when the Beasts they had brought out of their own Countries have fail'd them by the way.

The Caravan of Cairo is the most numerous, and the most considerable of all the Caravans, that come to Mecha. The Caravan-bachi, who is the Captain and Conductor of it, makes his gains by it, at his return, worth him Two hundred thousand Crowns; and there is a great competition about his place, which is at the disposal of the Bassa of Cairo, and commonly carried by the highest bidder for it. The Captain of this Caravan is also Master of the Waters, which are carried into the Cisterns, and it is according to his Orders that they are distributed; and whereas that distribution is equal, as well in Relation to the Poor, as to the Rich, if the latter would have any beyond the quantity allow'd them, they must pay dearly for it; and the Captain, who sets what imposition he pleases upon it, makes a considerable advantage thereby.

The Caravan of Cairo.

But let us return to the Grand Seignor's Present. The Tent, and the Carpet, which he sends, are two Pieces equally precious, as well for the excellency of the Stuffs, as the additional embellishments hereof. The Carpet is design'd for the covering of Mahomet's Tomb; and the Tent, which is erected hard by the Mosque, is for the Sheck, who does not stir out of it, during the Seventeen dayes of Devotion. This high Priest of the Mahumetan Law, has found out the Secret knack, of extracting inexpressible Sums of Money, out of that Carpet and Tent, which are renew'd every year: and when the new Present is arriv'd from the Grand Seignor, he sends, as 'twere out of a singular favour, certain pieces of the Curtain of the old Tent, to several Mahumetan Princes, of whom he receives Magnificent Presents in requital. This Curtain, which is set up on the out-side of the Tent, quite round it, to hinder the people from seeing those that are under it, consists of several pieces, six foot high, and of a great length: and the Sheck endeavours to perswade those Princes, That if they fasten one of those pieces to their Tents, when they are going to engage in a War, against those whom they account Infidels, good fortune will be sure to attend them, and it will not be long ere they gain the Victory. But if he sends either the whole Curtain, or the Tent, or Carpet entire, it must be to a great Monarch indeed, such as the great Cham of Tartary, or the Great Mogul: and that he does, once in ten, or twelve years; one while to the one, and another, to the other.

The Present sent from Mecha to the Great Mogul.

Of this we have a late instance, in Aureng-zeb, who at the present is King of the Indies, and whom we otherwise call the Great Mogul. For upon his establishment in his Throne, the Sheck sent him the whole Courtain belonging to the Tent; and great joy there was at his Court, that the King had receiv'd so Magnificent a Present, from the Holy Place, as they call it. The Sheck was soon after made sensible of the Royal Liberality of that Great Monarch, one of the Richest and most Powerful of the Universe; and thus does that Spiritual Head of the Mahumetan Religion, who has a kind of Superintendency over all the Members, know how to make his advantage of them, and has found out the way, to enrich himself, at the cost of all the Princes and Nations, who submit themselves to the Mahumetan Law.

I question not, but that they who have writ of the Religion of the Turks, have given some account of the Pilgrimage of Meeba, which is one of the most essential parts thereof; and therefore, as well for that reason, as also for that I should digress too much from my subject, I ought not to prosecute that matter any farther. I shall take occasion here, to make three Remarks, which I have originally learnt of one of the most learned in the Rubricks of the Mahometan Law.

The first is, that the Turks, by an ancient Tradition, believe, That Meeba is the place where God commanded Abraham to build him an house; and that while he was there, all Nations came thronging to visit him: and that it is also the same place, where Mahomet receiv'd the Alcoran, from Heaven.

The second relates to the Commandement impos'd upon all the Mahometans, to be, once in their lives, concern'd in the Pilgrimage of Meeba. For it is to be observ'd, That the obligation does not extend to the poorer sort of people, who have hardly wherewithal to live upon, and would bring great misery on their Families, by their absence, as being not able to leave them what is requisite for their sustenance.

The third Remark is concerning the preference of the two Cities of Meeba, and Medina. The former is the place of Mahomet's birth, which it was his design to honour, and make known, by that famous Pilgrimage, whereto he obliges all those of his Law. The latter is the place of his Burial, of which there is abundance of fabulous relations. Mahomet, in his Alcoran, does only enjoin their going to Meeba, where there are no other Relicks of that false Prophet, then one of his Sandalls: And the Doctors of the Law are also of opinion, that there is no obligation of going to Medina, and that without seeing that City, a man satisfies the Command of Mahomet. I shall treat at large of the Pilgrimage of Meeba, in the last Chapter of this Relation of my Travels, and of the different Roads by which the Mahometans of Europe, Asia, and Africa, are conducted to the Tomb of their Prophet.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Cup-Bearer's Quarter, and of divers other Apartments.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Ancient Custom practis'd, when the Grand Seignor is presented with any thing to drink, between Meals. A way to quench thirst at Meals, wholly particular to the Levantines. The composition of Treacle. A stately service of Gold-Plate. Beds according to the Turkish mode. Ways to satisfy the Necessities of Nature different from ours. The Causes of the abominable Sin committed by the Turks, who are confin'd within the Seraglio.

I Have discover'd many things particularly observable, concerning the Treasury of the Ottoman Monarchs, and there are yet some very Remarkable passages to be communicated, relating to the other Quarters of the inner part of the Seraglio.

Between the Treasury, and an obscure Vaulted Gallery, in length between Fifteen and Twenty paces, which conducts you to an Iron-Door, by which there is a passage into the Gardens, you find, on the left hand, the Apartment of the pages of the Kilar, or the Cup-Bearer's Office. That is the place where they prepare the Sherbets, and other Liquors, for the Grand Seignor's own drinking, and where they keep the Wine, if it happens, that he drinks any, as Sultan Amurath did, of whom I have often had occasion to speak. 'Tis an ancient Custom, That when the Grand Seignor calls for Water to drink between meals, every time he so calls, costs him ten Sequins, or Chequins. The Ceremony observ'd therein is this: In the Chamber call'd the Haz-Oda, which is the Apartment of the Forty pages, who are always near the Grand Seignor's person, there is perpetually one of them standing Scentinel at the Entrance, which leads to the Cup-Bearer's Office, where two pages of the same Quarter are in like manner upon the Sentry. When the Grand Seignor is thirsty, and calls for water, the Page of the Haz-Oda, immediately makes a sign to the two Pages of the Kilar, of whom one advances up to the Kilar-bachi, or Cup-Bearer himself, crying out Son, which signifies Water, to advertise him, that the Prince would drink; and the other runs to the door of the Haz-Oda, where the most ancient of the Forty Pages gives him Ten Sequins. That Page is the Treasurer of the said Chamber, and he pays the small Sums which the Grand Seignor gives Order for, an Office which might be call'd in English, The Treasurer of the petty Expences. The Water is sometimes brought in a Cup of Gold, sometimes in a Vessel of Porcelain, placed upon a large Server of Gold, about two foot diameter, and enrich'd with Precious Stones within and without. That is look'd on, as one of the richest pieces of Plate belonging to the Seraglio. The principal Cup-Bearer, who is a white Eunuch, carries it with great Ceremony, attended by a hundred Pages of the Kilar, whom he ordinarily has under his Charge, and upheld under the Arms by two of them, who walk on both sides of him. For it is requir'd, That he should carry it lifted up above his head, and so he cannot see his way but by looking under it. When he is come to the Door of the Haz-Oda, the Pages of the Kilar, who have accompany'd him so far, pass no further, save only the two who uphold his Arms, and the Pages of the Chamber go along with him quite into the Grand Seignor's Presence. But when they come to the door of the Chamber, two of the more ancient among them, take the places of the two Pages of the Kilar, and compleat the conducting of the Kilargi-Bachi, under the Arms, to offer the Cup to the Prince. When he has not any thing to say to him, he carries it back again into the Kilar; but if he will take his opportunity to entertain him with some Affair, he delivers the Cup and the Server into the hands of one of the Pages, who led him under the Arms, and he delivers it to those, who, belonging to the Cup-Bearer's Office, waited there in expectation of his return.

A way to quench thirst at meals, wholly particular to the Levantines.

'Tis in the same place, to wit, that under the over-sight of the Cup-bearer, they keep all sorts of refreshing and cooling Waters, as that of Peaches, Cherries, Raspices, and such other fruits. The Turks do not drink during their refection, that is, not till they have given over eating; and because it is possible they may be dry, whilst they eat; take here the manner how they quench that thirst. They are serv'd at Table with these Waters, in great Cups of Pourcelaine, which hold about two Quarts, and the better to distinguish them, they put into every one of those Cups, some of the same fruit, from which the Water that is therein had been extracted, and which they had preserv'd for that purpose. Every one has lying by him a Wooden spoon, which holds three or four times as much as any of our ordinary ones, and whereof the handle is of a length proportionable: for as to Gold and Silver spoons, it is not their custome to use any. With those spoons, they can take out what is in the Cups, according to the Water which they most fancy, and so they suspend thirst, taking ever and anon some spoonfuls of it.

The Composition of Treacle.

It is also in the Cup-bearers Appartment that the Treacle is made, which the Turks call Tiriak-Farik, and there is a great quantity of it made, because they use it as an Universal remedy, and charitably bestow it on all sorts of people, as well in City as Country, who are desirous of it. The Vipers which are us'd in this composition are brought out of Egypt, and they make no account of those which other Countries afford, or they are of opinion at least, that the former are much the better for that purpose.

A stately service of Gold Plate.

Before the Appartment of the Kilar, there is a Gallery whereof the floor is pav'd with square pieces of Black and White Marble, and sustain'd by eight fair Pillars of White Marble, and at the end of it is a little Quarter, where the principal Cup-bearer has his residence. There also are the Lodgings of his Substitute, the Kilarquet-boudasi, who is not an Eunuch, as the Kilargi-bachi is, and who, at his removal out of the Seraglio, is ordinatily advanc'd to the charge of a Bessa. The Kilargi-bachi has in his custody all the Gold and Silver-plate, the Basins, the Ewers the Bowls, the Cups, the Servers, and the Candlesticks, the greatest part of that service being garnish'd with Diamonds, Rubies and Emeralds, and other precious Stones of value. As for golden Dishes and Candlesticks, without any additional embellishments of precious Stones, there are some so large, and so massy, that there must be two men to carry one of them. These Candlesticks are made after a fashion quite different from ours. They are ordinarily two or three Foot high, upon a Base of above twelve inches Diameter, and the upper part thereof is as 'twere a Box or kind of Lamp, with its beak, and it may contain above a pound of suet. 'Tis to prevent the fall of any thing upon the Carpet, that they make the foot of the Candlestick so large as I told you; and besides, it is requisite, that it should bear some proportion to the height. The match, or wieke, which they put into the Suet, beaten into small bits, is about the bigness of a Man's thumb, and consequently must needs make a great light in the Room. As to the Kilarquet-boudasi he

he is the Superiour over the Halvags, and Akegis, who are the Cooks and the Confectioners, of whom not one can enter into service, but by his Orders.

In my discourse of the Treasury I made no mention of the Quarter of those Officers, who serve there, because my design was to follow the order of the Structures of the Seraglio, and to conduct the Reader, by little and little, out of one Court into another, and out of one Quarter into another. That of the Pages of the Treasury, is hard by the Kilar, and begins with a Gallery, pav'd with square pieces of Marble, of different colours, sustain'd by eight Pillars, of the same material, and whereof the sides and the roof are painted with all sorts of flowers, in Gold and Azure. That Gallery is open on the one side, and on the other you find in the midst of it, the Door leading into the Appartment of the Pages, with three great Windows on the right hand, and as many on the left: And 'tis there that the six most elderly Pages of the Treasury have residence night and day. From that door, along a walk pav'd with white Marble stones, very large ones, about fifteen paces in length, and five in breadth, you come to another Portal, of the same material, sustain'd by two Pillars of black Marble; over the said Portal, there may be read these words, which are ordinarily enough in the mouths of the Turks, and which I have explicated elsewhere;

La Illahé Illa Alla, Muhammed Resoul Alla.

It gives entrance into a long Hall, where there may be seen on both sides a kind of Seat, or Scaffold, a foot and a half in height, and between seven or eight in breadth. Every Page has but four foot in breadth for his reposing place, as well by day, as by night: And for their Beds, they are permitted to have under them, only a Woollen Coverlet, four times doubled, which serves them for a Quilt, and over that they ordinarily have one of Gold or Silver-Brockado, or some other sumptuous Silk-stuff; and in the Winter time, they are permitted to have three of them. They are not to have their Coverlets all of Wooll, which would be so much the warmer, because it would not be a decent sight for the Grand Seignor, when he comes ever and anon, in the night time, pretending indeed as if he would surprize them, and see how they demean themselves, but in effect, sometimes to cover lewd designs. 'Tis between those Coverlets that the Pages take their repose, having their Waist-coat and Drawers on; for there is no talk of any other kind of Linnen, either in Turkey, or any part of the East; and whether it be Winter or Summer, they alwaies lay themselves down to sleep, half clad, without any great Ceremony.

Beds according to the Turkish mode.

Over the Beds of the Pages, there is a Gallery, which goes quite round the Hall, and is sustain'd by Pillars of Wood, painted all over with red varnish, and there they have their Coffers, wherein their Cloaths are kept. Every one has a Coffer to himself, but the twelve Senior Pages have each of them two Coffers, and one of those twelve has the Key of the Gallery in his custody. It is ordinarily open'd but one day in the Week, which is answerable to our Wednesday, and then, every Page goes, and takes out of his Coffer, what he stands in need of. If any one of them must of necessity look for some thing there upon any other day, he gets five or six Pages together, and they all go to the principal Officer of the Treasury, and he commands the Rafgi, who has the Key of the Gallery in his custody, to open it for them, and to have a care that they meddle not with the Coffers of their Companions.

Wayes to satisfy the necessities of nature different from ours.

At one of the ends of the Hall, there is a Door, which conducts you to the Fountains, where those that have their dependence on the Treasury go and wash, when they are call'd to their Devotions. There are seven Copper Cocks for that conveniency, and as well the pavement as the Walls, of that place are of white Marble.

The places appointed for the easing of Nature are on the right hand, divided into four little Rooms, which are alwas kept very clean, and pav'd with square pieces of white Marble; as the Room of the Fountain is. The Turks do not sit down, as we do, when they are in those places, but they squat down over the hole, which which is not half a foot, or little more above the ground. That hole is cover'd with an Iron plate, which rises and falls by a Spring, and turning one way or other, at the falling of the least weight upon it, it comes to the station it was in before, as soon as the ordure is fallen from it. I have observ'd elsewhere, that the Turks, and generally all the Mahumetans, do not use paper in such cases; or upon any undecent occasion, and when they go to those kinds of places, they carry along with them a Pot of water, to wash themselves withal, and the Iron-plate is also made clean at the same time. And so the hole being alwaies cover'd, and the Iron-plate always kept clean there can be no ill smell in the place, and that the rather, for that a small current of water, which passes under that place, carries away all the Ordure.

The Causes of the abominable Sin committed by the Turks who are confin'd within the Seraglio.

But it were to be wish'd, that they would not so much concern themselves in keeping those places so clean, provided they could forbear polluting them with those detestable impurities, which I should gladly have left unmention'd, did I not fear the reproach might be made to me, of my having been defective in point of exactness. I have already said something of it, in the Second Chapter of this Relation, and it is a subject, which is to be slightly past over, that so there may be but imperfect Idea's left of it. It is therefore in those places, that the Pages make their nocturnal assignations, in order to the committing of the worst of all crimes, which yet they find it very difficult to put in execution, because they are so narrowly watch'd; and if they are taken in the very act, they are punished with so great severity, that sometimes they are even drubb'd to death; of which chastisement, I have elsewhere given an account. In like manner, to prevent the committing of that infamous act, in the places where they take their repose, there are two Torches lighted, which last all the Night, and three Eunuchs are ever and anon going their Rounds, by which means the Pages are depriv'd of the opportunities, which otherwise they might have, to offend.

But we need not go far, to find out the Source of this Evil: the strictness of the restraint they are in, and their being depriv'd of the sight of Women, induce those Young Men to practise such defilements, and hurry the Turks into a Gulph, to which they, by an execrable passion, are, naturally but too much inclinable. The Ichoglans, who are brought very young into the Seraglio, know not what a Woman is, but by the instinct of Nature; and there are some of them, who, for one day's sight and enjoyment of a Woman, would be content to dye the next. All those Nations generally have so great a bent to lubricity, that it seems impossible they should quit it, but with their lives: what they cannot do one way, they endeavour to do another; and they of the Seraglio do all they can to elude the inspection of their Overseers. The Reader may call to mind the Action of the two Pages, who hid themselves in the Mosquey, and that single Example is enough, to shew, how they seek out all the ways imaginable, to satisfy their brutish passion.

The Quarter of the Kasnadar-bachi, as also that of his Companion, or Substitute, is adjoyning to that of the Pages of the Treasury, and from their Chambers, they have a Prospect into a little Flower-Garden, which belongs to them. We have yet some other Chambers to view, before we come to that, which they call the Haz-Oda, which is the Appartment of the Forty Pages of the Chamber, and the entrance to that of the Grand Seignor.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Quarter of the Dogangi-bachi, or Grand Faulconer, and of some other Officers.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

Magnificent Chambers. The ordinary Revenues of the Grand Faulconers. The Magnificence of the Ottoman Princes, in what relates to Hunting. Birds supplying the places of Dogs, in running down a Deer, or a Hare. The delicate Chamber of the Selidgar-Agi, who carries the Grand Seignor's Sword. The excellent Order observ'd in the Seraglio.

THE Dogangi-bachi, or Grand Faulconer, and the Pages, whom he has under his Charge, have their Quarter between that of the Pages of the Treasury, and that of the Pages of the Chamber. The place appointed for the Pages of the Falconry, has nothing in it extraordinary, and a man cannot make a discovery of any thing of beauty therein: but on the other side, the two Chambers, where the Grand Falconer Lodges, have something that's Magnificent and are as sumptuously furnish'd, as any other Room of the Seraglio. The first, which serves for an Anti-Chamber, is lesser, and they are both of them pav'd with a Checquer-work of black and white Marble, having the Roof beautify'd with Flowers, painted, and gilt. But that of the second Chamber is the more sumptuous by much, as having large Flowers, in emboss'd Work, every Flower in its square piece, and the Junctures all cover'd with Gold. The Walls are excellently wainscoted, wherein also they have not spar'd for Gold, and on both sides, there are cross-barr'd Windows, whereby the Chamber receives much light. The Marble Checquer-work of the Floor is not seen, as being cover'd with a silken Carpet, upon which there are laid, in several parts of the Chamber, a certain number of Quilts, two or three Foot in breadth, and about four Inches thick. Some of them are cover'd with Velvet, or Satin, of different Colours; others with Gold-Brockadoes, and every one has its Cushion of the same Stuff, between three and four foot in length, and about two foot in height. These Cushions are laid behind their backs, when they are sitting, after their Mode cross-legg'd, and those little Quilts are to them, instead of Chairs, and Couches, in a Chamber.

Magnificent Chambers.

If the Grand Falconer be remov'd out of the Seraglio, it is upon his advancement to the Charge of one of the principal Bassa's, and to one of the greater Governments, as that of Cairo, or Babylon; and while he continues in the Seraglio besides his Table, which is all at the Prince's charge, he is allow'd an annual Revenue, of ten or twelve thousand Crowns. The Pages of the Falconry, carry Hawks on their Fists, and feed them: they have the liberty to go and exercise them in the Gardens, and they all attend the Grand Seignor, when he goes a Hawking, or Hunting. They wear the same Stuffs, as the Pages of the Treasury, and may also put on Vests of Cloth, but made after such a fashion, as makes them easily distinguishable from the Ichoglans, of the first and second Chamber, who are always clad in woollen-cloth. For the Pages of the Falconry have their Sleeves made narrower, and narrower, from the Shoulder to the wrist, and they are there fasten'd close with Buttons; but the Sleeves of the Pages of the Treasury, are as wide below, as they are above, and that makes the difference between them. The twelve Senior Pages of the Falconry have the same privileges and advantages, as the Pages of the Treasury, and are their Fellow-Commoners; but the other Companions of the former, are treated after the same rate as the Pages of the Seferlis, who wash the Grand Seignor's Linnen, and they all common at the same Table.

The Magnificence of the Ottoman Princes in relation to Hunting and Hawking.

Besides the fore-mentioned Pages, the Grand Faulconer has under his command near eight hundred other persons, as well in Constantinople as the parts adjacent thereto, perpetually employ'd in the ordering and training up of all sorts of Birds for the Game, and there come none into the Seraglio, but what are so order'd, and taught. Though there may be a very great number of such, yet does not the Grand Seignor make use of any, but what have some stone of value about the neck, nay sometimes such as may be valued at ten thousand Crowns. All the Mahumetan Princes are very sumptuous, in all things relating to their Game, and particularly the King of Persia. Nothing can be imagin'd more Glorious, or Magnificent, than the long Train of the Grandees of his Court, when they return from their Sports. They all march in an excellent order, every one with a Hawke on his Fist, and every Hawke having about the neck, either a Diamond, or some other precious stone, of great value, with the hood all embroider'd with Pearles; which must needs make a most delightful show.

Birds supplying the place of Dogs, in running down a Deer or Hare.

The Turks, and other inhabitants of the Levant, breed up, in order to their diversifements, several sorts of Birds, which the Europeans make no use of at all, and they are of a larger size, and stronger, than ours. With those, instead of Dogs, will they run down a Hare, or a Stagge; and they have also the diversion of hunting the Wild Boar, and other savage Beasts. But what makes that Sport the more delightful is this, that in Persia the Countrey is all open and champion, and there are no Woods, into which the Hawke, or other Bird, might get out of their sight. He discovers the Beast at a great distance, fastens of a suddain upon it, so as that it cannot get loose from him, and sticking close to the Head, picks out the Eyes of it, vexes, and torments it, and retards the swiftness of its course, by which means, the Huntsman come up the sooner to it, and dispatch it. But they do not give the fatal blow, till the Prince has order'd them to do it, or till he has shot off an Arrow, or discharg'd his Fire-lock: upon which signall, they who are about him are permitted to exercise their courage and dexterity.

Next adjoyning to the Appartment of the Pages belonging to the Falconry, there is a long Gallery, which is open but of one side, and in the floor of it, there is a little ascent. It is sustain'd by ten Pillars of Marble, of several colours, and pav'd with a square-pic'd work of the same material; with a Waincotage, wherein there are some flowers painted, but very meanly.

The Seligdar-Aga's Chamber, who carries the Grand Seignor's Sword.

From the end of the foresaid Gallery, turning on the right hand you come to the Chamber of the Seligdar-Aga, who carries the Sword before the Grand Seignor. Some part of that Chamber is cover'd with Carpets, the other has a Seat or Scaffold, rais'd three foot high, but of a considerable breadth, to which they ascend by so many steps of white Marble, of four foot in length, the remainder of which Seat, being divided from the Chamber by a Ballister'd work, partly gilt with Gold, and partly Green. All within that enclosure of Ballisters is cover'd with rich silken Carpets, and all about, as well to the Wall side, as to that of the Ballisters, there are sumptuous Cushions of all sorts, of Gold and Silver-Brokadoes. The Walls of the Chamber are all gilt, and at equal distances, there are flower-pots painted, rarely well diversify'd, and affording a most delightful prospect. The place where the Seligdar-Aga sits, is at the corner of that part of the Chamber which is enclos'd with the Ballisters, on the right hand, and over his Head hang the Swords and Sabres, which he carries before the Grand Seignor, whithin the Seraglio; and after him, when his Highness goes out of the Seraglio.

Alfoon.

As soon as a Prince is come to the Crown, whatever he ordinarily wears, is never return'd into the Treasury, till after his death: And the Chafnader-bachi, who is the Overseer of it, finds by his Registries, whether all the things that were taken out of the Treasury, during the Grand Signor's life, are brought into it again at his death. Whenever any piece is taken out, the Seligidar-Aga, to whom it is deliver'd, gives the Principal Officer of the Treasury an acknowledgment, under his hand, of his having receiv'd it; and by that means nothing can be embezill'd; good order being strictly observ'd in all things, relating to the Seraglio. In some other parts of the Chamber you find hanging up Ponyards and Knives, all rich Pieces, and beset with precious stones, which as all the rest, are exactly Registred in the Books of the Treasury. On each side of the said Chamber, there are two little Rooms, for four Pages of the Seferlis, who wait on the Seligidar-Aga, and are always about his person. 'Tis now time that we pass into the Grand Signor's Quarter.

The excellent order observ'd in the Seraglio.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Grand Signor's Apartment.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Chamber of the Forty Pages. A noble Monument of the Valour of Amurath. The situation of the Mosqueys in Turkey. The Ceremonies of their Devotions. A Magnificent Winter-Chamber. The mysterious Seal of Mahomet. The great Superstitions of the Turks. A fantastick, and covetous knack of Devotion. The Relicks of Omar. A ridiculous Sect. The Grand Signor's Quarter. The Emperour Amurath's Belvedere, or place of Prospect. The Excellent Wines of the Isle of Tenedos. A perfidious Act justly punish'd. The Fortune of a beautiful Sicilian Virgin. The Grand Signor's Bed-Chamber. The ancient veneration of the Turks for Mahomet's Banner. A word farther of the Prince's Apartment.

THough the inner part of the Seraglio ought properly to be divided into but two great Quarters, which are the Grand Signor's own Quarter, and the Quarter of the Sultaneses; yet have I thought it more convenient, for the Reader's better remembrance of things, to distinguish to him the different parts, of which the former consists answerably to its several uses: and after a large account, given of the Baths, the Treasury, the Cup-Bearer's Office, and the Falconry, I come now to the particular Apartment of the Grand Signor's Person.

The Haz Ota is the first structure that offers it self to your view, and 'tis by that name the Turks call the fourth and highest Classe of the Ichoglans, which is the Chamber of the Forty Pages, who are hourly employ'd in the Grand Signor's Service. This Chamber is of the same largeness, as that of the Pages of the Treasury, and furnish'd much after the same rate; but it is not near so lightsome, or rather, it wants light. As there is not so great a number of them, so have they accordingly more place to sit, or lye down; and in the midst of the Chamber, you find a little square place, rais'd up somewhat higher than the Beds of the Pages, whence the Haz-Oda-bachi, their Governour, may observe all their actions, and see how they demean themselves. He has order to give the Grand Seignor notice of it, Rewards being the consequences of good actions, as chastilements are, of bad ones; and it is also incumbent upon him, to make speedy provision of all the things they stand in need of. Over the Door of that Chamber, these words, La Illa He Illa, &c. whereof I have often made mention, are engrav'd in large golden Letters; and at the four corners, are the Names of Mahomet's four Companions, Ebou-beker, Omar, Osman, and Ali, engrav'd in like manner in black Marble. When the Grand Seignor has made a Bassa, and that he is to take his leave of his Highness, to go to his Government, he comes out at that Door, where all those names are engrav'd, and as soon as he is come out, he turns his face again to the Door, and kisses the Threshold of it, with great humility.

As soon as you are come into the Chamber, you find on the right hand several words of the Law, written, and enchain'd, in gilt squares, and one of these Writings is, of Sultan Achmet's, the Father of Amurath. On the left hand, you find, fasten'd to the Wall, a Coat of Mail, a Head-piece, and a great Buckler; it is one of the Monuments of Amurath's Valour. During the Siege of Bagdet, or Babylon, a Persian coming out of the City, and challenging any one of the Besiegers to meet him, that Prince, one of the most courageous and strongest men of his age, would needs receive him himself, without any other Arms, than a Sabre in his hand, though the Persian was arm'd from head to foot. Amurath who was not only a prodigious Person as to strength, and valour, but also well skill'd in the use of a Weapon, afforded him not the time to consider whom he had to deal withal, but immediately gave him such a furious blow with the Sabre, over the right shoulder, that he cut his coat of Mail quite to the Middle of his Body, and left him dead upon the place.

A noble Monument of Amurath's Valour

Opposite to the Haz-Oda, or the Chamber of the forty Pages, there is a Gallery of a considerable length, and particularly remarkable for its Structure. It is open on both sides, and has, of each, a row of white Marble-Pillars; but it is built after the Serpentine fashion, and they who walk in it are, every six paces, out of sight one of the other. There are, under this Gallery four great Presses, to put up the accoutrements of the four Officers, who are always about the Grand Seignor's Person, to wit, the Seligdar-Aga, the Ghokadar-Aga, the Requabdar-Aga, and the Hazoda-bachi, of whom I have spoken at the beginning of this Relation, when I gave a List of the Grande'es of the Port.

The situation of the Mosques in Turkey,

This Gallery, of so fantastick and so extraordinary a Structure, is not far from that other, which is a continu'd ascent, and whereof I made mention in the precedent Chapter. Opposite to this last, there is a Mosque of the middle sort, as to the largeness, the length of it somewhat exceeding its breadth, and it stands North and South, a situation the Turks observe in all their Mosques, which are always turn'd towards Mecha, which place is Meridional to all the provinces of the Empire. There is in the Wall, opposite to the South, a kind of Neech, which they call Mibrab, into which the Iman, who is their Priest, gets up, to say Prayers at the accustomed hours, and the Grand Seignor is present thereat, with the forty Pages of the Haz-Oda, in a little Room, the Window whereof is opposite to the Neech. On both sides of the said Neech, there is a Gallery sustain'd by five Pillars, some whereof are of green Marble, and the rest of Prophyry. And in the Mosque, and in the Chamber, or Room, into which the Grand Seignor comes to do his Devotions, and in the two Galleries, there's no going but upon rich Carpets. You are not to look for ought of Painting there, nor have the Walls any other Ornament, then that of the whiteness of the Marble, whereof they are built. But there are a great many Writings, in large Arabick Characters, enchain'd in gilt Borders, hanging up in several places, and those Writings contain only things taken out of the Law of Mahomet.

The Window of the Chamber into which the Grand Seignor comes to do his Devotions, is six foot in length, and three foot high, and has a Lattice with a Curtain behind it; as it is in several Chappels, which our Christian Princes have in their Palaces. There is also opposite to the same Neech, before-mention'd, such another Window, and such another Chamber, for the Sultaneſſes, and when the Muezzim, whose ſtation is of one ſide of the Iman, and who is as it were his Clerk, hears the drawing of the Curtains, he immediately rings a ſmall Bell which is the ſignal, that the Grand Seignor and the Sultaneſſes are come into their ſeveral Rooms.

Upon their arrival, the foreſaid Muezzim begins to ſing theſe two words, Allahu Ekber, which ſignifies, God is Great, repeating them four times: and afterwards, having added thereto ſome words, ſpeaking as 'twere to himſelf, the Iman in his turn, ſings theſe following; Elhamdu lillahi Rabbil alemijn, that is to ſay, The Grace of God is the Maſter of all things. He thus continues the Prayer, proſtrating himſelf ſeveral times to the ground, and all the people preſent do alſo proſtrate themſelves as he does.

The Ceremonies of their Devotions.

In the miſt of the Domo of the Moſquey, there is a Hoop of Iron, all about which there hangs a great number of Lamps, of Venice-Cryſtal, and there are alſo ſome diſpos'd along the Galleries, of the ſame Metal, they being not permitted to have in ther Moſqueys, either Gold or Silver. They do not light thoſe Lamps, but only for the Prayers at night, and the fire caſting a reflection on theſe Cryſtals, creates a moſt delightful Object to the ſight.

The Chamber of the Sarai-Agaſi, one of the four Principal Eunuchs, is adjoining to that Moſquey, and the leaſt of all the Chambers, of the Officers, belonging to the Inner-part of the Seraglio. He has but little place more than is requiſite for him to ſleep in, and he is waited on by two Pages of the Couchoûk-Oda, or the little Chamber.

Adjoining to the Door of the Haz-Oda, there is a Hall pav'd with a Checquer-work of black and white Marble, in the miſt whereof there is a Baſin of the ſame material, but of ſeveral Colours, out of which there is an aſcent of water four or five foot high. That water is receiv'd into a ſecond Baſin, made in the form of a Scallop-shell, out of which it falls again into a third, much larger than the two precedent ones. The upper part of the Hall is built Domo-wiſe, having therein ſome Windows, which give it light, and a certain piece of dull Painting is all the Ornament of its Walls. At your entrance into this Hall, you ſee two Doors, one on the right hand, the other on the left. That on the left hand conducts to a Flower-Garden; and the other is the door of a Chamber, into which the Grand Seignor comes ſometimes in the Winter-Season.

This Chamber is one of the moſt ſumptuous of any in the Seraglio. Its Arched Roof is divided into a great number of little Cells, Triangle-wiſe, diſtinguiſh'd by two little ſtreaks of Gold with a green ſtreak in the miſt, and out of every Angle, there juts ſomewhat like the bottom of Lamp, excellently well gilt. Though the Walls are of a curious white Marble, yet is there a delicate piece of Wainſcotage, of about the height of a man's waſte, carried quite round the Room, and the rich Carpets, upon which you walk, deprive your ſight of the large ſquares of Marble, of ſeveral colours, wherewith the Floor is embelliſh'd. Of a great number of Cuſhions, which are plac'd along the Walls, ſome are embroider'd with Pearls, and precious Stones, and ſet there only for oſtentation; the others, which are for ſervice, are cover'd with Gold, or Silver-Brokadoes, and other coſtly Stuſſs. At one of the corners of the Chamber, there is a little Field-bed, about two foot in height, embroider'd all over, the Counterpane, the Cuſhions, and the Quilt; and that Embroidery is all of Pearls, Rubies, and Emeralds. But when the Grand Seignor is to come into that Chamber, they take away the Counterpane and Cuſhions, which are leſs fit for Service than for Ornament; and they bring in others of quilted or tuſted Velvet, or Satin, upon which the Grand Seignor may more conveniently reſe himſelf.

A magnificent Winter Chamber.

Towards the feet of the ſaid Bed, there is a kind of Neech, made within the very Wall, in which there is a little Ebony Box, about half a foot ſquare, and in that is lock'd up Mahomet's Seal. It is encha'd in a Cryſtal, with a Bordure of Ivory, and taking all together, it may be four inches in length, and three in breadth. I have ſeen the Impreſſion of it upon a piece of Paper

Mahomet's Mysterious Seal.

but he who shew'd it me, would not suffer me to touch it, only upon this score, that he look'd on it as a great Relick. Once in three months this Chamber is made clean, and the Carpets are chang'd, the Pages of the Treasury being employ'd in that Office. And then it is, that the Chafnader-bachi opens the Box, and having in his hands an embroider'd Hand-kerchief, he takes out the Seal, with great respect and reverence, whilst the Seignor of the Pages holds a golden Cup, garnish'd with Diamonds and blue Saphris, on the top of which there is a kind of Perfuming-Pot, out of which there comes an exhalation of all sorts of sweet Scents, whereby the whole Room is in a manner embalm'd. The Page holds that in both his hands joyn'd together, and lifting it up higher than his Head, all those that are present immediately prostrate themselves to the ground, as an acknowledgment of their veneration. As soon as they are up again, the Page brings down the Cup, lower than his chin, and the principal Officer of the Treasury, holding the Seal over the smoake, all those who are in the Room, come and kiss the Chrystal which covers one of the most precious Relicks, that they have of their Prophet. I have us'd all the endeavours I could, to get out of my two Officers of the Treasury, who had often kiss'd that Chrystal, what Observations they might have made, as to the material whereof the Seal was made and what Letters were engrav'd upon it; but they told me, that by the reason of the smoke, and the Chrystal, which covers the Seal, not to insist on the small time they have to observe it, during the act of kissing it, it is not possible that any one can give a certain judgment of either the Stuff, or the Engraving of it.

Upon the fourteenth day of the Ramazan, that is to say, the Lent of the Turks, the Grand Seignor comes in person into that Chamber, accompany'd only by the Seligidar-Aga, and taking off the Chrystal, which lies over the Seal, he delivers it into his hands, ordering him to make the Impression of it upon fifty little bits of Paper, which are not much bigger than the Seal itself. This Impression is taken off with a certain gummy Ink, which is prepar'd in a Pourcelain Dish, whereinto he thrusts his finger, and rubs the Seal with it, and keeps all those Printed Papers, for the use, to which his Highness designs them, as we shall see, ere we come to the end of this Chapter.

The great Superstition of the Turks.

Within the same Chamber, and adjoining to the place, where the Seal is kept, there is another Box or Coffer, of a larger size, cover'd with a Carpet of green Velvet, with a great fringe of Gold and Silver, wherein is kept, Mahomet's Hirka. It is a Garment with large sleeves of a white Camlet, made of Goat's hair, which the Turks do also look upon as a great Relick. The Grand Seignor having taken it out of the Coffer, kisses it with much respect, and puts it into the hands of the Capi-Aga, who is come into the Room by his Order, after they had taken the Impression of the Seal. The Officer sends to the Overseer of the Treasury, for a large golden Cauldron, which is brought in thither by some of the Seignor-Pages. It is so capacious, according to the description which they gave me of it, as to contain the sixth part of a Tun, and the out-side of it is garnish'd, in some places, with Emeralds, and Turquezes. This Vessel is fill'd with water within six fingers breadth of the brink, and the Capi-Aga, having put Mahomet's Garment into it, and left it to soak a little while, takes it out again, and wrings it hard, to get out the water it had imbib'd, which falls into the Cauldron, taking great care, that there falls not any of it to the ground. That done, with the said water he fills a great number of Venice-Chrystal Bottles, containing about half a pint, and when he has stopp'd them, he Seals them with the Grand Seignor's Seal. They afterwards set the Garment a drying, till the twentieth day of the Ramazan, and then his Highness comes to see them put up again in the Coffer.

A ridiculous and covetous knack of Devotion.

The next day after that Ceremoney, which is the fifteenth after their grand Fast, the Sultan sends to the Sultans, and the Grandees of Constantiople as also to most of the considerable Bassas of the Empire, to each of them, an Impression of the Seal, in a little scrip of Paper roll'd up, and well fasten'd with with Silk, and with that, one of those Bottles full of water, which is look'd upon as a great favour. But it proves a very dear favour to those who receive it, and for a scrip of Paper, and a Glass of water, they must send back again to the Grand Seignor a very considerable Present, not accounting what they bestow on those persons, who bring from him, those testimonies and marks of his Affection.

It is to be observ'd also, That the Capi-Aga is allow'd to multiply the said Water, as far as he thinks requisite, and answerably to his desire of multiplying the Presents. All he has to do, is only to fill up the Cauldron, as it is emptied, and that additional water is as good as 'twas before, since it is intermix'd with that wherein Mahomet's Garment had been soak'd. For there are many persons, to whome he sends those Bottles, without the impression of the Seal, upon the little piece of paper, and he has a knack out of all that is bestow'd on the Bearers of those Presents. But he is not permitted to make that multiplication of the Water, any longer than for the space of three days; that is to say, till the Seventeenth of the Ramazan, after which time, the additional intermixture of it would not have the Vertue, which they imagine it has.

As soon as this Present is receiv'd by those to whom it is sent, they take the paper, which has the impression of Mahomet's Seal, and after they have left it to soake a little while in the Water of the little Chrystal bottle, they take off the water and the paper, swallowing down both together with great devotion. But it is to be noted, That no body must be so presumptuous as to open that paper; for they swallow it down as it is brought to them, after a little soaking in the water, they being not permitted to see the impression of the sacred Seal: And they who receive only the little bottle, without the paper, send for one of their Imans, who are as 'twere, their Priests, and get him to write down these words in another piece of paper, La be Illa, Alla bull, vahidul gebber, That is to say There is no other God then God, the punisher of Crimes. There are others, who order these words to be writ down; La Illa be-Illa, Allahul meliqueh vehhab; which signifies, There is no other God then God alone, the Liberal Emperour, and Pardoner of Offences. The paper having those words written upon it, is put into the water of the little Bottle, and so they swallow down both together, with a strong perswasion, that those words have the same verue, as the impression of the Seal.

There is also to be seen, in the same Chamber, a very homely kind of Cuttelas, hanging by the Wall, near the place where the Prophet's Seal and Garment are kept. The Scabbard is cover'd with Green cloth, and they have it by Tradition, that it had been the Cuttelas of Omar, one of Mahomet's four Companions, who govern'd after him, though Ebou-Bequer was the elder of the two, and Father-in-law to Mahomet. The Arabians affirm, That Ebou-Bequer was a Jew, by extraction, and one of the most learned of his time; and that, having renown'd the Mosaiek Law he taught at Mecha, in the Schools, after which he beset himself to compole some part of the Alcoran.

Near the Cuttelas, there is also to be seen a kind of short Sword, for which they have, in like manner, a great veneration, upon a perswasion, that it some time was the Sword of a certain person named Ebou-Nisum, with which he cut to picces, those, who had spread a Heresie in the Law of Mahomet. He came not into the World till Four hundred years after the death of the Prophet, and at length destroy'd that Sect, which during the space of two Ages before, had given much trouble to the true Mahometans, and gain'd several Battles against them.

The said Sect was grown very powerful under the denomination of Maharigun, and I have met with some remainders of it in the Mountains of Charditan, which is the ancient Chaldea. Those people are very remarkable for their superstition; and much more for their ignorance; and a man must have a great care of striking a black Dog, in their presence, or cutting an Onion with a Knife; for their way, when they are to eat an Onion, is to crush it between two stones. The cause of that gross ignorance, is their not having having any Person among them, to instruct them; and a man may Travel five or six days Journey in their Countrey, and not meet with either a Mollab, or a Mosquey. The same reason may also be given for their being, for the most part, uncircumcis'd, and that they who have receiv'd Circumcision, had it not till they were Twelve or Fifteen Years of Age, and that accidentally by going to some place at a great distance, to find out a Mollab, and defraying the Charges of their Friends and Relations, who must accompany them to that Ceremony.

The Grand
Seignor's
Quarter.

Between the Chamber, where these noble Relicks are to be seen, and that of the Forty Pages, of which I have given an Account at the beginning of this Chapter, you have the Prospect of a treble Portal of Porphyry, that is, three doors at a small distance one from the other, whereof that in the middle gives entrance into the Grand Seignor's Appartment. The two others lead to the Lodgings of the Chokadar-Aga, and the Riquab-lar-Aga, and those lodgings are very dark, because they are not in a place where light can be brought into them, and that at the first building thereof, they could afford each of them but one little Window. But abating that inconvenience, they are well enough furnish'd, according to the mode of the Country, you tread upon nothing but silken Carpets; there's no want of Brokado-Cushins and emboyder'd ones, and the Walls, which are all of white Marble, entertain the Eye with pots of Flowers plainly painted, at certain equal distances, about which there has been an ingenious application of Gold and Azure. The Grand Seignor's Quarter begins with a Hall, which is spacious enough, and the embellishments of the inside of it are correspondent to those of the outside. It is an incrustation of Marble, of several colours, and the Floor of it is cover'd only with the large Woollen Carpets, which are brought out of Persia, but such as are more sumptuous, and much more highly esteem'd, than those which are made of Silk. All about the Hall, for the space of Five foot, there are spread Coverlets of Silk, of a light colour, some Tufted, some Embroider'd, and upon the Coverlets, there are several sorts of Rich Cushions, four foot in length, and between two and three in breadth.

Amurath's
Belvedere.

Of the two Doors, which are within the Hall, one goes to the Appartment of the Pages, the other to the Quarter of the Sultan-esses, and as you go out by this last mentioned, you enter into a Flower-Garden, in the midst whereof there is a Basin with its water-work. From one of the ends of the Garden you pass to the Revan Kou-bi, that is to say, a Chamber supported by Pillars. It is a Belvedere, or spacious Room, having a delightful Prospect of all sides, which the Sultan Amurath caus'd to be built, at his return from the Persian War, after he had taken the City of Babylon from Sach-Sefi, the King of that Kingdom, ruin'd the Province of Tauris, and added that of Erivan to his Conquests, by the perfidiousness of the Governour. I shall give you an account anon, how he was justly punish'd, for that act of Treachery, and I reserve the Compleat history of his baseness, for the Relations of my Travels.

This Room or Arbour, which we call the Blvedere, from the delightfulness of its Prospect, is built in an Eminent place, upon a steepy Rock. It is a noble Arched Roof, and the Walls, which are rais'd no higher than that a Man may rest his Elbow on them, are all of White Marble, with some Arabian Vertes thereon, cut and gilt. It is open on all sides, and the Lattices all about it, hinder those that are within it from being seen by such as are on the outside, and afford them withal one of the most delightful Prospects in the World. For, from that Room, they have the sight of all Galata and Pera, all that pleasant Landskip of Asia, about Scutaret and Chalcedon, the Port of Constantinople, one of the noblest of all Europe, and the Channel of the Black Sea, which at the point of the Seraglio, is intermixt with the Waters of the Mediterranean, where there is observable in the midst, as it were, a white foamy streak, which seems naturally to denote the Confines of Europe and Asia.

The Excellent
Wines of Tenedos.

'Twas in this pleasant Arbour, that Amurath was often wont to divert himself, with that Governour of Erivan, who had taught him to drink Wine, whereto he had so easily accusom'd himself, that many times, he spent three days together, in a continu'd debauch. The only Wine he drunk was of the Islands of Tenedos, the most excellent of any of the Islands of the Archipelago, and the least intoxicating; and he soon became as good a proficient in the drinking of it, as the Master, who had had taught him to do it. This Persian Governour was a man extreamly inclin'd to Debauchery, inlomuch that before his perfidious delivery of the Place to Amurath, as I pass'd through Erivan, in one of my Voyages to Persia, he intreated me to make my Abode there for the space of fifteen days, and to humor him, there was a necessity of spending whole Nights in Drinking, so that I saw him not all the Day long, which I question not but he employ'd in the management of his Affairs, and taking his repose.

But, at the long run, lewd actions meet with the Punishment they justly deserve. Shach-Sefi, King of Persia, would not entertain any proposition of Peace, Perfidiousness punish'd. no nor so much as give audience to an Ambassador from the Grand Signor, whom I saw sent back from Ispahan, where I then was, unless Amurath would deliver up the Traytor, in order, to his punishment. Whereupon, they being both one day at their ordinary debauch, in the Belvedere, the Grand Signor, without any formality, order'd him to be Strangled, in his presence.

It was sometimes also Amurath's custome, to bring into that pleasant place, the Principal Sultaneses, as, his Mothers, his Sisters, and such others as he had the greatest kindness for. But his most frequent assignations there, was with a Sicilian Lady, for whom he had a great affection, and who being extreamly handsome and of a mild disposition, obtain'd of him whatere he desir'd. She was taken at Sea, by the Pyrates of Barbary, as she was upon her Voyage into Spain in order to her intermarriage with one of the Grandeos of that Countrey: And the Bassa of Algiers sent her a Present, to the Grand Signor, who took a particular fancy for her, and made her as happy, as a Woman can be, who must endure the restraint of the Seraglio. The fortune of a beautiful Sicilian Lady.

From that door of the Hall, which gives entrance into the Flower-garden, you pass, on the right hand, into a kind of Gallery, about fifty paces in length, and twelve in breadth, the pavement whereof is a Chequer-work of Black and White Marble, at the end of it there is a great Structure, which is wholly of Marble, and what first entertains the Eye is a pretty lage Door, over which there is a kind of a flat arch'd Roof. And both the Roof, and the Door, are adorn'd with flowers in emboss'd work; and amongst those flowers, there are certain impresses cut in the Marble, and all curiously Gilt. The Grand Signor's Bed-Chamber.

About five or six paces from that Door, you come to another not inferiour to it, as to beauty, which is that of the Grand Signor's own Chamber. Its Cieling, or arch'd Roof, is according to the model of the Winter-room, whereof I have given you a Description at the beginning of this Chapter. The only difference between 'em is, in what issues out of the Angles of the little Arches; and whereas in the other Room they represent the bottoms of Lamps, gilt with Gold; in this, they are balls of Rock-Crystal, cut Facet-wise, with an inter-mixture of precious stones, of different Colours, which must needs give a very divertive entertainment to the Eye. The Floor of it is cover'd with Carpets, which, as to Beauty and Excellency of Workmanship, exceed those of the other Chambers; and the same thing is to be said, as to the Quilts, the Counterpanes, and the Cushions; the most part of this Furniture being adorn'd with an Embroidery of Pearls, and the whole Room which is very spacious, having in all parts, several other sumptuous embellishments. And whereas this Room was Originally design'd for the Grand Signor's Summer-Divertilement; it is accordingly the more lightsome, and has large Windows on three sides of it. As to the Sultan's Lodging, he complies with the custome of the Countrey, or rather that of all the Eastern parts. There is no Bedstead set up, but towards the Evening the Pages spread three Quilts one upon the other, at one of the corners of the Chamber, and place over it a Canopy of Cloth of Gold, garnish'd with an embroidery of Pearls.

On the right hand, as you come into this Room, there is a Cub-board, or Press, wrought within the very Wall, where they keep the Bajrac, that is to say, the Standard of Mahomet, which has these words for its Impress, or Motto, Nasrullah, min Allah, that is, in our Language, The Assistance is from God. This Standard was heretofore in so great veneration among the Turks, that when there happen'd any Sedition, either at Constantinople, or in the Armies, there was no safer or more expeditious remedy to appease it, than to expose that Standard to the sight of the Rebels. And that very Expedient has many times prov'd very fortunate to the Ottoman Princes, when they have been reduc'd to their great Extremities, by the secret Combinations of some Factionous Persons. Then does the Grand Seigneur send some of the Mollahs, who are in the nature of Priests, amongst the Turks, with the Standard, and being come up to the first Ranks of the Rebelious Forces, they speak to them, in their Language, to this effect: This Banner is the Standard of the Prophet; all they who are Faithful, and Obedient, ought to come and submit themselves at the Foot of this Standard; and they who will not come to it, are Unbelievers, and they ought to be destroyed. But some years since, the Turks made it appear, that they made but little account of that Standard; for Hassan, one of the Bassa's, who gave the Grand Seigneur so much Trouble in the Year 1658. turn'd his back on Mahomet's Banner, and, follow'd by his own Party, compals'd the Design he was engag'd in.

A word further of the Prince's Appartment.

Out of the Grand Seigneur's Chamber, there is a passage into a great Hall, the place appointed for the Reception of the Pages who approach his Person; and there is adjoyning to it a Bath, which is fill'd by three Cocks, where they wash themselves, when they go to their Devotions. Out of the same Hall, there is an ascent of some steps, which brings you to a small Closet, only Wainscoted about, but well Painted, and well Gilt. That Stair-Case is always cover'd with a red Cloth, the Room is open on all sides, having fair Windows, wherein Talc is us'd, instead of Glass; and from thence you have, in a manner, the same Prospect as from the Belvedere, built by the Emperour Amurath.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the ordinary Employments of the Grand Seigneur ; The particular inclinations of the Emperour-Regent, Mahomet IV. And the present State of the Ottoman Family.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

Some inclinations common to all the Monarchs of the Eastern-parts.

The Life of the Seraglio, delicious to one single Person, and incommodious to many. The Mahometans zealous observers of their Law. The regulated times of their publick Devotions. The ordinary Employments of the Grand Seigneur. How his Table is serv'd. The Sultan, when oblig'd to go, in Ceremony, to the Mosquey. The wicked contrivances of the Moufti to get Money. The present State of the Ottoman Family. An extraordinary Example of a Father and a Son, who were successively Grand Vizirs. The pourtraiture of the Sultan-Regent, Mahomet. The Ancient Custom of the Turkish Emperors, to live by their Labour. The Grand Seigneur's subtilty, in revenging himself of the Moufti

THE Ottoman Monarchs, and generally all the Princes of Asia, what Reputation soever they may have gain'd, for their Valour, have always been guilty of a bent to Voluptuousness, and Effeminacy; and found great Charms in a slothful kind of Life. They come out of their Seraglio's as seldom as they can, and that only, when an indispensable necessity forces them to shew themselves in publick, whether it be at the head of their Armies, or in those Ceremonies, wherein the Law, or common Civilities, require their Presence. True it is, that some of them were not so great Lovers of Retirement as others, and prefer'd the hardships of War, the Diversions of Hunting, before the blandishments of Ease, and the conversation of Women: But those may be reduced into a very small number, and the greatest part of them being more addicted to mind their quiet, and to lead a Life void of disturbance, have transferr'd all their concerns, Civil and Military, to the management of the principal Minister of State, thinking it enough to content themselves with the account he was pleas'd to give him thereof.

It may be said of the Seraglio, That it is a delicate, but withal a solitary place of abode: but as to the Observations I have made of things, it is delicious only to a single person, and solitary to all the rest. Of the many Thoulands, of the Male Sex, who are there as 'twere in Prison, and have a dependence, one upon the other, none but the Prince himself has the sight of Women; for the Negro-Eunuchs, whom their deformity of Body and Countenance has, in a manner, transform'd into Monsters, are not to be admitted into the number of Men.

But though the Ottoman Monarchs, and generally all that may be comprehended under the denomination of Turcism, are involv'd in Voluptuousness, as not having any tincture of ought relating to polite Literature, yet this is particularly commendable in them, that their great pursuance of pleasures does not ever make them neglect the Divine Worship, and that, setting all things aside, they are careful to perform what the Law requires of them, upon that account. They are exact and punctual, even to superstition, in all their exercises of Piety, in their ways of washing themselves, in their Prayers, in their Fasts, in their Alms, and in their Pilgrimages; which are the Five principal Articles of the Mahumetan Religion.

Inclinations common to the Eastern Monarchs.

The Seraglio a place delicious to one single person, and incommodious to many.

The Mahometans zealous observers of the Law.

The regulated times of their Devotions.

It is a thing sufficiently well known to all people, that the Turks go to their Prayers, or Devotions, five times a day, that is, in the space of a natural Day, which amounts to four and twenty hours. For the performance of this work, there are no certain hours appointed, and it is according to the Sun's being above the Horizon. Upon which account, there is a greater interval between their several Offices, in the Summer-time, than there is in the Winter, and they place the principal part of their Devotion upon observations of that nature. The first exercise is to be perform'd at the break of day, before Sun-rising; the second at Noon; the third, between that time and Sun-set; the fourth, immediately after his setting; and the last, about an hour and an half after Night: in all which, unless sickness intervene, they are very punctual, so that nothing of business, how important soever, shall divert them.

Their fervour in Acts of Devotion.

Nay, on the contrary, some are so zealous, and their fervour is so remarkable, that being once fixt in their Prayers, they could not be put out of them, though 'twere to force back an Enemy, who were entering into the City, or that word should be brought them, that the house wherein they are, was on fire. They are moreover of a perswasion, that it is a great sin, for them to put their hand to any part of the body, to scratch themselves, if there should be occasion; and they would have the external part to be answerable to the internal, and correspondent to that abjection, which ought to be the state of the Soul, in the presence of God, during their Exercises of Devotion.

The Grand
Signors ordinary Employments.

Nor does the Grand Signor himself desire to be dispens'd from the obligation of performing these acts of Devotion, any more than the meanest of his Subjects; but, on the contrary, he is very religious in that observance of their Law, and he always begins the day with the Offices appointed for that part of it. We need say no more, than that he rises at the break of day, nay sometimes he is up before, and goes into the Bath to wash himself, especially when he has lain with one of his Wives, or Concubines. Having finish'd his Prayers, he diverts himself in shooting with the Bowe, or more commonly in looking after his Horses, and riding some of them: and sometimes he sets himself in a Gallery, where he cannot be seen by any, and contents himself with the diversion of seeing some exercises perform'd by his Pages. If an one of them does something that he is much pleas'd withal, he sends him a Vest, or some other thing of value, as an encouragement for his doing better another time, and to raise an emulation in his Companions. Upon Council-days, he comes through the close Gallery, to the Window, which looks into the Divan Hall, to see what they are doing there: and upon the rising of the Council, he returns to his own Quarter, where his Dinner is brought up to him.

The Services of his Table.

In the services of his Table, there is not any great varitey, or delicacy, the Dishes that are serv'd up, being answerable to the Bill of fare, wick I have given you in the Chapter, where I treat of the Kitchens. He takes his refection, sitting, cross-leg'd, as Taylors do amongst us, being surrounded with sumptuous Brocado-cushions, which keep from him the dampness of the Walls, and upon the Carpets which cover the Scaffold, or Balcony, where he is seated, they spread others of Spanish-Leather, lest the former should be prejudic'd by any thing of greasiness, which might fall on the Table-cloth, and soak through it. This Cloath, which is laid over the Spanish-Leather-Carpet, is of those sumptuous painted Cloaths, which are made in the Indies, and embroider'd all about: and as for Napkins, there are not any used amongst the Turks, who are neat, and cleanly at their Meals, and if sometimes there be any occasion of wiping, 'tis done with a little handkerchief. At their refectations, they use the right hand only, and when they have done, there is a Basin of warm water and soap brought up, for them to wash, and every one takes out his Handkerchief from under his Sash, or Girdle, to wipe his hands and mouth. Nor must you expect in Turkey to find Knives and Forks Forks laid on the Table, but every one has his Knife lodg'd in his Salch, and makes use of, when occasion requires: but they have no great use for them, inasmuch as their Bread being made thin, as 'twere into Cakes, and eaten in a manner as soon as 'tis out of the Oven they break it with their fingers, and all the meat, which is serv'd up to them, is cut into small pieces, which is also the custome in Persia. But the Spoons they use, in taking their Pottages, and whatever is liquid upon the Table, are much larger than ours; and they are wooden ones. The Pages of the Kilar, that is the Cup-bearers Office bring up the Bread, and the Sherbets, and the Pages of the Chamber go and take the meat, at the Prince's Apartment, out of the hands of the Officers belonging to the Kitchen, who bring it in Dishes cover'd with Pourcelain, the Grand Signor not using any Gold Vessels at his own Table.

After Dinner, the Grand Signor says his Noon-Prayer, and sometimes, on Sundays and Tuesdays, which are the principal Council-days he comes into the Hall of Audience, to discourse with his Ministers of State, concerning his Affairs. On the other days, he walks in the Gardens of the Seraglio, sometimes with his Eunuchs, sometimes with the Sultaneſſes, or with the Dwarfs and Mutes, who shew a thousand apish tricks, to divert him: and sometimes he goes a hunting, or fishing, according to his inclination. But neither his Affairs, nor his Recreations do ever divert him from performing the five Exercises of Devotion, at the times appointed by the Alcoran; and it is the general Perswasion of all the Turks, that if they neglect them, they bring down God's curse upon themselves, and that they cannot avoid the ill consequences thereof.

I have said elsewhere, that Friday is to the Mahumetans, what the Saturday is to the Jews, and the Sunday to the Christians, in regard it was upon the said day, that Mahomet took his flight from Mecha; and I have also given this further intimation, that the Turks count their Months only by the number of the Moons. There is an ancient Custome, whereby the Grand Signor is obliged upon all the first Frydays of the several Moons, to go to the new Mosque, in regard that S. Sophia is too near the Seraglio, and besides that there is not, between those places, room enough for so great a Train, as that of the Sultan, the people of Constantinople would not have the satisfaction of seeing him.

The Sultan, when obliged to go, in Ceremony, to the Mosque.

His Devotion is so great, that he seldom misses that Ceremony, and when there passes a first Fryday of the month, without his appearance in it, the people is presently of opinion, that he is sick and thereupon turbulent spirits are mutining their factious designs. On those dayes do they, who have any complaints to make, of some injustice that has been done them, take their opportunity and plant themselves in the way through which he is to pass, with Petitions in their hands, which upon a sign made by the Sultan, are receiv'd by Eunuchs. If the injustice be very great and the person who presents the Petition be extreamly oppress'd and injur'd, he holds a lighted Torch over his head, which is ordinarily practis'd in Turkey upon the like occasions, and by that mysterious comportment, intimates to the Prince; That if he does not do him justice, his Soul shall burn in the other World, as that Torch does in this.

Upon the Emperour's going out of the Seraglio, the principal Sultaneſſes, his Mother, his dearest Consort, or his Sisters, are in a Room over the great Gate of that Palace, with Bags full of Aspers, which they sling among the people, that they may pray, That God would graciously hearken to the Devotions, which the Grand Signor is going to perform. His March is after the same Order, and with an observance of the Pomp, as that of the ancient Greek Emperours, and I question not, but that those Authors, who have written of the Ottoman Empire in general, or particularly of the City of Constantinople, have made sufficient descriptions, of that Ceremony, and therefore I shall think my self dispens'd from the obligations of giving a new one of it. I shall only say this of it, That it is very Magnificent, and that there is not any Monarch in the World, who makes so great an exposal of Gold and precious Stones together, wherewith the Harnesses and Trappings of most of the Horses, as well of the Grand Signor, as those of the Bassas are all cover'd.

The wicked
contrivances of the Mousti, to et Money

At their return from the Mosque, the Mousti, on Horse-back, and at the head of a wretched Crew of Greek Christians, of the meanest sort of people (for there are very few Armenians among them) expect the Grand Seigneur, at the Gates of the Seraglio, and telling his Highness, That those people were Mis-believers, who had embrac'd the good Law, intreat him to relieve them, and to make some provision for their Livelihood. Upon this Exhortation, the Sultan orders twenty or thirty Purse to be distributed amongst them; nay sometimes his Charity is so great, as to amount to twenty thousand Crowns, which are receiv'd by the Mousti, and the distribution thereof is made, as he pleases. But the greater part of it he converts to his own use, and holds an infamous Correspondence with most of that wretched Crew, who though they often pretend themselves for that Benevolence, he pretends not to have any knowledge of at all. By this Imposture, which is so palpable, and suits well enough with the followers of Mahomet, does that High-Priest of the Mahometan Law, put yearly into his Purse, a considerable Sum of Money, which is no small augmentation to his Revenue. But the Case is the same with him, as with the Bassa's: that is, he is not exempted from refunding, and we shall, by and by produce a very late Example of it.

And this may serve for a general Account of the ordinary Lives of the Ottoman Monarchs while they are within the Seraglio. In their Armies, they have other Employments, especially they, who have Military Souls, as there have been some among them, of whom Histories have given us a very noble Character.

The present State of the Ottoman Family.

I come now to the present State of the Ottoman Family, and to the particular inclinations of the Grand Seigneur, who now Reigns. Mahomet, the Fourth of that Name, the Son of Ibrahim, and a Circassian Lady, was Born in the Year 1643. and he is, by that account, got into the Thirty fourth Year of his Age, and the Twenty fourth of his Reign. He has two Brothers, Bajazet, and Orchan, but they are by another Mother, who is still living, and is perpetually studying how to preserve them. He has also a third Brother, named Solyman, who is the second of the Sons of Ibrahim, according to the order of their Nativities. But the Mother of the last mentioned Son is dead; and thence it comes, that the Souldiery, who conceive greater hopes of that Prince, than of either Bajazet, or Orchan, his Brethren, pity him the more, and have the greater Affection for him, upon that very score of his having lost the support, which he might have expected from a Mother.

Ever since the time of Bajazet the Second, who first introduc'd that inhumane and cruel Custome, of securing the Throne of the Sultan-Regent, by the death of his Brethren, few of those unfortunate Princes have escap'd the Barbarism of their Elder-Brother, and they, amongst them, who have been treated with somewhat less of inhumanity, have pin'd away their Lives in a strict and doleful Imprisonment, being not permitted to see any body. This was the Treatment of Ibrahim, the Father of Mahomet, during the Reign of Amurath, his Brother, the Son of Achmet, by Kiossem, a Woman of Excellent Parts, and well vers'd in the Management of Affairs. Mahomet's Brothers are now treated after the same rate, and the Mother of Bajazet, and Orchan, uses all the endeavours she can, to secure to them the Affections of the great Officers of the Port, and the Janizaries, who are somewhat disgusted with the capricious humour, and extraordinary Covetousness of Mahomet. This Prince was advanc'd to the Throne in the Year 1650. after the Death of Ibrahim, his Father, who was strangled by the Janizaries in a Sedition. He being then but Seven Years of Age, the Regency was bestowed, during his Minority, on the Old Sultane's, Mother to Ibrahim, who soon after abus'd her Authority, and rais'd a dangerous Faction against her Grand-Child Mahomet, wherein she lost her Life.

An extraordinary Example of a Father and Son successively
Grand Vizirs.

The present Grand Seigneur, who is a Person much addicted to his Pleasures, and takes a particular diversion in Hunting, leaves the management of Affairs to his Grand Vizir Achmet, who has succeeded Coprogli, his own Father, in that principal Charge of the Empire. 'Tis a thing which may well pass for a Prodigy, amongst the Turks, and such as that there has not yet been any Example of it seen, as perhaps there will not be any other hereafter. I have shewn, that it is a thing absolutely contrary to their Politicks; and therefore had it not been for the great and particular obligations, which the Empire had to Coprogli, who on the other side, cunningly represented to the Grand Seigneur, that he never durst trust any but but his own Son, with the Secret of Affairs, whereof he only had the Key, this very Achmet, who next to the Sultan, is the principal Person of the Empire, would have been, at present, but a simple Bey, or Captain of a Galley.

The Grand Signor Mahomet is handsome enough as to his Person, his Stature somewhat exceeding that of the middle sort of persons; he has not too much corpulence, and his health is in an uncertain state. He is very much troubled with a Fall, which he receiv'd in the violence of his Game, some years since, by leaping his Horse over a broad Ditch: And whereas that passion is still predominant in him, this inconvenience attends it, That, when he is not somewhat favourable and indulgent to himself, in that violent Exercise, he is sometimes taken off his Horse in a miserable condition, the Remedies which might be apply'd to that indisposition, taking no effect, by reason of the little care he takes to preserve himself. He is a person of an unconstant and unquiet disposition, which creates the greater trouble to those who wait on him; and though they study his humours, yet is it a hard matter to satisfy him. He has a Son, who has been Circumcis'd with great Solemnity, at the Age, wherein that Ceremony is to be perform'd. The Sultanaess, his Mother, a Woman of a Magnificent humour, to augment the Pomp and Splendour of that Action, to the Eyes as well of the Turks as Forreiners, would have the Garment, which the Young Prince wore that day, to be all cover'd with Diamonds; and, to that end, caus'd several Rich Pieces of the Treasury to be broken; but after the Solemnity, all the Precious Stones were carried back into it again.

I said erewhile, that the present Sultan-Mahomet is extremely addicted to Hunting, and makes it so much his Darling Divertisement, that he makes less account of the Lives of Men, than he does of his Dogs; and withal, that he is of a very Covetous Humour. I shall, in one single Example make a sufficient discovery of both those inclinations in him, and that will also further make it appear, how well he was skill'd, in that Knack of exercising great Liberalities, without any deduction out of his Revenues.

When the Grand Signor goes a Hunting, there are Orders sent to a great number of People, for the space of four or five Leagues about the place where he intends to Hunt, in order to the surrounding of a certain quantity of Ground, and for the enclosing of it so well, as that nothing can escape thence. 'Tis not to be imagin'd, this can be done, without great destruction to the Countrey, and much inconvenience to the poor People, who are forc'd to leave their Work, to carry on an Exercise which is much more toilsome than it, in which they many times come off with the Loss of Limb, or Life, or some other disastrous Accident. These continual impositions of trouble and toil, put many People into the repining humour, inso much that an Eunuch, who was in favour, having one day, taken the freedom to represent to the Grand Signor the prejudice his Subjects underwent, by those courses which occasion'd the spoyling of their Grounds, and the loss of their Lives, he grew very Angry, and after some days Imprisonment, he gave him a shameful Ejection out of the Seraglio.

But, in process of Time, the mischievous Inconveniences occasion'd by this insatiable pursuance of his Pleasures in Hunting, increasing more and more, the Grand Vizir, and the other Bassa's, resolv'd to intreat the Moufti, to make a Remonstrance to him, of the ill consequence thereof, he being the only Person who might presume to speak any more of it to the Grand Signor. The Moufti would by no means hearken to it at first, imagining, as he might well, that his Harangue would not be pleasing to the Sultan: But, at last, being over-perswaded to do that good office to the Publick, he took Courage, and his opportunity, to speak to him, with all the insinuation he could.

He could not bethink himself of a better Expedient, to remove that predominant passion out of his mind, than to represent to him, the Custom of his Predecessors, who took their diversion in some handy-work, when the War, or the Concerns of State gave them any remission: That, according to their Example, their Subjects apply'd themselves to things that were beneficial, and made all Arts and Professions to flourish in the Empire, to the great Advantage of the Publick: That Sultan-Amurath his Uncle, delighted in making those Horn-Rings, which are us'd in shooting with the Long-Bowe: That Ibrahim his Father, was an Excellent Artist,

The Pourtrait-ture of Mahomet IV. the present Prince.

*The Ancient
Custom of the Greek Emperours, to live by their handy-work.*

Artist, in the making of Tooth-picks, and other small Instruments of Tortoise-shell: And that it were requisite that so Laudable a Custom should not be lost, since it gave the People occasion to do the like, and so to avoid Idleness.

He further Remonstrated to his Highness, That it was much more commendable in the sight of men, and more acceptable to God, for him to live by the Labour of his hands, than by the sweat of the People, and the Money arising by Impositions, which were forbidden by the Law: and that what was allotted for the peculiar Diet of his Predecessors, was the product of their own handy-work: That true it was indeed, they were not oblig'd to any assiduity in the Employments they had fancied, but that what they did was as much for their own diversion, as to satisfy the Precept of the Law; and when they had finish'd some piece of Work, they sent it to some Basla, for whom they had a particular kindness, and he receiv'd it with extraordinary respect, and abundance of joy: That he, who was the Bearer of it, when he came to present it, said, That Piece of Work, was made by the Grand Seignor himself, who had sent him to Sell it, in order to his own sustenance: And that the Basla, or other Person, to whom it was directed, to express how highly he was pleas'd therewith, gave him a certain number of Purles for it; not accounting the Present which was to be made to the Bearer: That what Money came in that way, was design'd to bear the Charges of the Prince's own Table, and by that means, he could not be charg'd with living by the Labour of his Subjects.

To this effect was the Moufti's harangue; and I shall tell you by the way, That the Kings of Persia have the same Custome, or rather the same Superstition. In the Reign of Shach-Abas, there were built, at Ispahan, certain Places called Caravanseras, which are publick houses, where the Merchants are lodg'd, the Rents whereof are set aside for the maintenance of the King's own Table; the Money which is rais'd by the Customs, and other Impositions, being accounted as to that score, for Haram, that is to say, for unjust and forbidden, and reserv'd to be employed in the Exigencies of State, and not for the Sustenance of the Prince.

The Sultan is cunningly revenged of the Moufti.

The Grand Seignor dissembling and smothering the vexation, into which the Moufti's Remonstrance had put him, pretended to take his Advertisements very kindly, and dispos'd himself to satisfy him, in a short time, how well he could make his advantage of the Lecture he had read him. He acknowledg'd, that he had often thought of what he had represented to him, and that he had a way of Livelihood in his head, which he hop'd would take very well. Some days pass'd away, ere the Grand Seignor made the least mention of Hunting; but at last, he grows impatient, he leaves the Seraglio, and had the good fortune to kill a Hare with a Gun, the first he had ever destroy'd that way. He immediately sends it to the Moufti, with order to tell him, That he has follow'd his Advice, and that having learnt the Profession of a Huntsman, he has commanded that first piece of his Game should be brought to him, which he was willing to sell, that he might subsist by the Money it should produce: That he fail not to give twenty Purles to him who brings it; and that as to his own Person, he knew well enough what he ought to send him.

The Moufti conceal'd his surprizal as well as he could, and receiv'd the Hare with great testimonies of his resentments and joy, of the honour, which his Highness had done him; and having bestow'd, according to his own order, Twenty Purles upon the Bearer of the Hare, sends Sixty more to the Grand Seignor himself; learning, at his own Cost, and that to the value of Fourscore thousand Crowns, that men should not be over-forward to give their Sovereigns those Advertisements, which they desire not of them.

To finish the Pourtraiture of Sultan-Mahomet, he is further chargeable with a defect of constancy, in his humour, and a roughness of deportment towards his People, who are thereupon apt to have the less Affection for him. And whereas he is indefatigable in his Hunting-Exercises, and spends whole daies therein, even in the severest part of the Winter-Season, it happen'd, one day, as he was returning home, from the Sport of running down a Stag, that his Grand Falconer took the boldness to represent to him the inconvenience of exposing his Slaves so much in the Ice and Snow, by which means there had dy'd about Thirty of them the before, and the rest were in a fair way to follow them. The Prince, not at all with that Remonstrance, made this Reply to the Grand Faulconer, if the Weather prov'd very hard, they should have a care of his Dogs, and allow them cloathing, and other accommodations, lest the rigour of the Season might take off any one of them; making not the least mention of, or provision for the men, whom he sacrificed to his Divertisement. That rough Repulse having been spread among the People, has begot such animosity in them against this Prince, that there's no question made of his being sensible thereof, and that it is, in some measure, the cause of his keeping so much at a distance from the Metropolis of his Empire, where he does not think himself secure.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Womens Appartment.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The impossibility of having a full knowledge of the Womens Appartment, in the Seraglio. The Commerce between the Jewesses and the Sultaneesses. The doleful Story of Two Famous Wrestlers. The great Severity of the Sultan-Amurath. How to distinguish between what is true, and what fabulous, in reference to the Sultaneesses. A strange Story of an Old Woman. Polygamy prejudicial to the propagation of Children. The great Secrecy of the Grand Signor's Amours.

I Make a Chapter by it self of the Appartment of the Women, only to entertain the Reader, with the impossibility there is, of having a perfect knowledge of it, or getting any exact account, either what the accommodations of it are; or how the Persons, who are confin'd therein, behave themselves. There is not in all Christendome any Monastery of Religious Virgins, how regular and austere soever it may be, the entrance whereof is more strictly forbidden to men, than is that of this Appartment of the Women: insomuch that my white Eunuch, who has supply'd me with so particular a description of the inner part of the Seraglio, could give me no certain information of this Quarter of it, where the Women are lodg'd. All I could get out of him, was, That the Doors of it are kept by Negro-Eunuchs, and that, besides the Grand Signor himself, and sometimes, the Physician, in case of great necessity, there never enters any man into it, no nor Woman, besides those who live in it, and they are never permitted to go out of it, unless it be in order to their confinement in the Old Seraglio. But we must except, out of that number, the Sultaneesses, and their Maids, or Ladies of Honour, whom the Grand Signor allows, when he pleases, to come into the Gardens of the Seraglio, and whom he sometimes takes abroad with him, into the Country; yet so as that they cannot be seen by any person whatsoever. Four Negro Eunuchs carry a kind of Pavillion, under which is the Sultaneess, and the Horse upon which she is mounted, all save only the head of the horse, which is seen on the out-side of the Pavillion, the two fore-pieces of which taking him about the Neck, are close fasten'd, above, and below.

The impossibility of having an exact account of the Womens Appartment.

And as to the Physician, he is never admitted, as I said, but in case of extreme necessity, into the Appartment of the Women, and with such precautions, that he can neither see the person who is indispos'd, nor be seen by her, but to feel her Pulse through a piece of Lawn, all the other Women having retir'd from her Bed-side, and the Negro-Eunuchs having taken their places. Thus you see what precautions they use, to deprive the Women, of the Seraglio, of all means of having any access to Men, or indeed so much as a sight of them; and if it happen that some Jewess has entrance into their Quarter, to Trade with them, and to sell them some little Rarities, they are strictly search'd by the Negro-Eunuchs, lest there should happen to thrust in some Man, disguis'd in Woman's Cloaths, in which case immediate death would ensue. And when the Curiosity of some Christian Ladies has inclin'd them to see the Sultaneses, they seldome escap'd without the receiving of some affront; and I could produce some examples of it did I think it convenient.

The Commerce between the Jewesses and the Sultaneses.

It might be imagin'd, that, by the relation of the Jewesses, it were possible to have some account, of the embellishments of the Halls and Chambers of the Appartment of the government of that Female Republick. But it is to be noted, That these Jewesses are not permitted to go far into it; for there is a Chamber appointed for the management of their Traffick, and the Negro-Eunuchs are the Brokers between them, and the Sultaneses. They take cognizance of all, and what the Princesses have a mind to buy, passing through their hands they make them pay double and treble what the things are worth, and so heap up Wealth, though they have but little occasion or opportunity to make use of it.

The doleful Story of Two Famous Wrestlers.

But I do not expect, any one should wonder at that great exactness, of not permitting any man, no not even a White Eunuch, to approach the Appartment of the Women, after an Accident, which happen'd at Adrianople, in the Year of our Lord M. DC. XXXIX. and which I shall here insert in few words. Amurat, at his return, after the taking of Bagdet, came and made his abode, for some time, at Adrianople. He had a Page, belonging to the Treasury, who was a Native of Tocat, in Natolia, and, from the place of his birth, they gave him the name of Tocatli. He was a well-set Young man, robust, skillful in Wrestling, and, upon that account, the Grand Seignor had made Chief of the Wrestlers.

It happen'd, that one of the most Famous, for that Exercise, came about that time to Adrianople, out of the Confines of Muscovy, and in all the Cities, through which he travell'd, he had alwaies been too hard for those who had presented themselves to Wrestle with him. His Reputation was spread all over the Empire, where he had not met with any Wrestler, who acknowledg'd not himself inferior to him; Which Report coming to the Page of the Treasury, he conceiv'd so great an emulation at the Fame of that Man, whom all the World so highly celebrated, that he sent one of the Halvags, to carry him a Civil Challenge from him, and to acquaint him, That he was desirous to have a Tryal of Skill with him, in the Grand Seignor's Presence. He sent him word withal, That, before his Highness had any notice of it, 'twere convenient, they made some tryal of their strength; And that no body might know any thing of it, he would send him a Bostang's Garment and Cap, by which means he might come into the Seraglio.

When the Grand Seignor is not within the Seraglio, where ever it be, the Bostangs are permitted to come into, and to go out of it, by the Garden-Gate; and there being a great number of them, it is no hard matter to get a man in under their accoutrements. By this contrivance did the Muscovian Wrestler get into the Seraglio, the next day, upon the solicitation of the Page, who sent him what was requisite; the Grand Seignor being that day, gone a Hunting. They both put on Drawers of Leather well liquor'd with some fat or oily stuff, all the rest of the body being stark naked, and liquor'd in like manner: and after a long dispute, the Page had the better, whether he got it fairly by his own strength, and skill, or that the other yielded the victory, out of complaisance.

This Action pass'd in the midst of the place which is before the Garden, in the presence of the Mures, and all the Pages of the Seraglio; and the Grand Seignor being return'd from Hunting, the Superintendent of the Treasury told him, That there was come into the City, a Polavian, a Muscovite by Country, robust, and of a good meen, of great strength, and well experienced in Wrestling, and that if

If his Highness pleas'd he should have the satisfaction to see him engag'd in that Exercise. The Grand Seignor commanded he should be brought into the Seraglio, the next day, and that Tocateli should have notice, to be ready to entertain him.

Being both come to the place, and in a condition ready to close, the Grand Seignor came into a Gallery, attended by all the Grandees of the Seraglio, to be Spectators of that Tryal of Skill in Wrestling. The Victory having stood as 'twere in the ballance a good while, and all Spectators, being somewhat impatient, to see which side it would turn to, a Mute express'd himself by signs, to one of his Companions, to this effect, That he wonder'd the Page, who should have deriv'd new strength and courage, from the Grand Seignor's presence, found it so difficult to get the better of the Muscovite, whom he had so easily worsted the day before.

The language of the Mutes, by signs, is as intiligable in the Seraglio, as if they had the liberty of speaking, and the Grand Seignor, who understands it as well as any of them, as having been accusom'd thereto from his Infancy, and commonly discoursing with them, was strangely surpriz'd, to understand that the Muscovite had been, the day before, in the same place. His indignation immediately flush'd into his face; he commanded the Wrestlers to give over their Exercise, and, calling the Page to him, he ask'd him, how he had contriv'd that man's entrance into the Seraglio. The unfortunate Tocateli, who could not deny a thing, which so many others were ready to testify, acquainted his Highness with what had pass'd; whereupon, the Sultan, incens'd at the greatness of his confidence, prevented his making an end of the Story, by commanding the Bostangi-bachi to be presently sent for, whom he order'd to seize on the Muscovian Wrestler, and see him receive Five hundred blows on the soles of the Feet, with a Wand or Cudgel; which no doubt was enough to make him incapable of exercising himself, for a good while after. The Overseer had Orders, to see the same punishment inflicted upon the Page Tocateli; which was immediately put in execution: the Grand Seignor having, in the mean time, retir'd into the Appartment of the Women.

It was the Opinion of most about the Seraglio, that those two unfortunate wretches would have escap'd, with the punishment of Five hundred blowes, each of them, upon the soles of their feet. But the Grand Seignor, who was resolv'd to have their lives, and had retir'd, purposely into the Lodgings of the Women, to prevent all mediation for their pardon, sent away presently a second Order, to the Bostangi-Bachi; whereby he was commanded to see the Page hang'd up, in the Evening, on a Tree, which is at the Corner of the place where they had Wrestled, and the Muscovite on another Tree, which is without the Gate of the Seraglio.

Some would be apt to think, that these two Executions were enough to appease Amurath's the Prince's indignation: but it prov'd otherwise. The next morning, the Sultan ^{great Severity.} sent for the Capi-Aga, the chiefest amongst the Eunuchs, and the Grand Master and Comptroller, of the Seraglio, and commanded, That the Gellad, who is the common Executioner, should also give his attendance. Upon the passing of these Orders, all those, that were present, cast themselves at his Highness's feet, beseeching him to consider, That the Capi-Aga was innocent, that he had not the least notice of the confidence of the Page, and that, if it had come to his knowledge, he would have severely punish'd it. The Grand Seignor continuing still extremely incens'd, could not be pleas'd by all the intreaties and submissions they made to him, and would have the Capi-Aga, as Grand Master of the Seraglio, to be answerable for all those that come into it; when, for the good fortune of that principal Officer of the Sultan's Palace, there came in the Moufti, and the Seligidar, Chief of the Pages of the Chamber, who with much ado made a shift to beg his pardon. Yet was not that ganted but in part; for all they could obtain, extended only to the saving of his life; and so the Grand Seignor order'd him to be immediately thrust out of the Seraglio, with a charge never to enter again into it, while he liv'd; and instead of the Dignity of Bassa, whereto he should have been advanc'd, to be reduc'd, to a small Pension of Three hundred Aspers a day.

I thought pertinent to my design, to bring in this Story of the Two wrestlers, in order to the greater confirmation of what I have affirm'd at the beginning of this Chapter, concerning the impossibility there is, for any person whatsoever, Man, or Woman, to get into the Appartment of the Sultaneses, when they punish, with so much severity, a Stranger, who without express order, presumes but to set his foot within any Court of the Seraglio.

How to distinguish what's true, and what fabulous, as to the Sultaneses.

Take it then for granted, that this is all that can be known, with certainty, of the Appartment of the Women, who are subservient to the pleasures of the Ottoman Monarchs; whatever is scatter'd abroad, beyond this Account thereof, being grounded only upon imaginations and conjectures, which haply are at a great distance from the truth. Certain it is, that this Quarter of the Seraglio, as to some part of it, has a fair Prospect upon that of the Grand Seignor, and that the Doors of it are kept night and day, by a certain number of Negro-Eunuchs, the most deformed, and the most dreadful to look upon, that can be found. It is certain also, that it is well furnish'd with abundance of most beautiful Women, of several Countries, who, by the chance of War, or otherwise, are fallen into the hands of the Bassas, and Governours of Provinces, who send them up, as Presents to the Grand Seignor. It is known also, That, of that variety of Women, the Prince does not appropriate to himself above two or three, whom he has the greatest affection for; nay, some of those Printesses have confin'd themselves to the embraces of one only, after intermarriage. And this is affirm'd, at Constantinople, of Solyman the Great, after he had plighted his faith to Roxulana, contrary to the ordinary Policy of the Turks, after the affront, done by Temur-leng, to the Wife of Bajazet. The white Eunuchs, who wait in the Grand Seignor's Lodgings, are able in some measure, to give an account of these things, in regard that the Woman, who is to participate of the Grand Seignor's Bed, is conducted into his own Chamber; and, if it be a new Amour, the noise of it is spread, the next day, all over the Seraglio.

It is also known, That the first of those Women, who is deliver'd of a Male-child, and by that means, becomes Mother to the presumptive Heir of the Ottoman-Empire, is consider'd as the principal Sultanesse, and treated according to her dignity: and the others, who afterwards have Sons or Daughters, have also the quality and denomination of Sultaneses; but the number of the Women, who are to wait on them, is much inferiour, to that of those who are to attend the principal Sultanesse. It is known in fine, That those young Princes are brought up under the tutelage of their Mothers, till they are so many years of Age; and when they are strong enough to be put upon certain Exercises, they have Governours and Masters appointed over them, in a distinct Quarter by themselves.

Besides these things, which may be positively known, concerning the Appartment of the Women, in the Seraglio, it may well be imagin'd, that the embellishments of their Lodgings are answerable to those of the Grand Seignor, since it is the Place, where he passes away the most divertive part of his time. It is also not to be question'd, but that it has its Infirmary, its Baths, and the other accommodations, and conveniences, that can be wish'd for. It may also be conjectur'd, that there is, in this Quarter, an observance of the same regulations, as there are in the Chambers of the Ichoglans: That some of the more ancient Maids are Mistresses over the Younger ones, and are, night and day employ'd in observing their actions; and that their involuntary restraint forces them to the same unseemly Actions amongst themselves, as the brutish Passions of those Young Men engages them in, whenever they can find the opportunities to commit them. And this presumption has no doubt given occasion to the Fabulous Story, which is related of their being serv'd up with Cucumbers cut into pieces, and not intire, out of a ridiculous fear, lest they should put them to undecent uses: they who have forg'd the Story not knowing, that it is the custome in the Levant, to cut the Fruit a-cross, into great thick slices, as I shall make it appear in the Chapter, where I treat of Gardens. But it is not only in the Seraglio, that that abominable Vice reigns, but it is predominant also in the City Constantinople, and in all the Provinces of the Empire, and the wicked Example of the Men, who, slighting the natural use of Women-kind, are mutually inflam'd with a detestable love for one another, unfortunately inclines the Women to intimate them.

Of

Of this, there was a strange instance in the time of Solyman, the Magnificent. An old Woman was guilty of such an excess of extravagance, as to put on Man's Cloaths, and to give out, that she had bought a Chiaoux's place the better to compass her design, of obtaining the only Daughter of a Trades-man of Constantinople, with thing whom she was desperately fallen in love, having made fruitless attempts, by other ways, to satisfy her infamous inclinations. The Father not suspecting any thing of her wicked intentions, and being withal poor, grants her his Daughter, the Marriage is solemniz'd in the presence of the Cari, and the imposture having been discover'd the very Wedding-night, the old woman was condemn'd the next day to be thrown into the Sea, there to quench the Gomorrbean Inflammations of her lewd desires. This Story is to this day related in Constantinople; and I have had it from several good hands.

A strange Story of an old Woman.

These insatiable salaciousness amongst the Women, are the effects and consequences of the same inclinations in the Men; and the Turks are so much the more execrable and abominable as to this particular, the more they are permitted a plurality of Wives. But, whether it happens through a just punishment from Heaven, or proceed from their Sorceries, which are common and allowed in Turkey, and ordinarily practis'd by the Women, in opposition one to another, to appropriate the Affections of their Husbands, it has always been observ'd, That the Turks who keep many Women, are not so well stor'd with Children, as they, who observe Conjugal Chastity, and confine themselves to one. I question not but those Authors, who have written of the Mahometan Religion, have given a sufficient account of that plurality of Wives, and of the Ceremonies of Matrimony amongst the Turks.

Polygamy prejudicial to propagation.

As to the manner, how the Grand Seignor demeans himself in the prosecution of his Amours, it is a Secret, which I shall not enquire into; I have not much endeavour'd to make any discoveries of it, and it is a hard matter to give any Account thereof, without some hazard of travestying History into Romance. They are Intrigues, which do not admit of any Confident, by whom they may be disclos'd, and all that is commonly related thereof, is haply at a great distance from the true state of things: not to press this, That we ought to have a respect for all Princes, and to forbear divulging what Informations we may possibly have receiv'd, of their secret Amours.

The Secrecy of the Grand Seignor's Amours.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Entrance into Constantinople of the Sultaneß, Mother to the Grand Seigneur, whom they honour with the Title of la Valide, on the Second of July, 1668.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The order of the March. The Wealth of the Grand Seignors Favourite. The Sultaneßes Coaches. The prohibitions to look on her.

ON the Second of July, in the Year of our Lord, One Thousand, six Hundred, Sixty and Eight, the Sultaneß, Mother to the Grand Seigneur Regent, at her return from Adrianople, made her Entrance into Constantinople, where I then was, of which Entrance take the ensuing Description.

The Order of the March.

About Six in the Morning, some numbers of Janizaries, not observing any order, took their way towards the Seraglio, sometimes ten, or more, sometimes twenty, in little detachments, which lasted for some time.

After them came two hundred men on Horse-back, belonging to the House of the Cologlou, that is to say, the Grand Seigneur's Favourite, with short Guns resting on the Bowe of their Saddles, and all very meanly clad, as also the Officers of his Kitchin, who coming in the Rear of the others, were, in like manner, poorly habited, and ill mounted. After them appear'd in somewhat a better order, the menial Retinue of the Caimacan, his Officers, as well those belonging to the Chamber, as those of the Stables, were very handsomely mounted, and all in their yellow Garments.

The next appearance was that of the Spabis, who are the Sultaneß-Mother's Life-Guard. Of those there were four hundred, which made a handsome Shew, being all well mounted, and well clad. They had all their Coats of Mail, with their Vests of red Taffeta, and had on the right side a Quiver of Crimson Velvet, embroidered with Flowers of Gold; and on the left, a Bowe in a Cover of red Velvet, embroidered as the other. They had all of them Helmets on their Heads, and over them white Turbants, and from the Helmets there hung small Chains of Mail, resembling Locks of Hair, which they use when occasion requires, to ward off a blow from the Neck and Face. Every one of them had also a Launce in his hand, and the Trappings of their Horses were of one of these three Colours, yellow, violet, and red, of a rich Stuff, with an embroidery of Silver.

The Spahi-Bachi came in the Rear of them, having a Plume of Heron-tops in his Turbant, three foot in height, which made him remarkable, and distinguish'd him from all the other Spabis. On the breast-piece of his Horse, were fastn'd a dozen little Scarffs, which hung down negligently, and he was attended by six Pages, who had Caps on, after the Slavonian Mode, red Vests tuck'd up about the waist, and yellow Hose, or Drawers.

After the Spabis, there pass'd several Janizaries, but not marching in any order, follow'd by two hundred men on Horse-back, and in the Rear of them, came the Janizary-Aga, a Person of a very goodly presence. He had for his immediate Attendants six gentle young Persons, who had each of them, hanging over his shoulder, a kind of Quiver, full of small Wands, which are a sort of Arrows, without any Iron-work at the ends.

After

Afterwards, there came up twelve men, who are as it were the Masters of Ceremonies, in very ridiculous Accoutrements. They had Silver Wands on their Shoulders, their Vestments were garnish'd with small Bells. They had Caps on; which had somewhat hanging down of each side, resembling Asses Ears.

The next appearance after that extravagant Party, was that of a hundred Capigis, all well mounted, every one with a Launce in his hand, with a Flag fasten'd thereto, reaching from the top to the bottom, which made a very noble Shew. In the front of the Troop came the Capichi-bachi, distinguish'd from the rest by a tall and large Plume of Heron-tops, which added much to the gracefulness of his looks and Person.

After them, came a hundred Chiaoux's, well clad, and well mounted, having their own Caps on their Heads; and in the Rear of them came the Caimacan, having a Cap of the same fashion, attended by twenty Pages, very nearly clad.

The next appearance was that of five or six hundred Bostangis, with their Caps like Sugar-loaves, their Habits of a red linnen Cloath, and Muskets on their Shoulders. The Bostangi-bachi came after them, sumptuously clad, and mounted, with a Chiaoux-Cap upon his head, and a great number of People about him.

There appear'd next, two hundred Cadis, making a most noble Shew, all modestly clad, with their Busquins of black Spanish-Leather, and white Turbants, like great Balls of Wool, or Silk.

They were follow'd by the Scherifs, who affirm themselves to be of the kindred of Mahomet, and made up a Troop of sixty Persons. As they were the Relations of the Prophet, they wore green Turbants of an extraordinary bigness.

After the Scherifs, came the two principal Officers of the Monsti (for he never appears in Person in these sorts of Ceremonies) and they were clad in white, having a very demure and religious Countenance.

The Cologlon, or Grand Signor's Favourite, appear'd next mounted on a gallant Horse, whose Harness and Trappings were of the richest. The Stirrups were of Gold, and the Housle was embellish'd with an embroydery of Gold and Pearls. His Vest was of a red Brokado, and his Cap like those of the Chiaouxes. Two men held the Reins of his Bridle, and his Horse curvetted all along, as if he had been sensible of the goodly presence of his Master, and how well it became him. He was a person of a good stature, and of a graceful Countenance, having withal a mild and sprightly look, and every one saluted him, as he advanc'd still towards the Seraglio. The Servants belonging to his Stables marched after him, and fifty Grooms led each of them a Horse in his hand, and those Horses were all high-priz'd, and their Harnesses as sumptuous as could be made. 'Tis commonly reported, That this Favourite, who is a person of very great merit, hath acquir'd vast Riches, and that his Train, whether as to the number of Servants, or as to that of Horses, surpasses that of many great Princes.

There came up next a small Troop of Negro-Eunuchs, marching confusedly, before the Coaches of the Sultanes, Mother to the present Grand Signor, all well mounted, and magnificently clad, in different colours.

There appear'd afterwards Six Capigis, about the first Coach, drawn by six Excellent Horses. They had each of them a Launce in his hand; and, in the Rear of them, there appear'd a Horse-tail-Banner, of a pale-red colour, whereby it was known, that some Bassa's were coming up, as indeed there were, and they were a Convoy to the second Coach, drawn by six white Horses, in which was the Sultanes-Mother, and another Sultans. Two Black Eunuchs march'd on each side of it, the Boots, or Doors being latic'd, that the Princesses might see, and not be seen. Which hindred not, however, but that, as the Coach of the Sultanes came forwards, some were still crying out to the People, and commanding them to look the other way; which Command it concerns them exactly to obey, and that especially in Persia, where they must get away as far as they can, to avoid the hazard of receiving a good blow with a Sable.

After

After the aforeſaid Coach, there paſſ'd by Twelve other Coaches with four Horſes apiece, wherein were the Female-Slaves belonging to the Sultaneſſe, having two Negro-Eunuchs, at the Doors of each Coach, which were latic'd, as the former: After which there follow'd ſeveral Litters, and four great Waggonſ, full of Snow, for the uſe of the Sultaneſſes and their Retinue.

All this Cavalcade, conſiſting of between five and ſix thouſand men, took up almoſt three hours in its paſſage, and having made its Proceſſion through Conſtantinople, lodg'd it ſelf in the Seraglio, according to the deſcription I have given you of it.

Of the French Nation, there were ſeveral Perſons of Quality, who had the Curioſity to ſee that Entrance; and among others, Monſieur Ribier, de Ville-neuve, a Councellor of the Parliament of Paris; Monſieur Le Mairat, a Councellor of the Grand Council; The Abbot of Champhion, de la Saulſay, all Parisians; and Monſieur Aubert, a Native of New-France, and, by Extraction, a Norman, Son to the Governor of Guardaloupe.

Of the Gardens of the Seraglio.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

The Revenues of the Gardens employed for the Grand Seigneur's Table. Cucumbers, a fruit of much delicacy amongſt the Levantines, and how they eat them. A noble Pyramid, reſembling Trajan's Pillar. Fountains. The number of the Gardiners.

The Revenues of the Gardens, how employed.

IT is an ancient Cuſtom, or rather, a Law, eſtabliſh'd by the Ottoman Princes, that the profits made out of their Gardens, ſhould be contributory to the keeping of their own Tables, and they have ſeveral of them, in the Neighbourhood of Conſtantinople, as well on the European ſide, as the Aſian, all along the Sea-ſhore. But I ſhall give an Account only of the Gardens of the Seraglio, that ſo I may not exceed the limits I have preſcrib'd to my ſelf in this Relation.

There are in the Seraglio ſeveral Gardens, wherein there are only Flowers, in divers Apartments, and particularly in that of the Grand Seigneur, and, no queſtion but the ſame thing may be ſaid of the Quarter of the Sultaneſſes. Yet is there not any thing extraordinary, which might oblige me to give this deſcription thereof. The great Garden, whereof the Bostangi-bachi has the overſight, as he has alſo of all the others belonging to the Grand Seigneur, takes up the greateſt part of the Seraglio, and conſiſts of a great number of Walks, planted of each ſide with Cypreſs. Thoſe Walks are much neglected, ſo that in ſeveral places, they are not clear'd of Bryars and Thorns. When it is known, that the Grand Seigneur is to come and take his diverſement there, a great number of Bostangis are immediately commanded out to make clean the Walks, which he uſes to frequent, and the ſpaces between thoſe Walks are ſo many Kitchen-Gardens, or Orchards, which are very well furniſh'd with Fruit-Trees, of ſeveral excellent kinds. Of Strawberries and Raspices there is great ſtore, and they have large beds of Melons, and Cucumbers; but moſt of theſe laſt, which are accounted a great delicacy amongſt the Levantines.

amongſt the Levantines.*

As to the Cucumbers, they commonly eat them without taking off any thing of the rinde, after which they go and drink a glaſs of Water. In all Aſia, it is the ordinary ſuſtenance of the meaner ſort of People, for the ſpace of three or four months; the whole Family lives upon them, and when a Child aſks for ſomething to eat, whereas in our European Countries, they would give him bread; in the Levant, they bring him only a Cucumber, which he eats raw, as it comes out of the Garrison. Laborious persons, and such as are in a manner tyr'd with working, such as Camel-drivers, and those who are entrusted with the care of the Horses, and Mules, in the Caravans, make a kind of Salled of their Cucumbers, not much unlike the Mash, which we would give our Horses. When they are come to the Lodging place, where the Caravan is to make a stay, they take a large Basin, which they almost fill with water, and having put some sour milk into it, they cut a great number of Cucumbers, into great slices, and, so make a kind of mash of them. 'Tis a pleasant sight to see them at the confounding of it. Amongst ten, or twelve, who all stand round the said Basin, there is but one wooden Spoon, which every one takes his turn, till they have made a shift to empty the Basin. That done, they fall a drinking of water, and those who have where-withall, go and take a dish of Coffee, or smoke a Pipe of Tobacco.

But to do them all the right they deserve, the Cucumbers, in the Levant are excellently good, and, though eaten raw, they never do a man any hurt. The Story of the Cucumbers which occasion'd the cruel death of Seven Pages of the Grand Seignor's Chamber, is not, haply, known to all people; or at least, all know not the reason, why the Pages of the Chamber are not now permitted to go into the Gardens.

Sultan Mahomet, the second of that name, taking a turn in the Gardens of the Seraglio, attended by his Pages, was much surpriz'd to see a bed of Cucumbers, which look'd very fair to the eye, and were extreemly forward considering the Season. Being a great lover of that fruit, he recommended them to the Bostangibachi, who told them over every day, and, with some impatience, expected their maturity, that he might present them to the Grand Seignor. Some daies after, going to Visit the bed, he found his number of Cucumbers shorter, than it should have been, by three or four, and that they who had taken those that were missing, had made choice of the ripest, and thereupon making a strict enquiry, to find out who had been guilty of that presumption, he found that the Pages of the Chamber were the only persons who had been, that day, in the Gardens.

Upon that discovery, he went and gave an account of the whole matter to the Grand Seignor, who was so highly incens'd thereat, that, not prevailing with any one of the Pages to acknowledge the Theft, he, out of a cruelty as much above all credit, as beyond all example, caus'd the Bellies of seven of them to be ripp'd up. The Theft was found in the Belly of the seventh of those unfortunate Young Men, who, after the execution done on the other six, would not acknowledge his guilt, out of hopes, that the Prince's indignation would not have extended so far. From that very time, and in commemoration of so strange an action, the Pages of the Chamber are not permitted to go into the Gardens of the Seraglio; what one Prince has establish'd, as I have hinted elsewhere, being never revok'd by his Successors, who bear a certain respect to the enactments of their Ancestors.

In the midst of the Great Walk, which goes from the Seraglio, to the Sea-Gate which looks towards Scudaret, there is a Pyramid, erected upon a square Pedestal, and which four men would have much ado to fathom. About the Pedestal they have suffer'd some bryars and thorns to grow, and it seems to have been done out of design, to hinder peoples coming close to it. The Pyramid, from the top to the bottom, is full of Figures, whereof the heads are struck off; and it may be conjectur'd by some remainders, that there was a very noble head on the top of it, as being the Master piece of the work. This Pyramid somewhat resembles Trajan's Pillar at Rome; and some, who have seen both, imagine, they were the work of the same master.

All the Fountains of the Gardens have their Basins of Marble, of different colours. Near each of them, there is a little Scaffold, surrounded with Ballisters, which they spread with rich Carpets, and Brocado-Cushions, when the Sultan comes to take his walk there: and 'tis only at that time, the Waters play; which Diversion he frequently gives the Princesses who bear him Company.

There are appointed for the Culture of these Gardens two thousand Bostangis, and yet, though there be so vast a number to keep them, they come far short of the Neat Contrivances and Imbellishments of ours.

CHAP. XX.

Of the Princes who follow the Mahumetan Religion, in Europe, Asia, and Africa.

THE PRINCIPAL HEADS.

General Laws for all the Mahumetan Sects. A Curious Remark concerning the Emperour of Java's Son. Kings, who follow the Doctrine of Hali. The Royal Present sent from the Great Mogul to Mecha. The several ways, by which the Mahumetans come to their Prophet's Tomb. Troublesome Desarts to be passed through in their way to the Sepulchre of Hali. A Miraculous Channel of Water, of the continuance of Eighteen days Journey. The Burnt-Offering of a Weather.

General Laws for all the Ma-humetan Sects.

I Have so often had occasion, in the present Relation I have made of the Grand Seigneur's Seraglio, to speak of the Mahumetan Religion, that I am content before I put a period to this Work, to make it appear, how far it extends into the three parts of our great Continent: Mahumetisme having not yet set footing into that which has been discover'd but two Ages since. I meddle not at all with the Doctrine of it, of which I am sufficiently assur'd that many persons have written: and I shall only entertain the Reader with a Geographical Chart of all the Countries of Europe, Asia, and Africa, which are under the dominion of the followers of Mahomet.

Though the Opinions of their Doctors be different, as to what concerns the Explication of the Law, and that there are principally two great Sects, that of Mahomet, which is the Stock; and that of Hali, one of his principal Successors: Yet those two general Sects, and the particular ones, which are derivable thence, are all concordant in the fundamental Points, which every Mahumetan is oblig'd, in Conscience, to observe and practise. Of those I gave an account, when I made mention of the Prayers or Devotions, which the Turks are bound to perform five times a day, and the Pilgrimage of Mecha is one of those principal Articles: I have also laid something of them, in the Chapter's treating of the Present, which the Grand Seigneur sends thither every Year; and in this last, I shall endeavour to express my self fully as to that matter.

In Europe, we have no Mahumetan Princes but the Emperour of the Turks, and the Chans of the Lesser Tartary: But in Asia there are many of them, who are powerful, and possess'd of great Dominions. The Grand Seigneur extends his Jurisdiction, in this part, beyond the Sources of the River Tigris, and beyond the mouths, by which it falls into the Sea, and towards the North, as far as the Territories of the Mengrelians. To go thence from the West to the East, next the Grand Seigneur, we must count the Princes of the Three Arabia's, with several of whom I have often spoken, in Two of my Voyages, wherein I have been oblig'd to pass through the Desarts. The King of Persia, the Great Mogul, the King of Visapour, the King of Golconda, the Kings on the Coast of Malabar, of whom the most considerable is that of Comrin; the Great Chan of Tartary, and the Kings of the Mountains, to the North side of the same Tartary, who are got into China; All these Kings, I say, follow the Mahumetan, Religion.

Since

Since I have mentioned the Emperour of Java, I shall, by the way, insert here an observation, which I made at the time of my being in that Island, which was, That the eldest Son of that Emperour, who reign'd in the year 1648. had six fingers on each of his hands, and six toes one each foot, and all of equal length.

A curious Remark of the Emperour of Java's Son.

The Kings of Persia, Visapour and Golconda follow the Sect of Hali; and the Kings of the mountains of Tartary, with some others, have also their particular Sects. Besides, it is to be observ'd, that if we except the Grand Seigneur, the King of Persia, the Arabian Princes, and the Cham of Great Tartary, all the other Kings, whom I have named, have only Idolaters to their Subjects, and all the meaner sort of people is involv'd in the darkness of Paganism. But as to the Grand Seigneur's, with all his Militia, they follow the Law of Mahomet.

Kings following the Doctrine of Hali.

In Africa, there is a Mahumetan King, whose Territories lie all along the Coast of Abex, which is towards Arabia Felix, as far as the Cape of Guardafu, and his Jurisdiction extends over the Red Sea, and the Ocean. The Governours, whom the Grand Seigneur employs in Egypt, and in the Islands of the Red Sea, and those others, whom he has establish'd all along the Coast of Barbary, at Tripoli, Tunis, and Argiers, who assume the Title of Kings, are also Mahumetans; and, in fine, the King of Fez and Morocco follows the same Law.

All these Kings and Princes, are principally unanimous in this Point, That they acknowledg themselves oblig'd to send every year some Present to Mecha, which ordinarily consists in rich Carpets, to be put upon Mahomet's Sepulchre. Sometimes these Presents are made upon a particular Vow; and it happen'd in one of my Voyages to Agra, that the Great Mogul, by way of thankfulness to the Prophet, for the recovery of his health, sent to Mecha, an Alcoron, valued at four hundred thousand Crowns, which had, in the midst of the Cover, a Diamond, of three hundred Carats; the rest of it being garnish'd with several precious Stones on both sides. The occasion of this Present was, the fright which a certain Bramere, put him into, upon his telling him, That he should die before the year was expir'd, which happen'd not accordingly. But the King being extremely incens'd at that direful Prediction, and, upon the smart Interrogatory he put to the Bramere, to wit, whether he knew also the time of his own death, having receiv'd this Answer, That it should be within three days; which really happen'd upon the third day, there was a sufficient ground for him to be frightened, and to conceive an apprehension, that the like accident might happen to himself, before the time limited. 'Twas that induc'd him to send a Present of so great value, to Mahomet's Sepulchre, to acknowledge the favour he had done him, in not suffering the Prediction of the Bramere to take effect, the King having not had as much as any indisposition, during all that time.

The Great Mogul's Royal Present to Mecha.

When I gave an account of the Pilgrimage of Mecha, upon occasion of the Tent and Carpet, which the Grand Seigneur sends thither every year, I made no mention of the several ways which the Caravans take, according to the several parts of the World, from whence great multitudes of Mahumetans do every year take their progress thither.

The several ways whereby the Mahumetans come to the Sepulchre of their Prophet.

In the first place, the Ambassadors, whom the Kings of the Islands, whereof I have given you the names, and the Kings of the Indies, on this side the Ganges, send to the Sheek of Mecha, with their Presents come by Sea, to Mocha, a Maritime City of Arabia Felix, and from thence they travel to Mecha by Land, by the conveniency of Camels.

The Persians, who inhabit all along the Sea-side make their descent from Ormuz, or to Bandar, and having pass'd over the Gulf, which, at that place, is not above twelve or thirteen Leagues in breadth, are forc'd to cross Arabia ere they can get to the Prophet's City. But the Inhabitants of the upper-parts of Persia, towards the Caspian Sea, and all the Tartars, come to Tauris, and from Tauris to Aleppo, from which place, the great Caravans, which take their progress through the Desarts, set forth, and bring the Pilgrims to Mecha. Some take the way of Babylon, but very seldom, because the Bassa exacts a Tribute of them, and particularly of the Persians whom they account Hereticks; and that consideration has oblig'd the King of Persia, to forbid his Subjects to take that Rode, thinking himself not inferiour to the Turk.

Troublesome Desarts in the way to Hali's Sepulchre.

Some of the Devouter sort of Persians, and such as are most zealous for their own Sect, take the way of Babylon, upon this score, that brings them at the same time to the Sepulchre of their Prophet Hali, which is but eight days Journey distant from it. This is the most wretched place, of all the places upon earth, and affords no water but the most corrupted water, which is drawn out of certain Pits, and that of a Canal, which Schach-Abas caus'd to be brought thither from the Euphrates, but which is now quite out of repair. Whoever expects to drink good water there, must bring it along with him, from other places, five or six days Journey distant from the other: And yet that false Prophet imposes on those, who have such a Devotion for him, not only the inconveniences of coming so far off; but also those of being in a fair way to perish by thrift, and hardship of lodging.

The last time it was my fortune to pass through the Desarts, I came to that detestable place upon this occasion, that meeting with a Courier, who was come from Babylon, with two Arabians, whom he had in his Company, he gave us intelligence, that the Grand Seignor's Forces, which had then newly taken Babylon, were upon their march back, in little Detachments, and that there was no question to be made, but they would seize on our Camels and Baggage. Which advertisements oblig'd us to take our course more to the South, and to get further into the Desert, where we spent sixty and five days in crossing of it, to avoid meeting with those Forces.

As for the Princes of Arabia, they have no great Journey to make, because they are the next neighbours to Mahomet's Sepulchre.

A Miraculous Canal of water of the length of 18 days journey.

The Mahumetans of Europe come to Aleppo, and there joyn the Caravan; and those of Africa, pass to Grand Cairo, and meet in the Desarts, with the same Caravan of Aleppo at eighteen days Journey from Medina, where there is a water, which goes by a Canal, quite to that City, all the way of those eighteen days Journey. They have it by Tradition, That that water was found by their Prophet Mahomet, as he cross'd the Desert with his Army, ready to dye for thirst, and that going to drink of it first of any, there issued a Voice to him out of the Water, which said to him, Prophet, thou wilt find it bitter: That he made the Voice this Answer, Let us all drink of it, for I know it is sweet, and I would to God, that we could always find as good. That thereupon the Voice replying the second time, Prophet, Command, and I will follow thee: And that as soon as he had spoken, the Water made a Canal under ground, and follow'd him quite to Medina.

From Damas, Hierusalem, and Cairo, they account forty days Journey to Medina, and it is at the two and twentieth day's journey that they find that water. 'Tis partly to see that miraculous Water, which had been sweetned by the Prophet, that there goes into those places so great a concourse of People, of so many different Nations, from all parts of the World: in as much as there is no Mahumetan, let him be at ever so great a distance, and but tolerably in a condition of health, and supply'd with the external accommodations of fortune, who does not think himself oblig'd to go once in his life to Mecha, in person, or to send some other in his stead.

After the Pilgrims have continu'd certain days at Medina, they go to Gebel-Araffa, that is to say, the place, where Adam found Eve, his Wife, five hundred years, after God had created her. It is a City in the Mountains, at the distance of Two Dayes Journey from Medina, and at one from Emena, another City, which is half way between both. As soon as the Pilgrims are come thither, all those who are so well furnish'd, buy a Weather to make a Holocaust of it, and to distribute it amongst the poor, they being not allow'd to keep above two pounds of it, for themselves. If they do not punctually observe that, and that some discovery should be made thereof, they are made incapable, ever after, while they live, of shaving their Heads, or paring their Nails.

From Gebel-Araffa, they return to Medina, where they keep an account of the time, when the Caravan arriv'd there; in regard that all the Pilgrims, who came by Land, are, as I said elsewhere, maintain'd with sustenance for the space of Seventeen days; but they who came by Sea are sustain'd, as long as they continue there, even though they should make it the place of their abode, as long as they live.

THE ensuing Narration was put into my hands Five or Six Years ago, by a very Intelligent Worthy Person, who long resided in the same Family with our Author, and did assure me, that the Discourse here published, was written with his own hand, and presented unto that Honourable Person who redeemed him out of Captivity. The Gentleman who bestowed these Papers upon me, will not be responsible for the Truth of all therein contained; but I having compared his Account of several Countries with that of Olearius and other more Ancient and Modern Writers, have found them very Consistent unto each other, and therefore do charitably believe him no less Faithful in his Description of those Countries and People concerning whom little hath been said by any besides. By reason of his long absence from his Native Country, and dis-use of his Mother-Tongue, his style was so rough, odd, and unpleasant, that I was forced to make therein great Alterations both as to Method and Expression, yet keeping strictly unto his sense: I have also much abbreviated his Discourse, many things being often repeated, and he having stuffed it with divers impertinencies, which would have been void of all Instruction and Delight. He would never own his true Name or Pedigree, for Reasons mentioned in his Paper, which I thought altogether unnecessary to be rehearsed; that of Astracan, wherewith he concludes his NARRATIVE, being fictitious, and I suppose assumed, because of his long Residence in a City of that name, from which he made most of his Excursions: And which with the Adjacent Country he hath above all others most particularly described, giving us the names of several Neighbouring Places and Rivers mentioned by no other Writer. I was highly pleased with the Account he gives us of Czaroff-gorod, which he also sometimes calls Seraichan and Seraichena; the former of which is the Muscovitish, the latter the Tartarian Appellation, and interpreted, both signify the Habitation of the Emperour or Cham, it being formerly the Metropolis of a great Empire. As also with his mention of a place on the West-side of the Volga, where he says Astracan was formerly situated. Concerning both which Cities, I shall declare divers things I have Collected out of several European and Arabian Writers, which either are not commonly known, or little regarded. But I must necessarily premise somewhat concerning the Antient Inhabitants of the Country wherein these Cities are situated.

The first Nation (of whom I find any mention) who made any fix'd habitation in these Quarters were the Chazari, so named by the Latines and Greeks, but by the Mahumetans, Alchozar, and Gorjani. This Nation during the Reign of the Emperour Justine, like a Torrent Overflowed all that Vast Continent which lies between China and the Boristhenes, Conquered part of India, all Bactria, Sogdiana, and made the Persians Tributary, by whom they are always called Turks, and their Prince, Chacan, a Title formerly common unto all great Turkish Emperours. This Mighty Monarch having conquered the Igors or Jugurs, Avares, Chuni or Huns, Abtelites or White Huns, and all other Tribes of Turks and Taitars, together with the Alani (whose Dominion then extended, as appears by Marcellinus, from the Boristhenes far beyond the most North-East part of the Caspian Sea) entered into a League with Justine, and styles himself in his Letters, Lord of the Seven Climates of the World. His Acts may be read at large in Theophilactus Simocatta; Excerptis de Legationibus: and divers others of the Bizantine Historians. This Nation Assisted the Emperour Heraclius in his Wars against the great Cosroes, whom by their Assistance he overcame. These Cazari were also possessed of all that part of Turica Chersonesus which is plain and fit for feeding Cattle, they being addicted, after the manner of all other Scythian Nomades, unto a Pastoral life; which Peninsula from them was untill the Famous Irruption of the Tartars in the Thirteenth Century, called Cassaria, or Chazaria, and afterwards more corruptly by the Genoeses, Venetians, and other Latines, Cazaria. I find mention of these Chazari or Chozars in divers Persian and Arabian Historians and Geographers. Abulpharagius acquaints us with an Expedition they made into Persia the 183 Year of the Hegira, which was after our Account in 799. From whence they returned with great Spoile, and above 100000 Captives: and afterwards, in the 514th. Year of the Mahumetan Epoch, being A. C. 1120. they made another Inroad, accompanied by the Comanians, whom the Arabians call Kaphjacks; Frequent mention is made of them by that Deservedly Celebrated Arabian Geographer Al-Edrisi, who flourished in the 548th. year of the Hegira; of Christ, 1153. He always calls the Caspian Sea, Mare Chozar: and all that Countrey on the North and to the West of the Caspian Sea, Terra Chozar. He acquaints us, that the Residence of the Prince of Chozar was not far above the Mouth of the Volga, which the Tartars call Athel; which name I suppose it derived from Attila, that Renowned King of the Huns, being so called in the Relation of the Ambassadors who were sent by the Emperour Justine, unto the Great Chacan of the Turks residing in the East. Al-Edrisi and his Epitomizer, commonly known by the Name of Geographus Nubien-sis intimate, That these Chozars inhabited divers other Cities, but that this was the Metropolis; he suppresses the Name, styling it only from the River, the City of Athel; and declares it was divided by the River, the chief and greatest part being on the West-side; and that the other less considerable on the East-side, was inhabited only by the meaner sort of People and Merchants, it being a place of great Trade, that which made it more considerable, was the liberty allowed unto all of the Publick Profession, and Exercise of their respective Religious Perswasions, Jews, Christians, Mahumetans, and Idolaters being there equally countenanced, which I suppose might occasion that Dialogue published out of an Ancient Hebrew Manuscript, by L' Emperour, between the Author a Jewish Rabbi, and the King of Chozar. This City is said to have been extended along the River three miles in length, and its breadth proportionable; the Western part well fortified; adorned with the Emperours Palace, and several other eminent Structures. Nassir Eddin, who wrote at the latter end of the 13th. Century, calls this City in his Geographical Tables, Balanjar, and from him Abulfeda; they place it in 46 degrees 30 minutes of Northern Latitude; where within six or eight minutes our best Geographers seat Astracan. And questionless this was that City which our Author and Olearius call Old Astracan. These Chazari, did I suppose, conserve their vast Dominion without any great Interruption, at least until A. C. 900. For Alferganus who lived about that Time, places no other Nation in his Table of Climes, between China and the Boristhenes; And Eutichius, who wrote about 30 or 40 years after, makes mention of them as a mighty Nation, and many amongst them converted unto the Christian Belief. About the middle of the 10th Century these Chazari gave place unto the Cumanians or Commanians, who were also a Turkish Nation known unto the Turks, Persians, and Arabians, under the Name of Kaphjack; whether they expelled the Chazari, or that the former becoming the more Eminent Tribe, gave Law and Name unto these latter (as hath since frequently happened among the Tartars) I will not here undertake to determine: but this is certain, that suddenly the Name of Chazari was extinct, and all that Tract of Land from the Nepper unto Turkestan 1500 miles beyond the Volga, was inhabited by these Cumanians, who were often troublesome unto the Russes, Lithuanians, Hungarians, and other Neighbour-Nations. But this People was almost totally destroyed by the Tartars in that great Inundation which happened at the beginning of the 12th Century, soon after the death of Jingiz Chan; whose Son Hocota being chosen Emperour, sent his Nephew Batu, or Bathy, the Son of Tussy Jingiz Chan, his Eldest Son with 400000 Men, to invade the Northern Parts of Asia. The Cumani for divers years valiantly resisted, and made the greatest opposition the Tartars met with in all their Conquests; repuls'd them in two pitch'd Battels; but then growing secure, and dispersing upon the Tartars retreat, they were unexpectedly surprized, the whole Countrey over-run, above 200000 killed, their King Kutthen hardly escaping with 40000 into Hungary, where he

he met with a kind reception, had land allotted him, and his Company; which Region is called Campus Cumanus unto this day. This Countrey was so miserably wasted by the Tartars that in the Years 1253, and 1254, when Rubriquis passed through it, going unto and returning from his Ambassage to Mangu Chan, there was no fixed habitation, excepting a few Cottages in the Island where Astracan is now situated.

But Bathy having destroyed the Comanians, ruined their Cities, and established his own Dominion, began to think of a fix'd abode, which after long observation he chose near the River Volga, on the East-side, and immediately beneath the River Atrabon, a great Arm of the Volga, and the first it dismisses, which empties it self into the Caspian-Sea (having run a course of near 400 miles, and received several other Branches from the foresaid River) about 7 Leagues East off the main River. He had newly began this City at the return of Rubriquis from his Embassage unto Mangu Chan, in the year 1246, and called Serai; which City was enlarged and beautified by all his Successors, unto the time of its destruction by Tamerlane, which was almost 150 years. Bathy was succeeded by Barcab, who was the first professed Mahumetan Emperour; he by Hocota, or Hotay, Contemporary with Hayton the Armenian, who hath in his History largely discoursed concerning him: I should here mention all the other Emperours interceeding between Hocota and Tucktamisch (who was dispossessed by Tamerlane) together with their Acts, but that I hasten unto that which most immediately concerns our present Design, and give some account of this City, which (as I said) was first named Serai, which interpreted signifies only a Dwelling or Habitation; the beginning of it being a Palace built for Bathy. You may see what our Traveller says concerning it, Page 112. Besides him I find two Authors who make particular mention thereof; the first is in the History of Arabshade, published by Goliur. This Author represents it as one of the greatest and most populous Cities in the Universe, agrees with our Traveller in the situation, only he calls that Branch which runs out of the Volga and passes to the South-East, Sencle. The other is Michovius, who wrote his History of the Tartars in the year 1515. He affirms, That in his time there remained the ruins of 300 Temples besides the Walls of the City, and several other Magnificent Structures. The Tartars have several times attempted to re-edifie it, but divisions amongst themselves, Wars with the Muscovites, and attempts of the Cossacks caused them to retire unto places of greater security. But because little mention is made of this great Revolution by any European Writer I shall here present the Reader with an account thereof out of the most Authentick Turkish, Arabian, and Persian Writers. For Calcondilas is greatly mistaken, who seems to have received by his confident way of writing, most particular information, when as nothing can be more remote from the truth than what he affirms, viz, That Tamerlane after several attempts, and two or three Battles was forced to retire, and glad to secure his Retreat by a Peace, he first made with Tucktamisch, which was by both afterwards kept inviolable; which is contrary to the Reports of much more Authentick Historians. The Origin, Progress, and Event of this War, was after the ensuing manner.

Tamerlane being in effect Prince, but in name only Courachan (the Greeks call it Kurgan) that is, Viceroy or General over all those Countries which are comprehended between the Oxus and Jaxartes, wherein Bochara, Samarchand, and several other famous Cities were contained, extended his Conquests towards Balch and Chorasán, (the Aria of the Antients;) which progress of his, filled Tucktamisch Emperour of Serai (the City we have beforementioned) with jealousies of his growing Greatness; whereupon gathering a numerous Army, he resolved to invade him, using no formality, or so much as pretence, he thought to have surprized his Enemy; but Tamerlane, one of whose Master-pieces was to gain early Intelligence of whatsoever was designed, or transacted by neighbouring Princes, having timely notice of his intention, gathering all his own Forces, together with considerable assistance from his Confederates, marched directly towards his Enemy, and passing the Jaxartes, met him to his no small astonishment, on the Borders of his own Countrey; for the Jaxartes only divided their Territories. After a most obstinate bloody fight, Tamerlane gained the Victory, yet neither absolute, nor without great loss, but it was sufficient that he had had secured his own Dominion. After this success he did for divers years attend other Conquests, and having subdued a great part of India, all Persia, Media, Armenia, Affria, Mesopotamia, Babylonia, and Syria, he resolved to requite the Invasion of Thuciamish: whereupon having drawn together an Army of 500000 men, he marched through Media Atropatia, then and still called Sbervan, passed the Porte Caucasæ, which the Persians name Derbent; thence through Dabestan, and the great Desert between that and Astracan (then named Gitturchan) and having wasted all that spacious Countrey on the West-side of the Volga, depoulat ed and dismantled divers fair Cities (the ruines of several being yet visible to those who Navigate the Volga, as we are informed by Olearius) he passed the Volga, and on the East-side encountered Thuciamish, who had Collected a mighty Force, having besides his own Hords, the assistance of the Tartars of Cassan, Tumen, Kalmuke, and Dabestan: and his Army by this accession was more numerous than that of his Enemy. The Battel was long doubtful, and exceeding all that happened in that Age for carnage and cruelty, both Parties being full of hatred unto their Adversaries; and knowing that this Fight would lose or gain them a mighty Empire. They fought three days with little intermission, and it could not be discerned which had the advantage. But that which is thought chiefly to have occasioned Tamerlane's Victory, was the departure of a great Tribe from Thuciamish, whose Prince Ectave pretended he had received some great injury or affront, but 'twas indeed thought he was corrupted: For retreating unto Amuath the Turkish Emperour, he after the same mannner betrayed Bajazet, who soon after succeeded; revolting at the begining of the fight unto Tamerlane. Thuciamish being defeated, with great difficulty made his escape, leaving his Countrey exposed unto the fury of the Zagataians, whom so great a slaughter of their own Friends had highly exasperated. They spared nothing that was capable of being spoiled; demolished Serai, together with Seraichick upon the Jaick, and Gitturchan, which were the only considerable Cities on the East-side of the Volga, and leaving the Countrey a meer Desert, killing, or Captivating the Inhabitants, driving away the Cattle, they returned into Persia with great Booty. This happened in the 791 year of the Hegira. A. C. 1388. Serai, and Seraichick never regained thir former splendour; but (Gitturchan now Astracan) did by degrees recover, but never arrived to that heighth it attained unto during the Empire of the Chazari and Zavolgensian Tartars.

For Japhat Barbaro, and Ambrosio Contarini, who were both Ambassadors from the Venetians unto Usun Cassan Emperour of Persia, and well acquainted with those Parts; Barbaro living sixteen years at the City Tana on the mouth of the River Tanaïs; and Contarini being forced in his return from Persia to reside there some months. They, I say, both tell us, That this City before its destruction by Tamerlane, was a very famous Emporium; all the Silks, most of the Spices and other Commodities, which were afterwards brought down to Syria, were then carried by Shipping to Astracan (which they both name Citrachan) and thence by Land in a few days to Tana, whether the Venetians sent every year sixteen great Gallies. But after its subversion by Tamerlane, this Commerce ceased and the Gallies receiving their Lading in Syria, and at Alexandria of Egypt. In the time of the forementioned Writers, which was from the year 1436. when Barbaro first went to Tana, until his return out of Persia in 1488. And Contarini, who returned not long before him, Citrachan was a mean Town, consisting chiefly of Tartarian Huts and incompassed with a pitiful mud-Wall, a place of no considerable Traffick, only the Muscovites fetch'd thence Fish and Salt. But Juan Vassilovich having reduced it in the year 1554 under his Dominion, it hath been by succeeding Emperours both fortified and enlarged: I shall say no more concerning it, Olearius a most diligent and judicious Writer, having left us so particular a Description thereof. I shall only add, That I suppose the cause of so different names, as Gitturchan, Citrachan, and Astrachan, were occasioned by the Princes, who successively presided, as is very obvious to any who are acquainted with the Customes of the Arabians, Persians, Turks, and other Eastern People.

But to return unto our Zavolgentian Tartars, so called by the Neighbouring Slavonick Nations, because the Seat of their Empire, and their chiefest places of Residence were on, or near the Volga (which River did also almost equally divide their Territory) Za being only an Expletive Particle, as I could manifest by Induction duction of several Russian, Polish, and Lithuanian Names of Men and Countries. After the devastation of their Countrey they would notwithstanding have soon recovered their former Grandeur, had not divisions and intestine Wars long kept them low; and at length after divers wonderful and great Revolutions given the Russes leisure first to breath, and then invite them to deprive them of the best part of their Dominion. They not able to resist, being broken, as I said, by Discord and Division into divers petty Principalities. And on the other side the Crim Tartar, assisted by the Turk, subdued the remainder, whereby that Tribe which before was comparatively inconsiderable, became Supreme, and is at this day a terror unto all the North-East Countries of Christendom. To shew in what manner, and by what degrees all this was transacted, is rather matter of a just History, than of a Preface the decorum whereof I have already transgressed, in making a Porch almost as large as the main Building, to which it should serve only for an Entrance.

I shall therefore conclude with some short and slight Remarks on diver Passages in our Authors Relation. His account of the Periplus of the Exuine Sea, (leaving out what he allows for the Teine Sea, or Palus Mæotis) differs little in number of Miles from that of Arrian, though they disagree somewhat in particular distances; and is wonderfully consonant to that calculation of Eratosthenes, Hecætus, Ptolomy, and Ammianus Marchellinus, who reckon it to amount unto 23000 Stadia, or 2875 Miles, which wants but 15 of our Travellers Computation.

He is also more particular, and I believe, more exact than any I have hitherto met with, in his Description of Crim or Taurica Chersonesus, whose length and breadth he gives us in several places directly, or by consequence. What he tells us concerning Arbotka and the great Field without it, surrounded by the Sea he calls The Ratten Sea, is scarcely mentioned by any Modern Geographer, but wonderfully consonant to what is delivered by Strabo. Arbotka seems to be Taphre, the Ratten Sea, he calls οὐραὶν μῆριν, or Lacus Putris, and affirms to be part of the Palus Mæotis: in compass 4000 furlongs, with divers other particulars, confirming our Travellers Discourse, as may be read at large in his seventh Book. And I find in a Discourse published by Mr. Thevenot concerning the Tartars, written lately by a Religious Missionary who long resided in those parts, a Description of this place very suitable unto our Author. His words are these, speaking of the most remarkable places in Crim. Arbotec est un Chasteau avec une tour scithée sur la col d'une Peninsule que est enfermée entre la Mer de Limen & Tineka Woda; cette gorge n'a plus d'un quart de lieue, elle est traversée d'une Pallisade qui s'ende d'une Mer à l'autre: la Peninsule est appelée par nos Cosaques Cola, a cause qu'elle a la forme d'une faulx, c'est on ce lieu ou le Chan tient son Paras qui est bien de septante mille Chevaux. Et il est un destroit entre la terre ferme e Cosa 200 pas de large qui est gayable quand il est calme, le Cosaques le passent quand ils vont dérober le Chevaux de baras de Cham.

What our Author tells us of the Communication between the Tanais and Volga at Camusbanka, is particularly described by Olearius, who wrote many years after him; who also agrees with us in his account of the Rivers of Circassia, and Comukes Countrey: only our Writer is more punctual in his Description of their Sources and Course, and mentions two or three omitted by Olearius, or unknow to him. A frequent mention is made by Procopius, Agathias, and others of the Bizantine Historians, of that strait passage between Georgia and Anadoule, or as they word it, between Colchis and Asia Minor, or Armenia.

Our Author having given an account of the Course of the Volga, and of the most remarkable places lying upon, or near it; at last assures us, That it empties it self into the Caspian Sea only by 22 Mouths, whose names he there rehearses: whereas other Writers ascribe unto it 70 Entrances, though as Olearius judiciously observes, most of them are rather passages made by the Sea between Islands and broken Ground; than proper distinct Arms or Branches of the forementioned Rivers.

What is said concerning the Cossacks retiring unto, and nesting in an Island of the Caspian Sea, is confirmed by a late French Writer, who long resided in Persia, He largely acquaints us with the great spoil these Outlaws made on the Coast of Mesanderon, that they took Asterabath one of the Emperours Royal Stats, and having continued several days in possession, retired with great Booty and little loss.

I could render some probable account of those Thieves our Writer calls Sigakes, of what Nation they are, when they began, and how they live; but shall for brevity sake wave this and divers other Remarks; and that I may manifest how impartial my sentiments are in reference unto the Treatise I have here Published, I shall first acknowledge, That I never met with any Writer who calls that Vast Plain between the Rivers Boristhenes and Tanais the Desert of Ingel and Ungul, although I have seen divers Journals both Antient and Modern, of Persons who have frequently traversed that vast Region: and have read most Histories, and perused Geographical Books or Tables that relate unto the Tartars, or their Countrey. Secondly, I must declare my distrust of his computation concerning the compass of the Caspian Sea; which he makes less than in truth it is, as I could largely demonstrate; though he hath pretty well salved the mistake, by his allowance of a thousand Miles for Bays, broken Ground, and Promontories. Lastly, Our Author is greatly mistaken, when he affirms, There is no Nation of Tartars between those of Bochara and China; whereas indeed several very Potent Kingdoms intervene. And yet he hath luckily Andabatorum more, hit upon the Truth, where he assures us, there are no Catayans between the Usbeg Tartars and China. For indeed there is at present no Catayne besides China, which is so called by all Tartars, Persians, Arabians, and other Mahumetans, as also by the Muscovites and other Nations who travel thither by Land, either in the Quality of Ambassadors, or Merchants. Though formerly there was a mighty People, either Turks or Tartars (they being both Originally the same, as to Extract, Language, Manners, Religion, and Government) who lay directly in the way between Persia and China, and were certainly the Chatae of Ptolomy, but almost extirpated by Jingiz Chan, whom they vigorously resisted. And the remainder have ever since gone under the more general Names of Mogulls and Tartars, as I shall hereafter more clearly and fully demonstrate in a Discourse which I have long ago written, and may speedily publish, concerning the Beginnings and Progress of the Turkish and Tartarian Nations and Empires.

A Short Description of all the Kingdoms which Encompass the Euxine and Caspian Seas.

Right Honourable and my most Worthy Lord,

BEing given to understand, That I have been represented unto your Lordship, by several who bear me no good will, as a Person possessed with that Vanity, which ordinarily prevails among Travellers, of affirming I was well acquainted with divers Countreys and Languages, whereunto I am utterly a stranger: And perceiving that none of my Discourses have more exposed me unto this Censure, than a pretended monstrous rash Assertion (but indeed a real Truth) That I knew and had visited all the Countreys surrounding the Black and Caspian Seas: I thought my self necessarily obliged in order unto my Vindication, to draw up a short Account of all those Countreys, which do encompass the formentioned Seas, most of which Places I have personally surveyed, and fear not any Reprehension or Confutation, being resolved to declare nothing but what I saw, or received from such who were best able to give me full and faithful Information. And I am well assured, That the more strict and judicious Enquiry is made into this my Report, the more favour and credit I shall gain with your Lordship, and all other considering impartial persons.

I shall first begin with the Black Sea, as being that wherewith I was first acquainted, and near unto this most Famous City of Constantinople, where your Lordship may easily learn, whether I am guilty of either falshood or mistake; and if I am found upon due Enquiry to declare any manifest Untruth, I deserve not only unparalleled Reproaches, but the most severe and exemplary Punishments which I should justly merit, when owing life and liberty unto your Lordships Bounty and Compassion, I should instead of a grateful Acknowledgment, present your Honour with a heap of impudent Falsties.

I will begin my Relation or Peregrination, from that side of the Black Sea on which Constantinople is situated, and round the said Sea, until I return to Scodra, which is in Asia opposite thereunto.

The first Province is Romelia; the second Wallakia; the third Ackremen; the fourth Crim; the fifth the great Desert of Ingul and Ungule, which is between Crim and Asshova; the sixth is the Little Nagoy; the seventh Circassia; the eighth Abassa; the ninth is Mingrellia; then Georgia; and lastly Anatolia. All which Countreys are subjected unto the Turk; besides the great Desert, the Little Nagoy and Circassia.

I shall now mention the most noted Places which I know from Fennara, which is about the entrance into the Black Sea, unto the River of the Danaw, so to the Neistre, from thence unto the Nepper, so round about Crim, unto the Gulf that goeth from the Black Sea into the Teine Sea, and thence unto Asshova.

As I said, near the Entrance into the Black Sea is Fennara, then Innatada, Misserra, Warna, Balschick, Mangalley, Constancha, Karaharman, Keelley, Ackremen, Offhakowa, upon the mouth of the River of the Nepper.

Now I shall declare the Distances of these Places from each other; the number of miles being the space betwixt what forgoes and immediately ensues. From Fennara to Innatada 80 miles; to Misserra 90; to Warna 100; to Balschick 16; to Mangalley 40; to Constancha 40; to Karaharman 40; to Kelley 80; to Ackremen or Bealloborda 100; to Offhakowa, 80, in all 666 miles; and from Offhakowa, which is in the mouth of the Nepper, unto the River Don (or Tanais) is 500 miles ; the Voyage by Sea and journeying by Land being much at one, viz. 1186 miles, unless you go by Land unto Precop, about Crim, and so unto Ashowa, where the Don falls into the Teine Sea (Palus Maotis) and then it amounts unto at the least 1500 miles. Were it not for the formentioned great Rivers of the Danaw (Danubius) and the Nepper (Boristhenes) there would be almost continual Wars between the Turks and Tartars, and the Poles, Lithuanians and Muscovites ; for the Danaw is one of the greatest Rivers in the World, arising in Dutchland, whence it passes through Hungary, Wallachy, and at the Town of Kelley falls into the Black Sea. It hath four Mouths or Entrances into the said Sea, which the Turks call Bobasses, Bockegene Bobasse, Edrekasse Bobasse, Sullena Bobasse, and Kelley Bobasse. It abounds with Fish, as Sturgeon, Morone, and Sheveroke, besides divers sorts of smaller Fish. The Neistre is a River that comes from Lithuania, and runs into the Black Sea under Bealoborda. The Nepper comes from Lithuania and Russland, runs by Smolensko and Kiowia to the Porrocky or Falls, thence to Aslamgorode, and falls into the Black Sea at Offhakowa. It abounds with many sorts of good Fish, and all along its Banks feed innumerable wild Beasts of divers kinds. The Town of Aslamgorod stands upon the Nepper ; and in former times there dwelt in it two Brothers, Ingul and Ungul, who fell first at variance, which ended in cruel Wars, by reason whereof the adjacent Countrey became, though otherwise pleasant and fruitful, a very Wilderness. And besides, the Cossacks increasing on both sides the Nepper and upon the Don, would never since suffer that Countrey to be quietly possessed by these, or any other Hords of Tartars ; so that now it lieth waste, being a vast Desert 500 miles over, and 1000 miles long, from the shallow Waters near Precop, unto the Countrey of Muscovy. About 1625. the Grand Seignior sent an Army from Constantinople to rebuild Aslamgorod, with Orders to inhabit the Countrey, and invite such thereunto as would become subject unto the Turkish Government. But they who arrived, finding the Town of great Compass, built only a Castle on the Bank of the Nepper, and left 300 Men in Garrison. At the same time Shaugary Prince of Crim, being beat out of his Countrey by his General Chan Timur Myrsa, retired unto the Cossacks upon the Nepper, and having contracted a Friendship with them and the bordering Russes, by their assistance he gathered an Army of 40000 Men, and marched towards Crim, leaving behind him a revolted Ottoman, with a Brigade of 3 or 4000 Men, who immediately after the departure of Sultan Shaugary, marched directly towards Aslamgorod, and early in a Morning surprized the Castle, then in the possession of the Turks, put every Man in Garrison to the Sword, slighted the Walls and other Fortifications, retired with the Spoil, and marched to joyn Sultan Shaugary, who in the interim arrived near Precop, where he was met by Chan Timur, and totally defeated, but by good fortune escaped, and by the way of Astracan got to Persia.

From the Nepper we will pass unto Crim, with which Countrey I am well acquainted, having against my will resided there some years. Crim is a small Land, so near as I can conjecture 200 miles long, and 50 miles broad, but is wonderfully populous, and exceedingly fruitful, abounding with Corn and Grass ; the only scarcity they have is Wood, which grows no where but upon the Sea-Coast, from Bakessy Seray unto the Town of Crim, which in former times was the chief City : All the rest of the Land is a Plain, where they have no Wood to burn, nor any sort of Fuel, but Fissheke, Fusshane, Ciray, and Strba. The Land is inclosed with the Sea, excepting at two places, Precop, and Arbotka. By Precop there is a narrow passage, through which you may go to the Nepper, Lithuania, or Muscovy, through the Deserts of Ingul and Ungul, and there is a Water comes from the Teine Sea, called the shallow Water, and goeth along the Desert, until it comes to Precop, upon the West-side of Crim and by North, where it turns back on the North-side of Crim, and falls into Guellae Mare, commonly called the Ratten Sea. So that Crim is almost surrounded with Water ; for the Black Sea is on the one side, and the Ratten Sea on the other, which latter produces nothing but Salt, for it is so salt, that no Fish can live therein ; I have reason to know it, because I lived in a Village which was called Seekely Otta Mamutachy. The Towns round about Crim on the Sea-side are these, Precop, Cuslowa, Crim, Cassa, Kerse and Arbotka ; and within the Land, Carasu, Ackness, Mesheite, and Bakessy Seray. The Town of Arbotka lieth on the North-East side of Crim, between the Black and Ratten Seas, which there come so near together, that there is no more Land between them, than that whereon whereon the Town of Arbotka stands; and without Arbotka is a great Field 50 miles long, inclosed with Water, where the Tartars in Winter do keep their Hergels or Hories, which Field goeth to the shallow Waters; where I ran away from the Tartars. I shall here take my leave of Crim, and pass unto the Little Nagoy, to Asshowa, on the River Don, which runs down from Bealla Osharra, through the Country of Russia between Russia, and Lithuania, until it comes to Peilesboy, not far from the Volga; for from Peilesboy to the River Camusshanka, is not above 20 miles; all level; which is called Perewolog, where the Cossacks do draw their Strukes or Boats upon Wheels, to the River of Camusshanka, by which they pass into the Volga; whereupon this Place is called Perewolog. The Don runs down between the Little Nagoy and the Desarts of Ingel and Ungule, so to Asshowa, right under the Town, and there falls into the Tein Sea. This River is full of Fish, especially Sturgeons; well inhabited by Cossacks, for there are seldom less than 10000 upon it, besides those that go on Freebooting. There are also 16 Gorodkees, or strong Skonces, well manned, and with store of great Guns; they being in continual fear of the Turks and Tartars, and sometimes also of the Muscovites. The Little Nagoy, lies between the Tein and Caspian Seas, the former on the West the latter on the East, Shercassen to South, and the Volga on the North; and there is never a Town in all this Countrey excepting Asshowa. It is inhabited by Tartars, who go altogether in Hords; their Prince in my Time was Cassay Myrsa, whom the Tartars call also Sultan Ulugh, or the Great Prince. They sow no Corn but Pross, which they sow upon the Sea-side up unto Asshowa; and after sowing they depart with their Hords, and graze up and down the Desarts to the Don, to Capbane, Shurpoba, Tedecul, Gomita and Curray, to Mashhargorodoke, and to Shercassen Land, under the Rivers Terigke, and Balke, and almost to Pettigor, and by the River of Capba, and back again unto the Black Sea. Thus they ramble all the Summer, until their Harvest be ripe, and their Pross gathered, and put into Yams under ground; after which they settle from Asshowa, all along the Sea-side, amongst the Reeds, and leave their Horses to winter in the Desarts. So I shall leave the Little Nagoy, and pass unto Temeroffa in Shercassen Land, which is 500 miles from Asshowa.

Now in all Circassia are but two Towns, Temeroffa on the Black Sea, upon the Gulf that goeth from the Black Sea into the Tein Sea, right over against Arbotka. The other is Tumein, upon the Caspian Sea, the distance between them being 1100 miles; and all the rest of the inhabited Places are only Cubbacks made in the Woods, piled round with Timber. Their Houses are very high, in the midst whereof they make the Fire. Their Men are proper Men, very like the Irish both for person and garb; for they go in Trowles, with short Mantles, wear long Hair on both sides of their Heads, with a shorn Crown between. Their Women are very beautiful, and loving to Strangers; for if a Stranger come unto their Houses, their young Women and Maidens will look Lice in their Shirts, and all about them, the most private parts not excepted, and will allow them the liberty to examine and handle all parts of their Bodies besides their Breasts. The Circassians are excellent Horsemen, and very Courageous, but withal exceedingly ignorant and superstitious; for when they kill a Goat or Kid, they cut off the privy parts, and cast it against a Wall, if it stick, they pray to it; if otherwise, they cast it away, and spread the Skin upon Stakes, place it in their Corn-fields, and worship it. They have no Writing among them, yet pretend to be good Christians. Do strangely bewail the Dead, making great Cryes, scratch their Hands and Faces, until they draw much Blood, knock their Foreheads against the ground, until Knobs arise bigger than Plums. The Men are notorious Thieves, stealing from each other, and he that steals most is accounted the bravest Fellow. Their Countrey is very fruitful, abounding with most sorts of Grain; and they have store of excellent Grass. They have also much Fruit growing wild; many sorts of Beasts, as Harts, Hinds, Kine, Eissubrafs, Hogs and great Adders.

The considerable Rivers which I know are Cubba, which runs from Pettigor, between Shercassen Land and the little Nagoy, betwixt Temeroffa and Asshowa, 20 miles from Temeroffa it falls into the Tein Sea, and hath a Course of 500 miles. The next is the River of Balke, which comes out from Cabardy, and falls into the River of Terigke, 200 miles from its Source; which River of Terigke descends from the Mountains between

between Shollohose Knasse and Mundarawa Knasse, runs through the Countrey almost due East, passes by Goracho Colloda, thence to the Shussa, and the Shunsa, so on to the Weistra; and 6 miles from Tumein, between Tumein and the Commocks Countrey, it falls into the Caspian Sea, having a Course of 600 miles. There is another River called Tumenka, which is a branch of Terigke, runs through Tumeine Town, and 3 miles beyond it enters the Caspian Sea. There is also another River which they call Keeslar, which falls out of Terigke, and 60 miles from Tumeine is received by the Caspian Sea.

Having formerly mentioned Pettigor, I shall give you some Account thereof. Pettigor being interpreted, is in English, 5 Hills. They are five very great and high Mountains, distant about 500 miles from the Black Sea, and 700 from the Caspian beyond Cabardy. I came thus to know them:

In the Year 1618. I was sent with Shiedka Myrsa, from Astracan to the Little Nagoy, to seize upon Orrake Myrsa, who being informed of our coming, fled up to Pettigor; yet he made not such hast but we overtook him, and having fought, overcame him, and took away his Hords, by which means I became acquainted with Pettigor. Nevertheless there are higher Hills than Pettigor, as Sneefnagore in Cabardy, which is incredibly high, which is in English, the Hill of Snow; for upon that and Shadgore, which signifies a wonderful high Hill, and overtops the former, and so along for 100 miles, from Cabardy to Shollohose, prodigious quantities of Snow are lodged, which it's thought were never dissolved since the Creation. I asked a Circassian, Whether ever any Man arrived at the top of Shadgore, which to me seemed much elevated above the rest; who answered me, They had a Tradition among them, that formerly a Bobatteere, whose Name was Hroda, attempted to climb it, and after two or three days hard labour, arrived not unto the middle; but after a few days, being better accommodated, he returned, with a resolution, if it were possible, to see the top, but was never afterwards heard of; and added, That it was to that day customary for the Neighbouring Circassians, at a certain season of the Year, with divers Ceremonies and great Lamentations to bewail his loss.

The next Countrey to Sheercassen Land is Abassa, which is situated between Circassia and Mingrellia, and the Inhabitants are a kind of Circassians. Mingrellia is under the Dominion of the Turks, and lies on the Black Sea. Of these two Countreys, I have no great knowledge, having only coasted them three or four times in Boats, when I was among the Cossacks, where also we landed divers times, taking store of Kine and Sheep, but no Prisoners, because they affirmed themselves to be Christians. They are a proper handsome People, but very poor, and notorious Thieves, for they steal not only Goods, but even Women and Children from each other, and sell them unto the Turks and Tartars chiefly for Salt, which is there very scarce.

Next unto Mingrellia is Georgia, whose Inhabitants are little better than the former, only they have a kind of Scripture; for they Worship Idols or Images, yet have Cloisters, and a sort of Monks, with some Priests of the Greek Belief. I once landed in Georgia with an Army of 5000 Men, we marched up into the Countrey, until we came within 4 days journey of Deimur Capon, or the Iron Gate, which is a narrow passage between Georgia and Anatolia, with Rocks on each side, and a strong Town built in the midst: We stayed ten days ravaging the Countrey; they told us, this Town and Castle belonged to the King of Persia, and there is no other passage out of Georgia into Persia but through it.

The next Countrey unto Georgia is Anatolia, where our Traveller resided several Years, having been sold by the Precopenian Tartars, unto a Turkish Spahi, or Timariot; of which Countrey, and the Manners of the Inhabitants, he gives a large Description: But we being sufficeintly informed thereof by divers intelligent Europeans, who dwelt long in those Parts, shall with our Traveller pass on to those Countreys which are less known. But first we will take his Account of the Periplus of the Euxine or Black Sea.

From

From Fennara, which is at the head of the Strait or Gulf that enters the Black Sea to Precep, is 700 miles; from thence to Cassa, a noted City and Port in Crim 300 miles; to Alshowa 500 miles; to Temeroffa 500 miles; to Mingrelia 400 miles; to Trebezond 400 miles; and from thence unto Constantinople 1000 miles; in all 3800 miles. Thus much I know of the Black Sea, which I have three times coasted by Sea, and traced above half by Land; so that now it is time to speak concerning the Caspian Sea, and shew all the Kingdoms and Countreys which lie upon it, beginning at Astracan, and proceeding thence Eastwards, until I return unto the same City from the South.

Astracan is placed on a rising ground, not far from the mouth of the Volga, from which it is not distant above 50 miles; it is in an Island on the Great Nagoy side, made by the River Volga, and a branch thereof, having the Caspian Sea on the South. The Town or City is secured by a strong Castle, furnished with store of great Ordnance, and in the midst of the Castle is a Roskade, which commands both Castle, Town, and the Fields round about for above a mile. The Tartar's Town is adjoining, placed near unto Cutuma, which is a River naturally derived from the Volga, or one of its many branches; so that the Town is encompassed with Waters, having the main body of the Volga on the West, and Cutuma on the East. Now if you would know whence the Volga comes, I will acquaint you with what I have learned from the Muscovites. Its utmost Source is said to be at the foot of a great Tree, whence it runs unto Ferislave 1000 miles; whence it proceeds to Neisna 500 miles, and thence unto Cassan 300 miles; from Cassan to Samara 500; to Saratoff 350 miles; to Saraichena 350, and thence unto Astracan 500 miles; from whence it is, as we said before, unto the Caspian Sea, 50 miles; in all 3550 miles.

The Volga is a wonderful great River, abounding with divers sorts of great Fish, as Sturgeon, Bellouke, Severuke, Shelren, Sterleke, Som, Sassan, Suke, Sonlake, Konnee, Sablee, Lisse, Wobla, Tarane, and many others both great and small, which I cannot readily call unto remembrance, notwithstanding that I dwelt there ten years. The Volga enters the Caspian Sea by 22 mouths, and upon each of them is an Oughfuke or Fish-wear, for to take Sturgeon, every one of which Oughfukes is called by the name of the Water, as Soellova, Dertullee, Bsserigee and Ruslowa upon the main Volga. Cokelon, Berullee, Ewansuke, Mansor, Argeessan, Keesan, Camussuke, Naowara, Tussockly, Collobery, Malla, Collobery, Tamansuke, Eirichsha, Surka, Libesha, Bussan, Carabussan, Bealla, Wolloske. In all which Oughfukes or Wears, they take no Fish besides Sturgeon. They are made of Shignas, or long Poles made sharp at one end, and beaten into the ground under Water, and a pleiting made of Rods, somewhat resembling Osier, after the manner of our Matts, which are fastened to the Poles, and hinder the Fish from passing up the River. And Houses are built near the Wears for the Convenience of the Fishers, 40, 50, more or less, according unto the greatness of the Water, or resort of Fish, and twice every day, usually in the morning and evening, they set about their Fishery. They employ only long slender Poles with an Iron Hook or Cruke in the end baited, and do ordinarily take 400 every day in the smaller, and 600 in the larger Streams. The Sturgeon they take is all salted, excepting that wherewith they serve the Town of Astracan, where a whole salt Sturgeon may be bought for ten pence English; and when the great Caravan comes from Russia, it takes off most of their Fish, which is conveyed into divers parts of Muscovy, but chiefly unto the great City of Mosco. They return also with great quantities of Caviar and Salt, there being not far from the Volga, on the Little Nagoy side, great Salt-pits, which yield an immense quantity of Salt, prepared yearly by the heat of the Sun, without any further trouble, than taking it off the superficies of the Water where it daily kerns.

The Volga a little above Seraichena, 500 miles from Astrachan, dismisses a great Branch named Altabon, which passing through the Desert of the Great Nagoy through Bassane, enters the Caspian Sea. The remainder of the Volga, after having parted with several smaller Branches, most of which joyn with the forementioned River, divides the Little and Great Nagoy, passes under the Town of Astrachan, whence it proceeds unto Ruslowa, on the South west side of Crofsna Boggar, and then falls into the Caspian. And the distance between the East-side of the Volga near Astrachan, and the River Altabon, is about 20 miles, which is mostly Water and Islands.

And that the Course of the Volga from its first Source, until it doth dis-embouge it self into the Caspian Sea, can be no less than what we have asserted, is hence confirmed;

That

That the Snow which falls abundantly in Russia, and begins to be dissolved about the latter end April, and do mightily increase the Waters of the Volga, come not unto Astrachan until Midsummer, when it so raises the Volga, that overflowing the Banks, it covers with his Waters all the Islands near Astrachan; so that from the Little Nagoy, in Actabon in the Great Nagoy, all the Countreys seems, excepting a Hillock or two, one continued Lake, or a great Gulf of the Sea. Wherefore they who go in the Spring from Astrachan to fetch Wood, having cut it, make great Floats, which are lifted up when the River overflows, and guided each by a few Men, until they are brought unto Astrachan, or those other places for which they are designed.

The most remarkable Towns and Habitations upon the Volga, between Seraichena and Astrachan, (which are 500 miles distant from each other) are Camena, Rokegora, Offhenofka, Chornoyar, Borisse, Offatalka, Poolowoy, Collmakof Satone, Coffoyar, Crofnoyar, Naffonoyar, Satone, Yanatavy, Daneelofka, Perre Oussake, Eillansuke, Eiskyborro, Crukla, Buffan, Balshecke, Tollotongorod, Dolgoa, Goradocha, (which was old Astrachan) Sharine, Bogar, which is near Astrachan, besides many other Places, with whose Names I have not charged my memory. We will now pass over the Volga through Astrachan into the Great Nagoy.

The Great Nagoy may be properly enough divided into Islands and Continent; the former are made by the Volga, and several Rivers which fall out of it, variously mix'd with each other, and are all at length emptied into the Caspian Sea. Those Rivers or Brances have their several Names; those which I remember are Cuttoma, Boulda, Mal-la, Guellusa, Creemantya, Busane, Actabon and Bereket. The Kingdom of the Great Nagoy is all plain and desert; 1200 miles in length between Astrachan and Semara; 500 miles in breadth from the said Astrachan unto the River of the Teike or Jaick. There is no wood in all this Countrey, except what grows near the Rivers. It hath no Towns or fixed Habitations, though it had formerly divers, and some among them very considerable, as Czarofsgorod, or Czarofs Pollate, in English, the Emperour's Town, which formerly must needs have been as its name imports, an Imperial or Capital City. I have often viewed it with admiration, and cannot compute it to have been less than 20 miles in Circuit; I have told fourscore great eminent Buildings, which must have been either Moschees, Pallaces, or Caravanseries, and some of them 6 miles distant from the other. The Muscovites are of divers Opinions concerning its Destruction: Some say it was ruined by the Cossacks; but the Cossacks, who are ready enough to brag of Achievements, know nothing thereof, only that they have often dispossessed the Russes, when they endeavoured to rebuild part of it. For indeed the situation is very excellent, having the Volga on one side, and the Actabon on the other: The Countrey very beautiful, healthful and fertile; and yet notwithstanding all these encouragements, it is not yet inhabited, not by the Russes because it standing on the main Land, they would be continually exposed unto the Inroads of the Tartars; nor by the Tartars, because its nearness unto the Rivers, would render them obnoxious to the Russes, every time the great Caravan passes that way, which is at least twice each year. Yet the Muscovites do frequently fetch Brick and Stones from this ruined City, wherewith they have built a great part of Astrachan, and the neighbour-in Forts or Towns, where such solid Materials are employed. But besides this Serai, (for so the Tartars call any fix'd Habitation) there were in ancient times five or six more down along the Rivers side, in each of which formerly dwelt a Chan; but Time and Wars have almost intirely ruined them. There is also another Serai upon the River Jaick named Seraichika, where is said formerly to have been the Residence of a great Myrfa or Chan; but 'tis now quite ruined.

The Tartars who inhabit the Great Nagoy, both Men and Women, are very proper, at least of much taller Stature than many other Tartars, but have ill-favoured Countenances, broad Faces, flat little Noses, small Eyes sunk in their Heads, all which are common to most of the Eastern Tartars. But the Tartars of Crim are more comely, which I suppose, may partly proceed from their Wives, who are many of them Captive Circassians, Russes, Poles, Hungars, and of divers other Nations. The Nagoy Tartars are also Black or rather Tawny; which I Conjecture is not so much natural, as proceeding proceeding from the heat of the Sun, which is in these Parts some Months of the Year much more excessive than one would expect from the Climate. And besides, their Children go stark naked during the great heats in Summer. It is also remarkable, That the Cold in Winter in the same Country is exceeding severe, and one would think to them who have such mean accommodation, intollerable. These Nagoy Tartars have great store of Cattle, as Kine, Sheep, Horses and Camels, and yet notwithstanding they are very ill clad, most of their Cloathing being Sheep-Skins, and those but scurvily dressed. They have no sort of Corn or Grain, mightily scorning the Europeans and Persians, whose chief Diet they say, is the top of a pitiful weed. Polygamy is not only allowed, but altogether in fashion among them, most having divers Wives, more or fewer according unto their Quality and Ability, who unless they are Captivated by War, are such as they buy of their Parents or Kindred for Cattle. If one Brother dye, the other takes all his Wives, who are usually five or six. But if all the Brothers die, either in War or by Diseases, then they are devolved like other Goods or Chattels unto the Elder Brother's Son, they never suffering any married Woman, during life, to go out of the Kindred.

Here our Author hath inserted a Discourse concerning divers odd, and some barbarous Customs which have long prevailed among the Nagoy-Tartars, and wherewith they will not easily Dispencc. But they giving little light unto History or Geography, I have not thought them worthy the trouble of transcribing; nor do I apprehend they would afford any considerable instruction or divertisement unto the Reader.

These Tartars of the Great Nagoy when they remove their habitation, transport their Houses from place to place in Waggon with four Wheels, which are drawn usually by Camels; they pass up and down the Country in great Hords, their ordinary march is from the Volga unto Buskomsake; thence to Voroslne, Semara, Eingesse, Eishene, Ougogura, Reimpeska, and all along under the Calmukes Country, until they arrive at the Jaick or Yeike: Sometimes they pass by Cassone, Aurrow, Camoyes Samar, and so to Saraichika: this is ordinarily their Summer Progress. Against Winter they return unto those parts of the Countrey which border upon the Caspian Sea. As Baksake upon the Caspian Sea; Beallansia, Kitgach, Sheennamara, Coudake, Caradowan, Actabon; and higher upon the Volga, scattering themselves upon the Sea-shore and Banks of the Rivers among the Reeds and Woods, or wheresoever they find the Climate most mild and best defence against the Cold, which in the Winter is in these Parts extremely Severe; so that 'tis hard to determine whether they suffer more from the Heat in Summer, or Cold in Winter. During which latter Season they leave their Hergels or Horses, and most of their greater Cattle to shift for themselves in the Deserts.

Having often had occasion to mention the River Jaicke or Yeike, I shall here give a short Account of what I have observed and learnt concerning its Rise and Course. It comes from the Calmukes Land, where it is thought to spring; though some of the Russes affirm its Fountains are more Remote in Siberia, the Southern parts of which is also inhabited if not possessed by the Kalmukes, some of whose Uusses or Hords are subject unto the Muscovites; others in League with them: but they have sometimes cruel Wars, and did formerly destroy Tumen with some other Towns and Castles of the Russes, who they apprehended did inroach too fast upon them. But to return unto the Course of the Yeick, after it hath passed through the Calmukes Country, it divides the Great Nagoy from Cassachy Horda, and after it hath passed in all a Thousand miles, throws it self into the Caspian Sea a little below Saraichika. This is a very large River, and the Land on each side well clothed with Wood, Grats, divers sorts of Herbs and wild Fruits, and the Water full of good Fish; which Conveniences do oft-times invite the Cossacks to make their abode there, and from thence they make Incurfions on divers parts bordering on the Caspian Sea. This River, among divers other Fish, doth so wonderfully abound with Sturgeon, that a man may stand upon the Bank-side with a Pole in hand arm'd at the end with an Iron Crook, make choice of what Sturgeon best pleaseth him, which he shall rarely fail of taking though never so inexpert in Fishing, if he have but strength or help to draw it on Land. Not far from the Mouth of the Jaick in the Caspian Sea near the Shore, are many Coves and Corners which they call Lapateens and Calrukes, which are always full of Swans usually swimming on the Sea, which are so numerous, that it is impossible to make any reasonable Computation thereof. These Swans after Midsummer every Year cast their Feathers, a little before which timethere parts from Astracan many Boats which are manned by Russes, and most of them are their Youth; after a passage of five hundred miles they arrive at these places which the Swans mostly haunt, and having filled their Boats with Swans Skins and Feathers, they return unto Astracan, where a great Trade is driven with the Persians who give ordinarily a Dollar apiece for these Skins.

The next Countrey unto the Great Nagoy towards the East is Cassachy Horda, which hath, as I said, on the West the Jaick, by which it is divided from the Great Nagoy. On the North the Kalmukes, North-East the Turgeach, or Jurgench-Tartars, and to the South the Caspian Sea and Caragans, who inhabit on the North-East-side of the Caspian Sea. These Cassachy Tartars march up and down the Country much after the manner of the Nagoys. They have frequent Wars with the Kalmukes and Turgeachians; but seldome with either Nagoys or Caragans. Only after the manner of most other Tartars, they will clandestinely steal even from those Neighbours with whom they have the most uninterrupted and profound Peace.

Cassachy Horda is altogether Defart, excepting some Woods Northward, bordering upon the Kalmukes, where there are divers small Rivers which empty themselves into the Jaick; which River is also in most places bordered with Woods unto its Entrance into the Caspian Sea. And therefore the Inhabitants may well be named Cassachy Horda, or wild People, as the Name imports: They sow no sort of Corn, their chief Food being Horse-flesh and Mares milk; which is also common to divers other Nations of the Tartars.

On the North of Cassachy Horda dwell the Kalmuke Tartars, if such a life as they lead may be called dwelling. The Country they inhabit deserves a better People, the Land abounding with all things necessary for a Comfortable subsistence. This Country hath store of Sables, Martens, Black Foxes, Squerrils, and several other sorts of Furs, which they Exchange with the Russes for Aqua-vitæ, Mead, Tobacco, and other Commodities. This Country hath some Towns, as Siberia, the Head of a Province of the same Name, and Tumeeen, both which the Russes have gained from them: Oussba, Wadke, Sellona, Lacomorria, which latter place, they say, is situated upon a Cold Sea. But Oussba is a midland Town, 500 miles from Cassan which is near the Volga. The Kalmukes are accounted good Souldiers, being kept in continual Exercise by the Muscovites on the one side, the Nagoyans and Cassachy-Horda on the other. Their unmarried Women do not only accompany the Men unto the Wars, but are said to be little inferiour unto the Men in Skill and Valour, shooting almost as strongly and dexterously as the men, from whom they cannot be distinguish'd by their Garb, being apparelled and riding much after the same manner: Both Men and Women in all their Expeditions seldome carry along with them fewer than five or six Horses apiece. I cannot precisely determine what their Religion is, but I do perceive by Converse with them, that they have a more favourable Opinion of the Christians than of the Mahumetans, or of some of their fellow Ethnicks; for if I mistake not, they are Heathens, I not being able to discern among them any Religious Worship, excepting some kind of Adoration which they pay unto the Sun and Moon. They have a very peculiar kind of Diet; for besides Horse-flesh, which is a great Dainty, they scruple not to eat Snakes, Adders, Foxes, and indeed even Carrion of divers sorts of Creatures, such Food as to Europeans would be intollerable, even in the greatest Famine. They wear a kind of Caps or Hats which are called by the Muscovites, Coulpackes, open before and behind, with broad Brims on each side. And thereupon they are called by the other Tartars, Kalmukes.

Eastward

Eastward from these Calmyks, inclining unto the South towards China, live the Jurgeachians, so named from their chief Town, which some call Jurgeach, others Jurgench: Of which Country I cannot say so much as concerning the former, having never been therein but once; for in the Year 1620. there being great Wars in Jurgeach, between the Chan or King, and the Myrsa his Son; some of the Nagoy Tartars hearing thereof, invaded the Country, who whilst they were united, durst not peep out of their own Borders, the Jurgeachians being a numerous and warlike People. These Nagoys were all Volunteers, who went without any Command from their own Prince, or Allowance from the Muscovites, without whose consent by mutual Agreement they are not permitted to War. The News of their Expedition being brought unto Astracan, the Voyvod who had not long before made a League with the Jurgeachians, sent out Allye (I suppose his true Name was Ali or Hali) Myrsa a Tartarian Prince, with a Thousand of his own Subjects, and Five Hundred Russes, all Horse. We were 20 days marching before we came to the Borders of Jurgeach from Astracan; whence we proceeded 10 days journey, the Country through which we passed being miserably ravaged by the aforesaid Nagoys. At the end of which 30 days by a reasonable Computation, 'twas judged we were distant from Astracan at least 1000 miles; about which time we overtook them in the Valley of Ougogura, having got from the Jurgeachians an innumerable company of Cattle of divers sorts, as Horse, Kine, Camels and Sheep. We took all their Booty from them; and as a further punishment for their Riot, took away their own supernumerary Horses, leaving them only a Horse a Man for to convey them home. Then Ally Myrsa divided the Spoil, half he bestowed upon those who did accompany him, and sent the remainder for a Present unto the Voyvod, returning nothing unto the Jurgeachians, because they were taken from Thieves. In the mean while the Prince of Jurgeach in a pitcht Battel overthrew his Father, took him Prisoner, put out both his Eyes, and caused himself to be Crowned King. He had a younger Brother, whom fearing that in time he might occasion some Insurrection, he gave Command unto some of his Creatures, that they should strangle him, and bring his Head: But divers of the Nobles, by whose means he obtained the Sovereignty, gaining intelligence thereof, would not permit his Order to be put in execution; but seizing on the Child, sent him unto the Emperour of Muscovy, with whom he remained when I was last at Astracan.

But I must return from the Jurgeachians unto the Caragans, whom I have left behind, and they do more immediately refer unto my promise, which was to give an Account of all the Nations and Countries incompassing the Caspian Sea.

The Country of the Caragans occupies most of that vast space, which interceeds between the River Teike and the Dominions of the Ousbegs, or Tartars of Bouchara, and their Territory surrounds the North-East corner of the Caspian Sea, proceeding Southwards unto the River Jaxartes; and some Hords of the said People do inhabit between the said River and the Oxus, which divides the Tartars of Bochara and the Caragans, from the Persians and the Tartars of Balk. This Country of the Caragans is very desert and barren; the People miserably Poor; their Houses are wretched Huts, the greatest part under ground; they are very tawny and ill-favour'd; their Habitations are scatter'd, scarcely deserving the Name of Villages: And they have no Town, as I have been informed, besides Preeslannes, which is situated on the South-side of the Jaxartes, near the Caspian Sea; which whilst I dwelt in Astracan, was by surprize taken by the Cossacks, but they had little cause to brag of their Victory, finding little booty therein; and the Caragans gath'ring together, beat them out with great loss of Men, forcing them to retire into an Island two or three Leagues from the Land, which they possess unto this day, no Nation being able, or else not caring to un-nest them, although Tartars, Persians, and Muscovites, do continually suffer by their Depredations.

Towards the East and by South of the Caragans, dwell the Tartars of Bochara, who are by divers called Tusbegs. The Country which they possess is better watered, and more fertile than most of the preceeding, and there is great resort of Merchants from divers Parts unto them, especially Persians, Muscovites, and several Nations of Indians, as Moguls, Boutans, with many others, whose Names I cannot recollect. I have been also told, That the Chineſes do ſometimes trade with them. I am perſwaded, that this is the famed Kingdom of Cataye; for the Carayans are a ſort of Tartars, and I know no other Tartars between this Country and Cbina. Caragan lieth from them to the North-Weſt; Urgenſhe due North; Cbina to the Eaſt; the Tartars of Balk to the South; and the Persians South and by Weſt; and the Caffian Sea duly Weſt. They are almoſt continually in Wars with the Persians.

The next Country I am to deſcribe is Persia, in which Land I was never, excepting once, in that part thereof which borders upon the Comukes; but I have converſed with ſeveral Persian Merchants at Aſtracan, who came by Shipping from Gilan, which when the Wind is very fair and good, they ſail in two or three days and Nights. They wear Turbants like the Turks, and ſo do the Bouchars. Therefore not having ſeen much of Persia, nor having ſufficiently informed my ſelf concerning it, I ſhall paſs through it unto the Comukes Land, of which I have obtained more perfect knowledge both by War and Traffick. This Country is bounded on the South by Persia, on the Eaſt by the Caffian Sea; Weſtward by Circaffia; and on the North by the River of Tumeine; on which ſtands a Town of the ſame Name, from which unto Chabamate, the moſt Northerly Habitation of Persia, is 600 miles. A great part of this Country, eſpecially Weſtward, is very mountainous; I could never learn where it doth exactly Terminate. I have been in four of their Towns: The firſt is Tarkee, where Gildar, whom they own for their Prince, doth ordinarily reſide. The ſecond is Derbeine, in the Mountains. The third Derevena, in the ſame mountainous Tract. The fourth Koffa, upon a River of the ſame Name, not far from the place where it empties it ſelf into the Caffian Sea. Theſe Comukes are proper Men and very couragious; and that which makes them more daring and adventurous than moſt Tartars, is the goodneſs of their Horſes, and the advantage of their Arms, both offensive and defensive; for they ſeldome engage in Wars without Helmets, Jacks of Steel, Shirts of Mail, and Targets, which excepting thoſe times wherein they fight, hang behind their backs, being very light, and not very large, and therefore not cumbersome. They have, as other Tartars, both Bows and Cymetars, and withal never go without Lances, which they uſe with great ſtrength and dexterity. In their Apparel they differ little from the Circaffians; but as for Religion, they are generally Mahometans, and their Language is in ſubſtance the ſame with other Tartars; their vicinity unto the Persians, Muſcovites and Sheercasses, having ſomewhat diſguiſed it. The Countrey they inhabit abounds with Wood; part of it is hilly, with ſmall pleaſant Valleys between the Hillocks; and in ſome places, eſpecially towards Persia, and thence into the Land, it hath many great and almoſt inacceſſible Mountains, by reaſon of their height and ſteepneſs. This Land was reduced under the Government of the Ruſſes many years ago, after the enſuing manner: Evan Voſilywich being Czar or Emperour of Ruſſia, after he had taken Caffan and Aſtracan, ſent part of his Army into Circaffia, where they took in Tumeine. Another Body entred the Comukes Country, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Derevena, Derbeine, Tarkee and Koffa. The Ruſſe Emperour conſtituted a Voyvod, whom he ordered to reſide in Tarkee, and left with him 10000 Men; he ordered alſo at the ſame time another conſiderable Brigade to ſtay at Koiſa, where he left a great number of Boats and other Veſſels, who had brought ſupplies of Men and Proviſions from Mosco, and other Parts of his Dominions. And having, as he apprehended, ſecured his new Conqueſts, he returned unto Mosco: Immediately after his retreat, the Comukes gather'd their whole Force, and ſet down before the Town of Tarkee, which after a vigorous reſiſtance they took, and in it with the Voyvod, ſeveral Officers of divers Nations, whom with the common Souldiers they ſold unto the Circaffians, Tartars, and other neighboring Nations, ſo that few were ever afterwards recover'd. From Tarkee they marched unto Koiſa, which by the inſtruction of Captives they did pretty regularly beſiege and aſſault, and after ſome repulſes took it by ſtorm, killing all the Ruſſes, excepting ſuch as eſcaped in the Ships and Boats which lay before the Town. The Ruſſe Emperour being ſpeedily informed of theſe Succeſſes, immediately raiſed a great Army, with which he ordered all the Caffacks between the Don and Volga, unto the River of Tumeine, to joyn his Forces, and aſſiſt them, in order unto the recovery of what he had loſt, and utter extirpation of the Comukes: Who hearing how highly the Czar was exaſperated, and how great a Force was ready to invade them, they began to be ſolicitous about the Event; and having conſulted together agreed to make some kind of submission, and sue for pardon and peace. Whereupon they sent Ambassadors unto Tumeine, where the Russe Army was encamped; and after a Treaty with the Czar's Plenipotentiaries, they agreed upon these Articles, That the Comukes should restore the Towns they had taken, and aid the Emperor with such a number of Souldiers, as he should require, against any Enemy whatsoever, whereunto their Heads being Sworn, they have inviolably observed the Agreement unto this day. But it's time we take our leave of Gildar, Prince of Terkj, and his Comukes, and proceed into Shercassen Land, part of which as I hinted before, lyes upon the Black Sea, and extends it self unto the Caspian.

This side of Circassia which borders upon the Caspian Sea, is a very plentiful Countrey; and as for Fish, it is so wonderfully plentiful, that in Tumeine you may ordinarily purchase a good Sturgeon for two pence, and sometimes for a penny; a most prodigious quantity of Fish being taken in the River of the Weeftra, and about the Island of Chekiene, which is off at Sea not far from Tumeine. On the main Land, over against this Fishery, 4 miles above the River of Terike, there is a great Well, made by a Spring, which falls from a Rock, on the side of a great Hill, and immediately fills this Little Lake, which whether it is Natural or Artificial, I know not. The Water of this Lake is so scalding hot, that the Fishers flinging in their Sturgeon or other Fish, it is in a short time boyled, as if over a fire, the heat being so intense, that no Man can detain his hand in it for a moment; from which strange Quality it derives its Name, being called by the Russes, Goracha Colloda, or the Scalding Well.

I shall conclude my Discourse with a short Account of the Little Nagoy, or of that part thereof which confines upon the Caspian; for all that space between Tumeine and Astracan, is by many ascribed unto the Nagoy Tartars. I did before declare, That the Little Nagoy is for the most part a wide waste Desert, the worst of which is all that Tract which lyeth between Tumeine and Astracan. These Tartars have no Town but only Asshoma, which is not properly theirs, though lying in their Countrey, being possessed by the Turks.

There is a sort of people in this Countrey, whom the Tartars call Sigakes; I could never learn what their language is, or from what Place or Nation they proceed; nor could I understand after what manner they live, whether they have any Religion, or Civil Government. Their chief Subsistence is what they gain from the Tartars; for they gather sometimes 2 or 3000, and rob the smaller Hords of the Tartars, and those which are most remote from help. But sometimes the Tartars discovering the place of their Retreat or Rendezvous, surround them with their Carts, and then fall in, cut them all off, never giving Quarter unto any; no Crime being so severely punished amongst the Tartars, as Thievery; which makes me apprehend, that these Sigakes are some of their own people, who formerly deserted them upon some extraordinary occasion: But whatsoever is the reason, they do most irreconcilably hate each the other.

The most noted Places on that side the Little Nagoy, which regards the Caspian Sea, and lye all along the Coast from Tumeine to Astracan, are Sheerlona Teare (where I was first taken Prisoner by the Tartars) Peremetka, Arfi Bash, Moyackee, Bealla Oshera, Bashmackake, Kaboyly, Machakofska, Chostoway, and so over the Volga unto Astrachan.

And to conclude all, I shall here enumerate all the Places on the Coast near Astracan, which have Names that are considerable for Havens, Trade, Fishing, or any other remarkable Circumstance: Soteeza Bockgra, Ucstowa Cossa, Beerulika Cossa, Ewan-shoska Cossa, Seamme Bogaroffe, Tussocleoff Lapateene, Chaska Cossa, Crosna Bogore, Cocklouska Cossa, Owarska Cossa, Comashaska Cossa, Colloberinska Cossa, Cocktabow, Bussanska Lapaten, Kara Bussan; which last place is not far from Sheene Mare, which I have formerly mentioned.

I cannot so exactly tell the Circumference of the Caspian, as of the Black Sea, having been only on the North and West side; but howsoever I shall from what I have seen and learnt from experienced persons, be enabled to approach very near unto the Truth.

The Distance between Astracan and the Taich, is 500 miles; from thence unto the Confines of Bochara 500 miles: From Jaxartes to Persia, and thence unto Gilan is, according unto my Information, 1100 miles. From Gilan unto Koisa 500 miles: From thence thence unto Astracan as much; in all, 3100 miles. But if any person should endeavour by Land to Travel round this Sea, or in a Voyage by Sea follow the Coast, he would make at least a Thousand miles more: for this Sea is full of great Gulphs, Bays, and broken ground; so that the Calculation I make, is upon a direct passage by Sea, suppose from Astracan to Gilan, from thence to the Oxus, from the Oxus to the great North-East Bay, into which the River Jem falls, which is full of Islands and broken Grounds, Shelves, Sand and Shallow Water; and from thence back to Astracan.

Having presented your Lordship with a short but true Account of those Countries encompassing and lying between the two forementioned Mediterranean Seas, I shall no less briefly and faithfully declare by what Accidents I came unto this Knowledge: which cost me so dear, that I suppose the most inquisitive person would not purchase the gratification of his Curiosity at a far less Expence of time and trouble, than I have employed (though often against my will) in my Travels and Enquires.

I was born Ireland, yet of English Extract: my Family Noble, but my Estate not corresponding with my Quality, being ambitious, and withal naturally inclined to see Forraign Countries, I hoped to Raise my Fortune by my Sword. After I left Ireland, before I had been long in England, an opportunity presenting it self, I engaged in the Service of the King of Sweden, who had then Wars with the Muscovites; having given some Considerable proofs of my Courage, I was gradually raised unto a Considerable Command; but being engaged too far in a Body of the Enemies, I was unhappily taken Prisoner by the Russes, and carried Prisoner unto Plescow, then in their possession, having at the same time Arrears due unto me from the Swede above 5000 Dollars. The Swedes taking no care for my Enlargement, being willing, I suppose, to save so great a Sum of Money, as at my Return I should have challenged: after Three years close Imprisonment, I was profered Liberty by the Muscovite, upon condition I would faithfully serve him against all his Enemies; whereunto assenting, I was sent unto Moscow, and there before the Chancellor sworn a Tolmack, and preferred unto a Command little inferiour unto what I enjoyed before. And the Poles advancing towards Moscow with a great Army, fearing lest I should go over unto them, I was sent unto Astracan where I remained 10 years, being continually Employed against the Tartars and Circassians. By which means I came to know Pettigor, Sneefnagor, Shadgore, Cabardye, and the Great and Little Nagoy, the Comukes, the Tartars of Cassen, the Kalmukes, Cassachy, Horda, Caragans, Ungensh, and Usbeg Tartars. During which Wars, I conflicted with great difficulties and hardship; in making long Journies, faring hardly: Nor was it a small labour to make floates in order unto our passing over the great Rivers I have mentioned, to say nothing of the Danger. Besides, we run great hazards in our Journeying over those waste wide howling Desarts, which on every side surrounded us; frequently wanting provisions, and sometimes Guides; so that had we failed never so little in our Conjectures, we had all perished. After Ten years hard Service, in my Return from Conveying Sholobose Knez into Shercassen Land, I was taken Prisoner by the Tartars of the Little Nagoy, and by them carried unto Assowa upon the Mouth of the Tana or Don. There I was sold unto a Precopensian Tartar, who carried me along with him towards Crim: But upon the shallow Waters I very happily made my Escape. I had little Knowledge of the Country, but having formerly understood by our Cossacks at Astracan, that great Bodies of the same name, mortal Enemies unto the Tartars, dwelt upon the Nepper not far beyond Crim; by the help of the Sun and Stars, I journeyed due West many days without any disastrous Adventure, until I found them; who gave me a very kind reception: In this escape I traversed almost the whole Desart of Ingile and Ungule. Dorofensko who then Commanded all the Cossacks upon the Nepper, immediately made me a Poskofneke, from which time for the space of almost two years, I did accompany them in divers expeditions, in which we visited most of those Countries which lye upon the Black Sea, to the no small vexation and lots of the Inhabitants. We kept a Correspondence with the Cossacks upon the Don, and frequently assisted each other. And being all Foot, and the Country exactly level, we travelled surrounded with Wagons (which they call a Tabor) for fear of the Tartars who often set upon us, but were as often repulsed, we being well accommodated with Fire-Arms and small Field-pieces, which the Tartars do exceedingly fear and will not ordinarily attempt closely, unless they have greatly the Odds in Number. But at length it was my ill Fortune between the Nepper and the Don to be again taken by the Tartars, and by them carried into Crim, where I lived long in great misery, and was at length sold unto a Timariot Spahi living in Anadoute, (Anatolia or Asia minor) with whom I lived 5 years, but in more easie servitude than among the Tartars. And to make my service less irksome, my Master bestowed on me a Wallachian Woman, whom I received for my Wife, though without the usuall Solemnities of Marriage, which are practised among Christians: Understanding at length that a Lord Ambassador was resident at Constantinople in behalf of the King of Great Brittain, and to manage the Affairs of the English Nation in Turkey, I prevailed with my Master, whose Favour I had gained to grant me my freedom, together with my Wives, if I should procure an hundred Dollars. Whereupon he dismissed me in the company of a Turk his Friend, who upon my humble supplication unto your Lordship receiving the formerioned Sum, did in the behalf of his Friend before the Cady make me free, and leave the Woman also at my Disposall. At the same time I very happily met with some Vallachian Gentlemen, who were sent on a Message from their Vayvod unto the Grand Seigneur, They gladly received my Woman, and took her along with them, promising upon their Return into their own Country, to Restore her unto her Parents.

Now that I may fully satisfie your Lordship, that I had really visited all those Countries which I have mentioned, I beseech your Lordship let your Interpreter try me in those Languages wherein he is skilled; and as for others wherewith he is not acquainted, I am ready to converse with any of those Nations whom I pretend to know. For although I have never conversed much with Books, yet my great Travel accompanied with a pretty good Memory, will sufficiently Qualifie me to pass through the Countries I shall hereafter mention.

To begin my Progress from Constantinople, I can pass over from Scutery, and thence by the help of my Turkish Language pass through all Anatolia; Thence leaving Armenia on my right hand, and having the Black Sea on the left, go through Georgia, Mingrellia, Abassa, and Shercassen Land with the same Tongue, and another, which with little variation is common unto them all. Thence into the Comukes Countrey, who are a sort of Tartars and do agree with others of the same name in speech, as indeed most Tartars do; only they who are Mahumetans, and converse much with the Turks, use divers Arabick and Turkish words whereunto the Heathen Tartars are strangers: From Comukes Land I can pass into Persia, but I am not so well acquainted with their Country and Language, as I have elsewhere acknowledged. Therefore to return unto Constantinople, I can proceed from thence unto Romellia, or Romania, through Wallachy, Bealla Horda, Crim, the Great Desert I have so often mentioned of Ingell and Ungull, the little Nagoy, so over the Vogal unto Astracan; thence through the Great Nagoy, and leaving the Caspian on my Right hand into the Caragans Country, and so through Boghar into Persia. I can also by my knowledg of the Languages peculiar unto the following Countries traverse all Ireland, England, Norway, Sweeden, Finland, Leifland, Poland, Russia, Mordwa, Sheremessa, Cassan, Kalmukes Land, Cassachy Horda, Turgench, and leaving China on the left hand through Bochara into Persia.

And now, Sir, nothing remains, But that I make most humble and hearty acknowledgment of your great Generosity and Christian Charity, in delivering a Stranger out of Captivity, wherein I had Otherwise continued without hope of seeing my Friends or Country. And were I as expert at my Pen, as I have heretofore been at managing a Sword, I would by Consigning my Travels to Writing, leave behind me a lasting Monument of your Fame: But being for want of Learning and by long Disuse of my Mother Tongue rendered unfit for such a Work, I shall wheresoever I come proclaim your Worthiness, and continually pray unto the Omnipotent GOD to return your Kindness into your Bosome a Thousand fold. And shall ever remain, during Life,

Your Faithful Slave, Astrachan.
